'Bachian Invention and its Mechanisms', The Cambridge Companion to Bach, ed. J. Butt (Cambridge, 1997)

'Patterns of Authority in Musical Interpretation: Historical Performance at the Crossroads', Actualizing Absence: Performances, Visuality, Writing (Bloomington, IN, forthcoming)

PAULA MORGAN

Dreyschock, Alexander (b Žáky, 16 Oct 1818; d Venice, 1 April 1869). Czech pianist and composer. He appeared in public at the age of eight and went to Prague in 1833 to study the piano and composition with Tomášek. Five years later he began a series of long European tours as a virtuoso: Germany (1838); Russia (1840–42); Paris (spring 1843) and London; the Netherlands, Austria and Hungary (1846); Denmark and Sweden (1849). In 1862 he was appointed to a piano professorship at the St Petersburg Conservatory; he was appointed director of the Imperial School for theatrical music, and court pianist in 1865. Unable to endure the Russian climate, he was sent to Italy in 1868, where he died. He was buried in Prague, at his family's wishes.

Although his repertory included many classical works, Dreyschock mainly performed his own pieces, which had no lasting success. But as a virtuoso, he possessed astonishing technical ability. J.B. Cramer, who late in his life heard him in Paris, exclaimed: 'The man has no left hand! here are two right hands!' In spite of this skill, or perhaps because of it, Dreyschock had a reputation for loud playing, as Hallé reported from London in 1843. In Classical music Dreyschock performed with faultless precision, but could be cold and prosaic.

His brother Raimund Dreyschock (1824–69) was a violinist who accompanied Alexander on several tours. In 1850 he was made second Konzertmeister of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra and became a professor of violin at the Leipzig Conservatory.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.E. and M. Hallé, eds.: Life and Letters of Sir Charles Hallé (London, 1896, abridged 1972 by M. Kennedy as The Autobiography of Charles Hallé), 100

M. Tarantová: 'Neznámý petrohradský dopis Alexandra Dreyschocka' [An unknown St Petersburg letter of Alexander Dreyschock], Příspěvky k dějinám česko-ruských kulturních styku, ii (1969), 245–53 [with Eng. summary]

R. Wangermée: 'Tradition et innovation dans la virtuosité romantique', AcM, xlii (1970), 5–31 [see also discussion, ibid., xliii (1971), 114–32]

Z. Böhmová-Zahradníčková: Salvní čeští klavíristé a klavírní pedagogoué z 18. a 19. století [Famous Czech pianists and piano teachers of the 18th and 19th centuries] (Prague, 1986), 57–61 [incl. further bibliography]

J.-M. Bailbe and others, eds.: La musique en France à L'époque romantique (Paris, 1991)

EDWARD DANNREUTHER/DAVID CHARLTON

Driessler, Johannes (b Friedrichsthal, Saarland, 26 Jan 1921). German composer and teacher. While at school he studied the organ, choral conducting and theory with Karl Rahner. In 1940 he went to the Cologne Musikhochschule, where he studied composition with Wilhelm Maler; during his army service in the war he was able to pursue sporadic musical activities. In 1946 Maler, director of the Nordwestdeutsche Musikakademie in Detmold, invited him to take a class in church music. He also taught theory and composition at the academy, of which he was director from 1960 to 1983. Driessler's reputation rests above all on his church music. His success, however, has been limited to a small circle within western Germany. His music shows him to be a traditional composer preferring a tonal contrapuntal style; his great talent is for choral composition, which he has developed in oratorio and even opera, but without having won a lasting place in the German repertory.

WORKS
(selective list)

Operas: Claudia amata, 1952; Prinzessin Hochmut (Märchenoper), 1952; Der Umfried (youth op), 1957; Doktor Luzifer Trux, 1958

Orch: Pf Conc., op.27, 1953; Vc Conc., op.35, 1954; Conc., str trio, op.54, orch, 1963; Sym. no.1 'Dum spiro spero', op.55, 1964; Sym. no.2 'Dum ludo laudo', op.60, 1966; Sym. no.3 'Amo dum vivo', op.63, str, perc, 1969

Orats: Dein Reich komme, op.11, 1949; Gaudia mundana, op.19, secular, 1951; De profundis, op.22, solo vv, small chorus, large chorus, wind, pf, timp, 1950–52; Darum seid getrost, 1954; Der Lebendige, 1956; Der grosse Lobgesang, op.45, S, chorus, wind, 1959

Other vocal works: Denn dein Licht kommt, cant., solo vv, 2 choruses, insts, 1947; Sinfonia sacra, 6vv, 1948; Christe eleison, Passion motet, op.9, 1948; 12 Spruchmotetten und 10 Spruchkanons, vv, 1950; Balduin Brummsel, cant., solo vv, orch, 1952; Altenberger Messe, op.33, 7vv, 10 wind, 1955; St Mark Passion, vv, 1955; Ikarus, sym., op.48, 2 solo vv, chorus, orch, 1960

Org: 20 Choralsonaten, op.30, 1954–5

Principal publishers: Bärenreiter, Breitkopf & Härtel

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Riemer: 'Johannes Driessler als Opernkomponist', Musica, vi (1952), 398–405

K.H. Schweinsberg: 'Johannes Driesslers "De profundis"', Musik und Kirche, xxiv (1954), 8–15

M. Heinemann: 'Choral als transzendentale Struktur: zu Johannes Driesslers Orgelsonaten durch das Kirchenjahr', Ars organi, xliv (1996), 131–2

HANSPETER KRELLMANN

Driffelde [?Robert] (fl ? Salisbury, 1424–68). English church musician and composer. He is probably to be identified with Robert Dryffelde, who was admitted as priest vicar-choral of Salisbury Cathedral on 9 November 1424 and remained in that office until 1468; from 1428 to 1435 he served in addition as Instructor of the Choristers. A paired setting of Sanctus and Agnus Dei (only the latter is ascribed) survives in, respectively, I-TRmp 90, I-TRcap (Trent 93), and I-TRmp 92. The tenor of each movement is based on the cantus firmus Eructavit cor meum, the verse of the responsory Regnum mundi; the manner in which the music of all but one section of the Sanctus duplicates that of the first and third sections of the Agnus Dei may indicate some degree of contrafaction, perhaps in compensation for lacunae in transmission. The music is in the style of a younger contemporary of Dunstaple.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D.H. Robertson: Sarum Close (London, 1938/R), 71–2

B.L. Trowell: Music under the later Plantagenets (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1960), i, 34, 40–42, 74, 80; ii, 178

R. Bowers: Choral Institutions within the English Church: their Constitution and Development 1340–1500 (diss., U. of East Anglia, 1975), 5055

S. Meyer-Eller: Musikalischer Satz und Überlieferung von Messensätzen des 15. Jahrhunderts: die Ordinariumsvertonungen der Handschriften Aosta 15 und Trient 87/92 (Munich, 1989)

ROGER BOWERS

Drigo, Riccardo (b Padua, 30 June 1846; d Padua, 1 Oct 1930). Italian conductor and composer. He studied with Jorich and Bresciani in Padua, and with Buzzolla at the Venice Conservatory. He taught the piano and established a modest reputation as a conductor in his native town and the northern Italian provinces. He was appointed conductor of the Italian Opera in St Petersburg in 1879 and in 1886 he took up the important post of conductor and composer to the Imperial Ballet. He worked with most of the leading dancers and choreographers in Russia at that time, and conducted the first performances of Tchaikovsky's Sleeping Beauty and Nutcracker, and of Glazunov's Raymonda (1898); he made a new version of Swan Lake, for which he orchestrated some of Tchaikovsky's piano pieces. His own workmanlike ballet scores were popular in their day; Arlekinada (also known as Harlequin's Millions), first performed in 1900, enjoyed international renown. The once celebrated Serenade from this ballet was published in every kind of arrangement and is still occasionally included in concerts of light music. Drigo made regular visits to Italy during his voluntary exile, and in 1920, when working conditions in post-Revolutionary Russia became too difficult, he returned to Padua, where he produced his last opera in 1929.

WORKS

Don Pedro di Portogallo (op, A. Gasparini), Padua, 1868

La moglie rapita (comic op, E. Golisciani), St Petersburg, 1884

Ocharovannïy les [The Enchanted Forest] (ballet), St Petersburg, 1887

Talisman (ballet, M. Petipa), St Petersburg, 1889

Volshebnaya fleyta [The Magic Flute] (ballet, L. Ivanov), St Petersburg, 1893

Probuzhdeniye florï [The Flowers' Reawakening] (ballet), St Petersburg, 1894

La côte d'azur (opera-ballet, Prince of Monaco), Monte Carlo, 1895

Prelestnaya zhemchuzhina [The Lovely Pearl] (ballet), Moscow, 1896

Arlekinada (Harlequin's Millions) (ballet), St Petersburg, 1900

Le porte-bonheur (ballet, L. Tornelli), Milan, 1908

Roman butona rozï [Romance of the Rosebud] (ballet), Petrograd, 1919

Flaffy Raffles (operetta, R. Simoni)

Il garofano bianco (op, Golisciani, after A. Daudet), Padua, 1929

Choral works, pf pieces, songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBI (C.L. Iacono); ES (G. Graziosi and V. Fédorov)

S. Travaglia: Riccardo Drigo: l'uomo e l'artista (Padua, 1929) [incl. catalogue of works]

N.P. Roslavleva: Era of the Russian Ballet, 1775–1965 (New York, 1966)

B.L. Scherer: 'Toast of the Czars', Ballet News, iii/7 (1982), 26–8

R.J. Wilson: 'Memoirs of R.E. Drigo', Dancing Times (May 1982), 577

B.R. Schueneman: 'The Search for the Minor Composer: the Case of Riccardo Drigo', Music Reference Services Quarterly, v/1 (1996), 21–36

JENNIFER SPENCER

Dring, Madeleine (Winefride Isabelle) (b Hornsey, London, 7 Sept 1923; d Streatham, London, 26 March 1977). English composer and actress. Born into a musical family, she won a violin scholarship to the junior department of the RCM, where the director, Angela Bull, channelled her theatrical talent into children's plays; Percy Buck was another early mentor at the RCM. Later, when she won a scholarship to study there as a senior student, her teachers included Howells, Vaughan Williams and Gordon Jacob for composition, and Topliss Green for singing. Dring also studied drama and mime and sustained a lifelong love of the theatre; she both wrote and composed for it (mostly incidental music and songs) and sang, played the piano and acted on the stage, combining modesty with a lively sense of wit and mimicry.

In a light style, Dring composed unpretentious and attractive chamber and instrumental works (several for her husband Roger Lord, a professional oboist), teaching pieces and songs. An affinity with Francis Poulenc, whom she admired, showed in her combination of a frank enjoyment of vernacular idioms such as Latin American rhythms with a harmonic and melodic fastidiousness. Her work has been taken up and published in the USA, and compared with Gershwin's, while the Five Betjeman Songs, classic encapsulations of the poet's observations of the British and their surroundings, serve as a prime memorial to her personality and his. A six-volume partial edition of her songs has been published by Thames (London, 1993–9).

WORKS
(selective list)

printed works published in London; for fuller list see GroveW

INSTRUMENTAL

Fantasy Sonata, pf, c1938, rev. (1948); 3 Fantastic Variations on Lilliburlero, 2 pf (1948); Jig, pf (1948); Prelude and Toccata, pf (1948); Tarantelle, 2 pf (1948); Festival Scherzo, pf, str orch, 1951 (1964); Sonata, 2 pf (1951); March: for the New Year, pf (1954); Caribbean Dance (Tempo Tobago), 2 pf/1 pf (1959); Dance Suite, pf (1961): Italian Dance [also arr. 2 pf/ob, pf], West Indian Dance [also arr. 2 pf], American Dance, Waltz Finale; Polka (fl/ob, pf)/pf (1962); Colour Suite, pf (1963); Danza gaya, 2 pf/ob, pf (1965); 3 Dances, pf, 1968 (1981); Trio, fl, ob, pf, 1968 (1970); Valse française, pf/2 pf (1980); 3 Pieces: WIB Waltz, Sarabande, Tango, fl, pf (1983); Waltz, ob, pf (1983); Suite, harmonica, pf [arr. P. Lord as Three Piece Suite, ob, pf (1984)]; Trio, ob, bn, hpd (1986)
Educational pieces for pf, tr rec etc.

DRAMATIC

The Emperor and the Nightingale (incid music), 1941; Tobias and the Angel (incid music), 1946; Somebody's Murdered Uncle (incid music), BBC radio, 1947; Waiting for ITMA (ballet), BBC TV, 1947; The Wild Swans (children's play), 1950; The Fair Queen of Wu (dance-drama), BBC TV, 1951; The Marsh Kings's Daughter (children's play), 1951; Airs on a Shoestring (revue), 1953; Pay the Piper (revue), 1954; From Here and There (revue), 1955
Fresh Airs (revue), 1955; Child's Play (revue), 1958; The Buskers (incid music), 1959; Little Laura (cartoon series), BBC TV, 1960; The Jackpot Question (incid music), Associated TV, 1961; Four to the Bar (revue), 1961; The Whisperers (incid music), Associated TV, 1961; The Provok'd Wife (incid music), 1963; The Lady and the Clerk (incid music), Associated TV, 1964
I Can Walk Where I Like, Can't I? (incid music), Associated TV, 1964; When the Wind Blows (incid music), Associated TV, 1965; Helen and Edward and Henry (incid music), Associated TV, 1966; Variation on a Theme (incid music), Associated TV, 1966; The Real Princess (ballet), 2 pf, 1971; Cupboard Love (op)

SONGS WITH PIANO

3 Shakespeare Songs (1949); Thank you, Lord (L. Kyme) (1953); The Pigtail (A. von Chamisso), duet (1963); Dedications, 5 poems (R. Herrick), 1967; 5 Betjeman Songs, 1976 (1980); 4 Night Songs (M. Armstrong), 1976 (1985); Love and Time, cycle (Dryden, Sheffield, anon.)
Other vocal works

Principal publishers: Thames, Lengnick, Weinberger, Arcadia, Cambria

MSS/archive service: St James Music, the Old Meeting House, St James, Shaftesbury, Dorset

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Gough Matthews: 'Madeleine Dring', RCM Magazine, lxxiii/2–3 (1977), 49 only [obituary]
V. Twigg: Madeleine Dring (thesis, Trinity College, London, 1982) [copy at GB-Lmic]
H. Dawkes: disc notes, The Far Away Princess, CBS E77050 (1982)
R. Hancock-Child: Madeleine Dring: her Music, her Life (Tetbury, 2000)

STEPHEN BANFIELD

Drinker, Henry S(andwith) (b Philadelphia, 15 Sept 1880; d Merion, PA, 9 March 1965). American music scholar. A lawyer by profession, he devoted himself in his spare time to music and from 1930 to 1960 he held informal gatherings (known as the 'Accademia dei Dilettanti di Musica') at his home to study and perform vocal music of the 17th to 20th centuries. (He also conducted larger groups on Sunday evenings.) Concerned that the words should be understood but also fit the music, Drinker began a series of translations remarkable for their craftsmanship and sheer number: between 1941 and 1954 he translated many Bach works (212 cantatas, the St Matthew Passion and the St John Passion, the Easter and Christmas oratorios and the Magnificat), all Brahms's vocal works, all Mozart's choral works, all Schumann's and Medtner's songs, all the solo songs of Wolf, Musorgsky and Schubert and all Schubert's partsongs. Drinker's devotion and scholarship were recognized in honorary degrees awarded him by the University of Pennsylvania (1942), Oberlin College (1944) and Haverford College (1949), as well as in his appointments as adviser to the Juilliard School of Music, the Westminster Choir College, the Philadelphia Musical Fund Society, the American Choir Foundation and the Settlement Music School of Philadelphia.

His sister, Catherine Drinker Bowen (1897–1973), was a well-known biographer, whose works include Friends and Fiddlers (Boston, 1935), Beloved Friend: the Story of Tchaikovsky and Nadejda von Meck (New York, 1937/R), Free Artist: the Story of Anton and Nicholas Rubinstein (New York, 1939/R) and her account of her family members, Family Portrait (Boston, 1970).

The Drinker Library of Choral Music is at the Free Library of Philadelphia.

WRITINGS

The Chamber Music of Johannes Brahms (Philadelphia, 1932)
Bach's Use of Slurs in Recitativo Secco (Merion, PA, 1946)
Drinker Library of Choral Music: Catalogue (Philadelphia, 1957)
Accademia dei Dilettanti di Musica, 1930–1960 (Merion, PA, 1960)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S.R. Rosenbaum: 'Henry S. Drinker, 1880–1965', American Choral Review, vii/4 (1964–5), 4 only, 6 only
C.D. Bowen: Family Portrait (Boston, 1970)

JON NEWSOM

Drinker [née Hutchinson], Sophie Lewis (b Haverford, PA, 24 Aug 1888; d Chestnut Hill, PA, 6 Sept 1967). American writer on women in music. Her relatively casual girlhood interest in music was stimulated when she met Henry S. Drinker, a Philadelphia lawyer and dedicated amateur musician and musicologist. They married in 1911 and established a household that became nationally known for its engagement in amateur musical activities. In 1928 the couple began what would be a 30-year tradition of singing parties (called by the family the 'Accademia dei dilettanti di musica') to which friends and acquaintances were invited, sometimes more than a hundred at a time, to play and sing Bach cantatas and other choral repertory.

Drinker's work as a historian of women in music was sparked by these musical activities, and by her experience with a women's chorus, the Montgomery Singers. Despite her lack of formal education, over a 20-year period she researched a global history of women's relationship to music. The resulting book, Music and Women: the Story of Women in their Relation to Music (New York, 1948/R, 2/1995), was the first – and for some 30 years the only – attempt to address the history of women in music. In recognition of this work, she was awarded an honorary doctorate in music by Smith College in 1949. Drinker authored several other publications, including Brahms and his Women's Choruses (Merion, PA, 1952) and many magazine articles, on musical topics ranging from choral singing, to family music-making, to Cecilia as patron saint of music; she also wrote an unpublished memoir (*c*1965). Her research papers for Music and Women are in the Sophia Smith Collection, Smith College, and at the University of Pennsylvania; personal papers, other publications and research materials on other projects are at the Schlesinger Library, Radcliffe College.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituaries: Philadelphia Inquirer (8 Sept 1967); New York Times (10 Sept 1967)

C.D. Bowen: Family Portrait (Boston, 1979)

J.G. Pool: 'The Legacy of Sophie Drinker', Paid My Dues, iii/3 (1979), 28–9, 40–41

R.A. Solie: 'Sophie Drinker's History', Disciplining Music: Musicology and its Canons, ed. K. Bergeron and P.V. Bohlman (Chicago, 1992), 23–43

R.A. Solie: 'Women's History and Music History: the Feminist Historiography of Sophie Drinker', Journal of Women's History, v/2 (1993–4), 8–31

R.A. Solie: 'Culture, Feminism, and the Sacred: Sophie Drinker's Musical Activism', Cultivating Music in America: Women Patrons and Activists since 1860, ed. R.P. Locke and C. Barr (Berkeley, 1997), 266–89

RUTH A. SOLIE

Drischner, Max (b Prieborn, nr Breslau [now Wrocław], 31 Jan 1891; d Goslar, 25 April 1971). German church musician and composer. He studied theology at the universities of Leipzig and Breslau, where he also took up music under Paul Hieschler and Hermann Lilge. In Berlin he then studied with Arthur Egidi; he also studied the harpsichord with Landowska and the organ with Schweitzer. In the early 1920s he was active in concerts devoted to the revival of old music. Drischner's main position, from 1924 until the end of World War II, was at St Nicholas in Brieg (now Brzeg), where he was organist and Kantor. The Engler organ there was restored under his direction from 1926 to 1928. After the war he lived in Erfurt, Herrenberg and finally settled in Goslar in 1955. His published compositions are mainly sacred choral and organ music. The organ music in particular is based on older models, especially in the use of chorales. Much of the published sacred vocal music is intentionally simple; often the accompaniment may be played on the harmonium or piano in place of the organ.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orgelchoräle und Choralfantasien, 2 vols. (1931–2); Nordische Toccata und Fuge, g, org (1936); Brieger Singe- und Spielbuch, 2 vols. (1941–50); Norwegische Volkstonsuite, various insts (1950); Die Weihnachtsgeschichte nach Lukas 2, chorus, org/hmn/pf/hpd (1950); Die Ostergeschichte nach den Evangelien, chorus, org/hmn/pf/hpd (1951); Prelude and Fugue, a, org (1952)

Sacred choruses, chorale preludes for org/pf

Principal publishers: Bärenreiter, Littmann, Schultheiss

WRITINGS

'Musikalische Bewegung und Kirchenmusik', Schlesisches Blatt für evangelische Kirchenmusik, lvii (1926)

'Freundschaft zwischen dem Urwald-Doktor und einem schlesischen Kantor', Heimatblatt für die Kreise Strehlen/Ohlau, xvii (1968), 13

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (F. Feldmann)

P. Eckhardt: 'Max Drischner und sein Schaffen', Musik und Kirche, xiii (1941), 143

F. Kudell: 'Max Drischner: ein schlesischer Kantor', Musik und Kirche, lxi (1991), 161–3

H. Wajemann: 'Die kirchenmusikalischen Intentionen Max Drischners', Festschrift Hubert Unverricht, ed. K. Schlager (Tutzing, 1992), 275–89

WILLIAM D. GUDGER/KLAUS KIRCHBERG

Driver, Paul (William) (b Manchester, 14 Aug 1954). British music critic and writer. He read English at St Edmund Hall, Oxford (BA 1975, MA 1982). He wrote music criticism for the Financial Times (1979–81), the Daily Telegraph (1981–3) and the Boston Globe (1983–4), becoming music critic for the Sunday Times in 1984. He is a member of the UK editorial board of Contemporary Music Review and has contributed numerous articles and reviews to many journals, including The Listener, the London Review of Books, Musical Times, the New York Times Book Review, Tempo and the Times Literary Supplement.

Driver's principal interest is 20th-century music, especially that by British composers, and he has done much to promote, with insight and enthusiasm, the music of Britten, Tippett, Goehr, Maxwell Davies, Birtwistle and Finnissy. His work is also concerned with the exploration of the various kinds of overlap between music and literature. Manchester Pieces (1996), a book of stories, essays and prose pieces, attempts to render a variety of musical forms (sonata, variations, toccata etc.) in a verbal way and is structured as a quasi-musical whole; it also describes his experiences in the Manchester musical world during the 1960s and early 1970s.

WRITINGS

'Façade Revisited', Tempo, nos. 133–4 (1980), 3–9

'The Knot Garden', Michael Tippett, O.M.: a Celebration, ed. G. Lewis (Tunbridge Wells, 1985), 155–60

'A Ritual of Renewal', The Operas of Michael Tippett, ed. N. John (London, 1985), 19–24 [ENO opera guide; on Midsummer Marriage]

ed., with R. Christiansen: 'Music and Text', CMR, v (1989) [incl. 'Speaking with Tongues: Composition for the Voice', 155–83]

'The Dying of the Light' MT, cxxxiv (1983), 380–83

'Gruber's Concertos', Tempo, no.178 (1991), 22–7

ROSEMARY WILLIAMSON

Driving. A 17th-century term for syncopation. A 'driving note' is a syncopated note.

Droardus Trecensis. An otherwise obscure figure, Magister Droard of Troyes is named in the 12th-century Calixtine manuscript (E-SC) as author of two florid two-part settings of the Benedicamus Domino.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. López-Calo: La música en la Catedral de Santiago, v. (La Coruña, 1994), 307–17, 414–18

SARAH FULLER

Droghierina, La. See CHIMENTI, MARGHERITA.

Dromal [Dromael, Droumael], Johannes (b after 1600; d Tongeren, 6 March 1684). Flemish composer. He was successively a choirboy (from 17 August 1615), priest (from June 1627) and choirmaster (from *c*1629) at the collegiate church of Ste Croix, Liège. Nothing is known of his activities between 1655 and 30 September 1667, when he became a bass singer at the collegiate church of Our Lady, Tongeren, where his brother was also a singer. He remained in this post until old age.

Dromal's music, exclusively sacred, is italianate and concertante in style, sometimes employing ternary (A–B–A) form with virtuoso passaggi and alternation of duple and triple metre. Some works paraphrase Gregorian chant (e.g. the Veni creator) and include passages of falsobordone, and some of the motets include parts for two violins and bass violin (or bassoon, or bass viol). His 1640 volume seems to have been composed on the occasion of the centenary of the Jesuit order. Inventories in St Truiden, Oudenaarde and Ghent indicate that his music circulated to some extent.

WORKS
all incomplete

Sertum musicum quorundam sanctorum, 4–6vv, bc, op.1 (Antwerp, 1640)
Convivium musicum, 2–6vv, insts, bc, op.2 (Antwerp, 1641)
Corona sanctorum omnium sive motetta concertata, 2vv, insts, op.3 (Antwerp, 1641)
Missae sex, litaniae, 4–7vv, bc (org), op.4 (Antwerp, 1642)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, i, v; VannesD
E. Schreurs: Het muziekleven in de Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk van Tongeren (circa 1400–1797): een archivalisch georiënteerd onderzoek naar het muziekleven van een middelgrote kapittelkerk in het prinsbisdom Luik binnen haar stedelijke context (diss., U. of Leuven, 1990), ii, 555–6

EUGEEN SCHREURS

Drone (i) (Fr. bourdon; Ger. Bordun or, with bagpipes, Stimmer, Brummer; It. bordone; Lat. bordunus). A sustained droning sound, or a musical instrument or part of an instrument which produces such a sound and maintains it throughout a piece or section of music. Instrumentally produced drones generally accompany melodies played on the same instrument or on another, and are usually tuned to the keynote of the melodies and often to its 5th also. Traditionally the term is best known in connection with bagpipes, most of which comprise one or more drones. It has also been used to denote the drone strings of a hurdy-gurdy.

Studies of non-European musics and European traditional musics have brought the terms 'drone' and 'bourdon' into wide use, e.g. for sustained open-string techniques on folk fiddles and lutes; the held tonic required by most Indian music and often supplied by a separate performer; a deep note hummed by a flautist while playing; the monotone of Tibetan trumpets; or the continuous sound produced on a string drum or Provençal tabor. The term has also been employed in historical studies in connection with early organs.

The origins of the drone are uncertain. It occurs in many local musical traditions throughout the world, but is by no means ubiquitous. The drone probably became established during the early growth of musical systems in western Asia, though there is no strong evidence for it before Hellenistic times, when it had a place in at least some kinds of popular music (see BAGPIPE).

ANTHONY C. BAINES

Drone (ii). See BUMBASS.

Dropa, Matthias (b ?1646–50; bur. Lüneburg, 26 Sept 1732). German organ builder. He was born in the Siebenbürgen region (Romania), a descendant of German Saxons who had emigrated there in the 12th century. His date of birth is not known. From 1680 onwards he was working in Hamburg as a journeyman to Arp Schnitger (1648–1719). He set up independently in Hamburg in 1692. Information about his work is scarce, but in 1696 he built a new organ for the church on the island of Finkenwerder in the Elbe near Hamburg. Dropa provided new wind-chests for the Rückpositiv and pedal of the baroque organ at Altenbruch near Cuxhaven in 1698. In 1705 he was commissioned by the Michaeliskirche in Lüneburg to build a great organ with three manuals and pedal. This organ made his name, and from then on he lived in Lüneburg. The case-front of this organ, with its pipes, has been preserved. In 1712 Dropa was commissioned to renovate the great organ of the Johanneskirche in Lüneburg. The organist Georg Böhm designed the specification of 46 stops on three manuals and pedal; Dropa had to build 21 new stops. He fitted two pedal towers to the fine Renaissance front of 1551, built new tracker-actions, keyboards and windpipes, and extended the compass of the instrument by adding D♯, F♯, G♯, g♯″, b″ and c‴. This organ has been largely preserved. In 1726 Dropa petitioned the Johanneskirche for a retirement pension, saying that he would 'nearly be 80 years old and was too ill to work'. His request was granted. We may conclude from this that he was probably born between 1646 and 1650. He died in 1732, and was buried in the graveyard of the Johanneskirche in Lüneburg. Dropa's career is discussed in G. Fock: Arp Schnitger und seine Schule (Kassel, 1974).

GÜNTHER SEGGERMANN

Drossdorf, Heinrich. See TRAXDORF, HEINRICH.

Droste-Hülshoff, Annette von (b Hülshoff, nr Münster, Westphalia, 14 Jan 1797; d Meersburg, 24 May 1848). German poet and composer. She came from a musical family and studied the piano and singing, beginning to compose around 1820. Largely through the influence of her brother-in-law, Lassberg, she became interested in collecting old Volkslieder and contributed to the collections of Ludwig Uhland and August Haxthausen. This interest culminated in her arrangement of the Lochamer Liederbuch for voice and piano (*c*1836). In addition, she composed many lieder to poetry by herself and others (e.g. Goethe, Brentano and Byron). Her literary talent was so highly respected that Robert Schumann, through Clara, requested an opera libretto from her in 1845. She began composing several operas of her own, but these were never completed. Compared to that of contemporary lieder, Droste-Hülshoff's style is simple, showing the influence of the Volkslied, and with the voice usually dominating the piano. A few lieder are recitative-like in texture (e.g. Wer nie sein Brot), while others contain occasional awkward melodic dissonances and harmonic cross-relations. Collections of her songs have been edited by Christoph Schlüter (Lieder mit Klavier-Begleitung, Münster, 1877) and by K.G. Fellerer (Lieder und Gesänge, Münster, 1954).

Although Droste-Hülshoff considered composition more important than writing poetry, she has been deemed more central to literature, recognized as a leading German Romantic poet. Perhaps (as Focher suggests) her approach to amalgamating poetry and music can best be viewed as Romantic individualism.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveW (M.J. Citron) [incl. further bibliography]
J. Blaschke: 'Annette von Droste-Hülshoff und ihre Beziehungen zur Musik', Neue Musik-Zeitung, xxiii (1902), 77, 93, 105–6
K.G. Fellerer: 'Annette von Droste-Hülshoff als Musikerin', AMw, x (1953), 41–59
M.J. Citron: 'Women and the Lied, 1775–1850', Women Making Music: the Western Art Tradition, 1150–1950, ed. J. Bowers and J. Tick (Urbana, IL, and Chicago, 1986), 224–48
A. Focher: 'Annette von Droste-Hülshoff, poetessa e musicista', NRMI, xx (1986), 564–78
O. Niethammer and C. Belemann, eds.: Ein Gitter aus Musik und Sprache: feministische Analysen zu Annette von Droste-Hülshoff (Paderborn, 1993)
A. Willison: Women, Poetry and Song: Composer-Authors in German Romanticism (diss., Indiana U., 1996)

MARCIA J. CITRON

Drottningholm. Opera house on Lake Mälaren, just outside Stockholm, in the Swedish royal palace. The first theatre there was built in 1754; it burnt down in 1762 and was replaced by a larger building, designed by C.F. Adelcrantz and completed in 1766, with changes in 1791 by L.-J. Desprez. Its heyday began in 1777 when Gustavus III inherited the palace. The repertory included spoken drama, operas in French, Italian and Swedish and pantomime ballets. After the assassination of Gustavus in 1792 the theatre fell into disuse. Not until the 1920s was it investigated, by the theatre historian Anje Beijer. The original wooden machinery, by Donato Stopiani, was found to be in good working order, needing only to be fitted with new ropes (electrical wiring was also installed); it includes a windlass for changing the side flats, a wind machine, a thunderbox (containing rolling stones), two machines for flight chariots, rollers for clouds, a wave-machine, trapdoors and footlights and sidelights movement with controlled by wheel systems. Several original flats and backcloths survive, by Desprez, Carlo Bibiena and J.D. Dugourc. The theatre (cap. 454) has a single, raked floor with small side boxes; the main seating is on benches, in 32 rows. The building is 57 metres by 23, with a stage depth of 19·8 and a proscenium width of 8·8 and height of 6·6. Drottningholm is generally regarded as the best-preserved theatre of the 18th century, in particular for its machinery.

The theatre reopened in 1922. An annual festival was founded in 1953, in which some 50 performances are given in brief seasons between May and September, drawing chiefly on an 18th-century repertory, including works by Handel, Haydn, Gluck, Cimarosa and Mozart, as well as composers historically connected with Sweden such as Kraus and Naumann. The first newly commissioned work given at Drottningholm was Jonas Forssell's The Garden (1999). Artistic directors have included Gustaf Hilleström (1946–67), Bertil Bokstedt (1968–79), Arnold Östman (1980–91), Elisabeth Söderström (1993–6) and Per-Erik Ökrn; Charles Farncombe was music director, 1970–79, followed by Östman, who conducted a notable series of Gluck's mature operas in the 1990s. Östman was succeeded by Nicholas McGegan in 1993. At performances the orchestra wears period costume, and period instruments have come to be preferred although performances have not usually adopted period-style staging.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Hilleström: Drottningholmsteatern förr och nu [The Drottningholm theatre, then and now] (Stockholm, 1956) [in Swed. and Eng.]

A. Beijer: Drottningholm Slottsteater på Lovisa Ulrikas och Gustaf IIIs tid (Stockholm, 1981)

T. Rangström: Drottningholm Slottsteater (Stockholm, 1985) [illustrated guide, in Swed., Eng., Ger. and Fr.]

G. Kull: Drottningholms Slottstheater: scenamaskineriet/ Drottningholm Court Theatre: the Stage Machinery (Härnösand, 1987)

I. Mattsson, ed.: Gustavian Opera: an Interdisciplinary Reader in Swedish Opera, Dance and Theatre 1771–1809 (Stockholm, 1991) [incl. S. Fogelmarck: 'Gustaf III and his Opera House', 46–63; S. Fogelmarck: 'The Drottningholm Court Theatre', 79–86; T. Rangström: 'The Stage Machinery at Drottningholm: Instructions for Use', 87–103]

STANLEY SADIE

Drouet, Louis(-François-Philippe) (b Amsterdam, ?14 April 1792; d Berne, 8 Sept 1873). French flautist. He played at the Paris Conservatoire at the age of seven, and though he did not study his instrument at that institution, it is recorded that he worked at composition with Méhul and Reicha. In the early 1800s he made successful concert tours with his father, and about 1808 he was appointed soloist to the King of Holland. In 1811 came an invitation from the emperor to visit Paris, where he received a similar appointment. Drouet's success in Paris was immense, though in the opinion of many he remained second to Tulou. After the restoration of Louis XVIII he was appointed first flute in the royal chapel. Success and honours in France did not, however, reduce his desire to appear as a travelling virtuoso.

In 1817 Drouet paid his first visit to England, where he caused a sensation, though he had to contend with the rivalry of Charles Nicholson, whose fluency and huge tone had greatly influenced English taste. Some said Drouet disguised poor intonation by sheer technical brilliance. About 1818 Drouet set up a flute business in London, and instruments were made to his specification by Cornelius Ward, but after a year this failed in the face of the popularity of Nicholson's type of instrument. Late in 1819 Drouet went again on his travels in Europe, once more with great success. For three years he stayed in Naples as director of the royal theatres, and then returned to the Netherlands, where he lived in some obscurity. In 1828 Mendelssohn persuaded him out of retirement, and the next year he again went to England. Between then and 1860 he went to Paris, Gotha (where he remained for 15 years), London again, New York and Frankfurt.

Drouet never used nor recommended a flute with more than eight keys, though by 1827 (when he produced an admirable tutor in parallel columns, French and German) he was using an up-to-date French-type flute with pillar-mounted keys. His method of double-tonguing did not always meet with approval though it seems to have served him well. It is said that he used the word 'territory' in demonstrating it to English pupils.

In addition to his tutor, Drouet left a large number of compositions, none of great musical merit though admirably conceived as vehicles for virtuoso performance. His Cent études pour la flûte is, however, a remarkable work running to 321 folio pages, and was reprinted several times. His other works include several flute fantasias, variations on opera themes, a Grande sonate for flute and piano op.40 (*c*1815) and ten flute concertos; some of his duos, composed expressly as technical studies, are still valuable. For further information see R.S. Rockstro: A Treatise on the Construction, the History and the Practice of the Flute (London, 1890).

PHILIP BATE/FIONA CLAMPIN

Droumael, Johannes. See DROMAL, JOHANNES.

Drozdov, Anatoly Nikolayevich (b Saratov, ? 23 Oct/4 Nov 1883; d Moscow, 10 Sept 1950). Russian composer and musicologist. Drozdov was mostly not mentioned in the USSR so information on him is contradictory and indefinite; even his year of birth is unsure, though early sources give 1883. He apparently studied at the Ecole de Droit in Paris (1902–4) and then simultaneously at the law faculty and the conservatory in St Petersburg. In 1905 he took part in the revolutionary unrest at the conservatory, from which he graduated in 1909 as a piano pupil of Nikolay Dubasov. He graduated from the university in 1910. From that year he worked as a lecturer and writer on music, holding appointments as director and piano teacher at the Ekaterinodar Music Institute (1911–16), teacher of the theory of musical expression at the Petrograd Conservatory (1916–17), professor of history at the Saratov Conservatory (1918–20), teacher at the Moscow Conservatory (1920–24), piano teacher at the Skryabin Musical Technical College, Moscow (1922–31, director 1927–8), lecturer and pianist at the Moscow Philharmonic Society (1932–44) and piano teacher at the October Revolution Music Teaching Institute (1941–6).

Drozdov composed orchestral works, piano pieces, chamber music, choral pieces and songs, influenced by Wagner, Liszt and contemporary French composers; he was stylistically closer to Rachmaninoff or Lyapunov than, for example, Skryabin. As an editor and arranger he concentrated on Ukrainian folk music.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Trio, vc, pf, orch, 1930; Ballet Suite, 1932; Antichnaya syuita [Antique Suite], orch, female vv, 1934; Pf Conc., 1934; Ukrainskaya rapsodiya, pf, orch, 1936; Volzhsko-Donskaya uvertyura na starinnïye kazach'i pesni [Volga-Don Ov. on Ancient Cossack Songs], 1942

Chbr and solo inst: Tanets utesheniya [Dance of Joy], op.9 [from mimodrama Mladimi palomid], pf (1922); Sonata-fantasia, op.10, vc, pf, 1919; Pf Qnt, op.11 (1928); Sonata, pf, 1921; Trio, fl, cl, pf, 1922; Pf Sonata no.2, 1923; Pf Trio (1930)

Songs (1v, pf) after Ye. Baratïnsky, M.Yu. Lermontov, A.S. Pushkin, Sappho, S. Yesenin

Principal publishers: Muzgiz, Universal

WRITINGS

'Svobodnaya muzïka' [Free music], Svobodnaya muzïka, ii (St Petersburg, 1911)

'Zhivopis' i muzïka' [Painting and music], Trudï vserossiyskogo s''yezda khudozhnikov: St Petersburg, 1911–12 (St Petersburg, 1912)

'Ėmotsiya i formoosoznaniye v muzïkal'nom vospriyatii' [Emotion and form-consciousness in musical perception], MS (1916–17), no.3, pp.63–77

'Sovremenniy muzïkal'no-khudozhestvenniy krizis' [The contemporary musical-artistic crisis], Khronika (1917), no.19

'Muzïkal'naya istoriya i muzïkal'noye ispolneniye' [Music history and musical performance], Muzïkal'naya nov' (1924), no.4

'A.N. Drozdov o svoyom tvorchestve' [Drozdov on his work], Sovremennaya muzïka, no.11 (1925)

'1905 god v Leningradskoy konservatorii', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1926), no.1, pp.6–14; no.2, pp.10–17

'Frants List', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1926), nos.7–8, pp.36–40

'N.K. Metner', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1927), no.4, pp.19–21

'S. Prokof'yev i yego opera "Lyubov' k tryom apel'sinam"', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1926), no.10, pp.15–18

'Lektsiya-kontsert L.S. Termena' [Theremin's studio concert], Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1927), nos.5–6, pp.38–9

Mikhayl Fabianovich Gnesin (Moscow, 1927)

'Pamyati Edvarda Griga' [In memory of Grieg], Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1927), no.9, pp.17–21

'Klod Debusiy', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1928), no.3, pp.19–23

Aleksandr Sergeyevich Dargomïzhskiy (Moscow, 1929)

'Gektor Berlioz', Muzïka i revolyutsiya (1929), no.1, pp.20–25

Nikolay Andreyevich Rimsky-Korsakov (Moscow, 1929)

'Vospominaniya o A.N. Skryabine' [Reminiscences about Skryabin], SovM (1946), no.12, pp.71–4

'Pamyati I.P. Shishova' [In memory of I.P. Shishov], SovM (1947), no.4, pp.103–5

'Novoye o kompozitore A.D. Zhiline', [New information about the composer A.D. Zhilin], SovM (1950), no.10, pp.89–90

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDRSC; SKM

G.B. Bernandt and I.M.Yampol'sky: Kto pisal o muzïke [Writers on music], i (Moscow, 1971), 291

DETLEF GOJOWY

Drozdowski, Jan [Jordan, Jan] (b Kraków, 2 Feb 1857; d Kraków, 21 Jan 1918). Polish writer on music, pedagogue and pianist. His father fought in the Revolution of 1831, after which he settled in Kraków and founded one of the first piano factories in Poland. Drozdowski studied music at Kraków with Kazimierz Hofman, Antoni Płachecki and Władysław Żeleński, at Warsaw with Aleksander Michałowski and at the Vienna Conservatory with Julius Epstein, Dachs and Bruckner. From 1889 until his death he taught the piano at the Kraków Conservatory and lectured on the history and theory of music. He was also a music critic, occasionally writing under the pseudonym Jan Jordan.

WRITINGS

Uwagi nad mechanizmem gry na fortepianie [Remarks on the mechanism of piano playing] (Kraków, 1893)

Zasady muzyki [Principles of music] (Kraków, 1898)

Zarys historii muzyki [An outline history of music] (Kraków, 1901, 2/1912)

PEDAGOGICAL WORKS

Szkoła studiów na fortepian, ułożona z etiud różnych kompozytorów [Practice studies for the piano, compiled from études of various composers] (Kraków, 1886)

Systematyczna szkoła gry na fortepian [Systematic school of piano playing] (Kraków, 1897, 2/1898)

Szkoła gry na fortepian z uwzględnieniem motywów ludowych polskich [School of piano playing including Polish folk motifs] (Kraków, 1905)

Ćwiczenia przygotowawcze na fortepian [Preparatory exercises in piano playing] (Kraków, n.d.) [in Pol. and Fr.]

Technika gry na fortepianie [The technique of piano playing] (Kraków, n.d.) [in Pol. and Ger.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'25-lecie Konserwatorjum Krakowskiego', Przegląd muzyczny, vi/8 (1913), 3–4

J. Reiss: 'Ś.p. Jan Drozdowski', Przegląd muzyczny, viii/4 (1918), 16

K. Treterowa: Reportaż z mojego życia [An account of my life] (Kraków, 1972) [diary of Drozdowski's daughter]

ELŻBIETA DZIĘBOWSKA

Druckman, Jacob Raphael (b Philadelphia, 26 June 1928; d New Haven, CT, 24 May 1996). American composer. He studied the piano and violin, played trumpet in jazz ensembles and was composing by the age of 15. After receiving thorough training in solfège, harmony and counterpoint with Renée Longy and Louis Gessensway, he was accepted by Copland into the composition class at the Berkshire Music Center (summer 1949); in the autumn of that year he entered the Juilliard School, where his teachers included Peter Mennin, Vincent Persichetti and Bernard Wagenaar. A Fulbright Fellowship (1954) took him to Paris for study at the Ecole Normale de Musique. After completing the master's degree (1956) he returned to teach at Juilliard and remained there until 1972. He also taught part-time at Bard College (1961–7), was associated with the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center (1965–71), and served for one year (1971–2) as director of the electronic music studio at Yale University. From 1972 to 1976 he was associate professor of composition at Brooklyn College, CUNY, and in 1976 was appointed chair of the composition department and director of the electronic music studio at Yale.

He served as composer-in-residence for the New York PO (1982–6), a capacity in which he organized festivals on the New Romanticism and Music and Theater, and was appointed president of the Koussevitzky Foundation (from 1980) and the Aaron Copland Fund for Music (from 1991). His honours include two Guggenheim Fellowships, a Brandeis Creative Arts Award, election to the American Academy and Institute of Arts and Letters, and commissions from the principal orchestras of Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, New York, Philadelphia, Radio France and St Louis, among others.

Druckman's earliest published works, such as Divertimento (1950), tend towards neo-classicism. With the Animus series for musicians and tape (1966–77), however, he moved towards an abstract expressionist aesthetic. In electronic music he discovered a theatre of imagery in which to compose vivid, even ritualistic character studies of musical and psychological complexity. His works, with or without sung texts, have the nature of contests that engage powerful sonic images with deeply flowing forces. Windows (Pulitzer Prize, 1972) was the first of a series of works in which he used the orchestra as his principal medium. He also began to incorporate material from compositions by other composers, skilfully integrating quotations into the total soundscape of a piece. The three movements of Prism (1980), for example, include music from Medea operas by Charpentier, Cavalli and Cherubini. Quoted tonal passages appear as if refracted through the surrounding non-tonal context, drawing the listener into a liminal world of fragmentary, interflowing images driven by an intense psychological dramaturgy. His term 'New Romanticism' marked a polemical stance against abstractionism and indicated a renewal of the kinetic power of the musical image from synaesthetic correspondences among sound, speech, gesture, colour and character. For Druckman this took the form of an investigation of musical symbolization at deep levels of human experience.

WORKS

ORCHESTRAL

Unpubd: Music for the Dance, 1949; Conc., str, 1951; Suite (ballet), 1953; Volpone Ov., 1953; Conc., vn, small orch, 1956; Performance (ballet, J. Limón), 1960; Measure for Measure (incid music, W. Shakespeare), 1964; Odds and Evens: a Game, children's orch, 1966

Pubd: Windows, 1972; Incenters, hn, tpt, trbn, orch, 1973 [arr. of chbr work]; Mirage, 1976; Chiaroscuro, 1977; Va Conc., 1978; Aureole, 1979; Prism, 1980 [movt 3 arr. as Engram, band, 1982]; A Birthday Bouquet, 1986; Paean, fanfare, wind, perc, 1986; In Memoriam Vincent Persichetti, fanfare, wind, perc, 1987; That Quickening Pulse, 1988; Variations on Bernstein's New York, New York, 1988; Brangle, 1989; Nor Spell Nor Charm, chbr orch, 1990; Shog, 1991; Summer Lightning, 1991; Demos, 1992; Seraphic Games, 1992; With Bells On, fanfare, wind, perc, 1994; Pf Conc., 1996

VOCAL

Laude (medieval), Bar, fl, va, vc, 1952; 4 Madrigals (F. Beaumont, B. Jonson, J. Donne, R. Herrick), SATB, 1958; The Simple Gifts (Shaker), SATB, pf; Dark upon the Harp (Pss), Mez, brass qnt, 2 perc, 1962; Antiphonies I, II, III (G.M. Hopkins), double chorus, 1963; Dance of the Maidens, SATB, org, perc, 1965, unpubd; Hymnus referamus (Ps), SATB, org, perc, 1965, unpubd; Ps lxxxix, SATB, org, perc, 1965, unpubd; The Sound of Time (N. Mailer), S, pf, 1964 [arr. S, orch, 1965]; Sabbath Eve Service 'Shir Shel Yakov', T, SATB, org, 1967; Lamia (Ovid, R. Wagner, trad.), S, orch, 1974, rev. 1975; Bō (Chin.), 3 female vv, b cl, hp, mar, 1979; Vox humana (orat, Bible), S, Mez, T, Bar, SATB, orch, 1982–3; Nor Spell (W. Shakespeare), Mez, eng hn, 1990; Counterpoise (E. Dickinson, G. Apollinaire), S, orch, 1994; see also OTHER WORKS (with tape) [Animus II, 1968; Animus IV, 1977]

OTHER WORKS

Chbr and solo inst: Str Qt no.1, 1948, unpubd; Duo, vn, pf, 1949; Divertimento, cl, hn, hp, str trio, 1950; Spell (ballet), 2 pf, 1951, unpubd; Interlude, ballet music, fl, cl, timp, 1953, unpubd; The Seven Deadly Sins, pf, 1955; Str Qt no.2, 1966; Incenters, 13 insts, 1968, orchd 1973; Valentine, db, 1969; Other Voices, brass qnt, 1976; Str Qt no.3, 1981; Tromba marina, 4 db, 1981; Reflections on the Nature of Water, mar, 1986; Dance with Shadows, brass qnt, 1989; Come Round, 6 insts, 1992; 4 Preludes, fl, hp, va, 1993 [arr. of Debussy]; Dark Wind, vn, vc, 1994; Duo, vn, vc, 1994; Glint, fl, vn, pf, 1995

With tape: Animus I, trbn, tape, 1966; Animus II, S/Mez, 2 perc, tape, 1968; Animus III, cl, tape, 1969; Look Park (film score), tape, 1970; Orison, org, tape, 1970; Traité du rossignol (film score), tape, 1970; Synapse, tape, 1971; Delizie contente che l'alme beate, wind qnt, tape, 1973 [after F. Cavalli]; Animus IV, T, vn, trbn, pf/elec pf, elec org, perc, tape, 1977

MSS in US-NHob

Principal publisher: Boosey & Hawkes

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD

S. Fleming: 'Jacob Druckman', High Fidelity/Musical America, xxii/8 (1972), MA4–5

A. Porter: Music of Three Seasons: 1974–77 (New York, 1978), 541ff

Jacob Druckman: a Complete Catalogue of his Works (New York, 1981) [incl. biography]

C. Gagne and T. Caras: 'Jacob Druckman', Soundpieces: Interviews with American Composers (Metuchen, NJ, 1982), 153–62

N. Uscher: 'Two Contempoary Viola Concerti: a Comparative Study', Tempo, no.147 (1983), 23–9

Obituaries: A. Tommasini, New York Times (27 May 1996); Billboard (15 June 1996); L. Kerner, Village Voice (18 June 1996)

AUSTIN CLARKSON

Drum (Fr. tambour; Ger. Trommel; It. tamburo; Port., Sp. tambor). A MEMBRANOPHONE (or occasionally an IDIOPHONE), usually with a resonating cavity, sounded by percussion (more rarely by friction or plucking). It has been made in many varieties and has been known in almost every age and culture.

I. Overview. II. Non-tunable Western drums.

I. Overview

1. General. 2. Drums struck directly: (i) Kettledrums (ii) Tubular drums (a) Conical and cylindrical drums (b) Barrel and double-conical drums (c) Hourglass drums (d) Goblet drums (iii) Spherical drums (iv) Water-drums (v) Ground drums (vi) Frame drums. 3. Rattle drums. 4. Friction drums.

1. GENERAL. Most drums are membranophones composed of a skin or skins (or plastic material) stretched over a frame or body-shell of wood, metal, earthenware or bone. (Certain instruments incorporating 'drum' in their names, notably BRONZE DRUM, SLIT-DRUM and plucked drum (see VARIABLE TENSION CHORDOPHONE) belong to other classification categories.) Drums are sounded in two ways: percussion, where they are struck with the bare hands or with beaters, or shaken as in the case of rattle drums in India and Tibet; and friction, where the membrane, or a stick or cord in contact with it, is rubbed or the drum is whirled on a cord. Most drums, however, are struck, and may be classified according to the shape of their body-shell as follows: kettledrums, where the body is bowl-shaped; tubular drums, subdivided into those with cylindrical, barrel-shaped, double-conical, hourglass-shaped, conical, spherical or goblet-shaped bodies (the term 'cylindro-conical' is used to indicate drums whose sides are parallel for most of their length but taper at one end); and frame drums (see figs.1, 2, 3, 4 and 5). Tubular drums may be further subdivided into those which have a single skin and are open-ended, a single skin and are closed, or a double skin. The membrane in each case may be glued, nailed, pegged, laced or lapped to the body of the drum, or attached by a combination of these methods. In kettledrums and tubular drums the body-shell acts as a resonator.

1. Examples of non-Western drums: (a) ḍholak (laced, double-headed barrel drum), Jaipur, North India; (b) nihass (kettledrums), Sudan; (c) tyepondo-pinge (footed drum) with barrel-shaped bodies and single, pegged heads), Senufo people, West Africa; (d) kendang oncer (cylindrical drums with double, laced heads), Indonesia

In many areas, in addition to their use as message drums and rhythm instruments, drums serve numerous sacred or ritual purposes and are credited with magical powers. The drum has been and still is indispensable in many parts of the world, and remains the most compelling and significant of all percussion instruments. In the most ancient civilizations the popularity of drums is established by numerous representations of the instrument in a variety of shapes and sizes in the art of Egypt, Assyria, India and Persia. Membrane drums in the form of the TYMPANUM, the tambourine and other frame drums were known to the Greeks and Romans, and cylindrical drums were known in South Asia by the 2nd or 1st century BCE. Small kettledrums in pairs (hemispherical or egg-shaped) were being used in Spain by the Moors in the early 8th century.

2. DRUMS STRUCK DIRECTLY.

(i) Kettledrums. A kettledrum has an egg-shaped or hemispherical body acting as a resonator (for comparative illustration of drum shapes see figs.4 and 5 below). The single skin is tensioned over the open end of the body by various means. Material for the body ranges from tortoise shells and kettle-shaped hollow tree-trunks to clay or metal bowls. Kettledrums are known in Europe, the Middle East, Central and South Asia, the Far East, East and West Africa and South America.

2. Examples of non-Western drums: (a) changgo (double-headed hourglass drum), Korea; (b) donno (laced, double-headed hourglass drums, with curved beaters) of the royal mpintin ensemble, Ghana; (c) frame drum, Ladakh; (d) rnga (double-headed frame drum, with handle and crooked beater), Bhutan; (e) thōn (goblet drum) and roumanea (frame drum), Cambodia

While the terms 'kettledrums' and 'TIMPANI' have been considered synonymous in Western music, the timpani – parabolic in shape and tuned to specific pitches, with the drumhead lapped over a hoop and tensioned with threaded screws or bolts – are only one form of kettledrum. Non-Western kettledrums have existed in a variety of shapes and sizes, including small ceramic instruments of central Asia (called diplipito in Georgia); the clay duggī of Uttar Pradesh; the shallow conical Araucanian KULTRÚN of Chile and Argentina; and the large metal drums of Pakistan (bher), Bihar (nagaṙa) and Nepal (nagārā). Kettledrums, most often of wood and with laced or pegged heads, are widespread in Africa, where they have often served as emblems of power (see TAMBARI).

A ritual text of *c*650–300 BCE on tablets found at Uruk (now in the British Museum) and dealing with priestly instructions for the preparation of a bull's hide for use on a large drum may concern a covering for a bronze drum rather than a drumhead. However, the Chinese history Shiji (1st century BCE) reports the use of kettledrums and trumpets by the Huns in the 3rd and 2nd centuries BCE; and the wood-bodied rhoptron used by the Parthians to

(a)

(b)

(c)

3. Examples of non-Western drums: (a) Zarb (goblet drum) of Iran: Qajar-style painting, 19th century (Victoria and Albert Museum, London); (b) water-drum and drumstick of the Zuni Pueblo Indians of New Mexico (National Museum of the American Indian, New York); (c) South Indian ḍamaru (hourglass drum) strike fear into the Roman army may have been a kettledrum-like instrument with snares.

Large kettledrums used in pairs had been an integral part of Mongolian, Turkish and Muslim instrumental ensembles long before the era of the Crusades (the late 11th century to the late 13th), when their use both terrified and fascinated the Christian forces, leading to their adoption by European ensembles. The Eastern ensembles consisted of some combination of trumpets, oboes, drums and cymbals; the kettledrums also served as a rallying point and their capture by the enemy was seen as a grievous loss (see JANISSARY MUSIC and NAQQĀRA). This type of drum and the method of thong tensioning were still used by various peoples of the Middle East at the end of the 20th century, and one such drum, the kabaro, had an important place in Ethiopian liturgical music, where it was used to emphasize the rhythm of the chanting (see ETHIOPIA, §II). Smaller Arab kettledrums were also exported to Europe, where they became known as NAKERS; these drums, like the larger ones, were usually used as a pair. In India, a small thong-tensioned kettle-drum constitutes the lower drum of the TABLĀ.

(ii) Tubular drums.

(a) Conical and cylindrical drums. Drums in conical or cylindrical shape are found in most parts of the world (they were not traditional among the Inuit, nor in Australia, and there are few in China and Japan). They exist in a wide variety of types. The tall drum, a cylindrical, cylindo-conical or hourglass shaped drum usually made of wood, often of a hollowed out branch, and either single or double headed, is found in many parts of Africa. Such drums may be stood or leaned on the ground, set on built-in feet, laid horizontally on the ground, slung across the shoulder or balanced on the lap or the knees. Most are played with the hands. Shorter cylindrical drums are also common in South-east Asia: some forms of the gendang (used in ensembles in Malaysia and Indonesia) are double-headed drums in this shape (one or both heads played with a stick), and the kendang oncer is slung across the player's shoulder and played while dancing (see fig.1*d*). The European tambourin (see TAMBOURIN (ii)) also has this shape. Some cylindrical drums are closer in proportion to the Western tenor drum and side drum. These, often played with sticks and sometimes provided with snares, are found in Europe, throughout South-east Asia and in the Americas, and include the GANGA of West and North Africa and the ṬABL of the Middle East. In Africa and also in South America cylindrical and especially conical drums are often played in sets of varying sizes and pitches: the conical atabaque of Brazil (single-headed) and the bata of Nigeria (double-headed) are played in sets of three, while the Afro-Cuban BONGOS are joined in a pair. In larger sets the drums may be a variety of shapes: in the ingoma ensemble of Rwanda (played in sets of up to 25; see NGOMA) the drums vary from cylindrical to conical. Large, cylindrical drums with a narrow shell include the LAMBEG DRUM of Northern Ireland and the DAVUL of the Middle East.

(b) Barrel and double-conical drums. Drums distinguished by having a larger diameter at the middle than at the ends. The barrel drum has a curvilinear body while the double-conical drum has an angular profile (fig.4). Barrel drums are known in West and East Africa and in Latin America (see CONGA DRUM), and they are among the characteristic drums of South-east and East Asia, where they exist in a variety of forms. Shallow barrel drums include the trống nhạc of Vietnam, used in the đai nhạc ensemble, and the Japanese shimedaiko. Deeper types include the bedhug, an instrument of the Javanese gamelan suspended and beaten with a mallet, the Afro-Cuban agbosí, the Japanese daibyōshi (in some traditions suspended from the shoulder and played while dancing) and ōdaiko (on which a large variety of effects is created through the use of many different drumsticks), the large ḌHOL (India) and duhl (Pakistan) and the smaller ḌHOLAK, the Korean yonggo and the tang gu of the Hán Chinese. Very large barrel drums, which may be mounted on a stand, are used in religious ritual; the double-headed Korean chin'go (about 155 cm in length, with heads 110 cm in diameter) is played at the half-yearly sacrifice to Confucius and other important ceremonies.

The best known double-conical drum (some types are barrel-shaped) is the Indian MṚDAṄGAM, a tuned, finger-played, double-headed wooden drum of asymmetrical shape used in hindustani and karnatak music. Drums of this type have sophisticated composite heads designed to allow the production of a large variety of tone colours. On the pakhāvaj (northern mṛdaṅgam), the two heads are of different thickness, the right thinner than the left. Over each is stretched a second skin, cut away to leave a circle of the lower skin exposed. A circle of permanent tuning paste (iron oxide in a glue of boiled rice) is applied to the centre of the right head; a pancake of dough is applied to the left head to tune it. The southern mṛdaṅgam is similar, but with split reeds inserted between the membranes of the right head to create a buzzing effect; it does not always have a dough patch.

4. Silhouettes of drum shapes: (a) kettledrum; (b) tubular or cylindrical; (c) barrel; (d) conical; (e) double-conical; (f) hourglass; (g) goblet; (h) frame

(c) Hourglass drums. Hourglass-shaped drums are found in a wide area stretching from about 40° north of the equator to 15° south, from Africa in the west to Japan and the Pacific islands in the east. They are perhaps the most distinctively shaped of all the tubular drums: the body of each instrument has a constricted waist and open cup ends (figs.4 and 5). The length of these drums varies from about 30 cm, as with the Yoruba kanango, to 90 cm or more in the case of the Korean CHANGGO, the largest of the family. The body may be made of wood, wood cased in metal, metal or earthenware. The drum may be single- or double-headed, and the skins may be glued, nailed, laced or lapped to the body. The kundu, a narrow, single-headed hourglass drum, is the characteristic membranophone of New Guinea and northern Island Melanesia.

The most complicated type is the hourglass pressure drum, also known as the variable tension drum. It is distinguished from the general family of hourglass-shaped drums by the lacing which attaches the skins to the body and at the same time controls the tension of the drumheads. It has two forms: a double-headed drum with hoops at either end and a continuous tensioning thong laced back and forth between the two skins at equal intervals around their circumference (see fig.2*b*); and a single-headed drum, similarly laced, with the tensioning thong threaded between the hoop and the skin at one end, and through holes drilled around the open cup of the body at the other. The hourglass pressure drum is a portative instrument; other hourglass-shaped drums may be portative or nonportative.

In Africa the hourglass pressure drum is characteristically hung from the left shoulder so that it lies in an almost horizontal position under the left arm (e.g. the Hausa KALANGU). The player is able to alter the skin tension, and thus the pitch of individual drumstrokes, by the pressure of an arm or hand on the central lengths of the tensioning thong. If only a single pitch is required, the drum may be tuned by tying a belt around the lengths of the tensioning thong at the instrument's waist. It may be beaten by hand, with a stick, or by hand and stick: if a stick is used, it is often a hooked beater with a flattened head at right angles to the main shaft; if it is beaten by hand, a snare or a central ring of tuning-paste, or both, may be added to the skin.

The West African hourglass pressure drum is often used as a 'talking' drum, and has been inaccurately described as the principal talking drum in an area where almost every instrument, including rattles, can be made to 'talk'. Its tonal flexibility and its range of about an octave have made it increasingly popular since its first appearance from the north in the late 16th century. In many areas its use has superseded that of older more traditional instruments which survive in some cases as rural curiosities. The hourglass pressure drum is used as a solo instrument, or in a variety of combinations with such instruments as cylindrical drums, frame drums, kettledrums, bells, castanets, rattles, bowed and plucked lutes and wind instruments.

5. Various internal drum shapes in cross-section: (a) conical drum with hourglass-shaped interior (kendang, Bali, Indonesia); (b) single-skin drum (engalabi, Ganda people, Uganda); (c) goblet drum internal shape (ntimbo, Nyoro people, Uganda)

Strokes on the pressure drum lead to notes either level in pitch or gliding. A level note results from striking the skin without subsequently altering arm or hand pressure on the tensioning thong, while a gliding note results from striking the skin and increasing or decreasing pressure on the tensioning thong to produce a rising or falling glissando, or both. These tonal capabilities have made the hourglass pressure drum an ideal 'talking' instrument for tonal languages in which syllables are not only placed on individual pitch levels, but may also rise or fall from these levels. The use of the drum in this way to perform a Yoruba oriki (traditional praise text) is shown in ex.1, in which high-tone syllables are marked with an acute accent, low-tone syllables with a grave; mid-tone syllables are unmarked.

A number of hourglass pressure drums are used in South and East Asia. The huḍukkā [huṙuk, uḍukkai], a wide-headed hourglass pressure drum of India, appears in various forms, some provided with jingles. The iḍakka, a temple drum of Kerala, south-west India, has drumheads about twice the diameter of the openings; the heads are mounted on hoops which are laced together and tightened by a central cross lacing. It is provided with a snare. The iḍakka has a large range and is sometimes played melodically. In Japan, hourglass pressure drums include the kotsuzumi ('small hourglass drum') and the ōtsuzumi ('large hourglass drum'), which have lacquered wooden bodies and heads about twice the diameter of the openings and lapped to iron rings. The kotsuzumi is held on the right shoulder with the left hand, which squeezes the tension rope around the middle, while the right hand strikes the drumhead. It is capable of great tonal variety and plays more than 200 named patterns. The ōtsuzumi is held on the left thigh and has somewhat less tonal variety.

Ex.1 From an oriki, performed on Yoruba dundun pressure drums

(d) Goblet drums. Single-headed goblet-shaped drums with a membrane head that may be laced, pegged or glued; the body of the drum may be of wood, metal or pottery. They are of particular importance in the Islamic world and its vicinity but most of all in the Arab countries (see DARABUKKA). The Iranian tombak or zarb is a virtuoso solo instrument, played with a range of beating methods and sonorities; it exists in two forms: an instrument with a wooden body, a skin drumhead covering the larger end and the smaller end open has been used in classical and popular music; and a larger earthenware version is used to accompany athletic exercises in the zur-khāne (gymnasium).

Goblet drums are used in many parts of Africa, especially East Africa, as royal or ceremonial instruments. In West Africa, the atumpan, the principal talking drum of the Akan people of Ghana, is goblet shaped with an open foot. In South-east Asia goblet drums appear in Myanmar (the ò-zi, about 3 metres in length), Thailand (where the klǫng yāō is used in ceremonial processions and the larger klǫng āē in Buddhist temples) and elsewhere. The dadabuan and the dĕbakan are used in the Philippine kulintang ensemble.

(iii) Spherical drums. Drums of spherical or near-spherical shape, made of clay, as in the enya dukan and dikki of Nigeria and the māṭā of Rajasthan, North India, or of a calabash, as in the Nigerian batta. A membrane is stretched over a hole or slit in the top or side. Such drums are rare; they are found only in West Africa and North India.

(iv) Water-drums. Percussion instruments making use of the special sound-conducting qualities of water. There are two types: a vessel floated upside down in water and beaten with a spoon or a stick (an idiophone: see WATER-DRUM); and a single-headed drum of the Amerindians of North America and the Chaco of Argentina and Paraguay, having as a distinctive feature a hollow body containing water (see fig.3*b*). The volume of water is adjusted for tuning purposes, and, among the Iroquois and Ojibwa, the head is made wet before use, usually by inverting the drum. The body may be of wood, or may be an earthen or iron pot, or a kettle (the Seminole drum was a kettle with a buckskin head, played with a padded wooden beater about 25 cm long). Wooden drums may have a bung-hole in the side so that the quantity of water can be changed without removing the head. A padded wooden stick is generally used as a beater, but the Iroquois use an unpadded stick for their small ka'nohko'wah drum, and the Chaco of Paraguay sometimes use a gourd or the hand.

Water-drums have been found in eastern North America among the Chickasaw, Creek (tamamápka), Delaware, Cherokee, Iroquois (ohgiwe ka'nohko'wah), Seminole, Shawnee (now in Oklahoma, but formerly in the north-east) and Yuchi (dīdané). Elsewhere in North America the water-drum has a scattered distribution: it is found in the western Great Lakes region among the Ojibwa (miti'gwakik); on the Plains among the Omaha (ne'xegaku) and, more recently, in ceremonies of the Native American Church (Peyote drum); and in the southwest among the Apache ('ísal dádestl'ooni) and the Navajo ('ásaa'yilghaalí).

(v) Ground drums. A ground drum is made up of a series of poles stuck in the ground with a membrane stretched across them; the membrane is struck with a stick. The instrument is known in southern Africa, where it is called ingqongqo by the Xhosa.

(vi) Frame drums. Drums with one or two heads stretched over a frame or hoop. They have been played throughout Asia and the Middle East, in many parts of Europe, in East Africa, and in North and South America. The many types vary in shape, size, and method of attaching the skins, which may be pegged, glued or tensioned with a network of cords. Some types are fitted with a handle, notably a group of ritual drums of Central and northern Asia and North America. Others, such as the Irish BODHRÁN, the tppumin of the Flathead people, Montana, and the hets of Mongolia, are held by wires, sticks or cords across the open back. Larger frame drums are generally beaten with a stick, usually on the head itself (see fig.2*d*) but sometimes on the frame, as among certain Inuit groups. Small drums are usually hand-beaten, principally with the fingers or knuckles: this is particularly true of the single-headed frame drums of the Middle East (see BENDĪR; DAFF; and ṬĀR). The larger MAZHAR is also hand-beaten. The European TAMBOURINE (introduced from the Middle East) and the kañjīrā of south India are among the many examples of frame drum to have jingling devices such as metal rings, discs or pellet bells. The Arab RIQQ, a small circular frame drum with ten pairs of small cymbals grouped in two small slits, is a virtuoso instrument on which a variety of tone colours is produced by striking and shaking alternately and in combination.

The earliest frame drums may appear in the ritual animal dances depicted on wall paintings at Çatal Höyük in Anatolia (6th millennium BCE), where two of the dancers may be holding a round instrument. In Mesopotamia they are well attested in terracotta female figurines from Ur in the neo-Sumerian period (*c*2150–1800 BCE); dancers now used the drum rather than clappers in ritual performances, and it flourished in western Asia until the end of the ancient era. The Egyptian frame drum was either round, or rectangular with concave sides. Both shapes attained popularity in the New Kingdom (1567–1085 BCE), the rectangular being much used at banquets and always played by women. Archaeological evidence and ethnographic parallels suggest that the tuppim (the Hebrew plural of tof) mentioned in Genesis xxxi.27 may have been round frame drums without jingles. The instrument appears in English translation as tabret or timbrel and corresponds to the modern Arabic daff (for variants of this term see DAFF). The TOF, as also the duff, was frequently played by women, as in Miriam's song of triumph. Double-headed frame drums containing rice grains are mentioned in early Chinese writings; they are still used in Asia and were known to North American Indian peoples. Other double-headed frame drums included ancient Greek tympanon (see TYMPANUM (i)), the CAJA of Spain and South America and the rnga of Tibet. (For further illustration see MESOPOTAMIA, fig.5.)

3. RATTLE DRUMS. Drums struck indirectly by pendants, pellets or similar objects. Such drums are known in South, East and inner Asia. The ḍamaru, an hourglass pressure drum of South Asia, has cords threaded with pellets of wood, lead, clay, etc. attached to the centre of each head; the drum is twirled to and fro so that the pellets strike the skin (see fig.3*c* ; see also INDIA, §III, 6(iii)). The thad-rnga of Tibet is a ḍamaru made from two skullcaps. The Korean nogo consists of two barrel drums mounted at right angles, each pierced by a shaft through the body, to which knotted leather thongs are attached; it is played by twirling and shaking. The Japanese furitsuzumi is similar to the nogo.

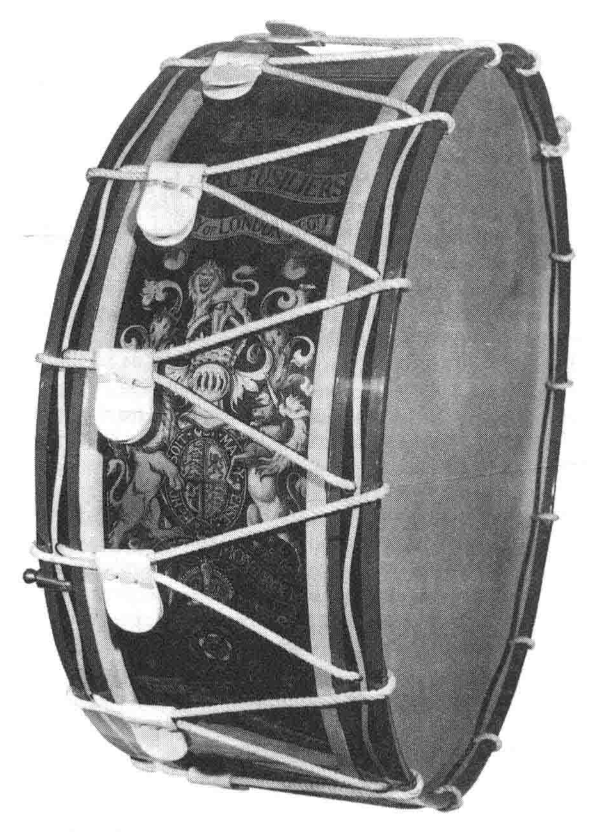
4. FRICTION DRUMS (Fr. tambour à friction; Ger. Reibtrommel, Brummtopf; It. caccavella, puttiputi; Sp. tambor de fricción, zambomba). Membranophones sounded by friction, either direct or indirect. The membrane on direct friction drums is rubbed either by the hand, which may be wet or rosined, by a leather 'plectrum' or by a stick which passes back and forth through a hole in the membrane. The membrane on indirect friction drums is made to vibrate by friction on a cord or stick in contact with the drumhead.

If a stick is used, the membrane is vibrated by rubbing the stick with wet or rosined fingers, twirling it between the palms or pulling it to and fro. Pressure on the stick varies the pitch. In the indirect method, the stick either stands upright, pinned or tied to the centre of the unbroken membrane (fig.6*a*), or it extends (and is secured) through a hole in the membrane into the resonating chamber and is vibrated from below (fig.6*b*). In other types (e.g. the Brazilian CUÍCA) both direct and indirect friction are used; the stick itself is rubbed and is also used to rub the membrane (fig.6*c*). If a cord is used it is either threaded through the membrane and knotted (as in fig.6*d*) or tied to a small peg or disc (fig.6*e*), or threaded through one hole and out of another (fig.6*f*). The cord may be made of horsehair and may be waxed, rosined or rubbed by wet or rosined fingers (see STRING DRUM). In some types of drum the cord is fastened round the neck of a stick (as in fig.6*g*); when the instrument is whirled around, friction between the stick and the cord makes the drumhead vibrate.

The friction drum in its various forms has been found in Africa, South Asia, Europe and South America. Because of the rather unearthly character of its sound, it is often associated with religion, ceremony and similar rites, especially in Africa. Its connection with specific occasions in European traditions dates from the 16th century onwards: a Flemish friction drum, the rommelpot ('rumble-pot'; see LOW COUNTRIES, §II, 3, fig.5) is particularly associated with Christmas, as was the Maltese rumbaba; in Italy the caccavella is connected with vintage time; the Spanish zambomba and the German Brummtopf ('growling-pot'), now better known as Reibtrommel, are also connected with festive occasions. In the Western orchestra occasional use is made of a friction drum; the Brazilian cuíca has been used in Latin American dance bands and in the orchestra. See also BOMBO (ii); ḌHĀK; ḌHOL; DOUBLE-HEADED DRUM; DRUM-CHIME; KENDANG; NGOMA; REBANA; TABLĀ; KUMI-DAIKO; TALKING DRUM; TAMBORIL; TAMBOUR; TOM-TOM and ACOUSTICS, §V.

II. Non-tunable Western drums

In the standard Western orchestra, membrane drums are either of definite musical pitch (for the most important member of this category, see TIMPANI), or of indeterminate pitch (the bass, side and tenor drums; see §§1–3 below).



6. Examples of the varying methods of sounding friction drums

1. Bass drum. 2. Side drum [snare drum]. 3. Tenor drum.

1. Bass drum (Fr. grosse caisse; Ger. grosse Trommel; It. gran cassa, gran tamburo). The largest of the orchestral drums of indefinite pitch, consisting of a cylindrical shell of wood with two heads (hide or plastic) lapped onto hoops placed over the open ends of the shell and secured by counter-hoops. The heads are tensioned by means of threaded rods which lie across the shell. (Rope-tensioning is now almost exclusive to regimental drums; fig.7.) This screw-tensioning is arranged in two ways: single tension, in which each rod runs from hoop to hoop and the heads are drawn up together; and separate tension, in which each head is drawn up independently. The single-headed bass drum known as the gong drum, popular for over a century (particularly in England), has become comparatively rare. It has a narrow shell open on one side, the other side being closed with a screw-tensioned drumhead. Despite its admirable resonance, a single-headed bass drum fails in certain respects, for unless the diameter of the head is exceptionally large, the instrument tends to give off a definite note (as do all single-headed drums). There is also a slight lack of depth in the tone produced from a drumhead mounted on a narrow open cylinder compared with that produced when a deeper cylinder is enclosed with two drumheads. However, the single-headed bass drum is ideal for certain works and situations. The double-headed bass drum used by most British and North American symphony orchestras has a head diameter of 90–100 cm, though smaller ones may sometimes be used. In Europe, probably for historical reasons, bass drums with a smaller head diameter (around 81 cm) but much greater depth (about 66 cm) have been popular; at the end of the 20th century these were sometimes used in Britain. The latter type tends to sound like a very low tom-tom, a quality not always desirable.

In the orchestra the bass drum is normally supported on a stand or suspended in a frame with a swivel attachment so that the drum may be played at any angle the player desires (fig.8). The mallets are usually large and felt-headed, with sufficient weight to extract the full tone. The orchestral bass drum should have a calfskin head on the playing side; the opposite head should ideally also be of the same material. (But plastic heads are a great asset to the marching band, being unaffected by the vagaries of the weather.) The head is generally struck with a glancing blow midway between the centre and the rim; in a marching band it is struck in the centre, with an audible 'crack' that gives the beat to those marching behind.

The beater is usually held in the right hand, the left hand (in the case of a single-headed drum) controlling the length of the note where required. With a double-headed

7. Military bass drum (unbraced) by H. Potter, London, c1930

8. Orchestral bass drum on swivel stand by the L.W. Hunt Drum Co., London, c1935 drum, the fingers of the right hand 'still' the vibrations, while the left hand controls the reverberation of the opposite head. In a succession of short notes, the drum is struck in the centre to minimize the sonority. A tremolo is produced (as is the roll on the timpani) by single beats from hand to hand. Less bulky beaters, such as those used on the timpani, are frequently used for the roll; other beaters to suit particular purposes include those with heads of hard felt or wood. Occasionally, a sustained note is effected by means of a double-headed beater (formerly called a tampon). Here, a rapid oscillating movement of the wrist of one hand brings both heads of the stick into contact with the drumhead. (This effect was called for by Dukas in L'apprenti sorcier, and by Stravinsky in The Firebird.) A roll is produced with a double-headed beater when one player combines cymbals with bass drum; this orchestral practice infuriated Berlioz, who considered the result an ignoble noise, fit only for bands at tea-gardens.

In the East, ancestors of the Middle Eastern davul, a large thong-braced, double-headed cylindrical drum, were known in South Asia by the 2nd or 1st century BCE. The davul (or tabl turki), the ancestor of the bass drum, was first recorded in the eastern Mediterranean in the 14th century. In Europe, the drum described by Isidore of Seville (*c*600 CE) as symphonia, 'a hollow wood, covered with skin on either end, that the musicians strike with sticks from both sides' suggests a form of bass drum. An early 16th-century painting by Carpaccio (fig.9) shows a Turkish musician playing a drum almost exactly the same shape and size as the modern military bass drum; the instrument was known as the Turkish drum until the early 19th century. A large cylindrical drum supported on the player's chest is seen on a mid-16th-century German engraving.

The bass drum remained a rarity in Europe until the 18th century when the imitation of the Turkish Janissary bands became fashionable in European military bands (see JANISSARY MUSIC and BAND (i), §II, 2(i)) and, on appropriate occasions, in orchestral music. Early experiments are seen in Freschi's opera Berenice vendicativa performed in 1680, and in an early 18th-century work by Gottfried Finger entitled Concerto alla turchesta. Among the Classical composers Gluck seems to have made the earliest use of the bass drum, in Le cadi dupé (1761). He was followed by Mozart in Die Entführung (1782), by Haydn in his 'Military' Symphony (1793–4) and by Beethoven in his Ninth Symphony (1822–4). The drum used in the orchestra until well into the 19th century could have been the narrow Turkish type with one or two heads, or a double-headed drum with a cylindrical shell of wood, longer from head to head than was its diameter which was approximately 50 cm. This instrument was known in England as the long drum. It was rope-tensioned in the manner of many medieval drums; the cord passed through holes in the counter-hoops and across the shell in 'V' formation, and was tightened by leather braces known as buffs or tug-ears. Since the time of Haydn and Mozart a long drum has frequently been illustrated as being struck in the oriental fashion, that is with a stick on one side, and a switch of twigs or a split-rod on the other side, or at times the switch striking the frame of the drum; this effect was indicated in the notation by the use of both up and down tails, the upward tails being for the switch. The long drum continued as an instrument of the military band and elsewhere throughout the 18th century and the early part of the 19th. It was eventually displaced by the 'military' bass drum, a rope-tensioned drum with a narrow shell. Screw-tensioning was applied to instruments of this type before 1850. Kastner in his Manuel général de musique militaire (1848) illustrated a grosse caisse – nouveau modèle with 15 tensioning rods.

9. Bass drum: detail from the 'Triumph of St George' by Vittore Carpaccio, 1502 (Scuola di S Giorgio degli Schiavoni, Venice)

In 1857 the British firm of Distin built the 'world's largest drum', a single-headed drum with a diameter of about 240 cm. There are now larger drums, such as the 'Disneyland Big Bass Drum' built in the USA in 1961. This instrument has a diameter of around 370 cm. While instruments of this description are rarely seen on the concert platform, it has become customary to use the largest available bass drum in Verdi's Requiem, and consequently a large orchestral drum is often referred to as a 'Verdi gran cassa'.

The bass drum appears frequently in orchestral scores from Gluck onwards, in early instances as a timekeeper. Berlioz, Liszt (who is credited with having introduced the roll in Ce qu'on entend sur la montagne, 1848–9), Wagner, Verdi and Sibelius used the instrument extensively. Berlioz in his Grand traité d'instrumentation (1843) referred to the gloomy and menacing sound of the bass drum if the instrument be well made and of large size. In the 'Tuba mirum' of his Grande messe des morts (1837) he asked that the grosses caisses be struck with padded drumsticks alternately on each side ('avec deux tampons'). Wagner made effective use of the roll on the bass drum, as did Sibelius. In the latter's En saga (1892) the timpani are silent, and the bass drum (played with timpani sticks) figures constantly in the manner expected of the timpani. The writing for the bass drum in Vaughan Williams's Sinfonia antartica (1949–52) and his arrangement of the 'Old Hundredth' is exemplary. Stravinsky's use of it in the finale of The Rite of Spring remains one of the instrument's finest moments. In the revision of this work Stravinsky wrote a passage where the bass drum is played at the edge with a wooden stick. Britten specified the side-drum stick in Peter Grimes (1944–5). In Madama Butterfly (1904), Puccini wrote 'colla bacchetta di ferro' (with an iron rod). In the 'Dies irae' of Verdi's Requiem the gran cassa is to be 'well tensioned so that the off-beat comes out dry and very loud'. Composers have used, and continue to use, the bass drum descriptively, as for example did Beethoven in Wellingtons Sieg, Tchaikovsky in the Overture '1812', and Prokofiev in Lieutenant Kijé.

In musical notation the lowest space on the staff is normally allotted to the bass drum. The bass clef is generally used, though strictly speaking no clef is required for instruments of indeterminate pitch. In symphonic works a single line is frequently allotted. The roll has often been signified as in ex.2. Composers usually designate the bass drum with its full title, or abbreviate it 'B D'. In Italian scores, for example those of Rossini and Verdi, the term gran cassa (or cassa) could signify bass drum and cymbals, the bass drum alone being signified cassa sola. The playing of cymbals and bass drum by a single player (one cymbal fixed to the top of the drum, the other in the player's left hand and the drum mallet in the right), once used as an economy measure, fell out of use as the sound of both instruments was less than satisfactory. The effect, however, was exploited by Mahler in his First, Second and Third Symphonies and by Stravinsky in Petrushka.

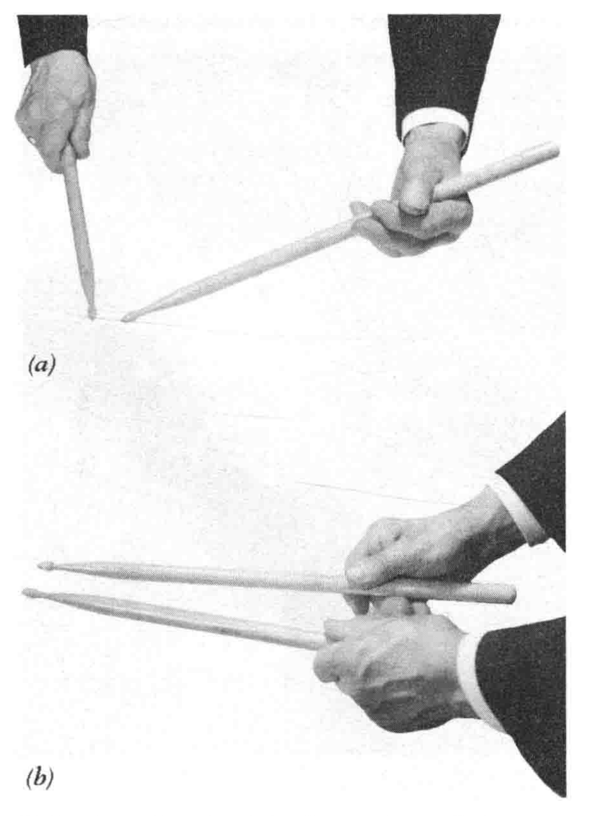
The bass drum of the DRUM KIT is much smaller than the orchestral instrument, with a head diameter of about 50 cm (though larger sizes were popular in the 1930s). The heads are of plastic and the instrument, which serves as a time keeper, is played with a foot pedal.

2. SIDE DRUM [SNARE DRUM] (Fr. tambour militaire, caisse claire; Ger. kleine Trommel, Militärtrommel, Schnarrtrommel; It. tamburo militare, tamburo piccolo). The side drum is so called because the original military instrument was slung from the shoulder and worn at an angle at the player's side, a position maintained in marching bands (fig.10); the term snare drum is now more generally used. The instrument consists of a cylindrical shell of wood or metal covered at each end with a head of calfskin or plastic. The heads are lapped to hoops and secured by counter-hoops. Tensioning (single or separate) is effected by means of threaded rods or (occasionally) by rope bracing. The depth of the shell varies according to the purpose of the instrument. In regimental and similar marching bands a drum with a shell 30 cm deep is usual. Side drums of various depths ranging from 10 to 40 cm are used in the orchestra. These instruments and side drums generally are 35 cm or occasionally 40 cm in diameter. The upper (playing) head is known as the 'batter' head, the lower head as the 'snare' head. Across the lower head are stretched 'snares': strings of gut, wire, wire-covered silk or nylon (fig.11). The snares, eight or more in number, give the drum its characteristic timbre: when the upper head is struck the resonance is communicated to the lower head which then vibrates against its



10. Rope-tensioned military side drums of the 10th Volunteer Battalion, the Parachute Regiment

11. Modern orchestral side drum (showing snare and snare release) by the Premier Drum Co., Leicester snares. These vibrations are doubled by being communicated to the snares themselves, resulting in a crisp sound which seems to be an octave higher than that of an unsnared drum. The tension of the snares is vital to the sound of the drum. They must lie evenly on the vellum and be taut enough to produce a crisp and immediate response to the stroke on the batter head. They are adjusted by a screw mechanism in which is incorporated a snare release, making possible instant release of the snares to obtain such effects as 'muffled', 'muted' or 'tom-tom', and equally important, to obviate the distressing snare 'buzz' caused (with snares on) by sympathetic vibration. The correct tensioning of the heads and their quality is equally important to the tone of the drum. Opinions differ as to the respective qualities of the calf and plastic head – the latter a form of polyethylene terephthalate (see TIMPANI, §1). In most cases the batter head (of either material) is slightly thicker and, in the case of a separately tensioned drum, occasionally less taut than the snare head. The heads are tensioned almost 'board hard' and further tone control is effected by the use of an adjustable damper to control the resonance of the playing head.

12. Side-drum sticks: (a) 'traditional' grip; (b) 'matched' grip

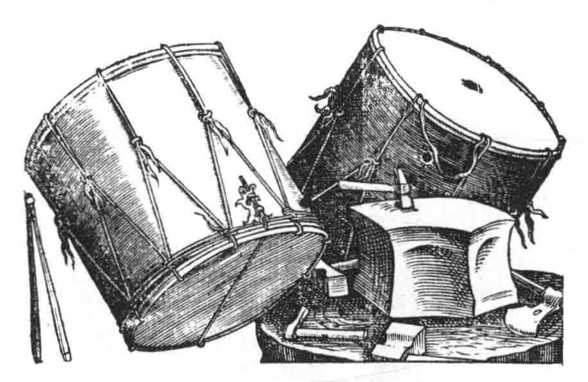
For normal orchestral purposes the side drum is supported on a stand which is adjustable for height and rake. It is played with wooden drumsticks varying in weight and style according to the choice of the player. The sticks are tapered with the playing end (the tip) shaped as an acorn. Various woods are used including hickory, lance-wood and ebony. The side-drum sticks are held in two ways: the 'matched' grip and the 'traditional' grip (fig.12). In the traditional grip the right-hand stick is held between the tip of the thumb and the first joint of the index finger. The left-hand stick is held in the crutch of the thumb and index finger resting on the middle joint of the third finger. This grip is used when the drum is played at an angle, as on the march. In the matched grip (which is employed on the timpani and such mallet-played instruments as the xylophone) the sticks are held identically: like the right-hand stick in the traditional grip. It is used when the side drum is played in a horizontal position – a style favoured by jazz and rock drummers and certain symphonic players. In each grip the sticks are held at a point about 10 cm from the butt, the distance varying according to the weight and length of the stick which generally measures in the region of 36 cm.

The foundation of the art of side-drumming remains the 'roll', together with numerous fundamental beatings known to the drummer as the 'rudiments', e.g. the 'paradiddle', and such embellishments as the 'flam', 'drag' and 'ruff'. The roll consists of reiterating beats, free of rhythmical stress and sufficiently close to prohibit analysis. The (so-called) 'legitimate' roll is produced by recurring double beats known as 'Mammy-Daddy'. To perfect a close and even roll necessitates long and arduous practice of the double strokes commencing slowly and accelerating to a minimum of 32 beats in a bar of 4/4 at a speed of 120 crotchets to the minute. In contrast to the legitimate roll there is the 'single-stroke' roll – a product of 20th-century drumming. Here a tremolo is produced by a rapid succession of single beats. Mastery of either roll imparts a degree of versatility which facilitates performance of the rudiments and the side drum generally. The better-known rudiments include 'stroke' rolls of varying lengths (5–15), the 'paradiddle' (single-stroke, flam and drag), and 'ratamacue', and such ornaments as the flam, drag and ruff whose names, together with 'paradiddle' and 'ratamacue', are onomatopoeic, as indeed is 'drum' (ex.3).

Ex.3

13. Rope-tensioned tabor, showing snare on the struck head: relief by Agostino di Duccio, c1454 (S Francesco, Rimini)



The earliest known side drum is the small medieval tabor which is clearly represented in art of the early 13th century and the 14th as a rope-tensioned side drum with a snare or snares, beaten either with two sticks or, by players of the PIPE AND TABOR, with one. The medieval tabor had no definitive form; sometimes the diameter was greater than the depth and sometimes less. It was a double-headed drum with one or more snares on the struck head. In the majority of cases the heads were tensioned with cords going diagonally to and fro from one head to the other, with thongs to close the 'V' formation and add tension to the vellums (a system of bracing known to the ancient Egyptians). There is some pictorial evidence for the use of a flesh hoop, but generally speaking artists portrayed the rope threaded directly into the vellum (fig.13). Sheepskin or calfskin was normally used for the heads of the tabor, but there is evidence of occasional use of other skins, such as pig or goat. During the 15th century the tabor appeared in a larger form, adopted with other customs by the armies of western Europe (particularly by the Swiss mercenary regiments) from their oriental foes.

The association of drum and fife is recorded in the Chronicles of the City of Basle for 1332. The instrumentalists, who were incorporated in a guild, ranked as high officials and were an essential feature at all public festivals (fig.14). In England an early notice of the large tabor is contained in an entry in the Privy Purse expenses of Henry VII who in 1492 gave to '2 Sweches grete taborers' the sum of £2. The small tabor continued its function as a folkdance instrument, particularly as a companion of the pipe (known in England as 'whittle and dub'). The larger drum developed into an important military instrument. In England in the 16th century the name tabor or tabrett was displaced by 'drome', 'dromme', 'drume', etc. An ensemble providing dinner music for Queen Elizabeth I is said to have included side drums, kettledrums, trumpets, cornetts and fifes. Entries in the royal Privy Purse expenses show that Elizabeth paid her three 'Drumsleds' £18 5s. each yearly. ('Drumsled' or 'drumslade' is Old English, derived from the Dutch or Low German word meaning drumbeat, hence 'dromslades' are drum-beaters.)

Like the tabor, the size of the side drum varied considerably. Arbeau in his Orchésographie (1588) described and illustrated a French side drum measuring (he said) two-and-a-half pieds in diameter and depth, closed at each end with parchment skins (secured by two hoops) bound with cords to keep them taut and played with two sticks. Unlike the tabor the side drum was invariably played with two sticks, and by the 16th century the snare was below the lower head (as on modern instruments), instead of above the upper head as on the tabor. Praetorius in his Theatrum instrumentorum (1620) illustrated a side drum 59 cm in diameter and depth (fig.15). This instrument had a single snare on the lower head.

14. Flemish tabor: Pierron de la Hues, drummer to the Guild of Archers of Antwerp, portrait by Gillis Congnet, 1581 (Koninklijk Museum voor Schone Kunsten, Antwerp)

15. Side drums (one showing snare): woodcut from Praetorius's 'Theatrum instrumentorum' (1620)

Little music was written for the drum during the Middle Ages. Such drum music as still exists is military, and consists mainly of instructions for the instrument's use in signalling and pace-making, little being said regarding its technique. Arbeau's Orchésographie is the earliest important source of information. Arbeau set down certain rhythms presumably used by the French drummers of his period. He listed the sounds he gave to the various units in his tabulations as follows: minim, one tap of the stick – tan; two crotchets, two taps of the stick – tere; four quavers, four taps of the stick – fre. Mersenne in his Harmonie universelle (1636–7) spoke of the round beat (baton rompu); single beating (baton rond); single and double beatings (baton meslé); and of players who beat the drum at such a speed that it was impossible to follow each beat.

In addition to its use as a military instrument the side drum served a purpose in naval routine. On board ship (until 1865) it was concerned with action-calls, burial at sea, flogging and 'walking the plank'. Shortly before his death (1596), Drake is reputed to have told his soldiers to hang his drum at Plymouth so that it could be beaten in time of danger to recall him; this side drum survives at Buckland Abbey, Devon, and is the subject of Henry Newbolt's famous poem: '... an' drum them up the Channel as we drummed them long ago' (1897).

Francis Markham in his Five Decades of Epistles of Warre (1622) referred to the duties of military drummers in sounding the discharge or breaking up of the Watch. Randle Holme in his Academy of Armoury (before 1688) referred to such rudimentary drum beatings as 'flam', 'dragge', 'roofe', 'diddle' and the 'rowle'. An Italian book, Il torneo, written in 1621 by Bonaventura Pistofilo, may be the earliest work in which military music is notated. The oldest surviving English document dealing with drum music and instructions to drummers is a warrant (*c*1632) of Charles I directing the revival of an old English march (ex.4). The warrant concludes 'It pleased our late deare

Ex.4

The Voluntary before the March

Pou tou pou tou pou R pou tou pou pou tou pou R poung possible interpretation

R L R L R R R L R R L R R

brother prince Henry [d 1612] to revive and rectifie the same ordayning an establishment of one certaine measure, which was beaten in his presence at Greenwich, anno 1610'.

The side drum continued to occupy a place of honour in the regiment in peace and war. Emblazoned on its shell were the regiment's crest and battle honours. Throughout the 18th century and onwards it continued to be a constant companion of the fife, as important a combination to the foot regiment as the trumpets and kettledrums to the cavalry. During the 18th and 19th centuries, various manuals concerning drum routines were issued in Europe and the USA. Military drumming at this time was taught by rote and, in addition to the numerous rudiments, the drummer was obliged to commit to memory a great number of calls – solo, or as an accompaniment to the fife. Until superseded by the bugle, the drum conveyed the word of command to the troops. As with the earlier drum beatings of Arbeau, these signals were immediately recognizable (ex.5). In addition to its function in military circles, the side drum had numerous civil duties, some of which are maintained, for example the 'town drum' replacing the town crier's handbell.

By the mid-19th century the side drum had changed structurally. Its diameter (and in some cases its depth) had been reduced, and in many cases the shell was now of brass. From 1837 onwards, due (it is generally conceded) to the inventive genius of the English maker Cornelius Ward, a method of applying tension by using screws was employed. By this time, composers, notably Rossini, were making increasing use of the side drum, which had already been used in a few 18th-century orchestral scores. Marais appears to have been the first composer to have used a form of side drum in the orchestra – in Alcyone (1706) he specified a tambourin (see TAMBOURIN (ii)). Handel gave instructions for the use of side drums in the Menuet and Réjouissance of his Music for the Royal Fireworks (1749). Gluck specified 'tambour' in Iphigénie en Tauride (1779). In Wellingtons Sieg (1813) Beethoven used side drums with individual calls to represent the opposing armies. Rossini elevated the side drum to solo rank in the well-known introductory rolls in La gazza ladra (1817). This could perhaps have earned him his nickname of 'Tamburossini'. Berlioz (not surprisingly) emphasized that several side drums played together are preferable to one alone. His 'dream' ensemble of 467 instruments (53 percussionists) included six tambours. In the Marche funèbre pour la dernière scène d'Hamlet (orchestrated 1844), Berlioz requested six tambour-voilés ou sans timbre (covered or unsnared). The side drum is prominent in the works of Rimsky-Korsakov, Elgar, Ravel, Nielsen, Shostakovich, Britten and Sessions. Ravel's novel employment of the instrument in his Bolero (a two-bar phrase played 169 times) is well known, as is Nielsen's use of the side drum in his Clarinet Concerto (1928), and in his Fifth Symphony (1921–2), in which the player improvises.

20th-century composers took full advantage of the rhythmic resources and the numerous tone-colours possible from the side drum, and it is no longer an instrument mainly concerned with the demarcation of rhythm, punctuation, or with strong characterization. The use of the side drum with snares released is common, as is the striking of the rim, and the use of wire brushes and sticks of various types. The 'rim shot' (in which the rim and head are struck simultaneously with one stick, or alternatively one stick, laid with its tip on the skin and the shaft on the rim, is struck with the other) is employed by Milhaud (La création du monde, 1923), Malcolm Arnold (Beckus the Dandipratt, 1943), Copland (Third Symphony, 1944–6), and Elliott Carter (Variations for Orchestra, 1954–5). Bartók made great use of the side drum, snared and unsnared, and also the contrasting tones from the edge and centre of the drumhead, in, for example, his Cantata profana (1930), the First Piano Concerto (1926) and his Sonata for Two Pianos and Percussion (1937). Wire brushes (as used in jazz) were requested by Walton in the original version of Façade (1921–2). Challenging sequences for the side drum occur in many 20th-century compositions, for example Ives's Three Places in New England (first perf. 10 Jan 1931), Berio's Tempi concertati (1958–9) and Carter's Concerto for Orchestra (1968–9). Literature for the modern percussion ensemble includes works for a 'solo' side drum. Rolf Liebermann's Geigy Festival Concerto (1958) is a full-scale concerto for the side drum, embracing the individual technique of the Basle side drum. In orchestral music the part for the side drum may be written on a single line or (normally) the third space in the staff.

3. TENOR DRUM (Fr. caisse roulante, caisse sourde; Ger. Rührtrommel, Rolltrommel, Wirbeltrommel; It. cassa rullante). A cylindrical drum with a head about 40 cm in diameter (somewhat larger than the side drum) and a depth of 40–50 cm. In Britain the tenor drum is without snares, but equivalent instruments in other European countries may be snared or unsnared (e.g. the German Rührtrommel). Tonally the tenor drum is midway between the bass drum and unsnared side drum. The subdued tone of the tenor drum in comparison to that of the snared side drum has been likened to the contrasting voices of the sergeant-major and the chaplain. In appearance it resembles a large side drum and is similarly constructed with a shell of wood or occasionally metal. Originally a rope-braced drum, the tenor drum is now frequently rod-tensioned (fig.16). It is played with hard or soft sticks according to the required purpose. In the marching band it is slung from the belt or shoulder and supported on the left leg like the regimental side drum. In the orchestra it rests on a similar stand to that used for the side drum.

Technically, strokes on the tenor drum are less involved than those employed on the side drum, but they demand the utmost dexterity. In the drum corps (ensemble of drums, bugles and flutes) in which the tenor drum is an essential instrument, the performing of elaborate patterns is combined with stick flourishes, providing visual spectacles equal to that of the bass drummer. In the drum corps the tenor drum is normally played with felt-headed sticks (usually secured to the wrist). The sticks are held identically (like the right-hand side-drum stick) and the single-stroke roll employed. In the orchestra, the tenor drum is played with soft-headed sticks or side-drum sticks; side-drum technique is used.

16. Modern tenor drum by the Premier Drum Co., Leicester

Though in principle one of the most ancient and universal of all drums, the true tenor drum as known in military circles made a comparatively late appearance. In England, France and Germany, it first appeared in the military band during the early 19th century. Kastner illustrated rope-tensioned and rod-tensioned tenor drums in his Manuel général de musique militaire (1848). Berlioz (who contended that the instrument Gluck specified in Iphigénie en Tauride was a tenor drum, or caisse roulante) scored for a tenor drum, tuned to B♭, in the Grande messe des morts. Wagner wrote for tenor drum (Rührtrommel) in Rienzi, Lohengrin, Die Walküre and Parsifal. Strauss used it in Ein Heldenleben, and Elgar in his third Pomp and Circumstance march. Other composers to write for the tenor drum include Stravinsky, Honegger, Milhaud, Copland and Britten.

In musical notation a single line or a space in the staff (most often the second from the bottom) is allotted to the tenor drum.

The following drums, also used in Western music, are entered in this dictionary: BONGOS; BOOBAMS; CONGA DRUM; CUÍCA; ROTO-TOMS; STRING DRUM; TAMBOUR; TAMBOURINE; TIMBALES; TIMPANI; TOM-TOM; see also DRUM KIT; ELECTRONIC PERCUSSION; and PERCUSSION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BeckEP; BladesPI; SachsH

S. Potter: The Art of Beating the Drum (London, 1815)

J.A. Kappey: Military Music (London, 1894)

H. Balfour: 'The Friction-Drum', Journal of the Royal Anthropological Institute, xxxvii (1907), 67–92

H.G. Farmer: Military Music and its Story (London, 1912)

J. Baggers: 'Les timbales, les tambours et les instruments à percussion', EMDC, II/iii (1927), 1684

Drum-chime (entenga) of the Ganda people, Uganda

P.R. Kirby: The Kettle-drums (Oxford, 1930)
E. Elsenaar: De geschiedenis van slaginstrumente (Hilversum, 1956)
H. Kuniz: Die Instrumentation, x: Schlaginstrumenten (Leipzig,1960)
E.B. Gangware: The History and Use of Percussion Instruments in Orchestration (diss., Northwestern U., Evanston, IL, 1962)
W. Kotoński: Instrumenty perkusyjne we współczesnej (Kraków,1963, 2/1981; Eng. trans., 1968)
M. Abrams: Modern Techniques for the Progressive Drummer (London, 1966)
H. Nixdorff: Zur Typologie und Geschichte der Rahmentrommeln: kritische Betrachtung zur traditionellen Instrumententerminologie (Berlin,1971)
L. Picken: Folk Musical Instruments of Turkey (London, 1975)
J. Montagu: 'Early Percussion Techniques', EMc, ii (1974), 20–24
J. Blades and J.P.S. Montagu: Early Percussion Instruments: from the Middle Ages to the Baroque (London, 1976)
S.G. Sandman: 'Indications of Snare-Drum Technique in Philidor Collection MS.1163', GSJ, xxx (1977), 70–75
J. Howard: Drums: from the Tropics to the Arctic Circle (Los Angeles, 1982)
T.D. Brown: 'The Bass Drum Pedal: in the Beginning', Percussive Notes, xxi/2 (1982–3), 28–32
D. Stockmann: 'On the Early History of Drums and Drumming in Europe and the Mediterranean', ICTM Study Group on Music Archaeology: Conference II: Stockholm 1984, 11–28
D. Stockmann: 'Der Trommler von Catal Hüyük: zur Frühgeschichte der Perkussionsinstrumente und ihre Spielweise', BMw, xxvii (1985), 138–60
Zupf- und Schlaginstrumente des 17. und 18. Jahrhunderts: Blankenburg, Harz 1986, ii: Schlaginstrumente
A.J. Bernet Kempers: The Kettledrums of Southeast Asia: a Bronze Age World and its Aftermath (Rotterdam, VT, 1988)
M.d.R. Alvarez Martínez and G. Rosselló: 'Hallazgo de tambores de la España islámica (siglos X al XIV)', RdMc, xii (1989), 411–21
E.A. Dagan, ed.: Drums: the Heartbeat of Africa (Montreal, 1993)
C. Myers: 'The Drum-Dance-Song Ensemble: Women's Performance in Biblical Israel', Rediscovering the Muses: Women's Musical Traditions, ed. K. Marshall (Boston, 1993), 49–67
H. Powley: 'The Drum Tablature Tradition of American Military Music of the Early Nineteenth Century: Levi Lovering's The Drummer's Assistant, or, The Art of Drumming Made Easy', JAMIS, xxi (1995), 5–29
V. Doubleday: 'The Frame Drum in the Middle East: Women, Musical Instruments and Power', EthM, xliii/1 (1999), 101–34

JAMES BLADES/JANET K. PAGE (I, with EDMUND A. BOWLES (2(i)), ANTHONY KING, MERVYN McLEAN (2(ii)(c)), MARY RIEMER-WELLER (2(iv)), ROBERT ANDERSON (2(vi))), JAMES BLADES/JAMES HOLLAND (II)

Drum-calls. Military signals played on the side drums. See MILITARY MUSIC and SIGNAL (i).

Drum-chime. Generic term for a set of drums tuned to a musical scale. In Africa, where drum ensembles are common, a line cannot easily be drawn between true drum-chimes (often tuned and arranged scalewise to cover one or more octaves) and sets of drums also carefully tuned to discrete pitches within the particular tonal system, and used for accompanying songs and dances with a variety of melodic and rhythmic patterns.

Drum-chimes occur in South and South-east Asia and in Africa. In north-central Sumatra a set called taganing plays a central role in the ritual orchestras of the Batak Toba peoples, being accompanied by another drum, gongs and an oboe. Multi-octave sets placed in circular frames are used in traditional Thai and Burmese ensembles; in Myanmar (Burma) the chime is called hsaìng-waìng or patwaìng. A set of tablā tuned scalewise and known as tablatarang is sometimes featured in concerts of Hindustani music to the accompaniment of ordinary tablā and the tambūrā (classical drone lute).

In East Africa drum-chimes are known at Aksum (Ethiopia), in three places in Uganda (one being the former kingdom of Buganda where the entenga chime was one of the instruments of the former royal court), and among the Sena and Mang'anja peoples of Mozambique, where the drum-chime is called likhuba. The entenga (see illustration) is a good example of a true drum-chime in that all but the largest three drums are used for playing a repertory of vocally derived melodies (the three largest provide a rhythmic accompaniment). The entenga's limited distribution and certain features (by no means common to all sets) have led scholars to speculate on links between African sets and those of Asia. Such features include the use of long curved beaters and an association with xylophone-playing traditions.

Drum-chimes continue to be reported from other parts of Africa. Both Nzewi (1977) and Uzoigwe (1981) have described sets played among Igbo communities in Nigeria. The ese ensemble consists of four small single-headed mortar-shaped drums tuned to discrete pitches and one cylindrical drum of more diffuse pitch. The ukom, which is played simultaneously by two musicians, is a row of ten tuned drums. A third set, called mgba, has nine drums but is played by three musicians.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K.P. Wachsmann: 'Some Speculations Concerning a Drum-chime in Buganda', MAn, lxv (1965), 1–8

L.A. Anderson: 'The Entenga Tuned-drum Ensemble', Essays for a Humanist: an Offering to Klaus Wachsmann (New York, 1977), 1–57

M.E. Nzewi: Master Musicians and the Music of 'ese', 'ukom' and 'mgba' Emsembles of Ngwa, Igbo Society (diss., Queen's U., Belfast, 1977)

J. Uzoigwe: The Compositional Techniques of Ukom Music of Southeastern Nigeria (diss., Queen's U., Belfast, 1981)

ERNST HEINS, PETER COOKE

Drum kit [drum set, trap set]. The term given to the basic equipment of the jazz, dance band and rock drummer. The nucleus of every drum kit is a combination of bass drum, snare drum and suspended cymbal, with ancillary instruments ('traps') added to suit the taste of the performer and the style of music played.

See also CYMBALS and DRUM.

1. Early history. 2. The 1920s and 30s. 3. Bop drumming. 4. Post-1960 developments.

1. EARLY HISTORY. The emergence of the drum kit was made possible by the invention in the late 19th century of various pedal apparatuses capable of striking the bass drum and suspended cymbal simultaneously, thereby freeing the hands for other instruments. Although first used for novelty effects such as the 'one-man orchestra', pedal devices soon found a place in theatre and pit bands, where the drummer was required to play a large array of percussion instruments and other noise-making contraptions known collectively as 'traps', a term ostensibly derived from 'trappings'. Many of these instruments were later incorporated in the drum kit or 'trap set'. Not all early ragtime and jazz drummers used the bass drum pedal: some struck the bass and snare drums on opposite beats using different ends of the stick (a technique known as 'double drumming'), while still others (e.g. the New Orleans drummer 'Baby' Dodds) are known to have kicked the bass drum with the foot. However, by the 1920s the toe-operated bass drum pedal, now divested of its cymbal striker, had become part of the standard equipment of the jazz drummer, and the drum kit assumed the basic form by which it is known today. This form included a wide variety of cymbals and tunable tom-toms, a hi-hat (a pari of cymbals operated by a foot pedal), and exotic instruments such as woodblocks, temple blocks or cowbells clamped to the rim of the bass drum. The exact combination and placement of the instruments has always been left to the discretion of the performer, and the range is extraordinarily large.

2. THE 1920S AND 30S. Jazz and dance band drummers of the 1920s experimented with a large number of novelty instruments – car horns, whips, blank pistols, sirens, washboards and many others – that reflected their interest in expanding the sonority of the music. Although most of these instruments fell by the wayside, two became permanent features of the drum set: the Chinese tom-tom and the pedal-operated hi-hat. The tom-tom gradually evolved from primitive imported instruments to sophisticated American products with tuning devices and special stands for the larger 'floor tom-tom'. The hi-hat was cultivated with great subtlety as a source of son continu or as a superior substitute for the dampened cymbal stroke. Another source of son continu was the use of wire brushes on the snare drum in lieu of sticks; originally patented as fly swatters, 'brushes' were to become a permanent part of the drummer's equipment. Equally important was an expansion in the range of suspended cymbals, the names of which often clearly depict their function and sound: splash cymbals (10 cm in diameter), crash cymbals (36 cm), choke cymbals (10–20 cm), sizzle cymbals (large cymbals with brass rivets or rings loosely inserted near the rim) and, somewhat later, oversize ride cymbals (up to 66 cm). A distinction was made between the flat, reverberant Turkish cymbals and the more brittle, deep-pitched Chinese counterparts with flared rim and cupped centre. Eventually the Turkish models, especially those produced by the ZILDJIAN company, found greater acceptance.

3. BOP DRUMMING. By the mid-1940s the jazz drum kit, as played by bop musicians, had reached its classical form, comprising: a medium-sized foot-operated bass drum (56 cm by 36 cm) with attached tom-tom and suspended ride and crash cymbals, a hi-hat operated with the other foot, a floor tom-tom, and a shallow snare drum with tuning lugs and snare release mechanism, the latter adding, in effect, an unsnared side drum to the ensemble. The colouristic instruments of earlier jazz were discarded in favour of intricate stickwork and a rapid flow of ideas over a narrow timbral spectrum. The basic pulse was transferred to stick-tip patterns played on the ride cymbal with the right hand, allowing players to respond fluidly with their other limbs to the assymetrical phrasing and irregular rapid-tempo rhythmic figures typical of the style. The smaller number of instruments enabled the drum kit to be played as a cohesive unit capable of rendering extraordinarily intricate accompaniment patterns and lengthy solos. Although stage and dance bands continued to cultivate a larger timbral range (e.g. chimes, gongs and temple blocks) and fashions for Latin American music occasionally enriched jazz percussion with exotic sonorities (bongos, conga drums, maracas and various scrapers), the bop drum kit became standard not only for the rhythm-and-blues and rock-and-roll styles of the 1950s, but for those art composers who wished to draw on the resources of jazz percussion (e.g. Stockhausen's Donnerstag aus Licht (1978–9), which incorporates five processual layers on a single drum kit).

4. POST-1960 DEVELOPMENTS. Subsequent changes to the drum kit were influenced by three main factors: technical improvements to the instruments themselves, an influx of non-Western instruments in free jazz, and the use of electronic instruments and amplification in rock music. Synthetic drum heads gradually replaced calfskin, and wood shells gave way to thin fibreglass and metal shells capable of being adjusted for amplification over public address systems. Tuning pedals for floor tom-toms were introduced in the 1960s, and cable-operated hi-hats in the 1980s. A fondness for large sets of tom-toms in rock music led to the introduction of a number of substitutes: roto-toms (small tunable frame drums on threaded spindles), octobans (a set of eight small single-headed drums of varying shell depths) and gong tom-toms (deep-shelled single-headed drums mounted on stands). Free-jazz drummers, following a predilection for world music, experimented with a wide range of gourds, shakers and other exotic percussion instruments or used their hands in lieu of drumsticks. Drummers have also been known to play stand-mounted sets of tuned bongos, timbales or antique cymbals. The greatest changes, however, have been effected by two electronic inventions: the drum machine and the electronic drum pad. Although widely used in commercial music to replace the drum set, programmable drum machines have met with limited acceptance among jazz and jazz-rock musicians. The electronic drum pad, however, which releases a pre-recorded analogue or digital sound when struck, has in some cases rendered the acoustical instruments of the drum kit superfluous. The sounds may be sampled from any source, including standard drums, and may also be triggered by striking an acoustic instrument.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BladesPI
W.F. Ludwig: Modern Jazz Drumming (London, 1959)
W.F. Ludwig: My Life at the Drums (Chicago, 1972)
T.D. Brown: A History and Analysis of Jazz Drumming to 1942 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1976)
J. Blades and J. Dean: How to Play Drums (New York, 1992)
R. Vaughan: The Drumset Owner's Manual: a Heavily Illustrated Guide to Selecting, Setting up, and Maintaining all Components of the Acoustic Drumset (Jefferson, NC, 1993)

J. BRADFORD ROBINSON

Drum-major. A non-commissioned officer in the army, or an individual in civil life, who directs drummers with fifers and buglers. In England its duties were defined as early as 1590. Thomas Digges, in An Arithmetical Warlike Treatise (London, 2/1590), said that 'there ought to be a Dromme Maior of every regiment' who should be a man 'of great perfection in his science'; in the first edition (1579) he used the title 'chief drummer', which gives some indication of the date of the office. It was commonly adopted on the Continent; the tamburo generale is described in Della osservanza militare of Francesco Ferretti (Venice, 1568), the 'generall drum' De re militari by Luís Gutiérrez de la Vega (Eng. trans., London, 1582), the 'drummer major' by Robert Monro in Monro his Expedition (London, 1637) and the 'colonel-drumm' of the French by James Turner in Pallas armata (written 1670–71; London, 1683). Gerat Barry (A Discourse of Military Discipline, Brussels, 1634) said that the 'Drom mayor' was responsible for the provision of 'dromes and phifes'. Robert Ward (Anima'dversions of Warre, London, 1639) included a lengthy chapter on 'the Duty and Office of ... the Drum Major of the Regiment'. Richard Elton (The Compleat Body of the Art Military, London, 1650) said that, as well as being proficient in the drummer's art, the drum-major 'must likewise be well skill'd in several languages and tongues'. In July 1657 the office was abolished in England; it was restored in January 1680, only to the Foot Guards and, during the following century, to the Royal Artillery; but there is every reason to suppose that infantry regiments still continued to use the drum-major unofficially.

The drum-major, in rank between the commissioned and non-commissioned, was generally the most lavishly dressed man in the regiment. His 'staff' has always been considered part of his insignia. The familiar display of rotating and twisting staff was officially recognized; the drum-major was required to turn it 'with an easy air once round, so as to keep time, and plant it every fourth pace' (James), and with it could be conveyed no fewer than 17 commands, without a word being spoken. In France, from Manesson Mallet's time (1684–5), the tambour-major, who used his canne for a similar purpose, abandoned it in time of war for a side drum; in the British service the same expediency found recognition. A drum-major of the royal household was an officer who had charge of the drummers and fifers of the king's household; this position was later merged with that of drum-major general of the forces whose duty it was to furnish musicians for the services.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LafontaineKM
C. James: The Regimental Companion (London, 1803)
C. Dalton: George the First's Army, ii (London, 1912)
H.G. Farmer: The Rise and Development of Military Music (London, 1912/R)
C. Ffoulkes: 'Notes on Early Military Bands', Journal of the Society for Army Historical Research, xvii (1937–8), 188–200, esp.191

H.G. FARMER/ANTHONY C. BAINES/R

Drum 'n' bass. See JUNGLE.

Drumroll. See DRUM, §II.

Drum set. See DRUM KIT.

Drumslade [drumsled]. An obsolete term for a drumbeat; also a drummer. See DRUM, §II, 2.

Drumstick. A beater for a drum. See also MALLET.

Drumstrokes. See DRUM, §II.

Drury Lane Theatre. London theatre; the first on the site was opened in 1663, and the present one in 1812. See LONDON, §V, 1, §VI, 1(i) and §VII, 6.

Druschetzky [Druschetzki, Družecký, Druzechi, Držecky, Truschetzki], Georg [Jiří] (b Jemníky, nr Pchery, West Bohemia, 7 April 1745; d Buda, 21 June 1819). Bohemian composer. He studied the oboe with Besozzi in Dresden, then became a grenadier in the 50th Infantry regiment, apparently joining it at Eger in 1762; the regiment was later at Vienna (from 1763), Enns (1764), Linz (*c*1771) and Braunau (1775). From 1768 to 1775 Druschetzky was a regimental musician and towards the end of his service a Kapellmeister. His first known composition is a Symphony in G dated 1770 in Linz, where he also published a Concertino in G for harpsichord by F.X. Dušek. On 15 April 1777 he became a bestallter Landschaftspauker ('certified regional drummer') in the public service of Upper Austria, conducting the musical performances on official occasions in Linz. In about 1783 he may have moved to Vienna, where he was a member of the Tonkünstler-Societät. In 1786 or 1787 he entered the service of Count Anton Grassalkovics at Pressburg (Bratislava), where he directed and provided music for the wind band. Following the count's death in 1794 he was employed by Cardinal Battyány in Pest at his country estate at Rechnitz. By 1802 he was music director and composer for the wind octet of Archduke Joseph Anton Johann in Budapest.

Much of Druschetzky's output consists of Harmoniemusik. His musical language is slightly anachronistic, employing an early Classical style. His music displays a competent, if undistinguished, response to melody and harmony and his forms are short and devoid of melodic extension. His textures, however, often feature unusual sonorities and daring concertante passages, especially for wind instruments. The second movement of the fourth of his last six oboe quartets (in H-Bn) contains an early use of the B–A–C–H motif.

WORKS

ORCHESTRAL

27 syms.: 11 in CZ-Pnm, 10 in H-Bn, 1 in CZ-K, 1 in A-Wgm, 1 in LA, 1 in D-Dl, 2 lost; 2 ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, xiv (New York, 1985)

Concs.: 1 for vn, A-Wn, 1 for va, SCH, ed. K.M. Schwamberger (Hamburg, 1962); 2 for ob, SEI, ed. A. Weinmann (Zürich, 1977); 2 for cl, H-KE, 1 ed. D. Somorjay, Musicalia danubiana (Budapest, 1985); 1 for cl, A-Wn; 1 for 3 basset-hn, CZ-Pnm; 2 for timp, H-Bn; 1 for ob, timp, Bn; 1 for pf, KE *c*150 partitas and serenades, a 5–9: 6 (Vienna, 1783), ed. in Diletto musicale, nos.264–9 (1969); 66 in KE, 9 ed. D. Somorjay, Musicalia danubiana (Budapest, 1985), 1 ed. L. Kalmár (Budapest, 1964); 42 in A-Wgm, 4 ed. in Collegium musicum, nos.113–16 (Leipzig, 1969); 18 in CZ-Pnm; 6 in D-Rtt; 3 in CZ-Bm, 1 ed. in MAB, xxv (1958); 3 in CH-Zz, 1 ed. F. Kneusslin (Basle, 1967); 2 in A-Wn; 1 in I-Gl; 1 in D-WRgs

2 fantasias, Bn

WIND MUSIC

32 pieces, 3 basset-hn, H-KE; marches, octet, Bn; Variations, octet (Vienna, 1784); Arrs.: Beethoven: Septet, op. 20, octet, dbn (Vienna, 1812), ed. A. Myslík (Prague, 1984); Beethoven: Sonate pathétique, octet, dbn, CZ-Bm; Haydn: Die Schöpfung, Die Jahreszeiten, octet, dbn, A-Wgm; Mozart: Die Zauberflöte, sextet, H-KE; 42 arias, sextet, KE; variations, sextet, CZ-Kra

OTHER CHAMBER

Serenata, vn, va, vc, db, ob, cl, hn, bn; 2 Str Qnts; Qnt, ob, 2 vn, va, vc; Qnt, hn, vn, 2 va, vc, ed. F. Gabler (Vienna, 1988): all H-Bn

47 str qts: 24 in CZ-Pnm; 12 in A-Wn, 1 ed. K.M. Schwamberger (Hamburg, 1965); 11 in H-Bn

16 qts, ob, vn, va, vc: 10 in Bn, 3 ed. J. Vécsey (Budapest, 1968–70); 6 in I-Vc Qt, basset-hn, vn, va, vc, H-Bn, ed. K. Berkes (Budapest, 1965); Qt, eng hn, vn, va, vc, HR-Zh; Variations, fl, vc, CZ-Pnm; 6 Sonatas, vn, bc, op.1 (Linz, 1784); Sonata, mand, bc, A-Wgm; Contredanse, pf (Vienna, 1811); Divertimento, hpd, Wgm

OTHER WORKS

Stage: Zemira (op), H-Bn; Mechmet (op), Bn; Andromeda und Perseus (incid music), lost; Inkle und Yariko (ballet), lost

Sacred: 9 masses: 8 in H-Bn, 1 in P; 2 motets, 5 grads, 1 Bs, 1 Gl, 7 offs, 3 TeD, 2 Libera me, 2 Tantum ergo: all in Bn

5 Schiller settings, SATB, wind octet, Bn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MCL; SchillingES

O. Wessely: 'Georg Druschetzky, der letzte Vertreter der "heroischen" Paukerkunst in Linz', Heimatland [Linz], iv (1956), 30–31

A. Békefi: 'Musikalienkatalog und Inventar der Fürstprimas Joseph Batthyány (1789)', SM, xiv (1972), 401–20

A. Weinmann: Georg Družecký, ein vergessener Musiker aus dem alten Österreich: biographisch-bibliographische Materialsammlung (Vienna, 1986)

A. Sas: 'Georg Druschetzki, Batthyány József hercegprímás zenésze' [Georg Druschetzki, musician to Count Joseph Batthyány, primate of Hungary], Zenetudományi dolgozatok (1987), 53–73

A. Sas: 'Chronology of Georg Druschetzki's Works Preserved in his Estate', SM, xxxi (1989), 161–215

D. Frame: The Harmoniemusik of Georg Druschetzky (1745–1819) (diss., U. of Belfast, 1992)

ALEXANDER WEINMANN/DAMIAN A. FRAME

Drusina, Benedict de (b Drauensee, nr Elbing, East Prussia [now Elblag, Poland]; fl 1556–73). German lutenist and composer. The only biographical information about him is contained in the foreword to his first and more original publication, Tabulatura continens … quasdam fantasias; cantiones germanicas, italicas ac gallicas; passemezo; choreas et mutetas (RISM 1556[32]), in which Drusina referred to his far-ranging travels in Italy while studying the lute; he had probably visited Milan, Padua and Venice. He also quoted an epigram in praise of the lute by Christoph Pannonius, professor at the University of Frankfurt an der Oder; he may have spent some time at the university about 1545–50, although his name does not appear on the matriculation lists (see Kosack). In mid 1573, while staying at the University of Wittenberg, he published Tabulatura continens … quasque cantiones (1573[25]), a transcription into German lute tablature of Melchior Neusidler's two books in Italian tablature (1566[29], 1566[30]).

Drusina's own lute collection of 1556 comprises four fantasias, 21 intabulations of French, German and Italian songs (including two Italian dance songs), five motet intabulations, four passamezzos, three saltarellos, and four paired German dances (6 pieces ed. A. Schmidt, Ostpreussisches Lautenbuch, Frankfurt, 1977). Josquin and Clemens non Papa are among the composers intabulated. Francesco da Milano was the most important influence on Drusina's style, though that of Bakfark is evident in his use of imitative textures; his treatment of dissonance is distinctive.

Drusina's son Peter (d Elbing, 2 May 1611) was organist of the Marienkirche, Elbing, and a composer of lute and organ music; an impressive setting of Veni redemptor gentium (ed. in Gerigk, Appx 4) employs double pedal.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Wustmann: Musikgeschichte Leipzigs, i (Leipzig and Berlin, 1909/R), 169, 189

H. Gerigk: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Elbing bis zum 18. Jahrhundert, Elbinger Jahrbuch, viii (1929), 1–104

J. Dieckmann: Die in deutscher Lautentabulatur überlieferten Tänze des 16. Jahrhunderts (Kassel, 1931)

H.-P. Kosack: Geschichte der Laute und Lautenmusik in Preussen (Kassel, 1935) [incl. thematic index of 1556[32], pp.100–04]

H. Grimm: Meister der Renaissancemusik an der Viadrina (Frankfurt an der Oder, 1942)

G. Pietzsch: 'Zur Pflege der Musik an den deutschen Universitäten bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts', AMf, vii (1942), 154–64

K. Dorfmüller: Studien zur Lautenmusik in der ersten Hälfte des 16. Jahrhunderts (Tutzing, 1967), esp. 73–4

E. FRED FLINDELL/R

Druskin, Mikhail Semyonovich (b Kiev, 1/14 Jan 1905; d St Petersburg, 20 April 1991). Russian musicologist and pianist. He studied music with Asaf'yev and A.N. Rimsky-Korsakov at the Petrograd/Leningrad Institute for the History of the Arts (1921–4), and the piano at the Conservatory with O.K. Kalantarova (1922–5). In 1924 he was expelled from the Conservatory in a so-called 'academic purge' (effectively a 'class' purge), but he was soon reinstated. On graduating from the Conservatory he embarked on a busy performing schedule, playing works by Prokofiev, Stravinsky, Szymanowski and contemporary French composers, giving several premières. In 1925 he became a teacher at the Fourth (later Central) Technical College of Music, where the New Music Circle held its meetings. He played an active role in the Leningrad Association for Contemporary Music, becoming its secretary in 1927.

In 1926 he was refused entry to the postgraduate piano class at the Conservatory, but in 1928 Schnabel chose him to study in his class at the Berlin Hochschule; only in 1930 did the state authorities allow him to take up the invitation. While in Germany (1930–32) he met Stravinsky and became the first Russian pianist to perform his Piano Concerto; he also gave recitals of music by his Russian contemporaries, and began to write reviews and articles on German musical life for Russian periodicals. On his return to Russia he was initially refused a post at the Conservatory, so he returned to his post as research assistant at the Institute for the History of the Arts, which he had held with some breaks since 1924 (he was senior research assistant there, 1947–53). He taught at the Conservatory in various capacities from 1937 until his death, becoming professor in 1947.

Heading the department of musical education at the Theatrical Institute in 1942, he was evacuated with the Institute to Pyatigorsk and Tomsk, where he remained active as a teacher. He headed the department of music history at the Sverdlovsk (now Yekaterinburg) Conservatory (1943–4). Both before and after the war he was actively involved in educational work for Leningrad Radio, for which he was broadcasting consultant (1945–8). He directed the research and methodology section of the Leningrad Philharmonic Society (1944–6). He was awarded the doctorate from the Moscow Conservatory in 1946 for his dissertation on keyboard music from the 16th century to the 18th. In 1948, in the campaign against formalism, he was dismissed from the Leningrad Conservatory as a 'rabid apologist of bourgeois culture'; however, he was soon reinstated. He was in demand abroad as a visiting lecturer, although he often experienced difficulty obtaining permission to travel, owing to his 'ideological unreliability'.

The range of Druskin's scholarly work was wide. He was interested in both contemporary and early music: his dissertation on early keyboard music (1946, published 1960) remains the only major work on the subject in Russian. His writings on opera include a study of drama in opera (1952), and he wrote extensively on German musical culture. He edited writings by Webern (with Alfred and Victor Schnittke, 1975), Stravinsky (with Genrikh Orlov, 1971) and prepared some collections of the works of Ivan Sollertinsky. Throughout his career he championed ideals suppressed by official ideology, such as the moral values of church music, the aesthetic ideals of neo-classicism, and Western 19th- and 20th-century composers at a time when they were officially denigrated. He gave active support to composers such as Denisov, Kancheli, Schnittke, Sil'vestrov and Terterian. In consequence, he was highly regarded among his colleagues, who found in him support for their boldest aspirations.

WRITINGS

Novaya fortepiannaya muzïka [New piano music] (Leningrad, 1928)

Gans Èysler i rabocheye muzïkal'noye dvizheniye v Germanii [Hanns Eisler and the workers' musical movement in Germany] (Moscow, 1934)

Ocherki po istorii tantseval'noy muzïki [Studies in the history of dance music] (Leningrad, 1936)

Shestaya simfoniya Betkhovena [Beethoven's Sixth Symphony] (Leningrad, 1936, 2/1946)

Fortepiannïye kontsertï Betkhovena [Beethoven's piano concertos] (Leningrad, 1937, 3/1973)

Fortepiannïye kontsertï Lista [Liszt's piano concertos] (Leningrad, 1937)

Fortepiannïye kontsertï Chaykovskogo [Tchaikovsky's piano concertos] (Leningrad, 1938)

Pervaya simfoniya Shostakovicha [Shostakovich's First Symphony] (Leningrad, 1938)

Fortepiannïye kontsertï Motsarta [Mozart's piano concertos] (Leningrad, 1939, 2/1960)

'Studencheskaya pesnya v Rossii 1840–60-kh godov' [Student songs in Russia, 1840–60], Ocherki po istorii i teorii muzïki, i (Leningrad, 1939), 49–83

Klavirnoye tvorchestvo i ispolnitel'stvo XVI, XVII i XVIII vv [Keyboard music and its performance in the 16th, 17th and 18th centuries] (diss., Moscow Conservatory, 1946; rev., Leningrad, 1960 as Klavirnaya muzïka Ispanii, Anglii, Niderlandov, Frantsii, Italii, Germanii XVI–XVIII vekov; partial Bulg. trans., 1966)

'Lebedinoye ozero' Chaykovskogo [Tchaikovsky's Swan Lake] (Leningrad, 1946)

'Spyashchaya krasavitsa' Chaykovskogo [Tchaikovsky's The Sleeping Beauty] (Leningrad, 1946)

'Yevgeny Onegin' Chaykovskogo [Tchaikovsky's Yevgeny Onegin] (Leningrad, 1946)

ed.: I. Sollertinsky: Izbrannïye stat'i o muzïke [Selected articles on music] (Moscow, 1946)

'Knyaz' Igor'' Borodina [Borodin's Prince Igor] (Leningrad, 1947)

'Pikovaya dama' Chaykovskogo [Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades] (Leningrad, 1948)

Voprosï muzïkal'noy dramaturgii operï [Aspects of musical drama in opera] (Leningrad, 1952)

Russkaya revolyutsionnaya pesnya [Russian revolutionary song] (Moscow, 1954)

ed.: I. Sollertinsky: Muzïkal'no-istoricheskiye ètyudï [Musical-historical studies] (Leningrad, 1956)

ed., with Yu. Keldïsh: Ocherki po istorii russkoy muzïki 1790–1825 [Essays on the history of Russian music, 1790–1825] (Leningrad, 1956)

Istoriya zarubezhnoy muzïki vtoroy polovinï XIX veka [A history of foreign music in the second half of the 19th century] (Moscow, 1958, 6/1983)

Iogannes Brams [Brahms] (Moscow, 1959, 4/1988)

Rikhard Vagner (Moscow, 1959, 2/1963)

Istoriya i sovremennost' [History and the present] (Leningrad, 1960)

ed.: Voprosï sovremennoy muzïki [Issues in contemporary music] (Leningrad, 1963)

ed.: I. Sollertinsky: Istoricheskiye ètyudï [Historical studies], i: Kriticheskiye stat'i [Critical articles] (Leningrad, 1963)

ed.: 100 oper [100 operas] (Leningrad, 1964, 8/1987)

Zarubezhnaya muzïkal'naya kul'tura vtoroy polovinï XIX veka [Foreign musical culture in the second half of the 19th century] (Moscow, 1964)

Zarubezhnaya muzïkal'naya kul'tura pervoy polovinï XIX veka [Foreign musical culture in the first half of the 19th century] (Moscow, 1967)

ed.: B. Asaf'yev: Kriticheskiye stat'i i retsenzii [Critical articles and reviews] (Leningrad, 1967)

ed.: Iz istorii muzïki XX veka [From the history of 20th-century music] (Leningrad, 1967)

'Zarubezhnaya muzïka posleoktyabr'skogo perioda v bor'be za mir i demokratiyu' [Foreign music of the post-October period in the struggle for peace and democracy], Muzïka v sotsialisticheskom obshchestve, ed. A.N. Sokhor and others (Leningrad, 1969), 105–28

ed.: I. Stravinsky: Dialogi (Leningrad, 1971) [Russ. trans. of Dialogues and a Diary (New York, 1963)]

O zapadnoyevropeyskoy muzïke XX veka [Western European music of the 20th century] (Moscow, 1973)

ed.: I. Sollertinsky: Stat'i o balete [Articles on ballet] (Leningrad, 1973)

'Voprosï muzïkal'noy istoriografii (na zarubezhnom materiale)' [Problems of musical historiography (on foreign material)], Sovremennïye voprosï muzïkoznaniya, ed. Ye.M. Orlova (Moscow, 1976), 87–114

Igor' Stravinsky (Leningrad, 1974, 3/1982; Eng. trans., 1983)

ed., with I. Glinkman and D. Shostakovich: Pamyati I.I. Sollertinskogo: vospominaniya – materialï – issledovaniya [Memories of Sollertinsky: reminiscences – materials – research] (Leningrad, 1974, 2/1976)

ed.: A. Webern: Lektsii o muzïke – pis'ma [Lectures on music – letters] (Moscow, 1975)

Passionï i messï I.S. Bakha [The passions and masses of J.S. Bach] (Leningrad, 1976)

ed.: I. Braudo: Ob organnoy i klavirnoy muzïke [Organ and keyboard music] (Leningrad, 1976)

ed., with I. Andronikov, V. Zaderatsky and G. Shneyerson: D. Shostakovich: Stat'i i materialï [Articles and materials] (Moscow, 1976)

ed., with Ye. Orlova and Ye. Ruch'yevskaya: Sovremennïye voprosï muzïkoznaniya [Contemporary issues in musicology] (Moscow, 1976)

Issledovaniya – vospominaniya [Studies – reminiscences] (Leningrad, 1977)

ed.: A. Petrov: Sbornik statey [Collection of articles] (Leningrad, 1980)

Izbrannoye: monografii – stat'i [Selected works: monographs – articles] (Moscow, 1981)

Iogann Sebast'yan Bakh [Johann Sebastian Bach] (Moscow, 1982)
'Nemetskaya traditsiya v simfoniyakh Shostakovicha/Die deutsche Tradition in der Sinfonik von Schostakowitsch', Dmitri Schostakowitsch: Cologne 1985, 280–304
Ocherki – stat'i – zametki [Essays – articles – notes] (Leningrad, 1987)
'Stanovleniye muzïkal'no-istoricheskoy nauki v Leningrade 20–30-kh godov' [The establishment of musicology in Leningrad in the 1920s and 30s], Traditsii muzïkal'noy nauki, ed. L.G. Kovnatskaya (Leningrad, 1989), 7–25
Zarubezhnaya muzïkal'naya istoriografiya [A historiography of foreign music] (Moscow, 1994)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.M: 'Kontsert pianista M. Druskina', SovM (1935), no.2, pp.87–8
L. Kovnatskaya, G. Orlov and I. Khlebarov: 'Vernost' muzïke' [Faithfulness to music], SovM (1975), no.4, pp.63–7
A.I. Klimovitsky, L.G. Kovnatskaya and M.D. Sabinina, eds.: Istoriya i sovremennost': sbornik statey [History and the present: a collection of articles] (Leningrad, 1981) [Festschrift for Druskin's 75th birthday; incl. A. Petrov: 'Muzïkant, pedagog, uchenïy: vmesto predisloviya' [Musician, teacher, scholar: instead of a foreword], 4–6; L. Kovnatskaya: 'K biografii M.S. Druskina', 261–5; list of writings]
I.A. Barsova and others: 'Pamyati Mikhaila Semenovicha Druskina', MAk (1992), no.1, p.219 only
N. Katonova: 'Druskin, pianist', MAk (1997), nos.4–5, pp.186–94
L. Kovnatskaya: 'Vernut' Stravinskogo na rodinu, vernut' – rodine' [Returning Stravinsky to his own country], ibid., pp.195–229

LYUDMILA KOVNATSKAYA

Družecký, Jiří. See DRUSCHETZKY, GEORG.

Druze music. See LEBANON, §II, 3.

Dryden, John (b Aldwincle, Northants., 9 Aug 1631; d London, 1 May 1700). English poet and dramatist. After obtaining his degree at Cambridge in 1654 he settled in London. In collaboration with Sir William Davenant, he adapted The Tempest in 1667, greatly increasing Shakespeare's original requirements for music. Many of his other plays contain songs, and some make use of more extended musical scenes, notably Tyrannic Love (1669) and Oedipus (1678, with Nathaniel Lee). He was appointed Poet laureate and historiographer royal in 1668; in the same year he came a shareholder of the Theatre Royal, though he relinqished his share ten years later

In 1677 he published an opera text, The State of Innocence, based on Milton's Paradise Lost; its main 'operatic' feature, however, was scenic spectacle, and it was never performed or even set to music. In 1684 he started work on a semi-opera, King Arthur, with an allegorical prologue in the French manner extolling Charles II and his brother James. This prologue was soon expanded into a full-length, all-sung opera, Albion and Albanius, and set by Louis Grabu. It was rehearsed during winter 1684–5, but the king died before it could be publicly performed. When it was finally produced in June 1685 it failed disastrously.

Dryden converted to Roman Catholicism in 1685 and consequently was dismissed as Poet Laureate after the accession of William and Mary in 1689. The success of Purcell's semi-opera Dioclesian in summer 1690 made Dryden aware of the composer's potential. He asked him to provide music for his new play Amphitryon (October 1690), stating that in him 'we have at length found an English-man, equal with the best abroad', and then for a revised King Arthur, Purcell's only semi-opera conceived as such, not adapted from an existing play. This was successfully staged in June 1691. Their collaboration, however, was apparently not without tension, for in the preface Dryden, while praising Purcell, complained that he was 'oblig'd to cramp my Verses' to make them 'harmonious to the Hearer'. Purcell indeed freely altered the poet's lines. Dryden also drafted for Purcell the dedication of the score of Dioclesian.

The preface to Albion and Albanius shows that Dryden thought deeply about the form of opera and the problems of writing words for setting to music. In confining music to supernatural characters or 'meaner persons' and accepting that operatic plots admit 'of that sort of marvellous and suprizing conduct, which is rejected in other Plays', Dryden was expressing the contemporary English attitude to dramatic music. Within the limitations thus imposed, he managed quite successfully to integrate music into the plot of King Arthur; Albion and Albanius, however, is little more than a series of allegorical tableaux. His concern for direct language, varied rhythms and the actual sound of words, together with his recognition of the need to differentiate between recitative and song, shows a real understanding of the needs of music, though his use of italianate feminine rhymes is sometimes excessive.

His use of verbal sounds and rhythms to convey meaning is also strikingly displayed in his two odes for St Cecilia's Day: A Song for St Cecilia's Day (set by G.B. Draghi, 1687) and Alexander's Feast (set by Jeremiah Clarke, 1697, and Handel, 1736). He also provided the text for Blow's Ode on the Death of Henry Purcell (1696). His last work, The Secular Masque, for inclusion in John Vanbrugh's play The Pilgrim, was set by Daniel Purcell.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.N. Hooker and others, eds.: The Works of John Dryden (Berkeley and Los Angeles, 1956–)
F.H. Davis: The Dramaturgical Functions of Song, Dance and Music in the Comedies of John Dryden (diss., Ball State U., 1972)
J. Altieri: 'Baroque Hieroglyphics: Dryden's King Arthur', Philological Quarterly, lxi (1982), 431–51
D. Charlton: 'King Arthur: Dramatick Opera', ML, lxiv (1983), 183–92
C.A. Price: Henry Purcell and the London Stage (Cambridge, 1984)
J.A. Winn: John Dryden and his World (New Haven, CT, 1987)
J.A. Winn: 'When Beauty Fires the Blood': Love and the Arts in the Age of Dryden (Ann Arbor, 1992)

MARGARET LAURIE, CURTIS PRICE

Dryffelde, Robert. English musician, probably identifiable with DRIFFELDE.

Drysdale, Learmont (b Edinburgh, 3 Oct 1866; d Edinburgh, 18 June 1909). Scottish composer. He began to study music at an early age; his first post as organist was at Greenside Parish Church, Edinburgh, in 1885. In the following year he gave organ recitals at the International Exhibition, Edinburgh. Anxious to obtain fuller training, he took the post of sub-organist at All Saints Church, Kensington, which enabled him to attend the Royal Academy of Music (1887–92); there he studied composition with Frederick Corder and the piano with Wilhelm Kuhe, winning the Charles Lucas Medal. Not until 1904 did he return to work in Scotland, as teacher of harmony and composition in the Athenaeum School of Music, Glasgow (now the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama), but he resigned after one year to devote himself to composition.

While Drysdale was still a student, several of his orchestral works had been publicly performed and had won high praise from teachers and critics. The first was a ballade, The Spirit of the Glen (St James's Hall, London, 1889): this was followed by the prelude to a cantata Thomas the Rhymer (1890), also at St James's Hall, and the Overture to a Comedy (1890), soon renamed Through the Sound of Raasay. In the same year Drysdale won the Glasgow Society of Musicians' prize with the spirited overture Tam o' Shanter, which was performed at the Crystal Palace Concerts.

There followed in rapid succession several fine orchestral and vocal works, and in 1896 the striking mystical play The Plague, in which speech and music were synchronized: this was produced in Edinburgh by Sir James Forbes Robertson. Two years later Drysdale's strong dramatic bent found full expression in the romantic comic opera The Red Spider, based on themes of Devon folklore. The work toured Britain, receiving its 100th performance, at Dundee, with much acclaim. A Border Romance, an orchestral poem, was requested by Henry Wood for performance at Queen's Hall, London (1904). The cantata Tamlane (1905) had a splendid companion in the incidental music to Hippolytus. It was while still at work scoring the opera Fionn and Tera (1909) that Drysdale died of pneumonia. A young Scottish composer, David Stephen, undertook to complete the scoring, and Oscar Hammerstein planned to produce it at the London Opera House, but with the enterprise's collapse after one season, the plan was shelved.

WORKS

mostly MS, at GB-Gu

STAGE WORKS

The Plague (mystic musical play, 1, I. Robertson), Edinburgh, Royal Lyceum, Oct 1896

The Oracle, 1897 (comic op, 2, T.S. Pilieau and A.W. Gattie), MS lost

The Red Spider (romantic light op, 3, S. Baring-Gould), Lowestoft, Marina, 25 July 1898, 3 songs pubd

Hippolytus (op, 2, Euripides, trans. G. Murray), Glasgow, Athenaeum Hall, Dec 1905

Fionn and Tera, 1909 (grand op, 2, Duke of Argyll), unperf.

Inc.: Flora Macdonald (romantic op, L. Drysdale); The Vikings (op, 2, C. Burton and L. Tracy); The Girl from London (op, 2, R. Rutter); In Office Hours (op, 1, E. Kuhe); Long and Short (op, 1, G. Thorne)

OTHER WORKS

Cants., all with orch: Thomas the Rhymer, solo vv, chorus, 1889, unfinished; Ode to Edinburgh (R. Burns), Bar, chorus, 1890; The Lay of Thora (G. Bantock), S, 1892; The Kelpie of Corrievreckan (C. Mackay), solo vv, chorus, vs (London, 1897); Tamlane (Drysdale), chorus, vs (London, *c*1905); 3 others

11 orch works, incl.: The Spirit of the Glen, 1889; Ov. to a Comedy [Through the Sound of Raasay], 1890; Tam o' Shanter, ov. (London, 1921); Herondean, ov., 1893; A Border Romance, tone poem, 1904

3 church works, 4 chbr works, 14 pf pieces

7 partsongs, over 60 songs, to texts of Bantock, Burns, E. Doune, H.W. Longfellow, C. Kingsley, T. Moore and others; numerous folksong arrs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.C. Hadden); Gänzl BMT; MGG1 (H.G. Farmer)

E. Kuhe: 'Scottish Composers and Musicians IV', Scottish Musical Monthly, i (1894), 171–2

L. Drysdale: 'Scottish Composers', Dunedin Magazine, iii (1914–15), 15–30 [with list of works]

H.G. Farmer: A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947)

J. Purser: Scotland's Music (Edinburgh, 1992), 226–8

JEAN MARY ALLAN

Držecky, Jiří. See DRUSCHETZKY, GEORG.

D.S. See DAL SEGNO.

D sol re. The pitch d in the HEXACHORD system.

Dualism (Ger. Dualismus). A theory of tonality that views major and minor as diametrically opposed by arguing that the harmonic centre of a major triad is its root, that of a minor triad its 5th. The origins of dualistic theory go back to Moritz Hauptmann's Die Natur der Harmonik und der Metrik zur Theorie der Musik (Leipzig, 1853, 2/1873/R, Eng. trans., 1888/R), and was developed mainly by Arthur von Oettingen in Harmoniesystem in dualer Entwickelung (Dorpat and Leipzig, 1866, 2/1913 as Das duale Harmoniesystem). Oettingen observed that the notes of a major triad, considered as overtones, were derived from a common fundamental, but that contrarily there existed a note that belonged to the overtone series of all three notes of a minor triad. This amounts to saying that a major triad, when inverted about its root (or 5th), produces a minor triad. Since Oettingen, the concept of dualism has remained partly in the theory of tonality, partly in the study of acoustics and perception.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Riemann: Das Problem des harmonischen Dualismus (Leipzig, 1905)

S. Karg-Elert: Polaristische Klang- und Tonalitätslehre (Leipzig, 1931)

D. Jorgenson: 'A Résumé of Harmonic Dualism', ML, xliv (1963), 31–42

D. Harrison: Harmonic Function in Chromatic Music: a Renewed Dualist Theory and an Account of its Precedents (Chicago, 1994)

□

Duarte, Leonora (bap. Antwerp, 28 July 1610; d ?1678). Flemish amateur musician and composer. She belonged to a well-known Antwerp family of rich jewellers and diamond merchants of Portuguese-Jewish (marrano) origin. Her parents were Gaspar Duarte and Catharina Rodrigues, and she had three sisters and two brothers. The Duarte family residence at the Meir in Antwerp was a well-known centre for music and the visual arts. The correspondence of Leonora's father and her brother Diego with Constantijn Huygens shows that there were frequent contacts with the cultural élite of the Low Countries and England, including Huygens himself and his sons Constantijn and Christiaan, and William Cavendish, Duke of Newcastle. In 1644 Nicholas Lanier visited the family when he was in voluntary exile, and in 1653 Anne and Joseph de la Barre paid a visit when travelling from Paris to Stockholm.

Of the Duarte children, Leonora, Francisca (1619–78) and Diego (1612–91) are mentioned most often in connection with family music-making. For the family as a whole performing on the lute, viols and keyboard instruments was reported. Leonora and Diego are documented as composers. Leonora wrote a set of seven abstract fantasies (one in two parts) for a consort of five viols; they are in late Jacobean style and called 'Symphonies' (GB-Och; ed. D. Pinto, St Albans, 1998). Diego set to music various poems by William Cavendish (1650s) and later the psalm paraphrases of Godeau (1673–85), which he dedicated to Huygens. None of these works, probably all for one voice with basso continuo, has survived.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Lucas: CCXI Sociable Letters (London, 1664)

E.R. Samuel: 'The Disposal of Diego Duarte's Stock of Painting 1692–1697', Jaarboek van het Koninklijk museum voor schone kunsten (Antwerp, 1976), 305–24

R.A. Rasch: 'The Antwerp Duarte Family as Musical Patrons', Orlandus Lassus and his Time: Antwerp 1994, 415–29

RUDOLF A. RASCH

Dub (i) [dubb]. An obsolete term for a type of tabor. See DRUM, §II, 2 and PIPE AND TABOR.

Dub (ii). A technique of reggae in which records are remixed to create new backing tracks for improvised vocal solos ('toasting'). The remixing of records may include such techniques as the adding of sound delay or reverberation, and sound effects may also be incorporated. It was developed by record producers such as LEE PERRY in Jamaica, and is particularly associated with British performers such as DENNIS BOVELL. In performance poetry, the term has been adopted for the 'dub poets', whose readings of poetry, often with an overtly political or racial commentary, are given over dub backing tracks. The most well-known of the dub poets are Linton Kwesi Johnson, who has also performed with Bovell, and Benjamin Zephaniah. □

Du Bellay, Joachim (b Lire, Anjou, 1522; d Paris, 11 Jan 1560). French poet. After studying law at Poitiers, he joined Ronsard and Baïf at the Collège de Coqueret under Jean Dorat. A brilliant classicist, he showed his familiarity with the works of Horace, Ovid and the neo-Latin poets in both his French and his Latin verse. In 1549 he published La deffense et illustration de la langue francoyse (ed. H. Chamard, Paris, 1904/R, 2/1948; Eng. trans., 1939), which argued that the French language was capable of producing fine literature if it rejected its medieval past and assimilated classical and Tuscan models. His L'olive (1549) was the first substantial collection of French sonnets, most of them imitating Petrarchan models; a few odes, hymns and lighter pieces appeared during the next few years. Between 1553 and 1557 he was in Rome in the service of his cousin, Cardinal Jean Du Bellay (1492–1560), the patron of Rabelais. He recorded his impressions of the city and his nostalgia in two more sonnet collections, Les antiquitez de Rome and Les regrets. The Poemata and the Jeux rustiques, an Anacreontic collection, were published in 1558. During the last three years of his life he lodged at Paris with the Angevin priest and singer Claude de Bize, a canon at Notre Dame Cathedral. Du Bellay's Oeuvres were published posthumously in 1568 and English translations by Spenser and others appeared soon after.

Like Ronsard, Du Bellay suffered increasingly from deafness, and music plays a less important role in his poetry than the visual arts. However, like his contemporaries he favoured a close alliance of verse and music and exploited all the usual lyrical metaphors such as the lyre, the lute, the Orpheus myth and the nightingale. The Deffense rejects the old lyric forms (rondeau, ballade, virelai, chanson) and even the épigramme of Marot in favour of the neo-classical ode 'd'un Luc bien accordé au son de la lyre Grecque ou Romaine', and recognizes the musical advantages of alternating masculine and feminine rhythm and regular strophic construction. However, Du Bellay did not observe either feature as strictly as Marot or Ronsard.

He rarely extolled practising musicians in his poetry. He made passing references to the lutenist Albert (presumably Alberto da Ripa) and to his friend Claude de Bize; he also cited a 'Pierre de Villiers' as a witness in the Petromachie satire, but it is not certain that this is a reference to the composer of that name. This small number of references cannot have been due to lack of musical acquaintances: he must have been familiar with the musicians of the cardinals Jean Du Bellay and Charles de Lorraine, and with the choir of Notre Dame. He was due to have collaborated with three brothers named Ferrabosco on an epithalamium for the wedding of Duke Philibert Emmanuel of Savoy and Princess Marguerite of France, but the ceremony was cancelled following the death of Henri II. He may also have collaborated directly with Arcadelt, who also moved from Rome to Paris in the 1550s, and who set to music nine of Du Bellay's poems. Other contemporary musicians, including Janequin, Certon, Gentian and Nicolas, set Du Bellay's echo dialogue Piteuse Echo, his villanelle, En ce moys delitieux and the sonnet O foible esprit. His verse continued to be set by later composers such as Verdonck, Pevernage, Le Blanc, and by Lassus, whose evocative chanson La nuict froide et sombre sets two strophes from Du Bellay's 'Ode upon the inconstancy of things', addressed to Ronsard. Du Bellay's two extended spiritual chansons, La lyre chrestienne and La monomachie de David et Goliath, first published in 1552, were set to music by Antoine de Hauville and printed by Gorlier at Lyons in 1560.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Chamard: Joachim du Bellay, 1522–1560 (Lille, 1900/R)
V.L. Saulnier: Du Bellay: l'homme et l'oeuvre (Paris, 1951, 4/1968)
R. Griffin: Coronation of the Poet: Joachim Du Bellay's Debt to the Trivium (Berkeley, 1969)
F. Dobbins: 'Joachim Du Bellay et la musique de son temps', Du Bellay: Angers 1989, ed. G. Cesbron (Angers, 1990), ii, 587–605
D. Aris and F.Joukovsky, eds.: Joachim Du Bellay: Oeuvres poétiques (Paris, 1993)

FRANK DOBBINS

Düben. Swedish family of musicians of German origin. Their ancestors seem to have come from the Leipzig district, where some of them were musicians. (1) Andreas founded the Swedish branch of the family in 1620, and in 1625 his younger brother Martin moved to Sweden to take up an appointment as organist; other members of the family followed soon afterwards. The most prominent musician in the next generation was (2) Gustaf Düben (i). His son Gustaf von Düben (ii) (b Stockholm, bap. 5 May 1660; d Stockholm, 5 Dec 1726) was appointed to various court positions early in life by the crown prince, later Carl XII, whom he followed into battle as a soldier. He was raised to the ranks of the nobility in 1698, was later granted the title of baron and finally reached the position of Master of the Royal Household. He succeeded his father as conductor of the court orchestra in 1691, a post that in 1698 he handed on to his younger brother (3) Anders (ii), the last active musician of the family. Although his nephews Carl Gustaf (1700–58) and Carl Wilhelm von Düben (1724–90) were connected with the court orchestra between 1741 and 1758, and 1758 and 1764 respectively, they merely held ex officio positions.

(1) Andreas [Anders (i)] Düben (b Leipzig, or Würzen, nr Leipzig, *c*1597; d Stockholm, 7 July 1662). Organist and composer. When still under 13 years of age he and his brother were admitted to Leipzig University in 1609. He was a pupil of Sweelinck in Amsterdam from 1614 to 1620. In 1620 he became second organist of the new Swedish court orchestra at Stockholm, engaged from Germany for the wedding of Gustav II Adolf. He soon reached a prominent position among the court musicians, being appointed conductor in 1640. Alongside his court service he became organist of two Stockholm churches, the German Church (Tyska Kyrka) in 1625 and the Great Church (Storkyrka) from 1649 or 1650. Two of his official choral compositions survive: Pugna triumphalis, written for the funeral of Gustav II Adolf in 1634 (Stockholm, 1634; edn, Stockholm, 1932) and Miserere, written for the funeral of Charles X Gustav (S-Uu; edn, Slite, 1971). Some 20 four- and five-part instrumental dances composed for the court orchestra are also extant (S-Uu; ed. in MMS, viii, 1973), as well as a few organ works (ed. H.J. Moser and T. Fedtke: Allein Gott in der Höh' sei Ehr: 20 Choralvariationen der deutschen Sweelinck-Schule, Kassel, 1953; and H.J. Moser, ed.: Choralbearbeitungen und freie Orgelstücke der deutschen Sweelinck-Schule, Kassel, 1954–5).

(2) Gustaf Düben (i) (b Stockholm, *c*1628 [not 1624, as has been said]; d Stockholm, 19 Dec 1690). Composer, organist and collector of music, son of (1) Andreas Düben. He began his musical education under the supervision of his father, who compiled a collection of 17th-century keyboard music for him. He also assisted his father as an organist and accompanist before completing his studies in Germany between 1645 and probably 1647. He became a member of the Swedish court orchestra in Stockholm in 1648 and inherited his father's main positions as its conductor and as organist of the German Church (Tyska Kyrka) in 1663. Most of his surviving works are continuo songs; nearly all are in manuscript (S-Uu), but there is also the printed collection Odae sveticae to poems by Samuel Columbus (Stockholm, 1674); a number of his songs were occasional pieces. His few choral works (S-Uu) are mainly for up to four voices, four or five instruments and continuo: examples are Veni Sancte Spiritus (1650 or 1651; ed. in MMS, v, 1968), Fader vår ('The Lord's Prayer', 1663) and Surrexit Pastor Bonus (1664). There are also a few instrumental pieces (edn of three dances, Stockholm, 1940) and a keyboard prelude and suite (S-SK).

Gustaf Düben is particularly important for his activities as a collector. The Düben Collection, given to the University of Uppsala by his son in 1732, was essentially compiled by him. Its main part consists of 1500 vocal works in manuscript: 1200 are by 200 known composers and 300 are anonymous. There are also over 300 instrumental works in manuscript and some printed music. The collection, which includes many unique works, is one of the richest from the second half of the 17th century. The best-represented composers of vocal music are J.P. Krieger, Du Mont, Erben, Peranda, Georg Arnold, Pohle, Bernhard, Vincenzo Albrici, Carissimi (all with 16 or more works), Kaspar Förster (39 works), Geist (59), Capricornus (65), Pfleger (96) and Buxtehude (105). It is not known exactly how Düben acquired this vast amount of material, but it is evident that a great part of the collection consists of copies which were made by him and by other musicians working in Stockholm. A number of autographs by foreign composers testify to his good international contacts; an example is Buxtehude's autograph of his cantata cycle Membra Jesu nostri, with a dedication to Düben. For all the vocal works he seems to have intended to include sets of parts as well as versions in tablature collected in bound volumes; of this collection within the collection he completed five volumes entitled Motetti e concerti, which are dated 1663–7.

(3) Anders von Düben (ii) (b Stockholm, 28 Aug 1673; d Stockholm, 23 Aug 1738). Composer, youngest son of (2) Gustaf Düben (i). He became a treble at the Swedish court in 1686 and an instrumentalist in the court orchestra in 1689. He took over as its conductor from his brother Gustaf von Düben (ii) in 1698 but resigned the musical direction in 1713 and retired completely in 1726 to devote himself to other court duties. He was raised to the ranks of the nobility in 1707, became a chamberlain in 1711, was granted the title of baron in 1719 and finally became Master of the Royal Household in 1721: his career was thus very similar to that of Gustaf (ii). He completed his musical studies on journeys abroad, and during his period as conductor of the court orchestra French influence became noticeable. His relatively few compositions include a ballet (short score, Stockholm, 1701; excerpts in Norlind, 1899–1900) and occasional works for the court (S-Uu).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SBL (C.-A. Moberg)

C. Stiehl: 'Die Familie Düben und die Buxtehude'schen Manuskripte auf der Bibliothek zu Upsala', MMg, xxi (1889), 2–9

T. Norlind: 'Die Musikgeschichte Schwedens in den Jahren 1630–1730', SIMG, i (1899–1900), 165–212

T. Norlind: 'Die Familie Düben', Festschrift Hermann Kretzschmar (Leipzig, 1918/R), 110–12

T. Norlind and E.Trobäck: Kungliga hovkapellets historia, 1526–1926 (Stockholm, 1926)

C.-A. Moberg: Från kyrko-och hovmusik till offentlig konsert (Uppsala, 1942/R)

T. Norlind: 'Familjen Düben', STMf, xxiv (1942), 5–46

F. Lindberg: Katalog över Dübensamlingen i Uppsala universitetsbibliotek (MS, S-Uu, 1942)

B. Lundgren: 'Tre brev fran Gustav Düben till landshövding Gustaf Duwall i Falun', STMf, xxvii (1945), 132–40

B. Grusnick: 'Die Dübensammlung: ein Versuch ihrer chronologischen Ordnung', STMf, xlvi (1964), 27–82; xlviii (1966), 63–186

M. Geck: Die Vokalmusik Dietrich Buxtehudes und der frühe Pietismus (Kassel, 1965)

F. Krummacher: Die Überlieferung der Choralbearbeitungen in der frühen evangelischen Kantate (Berlin, 1965)

J.O. Rudén: 'Ett nyfunnet komplement till Dübensamlingen', STMf, xlvii (1965), 51–8

E. Kjellberg: Instrumentalmusiken i Dübensamlingen (thesis, U. of Uppsala, 1968)

B. Kyhlberg: 'När föddes Gustav Düben d. ä.? Anteckningar kring några oklara punkter i familjen Dübens biografi', STMf, lvi/1 (1974), 7–18

E. Kjellberg: Kungliga musiker under stormaktstiden (diss., U. of Uppsala, 1979)

L. Jonsson, A.-M.Nilsson and G. Andersson, eds.: Musiken i Sverige, i: Från forntid till stormaktstidens slut (Stockholm, 1994)

BENGT KYHLBERG/BERTIL VAN BOER

Du Billon, Jhan. See BILLON, JHAN DE.

Dubisson. See DU BUISSON (2).

Dublin. Capital city of Ireland.

1. History. 2. Church music. 3. Opera and theatre music. 4. Concert halls. 5. Orchestral and chamber music. 6. Choral music. 7. Concert promotion. 8. Competitive festivals. 9. Broadcasting. 10. Education. 11. Cultural funding, professional associations. 12. Music collections.

1. HISTORY. Before the passing of the Act of Union in 1800, Dublin was the seat of government of a country that had for centuries been under foreign domination. Insulated by political and religious barriers from the native culture of the country as a whole, its musical activity was cultivated by the sophisticated ruling class and acted as a local focus for the mainstream of European art music, mainly as reflected by English taste. Except insofar as this activity was in turn imitated by the larger provincial centres of jurisdiction such as Cork, Limerick and Waterford, there was even less contact with the musical life of the majority of the population than in the case of the capital cities of comparable nations.

Great Musick Hall in Fishamble Street: engraving from Walter's 'Hibernian Magazine' (March 1794)

Owing to the frequent periods of strife and turmoil from which Ireland suffered before the more settled times of the 18th century, musical activity was limited; and much of the material upon which a more accurate and complete picture of musical life in Dublin might be reconstructed has been destroyed. Information for the period before the Cromwellian rebellion centres mostly on the cathedrals. A choir was established at St Patrick's in 1431, and two noted madrigal composers were organists of Christ Church: John Farmer and Thomas Bateson. That the vicars-choral of the cathedrals formed a group of expert singers whose influence spread outside the confines of church music is suggested by an entry in the chapter book of Christ Church Cathedral in 1662–3 admonishing them for having sung among the stage players in the playhouse, and by their foundation of the Hibernian Catch Club about 1680.

The custom of engaging instrumentalists to provide ceremonial music for the city appears to have spread from England in the late 15th century. The first theatre opened was in Werburgh Street, erected by John Ogilby after he was appointed Master of the Revels in Ireland in 1638. Nothing definite is known about music at this theatre, which closed at the rebellion in 1641. After the Restoration Ogilby was reappointed, with a monopoly of theatrical interests in Ireland. He returned to Dublin and erected the Smock Alley Theatre which became the chief centre for drama, music and opera until its closure in 1787.

After the wars of the 1690s the city settled down to a period in which the elegance and idle affluence associated with a colonial governing class formed the ideal background for the cultivation of the arts. As the second city in the British Isles, Dublin entered upon a 'golden age' and attracted musicians of European fame. Cousser, Geminiani, Dubourg, Michael Arne and Tommaso Giordani made Dublin their home; and Handel, T.A. Arne, Pasquali, Castrucci, J.F. Lampe, Pinto, Tenducci and many others paid extended visits. The remarkable extent of musical activity in the middle of the 18th century can be deduced from an analysis of advertised events in the 1749–50 season, which reveals nearly three dozen performances of 16 oratorios, 59 of operas or musical plays and a wide range of instrumental music. The Smock Alley Theatre met rivalry first from the Aungier Street Theatre, which was opened in 1734 and offered a more capacious stage. It fell into disuse, largely because of poor acoustics, about 1750. Rivalry then passed mainly to Crow Street which was rebuilt as a theatre in 1758, having been a concert hall since it was erected at the request of the 'Musical Academy for the practice of Italian Musick' in 1731.

The Crow Street Theatre closed in 1820, when stage music became the monopoly of the Theatre Royal in Hawkins Street (1821–80). The chief venues for oratorio and concert performances were the Crow Street Musick Hall (1731–57) and Mr Neale's Great Musick Hall in Fishamble Street (see illustration), which was opened just before Handel arrived in the autumn of 1741, and accommodated 700 people (without swords or skirt-hoops) for the first performance of Messiah on 13 April 1742. With the opening of the Rotunda in 1767, the popularity of Neale's Hall gradually declined; it was turned into a theatre in 1777 and closed at the end of the century. The Philharmonic Room, also in Fishamble Street (used by the Philharmonic Society of the 1740s), has been confused with Neale's.

Apart from the commercial theatres, music in 18th-century Dublin was mainly promoted by numerous charitable musical societies which displayed a confusing inconsistency of nomenclature. Chief among them were Mercer's Hospital, the Charitable Musical Society for the Relief of Imprisoned Debtors, and the Charitable Infirmary, all three of which benefited from the first performance of Handel's Messiah. In the second half of the century Lord Mornington's Musical Academy (1757–77) and the Irish Musical Fund Society (instituted 1787 and incorporated 1794) were notably active.

Reflecting the London fashion, a prominent feature from the 1740s to the end of the century consisted of concerts during the summer season held in pleasure gardens such as Marlborough Bowling Green, St Stephen's Green and the City Bason (sic). In 1749 Dr Bartholomew Mosse opened the Great Britain Street Gardens, laid out in the style of London's Vauxhall, where about 60 concerts were given in aid of his Lying-in Hospital each season until 1791. These concerts were so successful that a spacious hall built on the model of the Rotunda in London's Ranelagh was opened in 1767, providing accommodation in inclement weather. Dr Mosse's hospital thus soon became known as the Rotunda.

As in England, the public looked mainly to foreigners for their music, but the active patronage of the nobility and gentry led to a certain amount of creative activity on the part of local composers such as the Roseingrave family and the Earl of Mornington, who was appointed to the new chair of music in the University of Dublin in 1764. In February 1792 John Field first appeared in public and published his first known composition. Also active at the close of the century were Philip Cogan and John Stevenson, who provided accompaniments for Thomas Moore's Irish Melodies.

With the passing of the Act of Union in 1800, and the abolition of the Irish Parliament, Dublin music lost much of its wealthy patronage. A tradition had however been established, and although opportunities for professionals decreased with the coming of a new era of amateur music-making, there was sufficient activity to maintain 19 publishers and music sellers, and 42 instrument makers in 1820–25.

The notable spread of amateur music was furthered chiefly by the efforts of the Robinson family. Francis Robinson formed a choral society known as the Sons of Handel in 1810, and his son Joseph founded the Antient Concerts Society (1834–63) which built the Antient Concert Rooms in Great Brunswick Street (now Pearse Street) for its performances. In 1831 William and Henry Hudson, a barrister and a dentist, organized the Dublin Music Festival at which a chorus of 172 and an orchestra of 74, strengthened by London players, was conducted by Sir George Smart and Ferdinand Ries; the chief attraction as soloist was Paganini. At the International Exhibition of 1853, Joseph Robinson assembled a choir and orchestra of no fewer than 1000 performers; and in 1856 Beethoven's Choral Symphony had its first Irish performance by the Philharmonic Society (1826–78), which also acted as host to both Joachim and Rubinstein when they first appeared in Dublin. In 1876 Joseph Robinson founded the Dublin Musical Society, which performed the current choral and orchestral repertory with a choir and orchestra of about 350 in the Concert Hall at Earlsfort Terrace (built for the Exhibition of 1865 and now rebuilt as the National Concert Hall). Among the composers of this period were Dr John Smith, Master of the King's Band of State Musicians in Ireland, composer to the Chapel Royal, and professor of music in the University of Dublin (1845–61), who wrote mainly church music and edited Weyman's Melodia sacra; and John Glover, who wrote three operas. Two better-known Irish composers, Balfe and Wallace, lived and worked abroad.

Towards the end of the century the chief figures in the musical life of Dublin were Robert Prescott Stewart, a prolific composer of cathedral music who succeeded John Smith as professor at the University and was organist at both St Patrick's and Christ Church cathedrals; and Michele Esposito, an Italian who was appointed professor of the pianoforte at the Royal Irish Academy of Music in 1882. A composer and much esteemed teacher, Esposito attempted to provide a permanent orchestra for the city by founding the Dublin Orchestral Society in 1899, and with an orchestra of 70 players he continued to conduct the society's concerts, including a series of Sunday concerts in the Antient Concert Rooms, until the outbreak of war in 1914. Among other pre-war societies may be mentioned the Dublin Oratorio Society (1906–14) under Vincent O'Brien, and the Orpheus Choral Society, founded in 1899 by James Culwick, organist of the Chapel Royal.

In the years between the wars orchestral concerts were given for the Royal Dublin Society by John F. Larchet, then professor of music at University College and music director at the Abbey Theatre. In 1927 an attempt was made to revive the Dublin Orchestral Society under the joint conductorship of Esposito and Larchet, but the society did not survive; and in the same year the third society to be known as the Dublin Philharmonic Society was founded by Colonel Fritz Brase, who had come to Dublin in 1923 as director of the new Army School of Music. This society made its début with a performance of Beethoven's Choral Symphony to mark the centenary of the composer's death, and continued to give a series of concerts each season with an orchestra of some 75 players, the wind being recruited from the Army School of Music. Choral performances were also given under Turner Huggard until the demise of the society in 1936.

The 1940s saw a remarkable expansion of musical activity, with societies and organizations proliferating. The Dublin String Orchestra, consisting mainly of professional players from the radio orchestra, introduced many contemporary works under Terry O'Connor, and a number of amateur choral and orchestral societies came into being, as well as organizations for the promotion of chamber music. Many were short-lived but others survived to form, in the company of some long-established institutions, the focal points around which this upsurge of activity crystallized into the pattern of Dublin musical life in the 1970s. The founding of the Music Association of Ireland in 1948 did much to coordinate musical policy by bringing together among its members a wide section of representative interests, both professional and amateur, which found influential expression through its elected council. This period was also notable for a marked increase in creative work, encouraged by the broadcasting authorities and the performing groups promoting contemporary Irish music.

The last quarter of the 20th century witnessed a shift, common to many European countries, from the promotion of music by enthusiastic amateur bodies to professional organizations largely supported by public funds. These organizations, many of which were initiated by the Music Association of Ireland, will be detailed under the appropriate sections below.

2. CHURCH MUSIC. The two Church of Ireland cathedrals of Christ Church and St Patrick are constituted in the full cathedral foundation, and follow a distinguished musical tradition dating back to the early Middle Ages. A choir school was attached to each (now only St Patrick's); choirmen hold the ancient posts of vicars-choral and lay vicars. The earliest names of vicars-choral at St Patrick's are recorded in 1219, and the first recorded name of an organist at that cathedral was that of William Herbit, who received payment in 1509. The recorded history of choral music at Christ Church does not go back before 1539, when the canons regular of the previous monastery became the members of a new secular foundation modelled on the practice of St Patrick's; Robert Hayward, however, was appointed organist in 1509. At intervals from the early 17th century until the late 19th the services of one organist were shared by the two cathedrals: the morning service at Christ Church and the evening service at St Patrick's were the more elaborate, at which the organist and principal members of each choir assisted.

The choir of the Roman Catholic St Mary's Pro-Cathedral, Marlborough Street, formed in 1902, owes its existence to an endowment of Edward Martyn, and the deed of gift states: 'The music to be sung shall be Gregorian and that of Palestrina or in the Palestrina style'. Vincent O'Brien was the first choirmaster of the Palestrina Choir. The university chapel choirs of Trinity College (Anglican rite) and St Patrick's College, Maynooth, are of a high standard and have special educational importance.

3. OPERA AND THEATRE MUSIC. The popularity of opera and musical plays has been a notable aspect of Dublin taste since the early 18th century, and was further strengthened by the English travelling opera companies during the second half of the 19th century and the first quarter of the 20th. Chief events in the early history of opera in Dublin begin with the first Irish production of The Beggar's Opera in March 1728 (40 performances by the end of that year). The first performance of Italian opera was not, as has been stated, by Nicolini in 1711, but in the form of burlettas presented at the Smock Alley Theatre by the De Amici company in 1761.

The production of full-scale opera is at present undertaken by the Dublin Grand Opera Society (reformed as DGOS Opera Ireland), which since 1941 has given two seasons annually at the Gaiety Theatre, there being no opera house in the city. The society has its own amateur chorus and Radio Telefís Éireann (RTÉ) provides its Concert Orchestra.

In the late 1960s an attempt was made to provide operatic experience for Irish singers, and at the same time bring live performances of the less complex operatic masterpieces to the smaller provincial towns, with the formation of Irish National Opera. This organization ceased activity in the early 1980s and has been replaced by Opera Theatre Company (OTC), which is funded by the Arts Council. This is a professional touring company performing opera in English with a chamber orchestra, and specializing in late Baroque and early Classical works as well as new operas by contemporary Irish composers. OTC also commissions new English translations of existing operas. There are numerous societies devoted to light opera, foremost being the Rathmines and Rathgar Musical Society, founded in 1913.

4. CONCERT HALLS. The opening of the National Concert Hall in 1981 provided the city with the suitable musical focus that had long been lacking. Seating 1212, with a recital hall for 250 (the John Field Room), it is administered by a board appointed by the government. Concerts are also given in a number of smaller halls, including the Great Hall of the Irish Museum of Modern Art (cap. 500) and the Pillar Room at the Rotunda Hospital (250). The Royal Dublin Society possesses a hall (1200) where it promotes an annual series of chamber music recitals. The Hugh Lane Gallery provides a venue for recitals, mainly of contemporary music. The two universities in Dublin have halls where concerts are given: the O'Reilly Hall (cap. 1220) in University College was opened in 1994, and Trinity College has the 18th-century Public Theatre (450–500). Some concerts requiring very large accommodation have been given at the Point Theatre (*c*7000), normally the venue for popular music.

5. ORCHESTRAL AND CHAMBER MUSIC. From modest beginnings, as a station chamber ensemble in 1926, the broadcasting orchestra was steadily expanded by the 1950s until it assumed the role (though not the name) of Ireland's national orchestra. After 1948 its complement was strengthened by the importation of a number of foreign instrumentalists, and it took the title of the Radio Éireann SO. A new generation of Irish players soon found employment in its ranks. From 1941 to 1948 the chief conductor was Captain Michael Bowles. After his retirement a number of guest conductors, including Jean Martinon and Hans Schmidt-Isserstedt, were appointed to direct the orchestra until the appointment of Milan Horvat as principal conductor in 1953.

With the launch of the national television service in 1961 the orchestra became known as the Radio Telefís Éireann (RTÉ) SO, of which Tibor Paul was appointed principal conductor in 1962. He was succeeded by Albert Rosen (1967–79) and then by Colman Pearce, Bryden Thomson and Janos Fürst. In 1989 the number of players was increased to international standards and the orchestra was given the title of National Symphony Orchestra, the first principal conductor of which was George Hurst. In 1994 he was succeeded by Kasper de Roo. Concerts in the National Concert Hall, its headquarters, are recorded for broadcasting. The National SO repeats a number of these concerts in larger provincial centres and also undertakes tours abroad. It performs for the Wexford Festival Opera and makes commercial recordings, including a series of works by Irish composers.

The Radio Authority also supports the RTÉ Concert Orchestra of 44 players. Originally formed in 1948 as the Radio Éireann Light Orchestra, it encompasses a wide-ranging repertory including light entertainment. In addition to regular public concerts and radio and television broadcasts, the Concert Orchestra plays for the Dublin Grand Opera Society and concerts for school, and has made numerous commercial recordings.

An independent professional chamber orchestra conducted by André Prieur and consisting mainly of players from the RTÉ SO, known as the New Irish Chamber Orchestra, was formed in 1970. Following the Arts Council plan for regional development, this orchestra (renamed the Irish Chamber Orchestra) was relocated in Limerick in 1994, recruiting a number of new players to replace those who remained in Dublin to form the Orchestra of St Cecilia. A number of amateur orchestras have contributed significantly to musical life in Dublin. Of those that survived more than a brief period, the Dublin Orchestral Players has remained active since its foundation in 1939. More recently the Dublin SO and the Dublin Baroque Players have played an important role in this field. Both universities have student orchestras, the Baroque Orchestra of University College (founded 1989) and the Dublin University Orchestral Society (founded 1990), which perform regularly with young professional soloists.

Apart from the annual series of recitals sponsored since 1886 by the Royal Dublin Society, referred to above, public support for chamber music was meagre until the 1950s, when active groups such as Les Amis de la Musique and the Prieur Ensemble, formed mainly by members of the RTÉ orchestras, created a new enthusiasm. The broadcasting service established a string quartet in 1958. Based in Cork, it gives many concerts in Dublin and throughout the country as well as making radio broadcasts and recordings. The existence of this body has provided much encouragement for Irish composers who have written for it. Since 1986 the Vanbrugh Quartet has fulfilled this role and has made a number of commercial recordings, including several of Irish quartets. Independent string quartets, formed from members of the radio orchestras, have been active in Dublin since the 1950s. Recently there have been the Testore and Degani Quartets. Chamber music for brass ensemble has been provided by the RTÉ Brass Quintet and Prelude Brass. Increasing interest in contemporary music has led to the formation of two chamber groups, Concorde and Nua Nós, which specialize in this field.

6. Choral music. Of existing bodies the earliest is the Hibernian Catch Club founded in about 1680 by the vicars-choral of St Patrick's and Christ Church cathedrals. It claims to be the oldest surviving musical society in Europe. Its activities are confined to male-voice singing at monthly dinners.

The University of Dublin Choral Society was founded in 1837, with Joseph Robinson as its first conductor. It performs the masterpieces of the oratorio repertory at the end of each university term. The corresponding university society, the Music Society of University College, Dublin, was founded in 1917; two choral and orchestral concerts are given each year. Both universities also have chamber choirs.

Of the large choirs which give regular performances in Dublin the earliest is the Culwick Choral Society, a direct descendant of the Orpheus Choral Society referred to above. Recently they have tended to depart from an earlier tradition of a cappella partsongs to concentrate on oratorio and other large-scale works. Of more recent origin is Our Lady's Choral Society, formed in 1946 from the combined Roman Catholic church choirs of the archdiocese of Dublin, the first Irish choir to perform in Paris and Rome. Other important choral societies in Dublin are the RTÉ Philharmonic Choir, the St James's Gate Choral Society and Musica Sacra. These societies have contributed significantly to the wide range of choral concerts given in Dublin since the late 1970s, which also include a memorable series of Bach cantatas performed by special forces assembled and directed by John Beckett. In recent years amateur choirs have proliferated in the Dublin suburbs. RTÉ also supports a children's choir, Cor na nÓg.

A professional chamber choir of ten voices formed in 1953, the RTÉ Singers, earned an international reputation under Hans Waldemar Rosen, particularly in contemporary a cappella music, and provided a significant impetus to Irish composers. This has now become the RTÉ Chamber Choir, which offers 17 scholarships for young singers for a limited three-year period. There is also the National Chamber Choir conducted by Colin Mawby. Choral music of the Renaissance and early 17th century was introduced by an independent group of ten voices, formed and directed by Brian Boydell and known as the Dowland Consort (1958–70).

7. Concert promotion. In addition to the concerts promoted by the radio organization, the Royal Dublin Society and other bodies already referred to, many of the events formerly organized by the Music Association of Ireland have been taken over by professional bodies, such as the National Concert Hall and the Irish Museum of Modern Art at Kilmainham. Two amateur organizations, the Limerick Music Association and the Early Music Organization of Ireland, are responsible for promoting concerts in Dublin; the former tends to specialize in featuring musicians from eastern Europe, while the latter has organized successful festivals of early music. The Music Association of Ireland continues to promote concerts in schools. In 1969, with the cooperation of RTÉ, it inaugurated the biennial Dublin Festival of 20th-Century Music, which featured a broad cross-section of the contemporary international repertory in association with works by living Irish composers. This area is now provided for by recitals promoted by the Association of Irish Composers, an organization known as 'Mostly Modern', the groups Concorde and Nua Nós, and occasional concert series given by the National SO. Music Network, which mainly organizes countrywide tours of soloists and small groups, also stages concerts in Dublin. Recitals of solo and chamber music are promoted by the universities and by the cultural services of European governments.

8. Competitive festivals. The chief competitive music festival is the Feis Ceoil, founded in 1897. The Oireachtas, also founded in 1897, is a festival of Gaelic literature and drama, traditional music and fine art. Other important festivals are the Feis Maitiú, founded in 1908, and the Feis Atha Cliath, founded in 1904 for the promotion of Irish music and dancing.

More recently Dublin has hosted two notable international festivals: the Dublin International Organ Festival (from 1981) and the Dublin International Piano Competition (from 1988). Their respective founding artistic directors are Gerard Gillen and John O'Conor.

9. Broadcasting. The Irish broadcasting service, now known as Radio Telefís Éireann, was instituted in 1926. With only one radio and one television channel until 1979 it was difficult to satisfy musical enthusiasts in the face of popular demand and some dependence on commercial sponsorship. Sound broadcasting in 1971 devoted 276 hours to opera, orchestral and chamber music, and talks on musical subjects, and 125 hours to traditional and arranged Irish music. There are now several radio and television channels. Classical music is provided by FM3 Music during the evening hours and this admirable service has recently expanded its scope. The director of music and a number of assistants in specialized areas are responsible for RTÉ's musical policy. There is no organization specifically responsible for music in the television section.

10. Education. A chair of music was created in the University of Dublin (Trinity College) in 1764. The first holder was the Earl of Mornington. The chair remained vacant after his retirement in 1774 until the later appointments of John Smith (1845–62), Robert Prescott Stewart (1862–94), Ebenezer Prout (1894–1910), Percy C. Buck (1910–20), Charles H. Kitson (1920–35), George H.P. Hewson (1935–62), Brian Boydell (1962–82) and Hormoz Farhat (1982–95). Until the introduction of an Honor School in 1974 no teaching was taken by the professor, whose duties were confined to examining. The chair at University College was created in 1913. The first professor was the Rev. H. Bewerunge, who was succeeded by Charles H. Kitson, John F. Larchet, Anthony Hughes and Harry White. The first master's programme in musicology in an Irish university was introduced at University College in 1991. An active music department has been set up in St Patrick's College, Maynooth, under Professor Gerard Gillen. One of the constituent colleges of the National University of Ireland, it is situated about 20 km west of the city. Degrees in music are conferred by both the University of Dublin and the National University of Ireland, and music may be taken to degree level at the new Dublin City University.

Courses leading to degree qualifications are provided by three institutions chiefly concerned with practical musicianship. The Royal Irish Academy of Music (RIAM), founded in 1848, is governed by a board of governors consisting of elected representatives of the RIAM members, Dublin Corporation nominees and elected staff members. The academy, which offers a wide range of degree and diploma courses in performance and musicianship, has approximately 1500 students drawn from all of Ireland's 32 counties. In addition, over 30,000 pupils annually are examined at local centres throughout the country.

The DIT College of Music, founded as the Dublin Municipal School of Music in 1890, has been one of the constituent colleges of the Dublin Institute of Technology since 1978. There are approximately 2500 students, many of whom are prepared for grade examinations and external diplomas. The Institute awards a graduate diploma in music and a diploma in music teaching. The DIT College of Music and the Royal Irish Academy of Music offer a joint course with the University of Dublin leading to a degree in music education. Training for primary school teachers is undertaken by St Patrick's Training College, Drumcondra.

Among independent schools, the Read School of Pianoforte Playing, which was founded in 1915 and gave instruction to many distinguished Dublin musicians, is no longer active. The Leinster School of Music, founded in 1904 holds local centre examinations and grants teaching diplomas. The Army School of Music, established in 1923, trains the officer bandmasters and bandsmen for the Irish Army.

The National Youth Orchestra was formed in 1970, and four Dublin youth orchestras ranging from junior to senior grades provide initial training. Notable recent development in this area has also resulted in the formation of a number of youth orchestras in suburban centres. Orchestral concerts for schools are given by the RTÉ orchestras.

11. Cultural funding, professional associations. From its foundation in 1948 the Music Association of Ireland made representations to the government and other public bodies on behalf of its widely representative membership. Much of this pioneering work was successful, most notably the eventual provision of a National Concert Hall. Many of the associated groups formed under its influence developed independently and enjoy professional management with public funding. It still organizes concerts in schools and auditions for the European Youth Orchestra.

The chief source of funding for promotional bodies is the Arts Council of Ireland, set up in 1951. It also grants scholarships and bursaries for composers and performing artists and supports, in association with RTÉ, recordings of contemporary Irish music. Irish composers are further promoted by two organizations which developed from the Composers' Group of the Music Association of Ireland. The Contemporary Music Centre has established an archive and catalogue of Irish works and disseminates them widely through publications, recordings and a copying scheme, while the Association of Irish Composers is responsible for the professional welfare of composers and for performances of their music.

The growth of interest in early music has led to the formation of the Early Music Organization of Ireland, which has promoted a number of successful festivals and published newsletters containing short articles and reviews of recent recordings.

Music Network, based in Dublin, is a professional organization that manages the series of countrywide tours of chamber groups and soloists originally initiated in the 1950s by the Music Association of Ireland. The Irish branch of the Performing Right Society became independent in 1994 as the Irish Musical Rights Organization. A committee of this body allocates grants for the encouragement of contemporary music.

The Leinster Society of Organists was founded in 1919, and the welfare of professional musicians is looked after by the Irish Federation of Musicians. The oldest Dublin musical organization is the Irish Musical Fund, a charitable fund founded in 1787 and incorporated by Act of Parliament in 1794; it is administered for the benefit of 20 professional musicians, mainly orchestral players, who are elected to membership of the fund for life.

12. Music collections. The chief music collections are those of the library of Trinity College, which includes the Prout Collection and a number of manuscripts, and of the National Library, which includes the Joly Gift and the Plunkett Collection. A number of early manuscripts and rare printed works are also to be found in Marsh's Library and in the library of the Royal Irish Academy of Music. The chief collection of Irish folk music is housed in the Irish Traditional Music Archive, which is supported by the Arts Council. There are also folk music collections in the libraries of the Royal Irish Academy and Trinity College, in the National Library and in the National Museum, which also houses a noteworthy collection of instruments mostly made by Dublin craftsmen. A collection of some 3000 folksongs, in manuscripts and recordings made by the Irish Folklore Commission, is now housed in University College.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (Barra Boydell)

M. Kelly: Reminiscences (London, 1826, 2/1826/R with introduction by A.H. King); ed. R. Fiske (London, 1975)

H. Townsend: An Account of the Visit of Handel to Dublin (Dublin, 1852)

W.H.G. Flood: A History of Irish Music (Dublin, 1905, 3/1913/R, 4/1927)

La T. Stockwell: Dublin Theatres and Theatre Customs, 1637–1820 (Kingsport, TN, 1938)

A. Fleischmann, ed.: Music in Ireland (Cork, 1952)

I.M. Hogan: Anglo-Irish Music 1780–1830 (Cork, 1966)

E.B. O'Neill: Music in Dublin, 1700–1780 (diss., U. College, Dublin, 1971)

T.J. Walsh: Opera in Dublin 1705–1797: the Social Scene (Dublin, 1973)

Brian Boydell: 'Venues for Music in 18th-Century Dublin', Dublin Historical Record, xxix (1975), 28–34

Brian Boydell: 'The Dublin Musical Scene 1749–50 and its Background', PRMA, cv (1978–9), 77–89

Brian Boydell, ed.: Four Centuries of Music in Ireland (London, 1979)

H.E. Samuel: 'John Sigismond Cousser in London and Dublin', ML, lxi (1980), 158–71

Barra Boydell: 'Dublin City Musicians in the Late Middle Ages and Renaissance, to 1660', Dublin Historical Record, xxxiv (1981), 42–53

Brian Boydell: 'Half a Century of Music in Dublin', Dublin Historical Record, xxxvii (1984), 117–121

H. Shields, ed.: Popular Music in Eighteenth-Century Dublin (Dublin, 1985)

Brian Boydell: 'Music up to 1850', The New History of Ireland, iv: Eighteenth-Century Ireland, 1691–1800, ed. T.W. Moody and W.E. Vaughan (Oxford, 1986), 542–628

H. White: 'Handel in Dublin: a Note', Eighteenth-Century Ireland, ii (1987), 182–6

Brian Boydell: A Dublin Musical Calendar 1700–1760 (Dublin, 1988)

Brian Boydell: 'Thomas Bateson and the Earliest Degrees in Music Awarded by the University of Dublin', Hermathena, cxlvi (1989), 53–60

W.H. Grindle: Irish Cathedral Music (Belfast, 1989)

M. Egan-Buffet and A.J.Fletcher: 'The Dublin Visitatio Sepulchri Play', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, xc (1990), 159–242

Barra Boydell: 'John Baptist Cuvillie, Ferdinand Weber, and the Organ of Trinity College Chapel, Dublin', The Organ, lxxii (1992–3), 15–27

Brian Boydell: Rotunda Music in Eighteenth-Century Dublin (Dublin, 1992)

Barra Boydell: 'St. Michan's Church, Dublin: the Installation of the Organ in 1725 and the Duties of the Organist', Dublin Historical Record, xlvi (1993), 101–20; rev. repr. in JBIOS, xix (1995), 74–96

E.J. O'Keeffe: The Study of Irish Musical Sources: the Case of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin (diss., U. College, Dublin, 1993)

T.J. Walsh: Opera in Dublin, 1798–1820: Frederick Jones and the Crow Street Theatre (Oxford, 1993)

Brian Boydell: 'Jonathan Swift and the Dublin Musical Scene', Dublin Historical Record, xlvii (1994), 132–7

Brian Boydell: 'Organs Associated with Handel's Visit to Dublin', JBIOS, xix (1995), 54–73

K.A. Daly: Catholic Church Music in Ireland, 1878–1903 (Dublin, 1995)

A. Fleischmann: 'Music 1850–1921', The New History of Ireland, vi: Ireland under the Union, II: 1870–1921, ed. W.E. Vaughan (Oxford, 1996), 500–22

D. Neary: 'Organ Building in Seventeenth- and Eighteenth-Century Dublin, and its English Connection', JBIOS, xxi (1997), 20–27

J. Allen: 'Italian Opera in Dublin', Music in Ireland 1848–1998, ed. R. Pine (Dublin, 1998), 56–64

R. Pine and C. Acton, eds.: To Talent Alone: the Royal Irish Academy of Music 1848–1998 (Dublin, 1998)

BRIAN BOYDELL

Dublin Troper (GB-Cu Add.710). 14th-century troper, proser and consuetudinary. See SOURCES, MS, §II, 8.

Dublin Virginal Manuscript (IRL-Dm D.3.30/i). See SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC TO 1660, §2(vi).

Dubois, Alfred (b Molenbeek, 17 Nov 1898; d Brussels, 24 March 1949). Belgian violinist and pedagogue. In 1910 he entered the Brussels Conservatory, where he studied with Alexandre Cornélis and won the first prize for violin in 1913. He continued to work with Cornélis until the latter died in 1917, when he began regular lessons with Eugène Ysaÿe. In 1920 he was awarded the Vieuxtemps Prize. He formed a superb duo with the pianist Marcel Maas and from 1925 played in the Trio de la Cour de Belgique (with Emile Bosquet, piano, and Maurice Dambois, cello). From 1927 he taught at the Brussels Conservatory. In 1938–9 he toured the USA with success but the war put paid to his international career. During the Occupation he led the Artis Quartet, with his pupil Arthur Grumiaux, Robert Courte and Robert Maas of the Pro Arte Quartet (who had been stranded in Belgium by the hostilities); the ensemble refused to play for the German invaders but became a cultural rallying point for music-loving Belgians.

Dubois was the most poised and polished player of the Franco-Belgian school in the interwar period; and had he not died just when his career was reviving after the war, he would be better remembered. Fortunately he left outstanding recordings of concertos, sonatas and trios. As a teacher he attracted pupils from all over the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Potter: 'Missing Link between Ysaÿe and Grumiaux', The Strad, cvii (1996), 796–7

TULLY POTTER

Du Bois, Jean. See BOSQUET.

Du Bois, Léon (b Brussels, 9 Jan 1859; d Boitsfort, Brussels, 19 Nov 1935). Belgian composer and conductor. After studying at the Brussels Conservatory he won the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1885 with the cantata Au bois des elfes. His career as a conductor took him to theatres in Nantes (1889–90) and Liège (1891–2) and to the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie (1890–91, 1892–7). In 1912 he was elected to the Belgian Royal Academy and succeeded Tinel as director of the Brussels Conservatory, a position he held until 1925. As a composer he was a Wagnerian, but he moved away from this influence in his much freer working of themes. His most successful work was the mimed drama Le mort; he wrote three other pieces for the stage and two ballets. He also composed a few orchestral works including L'éveilleur, an Adagio for strings and two marches. Other works include a suite for eight horns, 13 songs and about 20 choral works. An oratorio and a Poème for cello and orchestra remained incomplete. Du Bois' music was published by L'Art Belge, Breitkopf & Härtel and Cranz.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Solvay: 'Notice sur Léon Du Bois', Annuaire de l'Académie royale de Belgique, cv (1939), 1–45

HENRI VANHULST

Du Bois, Shirley (Lola) Graham (b Indianapolis, IN, 11 Nov, 1896; d Beijing, 27 March 1977). American composer, playwright and biographer. The daughter of a black American minister, she studied the piano, the organ and singing, and directed her father's church choir. In 1921 she married Shadrach T. McCanns, who died three years later, leaving her with two young sons. She went on to study at the Sorbonne (1926), Howard University (1929), Columbia University (1929), Morgan State College (1929–31) and Oberlin College (BA 1934, MA 1935). While at Oberlin she composed the opera Tom-Tom. The first performance (Cleveland, 8 July 1932) featured baritone Jules Bledsoe and, attracted national attention. She taught at Tennessee A & I State College (1935–6) and supervised the Negro Unit of the Chicago Federal Theater (1936–8), for which she composed the opera Little Black Sambo (1938). After studying creative writing at Yale University on a Rosenwald Fellowship (1938–40), she concentrated primarily on writing. She married W.E.B. Du Bois in 1951.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SouthernB

K.A. Perkins: 'The Unknown Career of Shirley Graham', Freedomways, xxv (1985), 6–17

D. Clark Hine, E. Barkley Brown and R. Terborg-Penn, eds.: Black Women in America (Bloomington, IN, 1994)

MSS in George Mason U., Fairfax, VA, US-OB

JOSEPHINE WRIGHT

Dubois, Philippe (b Soignies, *c*1575; d Madrid, Dec 1610). Flemish composer and singer. He received his early musical education at the collegiate church of St Vincent, Soignies. He was one of 14 boy sopranos aged between seven and 12 who in 1585 were recruited in the Netherlands to serve in the chapel of Philip II of Spain; his colleagues included Géry de Ghersem, Mathieu Rosmarin (Mateo Romero), Jean Dufon and Jean de Loncin. He arrived in Madrid at the beginning of 1586. He was taught there by Philippe Rogier until his promotion to the rank of cantor on 1 December 1593. In 1594 he was invested with a benefice at the chapel 'du corps saint' at Ste Waudru, Mons. After the death of Philip II he continued in the service of Philip III as cantor and composer for the rest of his life, following him to Valladolid, where the court resided from 1601 to 1606. The catalogue of the library of King Juan IV of Portugal, destroyed in the Lisbon earthquake of 1755, records ten pieces by him; seven are settings for six and eight voices of Latin texts and three of French texts for five and eight voices.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BNB (P. Becquart); JoãoIL; MGG1 suppl. (P. Becquart)

P. Becquart: 'Trois documents inédits relatifs à la chapelle flamande de Philippe II et Philippe III', AnM, xiv (1959), 63–76

P. Becquart: Musiciens néerlandais à la cour de Madrid: Philippe Rogier et son école (1560–1647) (Brussels, 1967)

P. Becquart: 'Philippe Rogier et son école à la cour des Philippe d'Espagne: un ultime foyer de la création musicale des Pays-Bas (1560–1647)', Musique des Pays-Bas anciens – musique espagnole ancienne: Brussels 1985, 215–29

PAUL BECQUART

Dubois, Pierre Max (b Graulhet, 1 March 1930; d Rocquencourt, 29 August 1995). French composer. He studied at the Paris Conservatoire (1949–53) with Jean Doyen (piano) and Milhaud (composition). At the age of 19 he gained his first commission from French Radio for which he composed the Suite humouristique. He won the Prix de Rome in 1955 with Le rire de Gargantua (a cantata for soprano, tenor, bass and orchestra) and the Grand Prix of the city of Paris in 1964 for Symphonie-sérénade. In 1964 he took up conducting, touring the USA, France, Belgium and Canada. Dubois engaged in teaching activities in both Paris and Quebec and held the post of professor of analysis at the Paris Conservatoire. Several editions of educational material supported his teaching activities. A prolific composer of instrumental works, he has also written three small scale operatic works (1970–74) and a number of ballets. Many of his works have been composed for unusual instrumental combinations: in Easy Sliding (1981) a trombone quartet is accompanied by a full symphony orchestra and Hommage à Hoffnung (1981) is scored for an orchestra of saxophones. Dubois draws on a range of musical sources, incorporating elements from jazz to folksong. His musical style is influenced by Milhaud, Françaix and Prokofiev.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Impressiones foraines (ballet), 1951; Le docteur Ox (ballet, 3), 1961, Lyons, 1965; Comment causer (opéra bouffe 1, J. Tardieu), 1970, Liège, Royal, 14 Oct 1971; Les Suisses (opéra à grand spectacle, 2, after P.A. Bréal), 1972, Liège, 1973; Hommage à Hoffnung (ballet, 1), 1980, Bordeaux, 1981; Le ruban merveilleux (conte musicale, D. Blanc), 1990, Paris, Forum des Halles, 31 May 1991

Orch: Pf Conc. no.2, 1957; Vn Conc. no.1, 1957; Sym. no.2 (Drame pour Epidaure), 1962; Hn Conc., 1963; Vc Conc., 1963; Rapsodie, 1963; Double Conc., vn, pf, orch, 1963; Symphonie-sérénade, str, 1964; Easy Sliding, 4 tbn, orch, 1981; Hommage à Rabelais, 1981

Vocal: Le rire de Gargantua (cant., Escalada), S, T, B, orch, 1955; Cantate sur 3 psaumes, 4 solo vv, 1959; Educativement vôtre, mixed chorus, children's vv, orch, 1975; Pauvre aveugle, 4-part mixed chorus, 1981

Chbr: Sonata, vn, pf, 1962; Pop Variations, fl, pf, 1971; Suite, dans le style ancien, a rec, 1971; Le cinéma muet, hn, tpt, trbn, tuba, 1972; Fantaisie sur une chanson canadienne, cornet/tpt, pf, 1972; Coincidence, cl, pf, 1977; 3 sérénades, ob, cl, sax, 1982

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, Choudens, Eschig, Leduc, Rideau Rouge, Technisonor

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.E. Bingham: Pierre-Max Dubois: a Performance Guide to Selected Works for the Saxophone (DMA diss., U. of Kentucky, 1988)

ANDREA MUSK

Dubois, (François Clément) Théodore (b Rosnay, Marne, 24 Aug 1837; d Paris, 11 June 1924). French composer, organist and teacher. He was born into a modest, non-musical family in a village near Reims. His father was a basket maker, his grandfather a primary school teacher. When he made rapid progress in his piano studies with Louis Fanart, choirmaster of Reims Cathedral, the mayor of Rosnay, the Vicomte Eugène de Breuil, introduced him to professors at the Paris Conservatoire and provided lodging when he was accepted there in 1854. Studying the piano with Marmontel, the organ with Benoist, harmony with Bazin, and fugue and counterpoint with Ambroise Thomas, Dubois earned a series of prizes in harmony (1856), fugue (1857) and the organ (1859) before winning the Prix de Rome in composition in 1861. At the Villa Medici in Rome he became enamoured of Palestrina's music and began friendships with his future colleagues, Paladilhe, Guiraud, Bourgault-Ducoudray and Massenet.

While at the Conservatoire, Dubois played the organ at St Louis-des-Invalides from 1855, and after 1858 at Ste Clotilde (under César Franck); he was choirmaster there from 1863 to 1869 and at the Société des Concerts in the early 1870s. He then moved to the Madeleine, and replaced Saint-Saëns as organist in 1877. He also taught at the Conservatoire, starting with harmony (1871–91), then composition (1891–6), then serving as inspector of musical education (1884–96) and finally as director of the Conservatoire (1896–1905). Believing that students should have a solid understanding of theory before studying modern masters, he published a number of theoretical treatises. Praised for their clarity and precision and translated into other languages, some are still used today. His other writings include Notice sur Charles Gounod (Paris, 1894) and 'L'enseignement musical' (EMDC, II/vi, 1931, pp.3437–71).

Musically, Dubois is perhaps best known for his religious works, some of which have remained in the repertory of French churches for decades. The oratorio Les sept paroles du Christ (1867), for example, was performed by the Société des Concerts twice in 1872 and continued to be used at Good Friday concerts until well into the 20th century. Ernest Reyer, who attended its première at Ste Clotilde, said the score was 'as important as a comic opera, its style resembling 16th-century Italian music given new life with modern harmonies and varied rhythms'. Le paradis perdu won the City of Paris Prize and was performed twice at the Concerts Colonne in 1878.

The intervallic writing and phrasing in his sacred works make it easy music to sing, while the skilful use of vocal groups produces a grand effect. Despite the banality of certain repetitions in its Gloria, the Messe brève in E♭ for three voices was reputedly sung 'almost everywhere', while the Messe solennelle de Saint-Rémi and the Messe de la Délivrance (which cites Parsifal in its Sanctus) were enjoyed for their dramatic, grandiose effects. Throughout his life, Dubois also wrote secular works for chorus, especially for unaccompanied male chorus. Except for a patriotic sonnet, France (1916), his choral scenes are generally on themes of nature.

Although Dubois' dramatic works are less well known today, many were published by the prestigious house of Heugel. For the most part, they present simple, idealistic love stories in rustic, picturesque settings, perhaps reflecting Dubois' own background (many were written in Rosnay, where he returned to compose each summer). Despite their banal subjects, two modest one-act comic operas, La Guzla de l'émir (1873) and Le pain bis (1879), were praised for 'having all that it takes to succeed'.

The première of his three-act ballet, La farandole, commissioned by the Opéra in 1882 and set in Provence, was reputedly the first occasion during which electricity was used extensively at the Opéra. Here and in his two subsequent operas, Aben-Hamet (1884) and the popular Xavière (composed between 1886 and 1894), light, graceful melodies and poetic fantasy abound, in marked contrast with the austerity of his sacred music. In one section of Xavière the priest recounts the legend of St Francis and the birds; in another, Dubois incorporates indigenous French folksongs provided by Vincent d'Indy. While using short, periodic, melodic structures inspired by Gounod, these works also make reference to Wagner, whose music Dubois had heard in Bayreuth. The third act of Aben-Hamet incorporates melodic and harmonic aspects of the Tristan Prelude, while Xavière employs leitmotifs and continuous dialogue with symphonic accompaniment. The grand opéra Circé (1896) never reached the stage, although it reflected the national obsession with exotic enchantresses who use their beauty to liberate their countries from oppressive invaders.

Dubois' interest in instrumental music grew after he helped to found the Société Nationale in 1871. The overture Frithiof, first performed by the Société Nationale in 1880, entered the repertory of all the principal French orchestras of the time. His oeuvre includes more than 200 chamber works of uneven quality, as well as several sets of songs and piano pieces.

Dubois was a man of discipline and integrity, well liked by his peers. His music was admired for its French character and solid construction, elegance and charm, and purity of style and sentiment. Although he resisted becoming too much involved in the most important musical debates of the time, the clarity and idealism of his music were enough to win him the seat vacated by Gounod in 1894 at the Académie des Beaux-Arts.

WORKS

published in Paris unless otherwise stated

STAGE

all first performed in Paris

La prova di un'opera seria, 1863, unpubd [composed in Rome]

La Guzla de l'émir (oc, 1, J. Barbier and M. Carré), Athénée, 30 April 1873 (*c*1873), Brussels, Monnaie, 1878

Le pain bis (oc, 1, A. Brunswick and A. de Beauplan), OC (Favart), 26 Feb 1879 (1879)

La farandole (ballet, 3, P. Gille, A. Mortier, Mérante), Opéra, 14 Dec 1883 (1883)

Aben-Hamet (It. op, 4, L. Détroyat and A. de Lanzières, after Chateaubriand), Italien, 16 Dec 1884 (1884)

Xavière (idylle dramatique, 3, L. Gallet, after F. Fabre), OC (Lyrique), 26 Nov 1895 (1895)

Circé (grand opéra, 3, J. and P. Barbier), 1896, excerpt, Concerts Lamoureux, 23 Feb 1896 (*c*1889–91)

La fiancée d'Abydos, unperf.; Le Florentin, unperf.

OTHER VOCAL

Messe pour les morts, solo vv, chorus, orch (1876); Petite messe pour les morts, 3vv, org (1893); 4 messes brèves, E♭, 3vv, org (1894), 4vv, org (1894), 3vv, org (1897), dans le style palestrinien, 4vv, org (1900); Messe pontificale, solo vv, chorus, orch (1895); Messe, G, 3vv, org (1898); Messe solennelle de Saint-Rémi, solo vv, chorus, orch (1900); Messe, 3vv, org (1913); Messe, b [in the spirit of the Motu proprio] (1914); Messe de la Délivrance, 2vv, chorus, org (1919)

71 motets (pubd in collections, 1873, 1877, 1889, 1901); Credo, 4 male vv, org (1898); Benedictus, T, org; Sanctus, chorus, 2 org (1911); 2 pieces for children's choir, 1 with pf acc.

5 orats: Les sept paroles du Christ, solo vv, chorus, orch 1867 (1899); Le paradis perdu (E. Blau, after J. Milton), solo vv, chorus, orch (1879); Notre-Dame de la mer (L. Gallet), solo vv, chorus, org (1897); Le baptême de Clovis (after Pope Leo XIII: Ode to France), Bar, T, chorus, orch (1899); La prière de la France, Bar, chorus, pf (1917)

9 scenas incl. Bajazet et le joueur de flûte (cant.), for Concours de l'Institut (1859); Atala (cant., V. Roussy), for Prix de Rome, 1861; L'enlèvement de Proserpine (P. Collin), solo vv, chorus, orch (1879); Délivrance (cant.), solo vv, chorus (1887); Hylas, solo vv, chorus, orch (1890); Kybèle (Leconte de Lisle), 1v, chorus, orch (1906); 8 choral scenes for unacc. male vv: Les voix de la nature (1876), Tarantelle (1882), Après la moisson (1892), Le chêne et le roseau (1894), Hymne du printemps (1902), La campagne (1905), La forêt (1910), France, Bar (1916)

Other choral works: Chant national sur l'Exposition universelle, female chorus (1855); Le jugement dernier (1861); Le drapeau français, 3vv (1882); Valse mélancolique, 3 solo vv, female chorus (1888); Ave Maria (1894); La coureur (1904); Hymne antique, 3vv (1924); Noël, 2 solo vv, female chorus (1910); Le renard et la cigogne (La Fontaine) (n.d.)

Musiques sur l'eau (1887); Chansons de Marjolie (1887); 108 songs incl. settings of poems by M. Bouchor, J. du Bellay, T. Gautier, A. de Silvestre, Sully-Prudhomme (pubd in collections, 1887–1926); Airs arméniens, arrs. (1920)

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: 3 ovs. (1865, 1881), Frithiof, 1879 (1894); 6 orch suites (1874, 1877, 1883, 1894, 1897, 1926); Concerto capriccio, pf, orch (1876); 2 orch suites from La farandole (1884, 1913); Deuxième concerto, pf, orch (1897); Concerto, vn, orch (1898); 3 sym. poems: Les abeilles (1898), Le Léthé (1899), Adonis (1901); Fantaisie, hp, orch (1903); 3 sym. (1908, 1912, 1924); Fantaisie, vc, orch (1912)

Chbr: 2 suites, ww (1898), incl. Chanson lesbienne, 2 fl, ob, 2 cl, hn, 2 bn; 2 str qts (1909, 1923); Pf Qt (1907); Pf Qnt (1905); Dixtuor, str qnt, wind qnt (1909); Nonetto, fl, ob, cl, bn, str qnt (1926); 35 other chbr works

Kbd: 94 pf works incl. Marche orientale (1867); Marche héroïque de Jeanne d'Arc, pf 4 hands, org (1888); Claire de lune (1891); Au jardin (1901); 2 sets of études (1906–7, 1922); Poèmes alpestres (1910); La journée de l'enfant (1911); 10 esquisses (1912); A l'aventure (1918); Petite marche exotique (1918); pubd collections incl. Première suite (1875), 20 pièces nouvelles de piano (1880); transcrs. incl. Poèmes virgiliens (1898), Bach's Das wohltemperirte Clavier (1914)

88 org pieces incl. Messe de mariage (1891); transcrs. of marches from Wagner's Tannhäuser and Lohengrin, Mendelssohn's A Midsummer Night's Dream

PEDAGOGICAL WORKS

L'accompagnement pratique du plainchant (1884); Notes et études d'harmonie pour servir de supplément au traité de H. Reber (1873–89); 87 leçons d'harmonie (1879–91); Traité de contrepoint et de fugue (1901); Leçons de solfège (1905); Petit manuel théorique de l'harmonie (1919); Traité d'harmonie théorique et pratique (1921); 24 leçons de solfège (1924)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB
H. Imbert: Nouveaux profils de musiciens (Paris, 1892)
J. Combarieu: 'Théodore Dubois', RHCM, iv (1904), 346–7
L. Augé de Lassus: 'Xavière et l'oeuvre de Théodore Dubois', RHCM, v (1905), 116–19
J. Tiersot: Un demi-siècle de musique française (Paris, 1918)
C.-M. Widor: Notice sur la vie et les travaux de Théodore Dubois (Paris, 1924)
C.-M. Widor: Fondations, portraits: de Massenet à Paladilhe (Paris, 1927)
H. Potiron: 'La musique réligieuse de Théodore Dubois', Revue liturgique et musicale (1930), Nov, 72–6
P. Landormy: La musique française de Franck à Debussy (Paris, 1943, 2/1948)
G. Favre: Compositeurs français méconnus: Ernest Guiraud et ses amis, Emile Paladilhe et Théodore Dubois (Paris, 1983)

JANN PASLER

Dubos, Abbé Jean-Baptiste (b Beauvais, Dec 1670; d Paris, 23 March 1742). French diplomat, antiquarian, historian and theorist of the arts. After studies in theology and archaeology at the Sorbonne, he entered the diplomatic service which took him, at one time or another, to Hamburg, London, The Hague, Brussels, Neuchâtel and Italy, and involved him in the preparations for the treaties of Ryswick and Utrecht. As reward, he was given various ecclesiastical benefices and the title 'Abbé', as well as election to the Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres in 1720, of which, three years later, he became 'perpetual secretary'. His historical writings were both well founded and controversial. Because of his broad acquaintance with the arts, past and present and also French and foreign, which was matched by a certain refined connoisseurship, he was in demand, even as a young man, for advice concerning scenery, costumes and staging at the Opéra. His most important publication for music is his Réflexions critiques sur la poésie, la peinture et la musique (Paris, 1719, 6/1755/R; Eng. trans., 1748). The first version was written with his election to the Académie des Inscriptions in mind. For the second edition in 1733, Dubos added a third section, discussing languages and their relationship to music and declamation. He remarked on the similarities between the declamation of ancient peoples and chant, a theory which Jean-Jacques Rousseau adopted with several modifications, in his essay on the origin of languages, and which Dubos was to contest in his article 'Déclamation des anciens'.

In Réflexions critiques Dubos organized his remarks with finesse and logic. He devoted the first section to a discussion of the effects of the fine arts. For Dubos, aesthetic pleasure resulted from an imaginary, but not illusory, emotion, and to support his theory, he undertook a comparison of poetry, painting and opera. In the section devoted to music, he defined the nature of each element of the tragedy in music and its representative function: recitatives imitate the natural signs of the passions while instrumental sections imitate objects or situations. From this, he concluded that opera creates a depiction of truth close to that found in painting or dramatic theatre. In the second section of the Réflexions, Dubos discusses the difference between genius and aesthetic judgement. Genius, which is a gift of nature, is distinguished from talent, a habit acquired by work and study. The role of talent consists of supporting genius without, however, being a substitute for it. He does not favour a cognitive approach to taste, which assumes knowledge, but rather relies on the reactions of the public, who are disinterested in nature. In the Réflexions Dubos does not reverse the aesthetic theories of the 17th century, rather he demonstrates a certain conventionality by his approach, which is both mechanical and empirical.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Abbé du Resnel: Recueil des pièces d'éloquence présentées à l'Académie française (Paris, 1744), 87
A. Morel: Etude sur l'abbé Dubos (Paris, 1849)
A. Lombard: L'abbé Dubos, un initiateur de la pensée moderne (Paris, 1913)
E. Teuber: 'Die Kunstphilosophie des Abbé Dubos', Zeitschrift für Ästhetik und allgemeine Kunstwissenschaft, xviii (1924), 361–410
R.D.L. Sadowsky: Jean-Baptiste Abbé Dubos: the Influence of Cartesian and Neo-Aristotelian Ideas on Music Theory and Practice (diss., Yale U., 1959)
E. Migliorini: 'Note alle "Réflexions critiques" di Jean-Baptiste Du Bos', Atti e memorie dell'Accademia toscana di scienze e lettere La Colombaria, xxvii (1962–3), 279–352
R.G. Saisselin: Taste in Eighteenth Century France: Critical Reflections on the Origins of Aesthetics, or An Apology for Amateurs (Syracuse, NY, 1965)
J. Neubauer: The Emancipation of Music from Language: Departures from Mimesis in Eighteenth-Century Aesthetics (New Haven, 1986)
P. Vendrix: Aux orgines d'une discipline historique: la musique et son histoire en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Geneva, 1993)
T. Downing: Music and the Origins of Language: Theories from the French Enlightenment (Cambridge, 1995)

ROBERT ERICH WOLF/PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Dubosc, Catherine (b Lille, 12 March 1959). French soprano. She studied piano and cello at the Strasbourg Conservatoire, then singing with Gerda Hartmann. In 1980 she entered the Ecole d'Art Lyrique of the Paris Opéra, where her teachers were Denise Dupleix and Hans Hotter. She received further tuition from Eric Tappy at the Lyons Opéra before joining that company in 1985 for two seasons. She has sung many Mozart roles, including Susanna, Despina and Pamina, as well as Marzelline, Nannetta (Verdi's Falstaff) and Blanche de la Force in Poulenc's Dialogues des Carmélites. Other roles include Gretel (1987, Geneva) and Hypsipyle in Cavalli's Giasone (1988, Utrecht). She has also appeared at the Opéra-Comique and the Théâtre du Châtelet in Paris, and at Nancy, Montpellier, Avignon, Geneva, Edinburgh and Strasbourg. Her recordings include Giasone, Dialogues des Carmélites, Campra's Tancrède, Leclair's Scylla et Glaucus, Gluck's Le rencontre imprévue and Prokofiev's The Love for Three Oranges.

NICHOLAS ANDERSON

Du Bosc, (Guillaume) Simon (b Rouen; d Geneva, 1556–7). French music printer. A Simon Du Bosc, possibly identifiable with the music printer, though called a Parisian, first printed at Alençon between 1529 and 1534. He seems to have been in Paris before that time and was also there in 1534; at the end of that year he was listed as a heretic. Guillaume Simon Du Bosc appears in Geneva, where a heretic would reasonably have gone, in 1553; in that year or the next he was joined by GUILLAUME GUÉROULT, a relative, in partnership. Between that year and 1556, when Guéroult appears to have left for Lyons, they printed at least 12 volumes of music, some of which are lost; they include collections of motets by Clemens non Papa, Crecquillon, Gombert, Goudimel, Sermisy and others, and a book of psalm settings. It has been suggested that Du Bosc was the printer, while Guéroult acted as the financial partner and, probably, music editor. Du Bosc also printed on his own account, including three volumes of motets (one by Clemens non Papa).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Lepreux: Gallia typographica, iii (Paris, 1912)
P. Chaix: Recherches sur l'imprimerie à Genève de 1550 à 1564 (Geneva, 1954)
P. Chaix, A. Dufour and G. Moechli: 'Les livres imprimés à Genève de 1550 à 1600', Genava, new ser., vii (1959), 235–394 [incl. list]
P. Pidoux: Le psautier huguenot du XVIe siècle (Basle, 1962–9)

STANLEY BOORMAN

Dubourg, Matthew (b London, 1703; d London, 3 July 1767). English violinist, composer and musical director. He was the natural son of Isaacs, a dancing-master. As a pupil of Geminiani, he soon made a name as a remarkably gifted boy violinist, first appearing at one of Thomas Britton's concerts, where, standing on a high stool, he played a solo by Corelli with great success. On 27 May 1714 he had a benefit concert at Hickford's Room. In 1724 he visited Dublin, and on 17 June 1727 married Frances Gates at Stanmore, Middlesex.

In 1728 he was appointed to succeed J.S. Kusser as Master and Composer of State Music in Ireland, a post said to have been intended for Geminiani but transferred to Dubourg for religious reasons. From then until 1752, when he succeeded Festing as leader of the King's Band in London, he spent most of his time in Dublin, where he was an active influence in the musical community, though occasionally travelling to London (he took part, for instance, in performances of Handel's Samson there in March 1743). In Dublin he played a prominent part in most of the important performances of this period, playing at the first benefit for Mercer's Hospital on 8 April 1736, supervising and leading the enlarged orchestra for the first Irish performance of Arne's Comus in August 1741, and leading the band during Handel's visit (1741–2), which included the first performance of Messiah. The high standard of string playing in Dublin, which was remarked upon by Handel in a letter to Jennens, was undoubtedly due to the influence of Dubourg and his teacher Geminiani. Dubourg subsequently organized a series of six Handel oratorios in the 1743–4 season and the first Irish performances of Samson (4 February 1748) and Judas Maccabaeus (11 February 1748). He also conducted numerous performances of Messiah and other Handel oratorios. In recognition of these efforts he received a bequest of £100 from Handel.

He appears to have been a brilliant performer and fond of showing off his skill. Burney related that on one occasion he introduced a cadenza of extraordinary length into the ritornello of an air. When at last he finished, Handel, who was conducting, exclaimed 'Welcome home, Mr Dubourg' (An Account of the Musical Performances ... in Commemoration of Handel (London, 1785), 'Sketch of the Life of Handel', p.27).

In January 1748 there was a sale of furniture and paintings at his house in Dublin, and in March he was bequeathed £200 a year by 'the Widow Barry'. In 1761 he was appointed Master of Her Majesty's Band of Music in London at £200 a year. He retained a house in Dublin, where he often entertained Geminiani, who died there in 1762. Dubourg finally left Ireland in 1765. He was buried in Paddington churchyard.

Dubourg's compositions were mainly ephemeral; those that were published are scattered through minor collections. 'Serenading Trumpet Tunes' and 'Minuets for His Majesty's Birthday' are included in collections published by Walsh of London, and John Simpson's Delightful Pocket Companion for the German Flute (*c*1746–7) contains pieces by him. Of particular interest, as one of the earliest documented examples of an Irish traditional melody which attained great popularity at 18th-century Dublin concerts, is the publication by W. Manwaring in 1746 of Select Minuets ... to which is added Eleen a Roon by Mr Dubourgh, set to the harpsichord, with his variations.

BRIAN BOYDELL

Dubreuil, Jean (b Paris, *c*1710; d Paris, 1775). French maître de clavecin. He was a student of Jacques de Bournonville and a friend of the theorist P.-J. Roussier. He is known principally for two publications: Dictionnaire lyrique portatif, ou Choix des plus jolies ariettes (Paris, 1764, 2/1766–71 with suppl.), a large collection of then current French and Italian airs, all presented with French text in one part with an occasional duo, intended primarily for use by musical amateurs and as a teaching aid; and Manuel harmonique, ou Tableau des accords pratiques (Paris, 1767), a simplified, practical handbook for learning the principles of harmony primarily at the keyboard, based upon the teachings of Rameau. Although he is known to have composed music (his choral motet Exaltabo te was performed at the Concert Spirituel in Paris in 1741), only two menuets en rondeau appended to his Manuel appear to have survived. The airs attributed to 'M. Dubreuil' in Recueil des airs sérieux et à boire de différents auteurs (Paris, 1697–1713) and in the second volume of Nouveau recueil de chansons choisies (La Haye, 1724) are apparently not by him. (BurneyH; FétisB; La BordeE; PierreH)

ALBERT COHEN

Dubrovay, László (b Budapest, 23 March 1943). Hungarian composer. He studied composition with Szelényi at the Bartók secondary school of music, then at the Liszt Academy with Szabó and Vincze (1961–6). His piano studies formed an important part of his musical development. Dubrovay taught at the Budapest Academy of Drama and Film from 1961 and was répétiteur at the Hamburg Staatsoper (during Rolf Liebermann's tenure as director) from 1971. He studied under Stockhausen in Cologne (1972–4), and in 1975 was appointed lecturer in theory at the Liszt Academy. He was a Deutscher akademischer Austauschdienst fellow in Berlin in 1985.

Dubrovay's early works, 1966–72, employ 12-note serialism. After his studies in Cologne, he began incorporating live electronics into his work and used his newly acquired knowledge of acoustics to extend conventional playing techniques of certain instruments; the result was a series of works entitled Solo. In later works his attention shifted towards forging a new musical language, partly by electronic means and partly through the inclusion of ambient sounds. His interests have extended to developing a new harmonic system, one that reverts to being centred on melody. The works Délivrance, Succession and Symphonia took prizes at competitions in Szczecin (1973), Trieste (1974) and Linz (1992) respectively, and Cry into the Night was awarded first prize at the 1997 Budapest international festival of electro-acoustic music. He has also received the Erkel (1985) and Bartók-Pásztory (1996) prizes and awards from Hungarian Radio (1986, 1995).

WORKS

(selective list)

STAGE AND ORCHESTRAL

A képfaragó [The Sculptor] (ballet, 1, J. Gál), 1992; Il ricatto (oc, 1, F. Baranyi), 1993; Faust, az elkárhozott [Faust, the Damned] (ballet, 2 parts, after J.W. von Goethe), 1995

Verificazione, 1970; Succession, 1974; Conc. no.2, fl, str, 1981; Conc. no.3, tpt, str, 1981; Conc. no.4, pf, orch, synth, 1982; Conc. no.5, pf, orch, 1984; Variations on an Oscillating Line, 1987; Vn Conc., 1991; Cimb Conc., 1994; Triple Conc., tpt, trbn, tuba, orch, 1992; Faust, az elkárhozott [Faust, the Damned], 4 suites, 1996–8 [from ballet]; Magyar szimfónia, 1997; Hangszín-szimfónia [Timbre Sym.], 1998

Symphonic band: Induló [March], 1990; Deserts, 1991; Psychographic no.2, 1992; Il ricatto, suite, 1992; Buzzing Polka, 1993; Triple Conc., tpt, trbn, tuba, 1994; Balett Szvit [Ballet Suite] 1996; Faust halála [The Death of Faust], 1996

OTHER WORKS

Chbr (incl. vocal): 5 pezzi, bn, pf, 1967; 6 duos, vn, perc, 1969; Str Qt no.1, 1970; Brass Qnt no.1, 1971; Wind Qnt no.1, 1972; Magic Square, vn, cimb, 1975; Matuziáda nos.1–5, 4 fl, 1975–6; Geometrum II (Str Qt no.2), 1976; Interferences no.1, 2 cimb, 1976; Music for 2 Cimb, 1977; Conc. no.1, 11 str, 1979; Brass Qnt no.2, 1980; Brass Septet, 3 tpt, hn, 2 trbn, tuba, 1980; Duo, 2 fl, 1982; Str Qt no.3, 1983; Wind Qnt no.2, 1983; Octet, cl, bn, hn, str qt, 1985–7; Recitativo e aria, Mez, pf/(fl, cl, hp, va, vc, perc), 1989; Valse triste et très vite, tpt, hp/pf, 1996

Solo inst: Délivrance, org, 1972; Felhangok [Harmonics], pf, 1977; Interferences no.2, pf, 1978; Solo: no.1, vn, 1979, no.2, trbn, 1982, no.3, tuba, 1983, no.4, vc, 1985, no.5, b fl, 1985, no.6, cb fl, 1985, no.7, bn, 1986, no.8, fl, 1989, no.9, cl, 1990, no.10, db, 1992, no.11, tpt, 1994, no.12, b trbn, 1996, no.13, hn, 1998; for Carillon, 1987

El-ac: Mutations, tape, 1972; Kyrie, tape, 1973; E-Trio, vn, perc, synth, 1974; Sóhaj [Sigh], tape, 1974; A2, vn, perc, pf, synth, 1975; Endless Dance, tape, 1975; Endless Movement, tape, 1975; Endless Rest, tape, 1975; Oscillations no.1, elec org, synth, 1975; Sequence, rec, synth, 1975; Oscillations no.2, vn, va, cimb, synth, 1976; Oscillations no.3, pf, synth, 1977; S.O.S., tape, 1979; Strophen, perc, synth, 1980; Suite, pf, synth, 1981; Harmonics, cptr, 1983; Parte con moto, cptr, 1984; Sonata, cptr, 1984; Symphonia, cptr, 1985; Au bord des événements, cptr, 1989; Le désire des molecules, cptr, 1989; Concertino, tape, pf, 1993; Earmusic, tpt, 3 synth, 1994; Cry into the Night, cptr, 1996

Principal publisher: Editio Musica (Budapest)
Principal recording companies: Hungaroton, TELDEC, Staalplot, AMOS

WRITINGS

'A zenei anyag fejlődése – előrehaladás a Dubrovay részhangrendszerben', Magyar zene, xxviii/4 (1987), 398–411

MELINDA BERLÁSZ

Dubrovnik (It. Ragusa). City in Croatia. Located on the Adriatic coast, it succeeded in freeing itself from Venetian domination in the 14th century and existed as an independent, aristocratic republic until 1808, when it was conquered by Napoleon. After the Napoleonic wars it was incorporated into the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and, together with the rest of Croatia, was part of Yugoslavia from 1918 to 1992. Its long independence and prosperity ensured the continuity of artistic life, which during the Renaissance was most productive in poetry and theatre. From the Middle Ages the Cathedral of St Mary and the monasteries of the Dominicans and Friars Minor were the centres of musical activity; the latter monastery has an important music library. The earliest report of the cathedral organ dates from 1384; organs in the Dominican monastery and the church of St Vlaho (Blasius) were installed early in the 15th century. Secular and ceremonial music flourished at the court of the rector, the elected head of state. The city supported a band of musicians from the 14th century.

In the 16th century the city attracted a number of musicians from France and Italy, among whom the most distinguished was Lambert Courtois, who served there as an instrumentalist and maestro di cappella between 1554 and 1570. His Madrigali a cinque (Venice, 1580) bear a dedication to three prominent Dubrovnik citizens. Lambert Courtois' descendants, Henri and Lambert the younger, were both active in Dubrovnik. Music theory and aesthetics were much discussed in learned circles in the second half of the 16th century, especially in the Accademia dei Concordi. The beginnings of opera were noticed too: in 1617 Paskoj Primović published his translation of Ottavia Rinuccini's Euridice, and in about 1620 Givo (Ivan) Gundulić translated Arianna. Junije Palmotić's Atalanta (1629) was subtitled 'Music performed by the company of Isprazni'; the score, written by Lambert Courtois the younger, has not survived. In the 18th century operas were performed by visiting Italian companies; a permanent opera company was not established. At that time the court of the rector supported two orchestras, the military Banda del Principe and Orchestra del Rettore which played indoors. For a time Luka Sorkočević, a composer and member of the nobility, supported a private orchestra. The Philharmonic Orchestra was founded in 1925 as a semi-professional body and reconstituted in 1946 as the fully professional Dubrovački Gradski Orkestar (Dubrovnik City Orchestra). Dubrovačke Ljetne Igre, the music and drama festival founded in 1950 and held annually in July and August, has acquired an international reputation. The School of Music was opened in 1946, and in 1968 the Zagreb Academy of Music opened a section of its department for string instruments in Dubrovnik.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Andreis: Music in Croatia (Zagreb, 1974)
B. Bujić: 'An Early Croat Translation of Rinuccini's Euridice', MZ, xii (1976), 16–30
M. Demović: Glazba i glazbenici u Dubrovačkoj republici od početka XI. do polovine XVII. stoljeća [Music and musicians in the Republic of Dubrovnik from the beginning of the 11th century to the mid-17th] (Zagreb, 1981; Ger. trans., 1981) [with Eng. summary]

M. Demović: Glazba i glazbenici u Dubrovačkoj republici od polovine XVII. do prvog desetljeća XIX. stoljeća [Music and musicians in the Republic of Dubrovnik from the mid-17th to the first decade of the 19th century] (Zagreb, 1989) [with Eng. summary]

M. Demović: 'Frankoflamanski glazbenici u Dubrovačkoj Republici' [Franco-Flemish musicians in the Republic of Dubrovnik], Gallus Carniolus in Evropska renesansa/Gallus Carniolus und die europäische Renaissance: Ljubljana 1991, ii, 193–204 [with Ger. summary]

I. Cavallini: I due volti di Nettuno: studi su teatro e musica a Venezia e in Dalmazia dal Cinquecento al Settecento (Lucca, 1994)

S. Tuksar: 'Musique et politique à Dubrovnik à l'époque de la Renaissance', IRASM, xxv (1994), 191–202

B. Bujić: 'Pastorale o melodramma? Le traduzioni di "Euridice" e "Arianna" per le scene di Dubrovnik', Musica e storia, vi (1998), 477–99

BOJAN BUJIĆ

Du Buisson [Dubuisson]. A name common to many French and Flemish composers, singers, organists and musicians active from the early 16th century to the late 18th century. Apart from those listed below, none of whom is known to be related, other known composers of this name include Mathurin (fl 1489–1514), known by one chanson (in RISM 1504[3], possibly by Mathurin Forestier), René (b 1703) and Gabriel (fl 1724), both known by airs published in French anthologies (1724–6). A Gabriel Dubuisson, ordinaire de la musique to Louis XIV, was paid in 1688 for an unspecified role in the Ballet de Flore danced at Versailles and as a veteran 'for his former services to the king's music' in 1717. A Joseph Heron, also known as Du Buisson, is listed as musician in ordinary to Louis XV in 1730. Other musicians of this name held various church and court posts, mainly in Paris and Geneva.

(1) Jacques Du Buisson [Du Buysson] (fl Paris, 1550–70). French organist and composer. He served in the chambre du roi between 1550 and 1562, under Henri II, François II and Charles IX. 11 chansons for four voices published in Paris are ascribed to 'Du Buisson' or 'Buysson' (RISM 1552[4], 1553[20], 1554[20], 1554[21], 1557[9], 1557[12], 1559[10], 1560[3a], 1569[13]). All the texts are amorous epigrams of little literary quality, typical of the pre-Pléiade generation. The musical style is generally homophonic with occasional hints of imitation and brief melismas at cadential points; as in other mid-16th-century chansons duple metre predominates, but a few pieces include brief passages in contrasting triple metre. Two three-voice chansons (1578[15]) use popular anecdotal texts set contrapuntally to music familiar from earlier settings. (Three of Du Buisson's chansons are ed. in SCC, ix, 1994.)

(2) Dubuisson [Du Buisson, Doubisson, Dubisson; Laquement, Jean] (b Picardie, 1622/3; d Paris 1680/81). French composer, viol player and teacher. Over 110 compositions for unaccompanied bass viol in French, English, Dutch and German manuscripts attest to his wide popularity among viol players. The harpsichordist Jacques Hardel was godfather to his son born in 1663. A manuscript dated September 1666 (in US-Wc) gives his Paris address on rue St Germain near Fort l'Eveque, stating that he could also be found at the luthier shop of Michel Colichon, which was frequented by Machy, Jean Rousseau and other violistes of the period. In 1680 the Mercure galant reported that Dubuisson took part in a concert of music for three bass viols, the first of its kind in France. In the same year Le Gallois included him in a list of Parisian viol virtuosos (together with Sainte-Colombe and Marais). Rousseau criticized in 1688 'the playing of the late old Du Buisson', but Machy preferred it to that of Sainte-Colombe.

The manuscript from 1666, containing four suites and two pieces in tablature, is the earliest dated French solo viol music and includes a brief set of instructions for bowing and fingering. Another source, dated 1674 and with the initials 'I.B.R.' (in F-Pn), contains over 260 English, French, German and Dutch pieces for lyra viol; those by Dubuisson and his compatriot Nicolas Hotman are in standard bass viol tuning. One of the largest manuscript sources of French viol music (in PL-Wtm), whose repertory probably dates from the 1650s and 60s, contains 101 movements attributed to Dubuisson, most of which are unica. An arrangement for baryton of a set of five viol pieces (in D-Kl) was made by an anonymous German player in 1670.

In Dubuisson's music, especially the allemandes, courantes and sarabandes, lute-influenced polyphonic texture (jeu d'harmonie) is prevalent, sometimes coupled with a sophisticated sense of counterpoint. Opening movements (préludes and fantaisies) are frequently sectionalized and retain the quasi-improvisatory character associated with early examples of the genres. Some of his suites may have been appreciated as such by contemporaries, since a few of the allemande–courante–sarabande groups appear together in more than one manuscript.

WORKS

29 préludes and fantaisies, 22 allemandes, 25 courantes, 17 sarabandes, 11 gigues, 5 ballets, 1 bourrée, 2 gavottes, 2 arias, all b viol, A-ETgoëss, D-Kl, F-Pn, GB-DRc, PL-Wtm, US-Wc

(3) R. du Buisson (fl 2nd half of the 17th century). Composer and musician. Although his first name is not recorded, it is known that Du Buisson served as an ordinaire de la musique du roi during the reign of Louis XIV. A cantata, four motets and two instrumental pieces are attributed to him in manuscripts copied by Philidor and others dating from the late 17th century. Du Buisson's cantata, Le triomphe de la paix, scored for voices alone, is his most substantial surviving composition. It was copied for the convent of Saint Cyr and was bound with the coat of arms of Mme de Maintenon. In both musical style and subject matter, it typifies the late 17th-century French cantata.

WORKS

Le triomphe de la paix, cant. in Grandes cantates, F-V, and Chants de la louange de Roi, Pc

Exaltabo te, Confitebor tibi Domine, SSB, 2 vn, bc, in Motets de MM. Lalande, Mathau, Marchand l'aisné, Couprin [sic] et Dubuisson recueillis par Philidor l'aisné fait à Versailles en 1697, V

Diligam te Domine fortitudo mea, motet en simphonie, 1v, [bc], Pn

Non nobis, Domine, motet 'chanté devant le Roy', 1v, Pc

Doubtful: 2 Pièces de simphonie, in Recueil de plusieurs belles pieces de simphonie copiées, choisies, et mises en ordre par Philidor l'aisné, 1695, Pc vivant. The date of his death is appropriately established by a drinking-song commemorating it which was published in May 1710. He may have been the 'Dubuisson' who was the author of a lament on the death of Michel Lambert, O mort, affreuse mort (1696).

(4) Du Buisson (d 1710). Composer. The only glimpse of his life is afforded by Titon du Tillet, who described him as a contemporary of Michel Lambert and a celebrated tippler ('fameux buveur') who 'willingly gave lessons in music and feasting for visitors to Paris, especially Germans'. Not surprisingly his musical output consists almost entirely of drinking-songs, which found an appreciative audience in their day. Their texts sometimes depict Du Buisson himself as a kind of personification of the bon

WORKS

7 books of Airs sérieux et à boire, 2, 3vv (Paris, 1686–92)
9 books of Airs sérieux et à boire (Paris, 1694–6)
L'on vous dit tous les ans, air, in Mercure galant (Paris, April 1678)
Airs in 1692[5], 1692[6], 1692[7], 1693[3], 1697[2], 1697[5], 1699[2], 1700[2], Recueils d'airs sérieux et à boire (Paris, 1701–2), Recueils d'airs sérieux et à boire (Paris, 1704–10)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BenoitMC; EitnerQ; FétisB; KöchelKHM
E. Titon du Tillet: Description du Parnasse françois (Paris, 1727)
C. Bouvet: Musiciens oubliés, musique retrouvée (Paris, 1834)
C. Bouvet: 'A propos de quelques organistes de l'église Saint-Gervais avant les Couperin: les De Buisson', RdM, iv (1930), 241–59
C.W. Hughes: 'The Music for Unaccompanied Bass Viol', ML, xxv (1944), 149–63
F. Lesure and G. Thibault: 'Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiées par Nicolas Du Chemin', AnnM, i (1953), 269–373
F. Lesure: 'Une querelle sur le jeu de la viole en 1688: Jean Rousseau contre Demachy', RdM, xlvi (1960), 181–99
H. Bol: La basse de viole du temps de Marin Marais et d'Antoine Forqueray (Bilthoven, 1973)
G. Dodd and F.-P. Goy: Thematic Index of Music for Viols (London, 1980)
S.G. Cheney: 'A Summary of Dubuisson's Life and Sources', Journal of the Viola da Gamba Society of America, xxvii (1990), 7–21

FRANK DOBBINS (1), STUART CHENEY (2), DONALD B. CHAE (3), DAVID TUNLEY (4)

Dubuque [Dyubyuk], Aleksandr Ivanovich (b Moscow, 20 Feb/3 March 1812; d Moscow, 27 Dec 1897/8 Jan 1898). Russian pianist and teacher, probably of French descent. He was a pupil of John Field. Among his own distinguished piano pupils were Balakirev, the critics Kashkin and Laroche, and Nikolay Zverev (teacher of Rachmaninoff, Skryabin and Ziloti). An intellectually controlled, poised and precise style (even for the interpretation of virtuoso pieces) is particularly associated with the Field-Dubuque Moscow tradition. Dubuque published a book on the technique of piano playing, Tekhnika fortepiannoy igrï (Moscow, 1866), and also taught at the Moscow Conservatory (1866–72). Balakirev and Tchaikovsky dedicated piano pieces to him, and Balakirev persuaded him to write his 'Vospominaniya o Fil'de' ('Reminiscences of Field'), published first in Knizhki nedeli (December 1898) and reprinted in the Russkaya muzïkal'naya gazeta (1916, nos.34, 35, 38, 39) under the title 'Iz vospominaniy o muzïkal'noy zhizni staroy Moskvï' ('From reminiscences of musical life in old Moscow'). His most important musical publication was 130 russkikh narodnïkh pesen ('130 Russian folksongs', Moscow, *c*1855, 2/1865). He also composed some songs and piano pieces, including Album pour les enfants (Moscow, 1866), 3 études dans le style fugue opp.95–7 (Moscow, n.d.) and a capriccio Le rossignol d'Alabieff (Prague, n.d.).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B.V. Asaf'yev: 'Pesni-romansï A.I. Dyubyuka' [Dubuque's songs], Yevgeny Onegin (Moscow and Leningrad, 1944, 85–9; Ger. summary in Tschaikowskys 'Eugen Onegin' (Potsdam, 1949), 140–41
P. Piggott: The Life and Music of John Field (1782–1837): Creator of the Nocturne (London, 1973) [contains quotations from Dubuque's reminiscences of Field]

EDWARD GARDEN

Du Bus, Gervais [Gervès]. French notary. He was active at the royal chancery in about 1313 and was the author of the ROMAN DE FAUVEL.

Dubut. French musicians and instrument makers bearing this name were active in Paris throughout the 17th century. The most important are Pierre Dubut le père (*b c*1610; d before 1681) and Pierre Dubut le fils (b ?after 1642; *d c*1700), both lutenists and composers. The first definite appearance of Dubut le père is in Pierre Ballard's Tablature de luth de differents autheurs (Paris, 1638), to which he contributed five pieces. He is described as master lutenist in documents from 1642 (when he married Marie Prévost, daughter of Pierre Prévost, a lute maker and player) to 1673 (in the marriage contract of his son Dubut le fils). In 1654–5 he instructed Sir John Reresby in lute playing at Blois and Saumur. He had died by 1680, when he is referred to in the past tense by le Gallois.

Dubut le fils had by 1666 moved to Grenoble, then a centre of patronage of the arts, and was still there in 1681, when he was described as master lutenist. By 1692 he was resident in Paris, and in 1695 the register for a newly introduced poll tax reveals him as a prosperous symphoniste de première classe and teacher along with Robert de Visée and Jacques or Pierre Gallot.

Both Dubuts were equally celebrated. Various writers list them among the most prominent lutenists of their respective generations and their works are widely diffused in manuscript sources throughout northern Europe (see Goy, Meyer and Rollin). They are of notably high quality, though it is not easy to differentiate the work of father and son, since copyists were rarely careful about attributions and all but four of 138 pieces in the incomplete modern edition (ed. M. Rollin and J.-M. Vaccaro, Paris, 1979) are in D minor tuning.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Burwell Lute Tutor (MS, *c*1670, GB-NWhamond), ff.5*v*, 17*v*, 68*v*; facs. (Leeds, 1974)
J. le Gallois: Lettre de M[r] le Gallois a Mademoiselle Regnault de Solier touchant la musique (Paris, 1680), 62
J.-M. Vaccaro: 'Une courante célèbre de Dubut le père: Une étude de concordances', Le luth et sa musique II: Tours 1980, 229–52
T. Crawford: review of Oeuvres des Dubut, The Lute, xxiii (1983), 29–32
P. van Reijen: 'Lute Tablature 205-B-32 in the Toonkunst Library, Amsterdam', The Lute, xxiii (1983), 3–13
F.-P. Goy, C. Meyer and M. Rollin, eds.: Sources manuscrites en tablature (Baden-Baden, 1991–) [catalogue]

DAVID LEDBETTER

Du Buysson. See DU BUISSON, (1).

Duc, Filippo [Filippo de, Philippe de] [Le Duc, Philippe] (b Flanders, *c*1550; d after 1586). Flemish composer, active in Italy. It is not known when he arrived in Italy, but he appears to have spent much of his life there, probably at Padua, for in 1570 he dedicated his first book of four-part madrigals to the Flemish students there, speaking warmly both of them and of Padua. He dedicated his madrigals of 1586 to Johann Jacob and Karl Kisl of Graz, sons of the treasurer to the Austrian Archduke Karl. This dedication is by no means the only evidence that Duc had connections with the Habsburgs for in 1568 ten of his motets were included in the first four volumes of the Novi thesauri musici, an anthology of motets dedicated to the Emperor Maximilian II, and in 1577 the registers of the imperial chapel record that he was paid 25 gulden for two masses written in honour of Maximilian. In addition some of his sacred works are found in Austrian manuscripts. His secular works include examples of the typically light music popular with university students. The overtones of parody in the mixture of languages of Sequamini et socij, a hymn to Bacchus, and in the quotation of street songs in the serenata L'aria s'oscura are heightened by the rapid declamation and the pseudo-dramatic alternation of voices. In this respect Duc's approach was similar to that of Alessandro Striggio (i), whose setting of L'aria s'oscura he surely knew, and of Orazio Vecchi.

WORKS

Il primo libro de madrigali, con una serenata et un dialogo, 4, 8vv (Venice, 1570)
Le vergini, libro primo, con un dialogo, 6, 8vv (Venice, 1574)
Il primo libro de madrigali, 5, 6vv (Venice, 1586)
Works in 1568[2], 1568[3], 1568[4], 1568[5], 1590[20]
Mass 'Io son ferito', 5vv; 2 motets: A-Wn; 1 motet, 6vv, D-Mbs; 4 motets, PL-WRu

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EinsteinIM
A. Smijers: 'Die kaiserliche Hofmusik-Kapelle von 1543–1619', SMw, vii (1920), 102–42, esp. 132

PATRICIA ANN MYERS

Duçaina (Sp.). See DOLZAINA.

Du Camp Guillebert, Pierre. See D'AUXERRE, PIERRE.

Du Cange, Charles (Dufresne), Sieur (b Amiens, 18 Dec 1610; d Paris, 23 Oct 1688). French historian, philologist and lexicographer. He was one of a celebrated group of learned 17th-century French scholars who founded modern historical and linguistic criticism. He was a student of law in Orléans and practised at the parliament in Paris from 1631 before returning to Amiens, where he was appointed treasurer in 1645. He left in 1668 for Paris, where he produced his major works: Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (Paris, 1678; many subsequent edns, of which that by L. Favre, Paris, 1883–7/R, is current) and Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae graecitatis (Lyons, 1688/R). The first of these is of particular importance to students of medieval music for the large number of musical terms and instruments it describes, derived largely from primary sources.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBF (R. d'Amat); FétisBS [incl. list of musical terms found in the Latin glossary]
L. Feugère: Etude sur la vie et les ouvrages de Du Cange (Paris, 1852/R)
G. Matoré: 'Du Cange', Dictionnaire du grand siècle, ed. F. Bluche (Paris, 1990)

ALBERT COHEN

Ducasse, Jean Roger. See ROGER-DUCASSE, JEAN.

Du Caurroy, Eustache (b ?Gerberoy, bap. 4 Feb 1549; d Paris, 7 Aug 1609). French composer. According to La Borde, Du Caurroy was born in Gerberoy; he was baptized in Beauvais. An epitaph written by the cardinal Jacques Davy du Perron, and engraved on the monument that his pupil and successor, Nicolas Formé, had erected, suggests that he had served the royal court during the reign of Charles IX (d 1574), but the first clear evidence of his attachment to that household comes in 1575, when he was noted as a singer in the royal chapel in documents prepared for the Puy d'Evreux, the annual musical competition attended by members of elite establishments. (In that year he took a prize for French song, for a motet in 1576 and for another chanson in 1583; see E.C. Teviotdale, CMc, lii, 1993, pp.7–26.) Until 1595 Du Caurroy held the post of sous-maître de la chapelle royale, but was promoted to the rank of composer to the royal chamber. In 1599 he obtained the same post in the royal chapel. His Missa pro defunctis, composed in *c*1590, was performed *c*1590 at the funeral of Henry IV; this long work remained the official requiem to be sung at the funerals of kings of France. At the end of the 16th century and the beginning of the 17th, Du Caurroy gained wide recognition and was highly esteemed, and towards the end of his life accumulated several honours and benefices. He became canon of the Sainte-Chapelle in Dijon and of Sainte-Croix in Orleans, Prior of St Ayoul de Provins (where some of his relatives held similar positions), of Passy and of St Cyr in Bourg; he also owned a large agricultural estate in Picardy. After his death he was often praised and cited: Caus (1615), Mersenne (1636), Parran (1639) and Du Cousu (1658) proposed in their treatises several examples taken from his work. Mersenne said of him, 'Du Caurroy reigns supreme for the great harmoniousness of his composition and his rich counterpoint ... all the composers of France hold him to be their master', and in 1645 Du Peyrat, in his Antiquitez et recherche de la chapelle et oratoire du roy, called Du Caurroy 'one of Europe's great musicians'.

Although a few of his works appeared during his lifetime in publications of Le Roy & Ballard and Phalèse, the bulk of his production – secular, sacred and instrumental alike – did not appear until just after his death. The composer himself apparently planned for this posthumous publication, entering into a contract with Pierre Ballard during the last months of his life that provided for supervision of the enterprise by his nephew, André Pitard.

Du Caurroy studied the works and writings of Josquin, Willaert and Zarlino, and in the preface to the first volume of his Preces ecclesiasticae declared that he had learned his trade 'by reading good authors and imitating the ancients'. Of a somewhat conservative disposition, he was primarily interested in rigorous contrapuntal techniques, and sometimes sacrificed spontaneity for theoretical perfection. Nevertheless, his music often has a spaciousness and lyrical quality that is not without charm. Some of his works, such as his Christus vincit, the four Te Deums (published in the Preces ecclesiasticae) or his Prince, La France te veutpar ces vers sacrer un autel (published in the Meslanges) seem to have been written for particular occasions. In several pieces from the Meslanges as well as from the Preces ecclesiasticae he displayed particular interest in musique mesurée à l'antique according to the principles laid down by Antoine de Baïf and put into practice by Claude Le Jeune in his pseaumes en vers mesurez. Du Caurroy's concern with mathematics is reflected in his 'abstract' musical compositions, the instrumental fantasias, which are based throughout on either sacred or secular cantus firmi. These works are his most original contribution to the repertory of 'pure' music; it has been claimed that the keyboard transcriptions provided the foundation of the French school of organ music which first became known through the works of Titelouze.

For an illustration from Du Caurroy's Fantasies, see SOURCES OF INSTRUMENTAL ENSEMBLE MUSIC TO 1630, fig.2.

WORKS

Preces ecclesiasticae, 3–7vv, 2 vols. (Paris, 1609); contains 53 motets, ed. M.-A. Colin (Paris, 1999)

Meslanges de la musique, 4–6vv (Paris, 1610); contains 10 psalms, 35 chansons, 15 Noëls; ed. in MMRF, xvii (1903/R)
Fantasies, 3–6 insts (Paris, 1610); contains 42 inst pieces, ed. B. Pidoux, Gesamtausgaben, ix/1 (New York, 1975)
Missa pro defunctis, 5vv (Paris, 1636); ed. M. Sanvoisin (Paris, 1983)
Pie Jesu Domine, canon 6vv, in MersenneHU, vii (Paris, 1636)
2 chansons, 4, 5vv, 1583[7]; 1, 4vv, 1583[8]; 1, 4vv 1597[10]
3 masses, 4vv, lost; cited in MersenneHU

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AnthonyFB; La BordeE
F. Lesure and D.P. Walker: 'Claude Le Jeune and musique mesurée', MD, iii (1949), 151–70
K.J. Levy: '"Suzanne un jour": the History of a 16th Century Chanson', AnnM, i (1953), 375–408
J. Bonfils: 'Les fantaisies instrumentales d'E. Du Caurroy', RMFC, ii (1961–2), 5–29
M. Huglo: 'A propos du Requiem de Du Caurroy', RdM, li (1965), 201–6
B. Schwendowius: Die solistische Gambenmusik in Frankreich von 1650 bis 1740 (Regensburg, 1970)
M. Sicard: 'The French Viol School before 1650', JVdGSA, xviii (1981), 76–93
N. Dufourcq: 'François-Eustache Du Caurroy (1549–1609) et son entourage familial et professionel', RMFC, xxi (1983), 9–40
E.C. Teviotdale: 'The invitation to the Puy d'Evreux', CMc, no.52 (1993), 7–26
L. Guillo: Bibliographie des éditions de Pierre et Robert Ballard III (1598–1673) (Paris, 1999)

PAUL-ANDRÉ GAILLARD/RICHARD FREEDMAN (with M.-A. COLLIN)

Duch, Benedictus. See DUCIS, BENEDICTUS.

Duchambge [Du Chambge; née du Montet], (Charlotte-Antoinette-)Pauline (b Martinique, 1778; d Paris, 23 April 1858). French composer. The daughter of a noble family, she was taken to Paris, where she received a convent education and studied the piano with Jean-Baptiste Desormery. She left the convent in 1792 and married the Baron Philibert Duchambge four years later. In 1798, at the age of 20, she lost both her parents and the family fortune, and she was divorced soon afterwards. It was after these crises that Duchambge's musical education began in earnest. She studied with Jan Ladislav Dussek, Cherubini and Auber, with whom she had a close relationship. She met the poet Marceline Desbordes-Valmore (1786–1859) in about 1815; their lifelong friendship is documented by a lengthy correspondence and a number of songs on Desbordes-Valmore's texts. Through her Duchambge met the leading French poets of her day, including Chateaubriand, Lamartine and Vigny, who wrote texts for her. Duchambge also set texts of other women writers such as Mme Amable Tastu and Mme Emile de Girardin.

Duchambge composed about 400 drawing-room style romances, most of which were published between 1816 and 1840. That they were well received is evident from the favourable reviews and the many texts written specifically for her. The songs are straightforward, diatonic and typically in strophic form without separate refrains. She also composed two sets of piano pieces.

WORKS
(selective list)

all printed works published in Paris

SONGS

Le comte Roger (V. Hugo), ballade (1819); A mon ange gardien (*c*1825); Le couvre-feu (F. de Courcy), ballade (*c*1825); La romance de l'Abencérage (F.R. de Chateaubriand) (1828); La blanche maison (Je sais sur la colline) (A. de Lamartine) (?1830); Le bouquet de bal (Vous partez) (E. Scribe) (?1830); La fiancée du marin (Tristesse amère) (M. Desbordes-Valmore), romance (?1830); Je suis seul (Je vois le clocher) (de Custine) (?1830); Jeannette (Quand la violette) (E. Barateau) (?1830); La pauvre vieille pleura (Barateau) (*c*1830); Le pêcheur (Quand vient la nuit) (J. de Rességuier) (?1830)
Qu'elle est jolie (Grands dieux) (P.J. de Béranger), chansonnette (?1830); Le retour en Bretagne (E. Souvestre) (?1830); Barcarolle tirée d'Angelo (Hugo) (1835); Le bateau (A. de Vigny) (1835); A demain (Quittons la solitaire allée) (A. van Hasselt) (?1835); Francine (Barateau), ballade (?1835); La jeune châtelaine (Je vous défends) (Desbordes-Valmore) (?1835); Le pêcheur de Sorrente (Sorrente, doux rivage) (D. Gay) (?1835); Penses-tu que ce soit t'aimer (Trouver dans mes songes) (Souvestre), romance (?1835); Qu'elle est triste (Voyez la jeune fille) (Barateau) (?1835); Le rêve du mousse (L'air était froid) (Desbordes-Valmore) (?1835)
La soeur de Charité (Voici la paisible demeure), romance (A. Bétourné) (?1835); La valse et l'automne (L'harmonie et les fleurs) (Desbordes-Valmore) (?1835); Les chanteurs italiens (C'est la Toscane) (E. Deschamps), duet (?1840); L'adieu tout bas (Desbordes-Valmore); Les cloches du couvent (M. Tastu); Le départ du navire (A. Dumas) (n.d.); Le meunière et son seigneur (J.W. von Goethe) (n.d.); Je pense à lui (Desbordes-Valmore); La sincère (Desbordes-Valmore); *c*370 other songs

OTHER WORKS

Chant sacré (A. de Vigny), 3vv, pf (n.d.)
Pf: 3 études et un caprice (n.d.); 2 thèmes variés (n.d.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CohenE; FétisB; MGG1 (R. Girardon); RiemannL
'La blanche maison', Revue musicale (26 June 1830)
'La veille de Noël', Revue musicale (5 Jan 1833)
P. Hédouin: 'Mme Pauline Duchambge', Le ménestrel (June–July 1858)
J.A.B. Boyer d'Agen: M. Desbordes-Valmore: Lettres de Marceline Desbordes à Prosper Valmore (Paris, 1924), ii, 267–325
J. Boulenger: Marceline Desbordes-Valmore: sa vie et son secret (Paris, 1926), esp. 213–26, 327–43

JUDY S. TSOU

Duché de Vancy, Joseph-François (b Paris, 29 Oct 1668; d Paris, 14 Dec 1704). French librettist, essayist and author of sacred tragedies. As a young man he was appointed a valet de chambre du roi, which gave him good connections. After enjoying the protection of the Maréchal de Noailles, he came to the attention of Mme de Maintenon, who appointed him to her school for girls at Saint-Cyr. The setting of his Iphigenie en Tauride was completed by André Campra in 1704 after Desmarets had been obliged to flee the country; Danchet wrote a new prologue, Duché by then having renounced the theatre. Although the opera was eventually successful, the quality of the libretto is mediocre, and it does not bear comparison with Guillard's much more celebrated version for Gluck. The melodramatic Scylla (set by Theobaldo di Gatti, 1701) should be considered Duché's best work. Duché wrote his three sacred tragedies, Jonathas, Absalon and Debora, for Mme de Maintenon's school, but only Jonathas was staged, with incidental music by Moreau; the first performance took place in Mme de Maintenon's chambers, and Louis XIV attended.

CAROLINE WOOD

Du Chemin [Chemyn], Nicolas (b Sens, *c*1515; d Paris, 1576). French music printer. He was active in Paris between 1549 and 1568 and occupied an important position between Attaingnant, whose last music book under his own name was issued in 1550, and Le Roy & Ballard, who began a long career as royal printers of music in 1551.

Described as a bookseller in a document dated November 1540, Du Chemin issued his first printed book in 1541. In 1543 he moved his shop to the rue St-Jacques-de-Latran under the sign of the silver Griffin, the address from which he issued music as well as many books on medicine, grammar, arithmetic, law and Latin literature to the end of his career. In November 1545 he married Catherine Delahaye, ward of the printer Poncet le Preux, who was Attaingnant's brother-in-law – a circumstance that undoubtedly helped turn his attention towards music printing. Although the inclusion of some music types in a 17th century inventory compiled by Guillaume Le Bé suggests that Du Chemin was himself an engraver, he purchased punches and matrices for music from PIERRE HAULTIN on 19 February 1547 and on 7 November 1548 received a royal privilege 'to print all new music that has not been printed before' for a period of six years from the date of his first publication. His first collection, a set of quarto partbooks containing 28 psalms translated into French by Marot with the Genevan tunes set for four voices by Janequin, appeared in 1549. The royal privilege, renewed in 1555 for ten years and again in 1566 for a further six, referred to masses, motets, Magnificat settings, hymns, chansons and dances, as well as tablatures for organ (later spinet), lute and guitar.

Du Chemin engaged musicians to supply the expertise he lacked for editing music. In a contract dated 1 October 1548 he asked NICOLE REGNES to sell him four collections of his compositions, to be issued 'in the manner and size of those which Pierre Attaingnant has printed'; to teach him 'the art of music and ... to sing and hold his part'; and to 'review and correct well and devotedly ... the other books of music which said du Chemyn wants to print or have printed for him'. For this Regnes was to receive a monthly salary as well as room and board. These compositions were never published, but Regnes remained as editor until 1551 when Du Chemin sought similar assistance from CLAUDE GOUDIMEL, who was still a student at the university. From the title-pages of four retrospective chanson collections we know that LOYS BISSON acted in the same capacity between 1561 and 1568; Henry Chandor, a choirmaster from Grenoble, is named as editor of Du Chemin's last collection, a book of sonnets by Ronsard set to four-voice music by Guillaume Boni.

Regnes helped to launch the music printing activity with a series of new four-voice chansons by Janequin, Crecquillon, Clemens non Papa, Maillard, P. de Villiers and various young composers including Claude Martin, Du Tertre, Le Gendre, Guilliaud, Gervaise and Goudimel. Under Goudimel's editorship the firm achieved considerable success. As well as continuing the new series it turned to older chansons, publishing a series of 'Recueils' in 1551. In the following year Du Chemin printed the musical supplement of sonnets and odes for four voices composed by Janequin, Certon, Goudimel and Muret for Ambroise de la Porte's edition of Ronsard's Amours as well as Goudimel's first mass. In 1553 Goudimel's name appeared on the title-pages as editor of a 'Thesaurus' of old four- and six-voice motets by Josquin, Mouton, Richafort and Verdelot and eight new Magnificat settings by himself, Pierre Colin and Guilliaud. Between 1554 and 1559 came a succession of folio choirbooks containing four-voice (mostly 'imitation') masses by composers such as Certon, Colin, Gombert, Janequin, Sermisy and Mathieu Sohier, as well as three theoretical treatises in French by Guilliaud, Martin and Menehou, three books of 'inventions musicales' including all the descriptive chansons of Janequin, a book of fantasias and song arrangements for lute by Julien Belin (1556) and three books of Danseries by the Parisian hautboy player Jean D'Estrée (1559). Although the four books of motets, masses and penitential psalms by Colin, plus the fourth book of D'Estrée's Danceries (1564), the 15th and 16th book of new chansons and a large choirbook of masses and motets by Guerrero all appeared between 1560 and 1567, Du Chemin's production now fell below that of the rival Parisian music publishing firm of Le Roy & Ballard. (However, the present picture may be incomplete, since a book of two-voice parody chansons composed by Bisson and at least four Recueils of old four-voice chansons edited by him have been lost.) In 1568 Du Chemin continued his series of 'imitation' mass settings with new works by Certon, Marle and Sermisy and reissues of many of the earlier books in two large volumes (see illustration), along with psalms by Marot set for three voices by Michel Ferrier and a reprint of a book of chansons spirituelles by Guillaume Guéroult set for four voices by Didier Lupi Second from Lyons. In 1570 Du Chemin used the new title 'Meslanges' for a vast collection of six partbooks containing 100 chansons, canticles and canons by Certon, the elderly and revered choirmaster of the Ste Chapelle and composer to Charles IX. But after this triumph he published no further music until 1576, when he introduced a collection of sonnets by Ronsard set for four voices by Boni from Toulouse and edited by Chandor. By September 1576 the printer had died and Boni applied to the rival

MISSARVM
MVSICALIVM, CERta vocum varietate, secundum varios quos referunt modulos & cantiones distinctarum, LIBER SECVNDVS, EX DIVERsis, ijsdemque peritissimis auctoribus collectus.

Missa.	Vidi speciosam. 5.	Vocibus distincta Auctore.	Val. Sohier.
	Pro Mortuis. 5.		Bonnefond.
	Alma redemptoris. 4.		Cadeac.
	Ie suis des-heritée. 4.		Guyon.
	Quo abijt dilectus. 4.		Manchicourt.
	De beata Maria. 4.		P. Cler'eau.
	Ie suis des-heritée. 4.		Gombert.
	Si bona suscepimus. 4.		Do. Finot.
	Ie n'en puis plus. 4.		Daulphin.
	O gente brunette. 4.		De Marle.

PARISIIS,
Ex typographia Nicolai du Chemin, sub insigni Gryphonis argentei, via ad D. Ioannem Lateranensem.
M.D.LXVIII.
Cum priuilegio Regis.

Title-page of 'Missarum musicalium ... liber secundus' (Paris: Du Chemin, 1568) firm of Le Roy & Ballard to correct Chandor's edition and to publish a new one. The publisher's premises, privileges and typographic material seem to have passed to Leon Cavellat who used them to print the Premier livre d'airs et chansons by the royal organist Nicolas de La Grotte in 1583.

The approximately 100 surviving music books contain 693 secular songs, 178 psalms and chansons spirituelles, 73 motets and 41 masses. Their typography and layout are of the highest quality, indeed generally superior to that of either Attaingnant or Le Roy & Ballard.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (F. Lesure)
P.-S. Fournier: Traité historique et critique sur l'origine et les progrès des caractères de fonte pour l'impression de la musique (Berne, 1765/R)
R. de Juvigny, ed.: Les bibliothèques françoises de La Croix du Maine et de Du Verdier, iv (Paris, 1773), 437–8
P. Renouard: Imprimeurs parisiens ... jusqu'à la fin du XVIe siècle (Paris, 1898, rev. 1965 as Répertoire des imprimeurs parisiens)
F. Lesure and G. Thibault: 'Bibliographie des éditions musicales publiées par Nicolas du Chemin (1549–1576)', AnnM, i (1953), 269–373; suppls., iv (1956), 251–3, vi (1958–63), 403–6
J.H. Alexander: Nicolas du Chemin's Moduli undecim festorum of 1554 (diss., Union Theological Seminary, New York, 1967)
D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969), 164–5

SAMUEL F. POGUE/FRANK DOBBINS

Ducis [Duch, Dux, Herzog], Benedictus (b nr Konstanz, *c*1492; d Schalckstetten, nr Ulm, 1544). German composer and Protestant pastor. He has historically been confused with two other musicians: BENEDICTUS APPENZELLER and BENEDICTUS DE OPITIIS. Appenzeller has long been known to be a different person, and is now considered the composer of nearly all the music attributed simply to 'Benedictus' without surname. But until recently it was possible to regard Ducis and Opitiis as the same man, as Opitiis disappeared from the records in 1522 and Ducis was first recorded 10 years later. Now, however, a little more is known about Ducis's early life, and he is clearly distinct from Opitiis as well as Appenzeller.

Ducis's birth near Konstanz was mentioned in a letter of 12 June 1532 from Martin Frecht, a pastor in Ulm where Ducis had recently sought a pastorate without success, to Ambrosius Blauer. In another letter Frecht stated that Ducis had lived with Simon Grynäus in Austria and Styria, and that Grynäus had said that Ducis was a close acquaintance of the great humanist Joachim Vadian. This had suggested his presence in Vienna during the second decade of the 16th century; now the matriculation records of Vienna University show that Ducis was there even earlier than this. 'Benedictus Ducis de Constancia 5 augusti p[auperus]' is entered for the winter semester of 1507 as a member of the Rhenish Nation. It is probable that Ducis had received a choirboy's education in Konstanz and progressed thence to study in Vienna. It was customary for Konstanz choirboys to go on to university at the age of 15, which would mean Ducis was born about 1492.

It seems certain that during Ducis's time in Austria he would have come into contact with the imperial chapel of Maximilian I (among whose members were Hofhaimer, Isaac and Senfl, with all of whom Vadian was on terms of friendship), but there is no evidence that Ducis was a member of the chapel. He is next heard of as applicant for a pastorate in Ulm on 22 March 1532. After a short trial period he was rejected. He visited Grynäus in Basel in August, then succeeded in obtaining a position at Stubersheim near Geislingen in 1533. In 1535 he became preacher in Schalkstetten, where it is reported that 'he lacks nothing of the preacher in his teaching and conduct, although he beats his wife somewhat', and it was also observed that 'he permits himself a little too much fondness for wine' (Spitta). In 1539 Ducis complained that he could hardly afford to continue in the office, not least because he had to provide for his predecessor's children. In these records there is no mention of any musical activity, although the correspondence of his friends in the 1540s indicates that Ducis was exchanging compositions with Sixt Dietrich, at that time working in Konstanz, and thus was still composing. Ducis fell ill in the autumn of 1544 and probably died the same year, for at the beginning of 1545 his friends were already considering selling some of his compositions in order to support his widow (Spitta).

In the discantus partbook of a collection of lieder from Maximilian's court (CH-Bu F.X.1–4) the song Ellend pringt pin bears the ascription 'Benedictus ducis 1511', which indicates that Ducis was already composing in his teens. His main creative period must have been in the 1520s and early 1530s. Apart from a number of secular German songs, Ducis mainly wrote sacred music in a number of genres, ranging from Latin mass proper cycles and Protestant chorale settings, German and Latin psalm settings and mass ordinary compositions, to works for special occasions such as funeral odes. A considerable number of his pieces appeared in the well-known collections of Petreius, Rhau and others, testifying to the esteem in which Ducis was held by his contemporaries.

The inventory of the music books of the Count Palatine Ottheinrich at Neuburg on the Danube, dated 1544 (D-HEu Pal.Germ.318, ed. in Lambrecht), lists a great number of works by Ducis. These are nearly all lost, except for those in a lone survivor from Ottheinrich's collection (D-Rs 2° Liturg.18). The pieces there labelled 'Historia' are cycles of mass proper settings. Of the lost works, the 'Missa BMV' may well be the mass preserved in the Klosterneuburg manuscript (A-KN 70).

In view of the great variety of genres to which he contributed, Ducis's style can hardly be summarized briefly. In most respects his works are comparable with those of his contemporaries working in southern Germany (Senfl, Dietrich, Finck), but not with those of Josquin, whose student he is sometimes said to have been. He occupies a worthy place in the second rank of German masters at the time of the Reformation.

WORKS

Editions: Symphoniae jucundae, ed. H. Albrecht, Georg Rhau: Musikdrucke aus den Jahren 1538 bis 1545, iii (Kassel and Concordia, MO, 1959) [A]
Georg Forster: Frische teutsche Liedlein, ed. K. Gudewill, EDM, 1st ser., xx (1964) [G]
Neue deutsche geistliche Gesänge, ed. J. Stalmann, Georg Rhau: Musikdrucke aus den Jahren 1538–1545, xi (Kassel and Concordia, MO, 1992) [S]

Missa de Beata Virgine, 4vv, A-KN, ed. in MAM, xi (1959)

Historia de dedicatione ecclesiae; Historia de feria iii. Penthecostes; Historia nativitatis Domini; Historia purificationis BMV; Historia de Sancto Stephano; Invitatorium natalis Domini; Invitatorium Paschae; Responsorium in vigilia Paschae; Tonorum Psalmodia, all for 4vv, D-Rs

Beatus vir qui timet, 4vv, 1539^{9}, 1553^{5}, ed. in MAM, vi (1957); Clamabat Jesu, 3vv, 1542^{8}; De profundis, 4vv, 1542^{6}; Dilexi quoniam, 1539^{9}, ed. in MAM, vi (1957); Dum fabricator mundi, 4vv, 1538^{1}; Ingresso Zacharia templum, 4vv, 1538^{8}, A; Omnia custodia, 3vv, 1542[8]; Omnia probate, 3vv, 1542[8]; Oportuit Christum, 3vv, 1542[8]; Rogamus vos fratres, 3vv, 1542[8]; Sancte Jesu Christe, 4vv, 1567[1]; Si in praeceptis, 3vv, 1542[8]; Te Deum patrem, 4vv, 1538[8], 1540[5], A; Veni sponsa Christi, 3vv, 1560[2]

Ach Gott, vom Himmel, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Ach Gott, wie lang, 3vv, 1541[2], 1559[2], 1560[1]; An Wasserflüssen Babylon, 3vv, 1541[2], 1559[2], 1560[1]; An Wasserflüssen Babylon, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Aus tiefer Not, 3vv, 1541[2], 1559[2]; Aus tiefer Not, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Elend pringt Pein, 4vv, 1536[8], 1539[27], CH-Bu, G 126; Erbarm dich mein, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Es wollt uns Gott, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Ich glaub und darum rede ich, 3vv, 1541[2], 1560[1]; Ich glaub und darum rede ich, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Nun freut euch, 4vv, 1544[21], S; O Gott, wir loben dich, 4vv, 1544[21], 1568[11], S; Vater unser im Himmelreich, 4vv, 1544[21], S; Wohl dem der in Gottes, 4vv, 1544[21], S

Arma virumque cano, 3vv; Arma virumque cano, 4vv; Disertissime Romuli, 4vv; Hanc tua Penelope, 3vv; Hanc tua Penelope, 4vv; Vivamus mea Lesbia, 3vv, all 1551[17]

LOST WORKS

Missa in mi; Missa in re; Missa de Beata Virgine; Graduale maiorum festorum sine prosa, Graduale de sanctis, Antiphonarium per annum, Antiphonarium de sanctis, Liber prosorum festorum ac de sanctis; Graduale de sanctis; Hymni per annum, further liturgical works (some in kbd intabulation), 1 secular lied, all for 4vv, formerly in D-HEu; Harmoniae in odas P. Horatii Flacci poetae clarissimi et plura alia carminum genera (Ulm, 1539); epitaphs for Margaretha Blauer (d 1541) and Bernhard Besserer (d 1542)

DOUBTFUL AND MISATTRIBUTED WORKS

Agnus Dei, 8vv; Quam pulchra es, 6vv, both attrib. Ducis in 1568[7], incorrectly according to Bartha; Veni sponsa Christi, 7vv, attrib. Ducis in 1564[2], doubtfully according to Bartha; most works attrib. 'Benedictus' without surname in anthologies are by Appenzeller, but RISM sometimes gives them to Ducis (e.g. 1545[2], 1545[3], 1546[5], 1556[9])

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BlumeEK; MGG1 (H. Albrecht)

W.B. Squire: 'Who was Benedictus?', SIMG, xiii (1911–12), 264–71

F. Spitta: 'Benedictus Ducis', Monatschrift für Gottesdienst und kirchliche Kunst, xvii (1912), 1–14

K. Huber: 'Die Doppelmeister des 16. Jahrhunderts: eine methodologische Skizze', Festschrift zum 50. Geburtstag Adolf Sandberger (Munich, 1918), 170–88

C. van den Borren: 'Benedictus de Opitiis', Musica sacra [Bruges], xxxiv (1927), 150–62

D. Bartha: Benedictus Ducis und Appenzeller (Wolfenbüttel, 1930)

W. Szaifert and F. Gall, eds.: Die Matrikel der Universität Wien, ii: 1451–1518, pt. 1 (Graz, 1967)

J. Lambrecht, ed.: Das 'Heidelberger Kapellinventar' von 1544 (Codex Pal.Germ.318) (Heidelberg, 1987)

K. Thomayer: Die Kompositionen von Benedictus Ducis in der Handschrift Regensburg, Staatliche Bibliothek, 2° Liturg.18 (MA thesis, U. of Regensburg, 1998)

D. Hiley: 'Das Chorbuch Regensburg, Staatliche Bibliothek, 2° Liturg.18 aus dem Jahre 1543: Chorbuch S im Kapell-Inventar des Pfalzgrafen Ottheinrich, 1544', Musik in Bayern (in preparation)

K. Thomayer: 'Neues zur Biographie von Benedictus Ducis (ca.1492–1544)', Musik in Bayern (in preparation)

KLAUS THOMAYER

Duckles, Vincent H(arris) (b Boston, MA, 21 Sept 1913; d Berkeley, CA, 1 July 1985). American musicologist and librarian. He took the AB at the University of California, Berkeley, and the MA (1937) and the EdD (1944) at Columbia University. After teaching for a time he returned to Berkeley, taking a degree in librarianship in 1950, and studying under Bukofzer for the doctorate (1953). He was appointed head of the music library at Berkeley in 1947 and subsequently associate professor (1957) and full professor of music (1962). He served as president of the Music Library Association (1960–62) and was also active in both the American Musicological Society and the International Association of Music Libraries. Beginning with his dissertation on the Gamble Commonplace-book, Duckles made important contributions to the history of 17th-century English song. In later years he turned his attention to the historiography of music and the history of musical scholarship. His bibliography of music reference and research materials is an indispensable aid to every musical scholar; it has been kept up to date since his death in new editions. In some ways, however, his major achievement was the magnificent collection of books and music over which he presided at Berkeley, and which he was instrumental in building into one of the finest libraries for musical research in the USA.

WRITINGS

'The Gamble Manuscript as a Source of Continuo Song in England', JAMS, i/2 (1948), 23–40

John Gamble's Commonplace Book: a Critical Edition of New York Public Library MS Drexel 4257 (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1953)

'The "Curious" Art of John Wilson (1595–1674): an Introduction to his Songs and Lute Music', JAMS, vii (1954), 93–112

'Florid Embellishment in English Song of the Late 16th and Early 17th Centuries', AnnM, v (1957), 329–45

'John Jenkins's Settings of Lyrics by George Herbert', MQ, xlviii (1962), 461–75 with M. Elmer: Thematic Catalog of a Manuscript Collection of Eighteenth-Century Italian Instrumental Music in the University of California, Berkeley, Music Library (Berkeley, 1963)

'William F. Herschel's Concertos for Oboe, Viola and Violin', Festschrift Otto Erich Deutsch zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. W. Gerstenberg, J. LaRue and W. Rehm (Kassel, 1963), 66–74

Music Reference and Research Materials: an Annotated Bibliography (New York, 1964, rev. 5/1997 by I. Reed)

'The English Musical Elegy of the Late Renaissance', Aspects of Medieval and Renaissance Music: a Birthday Offering to Gustave Reese, ed. J. LaRue and others (New York, 1966/R), 134–53 with F.B. Zimmerman: Words to Music (Los Angeles, 1967) [incl. 'English Song and the Challenge of Italian Monody', 3–42]

'Johann Nicolaus Forkel: the Beginnings of Music Historiography', Eighteenth-Century Studies, i (1967–8), 277–90

'The Music for the Lyrics in Early Seventeenth-Century English Drama: a Bibliography of the Primary Sources', Music in English Renaissance Drama, ed. J.H. Long (Lexington, KY, 1968), 117–60

'Johann Adam Hiller's "Critical Prospectus for a Music Library"', Studies in Eighteenth-Century Music: a Tribute to Karl Geiringer, ed. H.C.R. Landon and R.E. Chapman (New York and London, 1970), 177–85

'Patterns in the Historiography of 19th-Century Music', AcM, xlii (1970), 75–82

'Some Observations on Music Lexicography', College Music Symposium, xi (1971), 115–22

'Musicology at the Mirror: a Prospectus for the History of Musical Scholarship', Perspectives in Musicology, ed. B.S. Brook, E.O.D. Downes and S. Van Solkema (New York, 1972), 32–55

Introduction to G. Martini: Piano generale per una storia della musica di Charles Burney con un catalogo della sua biblioteca musicale, AntMI, Monumenta bononiensia, xxi (1972)

'The Library of the Mind: Observations on the Relationship between Musical Scholarship and Bibliography', Current Thought in Musicology, ed. J.W. Grubbs (Austin, 1976), 277–96

'A French Critic's View of the State of Music in London (1829)', Modern Musical Scholarship: Oxford 1977, 223–37

'The University of California Berkeley Music Library', Notes of the Music Library Association, xxxv (1979), 7–22

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Elliott and M. Roosa: 'Vincent Duckles (1913–1985): a Bibliography of his Publications', Notes, xliv (1987–8), 252–8

PHILIP BRETT

Duckworth, William (Ervin) (b Morgantown, NC, 13 Jan 1943). American composer. He studied at East Carolina University (BM 1965) and the University of Illinois (DMEd 1972), where his composition teachers included Ben Johnston. His teaching appointments include a position at Bucknell University. He participated in the 1988 Darmstadt Composition Forum and was the featured composer at the 1995 Ferrara Festival. Among his awards are two NEA grants (1977, 1983), the latter to fund the composition of Simple Songs about Sex and War, a collaboration with poet Hayden Carruth, and the Walter Hinrichsen Award.

Duckworth is best-known for his piano work, Time Curve Preludes (1978), a composition considered by many to mark the beginning of postminimalism in music. Southern Harmony (1981), a choral work based on William Walker's 1854 collection of shape-note hymns, combines the phasing techniques of early minimalism with 19th-century folk materials, allowing the form and content of the hymns to remain subtly submerged beneath a 20th-century musical surface. Gathering Together/ Revolution (1992–3), written for New York's Essential Music and Rome's Ars Ludi ensembles, has been described as a 'compositional landmark: the first chance-determined postminimal moment form' (Gann, 1991). Later works include Mysterious Numbers (1996), a group of three compositions existing in chamber, orchestral and electronic versions that originated during residencies (1995–6) with Seattle's New Performance Group (now Sonora) and the Atlantic Center for the Arts, New Smyrna Beach, Florida. Cathedral (1997–), an on-going work for the World Wide Web, incorporates live performances, interactive electronics and visual images.

WORKS

Orch: Marches and Flourishes for the Close of the World, 1982; Mysterious Numbers, orch/inst ens, 1996

Vocal: A Mass for these Forgotten Times (Lat.), SATB, 1973; A Summer of Madrigal (1960s rock lyrics), rock singer, fl, vn, pf, perc, 1976; Southern Harmony, Bks 1–4, SSAATTBB, 1981; Simple Songs about Sex and War (H. Carruth), S, 1984; Songs of the Pale Horseman (W. Scott, S. Freud, J. Milton, J. Joyce, others), SATB, live elec, 1984, rev. 1990; Jazz Songs, 1v, pf, 1986; Music in the Combat Zone, S, chbr ens, 1986; Their Song, Bar, pf, 1991

Chbr: Str Qt, 1964; A Ballad in Time and Space, t sax, pf, 1968; Pitch City, any 4 wind, 1969; 7 Shades of Blue, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, 1976; Binary Images, 2 pf, 1977; Blue Rhythm, fl/vn, vc, pf, 1990; Gathering Together, 2 kbd, 2 perc, 1992–3; Revolution, 2 pf, 4 perc, 1993; A Few Riffs Before Dawn, 3 toy pf, 1995

Solo inst (pf, unless otherwise stated): Time Curve Preludes, Bks 1–2, 1978; Music in Seven Regions, 1979; Tango Voices, 1984; Imaginary Dances, 1985, rev. 1988; 31 Days, solo ww, 1986; Slow Dancing in Yugoslavia, accdn, 1990; Meditations on Satie nos. 1–3, 1994

El-ac and multimedia: Gambit, perc, tape, 1967; Western Exit, nar, chbr ens, film, slide projections, 1969; Year, amp pf, slide projections, 1979; Cathedral, World Wide Web, 1997–

Principal publishers: Monroe Street, Peters

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Prentice: 'Bruce: Duckworth's Premieres', HiFi/MusAm, xxix/7 (1979), MA 32–3

K. Gann: 'Enough of Nothing', Village Voice (30 April 1991)

K. Gann: 'Reshaped-Note Singing', Village Voice (25 Feb 1992)

DON C. GILLESPIE

Du Contant de la Molette, Philippe (b La Côte-Saint-André, 29 Aug 1737; d Paris, 24 July 1794). French scholar. After his studies at the seminary in Vienne and his ordination, Du Contant settled in Paris, where he took his doctorate at the Sorbonne in 1765. He was vicar-general of Vienne in 1789, when he had to abandon his post during the Revolutionary disturbances. He fled to Paris and went into hiding, but was discovered, imprisoned and guillotined. A specialist in Hebrew studies, he left a Traité sur poésie et la musique des hébreux, pour servir d'introduction aux pseaumes expliqués (Paris, 1781) which later appeared in Italian as Trattato sopra la poesia e la musica degli ebrei (Venice, 1788). The treatise, although synthesizing the studies of Jewish music made since the time of Mersenne, Calmet and Lamy, is nonetheless experimental. Du Contant was influenced by the theories of Roussier (Mémoire sur la musique des anciens, Paris, 1770) and tried to provide a systematic survey of the extant data concerning Hebrew music. He also proposed an analytical reading of the documents giving indications of the musical practice of the Jews of antiquity and its modes of transmission.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Vendrix: 'Jubal réhabilité? Le Grand Siècle et la musique des Hébreux', Athalie: Racine et la tragédie biblique, ed. M. Couvreur (Brussels, 1992), 91–106

P. Vendrix: Aux origines d'une discipline historique: la musique et son histoire en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Geneva, 1993)

PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Du [de] Cousu, Antoine (b Amiens, *c*1600; d Saint-Quentin, 11 Aug 1658). French ecclesiastic, musician and theorist. He was a singer at the Ste Chapelle in Paris in 1632 and then served as maître de chapelle at Noyon before being named maître de musique and canon (*c*1635) at the collegiate church in Saint-Quentin. Only one composition by him appears to have survived; an instrumental Fantaisie 'en faveur de la quarte' printed by Mersenne in Harmonie universelle (Paris, 1636–7/R: 'Traité des consonances', bk 5, pp.300–03) and in open score by Kircher in Musurgia universalis (Rome, 1650/R: i, 627–34).

However, Du Cousu's reputation rests upon his contributions as a theorist; it did so even during his own lifetime, and in this regard he figured prominently in the correspondence of Mersenne. His major work is La musique universelle, contenant toute la pratique et toute la théorie (Paris, before 1658/R). Although reference to its being prepared for printing appears as early as 1633 (Correspondance du P. Marin Mersenne, iii, 362), the two examples that survive (in B-Br and F-Pm) are incomplete: the treatise ends abruptly at chapter 32, p.208, of book 3, and indications are that they are simply printers' proofs of the first part of a work that may never have seen publication. What remains constitutes three books, devoted to a systematic presentation of the principles of music and notation and of rules for the theory and practice of both simple and figural counterpoint, in from two to six parts, in early 17th-century style.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBF ('De Cousu, Antoine'; D. Parent)

P.-B. de Jumilhac: La science et la pratique du plain-chant (Paris, 1673); ed. T. Nisard and A. Le Clercq (Paris, 1847), 329–33

E. Thoinan: Antoine de Cousu et les singulières destinées de son livre rarissime: 'La Musique Universelle' (Paris, 1866)

C. de Waard, ed.: Correspondance du P. Marin Mersenne, iii (Paris, 1945); v (1959); viii (1963)

H. Schneider: Die französische Kompositionslehre in der ersten Hälfte des 17. Jahrhunderts (Tutzing, 1972)

W. Seidel: 'Französische Musiktheorie im 16. und 17. Jahrhundert', Entstehung nationaler Traditionen: Frankreich, Geschichte der Musiktheorie, ix (Darmstadt, 1986), 85–8

ALBERT COHEN

Ducrest de Saint-Aubin, Stéphanie-Félicité. See GENLIS, STÉPHANIE-FÉLICITÉ.

Ducroquet, Pierre Alexandre. French auctioneer and owner of the organ-building firm DAUBLAINE-CALLINET from 1845.

Duct flute [whistle flute]. An AEROPHONE whose essential feature is a head, partially blocked, leaving a windway or duct to lead the player's breath to a rigid sharp edge or lip (voicing edge) at the base of the mouth ('window' or 'labium'). There are normally a number of finger-holes (a duct flute without finger-holes is usually regarded as a WHISTLE), varying from three (e.g. the tabor pipe (see PIPE AND TABOR), to six (e.g. PENNY WHISTLE and FLAGEOLET), eight or nine (the RECORDER in the Baroque and Renaissance periods respectively). Because of its ease of sound production, the duct flute is by far the most common type of flute throughout the world, but in some areas (e.g. South America, the Middle East and North Africa, much of the Balkans, and in European art music since the mid-18th century) it has tended to be regarded as an amateur's instrument, the professional player preferring more difficult but more expressive instruments such as the NOTCHED FLUTE, end-blown flutes such as the nay and kaval, or the transverse instrument.

Terminology for the various parts of the sound-producing apparatus of the duct flute has been vague and uncertain (e.g. the word FIPPLE has been applied by different writers to several different parts of the instrument), but a standard vocabulary has been established by Picken, combining organ builders' (an organ flue-pipe is also a duct flute; see ORGAN, §III) and other instrumentalists' terms into a logical whole. There is wide variation in the geometry both of the windway and of the mouth, resulting in considerable differences in tonal quality, dynamics, ease of overblowing and harmonic content of the sound, each pattern of duct flute being designed to fulfil the musical and tonal requirements of the culture within which it is used.

The way that the duct is formed also varies widely (see FLUTE, fig.1 (h–k)), ranging from the player's tongue inserted into the top of an otherwise empty tube to the elaborate internal and external duct where a partition, either natural (e.g. a node in the cane) or artificial (e.g. wax), forces the air out to travel below a decoratively carved wooden block, and thence to the instrument's mouth. Examples of the latter type may be seen in pre-Columbian Mexican codices, and are still found in Central America; they include the courting flute used by some North American Indian peoples such as the Apache. In South-east Asia, e.g. in Flores and with the palwei in Myanmar, a strip of leaf (or nowadays often of plastic) is used instead of the carved wooden block. The most widespread type of duct is formed by an internal block of wood, pith, wax or other material, with a windway between it and the inner wall of the flute. An external ring of leaf or bamboo, tied round the top of the instrument, is common in Indonesia, the outer wall of the head of the suling being reduced in thickness under the ring at one point to leave a duct down which the player's breath may be directed to the mouth. Slide-blown duct flutes, usually with a small nozzle protruding from the side into which the player blows (the air then turning a right angle as it passes into the instrument), are known from India and also Europe, where flageolet-flutes were made in the first half of the 19th century for the amateur who wished to appear to play a 'proper' transverse flute without acquiring the necessary skill. Wheatstone and other makers produced a clip-on duct for this purpose, and similar artifices are still available. The use of paired or grouped duct flutes ('multiple flutes'), with more than one pipe blown simultaneously, goes back to antiquity. They have been found in Mexico, and are still played in Paraguay, Tibet, Baluchistan, India and Yugoslavia.

A fairly common form of ephemeral duct flute is the willow whistle, made by stripping a tube of bark from the wood in the spring; some of these (e.g. in Norway, Switzerland and the Balkans) are played as harmonic flutes, with a finger stopping the lower end to obtain the harmonic series of both open and stopped pipes. The absence of finger-holes does not invariably preclude musical performance.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SachsH
J. Kunst: Music in Flores (Leiden, 1942)
A. Baines: Woodwind Instruments and their History (London, 1957, 3/1967/R)
L. Picken: The Folk Musical Instruments of Turkey (London, 1975)
E. Emsheimer: 'Tongue Duct Flutes: Correction of an Error', GSJ, xxxiv (1981), 98–105

JEREMY MONTAGU

Ductia. A medieval Latin term denoting two musical forms. The term is known only from Johannes de Grocheio's treatise De musica (*c*1300), where it is discussed along with the stantipes (see ESTAMPIE). Grocheio made a distinction between a vocal and an instrumental form, calling the former cantilena ductia and the latter merely ductia. The discussion of the vocal form is far from clear: Grocheio stated that 'the ductia is a song [cantilena], light and rapid in ascent and descent, which is sung by boys and girls for dances [in choreis a iuvenibus et puellis] like the French song Chi encor querez amoretes' (Rohloff, p.132); that song has not survived. Grocheio's subsequent discussion and his comparisons with other songs do not clarify this description of the form.

The discussion of the instrumental form is much clearer. It is a textless composition 'measured with an appropriate beat [cum decenti percussione mensuratus]', implying that 'beats [ictus] measure it and the motions of the one who does it; they spur the human mind to move ornately [ornate] according to the art which is called dancing [ballare]; and they measure its motion in ductias and dances [choreis]' (Rohloff, p.136). The stantipes and the ductia, according to Grocheio, consist of a certain number of puncta (see PUNCTUM), each of which in turn consists of two parts identical with one another in the beginning but with different endings called apertum ('open') and clausum ('closed'). The stantipes is supposed to have six or seven puncta, the ductia only three or four. Levarie (JAMS, xxvii, 1974, p.367) has suggested that, beside this distinction, it is the ductia's constant (decenti: 'regular') number of beats per punctus that differentiates it from the estampie, whose puncta have a varying number of beats. Grocheio's ductia would then resemble the pieces entitled 'dansse' (see DANSSE REAL) in the 'Manuscrit du Roi' (F-Pn fr.844, ff.5*r*, 104*v*), which each have three regular puncta.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Rohloff: Die Quellenhandschriften zum Musiktraktat des Johannes de Grocheio (Leipzig, 1972)
T.J. McGee: 'Medieval Dances: Matching the Repertory with Grocheio's Descriptions', JM, vii (1989), 498–517

HENDRIK VAN DER WERF

Duda [Dudy]. See BAGPIPE. See also HUNGARY, §II, 5(iv) and POLAND, §II, 5.

Dudelsack (Ger.). See BAGPIPE.

Dudley, Anne (b Chatham, 7 May 1956). English composer, performer and producer. After studying at the RCM and at King's College, London (MMus, 1979), she reacted against the modernist purism of her training, developing instead a wide stylistic range that has brought her commercial success as both pop musician and film composer. This catholic approach is apparent in much of her work for the screen, for example in The Full Monty and in the television series of Jeeves and Wooster in which period and mood are strongly characterized, while musical coherence is ensured through thematic development. Dudley is also capable of sustaining a more limited stylistic palette where appropriate, for instance in the score for The Crying Game, where it is reserved largely for the poignant and tender moments, emphasizing the essentially gentle nature of this story. Dudley's association with pop producer Trevor Horn and The Art of Noise group in the 1980s enabled her to work at the forefront of technological developments in music production, especially with regards to sampling and remixing. The combination of high technology and acoustic writing can be found on her album Ancient and Modern, which reveals also her fascination with the English choral tradition. Her score for The Full Monty received an Academy Award in 1998.

WORKS
(selective list)

Music for TV: Jeeves and Wooster, 1990–93; Kavanagh QC, 1st series, 1995; Crime Traveller, 1997

Film scores: The Miracle (dir. N. Jordan), 1990; The Crying Game (dir. Jordan), 1992; Felidae (dir. C. Schenkel), 1994; Hollow Reed (dir. A. Pope), 1996; Knight Moves (dir. Schenkel), 1993; Dead Men Don't Eat Poets (dir. Davison), 1995; The Full Monty (dir. P. Cattaneo), 1997

Principal publishers: Warner Chappell, EMI

Principal recording companies: ZTT, China, Echo

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Gray: 'More like an art than a noise', The Times (13 Jan 1995)

DAVID BURNAND

Due corde (It.: 'two strings'). In piano music of the early 19th century, notably by Beethoven, a direction to depress the 'una corda' or 'soft' pedal part way, so that the hammers strike only two of the three strings provided for each note, producing an effect intermediate between UNA CORDA and TRE CORDE.

See also PEDALLING.

DAVID ROWLAND

Duet (Fr. duo; Ger. Duett; It. duetto). A vocal or instrumental composition for two performers with or without accompaniment, in which the interest is shared more or less equally between the duettists. The term is not normally applied to the repertory of sonatas for keyboard and another instrument from the 18th century on, although it was often favoured along with 'duo', by 19th-century publishers. Some composers have preferred 'duet' for vocal and 'duo' for instrumental pieces, but that usage is by no means universal except in present-day German.

Florid two-voiced tropes and conductus of the 13th century were almost certainly sung by soloists and are early examples of true duets (see HAM nos.37, Rex virginum and 38, Hac in anni janua). In motets and mass settings of the 15th century such passages often alternated with choral sections (HAM no.56, Guillaume Legrant, Credo); in many sources of Dunstaple's music they bear the rubric 'duo' (see MB, viii, 1953). In Gero's first book of madrigals for two voices (1541) and Morley's canzonets the duet has become an independent piece. During the Renaissance the vocal and instrumental BICINIUM exemplifies the beginnings of a duet literature which is didactic in intention, and persists through works like Pepusch's Aires for Two Violins made on Purpose for the Improvement of Practitioners in Consort (1709) and Haydn's piano duet Il maestro e lo scolare to such 20th-century pieces as the violin duets of Bartók or nos.43 and 55 of his Mikrokosmos.

In vocal duets a distinction may be drawn between pieces in which both voices sing the same text and those that take on a dramatic form (as in the 17th-century DIALOGUE or the operatic love duet) where each singer generally has different words. The former type includes, however, a number of curious cases where a single character is represented by two voices. The words of Jesus in Schütz's Historia der ... Aufferstehung (1623) are allotted to vocal duet, as are those of Mary Magdalene, and in 17th-century oratorios the part of the narrator ('historicus') was often similarly treated. The tradition was revived by both Britten in the canticle Abraham and Isaac (1952) and Stravinsky in The Flood (1962) for the voice of God. In the Baroque period the duetto per camera was an important form of vocal chamber music of which innumerable examples are found in the works of Cazzati, Agostino Steffani, Alessandro Scarlatti, Handel and others, many conceived as extended cantatas consisting of recitatives, arias and duets, sometimes with instrumental obbligato (e.g. Francesco Durante's Fiero, acerbo destin, HAM no.273). The same treatment was applied to sacred texts in such works as Campra's motet Cantate Domino (HAM no.257) or, on a more extended scale with orchestra, in Pergolesi's Stabat mater. In the 19th century duets parallel to the lied in structure form a considerable though now neglected part of the output of Schumann, Mendelssohn and Brahms.

In opera the duet was employed almost from the outset. Monteverdi's Orfeo and L'incoronazione di Poppea both have duets as concluding vocal items, the latter – a dove duet for Poppea and Nero – being the earliest significant example of a genre that persisted until the duet became merged in the general continuity of the music (as in Verdi or Puccini) or dissolved into a musical dialogue in which the voices no longer sang simultaneously (as in later Wagner or Richard Strauss). In 17th-century Italy duets were much used in comic scenes within serious operas; these diversions began to take the form of intermezzos (see INTERMEZZO (ii)) during the first decades of the 18th century. In opera seria for much of the 18th century duets were virtually the exclusive province of the principle couple and there were no other ensembles. In comic opera after 1750 large ensemble finales became the norm, and a duet for the principal buffa couple was usually the only other ensemble. Duets quickly became more prevalent, and an opera giocosa could have a duet for both the buffa and the seria couple. In Baroque France the duet was by far the most popular type of concerted number in the tragédie lyrique and showed more diversity of voice pairing than in opera seria, embracing duets of vengeance (usually for rejected suitors) and confontation, and pairings of hero or heroine with confidant(e). Normally both characters sang the same words, simultaneously, thus ensuring the clarity of the text that was always a prerequisite in French opera. The love duet in the Classic era was characterized by much singing in 3rds and 6ths, symbolizing unanimity after the resolution of earlier difficulties or uncertainties. (Mozart's 'Là ci darem' from Don Giovanni and 'Fra gli amplessi' from Così fan tutte provide examples of vocal textures changing to symbolize the flux of emotion.) In the 19th century, especially in Italy, the duet assumed an importance equal to that of the aria. In Rossini's time and after the 'grand duet' was normally in three movements: an opening tempo d'attacco, a slow cantabile and a final tempo di mezzo; classic examples are found in Semiramide, Norma and Lucia di Lammermoor). Two-movement duets were also prevalent throughout the century, but single-movement duets are rare outside opera buffa or semiseria (though represented in La sonnambula and Don Pasquale). From about 1870 the structure is governed by the sense of the text, the voices rarely uniting except in an amorous context. Transferred from an operatic context the love duet played a part in the symbolic representation of, for example, Christ and the Soul in Bach's cantata Wachet auf BWV140.

Keyboard duets, both original and arrangements of large-scale orchestral and vocal works, became increasingly popular during the 18th century (see PIANO DUET) and some were even composed for organ (for example by Samuel Wesley). A great deal of music, mostly for two recorders, two flutes or two violins, was published during the century, primarily for amateurs to play (and also serving a useful educational purpose, especially where an instrumental teacher did not have the skill to supply keyboard accompaniment or, indeed, where no keyboard instrument was available); much of it is on a trivial level, but the repertory includes works by Telemann, Geminiani, Leclair, J.W.A. and Carl Stamitz, Boccherini, J.C. Bach, Haydn, Mozart (for bassoon and cello, violin and viola, and two horns) and later Beethoven (viola and cello, clarinet and bassoon), Viotti and Spohr. In the 20th century there were instrumental duets by Reger (two violins), Poulenc (two clarinets, clarinet and bassoon), Ravel and Kodály (both for violin and cello) and Hindemith (violins, flutes, violin and clarinet), as well as Bartók.

The term is occasionally applied to pieces for a single performer which simulate the idea of a real duet, e.g. J.S. Bach's four Duettos BWV802–5 from Clavierübung, iii; Mendelssohn's Lied ohne Worte op.38 no.6, subtitled 'Duetto'; and Bartók's 'Duet for Pipes', no.88 of Mikrokosmos.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (J. Liebscher; 'Duo', U. Mazurowicz); GroveO (M. McClymonds, E. Cook, J. Budden)
E.J. Dent: ' Ensembles and Finales in Eighteenth-Century Italian Opera', SIMG, xi (1909–10), 543–69; xi (1910–11), 112–38
E. Schmitz: ' Zur Geschichte des italienischen Kammerduetts im 17. Jahrhundert', JbMP 1916, 43–60
O. Gombosi: ' Violenduette im 15. Jahrhundert', AcM, ix (1937), 57–8
W. Henley: 'Duets for Strings', Cobbett's Cyclopedic Survey of Chamber Music (London, enlarged 2/1963/R by C. Mason), i, 340–45
D. Kämper: 'Das Lehr- und Insturmental-Duo um 1500 in Italien', Mf, xviii (1965), 242–53
J. Roche: 'The Duet in Early Seventeenth-Century Italian Church Music', PRMA, xciii (1966–7), 33–50
E. Doflein: ' Das Violin-Duo in der Musikgeschichte', ÖMz, xxvii (1972), 332–43
H. Becker: ' Das Duett in der Oper', Musik, Edition, Interpretation: Gedenkschrift Günter Henle, ed. M. Bente (Munich, 1980), 82–99
U. Mazurowicz: Das Streichduett in Wien von 1750 bis zum Tode Joseph Haydns (Tutzing, 1982)
J. Whenham: Duet and Dialogue in the Age of Monteverdi (Ann Arbor, 1982)
U. Mazurowicz: 'Die Bedeutung alter Musik für das Streichduett im 20. Jahrhundert', Alte Musik als ästhetische Gegenwart: Bach, Händel, Schütz: Stuttgart 1985, 343–52
J. Liebscher: Das italienische Kammerduett (ca. 1670–1750) (Tutzing, 1987)
S.L. Balthazar: 'The Primo Ottocento Duet and the Transformation of the Rossinian Code', JM, vii (1989), 471–97
E. Cook: The Operatic Ensemble in France, 1673–1775 (diss., U. of East Anglia, 1990)
U. Mazurowicz: 'Die pädagogische Verwendung des Streichduetts', Festschrift Hubert Unverricht, ed. K. Schlager (Tutzing, 1992), 161–72

MICHAEL TILMOUTH/R

Dueto, Antonio (b Villafranca Piemonte, *c*1545; *d c*1602). Italian composer and priest. He lived and worked mostly in Genoa. With Dalla Gastena, Pinello and Molinaro, he is one of the leading figures in Genoese musical life during the second half of the 16th century. Dueto was chaplain at the cathedral of S Lorenzo in 1575. The following year he was nominated maestro della cantoria there, and he remained in this post until leaving Genoa in 1584. He may have spent at least part of the next two years in Venice, where at least four volumes of his madrigals were printed by Gardano between 1584 and 1586. In 1587, Dueto was again in Genoa, where he was nominated as canon.

With the exception of some spiritual madrigals, Dueto's music is entirely secular. His works show the immediacy of sentiment typical of Neapolitan composers. Less evident is the influence of the Venetian tradition, which may however be represented in his sometimes rudimentary and intuitive use of chromaticism and in the simplicity of his part-writing.

WORKS

all except anthologies published in Venice

Il primo libro de madrigali, 6vv (1583), inc.
Il primo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1584), inc.
Il secondo libro de madrigali, 6vv (1584)
Il secondo libro de madrigali, 5vv (1585), inc.
Il secondo libro de madrigali, 4vv (1586)
Il terzo libro de madrigali, 4vv (1594)
Madrigals in 1590[17], 1597[15], 1601[18]; 4 madrigals in Libro de madrigali ... de li illustri musici genovesi (Genoa, 1572); lost, cited in Ghirlanda fiorita (Genoa, 1572)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBI (R. Grisley)
R. Giazotto: La musica a Genova nella vita pubblica e privata dal XIII al XVIII secolo (Genoa, 1951), 146–9, 308–12
M.R. Moretti: Musica e costume a Genova tra 500 e 600 (Genoa, 1990), 82–3

SERENA DAL BELIN PERUFFO

Duettino (It., diminutive of duetto). A short duet of concise form, vocal or instrumental. Mozart so described 'Via resti servita' in Le nozze di Figaro and 'Là ci darem' in Don Giovanni, though neither is particularly short.

Duetto notturno (It.: 'nocturnal duet'; Fr. duo nocturne). A short, closed vocal piece in binary form characterized by vocal writing in 3rds and 6ths, usually for two accompanied voices (sopranos, or soprano and alto). It may have an unfigured instrumental bass line or written-out keyboard or orchestral accompaniment; the latter are most commonly for two horns, often with two flutes, clarinets, oboes or bassoons as well as strings. In the 18th century such terms as 'notturno', 'notturnino', 'notturno a due voci', 'duettino italiano' and 'canzonetta' were used interchangeably to designate the genre.

The duetto notturno is well represented in the second half of the 18th century and the early 19th: composers who wrote such pieces for two voices and bass (instrumental or vocal) with 'Notturno' or 'Nocturne' in the title include Boieldieu, Donizetti, Mozart, Paisiello, Rossini, Verdi and numerous lesser figures. Duetti notturni often convey a mood of introspection. Common tempo indications are larghetto, adagio and andantino; allegro maestoso, allegro spiritoso and tempo di minuetto appear less frequently. Characteristic descriptions such as affettuoso, amoroso and espressivo are common.

Most composers made some use of Metastasio's Canzonette, Cantate and Strofe per musica, dating from between about 1733 and 1749. Short strophes are occasionally taken from such Metastasian operas as Ciro riconosciuto, L'olimpiade, Siroe re di Persia and Attilio Regolo. The female figures Nice and Irene appear frequently, and some poems have a cynical dimension that colours the tradition. Sets of duetti notturni (usually six or a multiple of six) exclusively to Metastasian texts are rare: verse by other writers inspired by such texts accounts for a sizable proportion. Hundreds of works based on the same Metastasian texts with the essential features of duetti notturni are not entitled 'Notturno' yet form part of the tradition: J.C. Bach's Duetti (?*c*1760) and Canzonettas T259/1 and 260/2, and Beethoven's Ne' giorni tuoi felici WoO93 are noteworthy examples. English publications in particular contain many examples not designated 'Notturno'.

In Mozart's works the instrumental bass line was transformed into a third vocal part, thereby creating a vocal terzett (see TERZET); nowhere is this procedure (which was followed by other composers including Verdi) better exemplified than in the terzettino 'Soave sia il vento' from Così fan tutte. Other works by Mozart for three voices in the duetto notturno mould are the notturni K436–9 and K346/439*a* and the canzonetta Più non si trovano K549; and orchestral sketches survive for a further work, K532. The influence of the tradition can also be seen in the piano sonatas and elsewhere in Mozart's work. Several singers who performed in his operas or were well acquainted with him, including Guglielmo d'Ettore, Giuseppe Tibaldi, Michael Kelly and Giuseppe Aprile, composed pieces of the duetto notturno type. Dated duetto notturno manuscripts from the 18th century are rare; the earliest datable works so titled are by Ettore, who in 1770 sang the title role in Mozart's Mitridate. Since instrumental trios entitled 'Notturno' are known from as early as 1754, it is reasonable to suppose that composers borrowed the term duetto notturno from instrumental music.

In the late 18th century and the 19th the unfigured bass line was replaced by a piano or harp. Spontini, Asioli and Blangini wrote nocturnes setting Metastasian texts translated into French (Blangini wrote about 170). Chopin's Nocturnes for piano display passages that reflect this tradition (op.9 no.1, bars 61–9; op.27 no.2, bars 10–18, 33ff; and op.72 no.1, bars 4–9, 18–25).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 ('Notturno', §I; H. Schneider)
C. von Blumröder: 'Notturno/Nocturne' (1982–3), HMT
H.J. Wignall: 'Mozart and the "duetto notturno" Tradition', MJb 1993, 145–61

HARRISON JAMES WIGNALL

Dufallo, Richard (John) (b Chicago, 30 Jan 1933; d Denton, TX, 16 June 2000). American conductor and clarinettist. A graduate of the American Conservatory of Music in Chicago and the University of California, he was associate conductor of the Buffalo PO (1963–7) and was also active as clarinettist of the Creative Associates at the New York State University at Buffalo, performing a great deal of new music. In 1965 he studied with William Steinberg at the New York Philharmonic Seminar for conductors, which led to invitations to conduct the orchestra and also Steinberg's Pittsburgh SO. He worked with Boulez in Basle (1969), and made his European début with the Orchestre National de l'ORTF in 1971. His reputation as an interpreter of new scores was consolidated with performances of Stockhausen's Carré for four orchestras (with fellow conductors Tabachnik, Amy and Foss) in The Hague, Paris and London in 1972. Successful débuts with the Concertgebouw Orchestra (1975) and Berlin PO (1976) confirmed his ability to deal with 20th-century works in an incisive, cogent way. Dufallo was artistic director of the Contemporary Music Conference at the Aspen Festival from 1970 until 1985, and taught at the Juilliard School from 1972 to 1979. He gave the world or American premières of works by Ligeti, Xenakis, Maxwell Davies (world premiere of The Lighthouse, 1980), Crumb, Carter and Copland, and introduced works by Ruggles, Ives, Varèse and Druckman in Europe. Dufallo's approach, unlike many new music specialists, was dramatic rather than structural. His experience as a clarinettist and ensemble player enabled him to deal with instrumental problems in a practical way, and his projection of each score strove for the clearest emotional as well as musical impact. His book Trackings: Composers Speak with Richard Dufallo (New York and Oxford, 1989) is a series of interviews with composers whose music he conducted.

RICHARD BERNAS

Du Faur de Pibrac, Guy. See PIBRAC, GUY DU FAUR DE.

Dufaut [Du Faut, Du Fault, Dufau], François (b Bourges, before 1604; d ?London, before 1672). French lutenist and composer. According to Titon du Tillet he was a pupil of the Gaultiers. He was one of the most renowned lutenists of the 17th century. René Milleran (in his collection of lute music, *c*1690, F-Pn Rés.823) mentioned him as one of the finest players of his day, ranking him with the Gaultiers, Gallots and Mouton. Nor was this opinion confined to France, for in Germany both Baron and Le Sage de Richée (in his Cabinet der Lauten, 1695) referred to him as a model, while in England Mary Burwell's teacher praised his 'very grave and learned' playing. These tributes are confirmed by the large number of his compositions in over 90 lute manuscripts in France, England and the German lands.

Born into a well-to-do middle-class family in Bourges, he was established in Paris by 1629, when he was described as bourgeois de Paris at his marriage to Marie Mongin, witnessed by his friend the distinguished lute maker Edmond Hotman. Although he apparently never held a court appointment, his outstanding ability was recognized in 1631 by the inclusion of 13 of his pieces in the Tablature de Luth de differens autheurs (published in Paris by the royal music printer Pierre Ballard) beside compositions by senior members of the court music such as Robert Ballard and Mesangeau. He was again included in the Tablature of 1638 (10 pieces). Various Parisian documents mention him up to 1642, the date of his second marriage, to Marie Hotman, perhaps the sister of Edmond. Probably after 1652, the presumable date of his tombeau for the wealthy lutenist Blancrocher who died that year, Dufaut moved to England, where the Civil War (1642–9) had caused French musicians at the English court to return to France, but where there was still a demand for French music. Of his patrons there we know only of Elizabeth Warwick, whom he taught, and whom Christiaan Huygens, visiting London in 1663, heard play 'excellent goet' with her teacher. In 1671 Constantijn Huygens referred to Dufaut in the past tense.

In his music Dufaut used the new tunings introduced into French solo lute music in the 1620s and 30s, including the D minor tuning, which became standard from the 1640s. Of around 165 pieces attributed to him (ed. A. Souris and M. Rollin, Paris, 1965, 2/1988; further source information in Goy, Meyer and Rollin) the great majority are in the usual genres of the solo instrumental suite: prélude non mesuré (of which the Recherche in the 1631 Tablature is one of the earliest fully developed examples), allemande, courante, sarabande and gigue. Few have the subtitles that later became common in this repertory. While there is wit and charm in the lighter pieces, his most impressive works are the weightier allemandes and pavanes. These have a rich chordal sonority, an unusual consistency of part-writing, and a sophisticated contrapuntal craftsmanship which probably accounts for his appeal, particularly in the German area. Dufaut was a strong influence on Esajus Reusner and the German lute school generally, and his works continued to be played in Germany up to the middle of the 18th century.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E.G. Baron: Historisch-theoretische und practische Untersuchung des Instruments der Lauten (Nuremberg, 1727/R; Eng. trans., 1976, as Study of the Lute)
E. Titon du Tillet: Le Parnasse françois (Paris, 1732/R)
W.J.A. Jonckbloet and J.P.N. Land, eds.: Correspondance et oeuvres musicales de Constantin Huygens (Leiden, 1882)
L. de La Laurencie: Les luthistes (Paris, 1928)
T. Dart: 'Miss Mary Burwell's Instruction Book for the Lute', GSJ, xi (1958), 3–62
W.J. Rave: Some Manuscripts of French Lute Music 1630–1700 (diss., U. of Illinois, 1972)
D. Ledbetter: Harpsichord and Lute Music in Seventeenth-Century France (diss., U. of Oxford, 1985)
C. Goldberg: Stilisierung als kunstvermittelnder Prozess: Die französischen Tombeau-Stücke im 17. Jahrhundert (Laaber, 1987)
T. Crawford: Review of Oeuvres de Dufaut, EMc, xviii (1989), 263–5
F.P. Goy, C. Meyer and M. Rollin, eds.: Sources manuscrites en tablature (Baden-Baden, 1991–) [catalogue]

JOËL DUGOT/DAVID LEDBETTER

Du Fay [Dufay; Du Fayt], Guillaume (b Beersel, ?5 Aug 1397; d Cambrai, 27 Nov 1474). French composer and theorist. He was acknowledged by his contemporaries as the leading composer of his day. He held positions in many of the musical centres of Europe and his music was copied and performed virtually everywhere that polyphony was practised.

1. Life. 2. Posthumous reputation. 3. Works: general. 4. Chant settings. 5. Cantilena settings. 6. Motets. 7. Music for the Mass. 8. Plainchant melodies. 9. Songs. 10. Lost works. 11. Problems of attribution. 12. Sources. 13. Editions.

1. Life. According to the executors of Du Fay's will, his 'homeland' was the town of Bersele [Beersel] near Brussels (although see Haggh, 1997, for a different interpretation). His date of birth has been postulated by Planchart (EMH, 1988; 1995) as 5 August 1397; this date is based on the year of his ordination (late 1427) and his years as a chorister at Cambrai Cathedral (1409–12), and events connected with the establishment of his obit. His original patronymic was Du Fayt; he apparently altered the spelling to Du Fay during his years in Italy. The family name (Du Fay as well as Du Fayt), universally spelt as two words in all 14th- and 15th-century documents traceable directly to bearers of the name, was not common in Cambrai: the largest concentration is found in documents from the area of Valenciennes. Du Fay was born the illegitimate son of a single woman, Marie Du Fayt, and a priest whose name has not come down to us.

The earliest mention of the composer comes from the years 1409 to 1412, where he is listed as 'Willemet' and later 'Willermus Du Fayt'. His teachers at Cambrai during those years included Rogier de Hesdin, who taught him for 11 weeks in the early summer of 1409, Nicolas Malin, magister puerorum at the cathedral from 1409 to 1412, and perhaps Richard Loqueville, magister puerorum from 1413 until his death in 1418. Du Fay's connection with Cambrai is probably due to his mother's decision to live with a relative, Jehan Hubert, who became a residentiary canon of the cathedral in 1408 and whose first cousin, Jehanne Huberde, was in the care of Marie.

Du Fay apparently caught the attention of the cathedral authorities early on, for they made him an exceptional gift of a copy of Alexandre de Villedieu's Doctrinale in 1411. His instruction in music and in grammar followed the rigid but practical curriculum common to most French cathedral schools in the late Middle Ages. By 24 June 1414 he had received a small benefice as chaplain of the Salve in the parish church of St Géry outside the walls of Cambrai, but by November of that year he was no longer at Cambrai. It is generally assumed that he went to the Council of Konstanz (1414–18), either in the retinue of Jehan de Lens, Bishop of Cambrai, or that of Pierre d'Ailly, who had been Bishop of Cambrai when Du Fay was a chorister. This assumption is supported by his later connection with Carlo Malatesta, whom the composer could only have met at Konstanz, and also by the nature and transmission of his earliest datable composition, a Sanctus related to a similar work by Loqueville, employing as a cantus firmus a troped chant that was used at Cambrai as part of the recently compiled Mass to pray for the end of the Schism.

By November 1418 Du Fay had returned to Cambrai and was already a subdeacon. He is mentioned as taking part in the services at St Géry until Ash Wednesday 1420. In the summer of that year he entered the service of Carlo Malatesta da Rimini. There is no direct documentary evidence of this, but a number of pieces were written for celebrations at Rimini in honour of Carlo's relatives from Pesaro: the motet Vasilissa ergo gaude was written in honour of Cleofe Malatesta, bride of Theodore Palaiologos, before their wedding in 1421; the ballade Resvelliés vous was for the wedding of Carlo Malatesta da Pesaro to Vittoria Colonna in Rimini on 18 July 1423; and the rondeau Hé compaignons, which lists in its texts the names of no fewer than five of the musicians of Carlo Malatesta da Rimini, including Hugo and Arnold de Lantins. A mass Ordinary setting using material closely related to Resveillés vous must also date from these years.

Du Fay apparently returned north in 1424, most likely because Jehan Hubert, in whose house Marie Du Fayt was still living, became seriously ill. Hubert died on 24 December 1425; he left a substantial bequest to Marie, but there is no mention of Guillaume. No documentation concerning Du Fay's whereabouts in 1424 and 1425 has come to light, but on the basis of two songs, Ce jour le doibt and Adieu ces bons vins de Lannoys, it is assumed that he was a petit vicaire at Laon Cathedral. This view is supported by the fact that his first two benefices after the one in St Géry were a chaplaincy at the altar of St Fiacre in Laon (1429) and another at the altar of St John the Baptist in the parish church of Nouvion-le-Vineux (1430). The collation of this last benefice belonged to the community of chaplains in Laon. Early in 1426 Du Fay was recruited by Robert Auclou, secretary of Cardinal Louis Aleman, to join the cardinal's familia in Bologna, where Aleman was papal legate. If Du Fay travelled to Bologna with Auclou he was in that city by late February 1426. Two litterae de fructibus from Aleman to St Géry, recorded in the chapter acts, attest Du Fay's presence in Bologna. He is mentioned in the first, dated 12 April 1427, as a deacon, and in the second, dated 24 March 1428, as a priest.

Du Fay was in Bologna from February or March 1426 until August 1428, when the Canedoli faction in the city revolted and expelled Aleman and his court. A number of works can be placed in the Bologna years, notably the isorhythmic motets Rite maiorem Jacobum, written for Robert Auclou, and Apostolo glorioso, written for the rededication of a church of St Andrew in Patras, the last Latin diocese of Greece, whose bishop was Pandolfo Malatesta da Pesaro, as well as the song Mon chier amy, which, it has been suggested (in Fallows, 1982), was written as a song of condolence to Carlo Malatesta da Rimini on the death of his brother Pandolfo (d 3 October 1427). The Missa S Jacobi, which includes Propers as well as the Ordinary, has been placed in that period since it makes use of a rhymed alleluia, and there is evidence that the St James liturgy in the church of S Giacomo, Bologna, used one of the very rare versified Offices for that saint.

After leaving Bologna Du Fay went to Rome. He is listed as a member of the papal chapel in a payment of 4 December 1428, but a littera de fructibus dated 14 April 1429 states that he had been a papal chaplain for about six months, placing his arrival at the curia sometime in October 1428. He remained in the papal chapel until July 1433. During his years in Rome he, like other members of the chapel, sought to advance his clerical career by petitioning the pope for a number of benefices. Although he still only held the locally collated benefices of St Géry and Laon by 30 April 1430, by 18 September of that year he had obtained the parish church of St Pierre in Tournai.

Pope Martin V died on 20 February 1431 and Gabriele Condulmer was crowned Pope Eugenius IV on 11 March. Traditionally a new pope, in the weeks after his coronation, granted two expectatives to virtually every member of the curia as well as to thousands of petitioners in rolls submitted to him by the rulers and the universities. Very few of the original rolls survive and even the registers where such petitions were copied were apparently destroyed at the end of every papacy. Exceptionally, the roll containing the petitions of the chapel of Eugenius (I-Rvat C.S.703), dated 24 March 1431, has been preserved, which gave rise to the idea that Eugenius had taken a special interest in his singers. Du Fay's two expectatives were to unnamed benefices; later documents identify them as canonicates at Tournai and at St Donatian, Bruges, although it was a long time before he took up either position.

In August 1431 he received a canonicate at Lausanne with the proviso that he resign the benefice at St Pierre, Tournai. On his resignation that post was requested by one Jacobus de Werp, whose letter is the sole source of the information that Du Fay was the son of a priest and a single woman. In the end the benefice was awarded instead to another papal singer, Gilles Laury. In 1433 Du Fay obtained for a short time the Benedictine priory of Cossonay, near Lausanne, which he resigned in exchange for another (unnamed) benefice. That same year he sought a renewal of his right to the two expectatives originally granted him by Eugenius IV in 1431.

Among the works written by Du Fay during his Roman years are the motets Ecclesie militantis, Balsamus et munda cera and Supremum est mortalibus. The first of these has been thought to be for the coronation of Eugenius IV, but neither text nor transmission support that assumption; the second was intended for the distribution of the wax Agnus Dei on 7 April 1431; and the third for the meeting of King Sigismund and the pope on 31 May 1433. The song Quel fronte signorille carries in its only source the annotation that it was written in Rome. Planchart (EMH, 1988) indicated that the Kyrie settings and the earliest hymns belong to the Roman years as well.

The pope's finances were severely depleted as a result of the Council of Basle, which had opened during the year of Eugenius's election, and it is clear that by 1433 the papal chapel was in crisis. Furthermore, Du Fay's own ecclesiastical career seemed also to be stalled. Thus, when Duke Amédée VIII of Savoy sought to recruit him, the composer obtained a leave of absence from the pope. By August 1433 he had left Rome and on 1 February 1434 he is mentioned as maistre de chapelle in Savoy.

He probably arrived at the court sometime before that date, since a week after his arrival the festivities celebrating the wedding of the duke's son, Louis, to Anne de Lusignan, princess of Cyprus, took place. Among the guests were the Duke of Burgundy with his entire retinue, including the Burgundian chapel, and it is likely that the Duke of Savoy had sought Du Fay in order to have in his own chapel a musician of the same calibre as those of the Duke of Burgundy. These festivities are the only documented time that Du Fay, Binchois, Martin le Franc and the blind vielle players of the Duchess of Burgundy were together (Wright, 1975), and therefore the famous reference to their meeting in Martin le Franc's celebrated poem Le champion des dames can be traced to this occasion (see illustration). By July 1435 Du Fay had returned to the papal chapel, which was then in Florence.

Du Fay developed close ties to the Savoy family. Their musical establishment was not large, but it had a number of competent musicians among its chaplains and minstrels. The duke sought to provide Du Fay with some benefices and may have had a hand in his receiving those in Lausanne and Cossonay. By 29 July 1434 he had obtained the parish church of St Loup, Versoix, and the duke nominated him to a canonicate in Geneva. The collation of this benefice posed a problem in that the holder had to be a nobleman or a university graduate. Du Fay was a commoner and as late as November 1435 did not have a university degree, which rules out the possibility, discussed in earlier scholarship, that he obtained a law degree from Bologna or Rome. He had not collated the Geneva benefice by February 1436, and there is no evidence that he ever held it. In the meantime a semiprebend at Tournai was granted to him by the pope in early 1436 on the basis of the expectative of 1431, and on 9 September 1436 a new benefice, a canonicate at Tournai, was granted to him by a motu proprio of Eugenius IV.

Guillaume Du Fay with a portative organ, and Binchois with a harp: miniature from Martin le Franc's 'Le champion des dames', 15th century (F-Pn fr.12476, f.98r)

Du Fay was received as a canon of Tournai, with Grenon acting as his representative, on 12 November 1436. The quick collation of the benefice could be due to his having been a local cleric and also to his having paved the way with the Cambrai authorities not long before his nomination. In August 1434 he had been granted leave from the court of Savoy to visit his mother in Cambrai, and in October of that year was among the distinguished visitors presented with gifts of bread and wine by the cathedral chapter. Shortly after his collation of the Cambrai canonicate he resigned his other benefice at Cambrai, that in St Géry, which he had held since the beginning of his career. Like the Geneva benefice, the canonicate at Cambrai was for a man with a law degree, and for the first time in a papal letter of 5 May 1437 Du Fay is mentioned as having a Bachelor of Law degree, which he must have obtained by papal fiat.

No works by Du Fay can be placed with certainty during his first sojourn at Savoy, although it has been suggested that the ballade Se la face ay pale comes from that period (Fallows, 1982). A number of important works date from his final stay in the papal chapel: these include Nuper rosarum flores, for the dedication of S Maria del Fiore, Florence, on 25 May 1436, the plainchant prose Nuper almos rose flores, for the same occasion (Wright, 1994), and the two other Florentine works, Mirandas parit and Salve flos Tusce. The song C'est bien raison, written for the Duke of Ferrara, may date from this period, but it may otherwise be an earlier work, from 1433 (Fallows, 1982; Lockwood).

Du Fay left the papal chapel at the end of May 1437 and returned to Savoy. In August of that year he was present at a meeting of the chapter in Lausanne, and in April 1438 the Cambrai chapter named him and Robert Auclou as delegates to the Council of Basle. Du Fay had also maintained good relations with the house of Burgundy, and in May 1438, probably under pressure from the new provost, Bishop Jean of Burgundy, the chapter of St Donatian in Bruges granted Du Fay the canonicate that Eugenius IV had requested for him in 1431.

Relations between Eugenius IV and the Council of Basle, which had been tense since the pope's election, deteriorated rapidly between 1436 and 1439. On 18 September 1437 Eugenius attempted to dissolve the Council and open a new one in Bologna, and finally on 8 January 1438 a council sponsored by the pope opened in Ferrara. On 14 February the council fathers who remained in Basle elected Du Fay's former patron, Cardinal Louis Aleman, president of the Council of Basle, and the following day Eugenius anathematized any decision by the Council. The impasse lasted over a year, but on 25 June 1439 the Council declared Eugenius deposed, and in November elected in his place Duke Amédée VIII of Savoy as Pope Felix V, thus creating a new schism. Du Fay, probably realizing that this conflict between his two principal patrons threatened his most important benefices in Cambrai and Bruges, left the court of Savoy even before the deposition of Eugenius IV. By 6 July 1439 Du Fay had entered the service of the Duke of Burgundy, which most likely means that he had reached northern France by then; the earliest record of his presence at Cambrai is his attendance at the general chapter of the cathedral on 9 December 1439.

Only one work can be securely dated to his second stay in Savoy, the motet Magnanime gentis, composed to celebrate the peace between Louis, Prince of Piedmont, and his brother Robert, Count of Geneva, signed at Berne on 3 May 1438. It has been proposed that the sequence Isti sunt due olive dates from this period, because it is based on a plainchant melody used only in the dioceses of Lausanne and Geneva (Planchart, EMH, 1988).

Du Fay remained at Cambrai from December 1439 to March 1450, constituting the longest period of residence in one place to this point in his life. A number of former members of the papal chapel were residents of Cambrai at this time, connected not only with the cathedral but also with the churches of St Géry and Ste Croix. Du Fay's life in the 1440s is extensively documented in the cathedral records (see Wright, 1975, and Planchart, EMH, 1988, for the most important aspects of his work during this decade). He took an active part in the administration of the cathedral and, together with Nicolas Grenon and Symon Mellet, began an ambitious project to revise the liturgical books of the cathedral and to compose and assemble a large repertory of polyphonic music for use in the services. For a number of years, beginning in 1442, he was maître des petits vicaires. As the schism worsened he resigned his benefices in Versoix and Lausanne (1442). On 23 April 1444 his mother died and was buried in the cathedral, and on 14 August 1445 he moved to the house of the late canon Paul Beye, which he would retain until his death.

From the beginning of his reception as a canon of St Donatian he had trouble with the chapter over the collection of his revenues. The relationship worsened steadily despite the support of the Duke of Burgundy, and in October 1447 Du Fay resigned the canonicate at St Donatian and was installed as a canon of Ste Waudru in Mons, which he had visited, for the purpose of attending chapter meetings, during his time at Cambrai.

Much of what Du Fay wrote between 1439 and 1450 is lost, and what survives presents problems in terms of dating and transmission. Works from this period include two isorhythmic motets, Moribus et genere and Fulgens iubar, the first probably written in 1442 for the visit of Bishop Jean of Burgundy to Cambrai, and the second dated either 1442 (Fallows, 1982) or 1447 (Planchart, 1995). The song Seigneur Leon was probably written as a homage to Leonello d'Este on his accession as Marquis of Ferrara in 1442, and the Missa S Antonii de Padua, probably composed for the dedication of Donatello's altar in the basilica of S Antonio in Padua on 13 June 1450 (Fallows, 1982), thus dates from the end of this period. Planchart (EMH, 1988; 1995) proposed that five Proper cycles, which he now accepts as authentic works, were composed as part of a set of six masses (one largely lost) for the weekly series of votive masses of the Order of the Golden Fleece established by the Duke of Burgundy at the Ste Chapelle in Dijon.

Planchart (EMH, 1988) also presented evidence that, in conjunction with the revision of the Cambrai liturgical books, Du Fay undertook the compilation and composition of an extensive set of polyphonic Ordinaries and Propers for the cathedral, copied into four volumes by Symon Mellet in 1449 (Wright, 1975), and which may have prompted a large payment from the chapter to Du Fay in 1452.

With the death of Pope Eugenius IV on 23 February 1447 and the election of Nicholas V the tension between Basle and Rome began to subside. On 7 April 1449 Felix V abdicated the schismatic papacy; the Council of Basle elected Nicholas V on 19 April and dissolved itself on 25 April. By May 1450 Du Fay had left Cambrai. He is known to have been in Turin from 26 May to 1 June 1450, and Fallows (1982) has proposed that he and his companions were on their way to Padua to sing his Missa S Antonii de Padua. By 15 December he was back in Cambrai, and on 4 March 1451 he attended the chapter meeting at Ste Waudru in Mons, at which time the Order of the Golden Fleece was having its annual meeting in that city. A letter from Louis of Savoy to the composer, dated 22 October (?1451), thanking him for a gift of cloth and referring to him as conseiller et maistre de chapelle, indicates that Du Fay had restored his connection with the court of Savoy. On 21 April 1452 the Cambrai chapter voted to pay him the equivalent of an entire year's income from his prebend in recognition of his musical services. Shortly after that he left Cambrai and travelled to Savoy, where he was to spend the next six years.

In contrast with the earlier period in Cambrai, documentary information for Du Fay during his last sojourn in Savoy between 1452 and 1458 is very limited. The accounts of the chapel itself, which survive complete from 1449 to the end of the century (Bouquet), pass over him in total silence, but in an autograph quittance of 8 November 1455 Du Fay referred to himself as magister capellae of the duke. The accounts of the tesoreria generale note a gift of livery to him in January 1455 without mentioning his status, and a letter from Pope Nicholas V to Duke Louis of Savoy also refers to Du Fay as magister capellae, but it is clear that his position in the Savoy chapel was largely ceremonial and that he was viewed as private counsellor and a friend of the ducal family. A letter (dated by Fallows at 22 January 1456) from Du Fay to Lorenzo de' Medici refers to a recent meeting with the court of France (including most likely Jean de Ockeghem), probably at the signing of the treaty of St Pourçain in 1455, and mentions his recent composition of some songs and four lamentations on the fall of Constantinople. Both Du Fay's letter and that of Nicholas V indicate that the composer was apparently trying to find patronage or a benefice that would allow him to remain in Savoy or in Italy in his old age. In the event no substantial benefice was available and in September of 1458 he was in Besançon, on his journey back to Cambrai. By October 1458 he had arrived in Cambrai where, apart from a few short journeys largely connected with his canonicate at Ste Waudru, he was to spend the rest of his life.

Two works can be securely placed in this period in Savoy. The first is the lamentation for the fall of Constantinople, O tres piteulx/Omnes amici eius, and the other is the set of plainchants for a new feast, the 'Recollection omnium festorum Beate Marie Virginis', established by a foundation of Michel de Beringhen at Cambrai, and for which some of the texts were written by Gilles Carlier (EGIDIUS CARLERIUS). However, a number of other works surely date from these years as well, most likely among them the Missa 'Se la face ay pale', and a number of chansons composed on texts by poets of the circle of Charles d'Orléans, who were present at St Pourçain in 1455. These songs include Malheureulx cueur and Les douleurs. His only late Italian song, Dona gentile, must also date from this period.

On his return to Cambrai Du Fay resumed his activities as a canon of the cathedral, becoming master of the petits vicaires in 1459, and was master of the petit coffre for a number of years. The cathedral accounts also indicate that he arranged for Symon Mellet to copy a considerable amount of polyphonic music for the cathedral. Furthermore, he renewed contact with Guillaume Modiator, called Malbecque, a colleague from the papal chapel, who was his receiver for a small benefice he had in Watiebraine (near Soignies), and perhaps through him came to know Johannes Regis, who succeeded Malbecque as Du Fay's receiver when Malbecque died in 1465. In 1460 Du Fay took part in negotiations, ultimately unsuccessful, to appoint Regis magister puerorum at Cambrai.

The composer renewed his ties with the court of Burgundy. In 1457 Duke Philip 'the Good' requested permission from King Charles VII to recruit in France for a crusade; this may have been the occasion for the writing of the combinative chanson Il sera pour vous/L'homme armé, which mentions Simon le Breton, a Burgundian chaplain, who was listed as one of the chaplains to accompany the crusade. The work is preserved anonymously in the Mellon Chansonnier (US-NHu 91), and Planchart considers that the only composer close enough to Simon and whose style the chanson resembles is Du Fay (although see MORTON, ROBERT for a different opinion). It may also be that the L'homme armé masses by both Du Fay and Ockeghem date from about this period.

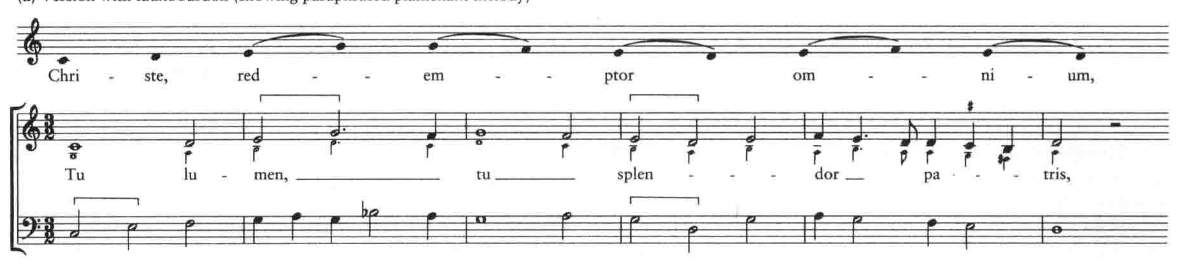
During this last period in Cambrai Du Fay developed a close friendship with a fellow canon, Pierre de Ranchicourt, and when the latter was made Bishop of Arras in 1463 he retained rooms in Du Fay's house and visited him often. Other visitors included Tinctoris (in 1460) and Ockeghem (in 1463). One of Du Fay's motets was sung on the occasion of a visit by Charles the Bold to Cambrai in 1460; on a later visit, a tense meeting between the courts of Burgundy and France in 1468, Du Fay may have met with both Ockeghem and Busnoys. The dedication of Cambrai Cathedral in 1472 also brought a number of visitors to the city, probably including Compère, whose motet Omnium bonorum plena, which mentions Du Fay, was most likely composed for this occasion (Montagna). Planchart (1972, 1993) has argued that Du Fay's Missa 'Ave regina celorum' was used for the dedication, even though it was probably originally intended as a mass for his own obit. In addition to the visitors, he kept in contact with Rome and Florence, as is shown by correspondence between him and Antonio Squarcialupi, and by documentary evidence that he sent music to Rome.

At the end of his career Du Fay had a relatively small number of benefices. He retained his canonicates at Cambrai and at Ste Waudru, as well as the parish church in Wattebraine. A canonicate at Condé was exchanged for a chaplaincy at Ohain (Belgium). In 1470 he bought some land in Beersel to provide an income for the establishment of his obit on 5 August, and in 1472 he supplemented the fund by the purchase of a smaller piece of land in Wodecq. He drew up his will in July 1474 and died on 24 November of that year. He had requested that as he lay dying the cathedral singers should sing his Ave regina celorum, but owing to the shortness of time this could not be carried out and the antiphon was sung at his obsequies instead. The will and its execution reveal that Du Fay died a wealthy man but with no close relatives. The year after his death Mellet copied a number of lamentations by Busnoys, Hemart and Ockeghem; these are lost, but were possibly composed in memory of Du Fay.

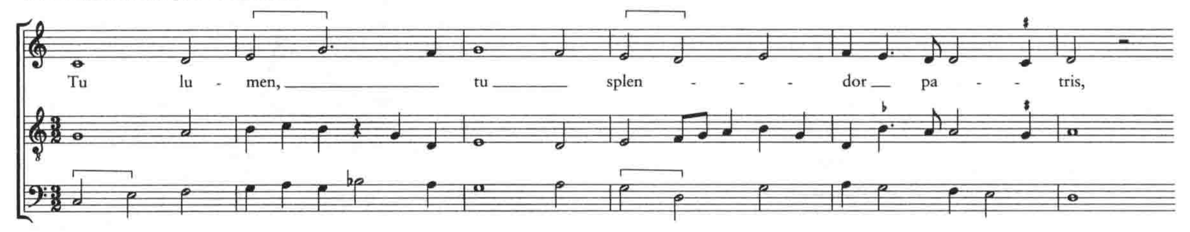
A number of works can be dated to this last period in Cambrai. There is strong evidence that the Missa 'L'homme armé' was written between 1459 and 1461. The Missa 'Ecce ancilla' was copied into the Cambrai choirbook in 1463 or 1464, the troped antiphon Ave regina celorum in 1464 or 1465, and the Missa 'Ave regina celorum', probably begun after Du Fay established his obit in 1470, was copied at Cambrai in 1473 or 1474. Fallows (1982) suggested that the rondeau En triumphant might be Du Fay's response to the death of Binchois in 1460. Payments to Symon Mellet point to the existence of a number of late works that are now lost, including a Missa pro defunctis. Furthermore, there are references as late as 1507 to the existence of an Officium defunctorum that the Order of the Golden Fleece sang as a work of Du Fay (Prizer).

Two representations of Du Fay have survived: one is the well-known illumination in a copy of Martin le Franc's Le champion des dames (F-Pn fr.12476), and the other is an image of the composer kneeling, carved on his funeral monument. The anonymous illuminator of Le champion des dames probably knew the composer, as his work has been identified by art historians in manuscripts copied for Cambrai, notably the breviary of Paul Beye. The right side of the composer's face in the funeral monument has suffered some damage and abrasions, since the stone was used as a well cover after the destruction of the cathedral, but the images, although simplified likenesses, clearly depict the same person.



2. Posthumous reputation. Throughout his life Du Fay was regarded as the leading composer of his age. Most of his career spanned a period of relative stylistic stability, and he was largely successful in incorporating new stylistic traits that came to the fore during his life, including the contenance angloise of the 1430s, the scoring and contrapuntal techniques found in the music of the master of the Missa 'Caput', and some of the elements of the music of Ockeghem and the young Busnoys. In doing so he achieved an extraordinary synthesis of the musical language of the mid-15th century while retaining a number of older traits, particularly in his use of chromaticism. The period immediately following his death, however, was one of relatively fast stylistic change and Du Fay's music seems not to have made a large impact on that of composers of Josquin's generation. Few works from that generation use Du Fay's music as a source, a notable exception being Guillaume Faugues's Missa 'Le serviteur', based on one of Du Fay's late rondeaux. Equally telling is the virtual absence of Du Fay's music from most sources produced around 1500, particularly the early printed anthologies of secular and sacred music. And yet there are documented performances of his work in Brussels as late as 1507 (Prizer), Cambrai in 1515 (Wright, 1978) and until 1535 (Planchart, 1995). In addition, theorists continued to cite several of his works until close to the middle of the 16th century. His name continued to be mentioned as one of the important composers of his age by theorists and historians until the beginning of the scholarly recovery of medieval music in the 19th century, although it is unlikely that most 17th- and 18th-century writers, with the possible exception of Padre G.B. Martini, knew a note of his music. In the same manner, works dealing with the history of the church in France continued to mention him as a churchman, with no awareness of his importance as a composer.

3. Works: general. Du Fay cultivated virtually all genres of polyphonic music known in his day and his approach to composition varied slightly depending on the genre. His works include songs in the formes fixes, plainchant settings where the chant is paraphrased in the cantus or another of the upper voices, freely-composed settings (cantilenas) of liturgical, non-liturgical or ceremonial texts and cantus-firmus compositions including motets and settings of the Ordinary of the Mass. An important subcategory of plainchant settings is formed by pieces composed in fauxbourdon, where the cantus and tenor are written out but a third voice replicates the cantus line a 4th below.



In terms of compositional approach there are not always marked differences between the first three of the four categories mentioned above. In virtually all cases Du Fay's point of departure was a cantus-tenor contrapuntal framework expanded by one or two voices. In the case of the plainchant settings the voice that elaborates the chant is the cantus of such a framework. In the cantus-firmus works Du Fay began early on to utilize a double tenor as part of the framework with the cantus, sometimes

Ex.1 Christe, redemptor omnium/Ex Patre

(a) Version with fauxbourdon (showing paraphrased plainchant melody)

(b) Version with composed contratenor

conflating both tenors into a solus tenor. This is the texture prevalent in virtually all the four-voice isorhythmic motets and the cantus-firmus masses.

There are works where the categories are blurred. The isorhythmic motet Supremum est mortalibus has sections in simple fauxbourdon, some of the cantilenas present complex rhythmic surfaces comparable to those of the isorhythmic motets, and some of the songs make use of cantus-firmus procedures in contexts so simple and compressed as to appear ironic. O tres piteulx/Omnes amici eius is a hybrid of cantilena and motet, and in the late works such as Ave regina celorum (tentatively dated 1463) and the masses 'Ave regina celorum' and 'Ecce ancilla' the techniques of cantus firmus, plainchant paraphrase and free composition are fused in a remarkable synthesis.

The hallmarks of Du Fay's style are a balanced and carefully wrought melodic writing style that early on consisted of a well-articulated succession of small motivic cells and became considerably more spun out in the 1440s; a clear and transparent contrapuntal structure with well-defined cadences, closely tied to the rhetorical structure of the text (prompting a number of scholars, beginning with Besseler, 1950, to consider his music as an important step towards the emergence of tonal harmony); and a rich rhythmic surface that retained some of the layering of fast and slow motion characteristics of much late medieval music, even though it became more and more homogeneous and flowing in the later works. In early works the rhythmic activity and the small motifs articulating the melodies call attention to themselves, while in the later music both are subsumed into the smooth flow of sonorities. Finally, an important aspect of Du Fay's writing that links it with the music of his predecessors and early contemporaries but separates it from later music is the discursive use of chromatic alteration (for discussion of this see Boone, 1987 and 1996, and Brothers, 1997).

4. Chant settings. More than half of Du Fay's surviving works consist of chant settings, where one of the voices, usually the cantus, follows the contour, text and phrasing of a plainchant melody with a small amount of elaboration. This melody is supported by a tenor and the texture is expanded by a contratenor, or, in the simplest cases, by fauxbourdon. A few works survive both with fauxbourdon and with a composed contratenor (ex.1).

This kind of polyphony was probably heard not as an independent composition but as an elaboration of the plainchant. It is found in the work of other composers of the late 14th century and the early 15th, and is related to English discant and the practice of improvised polyphony on a chant. Still, an examination of the tenor in ex.1 or a comparison of the two elaborations shows the skill and subtlety with which Du Fay handled the simplest material. His works in this manner cover most of the liturgical categories: they include all the surviving hymns, sequences and Magnificat settings, most of the Office antiphon and responsory settings, some Glorias and the possible Kyrie cycle (Planchart, EMH, 1988). Until recently it was thought that all of Du Fay's chant settings came from the early part of his career, but the identification of the Missa S Antonii de Padua and the masses for the Order of the Golden Fleece show that he continued writing such works well into the 1450s: the Propers in these pieces are all chant settings, albeit with considerably more elaboration both in the chant-derived voice and in the newly composed parts, which are occasionally expanded to include a second contratenor. From the description of the lost Missa pro defunctis it seems that this work was a series of chant settings as well.

5. Cantilena settings. Du Fay's cantilenas have comparatively few antecedents: they go back no further than the music of English and northern Italian composers working at the end of the 14th century. His works cover a relatively wide stylistic field: at one extreme they closely resemble simple chant elaborations (except that here none of the voices is derived from plainchant), as in the earliest of the surviving Ave regina settings (v, 120), and at the other they match the complexity of the isorhythmic motets, as is the case with Inclita stella maris. Within these wide boundaries they present a considerable variety of textures and some, such as Flos florum, are stylistically close to Du Fay's more florid secular works. Formally the cantilenas are his freest and least predictable works and a number are unique not only in his output but in the entire 15th-century repertory. In a sense, more than a specific genre, these works represent a group of closely related compositional procedures and strategies that Du Fay employed also in the songs and in isolated settings of the Ordinary of the Mass. Texts set in this way may be liturgical, devotional or ceremonial, but virtually all are in Latin. The exceptions are the well-known Vergene bella and O tres piteulx/Omnes amici eius. Closely related to the cantilenas is the famous troped Ave regina celorum (v, 124), but this is a hybrid work incorporating cantus-firmus procedure, his only work that can be classified as a fully fledged example of the new kind of motet cultivated by composers such as Ockeghem, Busnoys and Regis. It represents a summation of all Du Fay's compositional strategies, including paraphrase, cantus firmus and extended passages of free composition that are reminiscent of his cantilenas.

6. MOTETS. Under this heading are considered only those works that Du Fay would have termed a motet, that is, what is now termed an isorhythmic motet. In them Du Fay was working within a tradition that went back over a century before his first efforts in the genre. It is clear that he was aware of the work of Vitry and Machaut, but that his immediate models were largely works from northern Italy and England, particularly those of Ciconia and Dunstaple (Cumming, 1987, 1994; Allsen; Lütteken). Du Fay's motets have been studied in considerable detail because, beyond their intrinsic musical interest, the majority of them can be associated with specific places and thus provide valuable biographical information. The earliest, Vasilissa ergo gaude, dates from 1420, and the last, Fulgens iubar, possibly from 1447. The earlier motets show Du Fay as an imaginative and able follower of Ciconia, emulating the brilliant sound of the older composer's works but adapting his techniques to produce denser contrapuntal textures that derive from northern French music of the late 14th century. Most of the motets employ isorhythm in all voices, and several use multiple tenors, some derived from plainchant (Ecclesie militantis; Nuper rosarum flores), and some with a newly composed second tenor (Moribus et genere; Fulgens iubar ecclesie). In the motets where there is more than one talea to a given color the isorhythm is extended to all voices within each section, and in the late motets extensive use is made of isomelic returns (melodic and textual recurrences) to articulate the structure of the work. Several of the early motets have an extended introitus before the entrance of the tenor voice and the start of the isorhythmic structure, and in Supremum est mortalibus the introitus and several interludes are in fauxbourdon. In the latest motets the introitus is incorporated into the isorhythm itself by the inclusion of a series of rests at the beginning of the tenor that are then taken into the talea pattern. A few also conclude with a short coda outside the isorhythmic structure. Du Fay cited the impressive coda of Nuper rosarum flores at the end of his last motet, Fulgens iubar. In all the motets the plainchant tenors are chosen for their emblematic symbolism, and in Supremum est mortalibus a second chant, the antiphon Isti sunt due olive, is cited for the same reason. All the motets subject the tenor to mensural transformations that result in proportional relationships between the sections; in a number of cases these relationships also carry a symbolic meaning, as is the case with Nuper rosarum flores, where the proportions between the sections, 6:4:2:3, replicate the reported measurements of the Temple of Solomon (Wright, 1994). Just as the earlier motets appear to be Du Fay's response to the music of Ciconia, the later ones, particularly those after Nuper rosarum flores, appear to be his response to English music, not only the motets of Dunstaple but the four-part writing of the 'Caput' master.

7. MUSIC FOR THE MASS. Du Fay's earliest settings of the Mass show that early on he was acquainted with the music of Loqueville and the French traditions of the late 14th century, but also with the music of Ciconia, Zacar da Teramo and the Lantins. His earliest work in this genre is a Kyrie-Sanctus-Agnus cycle, related to a work of Loqueville and probably composed for the Council of Konstanz (Planchart, 1993). Most of his mass music from before the 1440s consists of isolated movements or pairs composed as plainchant settings or in free settings related to the cantilenas or the secular works. Only a few of these movements use a cantus firmus, and the organization of the Sanctus-Agnus pairs is based on alternations between duos and full-texture sections.

Two complete mass cycles survive from before 1440: these are the Missa sine nomine ['Resvelliés vous'] and the Missa S Jacobi. The former shares musical material and gestures with the ballade Resvelliés vous, and the Kyrie, Gloria, Sanctus and Agnus are interrelated by opening gestures (including 'plainchant' intonations written by Du Fay) and extended hocket sections at the end. The Credo shows less of a connection to the other movements and its place in the cycle has been questioned (Hamm, 1960), but it too echoes aspects of the ballade. The Missa S Jacobi is a plenary mass, where an Ordinary interrelated by textural alternations and mensural shifts is complemented by motet-like settings of the Propers, ending with a simple fauxbourdon for the communion, which may be the earliest surviving example of the genre.

In 1439 or early 1440 Du Fay undertook to write the extended cycle of Propers for the Order of the Golden Fleece (identified as his work by Feininger, 1947, and Planchart, EMH, 1988). During the following decade he was concerned with the revision of the liturgy at Cambrai, as discussed above. Most of the music from this period is lost, but its character may be surmised from the one surviving cycle written (according to Fallows, 1982), towards the end of the 1440s. It was published as the Missa S Antonii Viennensis (ii, 47), but it has been shown to be the Missa S Antonii de Padua that is cited in letters and in treatises by Spataro, Tinctoris and Gaffurius (Fallows, 1982). Furthermore, Planchart (EMH, 1988) has suggested that it is in fact a double plenary cycle with two sets of Propers, one for St Anthony of Padua and a second for St Francis. The Propers are plainchant paraphrases; the Ordinary begins with a plainchant paraphrase Kyrie but continues with four free movements in cantilena style that makes conspicuous use of rhythmic complexities, traits also found in the cycles for the Order of the Golden Fleece.

In the 1450s Du Fay turned his attention to the English tradition of mass cycles based on a cantus firmus, and the last four masses securely attributed to him belong in this category. The first of these, the Missa 'Se la face ay pale', based on the tenor of his own ballade, is built along the lines of his late isorhythmic motets and shows his awareness of works such as the Missa 'Caput'. Head motifs and carefully placed returns of musical material from one movement to another are all present in these works. In the Missa 'Se la face ay pale' some of these traits clearly recall the isomelic returns in the motets, while in later masses the returning material is presented in a more varied and flexible form. Similarly the later masses move further away from the layered textures of the motet and towards the more homogeneous musical texture found in the music of Ockeghem and Busnoys. Greater use of imitation in the later masses means that melodic elements of the tenor appear in the other voices as well. The Missa 'L'homme armé', Du Fay's most extended work, shows surprising returns to the rhythmic intricacy found in some of the works of the 1440s, and in the masses 'Ecce ancilla' and 'Ave regina' the tenor (and sometimes the bass in the latter) is presented with its antiphon text instead of the text of the Ordinary. The Missa 'Ave regina' also borders on parody since it uses not only a cantus firmus but contains extended citations of the entire polyphonic fabric of his motet of 1463. This mass appears to be a deliberate summation of virtually all Du Fay's approaches to mass composition.

8. Plainchant melodies. In 1457 Egidius Carlerius and Du Fay were commissioned to produce the texts and plainchants for a Marian feast that Michel de Beringhen was instituting in his will, the 'Recollectio omnium festorum Beate Marie Virginis'. They adapted some Marian chants for the feast, but by and large wrote entirely new pieces for the day and night Office as well as for parts of the Mass. Du Fay's plainchants were identified and studied by Haggh (1988). The antiphons and responsories of the Office are ordered numerically by mode and each melody is composed with careful attention to modal structure in terms of division into tetrachords and pentachords (a trait also found in the songs). Planchart (EMH, 1988) noted that Du Fay may be the composer of a plainchant setting of the introit for St Anthony Abbot, Scitote quoniam, found only in the Cambrai books, and Wright (1994) attributed to Du Fay the prose of the Mass for the dedication of Florence Cathedral, Nuper almos rose flores.

9. Songs. Du Fay left a large corpus of songs covering all the formes fixes, plus one or two combinative chansons. The majority of the songs are rondeaux, which he composed throughout his career. The ballades are all early works and the few virelais or bergerettes are relatively late. Both of the combinative chansons are also late. A small number of works to Italian texts, which do not follow any of the known poetic forms, are also early apart from the exceptional rondeau Dona gentile, which must date from the 1450s. Most of the songs have a three-part texture using cantus, tenor and contratenor, but a number of four-voice works are more or less evenly distributed throughout his career. In a few cases, such as in Pour l'amour de ma doulce amye, the fourth voice is not by Du Fay. Imitation is present in both early and late works, but becomes slightly more prevalent in the later pieces, particularly between the cantus and the tenor. Straightforward canons and mensuration canons also appear, although infrequently, in early and late works. In most sources text is set only to the cantus, although a considerable number of pieces have text also in the tenor and some in the contratenor. In the late songs the imitation between cantus and tenor invites text underlay of the latter; however, it is clear that underlay in the sources was frequently a matter of scribal preference. The early songs show an extraordinary range of textures, particularly in terms of rhythmic and motivic organization, and some of them are quite idiosyncratic (for example Resvelliés vous, Ma belle dame souveraine, Hé compaignons). The subject matter of the texts also ranges from courtly love to scenes of bourgeois conviviality. Textures in the late songs are smoother and the rhythmic and melodic differentiation between the voices is less pronounced. The texts of the later works are in general closer to the stylistic canons of courtly love poetry. A few of the very late songs, such as Dieu gard la bone, show that Du Fay was aware of the style of the secular works of Ockeghem and particularly Busnoys. Du Fay's text settings throughout his career pay exquisite attention to the detail in the poetry and to rhetorical and poetic structure, and show an acute concern for the tonal and melodic balance of his lines.

10. Lost works. A number of works by Du Fay that are mentioned in 15th- and 16th-century records are no longer extant; others probably survive anonymously and are unidentifiable. The lost works include three lamentations on the fall of Constantinople, mentioned by Du Fay in his letter to the Medici, and a number of works copied by Symon Mellet in the 1460s, namely a Magnificat in the 7th mode (1462–3), the hymn O quam glorifica (1463–4), a prose for St Mary Magdalene (Laus tibi Christe, 1463–4) and the Missa pro defunctis (1470); this latter was associated in later performances with a lost Office for the Dead, as discussed above.

The identification of the cycle of weekly Propers for the Order of the Golden Fleece also points to a lost cycle for the Lady Mass, of which only fragments survive. The possibility that Du Fay wrote a Proper cycle for Cambrai in the 1440s would also imply a number of lost works. Evidence for the existence of these Propers is found not only in the anonymous fragments that have been attributed to Du Fay by Feininger and Planchart, but also in the decision by the Cambrai chapter in 1515 that an Epiphany motet being sung at that time should be replaced by another 'drawn from the works of the late Du Fay' (Wright, 1975). A Mass for St Anthony Abbot mentioned in the execution of Du Fay's will has been identified with an anonymous work surviving in Trent 89 (I-TRmp), but the work lacks some movements.

Finally, one or possibly two works of music theory are now lost: these are a Musica, cited in the notes of another music treatise, and a Tractatus de musica mensurata et de proportionibus, which Fétis reported seeing with an ascription to Du Fay, and which was sold to an English bookseller in 1824 and has never been traced.

11. Problems of attribution. Even in the 15th century a number of works circulated with incorrect or conflicting attributions to Du Fay. This created a particular problem because one of the works incorrectly ascribed to him, the English Missa 'Caput', was available early on in a modern edition and assumed a central position in the evaluation of his style. Further problems were created by the often unexplained rejection in Besseler's edition of a number of works with ascriptions in the sources, particularly hymns and songs. A number of these rejections have been shown to be the result of stylistic analysis based on faulty transcriptions of the music, or of historical assumptions not supported by any evidence (Planchart, EMH, 1988; Fallows, 1995).

A number of anonymous works have been attributed to Du Fay by modern scholars. Hamm's attributions (1960) of a number of sequences, the motet Elizabeth Zacharie, and a Mass Ordinary in I-Rvat S Pietro B80, have been tentatively accepted by most scholars, and Allsen provided further evidence for the case of Elizabeth Zacharie. Feininger's attributions of the masses 'Veterem hominem', 'Christus surrexit' and 'Puisque je vis' have been rejected. The first of these is a twin of the Missa 'Caput' and was known to Thomas Morley as an English work; the second is based on a German Leise and is part of a little-understood repertory of German masses; the third has remained largely undiscussed in later scholarship. The Missa 'La mort de St Gothard', ascribed to Du Fay briefly by Feininger and accepted without explanation by Besseler (ii, 105), is probably a work of Johannes Martini (Nitschke).

In addition Feininger (1947) attributed to Du Fay a number of Proper cycles in Trent 88 (I-TRmp). These attributions were initially treated with considerable scepticism but a considerable amount of new evidence has been uncovered confirming most of Feininger's attributions (Planchart, 1972; EMH, 1988; 1995; Fallows, 1982). Later attempts to question them (Gerber, 1994) appear to be based on faulty analysis.

The difficulty of attributing any work on the basis of purely stylistic criteria is illustrated by the case of the Mass for St Anthony Abbot, whose attribution to Du Fay is still debated: Fallows rejected it on stylistic grounds, whereas Planchart (EMH, 1988) believes that its liturgical connection with Cambrai means that it can be counted as part of Du Fay's oeuvre.

12. SOURCES. Du Fay's reputation in the 15th century is attested by the large number of surviving works and by the geographical spread of manuscripts containing his music. His works survive in nearly 100 manuscripts originating in Austria, Bohemia, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Poland, Scotland and Spain, dating from the second quarter of the 15th century to the first quarter of the 16th. Particularly important sources for his music are the early Italian anthologies, GB-Ob Can.misc.213, I-Bc Q15 and I-Bu 2216, which transmit virtually all his surviving music up to about 1435. Much of his ceremonial music appears also in a carefully copied source, I-MOe α.X.1.11, copied in Ferrara in about 1445, and some of the very late works appear in a source relatively close to the composer, B-Br 5557. For much of the music that he wrote in the 1440s and 50s, however, we have only copies very distantly related to the composer, such as the Trent codices, although in the case of the songs, manuscripts copied in the Loire valley and in Savoy transmit sound versions of his works.

13. EDITIONS. Du Fay's music first became available in modern transcriptions as examples in studies by Kiesewetter, Rochlitz and Ambros. Important works were edited by Haberl, in several of the volumes of music from the Trent codices in the DTÖ series, and in Stainer's influential edition of music from GB-Ob Can.misc.213. Important editions of sacred and secular works were published by Besseler (1932) and Gerber (1937). A systematic publication of the complete works was begun by Guillaume De Van, with the cantilena motets (1947), the isorhythmic motets (1947) and two masses (1949). On De Van's death Besseler took over the editorship in 1951 and completed the edition in 1966, reissuing the works edited by De Van. Besseler's edition, however, is marred by typographical errors, incomplete transcriptions, unreported changes in mensural reduction and lacunae in the critical reports. A number of those occurring in the second and fourth volumes of the edition were corrected by Bockholdt (1960); the sixth volume was revised and corrected by Fallows in 1995.

WORKS

Editions: Guillelmi Dufay opera omnia, ed. H. Besseler, CMM, i/1–6 (1951–66) [with important introduction to each vol.]; CMM, i/6 rev. D. Fallows (1995) with commentary in MSD, xlvii (1995) [vol., p.]

Die frühen Messenkompositionen von Guillaume Dufay, ed. R. Bockholdt (Tutzing, 1960), ii [B]

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
		MASSES AND MASS ORDINARY MOVEMENTS
Missa [sine nomine]	3	ii, 1	Shares musical material with ballade Resvelliés vous; complex transmission pattern
Missa 'Ave regina celorum'	4	iii, 91	c.f.: Marian ant in T
Missa 'Ecce ancilla Domini'	4	iii, 66	c.f.: 'Ecce ancilla Domini' (ant, Annunciation), 'Beata es Maria' (ant, Visitation) in T
Missa 'L'homme armé'	4	iii, 33	c.f.: Fr. monophonic song in T
Missa 'Resvelliés vous' [see Missa sine nomine]
Missa 'Se la face ay pale'	4	iii, 1	c.f.: Du Fay's ballade in T
Missa S Jacobi	3, 4	ii, 17	Feast of St James; int (Mihi autem), Ky, Gl, all (Alleluia, Hispanorum clarens stella), Cr, off (In omnem terram), San, Ag, comm (Vos qui secuti estis); chants paraphrased in cantus of Ordinary or as c.f. in T of Propers.
Kyrie, Gloria, Credo	3	iv, 3 B 24
Kyrie, Sanctus 'Qui ianuas mortis', Agnus Dei	3	iv, 8; v, 155 B 30	San and Ag c.f. 'Vineux'; in a 'cycle' in I-Bc Q15, *see also*VINEUX.
Gloria, Credo	4	iv, 31 B 48
Gloria 'Resurrexit dominus', Credo 'Dic Maria'	4	iv, 20 B 38	Gl: c.f. 'Tu m'as monté' in cantus I; Cr: c.f. 'La vilanella' in cantus I; some MSS have different trope.
Sanctus, Agnus Dei	3	iv, 41 B 64
Sanctus, Agnus Dei	3	iv, 45 B 21

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Sanctus 'Ave verum corpus', Agnus 'Custos et pastor'	4	iv, 53	Scribal pairing; San marked 'papale', Ag trope has papal connections; Ag anon. in source
Kyrie 'Cum jubilo'	3	iv, 67 B 9	cantus paraphrases Kyrie IX
Kyrie 'Cunctipotens genitor'	3	iv, 62 B 13	fauxbourdon setting; cantus paraphrases Kyrie IV; fauxbourdon replaced by composed contratenor in final Kyrie
Kyrie 'Fons bonitatis'	3	iv, 69 B 1	cantus paraphrases Kyrie II
Kyrie 'Fons bonitatis'	3	iv, 70 B 3	cantus II paraphrases Kyrie II
Kyrie 'Jesu redemptor'	3	iv, 65	fauxbourdon setting; cantus paraphrases Kyrie XIV
Kyrie 'Lux et origo'	4	iv, 68 B 8	cantus paraphrases Kyrie I
Kyrie 'Orbis factor'	3	iv, 63 B 5	cantus paraphrases Kyrie XI
Kyrie 'Orbis factor'	3	iv, 64 B 7	cantus II paraphrases Kyrie XI
Kyrie 'Pater cuncta'	3	iv, 61 B 12	cantus paraphrases Kyrie XII
Kyrie 'Rex genitor'	3	iv, 71 B 11	rubric 'In semiduplicis maioris'
Gloria	3	iv, 77 B 35
Gloria [in dominicis]	3	iv, 85 B 16	cantus paraphrases Gloria XI; alternatim setting
Gloria	3	iv, 90 B 59	paired in I-TRmp 92 with Kyrie (iv, 72; see 'Doubtful works'), but ascription of Gloria is unchallenged
Gloria ad modum tube	4	iv, 79	cantus II canonically derived
Gloria de quaremiaux	3	iv, 81 B 31	facs. in B, facing p.31
Gloria dominicale minus	3	iv, 88 B 14	cantus paraphrases Gloria XV; alternatim setting
Gloria in galli cantu	3	iv, 86 B 18	cantus paraphrases Gloria XIV; alternatim setting; possibly intended for 1st Mass of Christmas
Gloria 'Spiritus et alme'	3	iv, 83	cantus paraphrases Gloria IX with trope; alternatim setting
Credo	3	iv, 17	paired in Bc Q15 with Gl by Hugo de Lantins (see 'Doubtful works')

MASS PROPER SETTINGS

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Alleluia, Hispanorum clarens stella	4	ii, 27	all, part of Missa S Jacobi; plainchant (?by Du Fay) in T
Alleluia, Veni Sancte spiritus	3	ii, 71	all, part of Mass for the Holy Ghost (see 'Works attributed to Du Fay by modern scholars'); chant paraphrased in cantus
Confirma hoc Deus	3		off, part of Mass for the Holy Ghost (see 'Works attributed to Du Fay by modern scholars'); chant paraphrased in cantus; anon. in MS but Spataro quoted a passage from it in a letter (1532) as being by Du Fay; ed. in Feininger (1947), 10
Epiphaniam domino canamus	3	v, 8	seq, Epiphany; plainchant paraphrased in cantus
In omnem terram	4	ii, 37	off, part of Missa S Jacobi; c.f. in T
Isti sunt due olive	3	v, 27	seq, St Peter and St Paul; chant paraphrased in a different voice in each verse
Lauda Sion	3	v, 21	seq, Corpus Christi; chant paraphrased in cantus and T in different verses
Letabundus exsultet	3	v, 5	seq, Christmas; chant paraphrased in cantus and T in different verses
Mihi autem nimis	4	ii, 17	int, part of Missa S Jacobi; plainchant in T
Os justi	3		int, confessors, part of Mass for St Francis (see 'Works attributed to Du Fay by modern scholars'); chant paraphrased in cantus; anon. in MS but Spataro quoted a passage from it in a letter (1532) as being by Du Fay; ed. in Feininger, 1947, p.151
Os justi	3		grad, part of Mass for St Anthony of Padua (see 'Works attributed to Du Fay by modern scholars'); chant paraphrased in cantus; anon. in MS but attributed to Du Fay in Spataro's Tractato (1531); ed. in Feininger, p.135
Rex omnipotens	3	v, 13	seq, Ascension; chant paraphrased in cantus and Ct
Veni Sancte Spiritus	3	v, 18	seq, Whitsunday; chant paraphrased in cantus II
Victime paschali laudes	3	v, 11	seq, Easter; chant paraphrased in cantus
Vos qui secuti estis	3	ii, 44	comm, part of Missa S Jacobi; chant paraphrased in cantus

MAGNIFICAT AND BENEDICAMUS DOMINO

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Magnificat tertii et quarti toni	4, 3, 2	v, 91	also ed. I. Pope and M. Kanazawa: The Musical Manuscript Montecassino 871 (Oxford, 1978), no.74
Magnificat quinti toni	3	v, 87	alternatim; sets even-numbered verses after the first
Magnificat sexti toni	3	v, 75	also ascribed to Binchois (erased) and Dunstaple, but by Du Fay
Magnificat octavi toni	2, 3	v, 81
Benedicamus Domino	3	v, 35	chant in T
Benedicamus Domino	3	v, 36

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
		ANTIPHONS
Alma redemptoris mater [i]	3	v, 115	BVM; plainchant in T
Alma redemptoris mater [ii]	3	v, 117	BVM; chant paraphrased in cantus
Anima mea lique facta est	3	v, 113	BVM; chant paraphrased in all voices
Ave regina celorum [i]	3	v, 120	BVM
Ave regina celorum [ii]	3	v, 121	BVM; chant paraphrased in cantus
Ave regina celorum [iii]	4	v, 124	BVM; troped 'Miserere tui'; chant in T, also paraphrased in cantus and Ct
Hic vir despiciens	3	v, 101	chant paraphrased in cantus; fauxbourdon setting
Magi videntes	3	v, 98	chant paraphrased in cantus
O gemma martyrum	3	v, 103	chant paraphrased in cantus
Petrus apostolus et Paulus	3	v, 103	St Peter and St Paul; chant paraphrased in cantus
Propter nimiam caritatem	3	v, 97	chant paraphrased in cantus; fauxbourdon setting
Salva nos, Domine	3	v, 39	chant paraphrased in cantus
Salve regina	4		BVM; ascription to Du Fay questioned in earlier scholarship, more recently reconsidered; ed. in DTÖ, xiv–xv, Jg.vii (1900/R), p.178
Salve sancte pater	3	v, 104	chant paraphrased in cantus
Sapiente filio	3	v, 105	chant paraphrased in cantus; fauxbourdon setting
Si queris miracula	3	v, 106	chant paraphrased in cantus; text and chant by Julian of Speyer
		HYMNS
Ad cenam agni providi	3	v, 47	Easter; odd numbered stanzas; a second version exists with slightly different cantus and T, and with fauxbourdon instead of contratenor. 3 further anon. arrangements of this latter setting, in D-MERa, I-CFm CII, Trent 89 (TRmp)
A solis ortus cardine [= Hostis Herodes impie]
Audi, benigne conditor	3	v, 44	Lent; chant in Ct
Aurea luce et decore roseo [= Doctor egregie, Paule]	3	v, 62	Feast of St Peter and S Paul
Aures ad nostras deitas [i]	3	v, 45	Sundays in Lent
Ave maris stella	3	v, 55	2 versions: one with fauxbourdon, one with composed Ct (separate T and Ct parts in TRmp 92, ed. v, 143, are not by Du Fay)
Christe redemptor omnium, conserva	3	v, 57, 58	All Saints; 2 versions: one with fauxbourdon, one with composed Ct
Christe redemptor omnium, ex Patre	3	v, 40	Christmas; 2 versions: one with fauxbourdon, one with composed Ct
Conditor alme siderum	3	v, 39	Advent; fauxbourdon setting
Deus tuorum militum	3	v, 66	feasts of one martyr; fauxbourdon setting; 2 further anon. versions with new T and Ct (v, 59, 60) may not be by Du Fay
Exultet celum laudibus	3	v, 63	apostolic feasts; 2 versions: one with fauxbourdon, one with composed Ct
Festum nunc celebre	3	v, 139	Ascension; considered inauthentic by some scholars
Hostis Herodes impie	3	v, 42	Epiphany; music also to Christmas text A solis ortus cardine
Iste confessor	3	v, 69	martyrs; fauxbourdon setting; further anon. version with composed Ct stylistically probably by Du Fay (v, 61)
Jesu corona virginum	3	v, 70	feasts of one virgin; fauxbourdon setting; 2 further anon. versions: one with new T and Ct, stylistically probably by Du Fay (v, 62), one with new Ct and B, late 15th century (v, 63)
Jesu nostra redemptio	3	v, 50	Ascension
O lux beata Trinitas	3	v, 52	Trinity; sets odd-numbered stanzas in all sources but one.
Pange lingua gloriosi [i]	3	v, 53	Corpus Christi; chant paraphrased in cantus
Pange lingua gloriosi [ii]	3	v, 140	separate setting from Pange lingua [i]; considered inauthentic by some scholars
Proles de celo prodiit	3	v, 71	St Francis
Sanctorum meritis inclita	3	v, 67	several martyrs
Tibi Christe splendor Patris	3	v, 60	St Michael (angels); fauxbourdon setting
Urbs beata Jerusalem	3	v, 54	Dedication of a church; 2 further anon. versions: one a fauxbourdon reworking of cantus, probably by Du Fay (v, 141), one with new Ct, late 15th century (v, 142)
Ut queant laxis	3	v, 61	St John Baptist
Veni Creator Spiritus	3	v, 51	Pentecost
Vexilla regis prodeunt	3	v, 46	Passiontide; a further anon. fauxbourdon setting (with new T), probably by Du Fay (v, 54)
		ISORHYTHMIC MOTETS
Apostolo glorioso/Cum tua doctrina/ Andreas Christi	5, 4	i, 33	for rededication of church of St Andrew, Patras (1426) or the appointment of Pandolfo Malatesta as archbishop (1424); version for 4vv with solus tenor

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Balsamus et munda cera/Isti sunt agni novelli	4	i, 54	Distribution of the Agnus Dei by Pope Eugenius IV, 7 April 1431
Ecclesie militantis/Sanctorum arbitrio/Bella canunt gentes/ Gabriel/Ecce nomen Domini	5	i, 46	Perhaps for coronation of Pope Eugenius IV (1431), although the texts give no clear indication
Fulgens iubar ecclesie/Puerpera pura parens/Virgo post partum	4	i, 80	Purification of the BVM; perhaps written for the installation of Pierre de Ranchicourt as canon of Cambrai (1447). Acrostic in motetus: PETRUS DE CASTELLO CANTA; refers to Pierre du Castel, a witness at Pierre's installation.
Magnanime gentis/Nexus amictie/ Hec est vera fraternitas	3	i, 76	Peace treaty between Louis of Savoy and Philippe, Count of Geneva (1438)
Moribus et genere/Virgo virga virens/Virgo est electus	4	i, 88	St John the Evangelist; possibly for John of Burgundy's visit to Cambrai, June–Aug 1442
Nuper rosarum flores/Terribilis est	4	i, 70	Dedication of S Maria del Fiore, Florence, by Eugenius IV, 24 March 1436
O gemma, lux et speculum/Sacer pastor Barensium/[Beatus Nicolaus adhuc]	4	i, 29	St Nicholas of Bari
O sancte Sebastiane/O martyr Sebastiane/O quam mira refulsit gratia/Gloria et honore	4	i, 24	St Sebastian
Rite maiorem Jacobum/Artibus summis miseri/Ora pro nobis Dominum	4, 3	i, 38	St James the Great; acrostic in triplum and motetus: ROBERTUS ACLOU CURATUS SANCTI IACOBI; probably 1426–7; version for 3vv with solus tenor
Salve flos Tusce/Vos nunc Etruscorum iubar/Viri mendaces	4	i, 64	In praise of Florence and the women of Florence, probably 1436
Supremum est mortalibus	3	i, 59	Commemorates the meeting between Eugenius IV and King Sigismund (Emperor-elect), 31 May 1433
Vasilissa ergo gaude/Concupivit rex	4	i, 21	On the departure of Cleofe Malatesta, 20 Aug 1420, for her marriage

CANTILENA MOTETS

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Ave virgo que de celis	3	i, 8	seq, BVM
Flos florum	3	i, 6	rhymed prayer; BVM
Gaude virgo mater Christi	3, 4	v, 1	seq, Feast of the Joys of the BVM; contratenor probably not by Du Fay (3vv in I-Bc Q15)
Imperatrix angelorum [see Mirandas parit hec urbs]
Inclita stella maris	4, 3, 2	i, 1	BVM; a canon indicates possibility of performance in several different combinations of voices; cantus II is a mensuration canon
Juvenis qui puellam	3	vi, 15	text is a legal dispute; inc., after 1438
Mirandas parit hec urbs	3	i, 12	In praise of Florence and its ladies; probably 1436; text in TRmp 87 'Imperatrix angelorum'
O beate Sebastiane	3	i, 10	St Sebastian
O proles Hispanie/O sidus Hispanie	4	i, 15	St Anthony of Padua
O tres piteulx/Omnes amici eius	4	vi, 19	lament on the fall of Constantinople; between 1454 and 1457; motet-like texture with cantus firmus
Vergene bella	3	vi, 7	BVM; vernacular devotional work; text by Petrarch

PLAINCHANT MELODIES

Mass Propers

Alleluia, Beati omnes (all); Luce splendida fulgebis (grad); Nuper almos rose flores (seq); Scitote quoniam (int)

antiphons

Angelus mittitur; Anna parit Joachim; Anna stellam matutinam; Antiquum consilium; Ave virgo speciosa; Beata es, Dei genetrix; Femina vetus; Festinat ad cognatam; Gabriel archangelus; Gloriam virginis; Mittitur ad Mariam; Non concava vallium; Salve vellus; Solem justitie; Tenebrae diffugiunt; Tota pulchra es; Vidi speciosam; Virga florens paritura; Virgo mater filium; Virgo puerum sistit

hymns

Gaude redempta; Nuntiat angelus

responsories

Ibo ad montem; O felix virgo; Omnipotens dominus; Scandit ad ethra; Surge propera; Ut audivit precursoris invitatories

Festa genetricis Dei recolentes

SECULAR

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
		Italian
Dona gentile, bella come l'oro	3	vi, 12	music in rondeau form to text apparently adapted from a ballata
Dona, i ardenti ray	3	vi, 10	?ballata; musico-poetic form unclear
La dolce vista	3	vi, 6	ballata
L'alta belleza tua virtute valore	3	vi, 1	ballata; text of volta missing and irregular rhyme in piedi
Invidia nimica	4	vi, 2	Suggestion that only Ct II is by Du Fay, but accepted as genuine by Fallows (1995)
Passato è il tempo omai di quei pensieri	3	vi, 4	ballata
Quel fronte signorille in paradiso	3	vi, 11	musico-poetic form unclear; authenticity questioned by Bent but affirmed by Fallows (1982; 1995)
		ballades
Bien doy servir de volenté entiere	3	vi, 37
Ce jour le doibt, aussi fait la saison	3	vi, 34
C'est bien raison de devoir essaucier	3	vi, 31	to Niccolò d'Este, mentioning a peace treaty, probably 26 April 1433
J'ay mis mon cuer et ma pensee	3	vi, 28	acrostic: ISABETE; perhaps for the wedding of Elisabetta Malatesta da Rimini to Piergentile Varano, 1425
Je me complains piteusement	3	vi, 29	dated 12 July 1425 in only source
Mon chier amy, qu'aves vous empensé	3	vi, 30	possibly to Carlo Malatesta da Rimini on the death of his brother Pandolfo, 3 Oct 1427 (Fallows, 1982)
Resvelliés vous et faites chiere lye	3	vi, 25	for wedding of Carlo Malatesta da Pesaro and Vittoria di Lorenzo Colonna, 23 July 1423
Se la face ay pale [i]	3	vi, 36
		rondeaux
Adieu ces bons vins de Lannoys	3	vi, 50	dated 1426 in only source
Adieu m'amour, adieu ma joye	3	vi, 91
Adyeu, quitte le demeurant	3	vi, 90	1½ lines of text only
Belle plaisant et gracieuse	3	vi, 60
Belle, que vous ay je meffait	3	vi, 65	one stanza of text only
Belle, veulliés moy retenir	3	vi, 52
Belle, vuelliés moy vengier	3	vi, 92
Belle, vuelliés vostre mercy donner	3	vi, 66
Bien veignés vous, amoureuse liesse	3	vi, 69	one stanza of text only; T derived canonically from cantus; Fallows (1995) expressed doubts about authenticity
Bon jour, bon mois, bon an et bonne estraine	3	vi, 77
Ce jour de l'an	3	vi, 58
Ce moys de may	3	vi, 59
Craindre vous vueil, doulce dame de pris	3	vi, 79	acrostic: CATELINE DUFAI; expanded reworking of Quel fronte signorille
Dieu gard la bone sans reprise	3	vi, 93
Donnés l'assault a la fortresse	3, 4	vi, 86	versions for 3 and 4 voices
Du tout m'estoie abandonné	3	vi, 96	one stanza of text only
Entre les plus plaines d'anoy	3	vi, 83	one stanza of text only
Entre vous, gentils amoureux	3	vi, 49	T derived canonically
En triumphant de Cruel Dueil	3	vi, 88	perhaps on death of Binchois, 1460/61 (see Fallows, 1975); in first edn of vol.vi with corrupt text 'Je triomphe'
Estrinés moy, je vous estrineray	3	vi, 76
Franc cuer gentil, sur toutes gracieuse	3	vi, 89	Acrostic: FRANCHOISE
Hé, compaignons, resvelons nous	4	vi, 68	Text mentions musicians in the employ of the Malatesta family, 1423 (Planchart, EMH, 1988)
Helas, et quant vous veray	3	vi, 56	refrain only
Helas, ma dame, par amours	3	vi, 64	one stanza of text only
J'atendray tant qu'il vous playra	3	vi, 61
J'ay grant (dolour)	3	vi, 82	no more text; known from Coussemaker's transcription of the lost MS F-Sm 222
Je donne a tous les amoureux	3	vi, 71
Je n'ay doubté fors que des envieux	3	vi, 70	refrain only
Je ne puis plus ce que j'ay peu/Unde veniet auxilium mihi?	3	vi, 51	T follows ant for Terce on 4th day after Epiphany
Je ne suy plus tel que soloye	3	vi, 57
Je prens congié de vous, Amours	3	vi, 75
Je requier a tous amoureux	3	vi, 54
Je triomphe [see En triumphant]
Je veuil chanter de cuer joyeux	3	vi, 57	acrostic: JEHAN DE DINANT
La plus mignonne de mon cuer	3	vi, 94	in first edn of vol.vi with corrupt text 'Ma plus mignonne'
Las, que feray? Ne que je devenray	3	vi, 85
Les douleurs dont me sont tel somme	4	vi, 97	T derived canonically from cantus

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Le serviteur hault guerdonné	3	vi, 110	Du Fay's authorship disputed by Besseler, reaffirmed by Fallows (1982, 1995)
Ma belle dame, je vous pri	3	vi, 53
Ma belle dame souveraine	4	vi, 63
Ma plus mignonne [see La plus mignonne]
Mille bonjours je vous presente	3	vi, 81	one stanza of text only
Mon bien, m'amour	3	vi, 87
Mon cuer me fait tous dis penser	4	vi, 72	acrostic: MARIA ANDREASQ
Navré je sui d'un dart penetratif	3	vi, 55
Ne je dors, ne je veille	3	vi, 92
Or pleust a Dieu qu'a son plaisir	3	vi, 78
Par droit je puis bien complaindre et gemir	3, 4	vi, 62	cantus II is canonically derived and functions as a contrapuntal tenor
Par le regard de vos beaux yeux	3	vi, 88
Pouray je avoir vostre mercy	3	vi, 54
Pour ce que veoir je ne puis	3	vi, 60
Pour l'amour de ma doulce amye	3, 4	vi, 67	triplum is alternative voice to Ct and is probably not by Du Fay
Puisque celle qui me tient en prison	3	vi, 82	first line of text only
Puisque vous estez campieur	3	vi, 95	cantus derived canonically from T
Qu'est devenue leaulté?	3	vi, 84	two lines of text only
Resvelons nous, resvelons, amoureux/Alons en bien tost en may	3	vi, 51	Ct and T canonic, but written out
Se ma dame je puis veir	3	vi, 72
Trop long temps ai este en deplaisir	3	vi, 80	ascription to Du Fay very faint (not erased); one stanza of text only
Va t'en, mon cuer, jour et nuitie	3	vi, 84
Vo regard et doulce maniere	3	vi, 74
Vostre bruit et vostre grant fame	3	vi, 96
[No surviving Fr text]	3	vi, 75	in MS with contrafactum text 'Hic iocundus sumit mundus'; lost rondeau text with five-line stanza virelais
De ma haulte et bonne aventure	3	vi, 41
Helas mon dueil, a ce cop sui je mort	3	vi, 42	? a section of text missing (Arlt and Gossen suggest that the text is complete)
Malheureulx cuer, que vieulx tu faire?	3	vi, 43
S'il est plaisir que je vous puisse faire	4	vi, 93	cantus I and T probably by Du Fay, cantus II and Ct perhaps added by another; Ct incomplete; one MS has Latin texts in cantus parts other secular
Hic iocundus sumit mundus	3	vi, 56	contrafactum of lost Fr rondeau
Je vous pri, mon tres doulx ami/Ma tres douce amie/Tant que mon argent dura	4	vi, 45	combinative chanson isolated voice-parts
Gloria	4	iv, 101	Ct by Du Fay
J'aime bien celui qui s'en va	2, 3	vi, 86	rondeau (by Fontaine); alternative Ct 'Trompette' attrib. Du Fay (Besseler; supported by Fallows, 1995)
La belle se siet au pied de la tour	3	vi, 12	cantus II only by Du Fay (Hamm, 1964)

WORKS WITH CONFLICTING ATTRIBUTIONS

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
		sacred
Gloria	3	iv, 15	also ascribed to Hugo de Lantins, who is probably the composer; paired with Du Fay's Credo (iv, 17) in I-Bc Q15
Magnificat primi toni	3		also ascribed to Binchois, but dual ascription to Binchois and Du Fay in MOe may indicate collaboration; ed. J. Marix: Les musiciens à la cour de Bourgogne au XVe siècle (Paris, 1937/R)
Veni dilecti mi	3	i, 102	cantilena; BMV; ascribed also to Johannes de Lymburgia, probably by him
		secular
Departes vous, Malebouche et Envie	3	vi, 111	rondeau; also ascribed to Ockeghem; possibly by Du Fay
Je languis en piteux martire	3	vi, 33	ballade; ascription to Du Fay over an erased ascription to 'Dumstabl' (Bent, 1980); considered to be by Dunstaple; three lines of text only

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Je ne vis onques la pareille	3	vi, 109	rondeau; also ascribed to Binchois; performed at the 'Banquet du voeu', Lille, 1454
Mon seul plaisir, ma doulce joye	3	vi, 108	rondeau; also ascribed to Bedyngham and probably by him

DOUBTFUL WORKS

sacred

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Missa 'Caput'	4	ii, 75	ascribed to Du Fay in TRmp 88 and 89 but ascription in MS 89 subsequently erased; the mass is now considered an anonymous English work of the 1440s
Kyrie	4	iv, 72	no plainchant; paired with Gloria (iv, 90) in TRmp 92; ascription challenged by Monson (1975) and accepted by most scholars
Gloria	3	iv, 75	ascription to Du Fay challenged (although not entirely rejected) by Bockholdt (1960)
Gloria	4	iv, 97	possibly contrafactum; ascription to Du Fay challenged by Besseler, followed by most scholars
O gloriose tiro/Divine pastus demum/Iste sanctus	4	i, 103	isorhythmic motet; St Theodore; ascription questioned by De Van, Besseler and Fallows, affirmed by Allsen and Lütteken
Qui latuit in virgine [see Je suis povere de leesse, below]

secular

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Il sera pour vous/L'homme armé	3, 4		combinative chanson; anon. in US-Nhu 91 (3vv), ascr. 'Borton' in rev. version (4vv), I-Rc 2856; Fallows considers it to be by Robert Morton; ed. L.L. Perkins and H. Garey: The Mellon Chansonnier (New Haven, CT, 1979)
Je suis povere de leesse	3	i, 101	basse danse; in one source Ct has text 'Du pist mein hort', in another the work is texted 'Qui latuit in virgine'; Du Fay's authorship doubted by most authors
O flos florum virginum	3	vi, 107	rondeau; no known French text; probably not by Du Fay
Or me veult bien Esperance mentir	3	vi, 106	ballade; Du Fay may be the composer of Ct only (see Fallows, 1995); title 'Portugaler' remains unexplained
Portugaler [see Or me veult]
Resistera	3	vi, 111	ascription to Du Fay in later hand; no more text
Se la face ay pale [ii]	3, 4	vi, 105	ballade; arrangement of Du Fay's setting

WORKS ATTRIBUTED TO DU FAY BY MODERN SCHOLARS

mass Ordinary cycles and mass sections

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Missa sine nomine	3	–	Rvat S Pietro B 80, 113*v*–121*v*, anon.; attrib. Du Fay by Hamm (1964)
Missa 'Christus surrexit'	4		TRmp 89; attrib. Du Fay by Feininger but rejected by all other scholars; c.f. is a Leise, Christ ist erstanden; ed. L. Feininger, Monumenta polyphoniae liturgicae, 1st ser., ii/1 (Rome, 1951), no.3
Missa 'La mort de St Gothard'	4	ii, 105	attrib. Du Fay by Besseler but rejected by all other scholars; Feininger and Nitschke suggested that Johannes Martini was the composer
Missa 'Puisque je vis'	4		Rvat C.S.14; attrib. Du Fay by Feininger; based on T of an anon. rondeau; ed. L. Feininger, Monumenta polyphoniae liturgicae, 1st ser., ii/4 (Rome, 1952), no.2
Missa S Antonii Viennensis [see Mass for St Anthony of Padua]
Missa 'Veterem hominem'	4		TRmp 88; attrib. Du Fay by Feininger on the basis of its similarity with Missa 'Caput'; now regarded as an English work; ed. L. Feininger, Monumenta polyphoniae liturgicae, 1st ser., ii/1 (Rome, 1951), no.2; also ed. M. Bent, EECM, xxii (1979), 110
Kyrie 'Lux et origo'	3	B, 9	cantus paraphrases Kyrie I; attributed Du Fay by Dèzes (1926), attribution questioned by Bockholdt (1960) and generally not now accepted
Gloria	3		ascribed to Hugo de Lantins; Schoop convincingly argued for Du Fay's authorship; ed. C. van den Borren: Polyphonia sacra: a Continental Miscellany of the Fifteenth Century (Burnham, Bucks., 1932, 2/1963), no.16
Gloria	3		Gastoué proposed that the ascription to Susay was a scribal error for Du Fay; this now firmly rejected by scholars; ed. in CMM, xxix (1962), no.35

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
		plenary masses
Mass for St Anthony of Padua (Missa S Antonii Viennensis)	3, 4	ii, 47 B 68	int (In medio ecclesiae), Ky, Gl, grad (Os justi meditabitur), all (Alleluia, Antoni compar inclite), Cr, off (Veritas mea), San, Ag, comm (Domine quinque talenta); complex transmission pattern; Du Fay's authorship confirmed by Fallows (1982) with new information indicating that the mass is not for St Anthony Abbot, as was previously thought, but is for St Anthony of Padua, possibly for the dedication of Donatello's altar in the basilica in Padua (June, 1450); Propers ed. in Feininger (1947), p.122
Mass for St Francis	3, 4		int (Gaudeamus in Domino), int (octave: Os justi meditabitur); Ky, Gl, grad (Os justi meditabitur), all (Alleluia, O patriarcha pauperum), Cr, off (Veritas mea), San, comm (Fidelis servus); Planchart (EMH, 1988) proposed association of Ordinary and Proper movements (Ordinary and some Propers same as those from St Anthony Mass); Propers ed. in Feininger (1947), p.148
Mass for St Anthony Abbot	3	–	int (Scitote quoniam), Gl, grad (Thronus eius), all (Vox de caelo), Cr, off (Inclito Antonio), San, Ag (Ky and comm missing); transmitted anonymously in I-TRmp 89; Du Fay's will mentions the mass; Planchart suggests that Du Fay was the composer on the basis of its use of chants found only in Cambrai
		Proper cycles

The works listed below are all transmitted in Trent 88 (I-TRmp) and are all ed. in Feininger (1947) [F]. Feininger proposed that they could be attributed to Du Fay; six of them, common masses to be celebrated throughout the year, have been associated with the Order of the Golden Fleece (Prizer; Planchart, EMH, 1988; 1993), a further four are for specific feasts.

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Mass de Angelis	2–3	F, 69	common mass, Tuesday; int (Benedicite Dominum omnes), grad (Benedicite Dominum omnes), all (Alleluia, In conspectu angelorum), all, Easter (Laudate deum), off (Stetit angelus); comm (Benedicte omnes angeli)
Mass for the Blessed Virgin	2–3	F, 12, 17, appx.	common mass [Saturday]; fragmentary; int (Gaudeamus omnes), all (Alleluia, Dulcis mater), all (Alleluia, Ora pro nobis), tr (Audi filia), off (Felix namque), comm (Beata viscera)
Mass for the Holy Cross	2–3	F, 46	common mass, Friday; int (Nos autem gloriam), grad (Christus factus est), all (Alleluia, Dicite in gentibus), all, Easter (Alleluia, Dulce lignum), off (Protege Domine), comm (Per signum crucem)
Mass for the Holy Spirit	2–4	F, 1	common mass, Thursday; int (Spiritus Domini), int, Lent (Dum sanctificatus fuero), grad (Beata gens), all (Alleluia, Emitte spiritum), all, Easter (Alleluia, Veni Sancte Spiritus), off (Confirma hoc Deus), comm (Factus est repente)
Mass for the Holy Trinity	3–4	F, 16	common mass, Sunday; int (Benedicta sit), grad (Benedictus es Domine), all (Alleluia, Benedicta es Domine), all, Easter (Alleluia, Verbo Domini), off (Benedictus sit Deus), comm (Benedicte deum celi)
Mass for St Andrew	2–3	F, 31	common mass, Wednesday; int (Mihi autem nimis), grad (Constitues eos), all (Alleluia, Dilexit Andream), all, Easter (Alleluia, Ego vos elegi), off (Mihi autem), comm (Venite post me)
Mass for St George	2–4	F, 84	common of martyrs (see Planchart, EMH, 1988; 1993); int (In virtute tua), int, Easter (Protexisti me, Deus), all (Alleluia, Posuisti Domine), tr (Desiderium anime), off (In virtute tua), off, Easter (Confitebuntur celi), comm [Posuisti Domine], comm, Easter (Letabitur justus)
Mass for St John the Baptist	2–3	F, 58	int (De ventre matris meae), grad (Priusquam te formarem), all (Tu puer propheta), off (Justus ut palma), comm (Tu puer propheta)
Mass for St Maurice and his companions	2–4	F, 108	int (Venite benedicti), int, octave (Sapientia sanctorum), grad (Gloriosus Deus), all (Alleluia, Judicabunt sancti), off (Mirabilis Deus), comm (Gaudete justi)
Mass for St Sebastian	2–4	F, 166	int (Letabitur justus), grad (Posuisti Domine), all (Alleluia, Sebastiani gratia), off (Gloria et honore), comm (Magna est gloria)
		other sacred
Letabundus exultet	3	–	seq, Christmas; TRmp 92, ff.68*v*–69*v*; chant paraphrased in cantus; attrib. by Hamm (1964)

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Mittit ad virginem	3	–	seq, Annunciation; Bc Q15, ff.309*v*–310*v*; TRmp 92, ff.67*v*–68*v*; chant paraphrased in cantus; attrib. by Hamm (1962; 1964)
Sancti Spiritus adsit	3	–	seq, Pentecost; TRmp 92, ff.36*v*–37*r*; attrib. by Hamm (1962; 1964)
Veni Sancte Spiritus	3	–	seq, Pentecost; D-Mbs Clm 14274; I-AO 15, ff.185*v*–186*v*; Bc Q15, ff.300–01; accepted as authentic by Hamm (1964)
Elizabeth Zacharie/Lingua pectus concordes/Elizabeth	4		Isorhythmic motet; St John Baptist; TRmp 87; attributed by Hamm (1964), and Allsen; ed. in DTÖ, lxxvi, Jg. xl (1933/R), 16; also ed. J.M. Allsen: Four Late Isorhythmic Motets (Moretonhampstead, Devon, 1997), no.2
O sidus Yspanie	3		cantilena; St Anthony of Padua; TRmp 88; Ficker surmised that this was the motet O sidus Hispanie mentioned in Du Fay's will; attribution rejected by most scholars; ed. in DTÖ, lxxvi, Jg. xl (1933/R), 75
		secular
Seigneur Leon, vous soyes bienvenus/Benedictus qui venit	4	vi, 101	rondeau; attributed to Du Fay by Plamenac, 1954

LOST WORKS

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Missa pro defunctis	3		copied as a newly composed work at Cambrai in 1470; mentioned in Du Fay's will and in use at the ceremonies of the Order of the Golden Fleece in 1507
Magnificat (7th mode)			copied at Cambrai 1462–3
?Laus tibi Christe			seq, St Mary Magdalene, copied at Cambrai 1463–4; assumed to have been this text
Officium defunctorum	4		reported to have been sung by the Order of the Golden Fleece, 1507 (Prizer)
O quam glorifica			hymn, copied at Cambrai 1463–4

THEORETICAL WORKS

Title	No. of voices	Edition	Remarks
Musica			lost; cited in marginal annotations in I-Pap 1158 (see Gallo)
Tractatus de musica mensurata et de proportionibus			lost; reported by Fétis to have been in a 16th-century manuscript sold at auction in 1824 to an English bookseller

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A comprehensive bibliography to 1985 is given in D. Fallows, Dufay (London, 1982, 2/1987); the following bibliography contains only the most important studies up to that date

LockwoodMRF; SpataroC; StrohmR

J. Houdoy: Histoire artistique de la cathédrale de Cambrai (Paris and Lille, 1880/R)

F.X. Haberl: Bausteine für Musikgeschichte (Leipzig, 1885–8/R)

J., J.F.R. and C. Stainer: Dufay and his Contemporaries (London, 1898/R)

C. van den Borren: Guillaume Dufay: son importance dans l'évolution de la musique au XVe siècle (Brussels, 1925)

F. Baix: 'La carrière "bénéficiale" de Guillaume Dufay (vers 1398–1474): notes et documents', Bulletin de l'Institut historique belge de Rome, viii (1928), 265–72

H. Besseler, ed.: Guillaume Dufay: zwölf geistliche und weltliche Lieder, Cw, xix (1932)

R. Gerber, ed.: Guillaume Dufay: sämtliche Hymnen, Cw, xlix (1937/R)

L. Feininger, ed.: Auctorum anonymorum missarum propria XVI quorum XI Gulielmo Dufay auctori adscribenda sunt, Monumenta polyphoniae liturgicae, 2nd ser., i (Rome, 1947)

G. De Van, ed.: Guglielmi Dufay opera omnia (Rome, 1947–9) [4 fascicles published of 20 planned: i: Motetti qui et cantiones vocantur (1947); ii: Motetti isorithmici dicti (1948); iii: Missa sine nomine (1949); iv: Missa Sancti Jacobi (1949)]

H. Besseler: Bourdon und Fauxbourdon (Leipzig, 1950, rev., enlarged 2/1974 by P. Gülke)

M. Bukofzer: Studies in Medieval & Renaissance Music (New York, 1950)

H. Besseler: 'Neue Dokumente zum Leben und Schaffen Dufays', AMw, ix (1952), 159–76

D. Plamenac: 'An Unknown Composition by Dufay?', MQ, xl (1954), 190–200 [Fr. trans., RBM, viii (1954), 75–83]

R. Bockholdt: Die frühen Messenkompositionen von Guillaume Dufay (Tutzing, 1960)

C. Hamm: 'The Manuscript San Pietro B80', RBM, xiv (1960), 40–55

C. Hamm: 'Dating a Group of Dufay Works', JAMS, xv (1962), 65–71

C. Hamm: A Chronology of the Works of Guillaume Dufay based on a Study of Mensural Practice (Princeton, NJ, 1964)

F.A. Gallo: 'Citazioni da una trattato di Dufay', CHM, iv (1966), 149–52

M.-T. Bouquet: 'La cappella musicale dei duchi di Savoia dal 1450 al 1500', RIM, iii (1968), 233–85

W. Nitschke: Studien zu den Cantus-firmus-Messen Guillaume Dufays (Berlin, 1968)

H. Schoop: Entstehung und Verwendung der Handschrift Oxford, Bodleian Library, Canonici misc. 213 (Berne, 1971)

A.E. Planchart: 'Guillaume Dufay's Masses: Notes and Revisions', MQ, lviii (1972), 1–23

Dufay Conference: Brooklyn, NY, 1974

D. Fallows: 'Two more Dufay Songs Reconstructed', EMc, iii (1975), 358–60

C. Monson: 'Stylistic Inconsistencies in a Kyrie attributed to Dufay', JAMS, xxviii (1975), 245–67

C. Wright: 'Dufay at Cambrai: Discoveries and Revisions', JAMS, xxviii (1975), 175–229

C. Wright: 'Performance Practices at the Cathedral of Cambrai, 1475–1550', MQ, lxiv (1978), 295–328

R. Bockholdt: 'Die Hymnen der Handschrift Cambrai 6: zwei unbekannte Vertonungen von Dufay?', TVNM, xxix (1979), 75–91

M. Bent: 'The Songs of Dufay: some Questions of Authenticity', EMc, viii (1980), 454–9

D. Fallows: Dufay (London, 1982, 2/1987)

D. Fallows: 'Dufay's Most Important Work: Reflections on the Career of his Mass for St Anthony of Padua', MT, cxxiii (1982), 467–70

D.M. Randel: 'Dufay the Reader', Studies in the History of Music, i (1983), 38–78
D. Fallows: 'Dufay and the Mass Proper Cycles of Trent 88', I codici musicali trentini: Trent 1985, 46–59
W.F. Prizer: 'Music and Ceremonial in the Low Countries: Philip the Fair and the Order of the Golden Fleece', EMH, v (1985), 113–54
W. Arlt: 'Musik und Text', Mf, xxxvii (1986), 272–80
M. Perz: 'The Lvov Fragments: a Source for Works of Dufay, Josquin, Petrus de Domarto, and Petrus Grudenca in 15th-Century Poland', TVNM, xxxvi (1986), 26–51
R.C. Wegman: 'New Data concerning the Origins and Chronology of Brussels, Koninklijke Bibliotheek, Manuscript 5557', TVNM, xxxvi (1986), 5–25
A.W. Atlas: 'Gematria, Marriage Numbers, and Golden Sections in Dufay's "Resveillies vous"', AcM, lix (1987), 111–26
G.M. Boone: Dufay's Early Chansons: Chronology and Style in the Manuscript Oxford, Bodleian Library, Canonici misc. 213 (diss., Harvard U., 1987)
J.E. Cumming: Concord out of Discord: Occasional Motets of the Early Quattrocento (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1987)
D. Fallows: 'The Contenance angloise: English Influence on Continental Composers of the Fifteenth Century', Renaissance Studies, i (1987), 189–208
B. Haggh: 'The Celebration of the "Recollectio Festorum Beatae Mariae Virginis", 1457–1987', IMSCR XIV: Bologna 1987, iii, 559–71
G. Montagna: 'Caron, Hayne, Compère: a Transmission Reassessment', EMH, vii (1987), 107–57
R.C. Wegman: 'The Twelfth Gathering of Brussels, Koninklijke Biblioteek, Manuscript 5557: a New Dufay Concordance', Liber Amicorum Chris Maas, ed. R. Wegman and E. Vetter (Amsterdam, 1987), 15–25
D. Crawford: 'Guillaume Dufay, Hellenism, and Humanism', Music from the Middle Ages through the Twentieth Century: Essays in Honor of Gwynn S. McPeek, ed. C.P. Comberiati and M.C. Steel (New York, 1988), 81–93
A.E. Planchart: 'Guillaume Du Fay's Benefices and his Relationship to the Court of Burgundy', EMH, viii (1988), 117–71
A.E. Planchart: 'What's in a Name? Reflections on some Works of Guillaume Du Fay', EMc, xvi (1988), 165–75
L. Nys: 'Un relief tournaisien conservé au Musée des Beaux-Arts de Lille: la stèle funeraire de Guillaume Dufay (+1474), chanoine de Notre-Dame de Cambrai', Mémoires de la Société royale d'histoire et d'archéologie de Tournai, vi (1989), 5–24
E. Schroeder: 'Dissonance Placement and Stylistic Change in the Fifteenth Century: Tinctoris's Rules and Dufay's Practice', JM, vii (1989), 366–89
R. Strohm: 'Messzyklen über deutsche Lieder in den Trienter Kodices', Liedstudien: Wolfgang Osthoff zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. M. Just and R. Wiesend (Tutzing, 1989), 77–106
N. Gossen: 'Helas mon dueil, a ce cop sui je mort: Allgemeines und Besonderes in einem Chanson-Text von Guillaume Dufay', Basler Jb für historische Musikpraxis, xiv (1990), 37–57
A. Kirkman: 'Some Early Fifteenth-Century Fauxbourdons by Dufay and his Contemporaries: a Study in Liturgically-Motivated Musical Style', TVNM, xl/1 (1990), 3–35
T. Brothers: 'Vestiges of the Isorhythmic Tradition in Mass and Motet, ca. 1450–1475', JAMS, xliv (1991), 1–56
R. Nosow: 'The Equal Discantus Motet Style after Ciconia', MD, xlv (1991), 221–75
R.C. Wegman: 'Petrus de Domarto's Missa Spiritus almus and the Early History of the Four-Voice Mass in the Fifteenth Century', EMH, x (1991), 235–303
J.M. Allsen: Style and Intertextuality in the Isorhythmic Motet, 1400–1440 (diss., U. of Wisconsin, 1992)
C.A. Reynolds: 'The Counterpoint of Allusion in Fifteenth-Century Masses', JAMS, lxv (1992), 228–60
L. Lütteken: Guillaume Dufay und die isorhythmische Motette: Gattungstradition und Werkcharacter an der Schwelle der Neuzeit (Hamburg, 1993)
A.E. Planchart: 'The Early Career of Guillaume Du Fay', JAMS, xlvi (1993), 341–68
J.E. Cumming: 'The Aesthetics of the Medieval Motet and Cantilena', Historical Performance, vii (1994), 71–83
R.L. Gerber: 'Dufay's Style and the Question of Cyclic Unity in the Trent 88 Mass Proper Cycles', I codici musicali trentini: Trent 1994, 107–19
C. Wright: 'Dufay's Nuper rosarum flores, King Solomon's Temple, and the Veneration of the Virgin', JAMS, xlvii (1994), 395–441
D. Fallows: The Songs of Guillaume Dufay: Critical Commentary to the Revision of Corpus mensurabilis musicae, ser. 1, vol. VI, MSD, xlvii (1995)
A.E. Planchart: 'Notes on Guillaume Du Fay's Last Works', JM, xiii (1995), 55–72
C.A. Reynolds: Papal Patronage and the Music of St Peter's, 1380–1513 (Berkeley, 1995)
R.C. Wegman: 'Miserere-supplicanti-Dufay: the Creation and Transmission of Guillaume Dufay's Missa Ave regina celorum', JM, xiii (1995), 18–54
G. Boone: 'Tonal Color in Dufay', Music in Renaissance Cities and Courts: Studies in Honor of Lewis Lockwood, ed. J.A. Owens and A. Cummings (Warren, MI, 1996), 57–99
A.E. Planchart: 'Guillaume Du Fay's Second Style', ibid., 307–40
T. Brothers: Chromatic Beauty in the Late Medieval Chanson: an Interpretation of Manuscript Accidentals (Cambridge, 1997)
B. Haggh: 'Guillaume Du Fay's Birthplace: Some Notes on a Hypothesis', RBM, li (1997), 17–21
L. Holford-Strevens: 'Du Fay the Poet? Problems in the Texts of the Motets', EMH, xvi (1997), 97–165
A.E. Planchart: 'Music for the Papal Chapel in the Early Fifteenth Century', Papal Music and Musicians in Late Medieval and Renaissance Rome, ed. R. Sherr (Oxford, 1998), 93–124

ALEJANDRO ENRIQUE PLANCHART

Dufay Collective. British instrumental ensemble. It was founded in 1987 and specializes in the performance of medieval, Renaissance and early Baroque repertories. The ensemble has a core membership of five musicians, each of whom plays a variety of instruments: Paul Bevan (winds, brass, percussion), Giles Lewin (strings, winds), William Lyons (winds, symphony), Susanna Pell (strings) and Peter Skuce (keyboards, harp, percussion). The core members are frequently augmented by guest instrumentalists and singers. The ensemble's public recitals include a variety of repertories; however, its recordings to date have focussed principally on 13th-century English, French and Italian music. Recent recording projects have included experiments with innovative packaging, advanced studio techniques and crossover repertories.

FABRICE FITCH

Du Feche, Willem. See DE FESCH, WILLEM.

Duff. See DAFF.

Duff, Arthur Knox (b Dublin, 1899; d Dublin, 23 Sept 1956). Irish composer, bandmaster and radio producer. He studied at the Royal Irish Academy of Music and Trinity College, Dublin, where he obtained degrees in music and the arts (MusD 1942). An accomplished keyboard player, he served as the organist and choirmaster at Christ Church, Bray, before accepting a commission as the first Irish bandmaster of the recently-formed Army School of Music (1923), a post he held until 1931. In 1937 he became the first music producer for Radio Éireann, the fledgling national broadcasting service. He eventually became assistant director of music for RTÉ. Duff also served as music director for the Abbey Theatre, writing incidental works such as The Drinking Horn (1953) and A Deuce O'Jacks. His principal compositions were written for the Dublin String Orchestra under Terry O'Conner. Not inclined towards large forms, his works are small and lyrical, frequently employing modal harmonies.

WORKS
(selective list)

Irish Suite, str, 1940; Meath Pastoral, str, 1940; Who is Sylvia, 1v, pf, 1945; The Drinking Horn (ballet), 1953; Echoes of Georgian Dublin, 1955–6; Music for Str, 1955; A Deuce O'Jacks (incid music, F.R. Higgins)

JOSEPH J. RYAN

Dufly, Jacques. See DUPHLY, JACQUES.

Dufon [Du Fon], Jean [Jean de Namur] (b Namur, bap. 27 Sept 1574; d Namur, between 15 May and 7 June 1634). Flemish composer and singer. He was a chorister at St Aubain, Namur, and at the age of 11 was recruited as a chorister to serve the court of Philip II of Spain. He arrived in Madrid at the beginning of 1586 accompanied by 13 other boy sopranos, among them Géry de Ghersem, Mathieu Rosmarin (Mateo Romero), Philippe Dubois, Nicolas Dupont and Jean de Loncin. He studied singing and composition there with Philippe Rogier. When his training was completed on 1 December 1593, he was elevated to the rank of royal cantor. He was by then generally known as Jean de Namur. On the death of Philip II he remained in the service of Philip III as cantor and composer and accompanied him to Valladolid, where the court resided from 1601 to 1606. It was during this time – probably in 1605 – that he succeeded Ghersem as vice-maestro de capilla of the royal chapel. He was highly regarded at court and according to Gaspar de Arratia, a copyist at the royal chapel, was 'a composer of such skill that he could have directed any chapel he chose in Spain at the beginning of the 17th century'. On 14 August 1606, after being allowed to return to the Netherlands for health reasons, he left Spain and settled at Namur. He was a priest and held a prebend at Ivoix between 1604 and 1620, and after 1605 he drew an ecclesiastical pension from the bishopric of Córdoba.

The catalogue of the library of King João IV of Portugal, destroyed in the Lisbon earthquake of 1755, records several works by him: an eight-part mass; four other sacred works, one for five voices, the others for eight, among the latter being one that can apparently, from another reference, be dated 1597 or earlier; and eight pieces to French texts, probably chansons, of which five are known to have been for five voices.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BNB ('Jean du Fon', E. Montellier); JoãoIL; MGG1 suppl. (P. Becquart)

E. Montellier: 'Jean du Fon dit de Namur, chantre-compositeur de la chapelle royale à Madrid (1574–1634)', Namurcum: chronique de la société archéologique de Namur, xv (1938), 49–56

P. Becquart: Musiciens néerlandais à la cour de Madrid: Philippe Rogier et son école (1560–1647) (Brussels, 1967)

P. Becquart: 'Philippe Rogier et son école à la cour des Philippe d'Espagne: un ultime foyer de la création musicale des Pays-Bas (1560–1647)', Musique des Pays-Bas anciens – musique espagnole ancienne: Brussels 1985, 215–29

PAUL BECQUART

Dufour, Denis (b Lyons, 9 Oct 1953). French composer. After studying music in Lyons, he entered the Paris Conservatoire in the classes of Pierre Schaeffer and Guy Reibel (electro-acoustic composition), Claude Ballif (analysis), and Michael Philippot and Ivo Malec (instrumental composition). A member of the Groupe de Recherches Musicales since 1976, he founded the synthesizer Trio GRM Plus, which in 1984 became the electro-acoustic instrumental ensemble TM+. Besides his many activities as a teacher and researcher (as professor of composition at the Lyons Conservatoire and then at the Ecole Nationale de Musique in Perpignan, as a co-founder of the Quark group and as director of the instrumental ensemble Les Temps Modernes), he founded the international electronic music festival Futura in 1993, and the publishing firm Motus (CDs, books and scores) in 1996. Dufour composes equally readily in the electronic and instrumental genres. The exploration of new structures of sound, the fluidity of a 'Baroque' style of phrasing, the mobility of his figures, and his love of the human voice and of certain dramatic narrative effects have fostered the emergence of a new kind of theatrical sound in his work, over and beyond his strictly musical discourse.

WORKS

ELECTRO-ACOUSTIC

Tape: Étude de composition 1, 1976; Bocalises, petite suite, 1977; Bocalises, grande suite, 1978; Rond de jambe, 1979; Suite en 3 mouvements, 1981; Entre dames, 1982; Colloque, 1983; Le lis vert, 1983; Suite bleue, 1983; Le labyrinthe de l'amour 1, 1984; Messe à l'usage des enfants, 1986; Psaume d'Adam, 1986; Messe à l'usage des vieillards, 1987; Musique à coudre, 1987; 12 mélodies acousmatiques, 1988; Noël toxique, 1988; Notre besoin de consolation est impossible à rassasier, 1989; Charge maximale, 1991; Légende, 1991; Chrysalide, 1993; Flèches, 1993; Où est maintenant la forêt, 1993; Offrande ou l'être achevé, 1994; Exil, 1995; Golgotha, 1995; Hélice, 1995; Une abeille et une perle, 1996; Bazar punaise, 1996; Elixir, 1996; Nuage de pierre, 1996; Ebene Sieben, 1997; Fanfare, 1997; Le petit oiseau va sortir, 1997; Les tornades, 1997

Tape with inst: Je voulais parler des oiseaux, S, gui, tape, 1979; Un petit qui t'aime, 6 perc, tape, 1979; L'apocalypse d'Angers, spkr, tape, 1980; La galerie, gui, 2 insts, 3 synth, tape, 1980; Paysage, vc, tape, 1984; 10 portraits, 3 synth, tape, 1984; Cet été sur la plage, ob, tape, 1989; Tulipe, hn, tape, 1989; Le labyrinthe de l'amour 2, 1–3 jazz players, tape 1990; Le mystère des tornades, ob, hp, va, vc, tape, 1997

Live elecs with inst: Trio, vn, mand, synth, live elecs, 1978; Cueillir à l'arbre un petit garçon, a sax, synth, live elecs, 1979; j.a.c.h.H.16, 3 synth, 1980; Pli de perversion 2, vn, synth, live elecs, 1984; Canibale, gui, live elecs, 1992

ACOUSTIC

Op: Tom et la Licorne, 1991

Vocal: En sursaut, S, va, 1977; La douceur a des cils, S, C, T, Bar, 1979; 6 mélodies S, pf, 1983; Quatuor 'Non parmi les anges', S, vn, va, vc, 1984; L'homme au masque de craie, Mez, orch, 1988, Jeu délicieux, T, va, 1989; Tu sa' ch'i' so, S, cl, vn, va, vc, 1989; Interruption, spkr, fl, str trio, synth, 1991; Torrents du miroir, S, Mez, Ct, Bar, sax, hn, tpt, trbn, vn, db, 1991; Litanie pour les vierges, 2 children's choruses, 7 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, db, 1995

Inst: Boucles, gui, 1977; Le crin s'ébruite, va, perc, 1977; Vn Conc., 1977; Pli de perversion 1, vn, va, vc, db, elec gui, synth, 1978; Souvenir de Pierre 1, 3 insts ad lib, 1978; Dune, 2 fl, 1981; Rêve lisse, vn, 2 synth, 1982; Fantaisie soluble, vn, vc, cl, hn, perc, 2 synth, 1985; (Première) Letter à Pinocchio, vn, vc, synth, 1985; Tandem oblique, fl, pf, 1986; Nuit d'hiver, ob, eng hn, trbn, glock, hp, 2 vc, 1987; Cosmophonie, vn, vc, cl, hn, perc, 2 synth, 1988; Etude, synth, 1988; Grenouille écarlate, gui, 1988; Alpage, elec perc, 1990; Chanson pensive, fl, a fl, cl, basset-hn, b cl, va, sampler, 1990; Duel, 2 tpt, 1990; Hérisson cathédrale, fl, cl, vn, vc, pf, cel, hpd, 1990; Crapaud brillant, hpd, 1991; Archéoptéryx, fl, ob, cl, sax, trbn, accdn, pf 4 hands, 1992; Ataraxie, 2 rec qt, rec ens, 1992; En effeuillant la marguerite, ob, 1992; Salamandre, fl, ob, cl, hp, vn, vc, 1992; Souvenir de Pierre 2, fl, ob, cl, sax, trbn, accdn, pf 4 hands, 1992; Avalanche, pf, 1995; Excusez-moi, je meurs, vc, pf, perc, 1996; 3 transcriptions d'après Rameau, inst ens, 1996; Variations sur un thème de François Bayle, pic, 1996; Le mystère, ob, va, vc, hp, 1997

Principal publisher: Motus

Principal recording company: INA-GRM

WRITINGS

'Les espaces de l'extase', Lien (1991)

'Rondo: l'oeuvre acousmatique, ce qu'elle est, ce qu'elle n'est pas. . .', Lien, (1991) contributions to 'L'interprétation des oeuvres acousmatiques', Ars sonora, no.4 (1996) <www.imagineto.fr/manca/invite/asr.html>

'L'enseignement de la musique électroacoustique', Marsyas (1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Fischer: 'Acuité d'écoute "acousmatique" et itinéraire timbrique', Analyse musicale, no.30 (1993), 29–37

J. Prager: 'Entretien avec Denis Dufour', Ars sonora, nos.5–7 (1997–8) <www.imaginet.fr/manca/invite/asr.html>

BRUNO GINER

Du Four, Jherome. See CLIBANO, JHERONIMUS DE.

Dufourcq, Norbert (b Saint Jean-de-Braye, Loiret, 21 Sept 1904; d Paris, 19 Dec 1990). French musicologist and organist. The son of Albert Dufourcq, professor of medieval history at the University of Bordeaux, he studied at the Sorbonne (1921–3), taking a degree in history and geography in 1923, and then at the Ecole Nationale des Chartes (1924–8), where he qualified as an archivist-palaeographer. He also studied the piano and music history under Gastoué (1913–20), the organ with André Marchal (1920–40) and harmony, counterpoint and fugue with Marie-Rose Hublé. He took the doctorat ès lettres at the University of Paris in 1935 with a dissertation on the organ in France from the 13th century to the 18th. He taught history at the Collège Stanislas in Paris (1935–46) and succeeded Louis Laloy as professor of music history and musicology at the Paris Conservatoire (1941–75). He also taught in other establishments in Paris (Sweet Briar College from 1949, Ecole Normale de Musique 1957–63, the Sorbonne 1971) and in Canada (Camp Musical du Mont Orford 1959–65, Laval University of Quebec 1967).

Dufourcq's musicological interests were French music, J.S. Bach and, in particular, the organ; he was a great defender, not without opposition, of the neo-classical organ, his ambition being 'for all musical styles to be represented on it, from Paumann to Jehan Alain'. He was appointed resident organist on the great organ at St Merri in 1923, and, from 1926, secretary and then vice-president of the Amis de l'Orgue society, and was one of the founders (1932) of the Commission des Orgues des Monuments Historiques. He published, both in performing and scholarly editions, works for organ and harpsichord by numerous French composers of the 17th and 18th centuries (Boëly, François Couperin, Clérambault, Corrette, Daquin, De Grigny, Dornel, Jullien, Lanes, Lebègue, Nivers, Raison, Titelouze).

Dufourcq contributed to many journals in France, Germany, England, Italy, Belgium and the Netherlands; in 1928 he became executive secretary of Larousse dictionaries (history, arts and music sections), editing several volumes himself. He was the editor of L'orgue, Orgue et liturgie, Les grandes heures de l'orgue and Recherches sur la musique française classique. He was president of the Société Française de Musicologie (1957–9) and of the Société de l'Ecole des Chartes (1975–6), and had considerable influence through his writings and teaching.

WRITINGS

with R. Fallou: Essai d'une bibliographie de l'histoire de l'orgue en France (Paris, 1929); suppl., RdM, xv (1934), 141–58
Le grand orgue de la collégiale Saint-Jean de Pézenas (Paris, 1932)
Documents inédits relatifs à l'orgue français (Paris, 1934–5)
Esquisse d'une histoire de l'orgue en France du XIIIe au XVIIIe siècle (diss., U. of Paris, 1935; Paris, 1935)
Orgues comtadines et orgues provençales (Paris, 1935)
La très curieuse histoire d'un orgue bigourdan (Paris, 1938)
La musique d'orgue française de Jehan Titelouze à Jehan Alain (Paris, 1941, 2/1949)
Les Clicquot, facteurs d'orgues du Roy (Paris, 1942, 2/1990)
Petite histoire de la musique en Europe (Paris, 1942, 11/1973)
ed.: La musique des origines à nos jours (Paris, 1946, enlarged 3/1959)
Le grand orgue et les organistes de Saint-Merry de Paris (Paris, 1947)
Un architecte de la musique: Jean-Sébastien Bach: génie allemand, génie latin? (Paris, 1947, 2/1949)
Jean-Sébastien Bach, le maître de l'orgue (Paris, 1948, 2/1973)
L'orgue (Paris, 1948, 5/1976)
César Franck (Paris, 1949)
Le clavecin (Paris, 1949, 2/1967)
La musique française (Paris, 1949, enlarged 2/1970)
Autour de Coquard, César Franck et Vincent d'Indy (Paris, 1952)
Nicolas Lebègue (Paris, 1954)
ed. with M. Benoit: Notes et références pour servir à une histoire de Michel-Richard Delalande (Paris, 1957)
Jean de Joyeuse et la pénétration de la facture d'orgues parisienne dans le Midi de la France au XVIIe siècle (Paris, 1958)
'L'orgue de J.-S. Bach', Histoire de la musique, ed. Roland-Manuel, i (Paris, 1960), 1898–914 with M. Benoit: 'Les musiciens de Versailles', RMFC, iii (1963), 189–206 ed.: La musique: les hommes, les instruments, les oeuvres (Paris, 1965) with M. Benoit: 'Documents des musiciens de Versailles à travers les minutes du Baillage de Versailles conservées aux Archives départementales de Seine-et-Oise', RMFC, vi (1966), 197–226 with M. Benoit and B.Gagnepain: Les grandes dates de l'histoire de la musique (Paris, 1969, 4/1991)
Le livre de l'orgue français, 1589–1789 (Paris, 1969–82)
ed.: La musique à la cour de Louis XIV et de Louis XV d'après les mémoires de Sourches et Luynes, 1681–1758 (Paris, 1970)
César Franck et la genèse des premières oeuvres d'orgue (Paris, 1973) with J. Anthony: 'Church Music in France, 1661–1750', NOHM, v (1975), 437–92 with M. Benoit: 'Les musiciens de Versailles à travers les minutes notariales de Maître Gayot, versées aux Archives départementales des Yvelines (1661–1733)', RMFC, xv (1975), 155–90

EDITIONS

Premier livre d'orgue de Gilles Jullien, PSFM, 1st ser., xiii (1952)
Troisième livre d'orgue de Guillaume-Gabriel Nivers, PSFM, 1st ser., xiv (1958)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Machabey: Portraits de trente musiciens (Paris, 1949), 63–7
RMFC, xv (1975) [Dufourcq Festschrift with bibliography, pp.5–27]
M. Benoit: 'Norbert Dufourcq (1904–1990)', RMFC, xxvii (1991–2), 4–7
M. Benoit, ed.: 'Norbert Dufourcq (1904–1990)', L'orgue, nos.49–50 (1993) [memorial issue; incl. bibliography, 261–76]

CHRISTIANE SPIETH-WEISSENBACHER

Dufourt, Hugues (b Lyons, 28 Sept 1943). French composer. After studying the piano with Hiltbrand and composition with Guyonnet at the Geneva Conservatoire, he became co-director of the Paris-based ensemble L'Itinéraire in the 1970s, and coined the term musique spectrale. He also founded the Collectif de Recherche Instrumentale et de Synthèse Sonore (CRISS) in 1977, and it was for this group that he composed his best-known work Saturne, for electronics, percussion and wind ensemble (1978–9). Working meticulously with new materials, notably electronic plucked strings (L'île sonnante, 1990, for electric guitar and percussion; La cité des saules, 1997, for electric guitar) or unusual percussion sources (Erewhon, 1972–6, for 6 percussionists), his works most often build on a dilated sense of time (La tempesta d'après Giorgione, 1976–7; The Watery Star, 1993) and original instrumental colouring (Hommage à Charles Nègre for 6 instruments, 1986; Saxophone Quartet, 1993). Dufourt has composed complex, virtuoso pieces (Brisants, 1968, for piano and instrumental ensemble; Antiphysis, 1978, for flute and chamber orchestra) but since 1985 his interest has concentrated on harmony and counterpoint revisited within an environment which remains atonal yet lyrical in works such as La mort de Procris (1985–6), Le philosophe selon Rembrandt (1987–92) and the opera Dédale (1994–5).

Published writings demonstrate the breadth of his interests as a composer and display a plurality of affiliations, to Adorno, Boulez, Hegel, Marx and Varèse, among others.

WORKS

Brisants, pf, 16 insts, 1968; Mura della Città di Dite, 17 insts, 1969
Down to a Sunless Sea, 16 str, 1970; Dusk Light, S, Mez, T, Bar, 16 insts, 1971; Erewhon, 6 perc, 1972–6; Sombre journée, 6 perc, 1976–7; La tempesta d'après Giorgione, 8 insts, 1976–7; Antiphysis, fl, 29 insts, 1978; Saturne, 24 insts, 1978–9
Surgir, orch, 1980–84; La nuit face au ciel, 6 perc, 1984; La mort de Procris (W. Shakespeare), 12vv, 1985–6; L'heure des traces, 20 insts, 1986; Hommage à Charles Nègre, 6 insts, 1986; Le philosophe selon Rembrandt, 28 insts, 1987–92
L'île sonnante, elec gui, perc, 1990; Plus oultre, perc, 1990; Noche oscura (St John of the Cross), 6vv, 1991; Lucifer d'après Pollock, toile de 1947, orch, 1992–3; Sax Qt, 1993; The Watery Star, 8 insts, 1993; Dédale (op, M. Tanant), 1994–5; La cité des saules, elec gui, 1997

Principal publishers: Jobert, Salabert, Una Corda

WRITINGS

'L'artifice d'écriture dans la musique occidentale', Critique, no.408 (1981), 465–77
'Musique spectrale: pour une pratique des formes de l'énergie', Bicéphale, no.3 (1981), 85–9
'Art et science', ReM, nos.383–5 (1985), 91–109 [Varèse issue]
'De Schoenberg à Boulez: logique et dialectique de la création musicale', Esprit, no.99 (1985), 21–36
'Pierre Boulez: musicien de l'ère industrielle', Komponisten des 20. Jahrhunderts in der Paul Sacher Stiftung, ed. F. Meyer, J. Jans and I. Westen (Basle, 1986), 371–80
Musique, pouvoir, écriture (Paris, 1991)
'La musique du théorique au politique', Domaine musicologique, ed. H. Dufourt and J.-M. Fauquet (Paris, 1991)
'Timbre et espace', Le timbre, métaphore pour la composition (Paris, 1991), 272–82
'Alain Bancquart: la forme et le fond', Cahiers du CIREM, nos.28–9 (1993), 171–4
'Le fleuve tranquille de la musique européenne ', L'esprit de l'Europe (Paris, 1993), 221–7

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P.A. Castanet: Hugues Dufourt: son oeuvre et ses préalables (diss., U. of Tours and Ecole Normale Supérieure, Paris, 1992)
P.A. Castanet: Hugues Dufourt: 25 ans de musique contemporaine (Paris, 1995)
'Hugues Dufourt', Cahiers du CIREM, nos.35–6 (1995) [whole issue]

PIERRE ALBERT CASTANET

Dufranne, Hector (b Mons, 25 Oct 1871; d Paris, 4 May 1951). French bass-baritone. He made his début in 1898 at La Monnaie in Brussels, as Valentin in Faust, having studied at the Brussels Conservatory with Désirée Demest. In 1900 he appeared as Thoas in Iphigénie en Tauride with the Opéra-Comique in Paris, where he became one of the leading and longest-serving members of the company. He sang in many premières, including those of Massenet's Grisélidis (1901) and Thérèse (1907), and Ravel's L'heure espagnole (1911). He was also the Opéra-Comique's first Scarpia in Tosca and the Opéra's first John the Baptist in Salome (1910). Above all, he was associated with the role of Golaud in Pelléas et Mélisande, which he sang at the première (1902) and later in New York (1910). In 1914 he sang the role in his single appearance at Covent Garden and in 1939, for the last time, at Vichy. He won high praise for both his singing and his acting in New York and later became a favourite at Chicago, where he sang Celio in the world première of The Love for Three Oranges (1921), conducted by the composer. At a private performance in Paris he took the part of Don Quixote in the stage première of Falla's El retablo de maese Pedro (1923). His admirable voice, well placed and finely produced, served him well through a long career and is impressively heard in some historically important recordings, particularly those of L'heure espagnole and Pelléas et Mélisande (1928).

J.B. STEANE

Du Gaucquier, Alard [Nuceus; Allardo] (b Lille, *c*1534; d *c*1582). Franco-Flemish composer. The year of his birth is deduced from a document in the Municipal Archives of Antwerp, dated 1580, which gives his age at that time as 'about 46 years'. In about 1560 he entered the service of Maximilian, Archduke of Austria (later Emperor Maximilian II) as a tenor in the chapel choir. When the imperial Kapellmeister (Vaet) died, on 8 January 1567, Du Gaucquier was named acting Kapellmeister; he served as such until 1 May 1568, when Philippe de Monte acceded to the post. In the same year he was rewarded by a patent of nobility. His coat-of-arms (described in Vienna, Österreichisches Staatsarchiv, Allgemeines Verwaltungsarchiv, F.B.600) bore a nut tree, since his name, in the dialect of Lille, had this connotation. Under Monte, Du Gaucquier served as vice-Kapellmeister, continuing in this post after the death of Maximilian in 1576. He also acted as teacher to Maximilian's younger sons during this period. Two years later, when his new patron, Rudolph II, granted him a release and an annual pension, he joined his former pupil (then Governor of the Netherlands, later Emperor Matthias) as Kapellmeister. In 1581 he accepted an appointment at the Innsbruck court of Archduke Ferdinand. Apparently he never arrived there, for nothing further is known of him after 29 October 1581, when he set out from Brussels for Cologne. The Viennese court ledgers record the payment of a pension to his widow in March 1583.

Du Gaucquier was not a prolific composer. A set of eight Magnificat settings for four to six voices was published in Venice in 1574 and a volume of four masses for five to eight voices with an introductory Asperges me for six voices was published in Antwerp in 1581 (the contents of the two books are ed. in DTÖ, cxxiii, 1971). He is probably the composer of an untitled four-voice mass ascribed to 'Allardo musico caesareo' (ed. in Musica divina, xvi, Regensburg, 1962; see ALART). No contemporary printed anthologies contain any of his music (unless he is the 'Alardino' to whom the six-voice madrigal Passa la nave mia is ascribed in RISM 1561[16]), and a five-part Ave Maria, formerly in the Legnica Ritter-Akademie, is now presumed lost.

The Magnificat settings are cantus firmus settings in textures of three to six voices, using canon, free and imitative counterpoint, and homophony. The Missa 'Maeror cuncta tenet' and Missa 'Beati omnes' appear to be parodies of unknown models. The Missa sex vocum ends with a grand eight-voice Agnus Dei II. Du Gaucquier's music contains much indirect chromaticism and many false relations; in his Magnificat primi toni the plainchant itself is chromatically altered.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, iii
A. Smijers: 'Die kaiserliche Hofmusik-Kapelle von 1543–1619', SMw, vi (1919), 139–86; vii (1920), 102–42; parts I to IV pubd separately (Vienna, 1922)
J.A. Stellfeld: Bibliographie des éditions musicales plantiniennes (Brussels, 1949)

MILTON STEINHARDT/R

Dugazon [Gourgaud], (Alexandre-Louis-)Gustave (b Paris, ?1782; d Paris, ?1826). French composer. Son of the soprano Louise-Rosalie Dugazon, he studied at the Paris Conservatoire with Gossec (composition) and Berton (harmony). In 1800 he collaborated with Bertaud, Dubuat, Pradher and Quinebaud (fellow-pupils of Berton) on Le voisinage, an opéra comique produced at the Théâtre Favart, and in 1804 he and Pradher wrote Le chevalier d'industrie, presented at the Théâtre Feydeau. In 1806 he won second prize in the Prix de Rome for his cantata Héro et Léandre. He also composed two other operas and four ballets, none of them successful, as well as some chamber music and vocal pieces.

WORKS

STAGE

all first performed in Paris

Le voisinage (oc, 1, J.B. Pujoulx), OC (Favart), 24 Jan 1800, collab. Bertaud, Dubuat, Pradher, Quinebaud

Le chevalier d'industrie (oc, 1, J.M.B. Saint-Victor), OC (Feydeau), 16 Nov 1804, collab. Pradher

Marguerite de Waldemar (oc, 3, Saint-Félix), OC (Feydeau), 12 Dec 1812

La noce écossaise (oc, 1, T.M. Dumersan), OC (Feydeau), 19 Nov 1814

Les fiancés de Caserte, ou L'exchange des roses (ballet, 1, P.-G. Gardel and L.-J.J. Milon), Opéra, 17 Sept 1817

Alfred le Grand (ballet-pantomime, 3, J.-P. Aumer), Opéra, 18 Sept 1822, adaptation of W.R. von Gallenberg; arr. pf (Paris, ?1822)

Aline, reine de Golconde (ballet-pantomime, 2, Aumer), Opéra, Oct 1823, adaptation of ballet by P.-A. Monsigny and opera by H.-M. Berton

Néomi (ballet), Porte Saint-Martin, before 1807, mentioned by Fétis

OTHER WORKS

all published in Paris

Vocal: many collections of nocturnes, 2vv, pf and romances, mentioned by Fétis; romances pubd separately

Inst: many variations, pf, vn, vc; airs and nocturnes, hn, pf; duets, hp, pf

Kbd: fantasies, airs, preludes, toccatas, variations, dances

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB [incl. list of works]; ES (B. Horowicz)

J.J. Olivier: Madame Dugazon de la Comédie-Italienne, 1755–1821 (Paris, 1917)

H. Gougelot: La romance française sous la Révolution et l'Empire, i (Melun, 1938), 169–70

ELIZABETH FORBES

Dugazon [née Lefèbvre], Louise-Rosalie (b Berlin, 18 June 1755; d Paris, 22 Sept 1821). French soprano. Her father, François Jacques Lefèbvre, was a dancer at the Paris Opéra, and she began her own career as a dancer. Grétry advised her to become a singer and oversaw her studies with the soprano Marie Favart. Grétry wrote an ariette for her in Lucile, which was performed at the Comédie-Italienne in 1769, and she made her official début there in 1774 as Pauline in his opera Silvain. After a brief marriage in 1776 to actor and writer Jean-Baptiste-Henri Gourgaud, known as Dugazon, she sang under that name for the rest of her career. She took part in about 60 premières at the Comédie-Italienne and Opéra-Comique, notably as Laurette in Grétry's Richard coeur-de-lion (1784). It is Laurette who sings 'Je crains de lui parler la nuit', quoted nostalgically by the countess in Tchaikovsky's The Queen of Spades. She created roles in several operas by Nicolas Dalayrac including La dot (1785), Nina (1786), in which she sang the title role, possibly her most successful part, and Maison à vendre (1800). Zémaïde in Boieldieu's Le calife de Bagdad (1800) was another favourite role; she took her farewell as Zémaïde in 1804 before an audience that included the Emperor Napoleon and Empress Joséphine. Greatly loved by audiences during her 30-year career, she gave her name to various types of role: 'jeune Dugazon' for the girlish soprano heroines of her youth, and 'mère Dugazon' for the more mature mezzo characters of her later career. A one-act opera by Charles Hess, Madame Dugazon, was performed at the Opéra-Comique in 1902.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ES (B. Horowicz)

A. Pougin: Figures d'Opéra-Comique (Paris, 1875/R), 5–75

J.J. Olivier: Madame Dugazon de la Comédie-Italienne, 1755–1821 (Paris, 1917)

H. and A. Le Roux: La Dugazon (Paris, 1926)

ELIZABETH FORBES

Du Grain [du Grain], Jean [Dügren, Johann Jeremias] (d Danzig [now Gdańsk], Jan 1756). ?French singer, keyboard player and composer, active in Germany. He was probably related to French immigrants whose names appear frequently in the city records of Danzig. A pupil of Telemann, Du Grain is first mentioned at Hamburg in 1730 as a soloist in cantatas by Telemann performed to commemorate the Augsburg Confession. From 1732 he lived in Elbing (now Elbląg, Poland) where he was a singer, organist and harpsichord player. In 1737 he was enjoined ('injungieret'), presumably as an assistant, to the organist of the Marienkirche Daniel Dibbe; his name appears in the church accounts from 1737 to 1739. Among his compositions for Elbing were a St Matthew Passion (1737), performed annually until the 19th century, and the lost cantata Hermann von Balcke, written to celebrate the 500th anniversary of the city; the latter contained recitatives and some arias by Du Grain and arias from operas by Handel who helped to compile the work, but who left Elbing before the performance.

In 1739 Du Grain left Elbing for Danzig where he performed his Der Winter, a dramma per musica, at a private concert on 23 February 1740. Other concerts in 1740 included works by Telemann, in 1743 Handel's Brockes Passion, and in 1748 a revival of Der Winter. He served as organist at St Elisabeth, Danzig, probably from 1747 as F.G. Gleimann's successor. In 1748 he published a supplement to the Danzig Reformed Church hymnbook (1744), with the figured bass realized for organ and including five new melodies of his own. On 2 February 1756 Christoph Nichelmann, writing from Berlin, informed Telemann that Du Grain had died from a stroke during a concert on the previous 14 January. According to Muttray an entry in the register of deaths of St Elisabeth (now lost) read 'begraben 1756.19.1 Johann Jeremias Dügren, gewesener Organist'. Reichardt's statement that Du Grain visited Könisberg in 1765 probably refers to one of Du Grain's sons.

Du Grain's music shows the strong influence of Telemann. Döring spoke of the 'simple and yet noble melodies' of the St Matthew Passion, and considered the characterization dramatic; the choruses are for two voices like those of Telemann's St Matthew Passion of 1730. Du Grain's surviving cantatas display the pattern of a large-scale opening choral movement, sometimes based on a chorale melody, followed by alternating recitatives and solo arias and sometimes closing with a chorale setting. He appears to have been a composer of some craft but limited musical imagination.

WORKS

Kirchen Gesang-Buch der Evangelisch-Reformirten Gemeinde in Dantzig (Danzig, 2/1748), lost [according to Muttray incl. org acc. and 5 new melodies by Du Grain]

Passionis Domini nostri Jesu Christi secundum Matthaeum Evangelium, Elbing, 1737, Elblag, Marienbibliothek (according to EitnerQ)

Hermann von Balcke (cant., G.D. Seyles), Elbing, 28 Nov 1737, music lost [recits and some arias by Du Grain; also incl. arias from operas by Handel]

Der Winter (dramma per musica, B.H. Brockes), Danzig, 23 Feb 1740, lost (2 arias formerly in Hans Michel Schletterer's private collection, Augsburg, according to EitnerQ)

Cantata zum Preussischen Dankfeste, Elblag, Marienbibliothek (according to EitnerQ)

Herzlich lieb hab ich dich, O Herr (cant.), Danzig, 24 Sept 1740; Willkommen Erloser (Christmas cant.), 1v, chorus 4vv, 2 tpt, 2 ob, 2 vn, va, bc, ed. in F. Kessler: Danziger Kirchen-Musik Vokalwerke des 16. bis 18. Jahrhunderts (Stuttgart, 1973); Herr nun lässest du deinen Diener, cant., Adam du musst sterben, cant., Elblag, 1737; Mitten wir im Leben sind (funeral music for Jungschultz), partial edn in Müller-Blattau (1931): PL-GD

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; RiemannL 12

L. Neubaur: 'Der Komponist Jean Du Grain in Elbing', Mitteilungen des Westpreussischen Geschichtsvereins, xiv (1915), 4

Muttray: 'Der Komponist Jean Du Grain in Danzig', Mitteilungen des Westpreussischen Geschichtsvereins, xx (1921), 35

I. Leux: 'Über die "verschollene" Händel-Oper "Hermann von Balcke"', AMw, viii (1926), 441–51

H. Gerigk: 'Musikgeschichte der Stadt Elbing', Elbinger Jb, viii (1929), 41–2

H. Rauschning: Geschichte der Musik und Musikpflege in Danzig (Danzig, 1931), 327, 348, 354, 358ff

W. Hobohm: 'Georg Philipp Telemann und seine Schüler', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 260–65

J. Müller-Blattau: 'Händels Festkantate zur 500-Jahr Feier der Stadt Elbing 1737: Festschrift', 50 Jahre Göttinger Händel-Festspiele, ed. W. Meyerhoff (Kassel, 1970), 120–32

H. Grosse and H.R. Jung, eds.: Georg Philipp Telemann: Briefwechsel: Sämtliche und erreichbare Briefe von und an Telemann (Leipzig, 1972), 128

F. Kessler: Preface to Danziger Kirchen-Musik: Vokalwerke des 16. bis 18. Jahrhunderts (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1973), p.xxxiii

J. Gudel: 'Das öffentliche Konzertwesen in Gdansk in der zweiten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts', Zur Entwicklung der Tasteninstrumente in der zweiten Hälfte des 18. Jahrhunderts. Studien zur Aufführungspraxis und Interpretation von Musik des 18. Jahrhunderts, xxix (suppl.) (Michaelstein, 1986), 17–18

J. Gudel: 'Die handschriftliche Überlieferung von Telemann-Werken in der Bibliothek der Staatlichen Akademie für Wissenschaft (PAN) Gdansk', Georg Philipp Telemann: Werküberlieferung, Editions- und Interpretationsfragen: Magdeburg 1987, ii, 21–7

GEORG FEDER/STEVEN ZOHN

Dügren, Johann Jeremias. See DU GRAIN, JEAN.

Dügy, Hans [Johannes]. See TUGI, HANS.

Duhamel, Antoine (b Valmondois, 30 July 1925). French composer. Son of the writer Georges Duhamel and the actress Blanche Albane, he studied at the Sorbonne (1945–9) and at the Paris Conservatoire with Jacques de la Presle (1945–6), Messiaen (1947–50) and Dufourcq (1949–50). He also took private lessons in composition with Leibowitz (1945–53). Duhamel won the Enescu composition prize (1971). In 1987 he was elected to the council of SACEM, becoming its vice-president in 1989.

A versatile composer, Duhamel is particularly reputed for his music for films and his operas. His relationship with the cinema crystallized in 1956. Initially working on a series of television advertisements, he subsequently composed music for short films by Albert Champeaux and Philippe Condroyer. He established productive relationships with both Jean-Luc Godard and François Truffaut, and collaborated with Bertrand Tavernier, Jean-Daniel Pollet and Alexandre Astruc. Duhamel's music is integral to each film, offering an alternative narrative or commentary to the spoken and visual texts. Master of a range of musical idioms, he draws inspiration from jazz and vaudeville.

Of his ten operas, Gambara (1978) has gained greatest acclaim. An adaptation of Balzac's novella, the work centres on a composer's desire to write a new opera and explores themes of love and deception. Stylistically eclectic, Duhamel's music shows the influence of serialism, yet it is equally notable for the tonal lyricism of the bel canto passages and snatches of Rossinian writing, the latter being particularly evident in the 'trio di risotto'.

Concerned with youth projects, Duhamel helped to establish the Villeurbanne school of music (1980) for which he wrote the Villeurbanne symphonie (1990). His youth opera, Les travaux d'Hercule (1981), was first performed in Lyons as part of the World Festival of Youth Theatre. Duhamel has maintained his affiliation with the cinema, appearing in Jean-Pierre Sougy's Vous aimez la musique Antoine (1993), and he has pursued his interests in writing for the stage with Carmenmania (1994).

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Gala de cirque (op-ballet), 1965; Opéra des oiseaux (op, 1, after Aristophanes), Lyons, 18 May 1971; Ubu à l'opéra, Avignon, 16 July 1974; Gambara (op, 2, after H. de Balzac), Lyons, 2 June 1978; Les travaux d'Hercule (youth op), Lyons, 15 June 1981; Quatrevingt-treize (op, 2, after V. Hugo), Fourvière (Lyons), 10 July 1989; Carmenmania (ballet), Nice, 1994

Orch: Musique pour Hans Hartung, 1949; Va Conc., 1952; Animus anima, sym. choréographique, 1972; Villeurbanne symphonie, 550 pfmrs, 1990; Ballade au vibraphone, vib, orch, 1991

Film scores: Méditerranée (dir. J.-D. Pollet), 1963; Evariste Galois (dir. A. Astruc), 1964; La chance et l'amour (dir. B. Tavernier), 1964; Pierrot le fou (dir. J.-L. Godard), 1965; Baisers volés (dir. F. Truffaut), 1968; Domicile conjugal (dir. Truffaut), 1970; La coupe à dix francs (dir. P. Condroyer), 1974; La question (dir. L. Heynemann), 1977; La chanson de Roland (dir. F. Cassenti), 1978; Félicité (dir. C. Pascal), 1979; La mort en direct (dir. Tavernier), 1979; Contretemps (dir. Pollet), 1988; El mono loco (dir. F. Trueba), 1989; Daddy nostalgie (dir. Tavernier), 1990; Belle époque (dir. Trueba), 1992; Belmonte (dir. J. Bollain), 1995

BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Pistone, ed.: Le théâtre lyrique français, 1945–1985 (Paris, 1987)

L'avant-scène opéra, no.7 (1995) [Gambara issue]

ANDREA MUSK

Duhan, Hans (b Vienna, 27 Jan 1890; d Baden, nr Vienna, 6 March 1971). Austrian baritone. A singer with a thorough musical training (he studied the piano and the organ, as well as singing, at the Vienna Music Academy), he is remembered principally as the first artist to make complete recordings of Winterreise and Die schöne Müllerin. His career in opera, though it lasted from 1910 to 1940, was largely confined to Vienna and Salzburg where in addition to the usual baritone roles in Mozart he sang Pedrillo in Die Entführung. He made his début at Troppau and joined the Vienna Staatsoper in 1914. At the première of Ariadne auf Naxos (1916, revised version) he doubled as the Music-Master and Harlequin. He was especially admired in Mozart and Lortzing, but the overuse of his light baritone voice in operas such as Die Meistersinger led to vocal difficulties and encouraged him to concentrate on lieder and teaching (among his pupils was the baritone Hermann Uhde). In later years he worked as stage director, conductor and composer. Recordings show a voice limited in colour as well as volume, though used with skill and intelligence.

J.B. STEANE

Duhl. Large barrel drum of the Sind region of Pakistan. See ḌHOL.

Duiffoprugcar. See TIEFFENBRUCKER family.

Dujardin, Marbrianus. See ORTO, MARBRIANUS DE.

Dukas, Paul (Abraham) (b Paris, 1 Oct 1865; d Paris, 17 May 1935). French composer, critic and teacher. Dukas was not only an influence on many French 20th-century composers and others such as Zemlinsky and Berg, but also remains important in his own right. His reputation rests on only a small number of compositions, notably the Piano Sonata, Ariane et Barbe-bleue, the ballet La Péri and L'apprenti sorcier. Dukas's influence as a critic, from 1892 to 1932, can be compared with Debussy's; his informed opinions reveal great sensitivity to the musical and aesthetic changes that took place during the period. With his high ideal of craftsmanship, Dukas was extremely self-critical; consequently he destroyed a number of his compositions.

1. LIFE. Dukas was the second son in a family of three children. His mother was a fine pianist and had a strong influence on him in the early years of his life, but she died giving birth to his sister when he was only five years old. His father, Jules Dukas, remained a central figure until his death in 1915, and Paul's relationship with his brother Adrien was equally important. Jules and Adrien were bankers and both took a lively interest in cultural matters in Paris. Paul's relationship with his sister, Marguerite-Lucie, was not particularly close until after Adrien's sudden death in 1907. It was in this family setting that Dukas learned to play the piano without displaying any exceptional gift. He began to compose when he was 14, during an illness, and the family decided to let him train as a musician. He started to attend the Conservatoire at 16, enrolling in the harmony class of Théodore Dubois and, to please his father, the piano class of Georges Mathias. He also attended the ensemble courses, which helped him to gain experience as a conductor and to study orchestration. The first fruits of his growing interest in composition were two overtures, based on Goethe's Götz von Berlichingen and Shakespeare's King Lear, composed in August and September 1883, of which only the first was performed, privately in Switzerland in 1883. In the autumn of 1883, Dukas enrolled in Ernest Guiraud's composition class, where he impressed his fellow students by the sureness of his judgements, and by a rather distant manner. He made several attempts to win the Prix de Rome, but only managed twice to get on to the short-list, although his cantata Velléda was awarded second prize in 1888. In the following year his cantata Sémélé won only three votes out of nine (the panel included Thomas, Gounod, Reyer, Saint-Saëns and Delibes). Disappointed by this outcome, Dukas not only left the Conservatoire and went to do his military service, but also decided that he would become a music critic. Thanks to his contacts with the bandmaster of the 74th Infantry Regiment in Rouen, musical activity was not completely abandoned.

After his return from Rouen he briefly continued his musical training, then embarked on dual careers as critic and composer in 1891–2. His first Parisian première took place in January 1892, the overture Polyeucte, composed in September 1891. His career as a critic began in 1892 with a review of Wagner's Ring in London, published in the Revue hebdomadaire. His brother Adrien, his uncle Maurice Dukas, and friends such as Camille Benoît, Vincent d'Indy and the lawyer Paul Poujaud offered him valuable advice during these years about aesthetics, philosophy and music theatre.

After Polyeucte, Dukas turned to opera in 1892. He first wrote a three-act libretto, Horn et Riemenhild, but composed only one act, 'realizing too late that the work's developments were more literary than musical'. Instead of completing it, he orchestrated in 1895 the first three acts of Frédégonde by his former teacher Guiraud (Saint-Saëns did the last two). His three-movement Symphony in C dates from 1894–6, and was performed in the Concerts de l'Opéra on 3 January 1897 conducted by Paul Vidal, to whom it was dedicated. Dukas then wrote what is still his most famous work, L'apprenti sorcier (based on Goethe's ballad Der Zauberlehrling), in what was for him a very short time. Following the première, conducted by the composer at a concert of the Société Nationale on 18 May 1897, it rapidly established itself in the international concert repertory.

As with Horn et Riemenhild, Dukas began his second attempt at an opera by trying to write his own libretto, L'arbre de science, based on a Hindu legend, but abandoned the project in favour of Maurice Maeterlinck's Ariane et Barbe-bleue. Maeterlinck decided in favour of Dukas rather than Grieg for this project in the second half of 1899. Dukas devoted the next few years to the opera, but at the same time he was also working on his Piano Sonata in E♭ minor (first performed by Eduard Risler on 10 May 1901 in the Salle Pleyel) and the Variations, interlude et finale sur un thème de Rameau (first performed by Risler at a Société Nationale concert on 23 March 1903) both of which demonstrated his skill as a composer for the piano.

Dukas was so far advanced with the composition of Ariane et Barbe-bleue by 6 October 1901 that he wanted to play Maeterlinck parts of the first act, but the poet's only known reaction dates from 1905, when the opera was as good as finished. The first performance, at the Opéra-Comique on 10 May 1907, with Georgette Leblanc (Maeterlinck's mistress) as Ariane, caused a stir, but less than it might have done had not Strauss's Salome had its Paris première at much the same time. Ariane et Barbe-bleue was praised from the outset as a progressive, but also classically fashioned work. While some critics saw Dukas as following in the footsteps of Debussy and Pelléas et Mélisande, others praised its individuality. It quickly aroused interest abroad and was heard in Vienna, Frankfurt, Milan and New York within five years.

Dukas himself, however, did not attend these performances. His pilgrimages to Bayreuth in 1886 and 1889 and to London for the Ring in 1892 were rare ventures abroad in a life spent mostly in Paris and Saint-Cloud. After his opera, Dukas composed only one more large-scale work, the 'poème dansé' La Péri, dedicated to the dancer Natalia Trouhanova, who gave its first performance in the Théâtre du Châtelet on 22 April 1912, in a programme which also included d'Indy's Istar, Ravel's Adélaïde, ou le langage des fleurs and Florent Schmitt's La Tragédie de Salomé. Even this work nearly fell victim to Dukas's growing self-criticism. There followed a few smaller works, mostly composed at the suggestion of others, but Dukas did not finish any of the larger projects on which he worked after 1912. His letters to Paul Poujaud (now in Yale University Library) mention, in 1918, translating Shakespeare's Tempest and composing an introduction to the second act. In 1932 he accepted one last commission, to write a piece for the 50th anniversary of the Boston SO. He destroyed all his unfinished works except for a few smaller pieces and sketches. In later life he turned increasingly to teaching: he taught orchestration at the Conservatoire in 1910–13, visited French provincial conservatories as inspector of musical education in the late 1920s, and succeeded Widor as professor of composition at the Paris Conservatoire in 1928. In this post and at the Ecole Normale he had some distinguished pupils, among them Messiaen, Duruflé, Jehan Alain, Jean Langlais, Claude Arrieu, Jean Hubeau and Yvonne Lefebure. His wide knowledge and interest in the history of European music, and his editorial work on Rameau, Scarlatti and Beethoven, gave him particular authority in teaching historical styles; according to another pupil, Joaquin Nin-Culmell, the music of J.S. Bach played a prominent part in Dukas's course.

Dukas was a musician with a universal outlook, who discussed not only music but also history, aesthetics, philosophy and politics in his extensive correspondence with d'Indy, Fauré, Dujardin and Falla, as well as his friend and adviser the lawyer Paul Poujaud. Between 1892 and 1932 he published his views in some 410 review-articles (in Revue hebdomadaire, Chronique des Arts et de la Curiosité, La Gazette des Beaux-Arts, Le Figaro, Revue Musicale and Le Quotidien), in which he discussed contemporary aspects of music and culture. Dukas was a member of the Conseil supérieur du Conservatoire, and of the Conseil des émissions radiophoniques, president of the Union syndicale des compositeurs and an officer of the Légion d'Honneur. After the death of Alfred Bruneau he was elected to the Académie des Beaux-Arts in December 1934.

Paul Dukas with his daughter Adrienne-Thérèse ('Nono'), Saint-Cloud, 1925

He married Suzanne Pereyra, of Portuguese descent, in 1916 and their daughter Adrienne-Thérèse was born in December 1919.

2. WORKS. Despite his slender output, Dukas's place is at the heart of French musical life at the turn of the 20th century. Each of his compositions reveals a stylistic individuality and modern aesthetic tendencies combined with a deep respect for classical form. Dukas's unique position as a composer is evident in the character of his melodic material, in its symphonic elaboration and in his consummate skill in orchestration. It is their subject matter that places his stage works among the most adventurous compositions of their time.

The only genre where individual works may be compared is the overture, of which Dukas wrote three, the Ouverture du roi Lear, Ouverture Goetz de Berlichingen (both early) and Polyeucte. In Polyeucte, Dukas focussed on Corneille's tragedy, dividing its dramatic course into five distinct variation sections. The strong harmonic, melodic and instrumental contrasts of the two main themes, which combine to form a new, third motive, also contribute to the clarity of the structure. The impression of development owes much to the formal and dramatic balance of the sections, as in d'Indy's Istar (1896). Comparison with the Ouverture du roi Lear demonstrates the extent to which Dukas developed his contrapuntal writing and his orchestration during the 1880s.

In the case of the Symphony (1896), passing references to influences (Franck, Chausson, d'Indy, Bizet, Lalo, Saint-Saëns, Beethoven or, in the slow movement, Schumann) have little bearing on the symphony's development or character. Writing in March 1904 about d'Indy's Symphony no.2, Dukas defended all formal types: 'All forms can sit comfortably in the vast framework of a symphony .... The error of all the neo-classicists is precisely the attribution of value to a form independently of its ideas'. In his own Symphony he used a variation technique involving several themes which generate sections with clearly different expressive content. The opening movement uses a modified sonata form with a development-like coda. The abundance of themes and moods in the second and third movements generates a rhapsodic variation form which is not focussed and consolidated until near the end of each movement when a single theme is unambiguously expounded. Dukas's masterly orchestration, and use of four- to eight-bar themes, often based on the notes of the triad, provide a firm architectural structure. The piano score and orchestral sketch (both in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris) show, in the second movement for example, that Dukas altered little of the thematic material during the course of composition but introduced new contrapuntal material in the inner parts and changed the instrumentation in a way that gave more prominence to the strings. The second movement, especially, contains melodic material and orchestral colours that anticipate L'apprenti sorcier.

This 'symphonic scherzo after a ballade of Goethe', not quite imaginable as the Symphony's missing scherzo, carries that work's tendency towards symmetry to an extreme point. Dukas's opening theme decorates the notes of the diminished 7th chord (ex.1); and the later 'conjuration motif' treats the chord of the augmented major triad as an appoggiatura resolving only on to a further harmony of that ilk. Both these chords are perfectly symmetrical, hence the somewhat impersonal 'atonal' harmonies, and Dukas's use of them in L'apprenti sorcier clearly influenced such later works as Stravinsky's Fireworks (1908) and Debussy's Jeux (1912). In conjunction with the emphasized tonic of the main theme, they aptly suggest the inexorable outcome of the apprentice's spell. The rhythmic construction of that theme shows the composer's skill in gradually building up a steady flow of movement. In ex.1, a, b and c refer to progressively more continuous patterns within each bar; V, W, X, Y and Z designate the cumulative structure of three-bar units; and if the 'true' time signature is taken as 9/8, the downbeat tonic emphasis emerges clearly. In a subjoined secondary theme, further three-bar patterns appear from the combinations b–c^2–b, b^1–b^1–b^1, b^1–c^1–c and c^1–c^2–a (the superscript 2 indicates a double appoggiatura on the first beat). The work owes its resounding success partly to the aplomb with which it illustrates its programme, partly to its taut, Beethovenian construction, and partly, inevitably, to its dazzling orchestration, which succeeds in carrying further the excitement engendered by Wagner's Valkyries.

The Piano Sonata in E♭ minor, composed between 1898 and 1900, is among the first large-scale examples of the genre in late 19th-century France: unlike the programmatic piano music of his contemporaries, Dukas's Sonata, together with d'Indy's op.63 (1907), follows in the footsteps of Beethoven. The design of the four-movement work is modelled on classical Beethovenian form. Three movements use sonata form and the regular construction produced by the demands of sonata form shapes the thematic material throughout into a symmetrical structure while the harmonic language is highly coloured and idiomatic. The fact that d'Indy, in the sonata he dedicated to Dukas, achieved a degree of thematic integration which eliminates a formal framework places the two sonatas in a complementary relationship and illuminates a productive exchange between the composers which was not confined to these two works. Dukas, in his allusion to the 'Pange lingua' melody, not only took up the beatific concluding theme of d'Indy's opera Fervaal, but also quotes the beginning of the third movement of d'Indy's Symphony no.2 (dedicated to Dukas) in the song 'Les cinq filles d'Orlamonde' in Ariane et Barbe-bleue.

Ex.1 L'apprenti sorcier, opening theme

Ariane et Barbe-bleue brought the composer international acclaim following its première in 1907. Translated into German that same year, into English in 1910 and into Italian in 1911, it was also arranged for smaller performing forces. The Viennese première in 1908 (conducted by Zemlinsky) aroused the particular interest of Schoenberg and his circle. The composition of the opera had been preceded by various theoretical reflections on new and 'genuine' musical drama. Dukas examined Gluck, Mozart, Beethoven and, above all, Wagner in articles such as 'La musique et la littérature' (1892), 'L'interprétation du drame lyrique' (1894), 'Poèmes et libretti' (1895) and 'Le nouveau lyrisme' (1903). The moral message of the opera is indicated in the subtitle 'La délivrance inutile'. Dukas stated that 'the interpretation of Ariane makes the audience aware of the heroine's internal drama, which the music expresses with all the greater intensity the more the words uttered are "indifferent"' (Dukas, 'Ariane et Barbe-bleue' 1910). Saying this, Dukas met a challenge he had formulated years earlier in a letter to d'Indy, with reference to Wagner's influence: 'In order to imitate him truly, one must do something as remote as possible from his way and . . . also justify it . . . afterwards!' After two earlier attempts at writing his own librettos, Dukas finally chose a text in Maeterlinck's Ariane et Barbe-bleue which is different from any of Wagner's, with its fairytale elements and its avoidance of obviously dramatic situations. The course the action takes is determined not so much by the development of characters as by their interpretation from Ariane's viewpoint.

Maeterlinck's narrative style gave Dukas the freedom for symphonic development of a dense motivic texture. A good example of his compositional technique in the opera is the six-stage variation of a theme in Act 1. Its harmonic elaboration forms the fundamental notes of a whole-tone scale and corresponds, in the action, to the opening of six doors and the discovery of six hoards of jewels. Musical forms constructed in this manner, analogous with the stage action, occur throughout the work. Three orchestral preludes anticipate the action and the motivic development of each act. As Giselher Schubert comments, 'the planned working-out of a symphonically conceived opera score leads involuntarily to autonomous musical forms, which are nonetheless intimately linked to the stage'. The pre-eminent musical technique in Ariane is the variation of the few principal motifs. In Act 3, a motif that has represented the peasants since the start of the opera undergoes melodic, rhythmic and dynamic variation and thematic expansion during the account of the peasants' battle with Bluebeard (ex.2).

Song form is also used to serve the drama's ends. Both the song of the daughters of Orlamonde, in Acts 1 and 2, and the folk song Au Clair de la lune, after the peasants' victory in Act 3, symbolize the decline of Bluebeard's power. As early as 1911, Paul Bekker recognized the potential these aspects of Dukas's opera offered for further development, borne out, for instance, in the different formal types in Berg's operas (Berg heard Ariane in Vienna in 1908 and in Prague in 1924.)

Ex.2 Development of the 'peasants' motive in Ariane et Barbe-bleue

Under the influence of the Ballets Russes and their new aesthetics of dance, following the first performance of Musorgsky's Boris in Paris (1907), Ravel, Falla, Debussy and Dukas all composed ballet scores that became classics. In spite of the immediate context, technically La Péri followed on from Dukas's symphonic works of the 1890s. Using two themes (for Iskender and the Peri) he developed a three-part variation form, preceded by a fanfare, added later, which is also in three sections. Though the planned performance of La Péri by the Ballets Russes never took place, Fokine realized L'apprenti sorcier as a ballet for the company in 1916.

Dukas's work has been rediscovered to some extent in recent decades. The popularity of L'apprenti sorcier and the exhilarating film version of it in Disney's Fantasia possibly hindered a fuller understanding of Dukas, as that single work is far better known than its composer. Ariane et Barbe-bleue experienced a renaissance in the 1990s, with productions in Paris (Théâtre du Châtelet, 1990) and Hamburg (Staatsoper, 1997).

A complete assessment of Dukas will only be possible when his works have been published in their entirety. A first initiative in this direction was taken with the newly rediscovered Ouverture du roi Lear, which received its world première in 1995, followed by an edition of the work by Jindřich Feld. Dukas, with his original treatment of traditional forms, his highly inventive approach to musical drama, and his importance as a teacher and writer, occupies a central position in French musical history.

WORKS

SURVIVING WORKS

Air de Clytemnestre, 1v, small orch, 1882, unpubd
Goetz de Berlichingen, ov. after J.W. von Goethe, orch, 1883, unpubd
Le roi Lear, ov. after W. Shakespeare, orch, 1883, unpubd
Chanson de Barberine (A. de Musset), S, pf, 1884, unpubd
La fête des Myrthes, chorus 4 vv, orch, 1884, unpubd
L'ondine et le pêcheur (T. Gautier), S, orch, 1884, unpubd
Endymion (A. de Lassus), cant., 3 solo vv, orch, 1885, unpubd
Introduction au poème 'Les Caresses', pf, 1885, unpubd
La vision de Saül (E. Adenis), cant., 3 solo vv, orch, 1886, unpubd
La fleur (C. Millevoye), chorus 4vv, orch, 1887, unpubd
Fugue, 1888, unpubd
Hymne au soleil (C. Delavigne), chorus 4vv, orch, 1888, unpubd
Vélléda (F. Beissier), cant., 3 solo vv, orch, 1888, unpubd
Sémélé (Adenis), cant., 3 solo vv, orch, 1889, unpubd
Polyeucte, ov. after Corneille, orch, 1891
Symphony, C, orch, 1895–6
L'apprenti sorcier, sym. scherzo after Goethe, orch, 1897
Sonata, e♭, pf, 1899–1900
Variations, interlude et finale sur un thème de Rameau, pf, ?1899–1902
Ariane et Barbe-bleue (conte, 3, M. Maeterlinck), 1899–1907, Paris, OC, 10 May 1907
Villanelle, hn, pf/orch, 1906
Prélude élégiaque sur le nom de Haydn, pf, 1909
Vocalise-étude (alla gitana), 1v, pf, 1909
La Péri (poème dansé, 1 tableau) (1911), Fanfare pour précéder La Péri (1912); Paris, Châtelet, 22 April 1912
La plainte, au loin, du faune . . ., pf, 1920
Sonnet 'Amours', mélodie (Ronsard), 1v, pf, 1924
Allegro, pf, 1925
Modéré, ?pf, 1933 (pubd in Samazeuilh, 1936)

DESTROYED AND PROJECTED WORKS

Horn et Riemenhild (op, 3, Dukas), 1892
L'arbre de science (op, Dukas, after Hindu legend), 1899
Le fil de parque, sym. poem, ?1908
Le nouveau monde (op, Dukas), ?1908–10
Le sang de Méduse (ballet), 1912
Symphony no.2, after 1912
Violin Sonata, after 1912
La tempête (op, after W. Shakespeare), *c*1918
Variations choréographiques (ballet), 1930
Orchestral work [?sym. poem] for Boston SO, *c*1932

ARRANGEMENTS

E. Guiraud: Frédégonde, orchestration of Acts 1–3 (Acts 4–5 orchd by C. Saint-Saëns)
R. Wagner: excerpts from Tannhäuser and Die Walküre arr. 2 pf, 8 hands, 1891, lost

EDITIONS

J.-P. Rameau: Les Indes galantes (1902)
J.-P. Rameau: Le princesse de Navarre (1906)
F. Couperin: Les goûts réunis (1908)
D. Scarlatti: Keyboard sonatas (1919)
L. van Beethoven: Sonatas for various instruments
MSS in F-Pn

Principal publishers: Durand, Rouart-Lerolle (Salasert)

WRITINGS

Jacques Durand 1865–1928 (Geneva, 1929), 39–42 [untitled tribute by Dukas]
Les écrits de Paul Dukas sur la musique (Paris, 1948)
Chroniques musicales sur deux siècles (Paris, 1980) [with preface and discography by J.-V. Richard]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Robert: La musique à Paris 1896–1897 (Paris, 1898), 70–73
O. Séré: Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (Paris, 1911, 8/1921), 161–72, 426–7
'An Interview with Paul Dukas', Musical Courier (21 Aug 1912)
G. Samazeuilh: Paul Dukas: un musicien français (Paris, 1913, 2/1936)
V. d'Indy: Emmanuel Chabrier et Paul Dukas (Paris, 1920)
P. Bekker: Klang und Eros (Stuttgart, 1922), 71–7
A. Coeuroy: La musique française moderne (Paris, 1922), 41–6
J. Korngold: Die romantische Opera (Vienna, 1922), 158–65 [on Ariane et Barbe-bleue]
L. Laloy: La musique retrouvée (Paris, 1928), 167–70
G. Fauré: 'Dukas', Opinions musicales (Paris, 1930), 37–43 [repr. of reviews pubd 1907 and 1921]
ReM, no.166 (1936) [Dukas issue, incl. articles by Dukas, P. Valéry, G. Samazeuilh, J. Guy-Ropartz, M. Emmanuel, O. Messiaen and list of writings]
P. Landormy: La musique française après Debussy (Paris, 1943), 29–34
Y. Lefebure: 'Métier de Pénélope et fil d'Ariane', Contrepoints, no.1 (1946), 73–81
P. Lalo: De Rameau à Ravel (Paris, 1947), 179–86
A. Cortot: La musique française de piano (Paris, 1948)
F. Lesure: Catalogue de l'exposition Paul Dukas (Paris, 1965)
F. Lesure: 'Deux lettres de Georgette Leblanc à Paul Dukas', RdM, xl (1965), 93–7
G. Favre: 'Les débuts de Paul Dukas dans la critique musicale: Les représentations wagnériennes à Londres en 1892', RdM, lvi (1970), 54–85
G. Favre, ed.: Correspondance de Paul Dukas (Paris, 1971)
J. Helbé: Paul Dukas (Paris, 1975)
G. Favre: 'Paul Dukas et le théâtre lyrique', Revue d'histoire du théâtre, xxx (1978), 55–70
F. Minger: A Style Analysis of the Piano Music of Paul Dukas (diss., U. of Rochester, 1980)
M. Tricás, ed.: Cartas de Paul Dukas a Laura Albeniz (Barcelona, 1983)
E.V. Boyd: Paul Dukas and the Impressionist Milieu: Stylistic Assimilation in Three Orchestral Works (Ann Arbor, 1985)
W.A. Moore: The Significance of Late Nineteenth-Century French Wagnérisme in the Relationship of Paul Dukas and Edouard Dujardin (diss., U. of Texas, Austin, 1986)
G. Schubert: '"Vibrierende Gedanken" und das "Katasterverfahren" der Analyse: zu den Klaviersonaten von Dukas und d'Indy', Das musikalische Kunstwerk: Geschichte, Ästhetik, Theorie, ed. H. Danuser and others (Laaber, 1988), 619–34
C. Abbate: 'What the Sorcerer Said', 19CM, xii (1988–9), 221–30; repr. in idem.: Unsung Voices (Princeton, NJ, 1991), 30–60 [on L'apprenti sorcier]
J.-J. Nattiez: 'Can One Speak of Narrativity in Music', JRMA, cxv (1990), 240–57 [on L'apprenti sorcier]
L'avant-scène opéra, nos.149–50 (1992) [Ariane et Barbe-bleue, Bluebeard's Castle issue]
A. Suchinsky: 'Ariane et Barbe-bleue: Dukas, the light and the well', COJ, ix (1997), 133–61
G. Schubert: 'Zur Konzeption von Paul Dukas' Ariane et Barbe-bleue', Von Wagner zum Wagnérisme, ed. A. Fauser and M. Schwartz (Leipzig, 1999), 339–49
M. Schwartz: '"Ein Wampumgürtel mit unlösbarem Knoten": Zur Wirkung von Paul Dukas' Ariane et Barbe-bleue auf Alexander Zemlinsky und die Wiener Schule', Person und Werk Alexander Zemlinskys, ed. H. Weber (Milan, forthcoming)

MANUELA SCHWARTZ (with G.W. HOPKINS)

Dukát, Josef Leopold Václav (b Prostějov, 12 March 1684; d Želiv, 4 June 1717). Czech composer. He received his musical education, or supplemented it, with the Jesuits at Olmütz, and subsequently held the post of organist and choirmaster at the Premonstratensian monastery of Želiv until his death. His unpublished Cithara nova … seu duodena sacrarum cantuum (1707; autograph manuscript in CZ-Pnm) is clearly the work of a composer of the high Baroque period. It contains 12 cantatas, for solo voice, with two violins and organ continuo. A Mass in B♭ and a Pange lingua, both for four voices and orchestra, are also extant (CZ-Pnm); as the Pange lingua is scored for a large orchestra including clarinets, it is almost certainly a later reworking of Dukát's original composition. He also composed masses in honour of St John Nepomuk, St Florian and St Wenceslas (documented at Osek monastery, 1733), and the Czech Christmas pastoral, Do Betlému chvátejme ('Let us haste to Bethlehem'), catalogued at the Jesuit College, Uherské Hradiště, 1730.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DlabacžKL
E. Trolda: 'Účast Moravy a Slezska na církevní hudbě 18. stol.' [The contribution of Moravia and Silesia to 18th-century church music], Česká hudba, xxiv (1919), 33–42
A. Buchner: Hudební sbírka Emiliána Troldy [The music collection of Emilián Trolda] (Prague, 1954)
J. Sehnal: 'Hudba v jesuitském semináři v Uherském Hradišti v roce 1730' [Music in the Jesuit Seminary at Uherské Hradiště in 1730], HV, iv (1967), 139–47

JOHN CLAPHAM

Dukay, Barnabás (b Szőny, 25 July 1950). Hungarian composer. After graduating from Győr College of Music he attended the Budapest Academy (1969–74), where he studied composition with Rezső Sugár. He taught music theory at the Béla Bartók Music School (1974–91) and at the teacher training institute of the Budapest Academy (1991–5) before joining the staff of the the academy proper in 1995. From 1970 to 1990 he was a member of the Hungarian New Music Studio. In recognition of his work as a composer he received the Soros Foundation Prize in 1997 and the Erkel Prize in 2000. Initially the main influences on Dukay's style were Webern and Bartók. From the 1970s onwards he drew inspiration from Ockeghem, Satie and the late works of Liszt, and then, finally, from Ruggles, Cage, Christian Wolff, Boulez, Stockhausen and Kurtág. At the end of the 1970s he embarked on a study of Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaeo-Christianity, Taoism and Confucianism particularly with regard to the music, philosophy and cultural history of lost or remote civilizations. Evidence of this is mostly felt in the formal designs of his works, as well as in his choice of text and using poetic titles. Most of his works are for small chamber ensembles or for solo instruments.

WORKS
(selective list)

Vocal: . . . hogy idő nem lesz többé [. . . that time shall be no more] (motet, Bible: Revelation), 8 A, 8 T; Lebegő pára a mélység színén [Mist Floating over the Abyss] (John, Revelation, 3 pieces): déli változat [midday variation], monody, T, esti változat [evening variation], motet, 4 A, A hűvös alkonyati áramlatokban [In the Cool Twilight Springs], motet, 4 T

Inst: Sonata, fl; A lenyugvó naphoz: áldozati zene [To the Setting Sun: Sacrificial Music], 12-, 24-, 36-, 48-pt ens of any insts; A változó holdhoz [To the Changing Moon], 3 pieces: Áldozati zene, növekvő hold idejére [Sacrificial Music, for the Waxing Moon], any 4 identical insts, Áldozati zene holdtölte idejére [Sacrificial Music, for the Full Moon], 8 insts from same family, Áldozati zene fogyó hold idejére [Sacrificial Music, for the Waning Moon], any 4 identical insts; Kiszáradt kút a nedves holdfényben [Dried-up Well in the Wet Moonlight], fl, gui, version for 2 fl, 2 gui, version for 3 fl, 3 gui; Rondino, amely a szívhez szól [Rondino, which Touches to the Heart], pf; Porszem és vízcsepp a liliom szirmán: kajuali változat [A Speck of Dust of Drop of Water on the Lily's Petal:

Dawn Variation], pf; Láthatatlan tűz a téli éjszakában [Invisible Fire in the Winter Night], 2 pieces: a belső csend prelúdiuma [prelude of inner silence], 2 cimb, a belső világosság prelúdiuma [prelude of inner clarity], 2 pf: . . . mint sziklák között a szél [. . . like the wind between rocks], inst motet, 2 fl, 2 cl, 2 hn, 2 vn, va, 2 vc, db; Fölizzás a tüzekben [A Glow in the Fires], 3 vn, 3 va, 3 vc; Lebegő pára a mélység színén [Mist Floating over the Abyss], 3 pieces: reggeli változat [morning variation], pic, tuba, b drum, cel, hp, vn, d bass, esti változat [evening variation], 4 va, a kavargó esti szelekben [in the swirling evening winds], 4 mar; Fanfare, 6 tpt, 4 hn, 3 bugles, tuba

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Hollós: Az életmű fele: zeneszerzőpőrtrék beszélgetésekben [Half a life's work: portraits of composers in conversation] (Budapest, 1997), 17–21

ANNA DALOS

Duke, John (Woods) (b Cumberland, MD, 30 July 1899; d Northampton, MA, 26 Oct 1984). American composer and pianist. He studied piano and composition with Harold Randolph and Gustav Strube at the Peabody Conservatory (1915–18), and continued his studies with Franklin Cannon in New York and with Schnabel and Boulanger in Europe (1929–30). From 1923 to 1967 he taught at Smith College, from which he retired as professor of music. His most important contribution was in the field of song, in which his style returned to a pianistically expansive neo-Romanticism after experiments in the 1930s with a linear, modal language. Two recordings devoted wholly to his songs have been issued: Seventeen Songs by John Duke (1977) and Songs of John Duke (1979); the latter received praise both for the quality of the songs and for the performance (by the soprano Carole Bogard and the composer).

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage, texts by D. Duke: The Cat that Walked by itself (children's musical), 1944; Captain Lovelock (chbr op, 1), 1953; The Sire de Maletroit (chbr op, 1), 1958; The Yankee Pedlar (operetta), 1962

Orch: Ov., d, 1928; Conc., A, pf, str, 1938; Carnival Ov., 1940

Choral: Magnificat, unison vv, org, 1961; 3 River Songs (after Chin.), female vv, pf, 1963; O Sing unto the Lord a new song, female vv, str orch, 1965

Chbr and solo inst: The Fairy Glen, pf, 1922; Suite, va, 1933; Suite, vc, 1934; Fantasy, a, vn, pf, 1936; Str Trio, 1937; Str Qt no.1, 1941; Narrative, va, pf, 1942; Dialogue, vc, pf, 1943; Pf Trio, D, 1943; Melody, vc/va, pf, 1946; Str Qt no.2, 1967

*c*260 songs, incl. Loveliest of Trees (A.E. Housman), 1928; Wild Swans (E. St Vincent Millay), 1935; Luke Havergal (E.A. Robinson), 1945; The Bird (E. Wylie), 1946; i carry your heart (e.e. cummings), 1960

MSS in US-Nsc

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, C. Fischer, Mercury, Peer-Southern, G. Schirmer, Southern Music, Valley

WRITINGS

'Some Reflections on the Art Song in English', American Music Teacher, xxv/4 (1975–6), 26, 29 only

'The Significance of Song', Ars Lyrica, i (1981), 11

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Friedberg: 'The Recent Songs of John Duke', NATS Bulletin, xxxvi/1 (1979), 31–6 [incl. complete list of songs to 1978]

R. Friedberg: American Art Song and American Poetry, ii (Metuchen, NJ, 1984)

J.D. McManus: The Compositional Aesthetic and Harmonic Vocabulary of the Solo Songs by John Duke (diss., U. of Texas, 1986)

RUTH C. FRIEDBERG

Duke, Richard (b Holborn, London, 3 Dec 1718; d Kentish Town, London, 21 Feb 1783). English violin maker. He was regarded in his day as the best in London. His entire working life was spent around Holborn, the earliest recorded label being from 1743. Duke brought about a considerable improvement in violin making in London. As his business grew he employed many craftsmen, including John Betts and John Carter, and many instruments of different styles and varied quality emanated from his workshops. Around 1765 he ventured into music publishing for a few years, sometimes in conjunction with Henry Thorowgood, and by 1768 had been appointed musical instrument maker to the Duke of Gloucester, giving him private lodgings in Old Gloucester Street and workshops in Gloucester Place. At this time he was able to charge 10 guineas for his violins, a substantial price for the period. He also traded in old violins: he owned a Stradivari of 1692 which may have been the pattern for his own Stradivari copies.

His son, also Richard Duke, also made violins, but was by no means his equal as a craftsman. The son was almost completely disinherited in his father's will and the business passed through the daughter, Anne, to JOHN BETTS.

Most of Duke's instruments were made on the then fashionable model of Stainer, which sets them at a disadvantage today. Others, however, were made on an individual pattern strongly influenced by Stradivari, and are more popular in consequence. A few set out to be copies of Stradivari, using the most handsome materials available, and rank among the best of English violins. Small violas with a 38-cm body length are also known, and a very occasional cello. Duke has been flattered and at the same time insulted by 19th-century imitations of his work. Scores of almost worthless factory violins, made by German artisans at the request of the British trade, are coarsely branded 'DUKE, LONDON' at the top of the back. His originals are also branded, but in fine lettering, and in addition are often signed by the maker on the interior.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Sandys and S.A. Forster: The History of the Violin (London, 1864)

W.M. Morris: British Violin Makers (London, 1904, 2/1920)

W. Henley: Universal Dictionary of Violin and Bow Makers (Brighton, 1959/R)

CHARLES BEARE, JOHN DILWORTH

Duke, Vernon [Dukelsky, Vladimir Alexandrovich] (b Parfianovka, nr Pskov, 10 Oct 1903; d Santa Monica, CA, 16 Jan 1969). American composer of Russian birth. He studied with Reyngol'd Glier (1916–19) and Marian Dombrovsky (1917–19) at the Kiev Conservatory and then fled the Revolution with his family, settling first in Constantinople (1920–21) and then in New York (1922). There he wrote a piano concerto for Artur Rubinstein. From 1924 he was in Paris and was commissioned by Serge Diaghilev to write Zéphr et Flore, a ballet based on his concerto, which was performed by the Ballets Russes at Monte Carlo and Paris in 1925. In London he wrote music for the stage (*c*1926–9) before returning to New York, where he studied orchestration with Joseph Schillinger (1934–5). He became an American citizen in 1936. In 1948 he founded the Society for Forgotten Music. His first successful popular song, 'I'm only human after all', was included in The Garrick Gaieties of 1930. At George Gershwin's suggestion he adopted the pseudonym Vernon Duke for his popular songs and light music, continuing to use his Russian name for his other works until 1955. Duke developed two styles, one for his choral works, operas, ballets, and orchestral and chamber compositions, which were championed in the USA and Europe by Koussevitzky, and another for his revues, musicals and film scores, for which he was best known. His most successful work was the musical play Cabin in the Sky (1940), which was performed on Broadway by an all-black cast that included Ethel Waters and was choreographed by Balanchine. In many of his concert works Duke used a contrapuntal style; in his songs the melodic style is expansive, almost rhapsodic, and uses chromaticism and wide arpeggios. In addition to an autobiography, Passport to Paris (Boston, 1955), he wrote Listen Here!: a Critical Essay on Music Depreciation (New York, 1963) and Russian poetry published under his original name (Munich, 1962–8).

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

unless otherwise stated, all are revues and dates are those of first New York performance; lyricists and librettists are listed in that order in parentheses

Yvonne (operetta, P. Greenbank), London, 22 May 1926 [collab. J. Gilbert]
The Yellow Mask (musical comedy, D. Carter; E. Wallace), London, 8 Feb 1928
Walk a Little Faster (E.Y. Harburg), 7 Dec 1932 [incl. April in Paris]
Ziegfeld Follies of 1934 (Harburg), 4 Jan 1934 [incl. Suddenly, I like the likes of you, What is there to say?]
Public Gardens (ballet, choreog. by L. Massine), Chicago, 8 March 1935
Ziegfeld Follies of 1936 (I. Gershwin), 30 Jan 1936 [incl. I can't get started, That Moment of Moments, An Island in the West Indies, Words without Music]
The Show is On (T. Fetter), 25 Dec 1936 [incl. Now]
Cabin in the Sky (musical, J.T. Latouche; L. Root), 25 Oct 1940 [incl. Cabin in the Sky, Takin' a Chance on Love]; film, collab. H. Arlen, 1943
Banjo Eyes (musical, Latouche, H. Adamson; J. Quillan, I. Elinson, after J.C. Holm, G. Abbott: Three Men on a Horse), 25 Dec 1941 [incl. We're having a baby]
The Lady comes Across (musical, Latouche; F. Thompson, D. Powell), 9 Jan 1942
Dancing in the Streets (H. Dietz), Boston, 1943
Jackpot (musical, Dietz; G. Bolton, S. Sheldon, B. Roberts), 13 Jan 1944
Sadie Thompson (musical, Dietz; Dietz, R. Mamoulian, after W.S. Maugham: Rain), 16 Nov 1944 [incl. The Love I Long For]
Sweet Bye and Bye (O. Nash), New Haven, 10 Oct 1946
Two's Company (Nash; P. de Vries, C. Sherman), 15 Dec 1952 [incl. Roundabout, Out of the Clear Blue Sky]
Time Remembered (incid music), 1957
Emperor Norton (ballet), San Francisco, 1957
Mistress into Maid (op, Duke, after A. Pushkin), Santa Barbara, 1958
Lady Blue (ballet), 1961
Zenda (op, L. Adelson, S. Kuller, M. Charnin; E. Freeman), San Francisco, Aug 1963

FILM

April in Paris (S. Cahn), 1952; She's Working her Way through College (Cahn), 1952; The Goldwyn Follies, 1938 [completion of score by G. Gershwin]

VOCAL

Songs: Triolets for the North (F. Sologub), song cycle, 1922; Poésies de Hippolite Bogdanovitch [and A. Pushkin], 8 songs, 1927–30; 5 poésies (Pushkin), 1930; I'm only human after all (I. Gershwin, E.Y. Harburg), in Garrick Gaieties of 1930; Autumn in New York (Duke), in Thumbs Up, 1935; I can't get started, 1936; 3 Chinese Songs (M. Kuzmin), *c*1937; 5 Victorian Songs, 1942; 5 Victorian Street Ballads, 1944; Ogden Nash's Musical Zoo, 20 songs, *c*1947; La bohème et mon coeur (F. Carco), 7 songs, 1949; A Shropshire Lad (A.E. Housman), 6 songs, *c*1949; 4 Songs (W. Blake), 1955
Other: Dushenka (H. Bogdanovitch), 2vv, orch, 1927; Epitaph (O. Mandelstamm), S, chorus, orch, 1932; Dédicaces (G. Apollinaire), S, pf, orch, 1934; The End of St. Petersburg (various authors), orat, 1937; Moulin-rouge (A. Symons), S, 6vv, pf, 1944; Paris aller et retour (P. Gilson), cant., chorus, pf, 1948

INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: Pf Conc., 1924; 3 syms., 1927–8, 1928–30, 1947; Vn Conc., *c*1943; Ode to the Milky Way, 1946; Vc Conc., 1946; Variations on Old Russian Chant, ob, str orch, 1958
Chbr: Ballade, pf, chbr orch, 1931; Capriccio mexicano, vn, pf, 1939; Etude, vn, bn, 1939; 3 Pieces, fl, ob, cl, bn, pf, 1946; Nocturne, 6 wind insts, pf, 1947; Vn Sonata, 1948; Str Qt, *c*1956; Vn Sonata, 1960
Pf: Sonata, 1928; 2 pièces, 1930; Printemps, 1931; New York Nocturne, 1939; Surrealist Suite, 1940; Vieux carré, 1940; Homage to Boston, suite, 1943; 3 Caprices, 1944; Music for Moderns, 6 soloists, 1944; Parisian Suite, 1955; Souvenir de Venise, 1955; Serenade to San Francisco, 1956

Principal publishers: C. Fischer, Editions Russes de Musique

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CBY 1941
N. Slonimsky: 'Vladimir Dukelsky', Melody Maker, iv/3 (1927), 37
D. Ewen: Popular American Composers (New York, 1962; suppl., 1972)
Obituary, New York Times (18 Jan 1969)
A. Wilder: American Popular Song: the Great Innovators, 1900–1950 (New York, 1972)
G. Bordman: The American Musical Theatre: a Chronicle (New York, 1978, 2/1992)

RONALD BYRNSIDE/R

Duke's Theatre. The original name of Lincoln's Inn Fields Theatre, London. See LONDON, §V, 1.

Dulcayna (i) (Sp.). See DOLZAINA.

Dulcayna (ii) (Sp.). See under ORGAN STOP (Dulzian).

Dulçayna. See DOLZAINA.

Dulce melos. (1) The Latin name for DULCIMER.

(2) A string keyboard instrument (Fr. doucemelle) shown in the manuscript treatise (F-Pn lat.7295, *c*1438–46) by HENRI ARNAUT DE ZWOLLE (d 1466). It was essentially a keyed dulcimer whose action arranged for the strings to be struck (not plucked), without any subsequent damping. The layout and stringing of the instrument employs a principle found on many dulcimers in that the strings may be divided into sections with different bridges in order to sound different notes. However, the first of the three types of dulce melos described by Arnaut is a normal dulcimer, played in the 'rustic fashion', i.e. either struck with wooden sticks or plucked by hand. The Czech theorist Paulus Paulirinus also uses the term to describe this kind of instrument (Liber viginti artium, MS, 1459–63, PL-Kj).

The second and third types of dulce melos described by Arnaut are played by keyboard. In these instruments 12 unison pairs of strings pass over four bridges, the pairs tuned consecutively by semitones to provide a compass of an octave. Since the lengths of strings between the four bridges were in the ratio 4:2:1, the possibility of a total range of three octaves was provided. In fact the keyboard range was only two octaves and a 7th, from B to a″.

In the second type (see le Cerf and Labande, pl.x) the bridges are placed parallel to one another and perpendicular to the front of the instrument's rectangular case. All the strings between any pair of bridges have the same sounding length, even though the highest and lowest pairs of strings are tuned nearly an octave apart. If the higher-pitched strings between two bridges are fully stressed, then the lower-pitched strings must be fairly thick and would have a poorer tone. The third type (fig.1) has bridges that are placed obliquely in order to mitigate this problem, but the ratio of sounding lengths between the lowest and highest strings is only about 1:1·3 and not the theoretical 1:2 that would give a pure octave between two strings at the same tension. The keys are of necessity more cranked than in the second version. In both designs it would appear that the soundboard was near the bottom of the case, with the keys and action above it, the strings being carried on very tall bridges resting on the soundboard and rising between the groups of keys for each octave of the instruments' range. Both instruments would have been at 4′ pitch.

1. Arnaut's third layout for his dulce melos: the strings would run from left to right, crossing all four bridges (F-Pn lat.7295, f.130)

The action of the keyed dulce melos is the fourth of those sketched and described on the page of Arnaut's manuscript devoted to the harpischord (see HARPISCHORD, fig.2, upper right-hand corner; see Lester, p.38, and Restle, p.25, for interpretations of the action). A reconstruction is shown in fig.2: a strip of wood (pecia colata), effectively the hammer shaft, was hinged to the key (clavis) near the balance point, probably with a strip of leather. Since the strip of wood was weighted (plumbum) and the rear end of the keylever was arrested by a fixed stop (obstaculum superius), playing the key with some force would cause the hammer shaft, into which was inserted a tangent (crampinus; apparently of metal, as on the clavichord), to fly upwards towards a string above it. The tangent made contact with the string, which was left to sound undamped after playing. Since the hammer was of metal, this arrangement would produce a much brighter sound than any later piano action using leather-covered hammers.

This mechanism has no exact parallel in any surviving piano action, because it includes no means of making the hammer move faster than the key. However, it could have been the basis of the type of action seen in some mid-18th-century German square pianos, for example by Zumpe (see PIANOFORTE, fig. 9), where the hammer shaft is mounted on a separate rail above the keylever, and raised by a stalk on the keylever. Arnaut's action has little similarity to the TANGENT PIANO (to which it has formerly been likened), and there is no documentary evidence for Galpin's suggestion ('Chekker', Grove4, suppl.) that the mysterious CHEKKER employed the action of Arnaut's dulce melos.

It is not known how common keyed dulcimers were. No examples survive, and no other literary references have been found, except for two 16th-century Venetian documents that refer to a 'dulcimello' (see Vio and Toffolo, p.36), but, in view of Arnaut's and Paulus Paulirinus's use of dulce melos to refer to a normal dulcimer, it is not certain that the Venetian instrument had a keyboard. The 'instrumento Piano e forte' made by Hippolito Cricca in 1598 in Modena is not described clearly enough that we can be sure what action it used, but it is probable it had some kind of striking action. When we consider that Arnaut's hammered dulce melos was known in the latter half of the 15th century it would be strange if there had been no further experiments with such actions before Cristofori's well-known examples of *c*1700.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Reiss: 'Pauli Paulirini de Praga Tractatus de musica (etwa 1460)', ZMw, vii (1924–5), 259–64

2. Reconstruction of the key action of the dulce melos

G. le Cerf and E.-R. Labande: Instruments de musique du XVe siècle: les traités d'Henri-Arnaut de Zwolle et de divers anonymes (Paris, 1932/R)
J. Lester: 'The Musical Mechanisms of Arnaut de Zwolle', English Harpischord Magazine, iii/3 (1981–5), 35–41
G. Vio and S. Toffolo: 'La diffusione degli strumenti musicali nelle case dei nobili, cittadini e popolani nel XVI secolo a Venezia', Il Flauto Dolce, xvii–xviii (1987–8), 33–40
K. Restle: Bartolomeo und die Anfänge des Hammerclaviers (Munich, 1991)
S. Pollens: The Early Pianoforte (Cambridge, 1995)

EDWIN M. RIPIN/DENZIL WRAIGHT

Dulceon (Cz.). See under ORGAN STOP (Dulzian).

Dulceuse (Fr.). See DOLZAINA.

Dulciaan (Dut.). See under ORGAN STOP (Dulzian).

Dulcian (i) [dolcian] (Ger. Dulzian). The name commonly used for the early bassoon in one piece, as opposed to the later type in joints (see BASSOON, §2). It should not be confused with DOLZAINA.

Dulcian (ii) [dolcian] (Ger. Dulzian). See under ORGAN STOP.

Dulciana. See under ORGAN STOP (Dulcian).

Dulcimer (Fr. psaltérion, tympanon; Ger. Hackbrett; It. salterio; Hung. cimbalom, cymbalon, cymbálum; Russ. tsimbalï; Sp. salterio, tímpano). A name applied to certain instruments of the box ZITHER type with more than one string but without a keyboard. In many parts of the world, the dulcimer has a trapeziform box; its strings, commonly from two to six for each course, are unfretted, but some are divided into two segments by a partitioning bridge (fig.1). The courses are usually set in intersecting horizontal planes. The player may hit the strings with hammers or pluck them with the fingers or a plectrum. Many scholars, however, reserve the term 'dulcimer' for an instrument played with hammers, calling it a 'psaltery' when the plucking technique is used. The present article deals with instruments which are hammered or which, though plucked, have features that would facilitate hammering. (In the USA, where the hammer technique is normal, the term 'hammer dulcimer' or 'hammered dulcimer' has been coined to avoid confusion with the 'Appalachian' or 'mountain' dulcimer, a distinct instrument with a relatively narrow body and fretted melody strings; see APPALACHIAN DULCIMER). The dulcimer's history is well documented from the mid-15th century. The instrument has been used in popular, folk and art music of the West; it is widespread in eastern Europe, North Africa, Central Asia, India, Korea and China and holds an eminent position in the classical music of Iran. The name 'dulcimer' was used occasionally in the King James version of the Bible for the nevel, but the ancient Hebrews evidently did not have a dulcimer. The term has also been applied to an instrument of the glockenspiel type used in English schools since the early 1930s (see L. de Rusette: Dulcimer Playing for Children, London, 1934).

1. Nomenclature. 2. Structure. 3. Hammers. 4. Tuning and stringing. 5. History to 1800. 6. History since 1800.

1. NOMENCLATURE. The dulcimer has been known by dozens of different names. Most of these fall into one of six families. The Persian term SANTŪR and its many cognates derived from the Greek psallo ('to pluck'), possibly via the Aramaic psantrin, is used in various areas that have absorbed Islamic influence (e.g. Egypt, Georgia, Greece, India and Slovenia), with the variant šenterija. The same term is used in Syria and elsewhere for the plucked zither known as the QĀNŪN, and this confusion is by no means rare. The dulcimer-type santūr has 'chessmen' bridges (see §2) and horizontal tuning-pins; it is trapeziform, with an acute angle of about 45°, except in India and Georgia, where the angle is less acute, about 75°.

The Mandarin Chinese term YANGQIN ('foreign string instrument') is the commonest one in the orient, and it has also been borrowed in Indian Sanskrit. The term used in Mongolia is yoochin; in Korea yanggŭm; among the Central Asian Uighurs yenjing; in Thailand khim. Like European dulcimers, these usually have long bridges (chessmen only occasionally), vertical tuning-pins and an acute angle of about 60°.

The other groups of names are used in various parts of Europe; Italy has examples from all four, France and

1. Cross-section through a typical dulcimer, showing the main structural features

Germany both have examples from three. From kimbalom in eastern Europe and tympanon in western Europe – both Greek names for a struck instrument – come two separate lines of derivation. Kimbalom yields cimbalom, zimbel, tsimbalï, cymbaly and cimbolai in the Slav languages; ţambal in Romanian; and cembalo in Italian (some of these names are also used for the percussion cymbals and the harpsichord). Tympanon is the root for tympanon in French, tímpano in Spanish, timpano in Italian; some writers would include the Irish term tiompán in this group, but it has been clearly shown that it was never used for 'dulcimer' even though it has been adopted as such in the world of revival folk music (from this same root come 'timpani' and 'tympanum', the kettledrums and eardrum).

Terms related to the English 'psaltery' also derive from the Greek psallo, via psaltērion (Gk.) and psalterium (Lat.), and are found only in western Europe and its colonies. Such terms include psaltari, salterje etc. (Ger., Old Saxon); salterio (It., Sp.); psaltérion, saltérion, psalterium (Fr.); psaltere, psalterio (Old Fr.); and sotrie, sowtrie (Middle English). Many reference works give salterio tedesco ('German salterio') as the normal Italian dulcimer name: in fact the only primary source for the term is Bonanni (Gabinetto armonico, 1722), who used it because he was describing and illustrating a German instrument; later writers failed to note this point and used the label as if it were the normal Italian name for the instrument, and even a migration theory was based on this misunderstanding. All other primary sources refer simply to salterio. Some of these names were in use in the Middle Ages for instruments that had few dulcimer features, but the names survived and were used later for instruments with many or all of the features of today's dulcimers. One such is the McKenzie psaltery which is played in the USA; although copied in the 20th century from a 19th-century patented dulcimer, it is considered by its players to be a distinct instrument.

The term 'dulcimer' derives from dulce melos (Gk. and Lat. 'sweet sound') and is common only in English (i.e. in Britain, North America and New Zealand), with variants such as dowcemere, dulcimor(e), dulcimur, and possibly dulsate and dulsa chordis. Other derivations are doucemelle, doulcemelle (Fr.); dolcimela (It.); dolcema (Sp.); and poetically dwsmel (Welsh). The term DULCE MELOS was also used by Henri Arnaut de Zwolle (F-Pn lat.7295, *c*1440) for a related keyboard instrument.

Hackbrett, a German term for a chopping-board, is the normal name for the instrument among the Germanic peoples; hence hackbräd, hackbräde (Swed.); hakkebrett (Dan.); hakkebord (Flem.); Hachbratt (Swiss-Ger.) etc.; and such affectionate diminutives as Brettl in Austria and Hachbrattli in Switzerland.

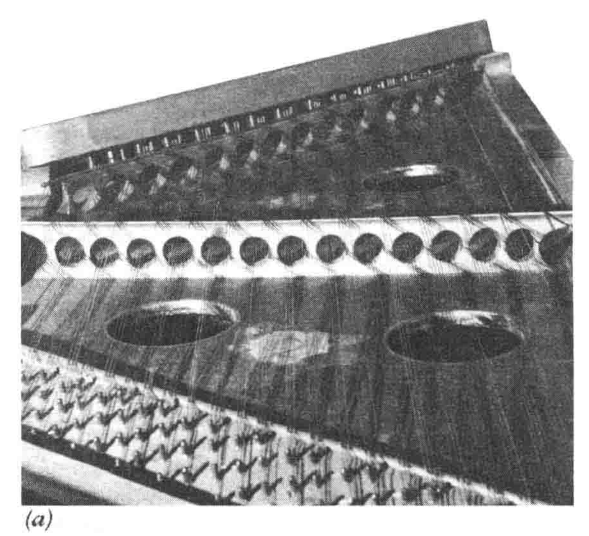
These various names convey some of the character of the instrument within each culture, and it is surely significant that all except the Hackbrett group have foreign derivations or associations. Other descriptive names are current in smaller areas: in Hong Kong a word meaning 'butterfly harp' or piano; in Tibet one meaning 'many strings' (rgyud-mang); whamdiddle and lumberjacks' piano (Michigan, USA); hammarharpa (Sweden). The PANTALEON is said to have been named by Louis XIV after its inventor, Pantaleon Hebenstreit.

2. STRUCTURE. The body of the dulcimer is almost universally a box construction (fig.1), though sometimes bridges and strings are mounted on a plank with soundholes and battens, which creates a resonance chamber when the instrument is placed on a table. Some makers believe that there is a relation between the number of soundholes and the volume of sound, but instruments in Scotland and elsewhere have none and sound just as well. Soundboards are normally flat, but the 19th-century northern Irish dulcimer was curved or vaulted, as are some American instruments and some examples of the Chinese yangqin and Tibetan rgyud-mang. As a practical alternative to doubling the string lengths for every octave descent in range, a trapezial shape has been commonly adopted, with the strings at different tensions and sometimes of different thicknesses.

A length of about 1 metre along the bottom side is common. Small instruments about 60 cm long were made in Flanders in the 17th century and in England in the 19th, and larger ones about 130 cm long are known in England, the USA and Alpine areas. The concert cimbalom is even larger, about 160 cm long, while the pantaleons of Hebenstreit and his pupils are said to have been nearly 3 metres. A normal depth is about 5 to 7 cm, but the 19th-century northern Irish dulcimers were 20 cm deep, and the concert cimbalom is 30 cm deep. A larger instrument is by no means always louder, although the concert cimbalom has a very characteristic resonance; a longer instrument gives a lower bottom note, a broader instrument (from front to back) more notes. Families of dulcimers have been built in Central Asia, the Ukraine, Styria and the USA.

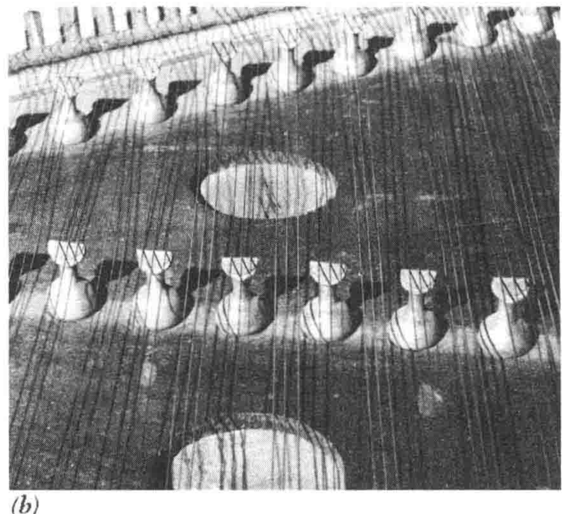
Most dulcimers are portable, some easily so, some less easily. Instruments with dampers operated by a pedal are necessarily built with legs (concert cimbalom, Uzbek chang etc.), and legs are characteristic also of some American instruments (see §6, below). A neck strap is quite commonly used in eastern Europe and occasionally elsewhere (the Alps, Germany, Milan; fig.2). Decoration varies widely; moulding and marquetry are common, and the soundholes often have a rose carved in the soundboard or made of gilt paper, metal, or silken threads. It is thought to have been a Persian custom to inscribe poetry on the table. In China the bridges are often delicately carved, and the outer edges of the Cantonese 'butterfly harp' are decoratively scalloped.

Bridges are of wood, but almost always with a wire rod or nail set in the top (fig.3*a*); in China ivory caps are used instead of wire (for illustration see YANGQIN), and one small English type has a brass covering. There are numerous ways of arranging the bridges. On some instruments a long solid bridge divides all the strings into two playable parts; Virdung illustrated such an arrangement in 1511, and it is still found. A far commoner arrangement is illustrated in fig.4, from Jacob Cornelisz. van Oostsanen's Nativity (1512): two long bridges each carry half the courses, led alternately over one bridge and through cut-outs in the other. Normally only one bridge divides its strings into two sounding portions. This is called the treble bridge and the strings the treble strings. The long undivided strings crossing the other (bass) bridge are the bass strings. From the 18th century the bridges were sometimes segmented, so that different strings could be divided into different proportions, and as early as 1636 Mersenne depicted an extra bridge on the left to bear two or three extra bass strings running the whole length of the instrument.



2. Dulcimer with two bridges, supported by a neck strap: 'La musicienne des Alpes', etching by Louis-Michel Halbou after Johann Eleazar Schenau, 1764

On a few instruments both bridges divide the strings; the right-hand strings thus become effectively shorter and lose their bass function, but are tuned to give extra chromatic notes instead (Austria, England, Georgia). These bridges are used on larger examples of the north Chinese yangqin and are occasionally found on 18th-century European instruments. A tuning diagram pasted on the back of a Milanese salterio dated 1779 shows five bridges, with a correspondingly complex tuning system. In the 1920s a chordal dulcimer was made in England with a third bridge carrying seven courses, each of which was tuned to a four-note chord as on a zither harp.



'Chessmen' bridges (fig.3*b*) were first depicted around 1600, but they did not become common until the 19th century, when presumably they facilitated chromaticism. At first they were joined by a rod or wire (see fig.13 below), so they were only marginally more flexible than the long bridges. Even when they are not joined, they are often set in straight lines, so the flexibility is not exploited; thus the full potential of chessmen is only sometimes realized (e.g. on the Persian santūr). On some Indian types the chessmen are apparently placed at the extreme edges of the soundboard.

A number of instruments combine more than one system – Jozsef V. Schunda's concert cimbalom (see §6 and fig.16 below), for instance, and some 18th-century salterii which had divided long bridges for the trebles and the right-hand basses but chessmen for the extra left-hand basses. There are also instruments in which all the strings have only one playing portion and are in the same horizontal plane. Most of these are designed to be plucked and could therefore be classed as psalteries; but they sometimes have dulcimer names, and some early pictures and carvings show such instruments being hammered, though they do not always have strings of equal length as shown in fig.5. (The positioning of the bridges is discussed in §4 below.)

3. Hammers. Hammers may have hard or soft playing-heads and stiff or flexible shafts, and be with or without finger-grips (fig.6). In Britain and North America they are often designed by the maker or player; elsewhere there are standard types. The Chinese use very thin, springy bamboo beaters (sometimes with carved shafts) without a finger-grip. Indian hammers are of rigid wood with an elegantly carved finger-grip. Persians use very light wooden hammers with a flat end and grips for both finger and thumb; nowadays these are mass-produced in plastic. Cimbalom players use wood thickly covered with soft cotton. A type used in Styria consists of a wooden ring on the end of a shaft of sprung steel, capable of producing a very rapid tremolo. The Klöppeln of Salzburg and Bavaria have two playing surfaces, wood and felt. A similar device, but with a much longer, thinner shaft, is used in Appenzell, Switzerland, while players in Valais use

(a)

(b)

3. (a) Continuous wooden bridges on a dulcimer, each with a wire rod set in the top, by William Fell, Birmingham; (b) chessmen bridges with brass caps on a dulcimer from Gloucester (private collection)

4. Dulcimer with two bridges, each carrying half the courses: detail from the 'Nativity' by Jacob Cornelisz. van Oostsanen, 1512 (Museo di Capodimonte, Naples) wooden hammers bent into a curve, with finger-grips. 18th-century west European hammers are of carefully turned wood (see fig.14 below). In England lengths of cane are steamed and bent into a loop at one end, then bound with wool or, in Northern Ireland, with leather. Scottish players use carved wood without a finger-grip. Whalebone corset stays used to be particularly recommended, as was crabpot cane, and cork or velvet for a soft sound. In North America and in the Alps experiments have been made with double-headed hammers for playing 3rds one-handed, and a few players have the left hammer longer than the right because it plays the higher notes, farthest from the player.

5. Rectangular dulcimer with undivided strings: miniature from the Hours of Bona Sforza, begun c1490 (GB-Lbl Add.34294, f.37r)

4. Tuning and stringing. The position of the treble bridge determines the portions into which each treble string is divided and hence the relative pitch of its segments. The maker's intention can often be discerned even when the bridge is missing, as there is normally an inside support directly underneath. The commonest ratio is 2:3, giving a 5th between the two parts of the string. In East Anglia some of the bridges are pushed 'a semi-tone to the left', producing a minor 6th (ratio 5:8), and Geiser mentioned the use of this interval in Switzerland. In the USA a 4th (3:4) is quite common, though some players now adopt a 5th (2:3) because it gives more keys. An octave (1:2) is normal in Iran, sometimes modified by semitones.

Early tunings probably consisted of a simple major scale and used the 2:3 ratio (fig.7*a*). This has remained the basis of most systems, transposed and extended to a greater or lesser degree; fig.8 indicates the treble notes in three such modern schemes. The bass notes are commonly an octave below the right-hand portion of the trebles; less often they are a 4th below, hence an octave below the left-hand portion of the trebles. Sometimes the lowest strings are tuned down to the first, fourth and fifth degrees of the scale. The scheme in 4ths (3:4) used in the USA is similar but has a sharp 7th and gives only two major keys (fig.7*b*). However, there are many variations on the basic 2:3 diatonic pattern, giving extra semitones; an example from East Anglia, using movable chessmen bridges, is shown in fig.7*c*. A device used since the 17th century to render a diatonic instrument chromatic is the dital, a small metal lever which may be pushed up to shorten the sounding length of a string by about one-eighteenth and thus raise its pitch by a semitone. (For a similar device on harps, see Harp, §V, 9(i).)

Four different systems are in use to provide a fully chromatic scale through most of the instrument's range. The McKenzie psaltery retains the 2:3 ratio; each side of the bridge is separately tuned in semitones, as shown in fig.7*d*. Another American system, albeit rare, has the bridge just right of centre, giving a semitone between the two parts of the string. A third system, devised independently by a 19th-century Englishman, Charles Grey, and a 20th-century Austrian, Julius Derschmidt, provides 'white notes' on the left-hand bridge and 'black notes' on the right, using a 2:3 ratio at both bridges. An instrument used in the vicinity of Salzburg and in Bavaria has two whole-tone scales, one on each bridge, with no strings divided. The Schunda cimbalom uses this system for its bass range (nearest the player); the treble section uses a modification of the diatonic 5ths system, with extra small bridges for the highest notes, as shown in fig.7*e*. The result is four chromatic octaves, E to e'', plus D, with no note duplicated. In spite of this plethora of notes the instrument (at the near end of the treble bridge) is essentially based on a C major scale on four courses.

6. Dulcimer hammers. Northern Ireland: (a) wood, (b) steam-bent cane with soft leather; England: (c) cane wound with wool, (d) steel, (e) wood with cork head, (f), (g) wood; Scotland: (h) wood; Bavaria: (i) wood with felt and suede, (j) wood with soft leather, (k) wood with soft leather, flexible resin shaft; Switzerland: (l) wood, from Valais, (m), (n) wood with chamois leather, from Appenzell; Iran: (o) plastic, or often light wood; China: (p), (q) [also Korea], (r) bamboo

8. Modern diatonic dulcimer tunings from Syria, Scotland and Northern Ireland based on the simple diatonic tuning shown in fig.7a

Steel piano wire is the commonest material for modern dulcimer strings. Each string may span the instrument twice (from wrest-pin to hitch-pin and back to another wrest-pin) so that a wire crossing the treble bridge will have four sounding lengths. Many instruments have strings of the same gauge throughout, though older players and tutors (in the West) recommend three or four different grades.

In the santūr the wrest-pins are fixed horizontally in the side of the instrument, but in the yangqin and in most Western dulcimers they are fixed vertically; occasionally the pins are fixed at an angle between the vertical and

7. Dulcimer tunings: (a) simple diatonic scheme probably used on the earliest dulcimers; (b) scheme in 4ths giving the keys C and G major, USA; (c) scheme using movable chessmen bridges giving the major keys E♭, B♭, C, F, D, G, A, E, and minor keys G, D, A, E, F♯, East Anglia; (d) chromatic scheme in 5ths, McKenzie psaltery; (e) chromatic four-octave scheme of the concert cimbalom horizontal. They are nearly always to the player's right, but a few instruments in the USA and India are reversed. Among those early engravings that appear to show reversed instruments, it is not always clear which are due to the kind of mirror-image printing that is responsible for depictions of left-handed fiddles, flutes and so on.

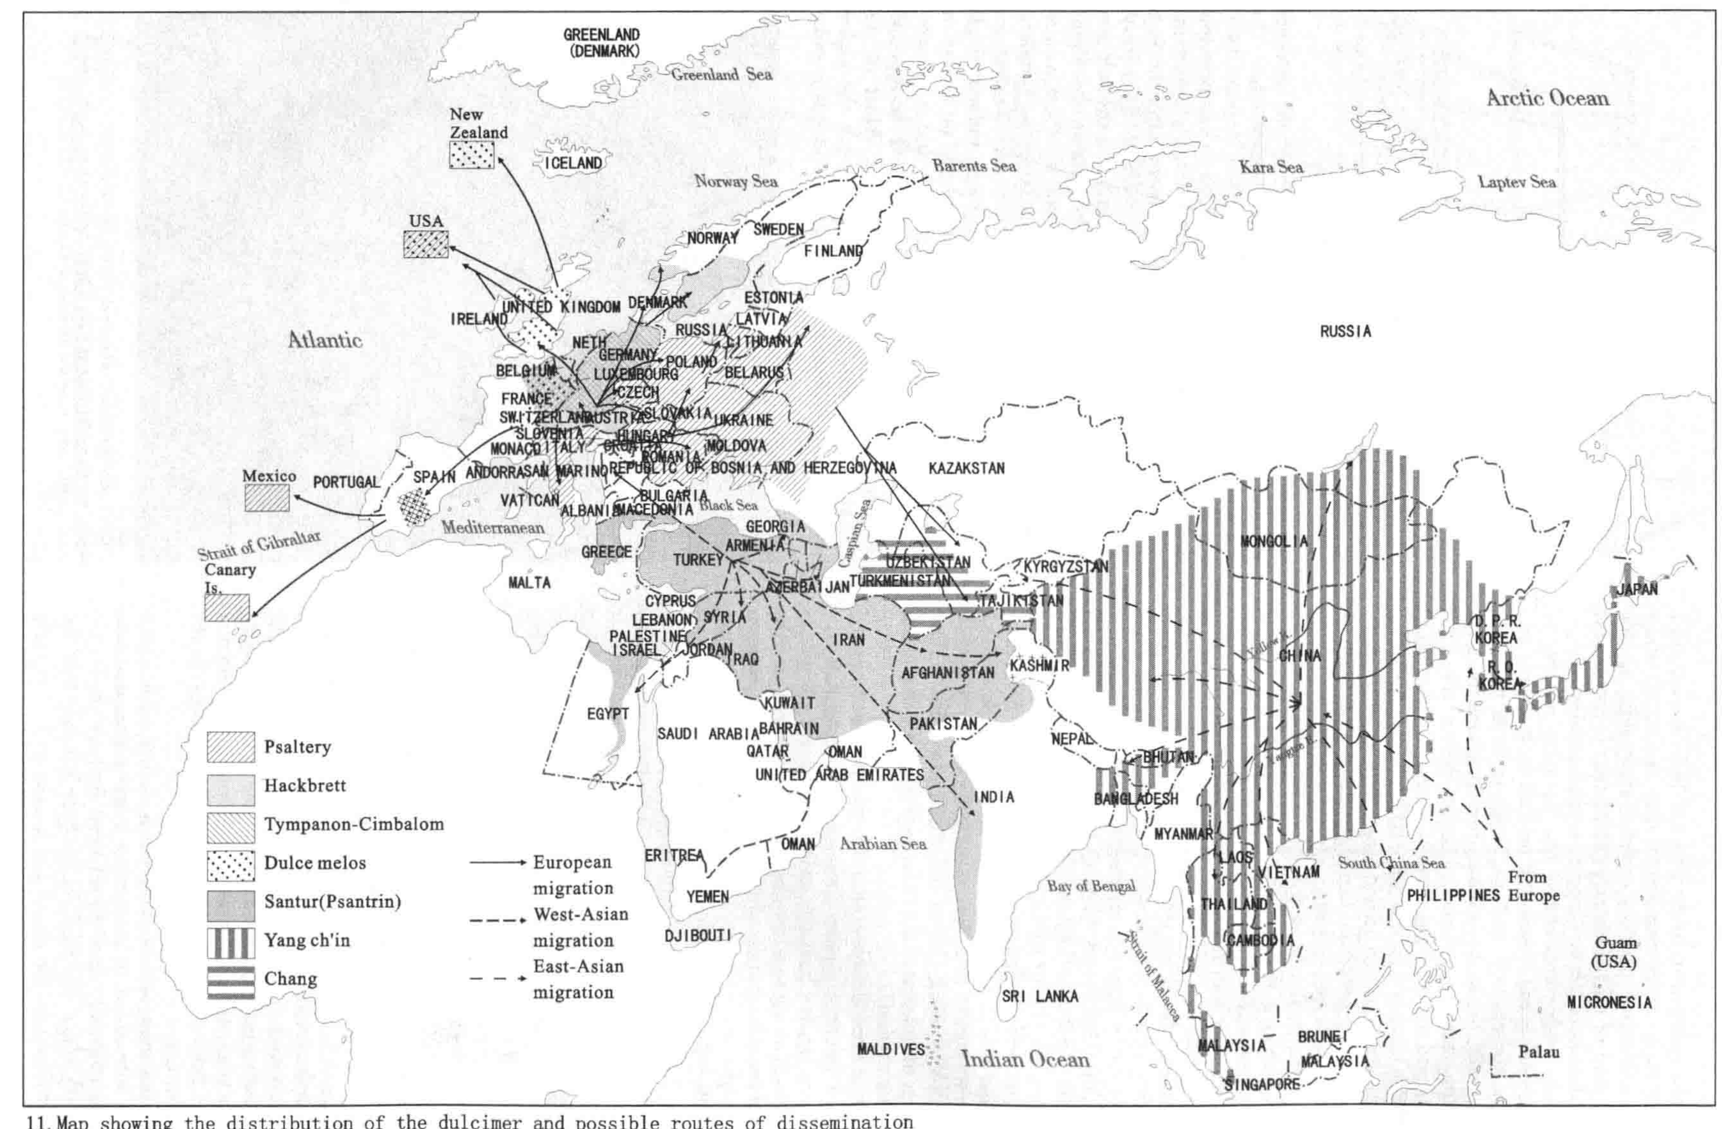
Usually each treble course has the same number of strings. Four is the commonest number by far, three and five are not unusual, and six, seven or even eight are occasionally found on 18th-century instruments. Two was apparently a common number before the 18th century and was also the number used on 19th-century American instruments, and hence on McKenzie psalteries; double courses are also used in Mongolia and, increasingly (for ease of tuning), in England. Quite a number of dulcimers have fewer strings per course for the basses than for the trebles: three for each bass course and four for the trebles is fairly common in England and Styria; other patterns are two in the bass and three or four in the treble, three or four in the bass and five in the treble, or even six in the bass and seven in the treble.

More complex arrangements are also found, mostly on 18th-century instruments, with fewer strings for the lower treble courses than for the higher ones, and similarly among the bass courses. Thus on one 18th-century French dulcimer the bass bridge (to the right in fig.9*a*) carried three courses of four strings each and ten courses of five, while the treble bridge carried three courses of five strings each and ten of six. Fig.9*b* represents a north Chinese yanqin with three bridges, the treble bridge carrying nine quadruple courses. On an older dulcimer with bridges missing, the pattern of the wrest-pins may help in making a reconstruction.

Tuning a new double-course dulcimer can be completed in a few minutes; a more complex instrument may take hours. In north China tiny cylinders of steel are placed under each string to allow fine tuning; elsewhere the 5ths are tempered by a slight adjustment of the bridge position or by stretching individual sections of the strings so that the tension becomes slightly uneven in the two parts.

5. History to 1800. Little is known of the dulcimer from before the mid-15th century. It is often said to have been of Persian origin, but H.G. Farmer (Grove5) adduced considerable negative evidence, pointing out that 'not one of the great Arabic and Persian treatises on music contains the slightest reference' to the dulcimer and concluding that 'it seems to have found its way to Iranian ears during the 17th century, perhaps through Turkish influence'. The oldest known depiction of an instrument that is unmistakably a dulcimer – it is trapeziform, with lateral strings struck by hammers – is in a 12th-century carved ivory book-cover made in Byzantium for Melisende, the wife of Fulk V of Anjou, King of Jerusalem (fig.10). No other dulcimer is known for another 300 years, although there are numerous medieval depictions of the psaltery, plucked only and with undivided strings in a single plane. In the map shown in fig.11 the dotted arrow north-west from Turkey suggests that perhaps it was from Byzantium that the dulcimer was introduced to western Europe in the 15th century.



Of the many illustrations of dulcimers after about 1440, only about a quarter are angel representations, although virtually all of the medieval psaltery players are heavenly beings. The medieval psaltery is usually held flat against the body, the player looking out and away from the instrument, but the position shown for the dulcimer is such that the player must look down 'into' the instrument to get the right notes (fig.12). Around 1440 Arnaut de Zwolle described the divided-strings principle in connection with a keyboard instrument, the Latin name of which (dulce melos) is evidently the source of the term 'dulcimer', which appeared later in the 15th century. Most of the references to and illustrations of the dulcimer from the next 100 years centre on the German and Alpine regions, including Grenoble and Aosta, but there are also others from Italy, Poland, Hungary, Bohemia, Flanders, northern France and England. 15th-century illustrations show instruments with or without bridges, and with single courses of six to nine strings, being played on the lap or sometimes on a table or bench; in 16th-century illustrations, the instruments almost always have bridges and between eight and 12 double courses. Most of the illustrations appear to depict players from the higher classes of society, but the dulcimer was evidently popular

9. Examples of treble and bass stringing: (a) 18th-century French; (b) north Chinese yangqin; Arabic numerals indicate the number of courses, Roman numerals the number of strings per course (lower-case for treble courses, upper-case for bass courses)

10. Possibly the earliest known depiction of a dulcimer: detail from the scenes from the 'Life of King David' on the ivory book-cover, made in Byzantium, of the Melisende Psalter, c1135 (GB-Lbl Eg.1139)

11. Map showing the distribution of the dulcimer and possible routes of dissemination

12. Musician with a small trapeziform dulcimer with undivided strings: detail of a miniature (possibly by the Master of the Dresden Prayerbook) illustrating Psalm xcviii, from the Breviary of Isabella the Catholic, Queen of Spain, 1480s (GB-Lbl Add.18851, f.164r) elsewhere as well: Luscinius described it in 1536 as commonplace (ignobile) and esteemed particularly for its volume, and Gerhard de Jode (*c*1600) portrayed it along with the hurdy-gurdy and bagpipe.

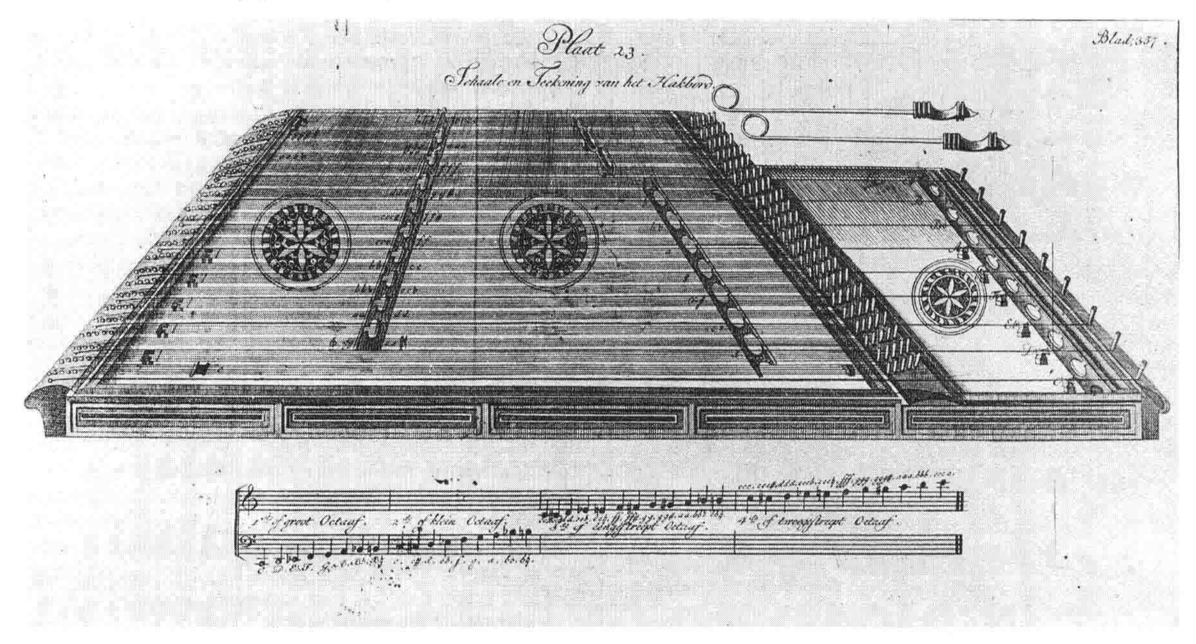
More detail is known about the dulcimer in the Baroque period, although the evidence relating to its dispersion is far from complete. Surviving instruments have between 18 and 25 courses and mostly four strings per course. There is an isolated Norwegian reference in the introduction to a psalm-book (1623) by the Danish bishop Anders Arrebo. In Sweden the hackbrad in 1683 was an instrument played by farm workers. Dulcimers were certainly played in the Czech lands at this time, reached Spain and became more widespread in Italy. According to Farmer (1937), the first unequivocal indications of the dulcimer in Iran or Ottoman Turkey are from the 17th century (hence, in fig.11, the arrow leading into Turkey). Within 100 years the dulcimer was being played in most areas under Turkish domination – but by Christians and Jews rather than by Turks. In 1609 a dulcimer was recorded with a violin in a ship's log in Jamestown, Virginia. According to Korean sources the dulcimer arrived in Korea in 1725 from China and only subsequently reached Japan.



By this time nearly all dulcimers were trapeziform and had multiple courses divided by a long bridge. A few 17th- and 18th-century bridges were made of several blocks rather than long strips; but as the blocks were joined by a rod across the top, they did not provide the flexibility of the later 'chessmen' bridges. Double courses are most often in evidence, but some instruments had three, four or even five strings per note. Praetorius depicted fewer strings for the bass courses than for the trebles (five triple courses over the treble bridge but four double courses and one single over the bass bridge) and subsequently this kind of arrangement became increasingly common. There are occasional single-course instruments without divided strings, some of them designed only to be plucked but nonetheless called dulcimer or Hackbrett. Other instruments, in the Low Countries, Spain and perhaps Italy, were also plucked but have the characteristic arrangement of strings crossing in two planes so that they could equally well be struck.

Baroque illustrations are nearly all of real players (as in fig.13), with just the occasional allegorical figure. Translators of the Bible, on the Continent as well as in England, sometimes used 'dulcimer', hackbräde, psaltérion or the like for the Hebrew term nevel. Some writers alluded contemptuously to the use of the dulcimer among their social inferiors, and Mattheson suggested in 1713 that it 'should be nailed up in houses of ill repute'. However, Pepys liked the dulcimer ('played on with sticks knocking of the strings, and is very pretty') and mentioned it in 1662 as accompanying puppet shows. Grassineau noted a similar use of the instrument in 1740.

Mersenne devoted about 1000 words to the psaltérion – its bridging, stringing, tuning, playing techniques and repertory – and illustrated a double-course instrument with notes on only one side of a single bridge. He described more complex types with two or three bridges, strings of gut or silk (as well as the more usual metal) and courses tuned in octaves (and the added possibility of 5ths and 15ths). He mentioned also a double instrument with high

13. French or Flemish dulcimer with chessmen bridges mostly joined by rods, and played with the hammers held between two fingers in the normal way: mezzotint by Pieter Schenck forming an illustration to a text from Virgil's 'Aeneid' which refers to a player of the kithara; the music is a march written in note-name tablature and low registers for playing duos. He depicted an extra-long bass course nearest the player, and a lid that could be locked. The player might use, he said, a single hammer for a single melody, or two hammers to play part-music; he might pluck the strings with fingers or quill, or hammer a melody with the right hand and pluck chords with the left. Mersenne said that the dulcimer could be played after only an hour or two of practice but that with industry one could derive as much pleasure from it as from any other instrument and that it was suitable for all sorts of songs, for teaching singing, for just intonation and so on.

14. Dulcimer with right-hand extension for bass strings, and tuning tangents: engraving from Joos Verschuere Reynvaan's 'Muzijkaal Kunst-Woordenboek' (Amsterdam, 1795)

In 1704 Pantaleon Hebenstreit brought a large version of the dulcimer to Louis XIV, who is said to have decreed that the instrument should share the name 'pantaleon' (see PANTALEON). In the later 18th century a number of pantaleon virtuosos travelled about Europe, notably Hebenstreit's pupil Georg Noëlli, who played in Sweden, England, Italy and other countries. Italian composers including Jommelli, Carlo Monza and Chiesa wrote for the salterio. Schickhaus (1972) listed nine sonatas for dulcimer with continuo, two trios with violin and cello, two concertos (one with oboes and horns as well as strings) and a sinfonia with strings, all in galant style; some of these have been published in modern editions. Mitjana (EMDC, 1922) discussed a Spanish opera of 1753 in which the prima donna accompanied herself on a salterio, with an orchestra of flutes and strings.

A Danish manuscript of 1753, Tablature indrettet till Hakke-Bret (in the Musikhistorisk Museum, Copenhagen), contains the melody lines of 43 dance-and song-tunes from various countries, written in note names on a five-line staff. A few paintings and engravings from the 16th century to the 18th show the dulcimer being played from music (including a march in note-name tablature, as in fig.13, and a 'Pastoril' in staff notation), in various ensembles.

The 18th-century instruments were often more complex than their 17th-century precursors, with as many as five bridges (to achieve complete chromaticism) and seven or eight strings to a course. Joos Verschuere Reynvaan in Flanders depicted a right-hand extension to the body to carry long single bass strings tuned an octave below the rest of the course (fig.14). Similar systems, but usually with the extension to the left, appeared in England, Germany and France. Reynvaan's drawing also shows little metal tangents or ditals that could be pushed up between a course of strings and the soundboard, shortening the sounding portion of the strings to produce the note a semitone higher than the open string – a device for chromaticism that was apparently invented or first described in connection with the dulcimer by a Florentine abbot about 1750 and is still in use in Valais (Switzerland) and elsewhere. An early tutor describes a dulcimer with separate movable bridges at a time (1770) when most instruments had long strips (though occasionally divided in two parts for flexibility). An unusual instrument dated 1776 from the Engadin, a Romansch-speaking district of Switzerland, shows many of the features of Virdung's drawing of 1511: a trapeziform shape with a very shallow angle, a single solid bridge, few courses, and side tuning-pins. By this time, however, European instruments normally had vertical tuning-pins, side pins being much more typical of the Middle East.

The dulcimer continued to be popular in country areas, and the later 18th century saw the development of the Strüchmusi, still flourishing in many Alpine regions and in eastern Europe – a band of two fiddles, dulcimer and bass. In Switzerland the traditional fife-and-drum band also sometimes featured a dulcimer.

6. HISTORY SINCE 1800. The dulcimer has become so widespread since 1800 that its history is best traced by approximate geographical area. Though evidently less popular in cultivated Western society, perhaps because of the increasing availability of the piano, the dulcimer in the 19th century retained its appeal among country folk and many working townspeople. Several new models were developed, and with the coming of industrialization some instruments were produced in hundreds or even thousands. London firms like Douglas & Co. or John Grey & Sons used individual chessmen bridges, and these models became popular in many cities and in East Anglia (where the bridges are nowadays arranged to give up to six keys). A small triple-strung instrument is also commonly found (Grey's version of this model was called the 'Dulcet' or Dulcette'). A type particularly favoured in Birmingham has lids covering the hitch- and wrest-pins (fig.3*a*); long bridges are used, and the strings are so close together that plucking is quite convenient: this type probably originated with an early 19th-century Biedermeier instrument.

The dulcimer probably went to Northern Ireland with the Lowland Scots in the 18th and 19th centuries; the surviving repertory includes both Scottish and Irish tunes, mainly jigs, reels and hornpipes. Elsewhere in Britain popular songs of the early 20th century are most often heard, with occasionally an older traditional dance. Instruments and playing styles went to southern Ireland via Dublin, probably from the south of England in the early 1900s, although the repertory there is completely local. In the 1920s and 30s the dulcimer was played in Scottish dance bands with melodeon, fiddle, piano and other instruments and was popular as a domestic instrument in Britain and with street buskers during the Depression: in the 1970s too, buskers with dulcimers were seen in Liverpool and Norwich. Players in Scotland and Ireland use hammers, while plucking is commoner in Birmingham and London; in East Anglia both methods are used.

In Victorian times dulcimers of English origin became popular for square dances in the eastern USA, along with the fiddle, accordion and various other instruments which were used because they were available. Other immigrant groups – Czechs, Germans, Greeks, Hungarians – brought their dulcimers and to some extent kept their native traditions alive in the new country. In the later 19th century several makers patented designs which included such features as double courses, an integral rectangular case, curved soundboards (to allow the bass strings to be played at either end), legs, dampers (antedating those of the pedal cimbalom), adjustable 'frets' for fine tuning and a reversible frame with two soundboards and two sets of strings (one for flat keys, the other for sharp ones). Modern McKenzie psalteries have kept many of these features.

A dozen or more tutors were published between 1848 (by Haight in the USA) and about 1920 (by Dallas in London). Also published were plans for dulcimer builders, such as Charles Grey's design, in 1883, for an instrument which had 'white notes' over the left-hand bridge and 'black notes' over the right (a similar system was independently produced in Austria by Julius Derschmidt in the 1950s). The period between the world wars must have been something of a heyday for the dulcimer in the USA, as in Britain. A spate of gramophone records became available commercially, and from 1924 Henry Ford's Early American Orchestra broadcast and recorded regularly with fiddle, dulcimer, cimbalom and double bass or tuba.

In the second half of the 20th century older American dulcimer players still played dance melodies monophonically, but younger players were experimenting with diverse textures and techniques. In the increasingly popular style characteristic of the McKenzie psaltery, for instance, slow-moving melodies were played in the lower register accompanied by rippling figures in the treble. There is no evidence for living dulcimer traditions in the folk music of the Canary Islands (where there survives a single 19th-century instrument, in a museum), Norway (where the dulcimer has been confused with the langeleik, which is related to the Appalachian dulcimer) or Sweden (where the last known player was active in the 19th century).

In 1912 a 'Hackbrettler Kongress' was organized in Brig, the major town of the Swiss canton of Valais; intended as a satire in the Germanic carnival tradition on an earlier Alphorn congress, it nonetheless attracted 13

15. Mr G. Cooper playing a dulcimer, Norwich, 1961

16. Concert cimbalom by Jozsef V. Schunda, Budapest, 1874 (Magyar Nemzéti Múzeum, Budapest): general view below, plan view above

Hackbrett players and a crowd of 2000. The Hackbrett traditions of the Swiss Alps are basically those of the Germanic peoples, but the instrument was formerly known in French-speaking parts of Switzerland. At present there are two distinct styles: a simple one from Valais in the west, where the dulcimer is played with wind instruments (clarinet, trumpet, accordion etc.) as well as with the fiddle; and a more refined style from Appenzell and Toggenburg in the east, where it is normally played with a string ensemble – perhaps with two fiddles playing the melody in 3rds, a cello playing off-beat chords and a bass. In Styria a combination of melodeon, Hackbrett and bass has taken over from the older string group; Tyrolean and other traditions have largely died out.

17. Musicians with dulcimer, clarinet, fiddle and drum, Ukraine, 1938

In Salzburg in 1932 Tobi Reiser, inspired by players from Styria, redesigned the dulcimer to accommodate chromatic harmony, and by 1940 there were 1000 players of the new instrument, which was soon adopted in Bavaria too; there, evening classes in the instrument produced by the 1970s some 5000 'Hackbrödler'. Salzburg and Bavaria have a common style of Stubenmusi (drawing-room music) using Hackbrett, zither, harp, guitar and bass. Some Styrian players with their waltzes and polkas rather scorn the Bavarians' refined Stubenmusi with its delicate instrumentation and Mozart minuets.

Some years after such ideas were patented in the USA, the Schunda family in Budapest produced a large concert dulcimer or cimbalom, with legs, an integral rectangular case and dampers operated by a pedal, but with a greater range – four chromatic octaves (fig.16); see also CIMBALOM). Shortly afterwards, similar instruments were made in Bucharest. These are now standard town instruments – played, for instance, by gypsy virtuosos in cafés – in both Hungary and the western part of Romania, where many Hungarians live, and are known also in parts of Poland, and the former USSR, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. In the country the older, portable dulcimer is still played (Hungarians call both types 'cimbalom'), characteristically providing the harmonic background to fiddles and bass, with off-beat chords and arpeggio flourishes. Large instruments without dampers or pedal are known in Hungary and Poland. The smaller dulcimer is still widely used in the country (fig.17); in Romania it is called ţambal mic (cf 'micro'), and a piece of cloth is sometimes woven among the strings, giving the same effect as damping a concert instrument (see CIMBALOM).

The concert cimbalom was accorded the status of an orchestral instrument by Liszt, who used it in the revised version of his Ungarischer Sturmmarsch (1875) and in the orchestral version of his Sixth Hungarian Rhapsody for piano. The instrument's association with Hungarian gypsy music was exploited by Kodály (Háry János, 1926), Bartók (Rhapsody no.1 for violin and orchestra, 1928) and other Hungarian composers. Stravinsky's interest in the cimbalom dates from the time of his friendship with the famous Hungarian virtuoso Aladár Rácz (1886–1958), whom he met in Geneva in 1914 and who later (1954) became professor of the concert cimbalom at the Budapest Academy and made a number of remarkable recordings. Stravinsky purchased a cimbalom during his residence in Switzerland in World War I. He composed Renard (1915–16) on it, in the same way as he normally composed on a piano, and included it in the score of Ragtime (1918) as well as in Renard; he also planned to use it in an early scoring of The Wedding (composed 1914–17) and then began another version whose instrumentation included two cimbaloms. Other composers attracted to the instrument include Orff (music for Schlegel's translation of Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream, begun 1939), Heinz Holliger (Glühende Rätsel, 1964) and Boulez (Eclat, 1965). Humphrey Searle wrote important cimbalom parts in his operas The Photo of the Colonel (1964) and Hamlet (1965–8), and in his Fourth Symphony (1962), Burn-up (1962) and Oxus (1967).

A.L. Lloyd mentioned cimbaloms in Hungary and Transylvania from the 16th century, but J.H. van der Meer suggested that the dulcimer in the Slavonic countries dates not from the Renaissance but from the 18th or the 19th century, when it arrived from western Europe. It may have been from Hungary that the instrument spread to Ukraine, Belarus and the rest of the former USSR. At any rate, modern Central Asian instruments, made in a variety of sizes, have been influenced by Western ideas, notably the damper pedal.

According to Curt Sachs (Real-Lexikon) and Farmer, a European dulcimer, santūr fransiz, appeared in Turkey about 1850 alongside the santūr turki, which had already spread to Egypt and Georgia as well as Persia. The modern Persian santūr occupies a pre-eminent place in classical music. In South Asia the santūr is most often played by Kashmiri musicians. Shiv Kumar Sharma has developed a technique incorporating tremolo and fast runs, approximating the gamak of Hindustani music, which he uses in performances of rāga.

In China the yangqin is widely used in entertainment music and is a normal part of the amateur classical orchestra. It may be played solo, in the older style, but in westernized film music is accompanied by an orchestra. Rapid two-hand tremolos alternate with single notes, and the occasional ornamentation is produced by 'bending', i.e. pressing a course hard behind the bridge to produce portamento or quickly rising and falling glissando.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL

MersenneHU; MGG1 (H.-H. Dräger and W. Wünsch); MGG1 ('Zither'; J.H. van der Meer); PraetoriusSM

J. Jenkins: Musical Instruments (London, 1970)

D. Kettlewell: 'First Steps on the Dulcimer', EMc, ii (1974), 247–53

K.-H. Schickhaus, ed.: Hackbrett-Tablatur von 1753 (Munich, 1974)

D. Kettlewell: The Dulcimer (diss., U. of Loughborough, 1976)

J. Leach: 'The Psaltery and Dulcimer', The Consort, no.34 (1978), 293–301

E. Stein: The Hammered Dulcimer and Related Instruments: a Bibliography (Washington DC, 1979)

BRITAIN

C. Roylance: How to Learn the Dulcimer without a Master (London, 1886)

J. Leach: 'The Dulcimer', The Consort, no.25 (1968–9), 390–95

D. Kettlewell: '"That's What I Calls a Striking Sound": the Dulcimer in East Anglia', English Dance and Song, xxxvi (1974), 50–51, 96–8

D. Kettlewell: All the Tunes that Ever there Were: an Introduction to the Dulcimer in the British Isles (Tisbury, 1975)

NORTH AMERICA

C. Haight: A Complete System for the Dulcimer (New York, 1848)

C. Bryan: 'American Folk Instruments: the Hammered Dulcimer', Tennessee Folklore Bulletin, xviii (1952), 43

Dulcimer Players News (1975–)

N. Groce: The Hammered Dulcimer in America (Washington DC, 1983)

C. Ford: 'Designing and Tuning the Hammered Dulcimer', American Lutherie, no.44 (1995), 26–31

P.M. Gifford: 'Henry Ford and the Dulcimer', Dulcimer Players News, xxiv/1 (1998), 26–9

OTHER REGIONS

Grove5 ('Santir'; H.G. Farmer)

A. Moule: 'A List of the Musical and other Sound-Producing Instruments of the Chinese', Journal of the North-China Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, xxxix (1908), 1–160

H.G. Farmer: Turkish Instruments of Music in the Seventeenth Century as Described in the Siyahat nama of Ewliya Chelebi (Glasgow, 1937/R)

W. Kainz: Hackbrett-Fibel (Graz, 1951, 3/1974)

K.M. Klier: Volkstümliche Musikinstrumente in den Alpen (Kassel, 1956)

C. Prichichi: Metodă de ţambal (Bucharest, 1956)

K.-H. Schickhaus: Hackbrett-Fibel (Munich, 1962)

F. Stradner: 'Das Hackbrett', Jb des österreichischen Volksliederwerkes, xv (1966), 134–41

B. Sárosi: 'Hackbrett', Die Volksmusikinstrumente Ungarns (Leipzig, 1967), 41–6

Chang Sa-hun: Han'gak akki taegwan [Korean musical instruments] (Seoul, 1969), 100

K.-H. Schickhaus: 'Volksmusik aus Hausmusik', Sänger und Musikantenzeitung, xv (1972)

B. Geiser and K.-H. Schickhaus: Das Hackbrett in der Schweiz (Visp, 1973, enlarged 2/1975 with J.H. van der Meer as Das Hackbrett, ein alpenländisches Musikinstrument)

H. Heyde: 'Frühgeschichte des europäischen Hackbretts (14.–16. Jahrhundert)', DJbM, xviii (1973–7), 135–72

B. Geiser: 'Volksmusikinstrumente der Schweiz', GfMKB: Berlin 1974, 596–9

F. Pedarnig: 'Das Hackbrett in Osttirol', Beiträge zur Volksmusik in Tirol: Innsbruck 1976, 171–4

K.-H. Schickhaus: Über Volksmusik und Hackbrett in Bayern (Munich, 1981)

P. Dahlig: 'Das Hackbrett im Nordosten Polens', Studia instrumentorum musicae popularis VIII: Piran, Croatia, 1983, 118–21

F. Gösmann: 'Das Hackbrett: Neubesinnung auf ein traditionsreiches Musikinstrument', Quaestiones in musica: Festschrift für Kranz Krautwurst, ed. F. Brusniak and H. Leuchtmann (Tutzing, 1989), 159–65

B.A. Cherwick: 'Ukrainien Tsymbaly Performance in Alberta', Canadian Folk Music Journal/Revue de musique folklorique canadienne, xxiii (1995), 20–27

E. Ho and Xu Pingxing: 'The Manchurian Yangqin', Chinese Music, xviii/3 (1995), 50–55

DAVID KETTLEWELL/R

Dulcina. See DOLZAINA.

Dulcitone. See under CELESTA.

Dulcken. Flemish family of harpsichord makers of German origin.

(1) Joannes Daniel Dulcken (bap. Wingeshausen, 21 April 1706; d Antwerp, 11 April 1757). He was the son of Georg Ludwig Dulcken (d Wingeshausen, Westphalia, before 1752). Vander Straeten's belief that he was the son of Antoon Dulcken (d Antwerp, 1763), a harpsichord maker active in Brussels and Antwerp, has been proved mistaken. In 1736 Joannes Daniel was in Maastricht, where his eldest son was christened. In 1738 he and his wife Susanna Maria Knopffell settled in Antwerp; they became members of the Reformed church on 30 March 1740 and in 1744 he became alderman of that community. He rented a house in Hopland in 1742 and bought three houses in the same street in 1747 (an advertisement in the Gazet van Antwerpen mentions in the same street a Joannes Daniel Dulcken, evidently the same person, as a bottle vendor; his wife continued this activity after his death). The Dulckens' will (dated 26 August 1751) contained a clause (added in February 1757) reserving all material concerning harpsichord making to their son (3) Joannes Dulcken. A letter of 22 April 1763 from Dulcken's widow to the council of Brabant (original lost; known only from a copy in official registers, the source of her mistakenly being called the widow of Antoon) requests permission to establish a workshop in Brussels with her youngest son and her son-in-law Johan Herman Faber. The Antwerp property was sold in 1763. As she is not mentioned after her son (3) Joannes Dulcken settled in Amsterdam, it is probable that she died before 1771.

Joannes Daniel Dulcken sold an instrument to the Archbishop of Cambrai in 1743 and went to England in 1750 to sell two instruments. The fame of his instruments was emphasized by Burney when he noted that after the Ruckers family the 'harpsichord-maker of the greatest eminence ... was J.D. Dulcken'. His instruments have two kinds of rose; the one that appears in most instruments has the initials JDD decoratively interwoven, and the other has a little angel surrounded by the same initials. He made both single- and double-manual instruments, generally with a compass of five octaves (occasionally four octaves and a 2nd or four octaves and a 4th) and three registers (2× 8′; 1× 4′). Like Ruckers's instruments, the soundboards are decorated with flowers. Most of Dulcken's instruments made before 1755 have a double bentside (i.e. a second bentside running inside the instrument, parallel to the outer and separated from it by upper and lower spacers); this was regarded as such an unusual feature that when William Dowd restored a Dulcken in the Smithsonian Institution, Washington, DC, in 1961, the second bentside was taken out. The Smithsonian instrument served as a model for the fine modern harpsichords made by Martin Skowroneck and played by Gustav Leonhardt. Research has made it possible to learn more about the way Dulcken adapted the Ruckers design to 18th-century needs by enlarging the compass.

Three instruments are mentioned in the catalogue of the Snoeck collection (1894) and three in the Regibo catalogue (1897). Surviving instruments that should be attributed to J.D. Dulcken are in Nuremberg (wrongly dated 1689; probably *c*1750), Vienna (1745), Washington, DC (1745), Newton, Massachusetts (1745), Antwerp (1747), Edinburgh (1750), Brussels Conservatoire (1755) and the collection of R. Kohnen, Antwerp (?1755). Those signed 'Joannes Daniël Dulcken me fecit Bruxellis anno 1764' (Berlin, destroyed during World War II) and '1769' (Brussels) should be attributed to (3) Joannes Dulcken; the signature should be considered that of the workshop continued by the widow and her children.

(2) Johan Lodewijk [Louis] Dulcken (i) (b Maastricht, 1733; d after 1793). Eldest son of (1) Joannes Daniel Dulcken. He established himself in Amsterdam in 1755 after learning his craft with his father in Antwerp. On 23 May 1756 he married Catrina Koning in Sloterdijk. Between 1755 and 1760 he is mentioned in Amsterdam as an organ builder; he is also mentioned in 1761 in Middelburg. He moved with his wife to Hoorn, but by 1773 he had returned to Antwerp, where he sold instruments and in 1774 tried (unsuccessfully) to obtain the same privileges as those granted to his late father, namely exemption from export tax. In 1783 a Louis Dulcken was apparently in Paris as a piano builder. One harpsichord and pianos by him survive at The Hague, New York and Vienna. Advertisements of 1773 and 1775 refer to his repairing organs and harpsichords and to his having 'invented' a device that can be applied to finished instruments so that one can play 'deminuendo and crescento' without moving the hands from the keyboard.

(3) Joannes Dulcken (b Antwerp, 10 Sept 1742; d The Hague, 22 July 1775). Son of (1) Joannes Daniel Dulcken. He left Antwerp for Brussels with his mother, sister and brother-in-law in 1764. He was too young at his father's death to take over the workshop, despite the clause in his father's will. On 13 June 1771 he settled in Amsterdam, where he had attended the christening of his nephew as early as 1761. He married Sara Brull in Scheveningen on 29 November 1772. Instruments of 1764 and 1769 bearing the Brussels workshop signature have been established as his work (see §(1) above).

(4) Johan Lodewijk Dulcken (ii) (b Amsterdam, bap. 9 Aug 1761; d ?Munich, after 1835). Son of (2) Johan Lodewijk (i). His uncle (3) Joannes Dulcken and aunt Maria Sophie were witnesses at his baptism. He was established in 1781 as 'Mechanischer Hofklaviermacher' in Munich. In 1799 he married Sophie Lebrun. The last documented date for him is 1835.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vander StraetenMPB, i, 196
A. Curtis: 'Dutch Harpsichord Makers', TVNM, xix/1–2 (1960–61), 44–66
A.J. Gierveld: Het Nederlandse huisorgel in de 17de en 18de eeuw (Utrecht, 1977)
A.J. Gierveld: 'The Harpsichord and Clavichord in the Dutch Republic', TVNM, xxxi (1981), 117–66
J. Lambrechts-Douillez: 'The History of Harpsichord Making in Antwerpen in the 18th Century', Studia Organologica: Festschrift für John Henry vander Meer, ed. F. Hellwig (Tutzing, 1987), 321–33

JEANNINE LAMBRECHTS-DOUILLEZ

Dulcken [David], (Marie) Louise [Louisa, Luise] (b Hamburg, 20 March 1811; d London, 12 April 1850). German pianist. The younger sister of the violinist Ferdinand David, she showed exceptional musical promise at an early age, and studied the piano in Hamburg with F.W. Grund, making her first public appearance there aged ten. In 1826 and 1827 she appeared in Copenhagen, Leipzig, Dresden and Berlin with her brother. She married in 1828 and settled in London, where she met with considerable success both as soloist and teacher. In London she gave a series of soirées each season, which included a high proportion of Classical works, and her annual concert was an important event in the social calendar. Musicians, painters and literary figures gathered at her weekly receptions, attracted by her renowned wit as well as by her musical prowess. Between 1830 and 1849 Dulcken made ten appearances as soloist at the Philharmonic Society, giving the first English performance of Chopin's Second Piano Concerto on 3 April 1843. In 1846 she toured Germany with the concertina player Giulio Regondi, to enormous acclaim. Queen Victoria was among her pupils and Ignaz Moscheles a close friend. She composed several sets of waltzes for piano.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituaries: Illustrated London News (20 April 1850); The Times (15 April 1850)
W. Kuhe: My Musical Recollections (London, 1896), 76–7

ROSEMARY WILLIAMSON

Dulęba [Dulemba], Józef (b Nowy Sącz, 28 Dec 1842; d Warsaw, 1 June 1869). Polish pianist. He began his studies at the age of 7, first with F. Hollman and Józef Lubowski in Kraków and then with Marmontel and Maldan at the Paris Conservatoire (1858–60). On his return to Kraków he studied harmony with Mirecki, and then in Prague with Joseph Krejči. He took part in the national uprising of 1863. He gave concerts in Kraków, Lwów, Poznań, St Petersburg and Warsaw; he settled in Warsaw in 1867, and gave many concerts for charity. His playing was noted for its brilliance of technique and its singing tone. He died as the result of a duel (11 May 1869) with S. Kaczkowski, a Warsaw merchant.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PSB (J.J. Dunicz)
E. Lubowski: 'Friemann i Dulęba', Tygodnik ilustrowany, cccci (1867), 259–61
H. Mendel: Musikalisches Conversations-Lexikon (Berlin, 1870–80, 3/1890–91/R)
M. Burchard: 'Dulęba Józef', Encyklopedia muzyczna PWM, ed. E. Dzięboswka, ii (Kraków, 1884)

IRENA PONIATOWSKA

Dulichius [Deulich, Deilich, Teilich], Philipp (b Chemnitz, 18 Dec 1562; d Stettin [now Szczecin], 24 March 1631). German composer. He came from a respected middle-class family (his father was several times mayor of Chemnitz) and matriculated at the University of Leipzig in 1579; a report that he journeyed to Italy has not so far been substantiated. In 1587 he became Kantor at the ducal Gymnasium at Stettin and as such was also in charge of the music at the Pomeranian court and carried out the Kantor's duties at the Marienkirche. In spite of the attractions of this post he moved to Danzig in 1604 to deputize for Nikolaus Zangius, Kantor of the Marienkirche, who had been granted leave of absence. While in Danzig he performed some of his own compositions. In 1605 he resumed his duties at Stettin, where he was highly regarded for his honour and piety as well as for his artistic achievements. At some date between 1610 and 1620 he was promoted to the rank of professor at the Gymnasium. In 1630 he retired after 43 years' service, the last 24 of them under the rule of Duke Philipp II, a noted patron of the arts.

Dulichius's works earned him the nickname in his lifetime of 'the Pomeranian Lassus'. They consist entirely of liturgical works, whose texts are all biblical in origin and for the most part in Latin. He and Demantius were the only leading German composers in the early 17th century to ignore both the continuo technique and the concertato style. His motets, especially those in six or more parts, are characterized by strong, text-expressive music, though he used few madrigalisms. As Kantor at Stettin he took immense care over the provision of special music for Sundays and feast days, and his work bears witness to the high standards of performance that must have been reached at the time. After Johannes Wanning, he and Andreas Raselius were the first composers to concentrate on the central passages from the Sunday gospels; a certain similarity between the wording of the title-pages of his Fasciculus novus (1598) and Wanning's Sententiae insigniores (1584) suggests that the latter's work inspired his own.

WORKS

published in Stettin unless otherwise stated

Cantiones compositae, 5, 6vv (1589)
Philomusicis omnibus et singulis dominis et amicis suis colendis hasce 4 cantiones sacras consecrat, 8vv (1590)
Harmoniae aliquot compositae, 7vv (1593)
6 cantiones sacrae concinnatae, 5vv (1593)
Novum opus musicum duarum partium, continens dicta insigniora ex evangeliis ... prior pars (1595)
Fasciculus novus continens dicta insigniora ex evangeliis ... desumta, 5vv (1598)
Ego flos campi: hymenaeus solennibus nuptiarum ... Guilhelmi Simonis ... ac ... Elisabetham, 7vv (1605)
Prima pars centuriae harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae triados consecratas continentis, 7, 8vv (1607); ed. in DDT, xxxi (1907)
Secunda pars centuriae harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae triados consecratas continentis, 7, 8vv (1608); ed. in DDT, xli (1907)
Tertia pars centuriae harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae triados consecratas continentis, 7, 8vv (1610)
Dictum psalmi XXX ... cui usitata melodia cum textu germanico inserta est (1611)
Quarta pars centuriae harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae triados consecratas continentis, 7, 8vv (1612)
Primus tomus centuriae harmonias sacras laudibus sanctissimae triados consecratas continentis, 6vv (1630); ed. in Die Motette, no.124 (Stuttgart, n.d.)
Sunt piascepta Deo: carmen musicum honori nuptiarum ... Udalrici ducis Megalopyrgensis ... et Annae (n.p., n.d.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Schwartz: Introductions to Philippus Dulichius (1562–1631), DDT, xxxi, xli (1907)
H.J. Moser: Die mehrstimmige Vertonung des Evangeliums, i (Leipzig, 1931/R)
H. Engel: Spielleute und Hofmusiker im alten Stettin zu Anfang des 17. Jahrhunderts (Greifswald, 1932)
A.A. Abert: Die stilistischen Voraussetzungen der 'Cantiones sacrae' von Heinrich Schütz (Wolfenbüttel, 1935/R)
C.J. Westendorf: 'Glareanus' Dodecachordon in German Theory and Practice: an Expression of Confessionalism', CMc, no.37–8 (1984), 33–48
T. Jasínski: 'Contrapunctus fractus w twórczości wokalnej kompozytorów niemieckich pierwszej połowy XVII wieku' [Contrapunctus fractus in the vocal music of German composers writing in the first half of the 17th century], Muzyka, xxxiii/4 (1988), 49–66 (with Eng. summary)
M. Ruhnke: 'Stand der Forschung zur Geschichte der Musik in Pommern', Musik des Ostens, xi (1989), 251–70

WALTER BLANKENBURG

Dülken, Sophie. German pianist. See LEBRUN family, (3).

Dülon, Friedrich Ludwig (b Oranienburg, 14 Aug 1769; d Würzburg, 7 July 1826). German flautist. He learned the flute from his father, who had studied under Augustin Neuff, a pupil of Quantz, and gave his first public concert in Berlin on 9 October 1781 at the age of 12. Blinded by unsuccessful treatment of an eye infection at the age of six weeks, he developed phenomenal powers of memory. He was adept at improvisation, dictating his compositions in finished form to a scribe. Accounts of his playing, and several poems that it inspired, stress its moving quality. His resemblance to the character Julius in Jean Paul's novel Hesperus has been noted.

During the 1780s and 1790s Dülon toured constantly throughout Europe with his father and sister. His autobiography recounts his travels up to 1787, which took him to, among other places, Hamburg, where he played for C.P.E. Bach; Leipzig, where he played duets with J.G. Tromlitz; Berlin, where he met J.P. Kirnberger and J.F. Reichardt; London, where he performed at court; and Vienna, where he gave a concert on 15 April 1791 at Emanuel Schikaneder's Theater auf der Wieden and may have suggested aspects of the character of Tamino in Mozart's Die Zauberflöte. He spent about two years in St Petersburg before returning in 1795 to Germany. He again performed in Leipzig shortly before 1800, at which time his music began to be published by Breitkopf & Härtel. His surviving compositions include a flute concerto, 16 duos and a set of 11 caprices for solo flute.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.M. Wieland, ed.: Dülons des blinden Flötenspielers Leben und Meynungen von ihm selbst bearbeitet (Zürich, 1807–8) [autobiography]
J.A. Rice: 'The Blind Dülon and his Magic Flute', ML, lxxi (1990), 25–51 [incl. list of works]
L.E. Miller: 'C.P.E. Bach and Friedrich Ludwig Dülon', EMc, xxiii (1995), 65–80
A. Powell, ed.: The Keyed Flute by Johann George Tromlitz (Oxford, 1996)

ARDAL POWELL

Dulot [Du lot, Dullot], François (b Saint-Omer; fl first half of the 16th century). French composer. In 1514 he was master of the children's choir at Amiens Cathedral and was appointed maître de chapelle at Rouen Cathedral on 22 February 1523. He was discharged in January 1531, apparently for failing to fulfil his duties properly. For a few months in 1534 his brother Nicolas served as organist at the cathedral. Too few of Dulot's compositions survive for conclusions to be drawn about his style. En espérant has an unusual combination of four low parts, presumably for men only.

WORKS

Magnificat primi toni, 4vv, 1534[7]; ed. A. Smijers and A.T. Merritt, Treize livres de motets parus chez Pierre Attaingnant en 1534 et 1535, v (Monaco, 1960)

Maria Magdalene et Maria Jacobi et Salome, motet, 4vv, 1534[4]; ed. A. Smijers, Treize livres, ii (Paris, 1936)

En espérant le printemps advenir, 4vv, 1529[2]; ed. in MMRF, v (1897/R); Je recommance mes douleurs, 5vv, CH-SGs 463; Le cueur de vous ma dame par amours, 4vv, 1531[1]; Longtemps y a que je vis en espoir, 4vv, 1530[4] (anon.), 1536[3] (Dulot), 1537[3] (Sermisy)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

VannesD

M. Vanmackelberg: 'Autour de Jehan Titelouze', RMFC, iv (1964), 5–32, esp. 24–5

COURTNEY S. ADAMS

Dulova, Vera (Georgiyevna) (b Moscow, 14/27 Jan 1910; d Moscow, 5 Jan 2000). Russian harpist and teacher. The daughter of the violinist G.N. Dulov, she studied at the Moscow Conservatory with Xenia Erdeli (1921–2) and Maria Korchinska (1922–4), completing her studies in Berlin with Max Saal (1927–9). In 1934 she began her long association with the orchestra of the Bol′shoy Theatre, and in the 1935 All-Union Competition in Leningrad she shared the honours with David Oistrakh and Yakov Fliyer. An inspiring teacher, she taught at the Moscow Tchaikovsky Conservatory from 1943, becoming a professor in 1958 and re-establishing the modern Russian school of harp playing. She toured widely both as a concert artist and as juror in many international competitions. She was particularly associated with the Harp Concerto by Glier (1938), and other concertos were written for her by Mosolov (1939), Vasilenko (1949) and Baltin (1963). Khachaturian, Kikta, Knipper, Baltin and Golubev wrote solo works for her and her recorded repertory included the Villa-Lobos and Jolivet concertos.

WRITINGS

Iskusstvo igrï na arfe [The art of harp playing] (Moscow, 1975)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Bride: 'An Interview with Vera Dulova', American Harp Journal, ix/3 (1984), 47–9

W.M. Govea: Nineteenth- and Twentieth-Century Harpists: a Bio-Critical Sourcebook (Westport, CT, 1995), 65–70

ANN GRIFFITHS

Dulzaina. See DOLZAINA. See also SHAWM, §5.

Dulzan [doltzana, dolzana, dulzana]. A term, found in late 16th-century sources, that may refer to the dulcian (see BASSOON, §2), the pommer (see SHAWM) or the DOLZAINA.

Dulzian (i) (Ger.: 'Dulcian'). The name commonly used for an early BASSOON in one piece, as opposed to the later type in joints. See also DOLZAINA.

Dulzian (ii) (Ger.). See under ORGAN STOP.

Duma (Ukr.). A Ukrainian heroic ballad, which originated among the Cossacks in the 15th–17th centuries (see UKRAINE, §II), the counterpart of the Russian bïlina. It was usually sung, accompanied by the lira or the bandura. The 19th-century poetic form used by Slav poets such as the Slovak L'udovít Štúr was an evocation of the epic duma, often as pan-Slavonic manifestation.

See also DUMKA.

Dumage, Pierre (b Beauvais, bapt. 23 Nov 1674; d Laon, 2 Oct 1751). French organist and composer. He was organist of the collegiate church of Saint Quentin from 1703 to 1710, and then of Laon Cathedral until 1719 when, weary of the chapter's insistence on the letter of his contract, he gave up his career as a professional musician and became a civil servant. His only extant work is a Livre d'orgue contenant une suite du premier ton (1708), dedicated to the chapter of Saint Quentin. Another Livre d'orgue, presented to the chapter of Laon Cathedral in 1712, has never been traced.

The extant Livre d'orgue contains eight short pieces: Plein jeu, Fugue, Trio, Tierce en taille, Basse de Trompette, Récit, Duo and Grand jeu. In his dedication, Dumage describes these as his first compositions and says that he modelled them on the examples of the renowned Louis Marchand, his former teacher. The pieces are entirely representative of French organ music around 1700 in their increasing emphasis on exterior expression and elegance, a tendency which reached its musically most convincing statement in the Livre d'orgue of Louis-Nicolas Clérambault of 1710.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Raugel: Preface to Schola Cantorum edition of Livre d'orgue (Paris, 1952)

F. Raugel: 'L'organiste Pierre Du Mage', Mélanges d'histoire et d'esthétique musicale, offerts à Paul-Marie Masson (Paris, 1955), 125–32

F. Raugel: 'Notes sur Pierre Du Mage', RdM, xlv (1960), 85–6

N. Dufourcq: Le livre de l'orgue français, 1589–1789, iv (Paris, 1972)

EDWARD HIGGINBOTTOM

Dumanoir, Guillaume (b Paris, bap. 16 Nov 1615; d Paris, 18 May 1697). French violinist, composer and dancing-master. He was the son of Mathias Dumanoir (b *c*1588; d April 1646), joueur d'instruments in Paris and, from 1640, member of the 24 Violons du Roi. In 1636 Guillaume was appointed dancing-master at the Orange court in The Hague. A guild member of the Confrérie de St Julien-des-Ménétriers, Paris, and a violon ordinaire de la chambre du roi, he joined the grande bande of the 24 Violons du Roi in 1639 and from 1645 to 1656 was also dancing-master to the pages in the petite écurie. In 1654 he left the grande bande but in 1655 was reinstated, as leader of the group, and from that date his name appears as an active participant in performances of ballets at court. In 1657 he succeeded Louis Constantin as roi et maître des ménestriers for all of France, a post in which he served until 1668. His reign as roi was a difficult one; his authority was continually contested by members of the guild and especially by a group of dancers who withdrew from the Confrérie St Julien in 1661 and established an Académie de Dance, thereby proclaiming themselves independent. His response to this move was Le mariage de la musique avec la dance (Paris, 1664; ed. J. Gallay, Paris, 1870), in which he forcefully criticized the new academy and argued the dependence of dance on music. His surviving music largely reflects the repertory of instrumental dances played by the 24 Violons at court. It is scored for a four- or five-part string band, in thick homophonic texture, of which the outer voices are the most active.

He was succeeded as a member of the 24 Violons and as roi by his son, Guillaume Michel Dumanoir (b Paris, bap. 28 May 1656; d Tübingen, 25 Nov 1714), who left Paris for Madrid in 1679 to serve the court of Marie-Louise d'Orléans, Queen of Spain, and who, in 1689, succeeded his uncle Charles Dumanoir (b Paris, bap. 13 Nov 1629; d Tübingen, 13 Aug 1688) as dancing-master at the celebrated collegium in Tübingen.

WORKS

Pieces in 1660[5] and in 17th-century MSS in D-Kl, F-Pc (Philidor Collection, i), Pn, S-Uu

2 dances in Pièces diverses choisies, ed. E.-M.-E. Delvedez (Paris, *c*1875); reissued in Edition populaire française, Musique de chambre, école ancienne, ed. J. Peyrot and J. Rebufat (Paris, *c*1910)

3 branles, a 3, 1660[5]; branle and courante, a 4, D-Kl; allemande and sarabande, a 4, charivari, a 5, F-Pc (Philidor collection, i), allemande and sarabande also in Pièces diverses choisies, ed. E.-M.-E. Delvedez (Paris, *c*1875), reissued in Edition populaire française, Musique de chambre, école ancienne, ed. J. Peyrot and J. Rebufat (Paris, *c*1910)

4 instrumental suites, Pn, dated 1661–7, dessus part only; courante, a 5, S-Uu

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBF (F. Lesure)

J. Ecorcheville: Vingt suites d'orchestre du XVIIe siècle français (Berlin and Paris, 1906/R)

J.J.S. Mráček: Seventeenth-Century Instrumental Dances in Uppsala, University Library IMhs 409 (diss., Indiana U., 1965)

M. Jurgens: Documents du minutier central concernant l'histoire de la musique (1600–1650), i (Paris, 1967)

M. Roche: 'Le manuscrit de Cassel', RMFC, ix (1969), 19–20

B. Bardet: 'Dumanoir (les)', Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles, ed. M. Benoit (Paris, 1992), 251–2

ALBERT COHEN

Dumas [Davy de la Pailleterie], Alexandre [père] (b Villers-Cotterêts, Aisne, 24 July 1802; d Puys, nr Dieppe, 5 Dec 1870). French dramatist and novelist. By his own account the least musical man of his acquaintance, unable to tune a violin after three years of lessons, Dumas's place in the history of 19th-century music remains contradictory. At a purely social level, he was prominent in the music-loving literary community in 1830s Paris, both as contributor and member of the editorial board on Schlesinger's Revue et gazette musicale (1835–8). He was present at many of the defining moments of French musical Romanticism, from the première of Berlioz's Lélio (1832) to the imaginary performance of Beethoven by Liszt pictured in Josef Danhauser's famous painting, 'Souvenir de Liszt' (1840). Having moved to Paris in 1822, Dumas earned his reputation overnight with the success of Henri III et sa cour at the Théâtre Français (1829). Subsequently, composers were quick to approach him for colourful historical plots, and over the next few years he planned (uncompleted) projects with both Meyerbeer (1832) and Bellini (1835). By the time of his death, however, alongside quantities of novels, histories, travelogues, journalism and over ninety spoken plays, he had produced librettos for only three completed operas. A possible reason for this is suggested in a short story by Dumas relating an encounter with Rossini ('Un dîner chez Rossini'), in which the music and text in opera are depicted fighting for supremacy. Dumas seems to have found it hard to create space in his works for music, and despite the apparent operatic potential of many of his plots, the lasting power of such works as Le comte de Monte Cristo (1845–6) lies in the cumulative effect developed over hundreds of pages, a quality likely to be lost when stripped down to suit musical treatment. Well aware of his own shortcomings, he sought a collaborator with musical experience for each of his librettos, and the opéra comique form of his most successful sung work, Piquillo (1837), includes large amounts of spoken dialogue. Perhaps Dumas's main influence on opera lay in his use of melodramatic techniques in his adaptations of his novels at the Théâtre Historique in the 1840s, which seem to have left their impression on Verdi.

WRITINGS

(selective list)

Henri III et sa cour (play, 1829): C. Coccia, 1833, as Caterina di Guisa; Flotow, 1838, as Le comte de Saint-Mégrin; Josse, 1876, as La lega; P. and L. Hillemacher, 1886, as Saint-Mégrin

Christine, ou Stockholm, Fontainebleau et Rome (play, 1830): Nini, 1840; Lillo, 1841; Fabrizi, 1844; Foroni, 1849, as Christina di Suezia; Thalberg, 1855, Redern, 1860, Bradsky, 1872, all as Christine von Schweden

Charles VII chez ses grands vassaux (play, 1831): Donizetti, 1834, as Gemma di Vergy; Cui, 1899, as Sarastin [The Saracen]

Ascanio (novel, 1843, with P. Meurice): Saint-Saëns, 1890

Les demoiselles de Saint-Cyr (play, 1843, with A. de Leuven and Brunswick [L. Lhérie]): Bacchini, 1890; Dellinger, 1891, as Saint-Cyr; Humperdinck, 1905, as Die Heirat wider Willen; Chapuis, 1921

Les trois mousquetaires (novel, 1844, with A. Maquet): Xyndas, 1855, as Anna Winter; Visetti, 1871; Varney, 1885, as Les petits mousquetaires; Raimann, 1881, as D'Artagnan und die drei Musketiere; Dionesi, 1888; Stichini, 1893, as D'Artagnan; Somerville, 1899; De Lara, 1921; Benatzky, 1929; Bétove [M. Lévy], 1945, as D'Artagnan

Le comte de Monte Cristo (novel, 1845–6; play, 1848 and 1851, with Maquet): Auber, 1847, as Haydée; Strebinger and Giorza, ballet, 1856; Moniuszko, ballet, 1866; Dell'Aquila, 1876; Pleininger, 1883; Meyer-Lutz, 1887, as Monte Cristo; Wenzel, 1894, ballet, as Monte Cristo; Romberg and Schwartz, 1919, as Monte Cristo junior

Mémoires d'un médecin [Joseph Balsamo] (novel, 1846, with Maquet): Sangiorgi, 1873, as Giuseppe Balsamo; Litolff, 1876, as La mandragore

Le tulipe noire (novel, 1850): Flotow, 1876, as Il fiore d'Arlem; Barras, 1896; Richepin, 1932

Libs: Piquillo (with G. de Nerval), Monpou, 1837; Samson (with E. Duprez), G. Duprez, 1856; La bacchante (with A. de Leuven), E. Gautier, 1858; Le roman d'Elvire (with de Leuven), Thomas, 1860

Songs to texts by Dumas: Le sylphe, Franck, 1842–3; L'ange de la poésie, Doche; L'échange, Reber, 1846; Coeur perdu, Le jardinier, Capacelatro, 1839; La belle Isabeau, Berlioz, 1843; Jeanne d'arc au bûcher, Liszt, 1846, Delow, 1889; Ballad (from Catherine Howard), Darghomïzhsky, 1848

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StiegerO

A. Dumas: 'Nouveaux mémoires, dernières amours' [an account of working with Meyerbeer], Le soleil (5 April 1866); repr. in Schopp, ed., Le comte de Monte Cristo (Paris, 1993), 1231–4

K. Pendle: 'Scribe, Auber and The Count of Monte Cristo', MR, xxxiv (1973), 210–20

E. Jensen: 'Liszt, Nerval and Faust', 19CM, vi (1982–3), 151–8

E. Sala: 'Verdi and the Parisian Boulevard Theater, 1847–9', COJ, vii (1995), 185–205

C. Schopp: 'Dumas et le comte de Monte-Cristo à l'Opéra', Cent cinquante ans après, ed. F. Bassan and C. Schopp (Marly-le-Roi, 1995), 135–47

J. Roy: 'Dumas emmène Dantès à l'opéra', Le grand livre de Dumas, ed. C. Dantzig (Paris, 1996), 169–85

BENJAMIN WALTON

Dumas, Jean (b Lyons, 1696; d Avignon, 1770). French mathematician, astronomer and music theorist. After early studies in Lyons, Avignon and La Flèche, he became a missionary to the New World in 1726 (principally in Martinique and Illinois), returning to France in 1730 to teach philosophy in Dole and Roanne. In 1733 he became a Jesuit priest and subsequently taught mathematics at the collège of Dole. From 1735 to 1742 he served his order as a preacher in several French provincial cities, and he later taught at the Collège de la Trinité in Lyons, where he remained until 1763. At the suppression of his order in France, he retired to the collège at Avignon, where he lived until his death. Except for early mathematical studies, his writings largely remain in manuscript in Lyons, comprising numerous mémoires on different subjects prepared for presentation before the academy there, to which he was admitted in 1754. Among these is a group devoted to music (F-LYm Académie, Fonds du Palais des Arts, 160), which reflects Dumas's principal interest in questions of harmony and of temperament, in both of which he proved himself a follower of Rameau and a disputant of Bollioud-Mermet, a fellow academician in Lyons.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBF (H. Beylard); FétisB
L. Bollioud-Mermet: Athénée de Lyon retabli (MS, Lyons, Bibliothèque de l'Académie), ff.168–70, 212
L. Vallas: La musique à l'Académie de Lyon au dix-huitième siècle (Lyons, 1908)
L. Vallas: Un siècle de musique et de théâtre à Lyon 1688–1789 (Lyons, 1932/R)
A. Cohen: 'Rameau, Equal Temperament, and the Academy of Lyon: a Controversy Revisited', French Musical Thought, 1600–1800, ed. G. Cowart (Ann Arbor, 1989), 121–7
P. Barbieri: 'Il "migliore" sistema musicale temperato: querelles fra Estève, Romieu e altri accademici francesi (c.1740–60)', L'organo, xxvii (1991–2), 31–81

ALBERT COHEN

Dumay, Augustin (b Paris, 17 Jan 1949). French violinist. Coming from a musical family, he started learning the piano as a toddler and at five took up the violin. At ten he entered the Paris Conservatoire to study the violin with Roland Charmy and chamber music with Jean Hubeau, taking a premier prix in 1962. The following year he made his Paris recital début at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, attracting the attention of Henryk Szeryng, who recommended him for a tour of South America. On his return he became a pupil of Nathan Milstein; but his most important period of tuition was the seven years he spent in Brussels with Arthur Grumiaux. While still studying, he began his career in 1967, both as a soloist and as a chamber musician working with the pianists Jean-Philippe Collard and Michel Béroff and the cellist Frédéric Lodéon. In 1979 he played Bartók's Second Concerto under Karajan in Paris and was immediately invited to appear with the Berlin PO under Colin Davis. Since then he has been a busy international soloist but he has also played much chamber music with Collard, Michel Dalberto, the Labèque sisters, Gérard Caussé, Yo-Yo Ma and Lynn Harrell. In recent years he has had a regular duo with Maria João Pires, and the cellist Jian Wang has often joined them in a trio. Dumay has also frequently collaborated with chamber orchestras; from 1988 to 1991 he was musical director of the Orchestre de Chambre National de Toulouse and more recently he has worked with the Camerata Accademica of Salzburg. As a direct violinistic descendant of Ysaÿe, via Dubois and Grumiaux, he must be considered a prime exponent of the Franco-Belgian school: his playing has the suavity of those masters, as well as the power for which Ysaÿe was famed, and he has rarities by Lalo, Magnard and Lekeu in his repertory. His interpretation of the Franck Sonata is among the best to be heard. However he is equally at home in the Viennese classics. Isang Yun wrote a concerto for him and in 1989 he took part in the première of Wolfgang Rihm's Sonata for violin and cello. His many recordings include Mozart's Sinfonia concertante, two cycles of the Mozart concertos, Lalo's Symphonie espagnole and Violin Concerto and a great deal of chamber music. For a time he played the 1721 'ex-Kreisler' Stradivari, which he then exchanged for a 1744 Guarneri del Gesù.

TULLY POTTER

Dumb organist. A device which enables a barrel mechanism to be applied to a normal manual organ. For a full description see BARREL ORGAN.

Dumesnil, René (Alphonse Adolphe) (b Rouen, 19 June 1879; d Paris, 24 Dec 1967). French writer and music critic. He studied literature and medicine at the Sorbonne and later wrote on both these subjects. His musical writings, which include reviews for the Mercure de France and Le monde, reveal a particular sympathy for French music of the interwar period. He wrote the ballets Les Santons (for Tomasi, 1938) and Nautéos (for Leleu, 1948), and the libretto for the mystery play Lucifer, with music by Delvincourt (1948). In 1949 his critical edition of the works of Flaubert won him the Prix National de Littérature, and in 1965 he was elected a member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts.

WRITINGS

Le rythme musical, essai historique et critique (Paris, 1921, 2/1949/R)
Le monde des musiciens (Paris, 1924)
'L'enseignement', Cinquante ans de musique française de 1874 à 1925, ed. L. Rohozinski, ii (Paris, 1925), 175–226
Le Don Juan de Mozart (Paris, 1927, 2/1955)
Richard Wagner (Paris, 1929, 2/1954)
La musique contemporaine en France (Paris, 1930)
Histoire illustrée de la musique (Paris, 1934, 2/1948/R)
Portraits de musiciens français (Paris, 1938)
La musique romantique française (Paris, 1944) with P. Fauré-Frémiet: Le centenaire de Gabriel Fauré (1845–1945) (Paris, 1945)
La musique en France entre les deux guerres, 1919–1939 (Geneva, 1946)
L'opéra et l'opéra-comique (Paris, 1947, rev. 4/1971 by F. Robert)
L'envers de la musique: le monde des musiciens et de la danse (Paris, 1948)
'La danse à l'Opéra de Paris depuis 1900', 'La danse à l'Opéra-Comique', in R. Bernard and others: L'art du ballet des origines à nos jours (Paris, 1952), 133–68, 169–79
Histoire illustrée du théâtre lyrique (Paris, 1953)
ed.: J. Combarieu: Histoire de la musique, iii–v (Paris, 1955–60)
'Berlioz humaniste', ReM, no.233 (1956), 59–64
'L'opéra en France à l'époque romantique', 'Le théâtre lyrique en France au déclin du XIXe siècle', 'Le déclin de l'opérette', Histoire de la musique, ed. Roland-Manuel, ii (Paris, 1963), 403–46, 766–79, 1408–17
L'opéra (Paris, 1964)
Mozart présent dans ses oeuvres lyriques (Brussels, 1965)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. van der Kemp: Notice sur la vie et les travaux de René Dumesnil (Paris, 1970)

JEAN GRIBENSKI

Du Mingxin (b Gaojiachang, Hubei Province, 19 August 1928). Chinese composer. After piano lessons from the age of 11 with He Luting, as a wartime evacuee, he took a post as a piano and ear training instructor at the Central Conservatory of Music (1949). In Moscow from 1954 to study composition at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory, his teacher M.I. Chulaki, director of the Bol'shoy, sparked his enduring interest in dramatic genres. Chulaki's insistence that Du also gain experience in handling the established structures of Western chamber and orchestral music is borne out in Du's works of the period, which include a piano trio, a string quartet and the Festival Overture. In 1958 he returned to Beijing to teach composition at the Central Conservatory, where he remained, apart from a period with the Central Ballet during the Cultural Revolution.

His music is melodically motivated, emphasizing the role of melody in capturing the listener's attention. Instrumentation is very colourfully handled, and his harmonic language embraces many aspects of 19th- and 20th-century styles, as demonstrated in the Impressionistic opening of Luo Shen. Known primarily as a composer of music for ballet, film and orchestra, Du's output also includes songs, choral works, chamber music and piano solos. An appraisal of his works is given in Zu Zhensheng: 'Nuli tansuo Zhongguo yinyue chuangxin zhi lu: lun Du Mingxin de yinyue chuangzuo' [Assiduously blazing new trails in the field of Chinese music: on Du's compositions], Yinyue yanjiu (1992), no.3, pp.32–42.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ballets: Yumeiren [The Mermaid], 1959, collab. Wu Zuqiang, arr. pf (1982); Hongse niangzi jun [Red Detachment of Women], 1964, collab. Wu Zuqiang and others; Xuan feng [The Black Phoenix], 1997

Orch: Festival Ov., 1958; Zuguo de Nanhai [Southern Sea of the Fatherland], sym. poem, 1979; Luo shen [Goddess of the River Luo], sym. fantasia, 1981; Vn Conc. no.1, 1982; Pf Conc. no.1, 1986; Vn Conc. no.2, 1990; Pf Conc. no.2, 1992

JONATHAN P.J. STOCK

Dumitrescu, Gheorghe (b Oteşani, Vîlcea district, 15/28 Dec 1914; d Bucharest, 20 Feb 1996). Romanian composer. At the Bucharest Conservatory (1934–41) he studied composition with Jora and Cuclin, conducting with Lazăr and Perlea, folk music with Brăiloiu and the violin with Florescu. As violinist, composer and conductor at the Bucharest National Theatre (1936–46), and later as composer and artistic adviser to an army ensemble and as professor of harmony at the Bucharest Conservatory (1951–79), he devoted his life to composition, and was one of the most prolific of contemporary Romanian composers. The genre that principally challenged his creative power was dramatic music. At first he composed music for plays by Aeschylus, Sophocles, Shakespeare, A. Kiriţescu, Laurenţiu Fulga, Cezar Petrescu and Dinu Bondi; he then wrote both music and librettos for a series of operas, and also wrote film music. His outlook is essentially large scale, with text and music working effectively together in each work. Almost all of the themes in the operas derive from traditional sources, including heroic tales from Romanian history. The music uses descending unison phrases, chromatic passages based on the augmented 4th and the 5th, and grand, climactic finales. Dumitrescu's late works contain modal passages, polytonal chords and serial elements; he also employed folksong, particularly that of the Oltenia region.

WORKS

STAGE

librettos by the composer unless otherwise stated

Tarşiţa şi Roşiorul (operetta, 3, A. Kiriţescu), 1949, collab. V. Doboş

Ion Vodă cel Cumplit (musical drama, 4, with G. Teodorescu), 1955, Bucharest, 12 April 1956

Decebal (musical tragedy, 4), op.41, 1957, Bucharest, 4 Oct 1969 (Bucharest, 1965)

Răscoala [The Uprising] (folklore musical drama, 4, after L. Rebreanu), op.48, 1959, Bucharest, 20 Nov 1959 (Bucharest, 1963)

Fata cu garoafe [Girl with Carnation] (op, 4, N. Tăutu), op.53, Bucharest, 6 May 1961 (Bucharest, 1964)

Meşterul Manole [Master-builder Manole] (op, 4, after Rom. legend), op.103, 1967, Craiova, 4 April 1980

Geniu pustiu [Solitary Genius] (op, 4, after M. Eminescu), op.112, 1972, Cluj-Napoca, 12 March 1977

Vlad Ţepeş (musical drama, 4), op.118, 1974, concert perf., Bucharest, 6 Feb 1975

Orfeu (lyric tragedy, 4), op.133, 1978, concert perf., Bucharest, 22 April 1980

Luceafărul [The Evening Star] (ballet-op, 4 scenes, after M. Eminescu), op.141, 1980, concert perf., Bucharest, 29 Dec 1981

Marea iubire [Great Love] (op, 4), op.143, 1982, concert perf., Bucharest, 13 Dec 1982

Ivan Turbincă (op, 3), op.152, 1983

Prometheus (lyric tragedy, 4), op.157, 1985, concert perf., Bucharest, 15 Oct 1987

Mihai Viteazul [Michael the Brave] (lyric historical drama, 4), op.158, 1986

Avram Iancu (musical drama, 4), op.160, 1986

Voievodul Gelu (lyric tragedy, 4), op.161, 1987

Adam şi Eva (op, 4), 1989

Osiris (op, 4), 1991

Făt-Frumos (op), 1992

OTHER

Choral: Tudor Vladimirescu (orat), 1950; Coruri [Choruses], 1955; Griviţa noastră (orat), 1963; Zorile de aur [Golden Dawn] (orat), 1964; Cantată festivă, 1965; Coruri, 1965; Din lumea cea cu dor în cea fără de dor [From the Realm of Longing for the World of No Longing], 1966; Cant. victoriei, 1966; Cantată festivă, 1968; Pămînt dezrobit [Unfettered Earth] (orat), 1968; Zburătorul de larg [Wide-Sea Flier] (orat), 1968; Recviem, 1994

Orch: Poem străbun [Age-Old Poem], 1938; Poem psaltic, 1939; Poem rustic, 1939; Poemul amurgului [Dusk Poem], 1941; Poem trist, 1941; Poem vesel [Gay Poem], 1941; 11 syms., 1945, 1962, 1965, 1970, 1983, 1990, 1990, 1990, 1990, 1990, 1992

Other inst: 2 pf sonatas, 1938, 1939; Va Sonata, 1939; Vn Sonata, 1939

Film scores: Aproape de soare [Near the Sun], op.49, no.2, 1960; Tudor, op.32, no.1 1962

Principal publisher: Muzicală

BIBLIOGRAPHY

RiemannL12

P. Codreanu: 'Gheorghe Dumitrescu', Muzica, xiv/5–6 (1964), 13–18

D. Popovici: Muzica corală românească (Bucharest, 1966), 178–82

V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970), 178–81

G. Constantinescu: 'Opera "Meşterul Manole" de Gheorghe Dumitrescu', Muzica, xxi/10 (1971), 12–14

V. Cosma: 'Dumitrescu Gheorghe', Sohlmans musiklexikon, ed. H. Åstrand (Stockholm, 1975)

O.L. Cosma: 'Soarele neatârnării de Gheorghe Dumitrescu, frescă monumentală a epopeii naţionale', Muzica, xxvii/5 (1977), 4–5

Z. Vancea: Creaţia muzicală românească, sec. XIX–XX, ii (Bucharest, 1978)

T. Drăgulescu: 'Oratoriul "Luceafărul" de Gheorghe Dumitrescu în primă audiţie la Filarmonica', Muzica, xxxii/1–2 (1982), 47–8

R. Gheciu: Mit şi epopee [Myth and Epos] (Bucharest, 1984)

I. Ursu: 'Gheorghe Dumitrescu: portrait', Muzica, xxxix/6 (1989), 38–43

V. Cosma: Muzicieni din România: Lexicon, ii (Bucharest, 1999), 255–68

VIOREL COSMA

Dumitrescu, Iancu (b Sibiu, 5 July 1944). Romanian composer and conductor. At the Bucharest Academy he studied composition with Mendelsohn, form with Niculescu and orchestration with Stroe, co-founding the electronic studio in 1966 and graduating in 1968. Dumitrescu also studied conducting and phenomenology with Celibidache at Trier University, graduating in 1978. He has written many articles and is music critic for the magazine Săptămâna ('The Week'). In 1976 he founded the Hyperion Ensemble, which he co-conducts with his wife, the composer Ana-Maria Avram, with whom he established the record label Edition Modern in 1990. His works have been widely performed in Europe.

Dumitrescu's original, unconventional and highly experimental music represents a specifically Romanian synthesis of Western and Eastern thought, particularly of temporal and rhythmic aspects. While his works contain coordinated sections belonging to the Western tradition, the passages in free rhythm reflect his interest in yoga and Zen and his espousal of Orphism, an artistic position which recognizes the metaphorical and mystical potential of music. His studies with Celibidache, his self-avowed spiritual father, prompted Dumitrescu to seek a musical expression of the phenomenological philosophy of Edmund Husserl. Incorporation of electro-acoustic techniques has led to 'acousmatic' works in which sounds from instrumental and electronic sources are intermingled and subjected to transformational processes, importantly the spectral exploration of harmonics and resonance.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Apogeum, 1973; Reliefs, pf, 2 orchs, 1975; Profondis, cl, b cl, orch, 1976–91; Aulodie mioritică II, db, orch, 1984; Bas-reliefs symphoniques, 1977; Harryphonies, 1986; Au delà de movemur, str, 1986; Astree lointaine, b sax, pf, 3 perc groups, orch, 1992; 5 implosions, 1993; Nouvelle astre, 1995

Ens: Alternances I–II, str qt, 1968; Impuls, fl, perc, 1968–94; Multiples, 3 perc groups, 1972; Eco II, fl, perc, 1973; Aulodie mioritică I, cl, vn, va, vc, prep pf, 1975; Le jeu de la genèse, 2 pf, 1976; Movemur et sumus II–V, vn, va, vc, db, 1978; Movemur et sumus V+V+V, 3 db, perc, 1978; Pasărea măiastră: Hommage à Brâncusi [The Magic Bird], ens, 1978; Orion I–II, 3 perc, 1979; Perspectives au movemur, str qt, 1979; Cogito/Trompe l'oeil, prep pf, 2 db, Javanese gong, crystals, metallic objects, 1981; Harryphonie, db, perc, prep pf, harryphone, 1986; L'orbit d'Uranus, fl, b cl, prep pf, amp perc, 1990; Clusterum II, 4 perc, 1994; Kronos Holzwege Qt, str qt, 1994; Sirius Kronos Qt, str qt, 1996

Solo inst: Diachronies II, pf, 1967; Diachronies III, pf, 1968; Métamorphoses, cl, 1968; Collages, pf, 1969; Sonoro II–III, perc, 1970; Spectres, prep pf, 1970; Medium I, vc, 1972; Longuement sans trêve, fl, 1972; Movemur II, vc, 1976; Movemur V pour Fernando Grillo, db, 1978; Medium II, db, 1978–9; Zenith, perc, 1980; Holzwege pour Ioan-Marius Lacraru, va/2 va, 1987; Gnosis, db, 1988; Nadir, b sax, 1990; Clusterum I, perc, 1992; Origo, vc, 1998

With tape: Fluxus I, orch, tape, 1977, rev. 1995; Grand ourse, 2 bn, prep pf, str, perc, tape, 1981–2; Nimbus I–III, 3 trbn, perc, tape, 1985; Mnemosyne, octobass fl, b sax, prep pf, 2 perc groups, amp tam-tams, tape, 1994; Fluxus II, orch, tape, 1997; Ouranos I–II, 12 vc, perc, tape, 1997

With cptr: Meteors and Pulsars, I: insts, tape, cptr, II: cptr, 1998; Etoiles brisées, I: insts, tape, cptr, II: cptr, 1998; Pulses and Universe Reborn, I: insts, tape, cptr, II: cptr, 1998; Eon: dans un désordre absolu, insts, tape, cptr, 1998

Acousmatic music: Pierres sacrées, amp prep pfs, plates, metallic objects, 1991; Galaxy, 3 harryphone, 3 perc, cptr, 1993; A priori, chbr ens, 1994; Mythos, chbr ens, 1994

Choral: Sursum corda, 32 solo vv, 1969; Le miroir de Cagliostro, chorus, fl, perc, 1975

Principal publisher: Salabert

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Tartler: Melopoetica (Bucharest, 1984)

A.-M. Avram and H. Halbreich: Roumanie: terre de neuvième ciel (Bucharest, 1992)

M.-C. Le Moigne-Musset: Trajéctoires de la musique au XXe siècle (Paris, 1995)

G. Peyret and S. Leroy: Iancu Dumitrescu: provocateur de l'acousmatique (Paris, 1996)

OCTAVIAN COSMA

Dumitrescu, Ion (b Oteşani, Vîlcea district, 20 May/2 June 1913; d Bucharest, 6 Sept 1996). Romanian composer. At the Bucharest Conservatory (1934–41) he studied harmony with Castaldi, counterpoint, fugue and composition with Jora, composition with Cuclin, conducting with Perlea and with Brăiloiu. He taught harmony and solfège at the Bucharest Academy of Religious Music (1939–41) and harmony at the School of Military Music, Bucharest (1943–4), before joining the staff of the Bucharest Conservatory as professor of theory and solfège (1944–8), and then of harmony (1948–79). Conductor at the Bucharest National Theatre from 1940 to 1947, he composed a great deal of incidental music. He was active in the Romanian Composers' Union from 1954, and was its chairman from 1963 to 1977; in this position he did much to encourage young composers and musicologists.

Dumitrescu's music is characterized by spontaneity and extrovert vigour, and makes extensive use of folk music, particularly that of Oltenia. He developed Romanian folk motifs, creating personalized melodies of dramatic force; folk modes were given a new artistic dimension. A gift for vivid orchestration is evident in his important work for the cinema. Though not a prolific composer, he secured an important place within the Romanian contemporary school owing to an original sonority inspired by the traditional music of his country. He was awarded the State Prize (1949, 1954), the prize of the Romanian Academy (1957), and was a member of the French Académie des Beaux-Arts and the Accademia Tiberina, Rome.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Suita no.1, 1938; Suita no.2, 1940; Poem, vc, orch, 1940; Suita no.3, 1944; Sym. no.1, F, 1948; Preludiu simfonic, 1952, rev. 1959; Concerto, str, 1956; Simfonietta, D, 1957

Film scores: Grădinile Capitalei [The Capital's Public Gardens], 1942; În sat la noi [In our Village], 1953; Nepoţii gornistului [The Trumpeter's Grandsons], 1954; Răsare soarele [At Dawn], 1954; Desfăşurarea [Development], 1954; Munţii Retezat [The Retezat Mountains], 1956

Sonata, A, pf, 1938; Sonatina, pf, 1940; Str Qt, C, 1950

4 cîntece [Songs], 1v, pf, 1940; 10 cîntece aromâneşti [10 Aromanian Songs], 1v, pf, 1943

Principal publishers: ESPLA, Muzicală (Bucharest)

WRITINGS

Societatea compozitorilor români: 25 ani de muzică românească (Bucharest, 1945)

Muzica in Bucureştiul de ieri şi de azi [Music in past and present Bucharest] (Bucharest, 1959)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (V. Tomescu)

W.G. Berger: Ghid pentru muzica instrumentală de cameră [A guide to instrumental chamber music] (Bucharest, 1965), 371–2

V. Cosma: Muzicieni români: lexicon (Bucharest, 1970), 181–3

D. Popovici: Muzica românească contemporană (Bucharest, 1970)

Z. Vancea: Creaţia muzicală românească, sec. XIX–XX, ii (Bucharest, 1978)

VIOREL COSMA

Dumka (Pol., Ukr., pl. dumki; Cz., pl. dumky). (1) A sung lament or an instrumental piece generally of a ruminative nature. The DUMA and its diminutive dumka are historically differentiated: the duma (possibly derived from the Indo-European root *mudh- and thus cognate with the Greek mythos) was an epic or ballad-like narration usually sung by men, the dumka was a song or lament (the word is cognate with the Czech dumat and Polish dumać, 'to ponder', 'to meditate'), usually sung by women. The two terms, however, were used interchangeably by 19th-century scholars (e.g. the Polish Sowiński, the Czech Josef Jungmann) and composers (Anton Kocipiński's song op.9 is designated a duma on the title-page and a dumka above the music).

(2) A sung lament, usually in Polish or Ukrainian, strophic, in the minor key (sometimes modulating to the relative major), of a plaintive character and mostly in duple time. Although there is at least one instance of an early Polish dumka (an anonymous polyphonic composition to the words of Adam z Czachrówa, 1589), its heyday in Poland was in the early 19th-century Romantic revival, where its original folk accompaniment was replaced by the piano. There are dumki by Kurpiński (1816), Dobrzyński (Elegy for the Commander Kosiński, n.d.) and Chopin (three of his solo songs, 1840–45). Moniuszko's song Kozak (subtitled dumka) was one of the most popular songs of its kind in Poland (published from 1850 in many arrangements in Poland and western Europe). Liszt included arrangements of dumki in two of his three Glanes de Woronince, S249 (1847–8): Ballade d'Ukraine, dumka and Complaintes, dumka. A dumka-like song, Les adieux du Kosak ('Jechal kozak za Dunaju' – 'A cossack rode over the Danube') provided the basis for several instrumental compositions such as one of Beethoven's Variations op.107 (*c*1818) and Henryk Wieniawski's Variations for violin and piano (1853). Ukrainian dumky persist into the 20th century, notably by Yakiv Stepovy and Yuly Sechiyovych Meytus.

(3) An instrumental piece with a ruminative, often melancholy character, usually for chamber or solo instrumental forces. Instrumental dumky were written in the latter half of the 19th century and early 20th century by composers from several northern and west Slavonic nations and contributed greatly to the dissemination of the term, which became a musical symbol of pan-Slavonicism. There are examples from Ukraine by M.A. Zavadsky, V.I. Zaremba, M.V. Lysensko and V.O. Barvynsky; from Slovakia by J.B. Bella; from Poland by Moniuszko (prelude to Act 4 of Halka). Russian examples include one in Musorgsky's Sorochintsï Fair (1874–80), Tchaikovsky's Dumka op.59 for piano (1886) and Balakirev's Dumka in E♭ for piano (1900). However the most familiar examples are Czech, many of them by Dvořák. Burghauser speculates that Dvořák's conception of a dumka may have been formed through discussion with Janáček (whose choral Zpěvná duma JWIV/10 was written early in 1876) and knowledge of Kocipiński's collection Songs, 'dumki' and 'shumki' of the Russian Nation in Podoli, Ukraine and Little Russia, 1862. Nevertheless, whereas Janáček wrote only two instrumental dumky (for piano JWX/4, 1879, lost, and for piano and violin JWVII/4, ?1879–80), Dvořák established the form in Bohemia and Moravia with his many dumka-like pieces (listed by Burghauser) and 11 named dumky: two for piano op.35 (1878) and op.12/1 (1884), the slow movements of his String Sextet op.48 (1878), String Quartet in E♭ op.51 (1879) and Piano Quintet in A op.81 (1887), and in the set of six dumky that make up the Dumky Trio op.90 (1891).

Dvořák's dumky are usually in duple time, in the minor (though making use of modal contrast), begin slowly or at least moderately and are in a generally pensive or melancholy mood. The melody is sometimes subjected to figural variation, perhaps to suggest folk practice. Another suggestion of folk practice is the sectional structure: dumky occasionally include a contrasting faster section (recalling the Ukrainian dumka–shumka contrast) or a coupling with a faster movement such a furiant (e.g. Dvořák's op.12). Smetana wrote no dumky, and there is only a single named example in Fibich (in his set of piano duets The Golden Age, 1885), but dumky and dumka-like pieces were written by many of Dvořák's pupils. The title occurs in Suk's piano pieces op.7 no.5 (1892) and op.21 no.3 (1900), Vítězslav Novák's Three Pieces for violin and piano op.3 (1899) and Friml's op.63 for piano. More recent examples are by Martinů (for piano, 1936 and 1941), Rebecca Clarke (for violin, viola and piano, ?1941) and Hana Vejvodová (for oboe and piano, 1986).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 ('Duma und Dumka'; M. Antonovič, A. Elšeková [incl. list of dumka collections and further bibliography]; SČHK (M. Štědroň) [incl. further bibliography]

A. Sowiński: 'Dumy ou dumki: rêveries', Les musiciens polonais et slaves (Paris, 1857/R), 26 only

M. Kuna: 'První dumky Antonína Dvořáka' [Dvořák's first dumky], HRo, ix (1956), 313–16

S.I. Gryca: 'Dumï: vïdayushcheyesya dostroyaniye ukrainskow kul'turï' [Dumy: previous musical works of Ukrainian culture], Musica antiqua II: Bydgoszcz 1969, 413–16 [with Fr. summary]

J. Burghauser: 'Dvořákova a Janáčkova dumka', HRo, xliv (1991), 86–9; Eng. trans., Czech Music, xx (1997–8), 41–56

D. Beveridge: 'Dvořák's "Dumka" and the Concept of Nationalism in Music Historiography', JMR, xii (1993), 303–25

JOHN TYRRELL

Dümler, Franz Anton. See DIMMLER, FRANZ ANTON.

Dümmler, Johann Michael. See DEMMLER, JOHANN MICHAEL.

Dumonchau [Dumoncheau], Charles-François (b Strasbourg, 11 April 1775; d Lyons, 1 Jan 1821). French composer, pianist and cellist. He studied music and the cello with his father Charles-Joseph Dumonchau, himself a cellist and director of the Théâtre de la Réunion des Arts in Strasbourg. Subsequently he studied the piano with Baumeyer. After the French Revolution he was employed in the administration of army rations and went to Paris, probably around 1800. He was a friend of Rodolphe Kreutzer, and entered the Conservatoire in Catel's harmony class (1801–2). He also studied with the Viennese pianist J. Wölfl, who came to Paris in 1801. In 1805 he returned to Strasbourg, where he devoted himself to teaching, and then moved to Lyons in 1808, where he was highly regarded as a teacher and composer.

Dumonchau's compositions are essentially pianistic, and according to Fétis were soon forgotten because of their lack of originality, although the composer was 'notable for a pure, elegant style'. A symphonie concertante for flute, oboe, bassoon and orchestra, which Fétis says remained in manuscript form, was performed in Paris by Besozzi, Gilles and Gebauer on 15 January 1804 at the Concerts de la Rue de Grenelle. Dumonchau's only opéra comique, entitled L'officier cosaque, had a certain amount of success at its première. One of his brothers, Sylvain Dumonchau, also composed for the piano.

WORKS

published in Paris unless otherwise stated

VOCAL

L'officier cosaque (oc, 1, J.-A. Cuvelier and Barouillet), Paris, Porte Saint-Martin, 9 April 1803, collab. L. Gianella (*c*1803); ov. and 6 airs by Dumonchau

Les fables de La Fontaine, 1v, pf, op.10 (*c*1802–4)

6 romances, 1v, pf, op.14 (1803); Le petit malheureux (*c*1802); C'est le diable (A. Cuvelier) (*c*1803–4); La guerre et la paix (Cuvelier) (*c*1803–4); Genni (*c*1802–6); 3 romances et un rondeau (Strasbourg, n.d.)

OTHER WORKS

Orch: 2 Pf Concs., op.12 (*c*1802–4), op.35 (Leipzig, *c*1812); Hn Conc. (unpubd, mentioned by Fétis); Symphonie concertante, fl, ob, bn, orch, 1803–4 (unpubd, mentioned by Fétis)

Pf: 18 sonatas, incl. opp.13, 15 (*c*1805), op.20 (mentioned by Fétis), op.23 (*c*1806), opp.24, 26 (mentioned by Fétis), op.32 (*c*1810); 3 sonatas each in op.1 (*c*1802), op.3 (*c*1803) (no.3 with vn acc.), op.5 (*c*1806), op.21 (1804), op.28 (1807), op.30 (1808) ('dans le style de Haydn, Mozart et Clementi'); 6 sonates progressives, vn/fl acc., op.4 (*c*1803); Airs variés, op.8 (*c*1806); Grande sonate, op.19 (*c*1806); 6 Bagatelles, op.36; 6 thèmes variés, op.41

Other works: 3 sonatas, hp, fl/vn ad lib, op.22 (1804); Trios, pf, vn, vc, opp.2, 26, 29 (1808), op.34 (mentioned by Fétis); Airs variés, 2 vc, op.6 (*c*1806), vc, b, op.7 (1803); 3 duos, 2 cl, op.18 (1803); duos concertants, pf, vn, op.20 (*c*1805); 3 duos, 2 bn, op.27 (*c*1806); Grand duo, hp, pf, op.31 (*c*1809); 3 sonatas, pf, vn, vc, op.40

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Choron-FayolleD; FétisB; Grove6 (D. Charlton)

M. Vogeleis: Quellen und Bausteine zu einer Geschichte der Musik und des Theaters im Elsass 500–1800 (Strasbourg, 1911/R1979), 700–01

A. de Place: Le piano-forte à Paris entre 1760 et 1822 (Paris, 1986)

HERVÉ AUDÉON

Du Mont [de Thier], Henry (b Looz [now Borgloon], nr Hasselt, *c*1610; d Paris, 8 May 1684). French composer, organist and harpsichordist. After the birth of his brother Lambert about 1613 the family moved to Maastricht. On 14 June 1621 the two brothers – who were soon being called 'a Monte', a Latin rendering of the Walloon name, 'de Thier' – entered the choir school of Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk, Maastricht. While receiving a thorough grounding in music (Henry studied the organ and Lambert the bassoon), they pursued their general studies at the Jesuit college. In 1629 Henry became organist of Onze-Lieve-Vrouwekerk, and continued his musical training through contact with masters elsewhere, probably studying with Léonard de Hodemont in Liège. He left Maastricht in 1638 for an unknown destination, and is next heard of in Paris on 4 April 1643, when he signed his contract of employment as organist at the church of St Paul. During the 1640s he became well known in Paris and took part in private concerts. He was granted French nationality in 1647.

After the publication by Ballard in 1652 of his first volume of motets, the Cantica sacra, Du Mont returned to Maastricht and on 21 August 1653 married Mechtel Loyens, a magistrate's daughter. Back in Paris, the couple lived in the modest lodgings provided by the church of St Paul and already occupied by Du Mont. At this time, too, he gained access to the court as harpsichordist to the king's brother, the Duke of Anjou. During the 1650s his reputation grew abroad, where his works were well known, and he became involved in regular correspondence with the Dutchman Constantijn Huygens.

In July 1660, after the marriage of Louis XIV to the Infanta Marie-Thérèse, Du Mont was appointed organist to the queen. After the death of Jean Veillot, sous-maître of the royal chapel, Du Mont and Pierre Robert were appointed in July 1663, as was Gabriel Expilly in 1664, to share the duties of the post with Thomas Gobert, each of the four men officiating for three months of the year. Du Mont, who had lost his wife in 1660, thus obtained several of the highest court appointments while still retaining his post as organist of St Paul. From 1668 he acted as sous-maître for a full half-year. He was then appointed compositeur de musique de la chapelle royale, and finally maître de la musique de la reine in 1673. He acquired considerable ecclesiastical benefices. In April 1667 he was appointed abbé at Notre Dame, Silly-en-Gouffern, near Alençon, where he attended frequently. In 1676 his brilliant career was crowned by his appointment as canon of the chapter of St Servatius, Maastricht. Despite his advanced age and many occupations, Du Mont frequently visited Maastricht, where his family and friends were still living. After asking the king's permission to leave his posts 'on account of his infirmity' in spring 1683, he retired to his St Paul house and died there the following year.

Du Mont's career at St Paul and then in Louis XIV's chapel inevitably steered his own works towards sacred music. As an organist he probably composed many pieces for his instrument, but none has come down to us except for a few allemandes in collections of his music published by Ballard and some manuscript pieces. The works which have survived are almost exclusively vocal. Most of his published compositions are examples of the petit motet, in which he excelled; 114 of them are in five collections published between 1652 and 1681. The only secular works are the 21 songs of the Meslanges (1657) and the psalm paraphrases of the Airs à quatre parties (1663). To these works must be added the Dialogus de anima and 26 grands motets scored for large vocal and instrumental forces and intended specifically for the royal chapel, and the Cinq messes en plain-chant (1669) 'suitable for both monks and nuns'.

The first of Du Mont's publications, the Cantica sacra, is dedicated to the dames religieuses. They allow the interpreters great freedom of choice, with alternative vocal tessituras and instrumental parts ad libitum. The most striking example of this is no.39, the Litanies de la Vierge, for which Du Mont suggested no fewer than five different possibilities for performance. With its motets in two, three and four parts, this publication was the first in France to include a figured basso continuo as a separate part. In the preface Du Mont remarked, inaccurately: 'Considering that few people have printed music of this kind with basso continuo, and indeed no one in France has yet done so, I have thought to oblige the public … by publishing certain motets of my composition'. In fact Constantijn Huygens was the first in France to print pieces with basso continuo (unfigured) in his Pathodia sacra (1647), published by Ballard. However, the Cantica sacra do present some wholly novel features. Some of the motets have what is at times a complex instrumental part for viol. si placet; it is not clear whether this is for viol or violin. The motet In lectulo meo (no.11) introduces two superius voices echoing each other. Many pieces show the influence of Liégois and Italian composers of the first decades of the century, such as Alessandro Grandi (i). Du Mont also used a double chorus for contrast in Cantate Domino (no.28), Veni creator spiritus (no.34) and Christus natus est nobis (no.38). The collection also includes the earliest French examples of chamber music accompanied by continuo in the pavane, symphonies and allemandes in three or four parts with bass.

The second collection of petits motets, the Motets à deux voix, was not published until 1668. Du Mont, then sous-maître of the royal chapel, dedicated them to the king. He was here venturing on a new genre, that of the dialogue motet, of which there are six among the 25 two-part motets. These early examples of sacred dialogues remained popular long after Du Mont's death. Peccator ubi es (no.1), a dialogue between an angel and a sinner, was still being sung at the beginning of the 18th century, according to Le Cerf de la Viéville (Comparaison de la musique italienne et de la musique françoise). It was in the Dialogus de anima, described by Sébastien de Brossard as 'a very excellent kind of oratorio', that Du Mont developed the dialogue genre most effectively. Probably dating from the 1660s, the piece involves God (bass) and a soul (tenor) conversing in dialogue, while the angels form a trio. The work, in three sections, is punctuated by symphonies for two dessus de violon and continuo, and ends in a five-part ensemble with instruments, praising the glory of God. Similar in many ways to the Italian oratorios of the same period (particularly those of Legrenzi), the Dialogus de anima stands alone among Du Mont's works, prefiguring the Histoires sacrées of M.-A. Charpentier. Curiously, the Brossard collection (F-Pn) contains an 'oratorio' on the same text (beginning 'Anima mea in dolore est') attributed to Carissimi in Brossard's catalogue and constructed in the same manner as Du Mont's.

With the Motets à II, III et IV parties (1681) Du Mont presented an extremely varied and successful collection of petits motets. They include a dialogue (In te Domine, no.8), an echo motet (In lectulo, no.7), motets for solo voice introduced or punctuated by symphonies and motets for several voices and instruments (including the bassoon in the symphonies of O gloriosa Domina, no.34, and Quid est hoc, no.35). The four last motets, in four parts, can be sung by two choruses. The extensive development of the symphonies and instrumental ritornellos in some of the motets, and the alternation between grand and petit choeurs, bring some of these works close to the grand motet genre.

At the time of his entry into the royal chapel in 1663 Du Mont already had a considerable number of grands motets to his credit, which allowed him to show his talent to good effect in the competition for a post. During the 20 years he spent in the chapel Du Mont composed some 70 grands motets, known to us from the Motets et élévations pour la chapelle du roy, in which the texts of motets performed during the royal Mass were regularly published. Du Mont's output is comparable to that of Michel-Richard de Lalande (almost 80 motets), and far exceeds those of his contemporaries Lully and Pierre Robert. It was together with the motets of these last two composers that 20 of Du Mont's grands motets were published 'by express command of his majesty'. 12 motets by Lully and 24 by Robert were published by Ballard in 1684, and they were complemented in 1686 by the works of Du Mont. Six other motets in manuscript are extant in the Brossard collection; the others have not survived.

These settings of various texts – psalms, hymns and canticles from the Old and New Testaments, as well as poetic texts by Pierre Perrin and anonymous authors – are of moderate dimensions. Some (Benedic anima mea, Benedictus and Magnificat) were no doubt composed for exceptional circumstances, since they are much longer, and were copied for the royal library. The diversity of these works in form, style and scoring is one of their chief characteristics, indicating that they were composed over several decades. The orchestral scoring, usually in five parts with two dessus de violon, is very varied, including passages for trio or for quartet (with two upper parts or one upper and two middle parts). In almost half the motets the accompaniment to the choruses is peculiar to Du Mont, with an independent dessus de violon and inner parts quite separate from the voices. The opening symphonies, absent from Exultat animus and Domine in virtute tua, are far from stereotyped; some majestic examples (O dulcissima, Quemadmodum desiderat cervus) adopt the structure of the French overture.

The grand choeur is always in five parts (dessus, haute-contre, haute-taille, basse-taille and basse), while the petit choeur may take different forms: seven voices in the Benedictus, six in Exaltabo te Deus, O mysterium and Mater Jerusalem, five voices with a bas-dessus in Exultat animus and the Magnificat. In the last-named the soloists remain independent from the grand choeur in the tuttis, considerably enriching the sound and adding great variety of colour.

The general structure of the pieces helps to confirm the chronology suggested by the texts printed in Motets et élévations. Until the mid-1670s the formal aspect was of secondary consideration, and Du Mont concentrated more on the musical rendering of the text, alternating choruses, solo récits and small vocal ensembles in a pointillist manner. His later motets (e.g. Benedic anima mea), on the other hand, look forward to the 'number motet' exemplified by Lully's late motets and the early ones of Lalande, with clearly separated sections and with a climactic chorus to end. Even more than the petits motets, Du Mont's grands motets bear witness to a perfect synthesis of the Franco-Flemish, Italian and French styles. Although they rapidly fell into oblivion, they laid the foundations of the genre's development and acted as models to the composer's successors as sous-maître to the royal chapel.

For all the fundamental importance of his sacred works, Du Mont's few secular pieces should not be forgotten. The chansons of the Meslanges (1657), for three parts and in French, are preceded by preludes for two or three viols, to which Du Mont added a third viol part in 1661. These preludes, which can be played on the organ, are of various types (including sarabandes and allemandes) and sometimes take their inspiration from the melodic lines of the chansons. The chansons themselves, celebrating the pleasures of love and wine, are redolent of the past in their polyphonic construction, and seem to have been revised several times to keep up with contemporary taste, for instance by the addition of a basso continuo or of a part for a treble viol.

The Airs à quatre parties (1663) stand alone among Du Mont's works. They represent the last example of settings of the psalm paraphrases of Antoine Godeau (1648). Following Jacques de Gouy, Lardenois, Aux-Cousteaux and Gobert, Du Mont set them as polyphonic strophic pieces, and they often attain the refined expression characteristic of the composer. Some were re-issued in England about 1700.

Du Mont's best known and most widely performed works were undoubtedly his Cinq messes en plain-chant (1669). Unconnected with the motets and the royal chapel, these monodic masses, modal but with subtle touches of tonality, belong to the revival of ecclesiastical chant taking place at the time. Re-issued as Messes royales in 1701, regularly reprinted ever since and sung in most French churches, it was these works that contributed most to keeping Du Mont's memory alive.

WORKS

Editions: Henry Du Mont: L'oeuvre pour clavier, ed. J. Bonfils (Paris, 1956) [B]

Henry Du Mont: Meslanges à II, III, IV et V parties. ed. J. Quitin (Liège, 1983–4) [Q i–ii]

Henry Du Mont: Oeuvres complètes, ed. Centre de musique baroque de Versailles, Patrimoine musical français, Monument a les, II (Versailles, 1992–) [O]

Henry Du Mont: Pièces originales pour le clavier, ed. Centre de musique baroque de Versailles (Versailles, 1997) [C] some voice parts in the sources are labelled bas-dessus (A), haute-contre (Ct), haute-taille (T), basse-taille (Bar); printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated vocal forces are S, Ct, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB unless otherwise stated

GRANDS MOTETS

Motets pour la chapelle du roy (1686) [1686]

Beati omnes (Ps cxxvii), 2vn, 2va, bc, F-Pn; O 2/i Benedicam Dominum (Ps xxxiii), 2vn, va, bc, Pn; O 2/i Benedic anima mea (Ps cii), 2vn, 2va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1997)
Benedictus Dominus, S, 2Ct, T, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1997)
Cantemus Domino, 2 vn, 2 va, basse-taille de violon, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1997)
Confitebimur tibi Deus (Ps lxxiv), 2 vn, 2 va, quinte de violon, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1998)
Congratulamini mihi fideles, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1998)
Domine in virtute (Ps xx), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1998)
Domine quid multiplicati (Ps iii), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. L. Decobert (Versailles, 1998)
Dum esset rex, vn, 2 va, bc, Pn; O 2/ii
Ecce iste venit, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Exaltabo te Deus meus (Ps cxliv), S, 2Ct, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Exaudi Deus (Ps lx), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Exultat animus (P. Perrin) S, A, Ct, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. Centre de musique baroque de Versailles (Versailles, 1997)
Magnificat, S, A, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686; ed. Centre de musique baroque de Versailles (Versailles, 1997)
Mater Jerusalem, S, A, Ct, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, bc, Pn; O 2/ii
Memorare, o piissima, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Nisi Dominus (Ps cxxvi), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, Pn; O 2/i
O aeternae misericors Deus, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
O dulcissima, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
O flos convallium (Perrin), 2 vn, 2 va, bc, Pn; O 2/ii
O mysterium (Perrin), S, A Ct, T, Bar, B, SCtTBarB, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Pulsate, pulsate tympana (Perrin), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Quemadmodum (Ps xli), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Sacris solemniis, 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686
Super flumina Babylonis (Ps cxxxvi), 2 vn, 2 va, b vn, bc, 1686

PETITS MOTETS

Cantica sacra, 2–4vv, insts, adjectae itidem litaniae, 2 vv ad lib, 3–4vv, bc, liber primus (1652, 2/1662) [1652]
Meslanges à 2–5, bc ... livre second (1657) [1657]
Troisième partie adjoustée aux préludes des Meslanges ... avec la basse continue des motets à plusieurs parties, pour la commodité des instruments (1661) [1661]
Airs à 4, bc, et quelques-uns à 3 en forme de motets à la fin du livre, sur la paraphrase de quelques psaumes et cantiques de Messire Antoine Godeau (1663) [1663]
Motets, 2vv, bc (1668/*R*1992) [1668]
Motets, 2–4 vv, insts, bc (1681/*R*1989) [1681]

Alma redemptoris mater, 4 vv, 3 insts, bc, B-Bc (inc.); Anima mea in dolore est (Dialogus de Anima), S, Ct, 2T, B, 2 vn, bc, F-Pn, O 1; Ab initio, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Ad te levavi, S, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SCtTB), bc, 1681; Adjuro vos, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Adoro te, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Alleluya! Haec dies, S/Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du motet latin polyphonique en France (1963), O 3/i; Ave gemma Virginum, S, A, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Ave regina caelorum, S/Ct, A/T, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Ave verum corpus, S/Ct, B, bc, 1668; Ave Virgo, Ct/S, 2 vn, bn, bc, 1681; Benedicam Dominum, S/T, S/T, vn ad lib, bc, 1668; Benedicite Deum, T, B, vn ad lib, 1681; Benedico te, ant, S, bc, 1663; Bernardus doctor, hymn, 2S, A, Ct, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Caecilia famula, ant, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, b viol ad lib, bc, 1657, 1661, 1668, Q ii

Cantantibus organis (i), ant, S/Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Cantantibus organis (ii), ant, S, A, Ct, T, 2B (or with ripieno SACtTBB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Cantate Domino (i), S, A, Ct, B (or with ripieno SACtB), bc, 1652, O 3/i; Cantate Domino (ii), S, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SCtTB), bc, 1681; Christus natus est nobis, invitatorium, S, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SCtTB), viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du motet latin polyphonique en France (1963), O 3/i; Congratulamini, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Consurge Domine, A, Ct, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Converte Domine, S, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Credidi propter, S, Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Desidero te, S, A, Ct, B, bc, 1681; Dic mihi o bone Jesu, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1668; Dignare Domine, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668; Doleo super te, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Domine in virtute, S/Ct, A/T. bc, 1668; Domine non secundum, A/T, bc, 1668

Domine salvum fac regem (i), S/Ct, A/T, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Domine salvum fac regem (ii), S, A, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Domine salvum fac regem (iii), S, A, T, T, B (or with ripieno SATTB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Domine salvum fac regem (iv), S, A, T, T, B (or with ripieno SATTB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Domine salvum fac regem (v), S, A, T, T, B (or with ripieno SATTB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Domine salvum fac regem (vi), S, B, bc, 1663; Domine salvum fac regem (vii), S, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SCtTB), bc, 1681; Duo seraphim, 2S, bc, 1681; Ecce ferculum, Ct, T, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Ego enim accepi, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1668; Est secretum, ant, S/Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Est secretum, ant, S, A, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SACtTB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Gloriosissima Maria, S/Ct, S/Ct, bc, 1668; In lectulo meo (i), 2S, bc, 1652, L; In lectulo meo (ii), S/Ct, B, bc, 1668; In lectulo meo (iii), S/2S, bc, 1681

In te Domine (P. Perrin), Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Iste confessor, hymn, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668; Jesu dulcedo (Perrin), Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Jesu rex admirabilis, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Jubilate Deo, S/Ct, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Jubilemus, S, S/T, B ad lib, viol/2 viols, b viol, bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Laudate Dominum (Ps cxvi) (i) S, A, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Laudate Dominum (Ps cxvi) (ii) S, B, bc, 1663; Laudemus Dominum, S/Ct, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Laudibus cives, hymn, S, 2A, Ct/B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Litaniae B. Mariae Virginis, S/Ct, S/Ct ad lib, A/T, B ad lib, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Litanies de la Vierge, S, A, T, T, B (or with ripieno SATTB), bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; Magnificat, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Magnificat du Ier ton, S/T, A/T, B ad lib, b viol, bc, 1657, Q ii; Magnificat du IIe ton, S/T, B, viol ad lib, b viol, bc, 1657, Q ii; Magnificat du Ve ton, S/T, A/T, B ad lib, b viol, bc, 1657, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du motet latin polyphonique en France (1963), Q ii

Media vita in morte, 2S, Ct, T, B, viol, b viol, bc, S-Uu; Memorare, o piissima, S/T, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1668; Miserere mei, Domine, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1668; Nil canitur, S, 2 vn, bn, bc, 1681; Non amo te (Perrin), S, A (or 2Ct, b vn), bc, 1668; Non defrauderis, S/Ct, Ct/S, B ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O aeternae misericors (De aeternitate), A/T, bc, 1668; O bone Jesu, A, T/S, B, bc, 1681; O Domine Deus, S, A, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O dulcedo amoris, Ct/S, T/A, vn ad lib, bc, 1668; O fideles! miseremini (Perrin), S/Ct, bc, 1668; O foelix Roma, hymn, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O gloriosa Domina (i), S/Ct, A/T, 2 vn, bn ad lib, bc, 1681; O gloriosa Domina (ii), S/Ct, A/T, viol, vn, b viol, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O gloriosa Mariae (Perrin), Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1668; O nomen Jesu, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1681; O panis angelorum, S, 2A, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O praecelsum, S/Ct, A/T, B, bc, 1681

O quam suavis, Ct, T/S, B, bc, 1681; O salutaris hostia (i), A, Ct, B, bc, 1652, O 3/i; O salutaris hostia (ii), S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668; O sponse mi, S/T, S, viol/2 viols, b viol, bc, 1657, 1661, Q ii; O tu quis es (Perrin), T, 2 vn, va ad lib, bn ad lib, bc, 1681; Panis angelicus (i), S, 3/4 viols (or S/T, A/T, Ct/B, B), bc, 1652, O 3/i; Panis angelicus (ii), S/Ct, vn ad lib, bc, 1668; Panis angelicus (iii), S/T, vn ad lib, bc, 1668; Panis angelicus (iv), 2Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Paratum cor meum, S, S/Ct, bc, 1668; Peccator ubi es, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1668; Per foeminam mors, S/Ct, A/T, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Quae est ista, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Quam dilecta, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Quam pulchra es, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668; Quare tristis es (Perrin), T/S, T/A, bc, 1668; Quemadmodum, S/Ct, S/T, bc, 1668; Quid commisisti, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Quid est hoc, Ct, T, 2 vn, bn ad lib, bc, 1681; Quis mihi det Domine, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668

Regina caeli, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Regina divina (Perrin), Ct, 2 vn, bn ad lib, bc, 1681; Salve Maria, S, Ct, T, B (or with ripieno SCtTB), bc, 1681; Salve regina, 4vv, 3 insts, bc, B-Bc (inc.); Sancta et immaculata, S, Ct, T, B, bc, 1681; Sit gloria, S/Ct, B, vn/2 vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Stella caeli, S/Ct, A/T, B, vn ad lib, bc, 1681; Sub umbra (Perrin), B, 2vn, bc, 1681; Surrexit pastor bonus, S/Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Te timeo (Perrin), T/A, B, bc, 1668; Tota pulchra es, S/T, S/T, bc, 1668

Tristitia vestra, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1652, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du motet latin polyphonique en France (1963), O 3/i; Unde tibi, T, 2 vn, bn, bc, 1681; Veni creator (i), hymn, S, A, Ct, B (or with ripieno SACtB), bc, 1652, O 3/i; Veni creator (ii), hymn, S/Ct, A/T, bc, 1668; Venite ad me, T, 2 vn, bn ad lib, bc, 1681; Vide homo, T/S, T/A, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Virgo gloriosa, ant, S/Ct, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, 1652, O 3/i; Vulnerasti cor meum, Ct/S, T/A, bc, 1652, O 3/i

FRENCH PSALMS AND MOTETS

for S, A, T, B and continuo unless otherwise stated

Airs à 4, bc, et quelques-uns à 3 en forme de motets à la fin du livre, sur la paraphrase de quelques psaumes et cantiques de Messire Antoine Godeau (1663):

A peine de mes jours, S/Ct, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Bienheureux à qui Dieu (Ps xxxi); Ces voûtes claires et solides (Ps xviii); Contre ces cruels envieux (Ps xxv), S, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du psaume français polyphonique (1976); Espoir de toute âme affligée; Fils des hommes, peuples divers (Ps xlviii), S, A, T, B, bc; Grand Dieu dont la bonté (Ps xxxvii), S, Ct, T, B, bc; Grand Dieu preste l'oreille (Ps l); Grand Dieu qui sur les roys (Ps vi); Heureux de qui l'âme est atteinte (Ps xl); Heureux qui n'ouvre point son coeur (Ps i); Il est temps que l'ennuy, S/Ct, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; J'ay d'une extresme impatience (Ps xxxix); Justes, avec plaisir (Ps xxxii)

Le cerf qu'une meute inhumaine (Ps xli); Le Dieu de tous les Dieux (Ps xlix), S, Ct, T, B, bc; Le meschant pour flater son vice (Ps xxxv); Louez par des chansons nouvelles (Ps xcvii); Mon Dieu, mon Dieu, regarde-moy (Ps xxi); Monarque souverain (Ps xxvii), S, T, T, B, bc; Objet dont mon âme est ravie (Ps cxlv), S/T, A/T, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Peuples battez des mains (Ps xlvi), S, A, T, B, bc; Peuples racontez les louanges (Ps cxii), S, Ct, T, B, bc; Poussons dans l'air des cris de joye, S/T, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Preste l'oreille à ma plainte (Ps lxiii), S/Ct, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Puisque la grâce du Seigneur (Ps xxxiii), S, Ct, T, B, bc

Quand l'esprit accablé (Ps iv), S, Ct, T, B, bc, ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du psaume français polyphonique (1976); Quand l'esprit accablé (Ps iv), S/T, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, b viol, bc [also in Meslanges à 2–5, bc ... livre second (1657), with inst prelude], ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du psaume français polyphonique (1976); Seigneur de qui la terre (Ps cxxxviii), S, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Seigneur dont la bonté (Ps xvi); Seigneur ma suprême puissance (Ps xvii), ed. D. Launay, Anthologie du psaume français polyphonique (1976); Seigneur pour m'acquitter (Ps ix)

Seigneur puisque mon espérance (Ps xv), S, Ct, T, B, bc; Seigneur que jusqu'icy (Ps liii), S/Ct, A, B, viol/vn ad lib, bc; Seigneur qui connais le danger (Ps xi), S, Ct, T, B, bc; Seigneur qui vois les maux (Ps ci); Suprême arbitre des monarques (Ps viii); Toy qui vois d'un oeil plein d'envie (Ps xxxvi); Vous qui dans cet estat (Ps xxviii), S, A, T, B, bc

MASSES

Cinq messes en plain-chant, composées et dédiées aux révérends pères de la Mercy du Couvent de Paris (1669): Premier ton; second ton; Quatrième ton; Cinquième ton; Sixième ton; nos. 1, 2 and 6 ed. A. Gastoué (1909)

SECULAR VOCAL

all with viol ad libitum, bass viol and continuo, all with preludes for viols and continuo, some alternatively for organ

Meslanges à 2–5, bc ... livre second (1657), Q i; Troisième partie adjoustée aux préludes des Meslanges ... avec la basse continue des motets à plusieurs parties, pour la commodité des instruments (1661), Q i: Absent de vous; Ardens soupirs; Bannissons; Bien que nostre festin; Courage enfans; En vain j'ay consulté; Iris vous disiez; Je n'ay jamais parlé; Je ne say ce que; Je ne vays plus; Laisse-moy soupirer; Mes chers amis; O Dieux comment; O mon coeur!; Par tout amour; Philis, je n'ayme plus; Quand je boy; Si je vous dis que je vous ayme

INSTRUMENTAL

Cantica sacra, 2–4vv, insts, adjectae itidem litaniae, 2 vv ad lib, 3–4vv, bc, liber primus (1652, 2/1662) [1652]

Meslanges à 2–5, bc ... livre second (1657) [1657]

Motets, 2vv, bc (1668/*R*1992) [1668]

Motets, 2–4vv, insts, bc (1681/*R*1989) [1681]

Allemanda, 2 viols, b viol, bc, 1652, L; Allemanda gravis, org (or 3 viols, b viol, bc), 1652, C, L; Allemande, org/hpd, 2 viols ad lib, b viol ad lib, 1657, B, C, Q ii; Allemande, org (or 2 vn, bc), 1668, B, C; Allemande grave, org/hpd, 2 viols ad lib, b viol ad lib, 1657, B, C, Q ii

Pavana, 2 viols, b viol, bc, 1652, L; Pavane, 2 viols, b viol, bc, 1657, Q i

Symphonia, 2 viols, b viol, bc, 1652, L; Symphonia, 3 viols, b viol, bc, 1652, L; Symphonia, 2 vn, bc, 1668; 2 symphonies, 2 vn, bc, 1681; Symphonie, 2 vn, va, bn, bc, 1681

2 allemandes, org/hpd, D-Mbs, B

5 allemandes, 1 courante, 1 pavan, org/hpd, F-Pn, B, C

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AnthonyFB; BenoitMC; FétisB; MGG (M. Garros)

E. Titon du Tillet: Le Parnasse françois (Paris, 1732/R)

H. Quittard: Un musicien en France au XVIIe siècle: Henry Du Mont (Paris, 1906/R)

P. Vitry: 'Le tombeau de Henry Du Mont', Annales de la Fédération archéologique et historique de Belgique, xxi (Liège, 1909)

J.-G. Prod'homme, ed.: Ecrits de musiciens (XVe–XVIIIe siècles) (Paris, 1912/R) [reprints dedication of Meslanges]

A. Auda: La musique et les musiciens de l'ancien pays de Liège (Brussels, 1930)

M. Garros: Le motet à voix seule et basse continue (diss., U. of Paris, Sorbonne, 1938), 50–94

S. Clercx: 'Le dix-septième et le dix-huitième siècles', La musique en Belgique du Moyen Age à nos jours, ed. E. Closson and C. van den Borren (Brussels, 1950), 145–233

N. Dufourcq: 'De l'emploi du temps des organistes parisiens sous les règnes de Louis XIII et Louis XIV', ReM, no.266 (1955), 35–7

M. Garros: 'La musique religieuse en France de 1600 à 1750', Histoire de la musique, ed. Roland-Manuel, i (Paris, 1960), 1591–1613

J.R. Anthony: French Baroque Music from Beaujoyeulx to Rameau (London, 1973, 2/1978; Fr. trans., rev. 1981)

L.-H. Collard: 'Quelques documents inédits sur Henry Du Mont', RMFC, xv (1975), 244–61

J. Quitin: 'Le livre des Meslanges de Henry Du Mont', Bulletin de la Société liégoise de musicologie, no.50 (1983), 1–19

J. Mongrédien, ed.: Catalogue thématique du grand motet français (1663–1792) (Munich, 1984)

L. Sawkins: 'Chronology and Evolution of the Grand Motet at the Court of Louis XIV', Jean-Baptiste Lully and the Music of the French Baroque, ed. J.H. Hajdu (Cambridge, 1989), 41–79

L. Decobert: 'Quelques nouveaux éléments biographiques concernant Henry Du Mont', Modus: revista do Instituto gregoriano de Lisboa, iii (1989–92), 59–72

L. Decobert: Henry Du Mont (1610–1684), sous-maître de la chapelle de Louis XIV: contribution à l'histoire de la musique religieuse au Grand Siècle (Lille, 1990)

M. Benoit, ed.: Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1992)

J. Duron: 'Henry Du Mont', Guide de la musique sacrée: l'âge baroque (1600–1750), ed. E. Lemaître (Paris, 1992), 367–79

L. Decobert: 'Henry Du Mont et le pays de Liège', RBM, xlvii (1993), 105–14

L. Decobert: 'Les choeurs dans les grands motets de Henry Du Mont', RdM, lxxx (1994), 39–80

L. Decobert: 'Les symphonies d'ouverture dans les grands motets de Henry Du Mont', Ostinato rigore: revue internationale d'études musicales, viii–ix (1997), 293–310

J. Lionnet, ed.: Le concert des muses: promenade musicale dans le Baroque français (Versailles, 1997), esp. 33–50, 127–52, 221–66

LAURENCE DECOBERT

Dump. A type of instrumental piece occurring in English sources between about 1540 and 1640. Some 20 examples are known, more than half of them for lute and most of the remainder for keyboard. The word is of uncertain derivation. In the 16th century it denoted mental perplexity or a state of melancholy. The musical dump was variously described as 'solemn and still', 'deploring' and 'doleful'; there is some evidence to suggest that it was the English equivalent of the French déploration or tombeau, a piece composed in memory of a recently deceased person.

16 dumps are listed in Ward (1951): all are anonymous except for two by John Johnson. A few more are included in the catalogue in Lumsden, among them a relatively ambitious work in the Marsh Lutebook (IRL-DM Z.3.2.13) labelled 'Dump philli' (ed. in Ward, 1992, ii, no.4; the piece is unlikely to be by either Philip van Wilder or Peter Philips as was formerly thought). The earliest known dump, My Lady Careys Dompe (in GB-Lbl Roy.App.58; MB, lxvi, 1995, no.37), is familiar as an early example of idiomatic keyboard writing. It is written over an ostinato bass, a simple alternation of tonic and dominant (TTDD). Most other dumps share this type of construction, using similar bass patterns (DTDT, TTDT) or standard grounds such as the bergamasca, passamezzo antico and romanesca. Some later examples have different formal schemes, such as The Irishe Dumpe in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book (ed. J.A. Fuller Maitland and W.B. Squire, Leipzig, 1899/R, rev. 2/1979–80 by B. Winogron, no.179), which is a simply harmonized melody of three strains. An isolated late example is An Irish Dump, an instrumental tune printed in Smollet Holden's A Collection of Old Established Irish Slow and Quick Tunes (Dublin, *c*1807) and reproduced in Grove5; Beethoven arranged it for voice and piano trio, to words by Joanna Baillie, in his collection of 25 Irish songs WoO152 no.8 (London and Edinburgh, 1814).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.M. Ward: 'The "Dolfull Domps"', JAMS, iv (1951), 111–21
D. Lumsden: The Sources of English Lute Music, 1540–1620 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1955)
J. Caldwell: English Keyboard Music Before the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1973)
J.(M.) Ward: Commentary to The Dublin Virginal Manuscript (London, 1983)
J.M. Ward: Music for Elizabethan Lutes (Oxford, 1992)

ALAN BROWN

Dunayevsky, Isaak Iosifovich (b Lokhvitsa, province of Poltava, 30 Jan 1900; d Moscow, 25 July 1955). Russian composer. He studied the violin with Achron at the Khar'kiv Music School (1910–15) while teaching himself the piano and conducting student orchestras. At the Khar'kiv Conservatory (1915–19) he was a composition pupil of Bogatïryov. In the early 1920s he composed for the theatre and worked in propagating music through public lectures, journalism and directing amateur studies. He was music director of the Ermitazh and Korsh theatres, Moscow (1924–9), for which he composed ballet scores, and from 1926 to 1929 he was composer to the Moscow Theatre of Satire. His first major success was with the operetta Zheniki ('The Bridegrooms', 1927), the forerunner of Soviet musical comedy. From 1929 to 1941 Dunayevsky was music director of the Leningrad Music Hall, a variety theatre, where, in collaboration with the popular singer Leonid Utyosov and his instrumental ensemble, he made the first fruitful attempts to adapt American commercial jazz styles to Soviet popular music. The film score for Vesyolïye rebyata ('The Merry Folk'), in which Utyosov and his jazz band also took part, established Dunayevsky as a favourite songwriter in Russia. Between 1938 and 1948 he directed the ensemble of the Leningrad House of Culture of Railwaymen. He was president of the Leningrad Composers Union (1937–41) and a member of the administration of the Soviet Composers Union from 1948. In 1936 he received the title Honoured Art Worker of the RSFSR and in 1950 he was made a People's Artist of the RSFSR.

Dunayevsky's major contribution was the renewal of Russian musical comedy, freeing it from the stereotype of Viennese operetta. His best works in the genre combine humour and lyricism, parodistic quotation and brilliant singing melody, with a gift for musical characterization and a unifying use of leitmotifs. The songs, lyrical or in march or hymn style, are inseparably linked with the spirit of the 1930s: vigorous, optimistic and enthusiastic, reflecting national pride and the awareness of collective power. The initial phrase of the Pesni o rodine ('Song of the Motherland') from the film Tsirk ('Circus', 1936) was taken as the call sign of Moscow radio.

WORKS
(selective list)

12 operettas incl. Zheniki [The Bridegrooms], 1927; Zolotaya dolina [The Golden Valley], 1937; Belaya akatsiya [The White Acacia], 1955
Songs, theatre music, *c*30 film scores

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Yankovsky: I.I. Dunayevskiy (Leningrad and Moscow, 1940)
I.I. Dunayevsky: Vïstupleniya, stat'i, pis'ma [Speeches, articles, letters] (Moscow, 1961)
L. Mikheyeva: I.I. Dunayevskiy (Leningrad, 1963)
D.M. Person, ed.: I.I. Dunayevskiy: noto-bibliograficheskïy spravochnik (Moscow, 1971)

GENRIKH ORLOV

Duncan, Isadora (b San Francisco, 27 May 1878; d Nice, 14 Sept 1927). American solo dancer, the pioneer of modern dance. She had no formal training but evolved her own style of dancing, with bare feet and flowing draperies, and was the first dancer to appear on the stage without tights. Dancing was for her the expression of the mind and the soul, and she regarded classical ballet as unnatural. Drawing inspiration from ancient Greek arts, she attempted to express the emotions aroused in her by the music of great composers (including Beethoven, Chopin, Gluck, Schubert and Skryabin); in this she did great service to dance, for dancers had previously tended to use inferior music. At first she was censured by musicians, but eventually her good taste was admitted and even Cosima Wagner permitted her to dance to her husband's music at the 1904 Bayreuth Festival. Duncan's début in Chicago in 1899 was unsuccessful, but in Paris the following year she attracted respectful attention with her solo recitals. She subsequently performed throughout Europe, and in 1904 opened a school for children in Berlin; this was followed by others in Russia, Paris, Vienna and elsewhere, but none has survived. She visited Russia in 1905, 1908 and 1912 and returned there in 1921, when she married the young poet Essenin. In Paris she attracted famous artists, writers and sculptors (notably D'Annunzio, Rodin and Bourdelle) and in 1904 began a long affair with Gordon Craig. Tragedy dogged her personal life: her attempts to found schools to perpetuate her art all failed, her three children all died young, Essenin committed suicide, and she herself was killed when her scarf caught in the wheel of a car and broke her neck. However, her influence as an artist increased after her death; together with the work of Loïe Fuller and Ruth St Denis, her free style of dancing was the basis of modern dance as practised all over the world.

Isadora Duncan: photograph by Elvira, Munich

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Isadora Duncan: My Life (New York, 1927)
Irma Duncan and A.R. Macdougall: Isadora Duncan's Russian Days and her Last Years in France (London, 1929)
P.D. Magriel, ed.: Nijinsky, Pavlova, Duncan: Three Lives in Dance (New York, 1946–7/R)
E.G. Craig: Index to the Story of my Days (London, 1957)
A.R. Macdougall: Isadora: a Revolutionary in Art and Love (New York, 1960)
V. Seroff: The Real Isadora (New York, 1971)
F. Steegmuller: Your Isadora (New York, 1974)
For further bibliography see BALLET, §Bib, D(i).

G.B.L. WILSON

Duncan, (Robert) Todd (b Danville, KY, 12 Feb 1903; d Washington DC, 28 Feb 1998). American baritone. After attending Butler University, Indianapolis (BA 1925), and Columbia University Teachers College (MA 1930), he joined the voice faculty of Howard University in Washington, DC, where he remained until 1945. He made his début in 1934 as Alfio in Cavalleria rusticana with the Aeolian Opera in New York, and later became the first black member of the New York City Opera, where he first appeared as Tonio (1945). Also active in musical theatre, he created Porgy in Gershwin's Porgy and Bess at the Alvin Theatre, New York (1935). He appeared in the London production of The Sun Never Sets (1938) and as the Lord's General in Vernon Duke's Cabin in the Sky (1940, New York); his performance as Stephen Kumalo in Weill's Lost in the Stars (1949–50) won him the Donaldson and New York Drama Critics awards in 1950. Duncan also made two films, Syncopation (1942) and Unchained (1955).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Abdul: Blacks in Classical Music (New York, 1977)
P. Turner: Afro-American Singers (Minneapolis, 1977)

DOMINIQUE-RENÉ DE LERMA

Duncan, Trevor (Leonard Charles Trebilco) (b Camberwell, London, 27 Feb 1924). English composer. Originally a BBC sound engineer, his first success High Heels (1949), was influenced by David Rose. From 1956 he concentrated solely upon composition, developing a style which was ideally suited to the requirements of the London mood music publishers who provide recorded material for use by film, television and newsreel companies worldwide. Ron Goodwin's 1959 recording of The Girl from Corsica brought public recognition, which was shortly thereafter enhanced when the BBC chose his march from A Little Suite as the theme for the television series 'Dr Finlay's Casebook'. Although it sounded appropriate to the programme's Scottish setting, Duncan insists that the original inspiration for the work was English, possibly deriving from his strong affinity with Cornwall. Numerous other pieces of his are familiar through their use as anonymous television themes.

His most serious work is Sinfonia Tellurica (1970): the first three movements ('Mare', 'Terre' and 'Ventus Ignis') depict the elements, while the fourth ('Homines') visualizes mankind's endeavours and achievements. Duncan's admiration for Walton is evident in this work, which was commissioned so that Boosey & Hawkes could offer film and television companies symphonic music with a clear 20th-century identity. Duncan's later works have drawn on both his passion for mathematics and electronic resources.

WORKS
(selective list)

all works for orchestra

Sinfonia Tellurica, 1970
Suites: Challenge of Space, 1951; Children in the Park, 1954; House of Tranquility, 1956; The Visionaries, 1957; The Spirit of Industry, 1958; Men Before Adam, 1960; Green Heritage, 1963; The Spirit of Progress, 1964; Maestro Variations, 1967; Aerial Suite, 1971; Industrial Suite, 1971
Other works: High Heels, 1949; Pictures in Fog, 1949; Premiere, a Sound Picture, 1949; Vision in Velvet, 1949; Tomboy, 1950; Making Tracks (20th-Century Express), 1951; Still Waters, 1951; Panoramic Splendour, 1952; Broad Horizon, 1956; French Leave, 1956; Great Quest, 1956; Lynch Fever, 1956; The Tall Ships, 1956; Dream of Tomorrow, 1958; The Girl from Corsica, 1958; The Olive Harvest, 1958; The Wine Harvest, 1958; With Noble Purpose, 1958; Little Debbie, 1959; Meadow Mist, 1959; Valse Mignonette, 1959; Dancing in the Starlight, 1960; Overland to Oregon, 1960; Citizens of the World, 1962; One Man's Story, 1963; Passage to Windward, 1963; Schooner Bay, 1963; Seekers of Glory, 1963; Aim and Endeavour, 1964; Greensward, 1967; Meadowsweet, 1967; Runnimede, 1971; Waters Are Clear, 1971; Waters are Murky, 1971; Fugue for Orchestra, 1971; With Noble Purpose, 1971

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, EMI Music Publishing, Josef Weinberger

DAVID ADES

Duncker Lavalle, Luis (b Arequipa, 1874; d 1922). Peruvian composer. Son of a German father and a Peruvian mother, he grew up in a highly cultured, musical family. Apart from his musical education at home, he won a Peruvian government scholarship in 1917 to go to the USA to complete his studies; but, tragically, his wife's death shortly after arriving affected him so deeply that he permanently gave up his professional career. His family background directed his specifically pianistic talent – almost all his output is for the piano – towards the composing of mazurkas, minuets and waltzes in a Chopinesque and also a Viennese style. Gradually, however, he became drawn to the surrounding landscape and Andean and mestizo culture, with its traditional, regional melodies and dances. This enriched his earlier style and language; his works began to absorb folksong, but set within a sophisticated European harmony. His waltzes Cholita, Luz y sombra, Llanto y risa date from this period, together with the song Lágrimas and also Quenas, which was a particular success. Even in his longest and most significant pieces – romantic ballads such as Nostalgia and Leyenda apasionada which appear remote from folk music – there is a mestizo flavour, sometimes with a suggestion of yaraví, the emotive song of Arequipa.

Dunker Lavalle's may be considered the first genuinely Peruvian musical voice, since the birth of independence 60 years earlier. His work reflected a common aim in trying to unite the mixture of races and cultural traditions in the country; that he was torn between those traditions is typical of the romantic Latin American composer.

WORKS

Orch: Minuetto; Marcha nupcial

Pf and vocal: Llanto y risa (Santiago, Chile, 1903); Luz y sombra (Lima, 1908); Grand coquette (Boston, 1916); Papillons blacs (Boston, 1916), Valse aristocratique (Boston, 1916), Marina (Lima, 1919); Minuetto en mi menor (Lima, 1964); El Picaflor, concert fantasy (Lima, 1964); Quenas (Lima, 1964); Cholita (Lima, 1964); Lágrimas, 1v, pf (Lima, 1964); Leyenda Apasionada, romantic ballad (Lima, 1964); Caricias (Arequipa, n.d.); Nostalgia, romantic ballad

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Raygada: 'La música en el Perú', Perú en cifras 1944–1945, ed. D. Sainte Marie (Lima, 1945), 910–22

C. Raygada: 'Guía musical del Perú, II', Fénix, xii (1963), 1–82

E. Pinilla: 'Informe sobre la música en el Perú', Historia del Perú, ix, ed. J. Mejía Baca (Lima, 1980), 569–85

E. Pinilla: 'La música en el siglo XX', La música en el Perú (Lima, 1985), 174–6

ENRIQUE ITURRIAGA

Dunhill, Thomas (Frederick) (b London, 1 Feb 1877; d Scunthorpe, 13 March 1946). English composer and writer on music. In 1893 he entered the RCM, where he studied composition with Stanford and piano with Franklin Taylor. In 1899 he was the first RCM student to win the Tagore Gold Medal. From 1899 to 1908 he was assistant music master at Eton College. From 1905 he also taught harmony and counterpoint at the RCM. Two years later, he founded a series of chamber concerts devoted to the works of British composers. He was the first recipient of the Cobbett Chamber Music Medal (1924).

He made notable contributions to almost every branch of music. In addition, he wrote a great deal of educational music and was a respected adjudicator and examiner. He published texts on Mozart, Sullivan and Elgar and was a distinguished editor of the RCM Magazine. In 1940 he was awarded an honorary DMus by Durham University and two years later elected an FRCM. His support of institutions such as the PRS and the Musicians' Benevolent Fund reflected his lifelong dedication to fellow musicians. He was a Director of the Royal Philharmonic Society and Dean of the Faculty of Music at the University of London.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: The Enchanted Garden (op), 1925, London, RAM, March 1928; Tantivy Towers (light op, A.P. Herbert), London, Lyric, 16 Jan 1931; Happy Families (light op, R. Fyleman), Guildford, 1 Nov 1933; Dick Whittington (ballet), 1934; Gallimaufry (Die Eiskönigen) (ballet, after H.C. Andersen), Hamburg, Staatsoper, 11 Dec 1937; Something in the City (comic op), 1939

Orch: Suite of Waltzes, perf. 1897; Valse fantasia, fl, orch, perf. 1899; The Pixies, 1907; Capricious Variations on an Old English Tune, vc, orch, perf. 1910; The King's Threshold, prelude, perf. 1913; Dance Suite, str, 1914; Sym., a, 1914; White Peacocks, 1920; Elegiac Variations on an Original Theme, perf. 1922; Divertimento, chbr orch, perf. 1942; Triptych, va, orch, perf. 1942; Waltz Suite, perf. 1943; Maytime, ov. 1945

Chbr: Qnt, E♭, cl, hn, vn, vc, pf, perf. 1898; Qnt, f, hn, str qt, 1899–1900; Qt, b, pf, str trio, 1903; Pf Qnt, c, 1904; Variations on an Original Theme, vc, pf, ?1905; Sonata, d, vn, pf, 1908; Phantasie, c, pf trio, ?1908; Phantasy, E♭, pf, vn, va, 1911; Sonata, F, vn, pf, 1916–17

Pf: 16 Variations on an Original Theme, e♭, 1899; Concert Study, A♭, 1902; 3 Romantic Preludes, ?1906–07; 3 Valses miniatures (1912); Lunar Rainbow (1927); 3 Preludes (1933)

Org: 2 Pieces, ?1914; 3 Pieces for Organ and Strings, 1924–5; 4 Pieces (1946)

Vocal: Tears (S. Landor), 1897; Infant Joy (W. Blake) (1901); Sleep, Sweet Babe (Blake) (1901); 4 Songs from Vagabondia, pf, Bar (R. Hovey, B. Carman) (1903); Tubal Cain (C. Mackay), S, A, T, B, orch (1903); The Lake and a Fairy Boat (T. Hood), 2S, 1911; The Wind among the Reeds (W.B. Yeats), T, orch (1911); Songs of the River (G. Macdonald, R.L. Stevenson, A. Tennyson, J. Keats, C. Kingsley), S, A, T, B, pf, 1915; Beauty and Beauty (R. Brooke), T, pf (1922); To the Queen of Heaven, S, pf (1926); The Christmas Rose (cant, I. Gass) (1936); Three Fine Ships (M. Rose), B, orch (1941); The Quiet Night (J. Irvine), 1945; The Winds of May (Irvine), 1945

Principal publishers: Arnold, Augener, Boosey & Hawkes, Cramer, Lengnick, Novello, OUP, Stainer & Bell,

WRITINGS

Chamber Music (London, 1913)
Mozart's String Quartets (London, 1927, 2/1970)
Sullivan's Comic Operas (London, 1928, 2/1981)
Sir Edward Elgar (London, 1938)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Kington: 'Thomas F. Dunhill and Sibelius 7', British Music, xviii (1996), 54–65

D. Dunhill: Thomas Dunhill: Maker of Music (London, 1997)

BERYL KINGTON

Duni, Antonio (b Matera, *c*1700; d ?Schwerin, after 1766). Italian composer. He was the son of Francesco Duni, maestro di cappella in Matera, and the elder brother of Egidio Duni. He is said to have studied with Nicola Fago at the Turchini Conservatory in Naples. After a period at the archiepiscopal court in Trier he moved to Madrid, where he produced two zarzuelas in 1726 and 1727. He was apparently a friend of Farinelli and served the Duke of Osuna as maestro di cappella and music teacher. After a period of travelling around Europe (there are reports of him in Germany and Paris) he arrived in Schwerin in September 1755 as maestro di cappella of an Italian opera troupe, but soon lost his post by undertaking a lawsuit against Nicolo Peretti, the troupe's director. In September 1757 he went to Moscow, where he taught privately and at the university. After teaching in Riga in 1765–6 he returned to Schwerin and on 5 July 1766 and petitioned the Duchess of Mecklenburg for a post and security for his family.

WORKS

Stage: Locuras hay que dan juicio y sueños que son verdad (zar, A. de Zamora), Madrid, 23 Feb 1726; Santa Ines de Montepoliciano (zar, M.F. de Armesto), Madrid, 25 Dec 1727; 3 arias in L'amor mascherato (int), Schwerin, 8 March 1756, pasticcio, B-Bc

Sacred: Litania della BVM, 2vv, vns, org (?Nuremberg, 1768), lost; Mass, 5vv, orch, D-SWl; Salve regina, S, str qt, SWl; Tantum ergo, 1v, 2 vn, org, LEt; 6 motets, ?Bsb

Other works: [6] Cantate da camera (London, n.d.); 6 chbr duets, 2vv, insts, A-Wn; 5 arias (P. Metastasio): 4 in D-SWl; 5 sinfonie, A-Wgm

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; MooserA; RosaM

H.W. Bärensprung: Versuch einer Geschichte des Theaters in Mecklenburg-Schwerin (Schwerin, 1837), 57–8

C. Meyer: Geschichte der Mecklenburg-Schweriner Hofkapelle (Schwerin, 1913)

KENT M. SMITH

Duni, Egidio (Romualdo) [Duny, Egide (Romuald)] (b Matera, Basilicata, bap. 11 Feb 1708; d Paris, 11 June 1775). Italian composer. He was one of the most important opéra comique composers in the third quarter of the 18th century, contributing to the creation of a new style in that genre, the comédie mêlée d'ariettes, through the blending of Italian elements with the traditional French ones.

1. LIFE. Duni was the fourth son of Francesco Duni, maestro di cappella in Matera, and the younger brother of Antonio Duni. Little is known of his early training, which took place in Naples, though probably not with Durante as has previously been supposed. Nerone, his first opera, was staged during the Rome spring season of 1735, and after composing works for Rome and Milan in Carnival 1736 Duni went to London, where his Demofoonte was performed in an English version in May 1737. He matriculated at Leiden University on 22 October 1738 and went on to write further operas for Milan in 1739 and for Florence in 1740 and 1743. On 16 December 1743 Duni was appointed maestro di cappella of S Nicola in Bari. With Ipermestra and Ciro riconosciuto (both 1748, Genoa), he came to the attention of the Duke of Richelieu and Philip, Duke of Parma. Soon after, he became court maestro di cappella in Parma and music teacher to the duke's daughter Isabella (who later married Archduke Joseph of Austria).

With Olimpiade (Parma, Carnival 1755) Duni's career as an opera seria composer came to an end, while Goldoni's arrival in Parma in May 1756 led to his collaboration on Duni's last Italian opera, La buona figliuola, better known through Piccinni's later setting. The French atmosphere of the Parma court turned Duni's attention to the opéra comique, and he is often said to have written, during his stay there, the music for two Favart librettos in that genre, La chercheuse d'esprit and Ninette à la cour. This is highly doubtful in both cases (nor has it been proved that any of Duni's music was used in the pastiche Ninette à la cour performed in Paris in 1755). However, Jean Monnet, director of the Paris Opéra-Comique, reported in his memoirs that in autumn 1756 he received a request from Parma for a French libretto for Duni, who wished to write an opera for Paris. The result, after hesitation on Monnet's part, was Louis Anseaume's Le peintre amoureux de son modèle, for the first performance of which on 26 July 1757 Duni went to Paris. This was a brilliant success and refuted Rousseau's claim that the French language was unsuitable for music: with its blend of vaudeville tunes and natural French expressive declamation within an Italian musical idiom, Le peintre served for several years as a model opéra comique.

Released with a pension from his post in Parma, Duni settled in Paris (fig.1), married and, during 1758–60, strengthened his reputation with several successful opéras comiques. In 1761 he was appointed music director of the Comédie-Italienne but, ironically, a number of his new works for that theatre were not well received. In August 1761 he indignantly replied in the Mercure de France to hostile criticism of his La bonne fille, and a private letter dated January 1762, published by Tiersot, reveals that he was also in conflict with Favart at this time. However, his collaborations with Anseaume – Mazet (1761), Le milicien (1762) and Les deux chasseurs et la laitière (1763), the unusually dramatic L'école de la jeunesse (1765) and La clochette (1766) – were extremely successful. These works, as well as two ambitious collaborations with Favart, La fée Urgèle (1765) and Les moissonneurs (1768), were published in Paris and adapted, translated and imitated all over Europe. They held the stage in France until nearly the end of the century.

During the 18 months between the première of La clochette in July 1766 and that of Les moissonneurs in January 1768, Duni apparently made a visit to Italy. On his return to Paris he met with Grimm's harsh and unjust suggestion that he 'would do well to give up composition since his trip to Italy had not refreshed his head'. Despite similar but milder criticism, Duni's next work, Les sabots

1. Egidio Duni: portrait by Louis de Carmontelle, pencil and watercolour, c1760 (Musée Condé, Chantilly)

(1768) – the first of two collaborations with Sedaine – had a modest success, and on 26 November 1768 both he and Favart were given pensions by the Comédie-Italienne. After Thémire (1770) he retired, continuing to teach and occasionally to judge musical competitions.

Duni's son, Jean Pierre (b Paris, 21 September 1759), was the composer of a set of three keyboard sonatas with violin accompaniment (Paris, 1778).

2. Works. Scattered and poorly catalogued sources make a comprehensive view of Duni's Italian career difficult. The works for which most of the music survives – Nerone, Catone in Utica, Giuseppe riconosciuto and Olimpiade – as well as substantial fragments from Demofoonte and Ipermestra, reveal a composer who, while always respecting the established formal and harmonic conventions of his day, nevertheless achieved effective dramatic characterization through grateful vocal phrases of considerable variety. Many of his non-operatic compositions – various religious and instrumental works – also date from this stage of his career. Duni's principal importance, however, lies in his decisive role during the formative years of the comédie mêlée d'ariettes. He was fortunate in his collaboration with such leading librettists as Favart, Anseaume and, towards the end of his career, Sedaine. This undoubtedly aided his assimilation of the various currents of the French musical environment and, especially, his sensitivity to the demands of natural and expressive French musical declamation for which he earned Diderot's warm praise in Le neveu de Rameau.

Duni's early comédies gradually eliminated the vaudevilles that had formed the basis of much previous composition in the genre, and worked consistently towards the objective of opéra comique based entirely on original music by combining italianate ariettes, ensembles and recitatives with other more characteristically French elements – couplets, spoken dialogue and divertissements. Duni's treatment of the vocal ensemble was particularly innovatory and most apparent in his collaborations with Anseaume, who specialized in constructing elaborate concerted texts for several characters. L'isle des foux (1760) contains the first known sextet in an opéra comique, and L'école de la jeunesse (1765) is unprecedented in including one sextet and two septets. In addition, Duni and his librettists used the ensemble increasingly to further the dramatic intrigue, and two exceptional experiments in this respect are found in La fille mal gardée (1758) and L'isle des foux, where a single concerted movement spans successive scenes and introduces new characters. The latter work, alongside Les deux chasseurs, Le rendezvous (both 1763) and La fée Urgèle, also reveals imaginative orchestral details (in spite of the small orchestra available), and these render criticisms of Duni's instrumental writing somewhat unjust. Dramatic characterization is especially effective in Mazet, where the protagonist is required to feign loss of speech; there are other fine moments in Les deux chasseurs and La clochette, both of which are enhanced by a liberal use of stage directions to encourage a more realistic acting style.

Duni's works, along with those of Gluck and Laruette, represent the earliest and finest examples of a new type of opéra comique. They gave the mid-18th-century Parisian public repeated exposure to what it wanted: French music with Italian spirit, usually in delightful pastoral settings touched by sentimentality (fig.2). Ultimately, however, Duni failed to keep pace with the genre he had helped to create, and he was overtaken in popularity by composers such as Monsigny and Philidor. Grimm's initial admiration of him as the founder of a new musico-dramatic tradition in France gradually gave way to criticisms of his outdated style: 'our good father Duni is no longer young; he begins to lack ideas'. Symptomatic of these limitations (especially of his lack of harmonic originality) was Duni's refusal early in 1763 to undertake the correction in Paris of Gluck's Orfeo ed Euridice, in which he saw little except copying errors and passages of shocking violence. He knew his own abilities and sensed the needs of his audience to a remarkable degree: his success, therefore, was great, but died with the society that had fostered it.

2. Title-page of the score of Egidio Duni's 'L'isle des foux' (Paris, ?1760): engraving by Jean-Jacques Flipart after Charles-Nicolas Cochin II

WORKS

OPERAS

PCI – Paris, Comédie-Italienne

Nerone (os, 3, after F. Silvani: La fortezza al cimento), Rome, Tordinona, 21 May 1735, I-Nc

Adriano in Siria (os, 3, P. Metastasio), Rome, Tordinona, 27 Dec 1735

La tirannide debellata (os, 3, after A. Zeno and P. Pariati: Flavio Anicio Olibrio), Milan, Regio Ducal, carn. 1736

Demophontes, King of Thrace (os, 3, after Metastasio), London, King's, 24 May 1737, 6 arias (London, 1737)

La Didone abbandonata (os, 3, Metastasio), Milan, Regio Ducal, Jan 1739

Catone in Utica (os, 3, after Metastasio), Florence, Pergola, carn. 1740, E-Mn

Baiazette, o Tamerlano (os, 3, A. Piovene), Florence, Pergola, aut. 1743, 1 aria D-ROu

Artaserse (os, 3, Metastasio), Florence, Pergola, 1744, 2 arias ROu

Ipermestra (os, 3, Metastasio), Genoa, Falcone, carn. 1748

Ciro riconosciuto (os, 3, Metastasio), Genoa, Falcone, spr. 1748

Olimpiade (os, 3, after Metastasio), Parma, Ducale, carn. 1755, F-Pc

La buona figliuola (La Cecchina) (melodramma giocoso, 3, C. Goldoni), Parma, Ducale, 26 Dec 1756; rev. as La bonne fille, PCI, 8 June 1761

Le peintre amoureux de son modèle (oc, 2, L. Anseaume), Paris, Foire St Laurent, 26 July 1757 (Paris, ?1757); rev., Paris, Foire St Germain, Feb 1758
Le docteur Sangrado (oc, 1, Anseaume and J.-B. Lourdet de Santerre, after A.-R. Lesage: Gil Blas), Paris, Foire St Germain, 13 Feb 1758 (Paris, 1758), collab. J.-L. Laruette
La fille mal gardée, ou Le pédant amoureux (cmda, 1, Favart, M.J.B. Favart and Lourdet de Santerre), PCI, 4 March 1758 (Paris, ?1758) [parody of La Provençale (5th entrée in Mouret: Les fêtes de Thalie)]
La chute des anges rebelles (oc), Paris, Tuileries, Salle des Machines, 16 March 1758
Nina et Lindor, ou Les caprices du coeur (int, 2, ?C.P. Richelet), Paris, Foire St Laurent, 9 Sept 1758 (Paris, ?1758)
La veuve indécise (oc, 1, Anseaume, after J.-J. Vadé), Paris, Foire St Laurent, 24 Sept 1759 (Paris, ?1759) [parody of La veuve coquette (2nd entrée in Mouret: Les fêtes de Thalie)]
La boutique du poëte (oc), PCI, 8 Oct 1760
L'isle des foux (cmda, 2, Anseaume and P.-A. Lefebvre de Marcouville, after Goldoni: Arcifanfano re dei matti), PCI, 29 Dec 1760 (Paris, ?1760)
Mazet (cmda, 2, Anseaume), PCI, 24 Sept 1761 (Paris, ?1761)
La plaideuse, ou Le procès (cmda, 3, C.-S. Favart), PCI, 19 May 1762
La nouvelle Italie (comédie heroï-comique, 3, J. Galli di Bibiena), PCI, 23 June 1762, collab. A.J. Rigade
Le milicien (cmda, 1, Anseaume), Versailles, 29 Dec 1762; PCI, 1 Jan 1763 (Paris, ?1763)
Les deux chasseurs et la laitière (cmda, 1, Anseaume), PCI, 23 July 1763 (Paris, 1763)
Le rendez-vous (comédie, 1, P. Légier), PCI, 16 Nov 1763 (Paris, n.d.)
L'école de la jeunesse, ou Le Barnevelt françois (cmda, 3, Anseaume), PCI, 24 Jan 1765 (Paris, 1765)
La fée Urgèle, ou Ce qui plaît aux dames (cmda, 4, Favart, after Voltaire and G. Chaucer), Fontainebleau, 26 Oct 1765 (Paris, 1765)
La clochette (cmda, 1, Anseaume), PCI, 24 July 1766 (Paris, 1766)
Les moissonneurs (cmda, 3, Favart, after Ruth), PCI, 27 Jan 1768 (Paris, 1768)
Les sabots (oc, 1, M.-J. Sedaine, after J. Cazotte), private perf., Auteuil; PCI, 26 Oct 1768 (Paris, n.d.)
La rosière de Salency (cmda, 3, Favart), Fontainebleau, 25 Oct 1769, excerpts with lib (Paris, 1769); collab. Blaise, Philidor, Monsigny and van Swieten
Thémire (pastorale mêlée d'ariettes, 1, Sedaine), private perf., Passy, Aug 1770; Fontainebleau, 20 Oct 1770; PCI, 26 Nov 1770; ariettes (Paris, n.d.)

Music in: Cendrillon (1759); The Maid of the Mill (1765); The Noble Peasant (1784); The Crusade (1790)

Doubtful: Alessandro nell'Indie (os, Metastasio), ?1736; Armida (os), 3 arias D-ROu; Demetrio (os, Metastasio), Florence, ? carn. 1747, 6 arias ROu; La semplice curiosa (componimento drammatico, P. Pertici, after Favart: La chercheuse d'esprit), Florence, Cocomero, aut. 1751; L'embarras du choix (oc), PCI, 13 March 1758 [parody of Dauvergne: Enée et Lavinie]; Le retour au village, 1756–9 (oc, after Favart:Le caprice amoureux, ou Ninette à la cour), unperf. (Paris, n.d.); L'heureuse espièglerie, ?*c*1771 (oc, 1), unperf.

OTHER WORKS

Sacred: Gios re di Giuda (orat), 1749; Giuseppe riconosciuto (orat), 1759, I-Nc; Athalie (orat); Le sacrifice d'Issac (orat); Mass, 5vv, orch, D-Dkh; Ky–Gl, 4vv, insts, Dkh; TeD, 4vv, orch, Dkh; Lit, 4vv, insts, Dkh; Tantum ergo, S, A, 2 vn, org

Inst: 6 trio sonatas, op.1 (Rotterdam, 1738); [30] Minuetti e contridanze (London, 1738)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ES (E. Zanetti); MGG1 (M. Briquet)
E.R. Duni: 'A M.D.L.G. Pensionnaire adjoint au Mercure pour l'article des spectacles', Mercure de France (Aug 1761), 175–9
J. Monnet: Supplément au roman comique, ou Mémoires pour servir à la vie de Jean Monnet (London, 1772); ed. H. d'Almeras (Paris, 1909)
'Eloge de Monsieur Duni', Le nécrologe des hommes célèbres de France, vi (1775), 163–79
C. Goldoni: Mémoires (Paris, 1787)
A.-E.-M. Grétry: Mémoires, ou Essais sur la musique (Paris, 1789, enlarged 2/1797)
C.-S. Favart: Mémoires et correspondance littéraires, dramatiques et anecdotiques (Paris, 1808)
F.M. Grimm: Correspondance littéraire, philosophique et critique, ed. M. Tourneux (Paris, 1877–82)
A. Pougin: 'Duni et les commencements de l'opéra-comique', Le ménestrel, xlvi (4 April–4 July 1880)
G. Sospizio: 'E.R. Duni e N. Piccinni', L'avvenire di Sardegna della Domenica (8 April 1884)
J. Tiersot: 'Lettres de musiciens écrites en français du XVe au XXe siècle', RMI, xvii (1910), 512; pubd separately (Turin, 1924), i, 505–53, esp. 512–13
G. Cucuel: Les créateurs de l'opéra-comique français (Paris, 1914)
D. Diderot: Le neveu de Rameau, ed. J. Fabre (Geneva, 1950, 2/1963; Eng. trans., 1965)
D. Heartz: 'Diderot et le théâtre lyrique "le nouveau stile" proposé par Le neveu de Rameau', RdM, lxiv (1978), 229–52
K.M. Smith: Egidio Duni and the Development of the Opéra-Comique from 1753 to 1770 (diss., Cornell U., 1980)
J. Kopp: The Drame Lyrique: a Study in the Esthetics of Opéra-Comique, 1762–1791 (diss., U. of Pennsylvania, 1982)
R.M. Isherwood: Farce and Fantasy: Popular Entertainment in Eighteenth-Century Paris (New York,1986)
B.A. Brown: Gluck and the French Theatre in Vienna (Oxford, 1991)
E.A. Cook: Duet and Ensemble in the Early Opéra-Comique (New York, 1995)

KENT M. SMITH/ELISABETH COOK

Duniecki, Stanisław (b Lemberg [now L'viv], 25 Nov 1839; d Venice, 16 Dec 1870). Polish composer. He studied the piano and composition under J.K. Kessler, then in Leipzig (1854–8), Vienna (from 1859), Brussels (with Fétis) and Paris, where he had some lessons in orchestration from Berlioz. Returning to Poland in 1863, he took charge of the orchestra at a small Polish theatre in Czernowitz (now Chernovtsy). In 1864 he was appointed conductor at the Lemberg theatre, where he staged his most famous operetta, Paziowie Królowej Marysieńki ('Queen Mary's Pageboys'), a work in the tradition of Kurpiński and Stefani. Hoping that the operetta would be performed in Warsaw, Duniecki spent some time there reviewing for the weekly journal Kłosy. However, as the Warsaw Opera did not stage the work, he accepted the post of conductor at the Kraków theatre, where it was performed in 1865. Duniecki staged Moniuszko's Halka (1866) and Verbum nobile (1867), as well as several of his own operas, but despite his efforts, the Kraków Opera did not survive. He left Poland in 1867, visiting Romania and Merano and finally settling in Venice. In 1866 he had begun work on an opera based on the Russian poem Igor, but he died before it was completed.

Smetana reportedly admired the melodic beauty of the arias and duets in Paziowie, Odaliski and Pokusa, as well as the orchestration, characterized by the predominance of wind over string instruments. Duniecki admired Wagner and apparently expressed interest in composing works in a serious style, but his limited compositional experience prevented him from achieving this goal; his musical style may be compared to that of Rossini and Offenbach, and includes elements from his national tradition. Duniecki also wrote articles about opera for the Polish periodicals Kłosy and Kalina.

WORKS

lost unless otherwise stated

STAGE

Korylla (operetta, 1, P. Duniecki, after Fr. novel), Lemberg, 18 May 1859
Kowal z przedmieścia Pragi [The Blacksmith from the Prague Suburbs] (melodrama, W. Tomaszewicz), Czernowitz, 1864

Nędznicy [The Scoundrels] (melodrama, 2, W. Rapacki, after V. Hugo: Les misérables), Czernowitz, 1864
Paziowie Królowej Marysieńki [Queen Mary's Pageboys] (operetta, 2, P. Duniecki, after W. Pol: Obrazy [The Pictures]), Lemberg, 16 Dec 1864, PL-Kj; extracts ed. J. Wildt (Kraków, 1870)
Dożynki, czyli Pierwsze wrażenia [The Harvest Festival, or First Impressions] (comic op, 2, J. Jasiński), Kraków, Old, 29 Oct 1865
Odaliski (operetta, 2, P. Duniecki), Kraków, Old, 9 Jan 1866
Pokusa [The Temptation] (comic op, 1, S. Duniecki), Kraków, Old, 24 April 1866; as Chochlik [The Gnome], Lemberg, 1869; as Šotek [The Imp], Prague; as Der Teufel ist los, Poznań and Berlin; as Lucifer, Vienna
Doktor Pandolfo (operetta), Kraków, Old, 1866
Igor (op, P. Duniecki and J. Turski), inc., 1866–9
Loczki panny Proci [Miss Proci's Curls] (melodrama), *c*1867
Zemsta Stasi [The Vengeance of Stasia] (melodrama), *c*1867

Incid music: Kasper Karliński, 1862; Stasio (K. Szajnochy), 1866

OTHER WORKS

Symphony, perf. Lemberg, 20 Oct 1858
Songs, incl. Wiośnianki [The Youthful Ones] (B. Zaleski), 1862; Co tam marzyć o kochaniu [Why Dream about Loving] (M. Romanowski); Biedne serce u dziewczyny [Poor is the Girl's Heart]; Upominek [The Gift] Works for pf

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PSB (J.W. Reiss)
W.L. Anczyc: 'Stanisław Duniecki', Tygodnik ilustrowany, clxxii (1870), 177–8
J.W. Reiss: Jak Kraków walczył o operę [How Kraków fought for opera] (Kraków, 1934)
S. Wasylewski: 'Sprawa Stanisława Dunieckiego', Wiadomości literackie, xiv/31 (25 July 1937), 2 only
J.W. Reiss: 'Stanisław Duniecki 1839–1870', Poradnik muzyczny, v/3 (1951), 2–5
K. Michałowski: Opery polskie (Kraków, 1954)
I. Poniatowska: 'Duniecki, Stanisław', Encyklopedia muzyczna PWM, ed. E. Dziębowska (Kraków, 1979–)

IRENA PONIATOWSKA

Dunkeld Antiphoner (GB-Eu 64). See SOURCES, MS, §IX, 19.

Dünki, Jean-Jacques (b Aarau, 28 Feb 1948). Swiss composer and pianist. Self-taught as a composer, he studied the piano at the Basle Musik-Akademie (1968–71, 1975–7) and the Hochschule für Musik, Berlin (1971–4); he also attended Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore (1979–80). His principal teachers included Leon Fleisher, Charles Rosen, Peter Feuchtwanger and Claude Helffer. In 1984 he was appointed to a teaching post at the Basle Musikakademie. He has given masterclasses in Europe, North and South America and Japan, has performed regularly as a soloist, and has served as principal pianist for the contemporary music group Opera Nova of Zürich, an ensemble for which he also composes. His honours include the Schoenberg Prize (Rotterdam, 1981).

Dünki's compositions reflect his openness to all repertories. His experience as an interpreter has given him a wide-ranging knowledge of different styles, the influences of which play an important role in his work. His command of the fortepiano and clavichord has led him to integrate these instruments into many compositions. His writings appear in dissonanz and the Neue zürcher Zeitung.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dramatic: Prokrustes (The Laws of Hospitality) (chbr op, Dünki), 1980–81, London, 1982; Rückschau (multimedia, P. Bausch, G. Justi, C. Baudelaire and others), 1984
Inst: Un souvenir de L., fl, 1979; Auf die Pauke hauen, timp, 1980; Les cinq sens, pf, 1980–94; Tricorno, hn, pf, 1980; Hommages à L.C. I–IV, pf, 1981–6; Tétraptéron 0–IV, pf, hpd, cel, clvd, amp, 1981–93; Kammerstück II, hn, pf, chbr orch, 1985; L'arbre bleu, 2 fl, hpd, 1988; 3 miniatures, cl, 1988; 5 morceaux, 2 cl, 1988; Solo, vn, 1988; Kammerstück VI, vn + va, chbr orch, 1989; Etudes I–III, clvd/pf/pianoforte, 1990–96; Musique pour un Guillaume Tell, ob + ob d'amore + eng hn, 1991; Kammerstück VIII, chbr orch, 1993; Figures, vn, vc, fortepiano, 1997
Vocal: Lutezia (cant., H. Heine), S, sax, tpt, vc, pf, perc, 1977–8; Tú ... no tienes imaginación (cant., L. Felipe, J. Tauler), S, Bar, fl, cl, vc, pf, org, 1978–9; Pessoa (cant., F. Pessoa), S, cl + b cl, vc, pf + clvd, tape, 1992

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Reymond: Chronique bâloise, dans Repères no.3 (Lausanne, 1992)
J.-P. Amann: Musique pour une fin de siècle: vingt entretiens avec des compositeurs suisses (Yverdon, 1994), 13–19

JEAN-PIERRE AMANN

Dunn, Blind Willie. See LANG, EDDIE.

Dunn, Thomas (Burt) (b Aberdeen, SD, 21 Dec 1925). American conductor. Brought up in Baltimore, he studied there at the Peabody Conservatory and Johns Hopkins University, and later at Harvard and the Amsterdam Conservatory. His teachers included Charles Courboin, Virgil Fox, E. Power Biggs and Ernest White for organ; Robert Shaw, G. Wallace Woodworth and Ifor Jones for choral conducting; Gustav Leonhardt for harpsichord; and Anthon van der Horst for orchestral conducting. He held church appointments in Baltimore and Philadelphia, and in 1957 became music director at the Church of the Incarnation, New York. In 1959 he was appointed music director of the Cantata Singers, impressing particularly with performances of Handel's Belshazzar and Rameau's Les Indes galantes, and expanding the group's repertory to include 19th- and 20th-century music. He founded the Festival Orchestra of New York (1959, disbanded in 1969). In 1961–2 he became known to a wider public through a series of Bach concerts in Carnegie Hall, and in 1963 he gave four performances of Messiah, each in a different version. From 1967 to 1986 he was music director of the Handel and Haydn Society, Boston, which he converted from a conservative choral society to a forward-looking organization. His performances are clean, transparent, rhythmic and, in a broad repertory from Schütz to Dallapiccola and Stravinsky, he is particularly effective in works with chorus. He has taught at many universities and music schools in the USA, including the Indiana University School of Music in Bloomington (from 1990).

MICHAEL STEINBERG/R

Dunning, Albert (b Arnhem, 5 Aug 1936). Dutch musicologist. He studied with Bernet Kempers and Smits van Waesberghe at the University of Amsterdam (1959–65), where he received the doctorate in 1969. From 1968 to 1970 he taught at the University of Tübingen. In 1970 he was a Fellow of the Istituto Storico Olandese in Rome, and then joined the faculty of Syracuse University, New York, first as a visiting professor in September 1971, then as a professor of the university's foreign course at Poitiers. He taught at the Free University of Amsterdam (1973–5) and was a research fellow at Utrecht University (1975–88). In 1988 he was appointed professor of modern and contemporary music history at the University of Pavia.

Dunning has concentrated his research mainly on 18th-century music. As well as writing monographs on two Dutch music publishers and on Pietro Antonio Locatelli, he identified Unico Wilhelm van Wassenaer as the author of the six Concerti armonici that were previously misattributed to Pergolesi and others. He also edited two volumes of chamber music for the Mozart Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke and is the general editor of the complete edition of the works of Pietro Antonio Locatelli (London, 1994–).

As a Renaissance scholar he wote a monograph on the Staatsmotette (music composed specifically for ceremonial or state occasions), in which he examined the social and political circumstances surrounding these pieces and attempted to show their distinguishing stylistic traits. He is also the general editor of the series Speculum Musicae and Studi sulla Storia della Musica in Lombardia.

WRITINGS

Joseph Schmitt: Leben und Kompositionen des Eberbacher Zisterziensers und Amsterdamer Musikverlegers (1734–1791) (Amsterdam, 1962)
'Some Notes on the Biography of Carlo Tessarini and his Musical Grammar', SMw, xxv (1962), 115–22
'Zur Frage der Autorschaft der Ricciotti und Pergolesi zugeschriebenen "Concerti armonici"', AÖAW, c (1963), 113–29 with A. Koole: 'Pietro Antonio Locatelli: nieuwe bijdragen tot de kennis van zijn leven en werken', TVNM, xx/1–2 (1964–5), 52–96
'Die "aktuelle" Musik im Zeitalter der Niederländer', GfMKB: Leipzig 1966, 181–6
'Die De Geer'schen Musikalien in Leufsta: musikalische schwedisch-niederländische Beziehungen im 18. Jh.', STMf, xlviii (1966), 187–210
De muziekuitgever Gerhard Fredrik Witvogel en zijn fonds (Utrecht, 1966)
'Verdi e lo storicismo musicale', Studi verdiani I: Venice 1966, 93–6
'Josquini antiquos, Musae, memoremus amores: a Mantovan Motet from 1554 in Homage to Josquin', AcM, xli (1969), 108–16
Die Staatsmotette 1480–1555 (diss., U. of Amsterdam, 1969; Utrecht, 1969)
'Mozarts Kanons: eine Studie', MJb 1971–2, 227–40
Count Unico Wilhelm van Wassenaer (1692–1766): a Master Unmasked or the Pergolesi/Ricciotti Puzzle Solved (Buren, 1980) [incl. MSS of the 6 Concerti armonici]
ed.: Visitatio organorum: Feestbundel voor Maarten Albert Vente (Buren, 1980)
Pietro Antonio Locatelli: der Virtuose und seine Welt (Buren, 1981)
'Official Court Music: Means and Symbol of Might', IMSCR XIII: Strasbourg 1982, i, 17–21
'Musikwissenschaft in Holland seit 1960', AcM, lv (1983), 58–69
'Autour de cinq portraits d'enfants musiciens: contribution à l'iconographie musicale des Pays-Bas au 18e siècle', Achttiende-eeuwse kunst in de Nederlanden (Delft, 1987), 453–63
'Un gentilhomme hollandais, diplomate-compositeur, à la cour de Louis XV', RdM, lxxiv (1988), 27–51
'Music Publishing in the Dutch Republic: the Present State of Research', Le magasin de l'univers: the Dutch Republic as the Centre of the European Book Trade: Wassenaar 1990, ed. C. Berkvens-Stevelinck and others (Leiden, 1992), 121–8
'Europas Musikgeschichte: Niederlände', Europas Musikgeschichte: Stuttgart 1993, 52–61
ed.: Intorno a Locatelli: Studi in occasione del tricentenario della nascità di Pietro Antonio Locatelli (1695–1764) (Lucca, 1995)

EDITIONS

Johannes de Cleve and Clemens non Papa: Missa 'De lustelijcke Mey' and Motet 'De lustelijcke Mey', MAM, xviii (1967)
Staatsmotetten für Erzherzog Karl II. von Innerösterreich, MAM, xxi–xxii (1971)
Novi thesauri musici a Petro Ioannello collecti, volumen V, CMM, lxiv (1974)
Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, iii/10: Kanons (Kassel, 1974); vii/18: Divertimenti für 5–7 Streich- und Blasinstrumente (Kassel, 1976)
Vier Staatsmotetten des 16. Jahrhunderts, Cw, cxx (1977) with W. Brabants: Unico Wilhelm van Wassenaer: Three Sonatas for Alto Recorder and Basso Continuo, circa 1714 (Amsterdam, 1992)

PAULA MORGAN/JOOST VAN GEMERT

Dunsby, Jonathan (Mark) (b Wakefield, 16 March 1953). British musicologist and pianist. He studied the piano with Fanny Waterman from 1964 and at the age of 20 took a first at Oxford (BA 1973); he then studied composition and theory with Alexander Goehr at the University of Leeds (PhD 1976). After two years (1976–8) as Harkness Fellow at Princeton University and the University of Southern California, he taught for a year at Bath College of Higher Education, and in 1979 he was appointed lecturer in music at King's College, London; he became associate professor at the University of Southern California in 1983 and, two years later, professor of music at Reading University.

As a pianist, Dunsby was winner of the Commonwealth Competition in 1975 and has taken prizes in the Geneva, Leeds and Munich piano competitions. He is the regular duo partner of the violinist Vanya Milanova. His main research interests are music analysis and the history of 19th- and 20th-century music. He was founding editor of Music Analysis (1982) and founding chairman of the Society for Music Analysis (1992).

Dunsby has written widely on music analysis, particularly in the context of performance. His doctoral dissertation consisted of analytical studies of Brahms, and his earliest published articles, on Schoenberg analysis, appeared in the Journal of the Arnold Schoenberg Institute during the late 1970s. With Arnold Whittall he wrote an introduction to music analysis (1988) which is a standard work for students and teachers. His book Performing Music (1995), directed towards a wide readership, argues the case for the establishment of 'performance studies' as a discipline. Bringing to bear his own experience as a performer and his originality of mind, he considers the relationship between music and thought and the nature and cultural context of performance.

WRITINGS

Analytical Studies of Brahms (diss., U. of Leeds, 1976; Ann Arbor, 1981, as Structural Ambiguity in Brahms) with J. Stopford: 'The Case for a Schenkerian Semiotic', Music Theory Spectrum, iii (1981), 49–53
'A Hitch Hiker's Guide to Semiotic Music Analysis', MAn, i (1982), 235–42
'The Multi-Piece in Brahms: Fantasien, op.116', Brahms: Biographical, Documentary, and Analytical Studies, ed. R. Pascall (Cambridge, 1983), 167–89
'Music and Semiotics: the Nattiez Phase', MQ, lxix (1983), 27–43
'A Bagatelle on Beethoven's WoO 60', MAn, iii (1984), 57–68
'The Formal Repeat', JRMA, cxii (1987), 196–207
with A. Whittall: Music Analysis in Theory and Practice (New Haven, CT, 1988)
'Analysis and Performance', MAn, viii (1989), 5–20
'Considerations of Texture', ML, lxx (1989), 46–57
'Music Analysis: Commentaries', Companion to Contemporary Musical Thought, ii, ed. J. Paynter and others (London, 1992), 634–49
Schoenberg: Pierrot Lunaire (Cambridge, 1992)
ed.: Early Twentieth-Century Music (Oxford, 1993)
'Criteria of Correctness in Music Theory and Analysis', Theory, Analysis and Meaning in Music, ed. A. Pople (Cambridge, 1994), 77–85
Performing Music: Shared Concerns (Oxford, 1995)

ROSEMARY WILLIAMSON

Dünser, Richard (b Bregenz, 1 May 1959). Austrian composer. He studied at the Bregenz Conservatory, at the Vienna Hochschule für Musik (1977–85) where his teachers included Augustin Kubizek, Alfred Uhl and Francis Burt, and at the Cologne Musikhochschule (1985–7) with Henze, among others. He also studied with Perle at Tanglewood (1987). He has taught at the Salzburg Mozarteum's department in Innsbruck (1987) and at the Graz Hochschule für Musik (professor from 1991). He has also served as composer-in-residence of the Vienna Konzertverein. His awards include the Würdigungspreis (1981) and the Förderungspreis (1989) of the Austrian Ministry of Culture, the Austrian State Stipend (1988) and several prizes from the province of Vorarlberg.

Dünser has described his music as exploring 'the dark side of life, the nocturnal side, shadow images', a character evident in his orchestral hymn Der Wanderer (1986–7). Contrasts between dissonant sound clusters and quietly flowing tonal episodes in his works generate atmospheric landscapes of an almost Romantic quality. Non-musical elements (autobiographical sketches, literary references, pictures, moods, etc) have assumed an increasingly prominent role in his compositions; as he has explained, 'They enter into the work, generating a fabric with the structures immanent in it, a web of relations and mutual influences. All these grow into each other, combining to form a larger, overriding whole which may also include abrupt contrasts, fragmentation and fractures'. In addition to his original compositions, he has attracted attention for his orchestral arrangement of Schubert's Fantasie in f minor and his reconstruction of Schubert's opera Der Graf von Gleichen, which he completed and revised.

WORKS

Stage: Szene am Teich (Opernszene, J.M.R. Lenz), 1986

Orch: Doch atmet kalt mein Abend schon (E. Lasker-Schüler, J.F. von Eichendorff, C. Busta, F. Hölderlin), Mez, chbr orch, 1981–2; Meloi, 1983; Sinfonietta concertante, cl, str, 1985; Der Wanderer, hymn, orch, 1986–7 [after Hölderlin]; Nacht-Triptychon, pf, chbr orch, 1989–90; Vn Conc., 1992–3; Aubes I, sax qt, str, 1995; Aubes II, chbr orch, 1996

Chbr and solo inst: 3 Variationen nach alten Volksliedern, 3 gui, 1979–83; 3 Inventionen, pf, 1980-81; Caravallium, wind qnt, 1984; Zwieklang, vn, pf, 1985; Elegie 'An Diotima' (Str Qt no.1), 1986–93; The Host of the Air, hn, 1988; Str Qt no.2, 1988; Tage- und Nachtbücher, cl, vc, pf, 1988; Errinnerung – Monument – Nachtgesang, pf, 1989; Personae, 5 pieces, sax qt, 1990; Sestina, org, 3 perc, 1990; 4 tombeaux, gui, 1993–4; ... breeding lilacs out of the dead land ..., chbr ens, 1979–98; Threnodie, fl, cl, gui, 1999

Edns/arrs.: Schubert: Fantasie, f, orch, 1987; Suite, str, 1988 [after D. Scarlatti: 5 Cembalo-Sonaten]; Schubert: Der Graf von Gleichen, 1995–7; Debussy: 4 Préludes, fl, cl, gui, 1999

Principal publishers: Doblinger, Gravis

CHRISTIAN HEINDL

Dunstaple [Dunstable, Dunstapell, Dumstable, Donstaple, etc.], John (*b c*1390; d 24 Dec 1453). English composer. He was the most eminent of an influential group of English composers active in the first half of the 15th century: his importance was internationally recognized, both during his lifetime and long after his death.

1. Life. 2. Reputation. 3. Works. 4. Style and structure.

1. LIFE. Dunstaple's earliest surviving works date from between about 1410 and 1420, which suggests a birthdate of about 1390. The date of death derives from his epitaph in the London church of St Stephen Walbrook (destroyed in the Great Fire in 1666), which was reinstated in the church (1904) in a version adapted from Anthony Munday's transcription printed in a late edition of Stowe's Survey of London (London, 1618 and subsequent editions). John of Wheathampstead, abbot of St Albans, may have been its author, as he was of a second epitaph. From these epitaphs (printed below) we learn that he was esteemed as a mathematician and astronomer as well as a musician. He is not known to have written a treatise, but his name is attached to a tetrachordal tenor appended to two copies of a music theory treatise. Of three non-musical manuscripts naming him, the most important (GB-Ce 70) contains mostly astrological works, some of which apparently bear his scribal signature, and one of which also contains a series of good astrological drawings that may be in his hand. His astronomical calculations (for instance in GB-Ob Laud misc.674) show high competence but no more originality than any of his contemporaries.

Dunstaple's name is linked to the service of several noble or royal households, with varying degrees of substantiation. The first of these is indicated in one fascicle of an astronomy manuscript (GB-Cjc) F.25 (M.R. James 162) which bears the note of ownership 'Iste libellus pertinebat Johanni Dunstaple cñ [?cum or quondam] duci Bedfordie musico', that is, that he was musician to John, Duke of Bedford (d 1435). Although the advowson of St Stephen, Walbrook, was owned by Bedford until 1432, and the town of Dunstable is in Bedfordshire (the composer's name is the sole reason for positing a connection), the sole and indirect archival corroboration that Dunstaple was ever in the service of the duke is provided by grants of lands in Normandy, the first of them in 1437 of former Bedford lands. These grants may give substance to the theory that Dunstaple travelled abroad. It is possible that he accompanied Bedford during his regency of France from 1422, but any service with the duke must have preceded 1427/8, unless it overlapped with the patronage of the dowager Queen Joan, whose gifts and payments to Dunstaple span the period from 1427 to 1436, and probably up to her death in 1437. Tax records from 1436 indicate that he had significant income from property in Cambridgeshire, Essex and London, and a large annuity from Queen Joan, from whom he received a gift and livery in 1428. After her death he was connected with Humfrey, Duke of Gloucester: a document of 5 July 1438 describes him as 'serviteur et familier domestique' of the duke. There are other reports – increasingly plausible – of a man of this name as a gentleman of Cambridgeshire in 1436 and as owner of the Hertfordshire manor of Broadfield in 1449. Such indications of lay status may have excluded him from service as a chaplain but are not incompatible with these manifestations of royal patronage, which are silent as to function.

Dunstaple must have been acquainted at St Albans with his obituarist, Abbot John of Wheathampstead, who in turn was closely associated with Duke Humfrey and Queen Joan, and with Italian humanist circles. Humfrey's connection with Leonello d'Este may account for the presence of much of Dunstaple's music in a Ferrarese manuscript (I-MOe α.X.1.11). He had presumably resided in the parish of St Stephen Walbrook, where he was buried, and where he held rents from at least 1445. If he was married (as may be suggested by the presence of women of this name in the parish), this further eliminates clerical and monastic candidates for his identity (including John Dunstapylle, canon of Hereford 1419–40; a Benedictine at St Albans; and an Augustinian at Dunstable Priory).

The Latin epitaph in St Stephen's Walbrook described him as 'prince of music'. It included the words 'In the year 1453, on the day before Christ's birthday, the star passed over into the heavens':

> Clauditur hoc tumulo qui coelum pectore clausit
> Dunstaple Joannes. Astrorum conscius ille
> Indice novit Urania abscondita pandere coeli.

Hic vir erat tua laus, tua lux, tibi musica princeps,
Quique tuas dulces per mundum sparserat artes.
Anno Mil C. quater semel L. tria jungito Christi
Pridie natalem, sidus transmigrat ad astra.
Suscipiant proprium civem coeli sibi cives.

A second epitaph 'upon John Dunstable, an astrologian, a mathematician, a musitian, and what not' – thus headed by Weever, who reported it in his Antient Funerall Monuments (1631) as the tribute of John of Wheathampstead – begins 'This musician, another Michalus, this new Ptolemy, this younger Atlas supporting the arc of the heavens, rests beneath the ashes':

Musicus hic Michalus alter, novusque Ptholomeus,
Junior ac Athlas supportans robore celos
Pausat sub cinere; melior vir de muliere
Numquam natus erat; vicii quia labe carebat,
Et virtutibus opes possedit vincus omnes.
Cur exoptetur, sic optandoque precetur
Perpetuis annis celebratur fama Johannis
Dunstapil; in pace requiescat et hic sine fine.

2. Reputation. Dunstaple's pre-eminence was noted in about 1440 by Martin le Franc, in a famous passage implying that he had by then reached the height of his powers in so far as they were to influence continental composers. He was hailed as the chief exponent of a sweet new English style, and indeed as the founder of a new musical age. Tinctoris mentioned Dunstaple three times. He declared in 1477 that only music written during the last 40 years was considered by the learned to be worth hearing. Whereas Martin le Franc seems to have stressed the dependence of Du Fay and Binchois upon Dunstaple, Tinctoris named Ockeghem, Regis, Busnoys, Caron and Faugues as having learnt their art from all three earlier men.

Dunstaple heads the lists of celebrities given by the English Carmelite, John Hothby, and by a Spanish theorist of 1482, who followed Tinctoris in dating the 'new art' or 'great flowering' from about 1440. He is named in Crétin's Déploration on the death of Ockeghem and Eloy d'Amerval's Livre de la deablerie (1508) where, in a vision of paradise, the poet saw the great musicians, directed by Dunstaple and Du Fay, composing hymns of praise for the angels to sing. Gaffurius mentioned Dunstaple in his Practica musica (1496), quoting the tenor of Veni Sancte Spiritus (no.32) and citing him as an authority for the use of passing notes. Giovanni Del Lago referred in a letter to Spataro (1529; see Spataro C, letter 28, paragraph 12) to motet tenors by Dunstaple, specifically mentioning Veni Sancte Spiritus (no.32) and Preco preheminencie (no.29).

Dunstaple alone came to be credited with innovations for which the English school as a whole was responsible: Tinctoris had described him as 'primus inter pares' ('first among equals'). Achievements of preceding centuries also came to be ascribed to him. This arose from a misreading of Tinctoris by Sebald Heyden (1540) who, believing valid polyphony to be only a century old, ascribed its invention to Dunstaple, who thence became known as the 'inventor of counterpoint'. This led to further confusion with the 10th-century English saint Dunstan which was put right by Hawkins. The claim that Dunstaple wrote a musical treatise (as Hawkins also believed) was first made by Ravenscroft (1614), but his 'quotation' is in fact translated from the treatise Quatuor principalia of 1351, ascribed in one source to Tunstede: Ravenscroft presumably confused the latter with Dunstaple. Two copies of Johannes de Muris's Libellus cantus mensurabilis ascribe the final music example to Dunstaple (no.29): this might have appeared to apply to the whole treatise.

Most of the known references to Dunstaple were assembled by Lederer and Davey. Bukofzer presented this material in more critical fashion, but his main contribution to Dunstaple scholarship was in assembling and editing the musical works.

3. Works. Of the works listed below, no more than 22 are known to have been copied in English sources. Most of Dunstaple's extant music is known from the large Italian and German manuscript collections now at Trent (I-TRmp, TRcap: 41 pieces plus duplicates), Modena (MOe: 32), Aosta (AO: 24), Bologna (Bc: 6; Bu: 2216), Munich (D-Mbs: 6) besides smaller sources. This led to the once popular assumption that Dunstaple must have spent part of his life in Italy. Archival searches have not confirmed this hypothesis, which has also been weakened by recent discoveries of further English sources, and by new biographical connections in France and England.

52 items bear uncontradicted ascriptions to Dunstaple. The remaining works listed are either unascribed or have conflicting ascriptions in different sources. Many other works surviving in continental manuscripts are anonymous or labelled simply 'Anglicanus' or 'de Anglia'. More works by Dunstaple are undoubtedly camouflaged in this way, and his authorship of the Caput Mass formerly attributed to Du Fay cannot be ruled out. Stylistic analysis does not yet form a secure basis for attributing these to individual composers, except in rare cases. Distinct personal styles are only beginning to emerge: it is not always easy to distinguish between the continental survivals of Leonel Power and Dunstaple. The uncommonly high number of contradictory ascriptions to these two men served to fuel the long-discredited notion that they were one and the same composer. A similar identity was once proposed for Dunstaple and Benet.

Three works not printed in MB, viii (2/1970), are shown in the list of works below: a Magnificat, the ballade Je languis, and the carol I pray you all (whose text is marked 'quod J.D.'). The great bulk of the English carol repertory is anonymous, but it is highly probable, on statistical and stylistic grounds, that Dunstaple wrote some. (Note, for example, the carol-like phrase structure of the Gloria settings, nos.4 and 7.) Both the Magnificat and the ballade have also been attributed to Du Fay. Two further pieces are included in the list of works although they are apparently not extant. One is another Magnificat, described as 'Dunstabylls Exultavit' in an inventory dated 1529 from King's College, Cambridge. The other, also a late copy, is the Gaude flore virginali in five parts, with a range of 21 notes, recorded in the index of the Eton Choirbook but no longer surviving in the main part of that manuscript. (Several anonymous settings of this text survive: one which fits this description occurs in the same manuscript as another Dunstaple work, and is credibly Etonian, like the description itself, if unlike any known work by Dunstaple.) A now lost four-part motet on a Nesciens mater tenor was known to Morley, who complained that Dunstaple had 'not only divided the sentence but in the very middle of a word hath made two long rests' (Plaine and Easie Introduction, 1597). In addition to evidence of lost works from inventories, an unicum survives in a late copy in the 16th-century Henry VIII's Manuscript (GB-Lbl Add.31922).

But doubt exists even in works which bear ascriptions to Dunstaple; too little is yet known of the authority and interdependence of sources. For example, Bukofzer gave the Mass Rex seculorum to Dunstaple because he regarded Aosta as more reliable than the composite Trent sources where it is assigned to Leonel Power; yet six pieces with unique attributions in Trent should, by the same logic, come under suspicion. Parts of these sources are closely related and do not have independent authority. Bukofzer elsewhere accepted the joint authority of Aosta and Trent (Leonel) over that of Modena (Dunstaple) to give an Alma redemptoris to Leonel. But if Modena were consistent in its attributions to composers, Dunstaple would by the same reasoning lose eight of his 12 isorhythmic motets, perhaps to Leonel who apparently wrote none. Even unique, uncontradicted ascriptions may thus not be reliable. Bukofzer accepted the attribution of O rosa bella to Dunstaple, although it is stylistically suspect and probably by Bedyngham.

Very little has been done towards a chronology on the basis of musical style, and precise datings for individual pieces are elusive. There is evidence of a Preco prehemi-nencie and Veni Sancte Spiritus being performed in 1416; at least the former may have been Dunstaple's setting. Henry VI's coronation in Paris in 1422 has been suggested as the occasion for Veni Sancte Spiritus (no.32) and the Mass Da gaudiorum premia. Yet the position of the former in the Old Hall Manuscript suggests a date before 1420, and the mass, which uses a Trinity respond, may as well have been written for the marriage of Henry V and Catherine Valois on Trinity Sunday 1420, shortly after the Treaty of Troyes, to which the text is well suited. A few pieces, including Quam pulchra es (no.44), can be dated before 1430 because they are already present in manuscripts compiled by or around this date. If these are early works, it is hard to find any advance in isorhythmic treatment, declamation, and sonorous, consonant writing in his, presumably, later ones.

The most recent addition to Dunstaple's work-list is a unique example of an accompanied canon four-in-one (Bent, 1996), which originally headed the Gloria section of a royal choirbook (partially reconstructed by Bent, 1984) in a position corresponding to that of Roy Henry's Gloria in the OLD HALL MANUSCRIPT. Sonorities with 3rds are a conspicuous feature, though there are none in the final cadence.

4. STYLE AND STRUCTURE. Bukofzer defined seven categories for the stylistic classification of Dunstaple's works (most recently in NOHM, iii, 186). These are in fact partly structural, partly stylistic. They often overlap or adjoin and may be simplified as in the following discussion.

Isorhythm: a plainchant tenor is the lowest of three or four parts (except in Salve schema sanctitatis). The isorhythm may apply to the tenor only (as in the mass settings and Specialis virgo) or to all voices (as in most of the motets). Sometimes there is an introduction or postlude external to the isorhythmic structure. The motets usually have three sections with tenor reduction in the ratio 3:2:1 or 6:4:3, each subdivided into two or three taleae. The traditional conflicting texts, so alien to later declamatory principles of textual projection, are retained in all the motets except Specialis virgo, though they are often related by vivid alliteration (as in Preco preheminen-cie principe precessit/Precursor premittitur).

Plainchant basis but non-isorhythmic: the plainchant may be in any of the three parts (see list of works). If the chant is in an upper voice it is more likely to be ornamented (e.g. Ave regina celorum, Regina celi).

'Free treble' or 'ballade' style: compositions with a freely composed melodic line and two slower supporting parts form the greater part of Dunstable's output, and it is probably on these that his innovating reputation depends. Traces of plainchant paraphrase are, however, constantly turning up in apparently 'free' trebles (Kyries nos.69 and 71, Alma redemptoris, no.40, Descendi in ortum meum, no.73, Veni Sancte Spiritus, no.32).

Declamation: the music of Quam pulchra es (no.44) is conceived as a vehicle for the clear presentation of the text. Accentuation is careful, and most syllables fall simultaneously. No other piece is declamatory to this degree. Short passages in Salve regina mater mire (ex.1*a*) and Sancta Dei genitrix are textually focussed in only two and one voices respectively. Descendi in ortum meum, probably a late work, shows staggered declamation, as in ex.1*b*.

The main initiative towards linking pairs of mass movements, and eventually to unifying all movements of the Ordinary by the use of a single tenor, seems to have been taken jointly by Dunstaple and Power (though the early cyclic masses are badly plagued by conflicting ascriptions). Of the pairings presented by Bukofzer, only two bear scrutiny, and these may be remnants of complete mass cycles, dismembered by accidents of copying and survival, as can now be shown for the Mass Da gaudiorum premia, which now lacks only the Agnus Dei of a five-movement cycle. Many apparent pairings of Gloria and Credo, Sanctus and Agnus, may be accentuated by a continental scribal habit of pairing movements even when they have no intrinsic connection, and also by their failure to record many troped Kyries belonging to English masses. The natural affinity between, respectively, syllabic and melismatic movements may effectively disguise loosely unified cyclic masses. Dunstaple applied isorhythmic procedures in two of the cycles (or partial cycles) for which his authorship is uncontradicted. Another pair (nos.11 and 12), in four parts, is linked by parallel structure (vocal scoring and mensurations). The Mass Rex seculorum bases all five movements on a common tenor in different rhythmic dispositions. The tenor of the Mass (nos.71, 56–9) shows considerable melodic freedom as well. There is, as yet, no use of unifying mottos in the upper parts.

Ex.1 (a)

(b)

The techniques of composition outlined above give little impression of Dunstaple's personal dialect of the English musical language (in so far as it can be extricated from that of his contemporaries and disciples), which is evident over the whole range of his compositions.

What then characterized the contenance angloise (see MARTIN LE FRANC, and D. Fallows, Renaissance Studies, i, 1987, pp.189–208) as it was practised by Dunstaple? The melodic lines of his upper voices are made up of at least four types of movement: a basically conjunct progression with few leaps, short note values and virtually no rhythmic tautology (as in ex.2*a*). The conjunct motion may alternate with 3rds, creating interesting asymmetrical patterns, and with a similar avoidance of rhythmic tautology (ex.2*a*, bars 64–6, and ex.2*b*). Again, the movement may be largely triadic, with very little stepwise movement, and usually perceptibly slower than the more conjunct lines (as in ex.2*c*). The melodic line often unfolds very gradually, exploring all the possibilities of the notes first presented before higher or lower ones are added. A rising triadic phrase (ex.2*d*, or variants upon it), often rising to the major 6th, opens many of Dunstaple's compositions. Finally, he sometimes used a declamatory line with many repeated notes, often syllabic in texting, but not necessarily well declaimed by later standards (ex.2*e*).

In combining voices, we may find an interplay that is almost hocket-like (as in ex.3*a*). Rhythmic imitation is a natural consequence of this relationship, but is rarely extended for more than two bars. The few examples of pitch imitation are confined to one bar, even when the imitation could have been continued: Dunstaple clearly did not regard imitation as a virtue to be practised wherever possible (ex.3*b*, involving three of the four voices, is one of the most advanced examples). This kind of textural interplay is sometimes found in conjunction with the declamatory and triadic types of melodic line, as in ex.3*c*, where the declamatory style is applied to the textless Amen.

To the modern ear, the harmony is predominantly major in sound. 3rds often seem to be ends in themselves while in contemporary continental music they are still straining for resolution. The so-called 'pan-consonant' style (Quam pulchra es, no.44, and Sancta Maria non est, no.48, provide good examples) owes much to the harmonic use of the 3rd to yield maximum sonority, as well as to its melodic use in exposed positions (ex.1*a*). Dissonances are handled with care especially in relation to the tenor (those in ex.3*c* arise only between the middle two parts and result from independence of line; in ex.3*b* this independence in the upper parts is taken further: bars 70–71 are unusually rough, but the sources are unanimous in this reading).

Much of Dunstaple's music is in three parts; the isorhythmic motets are mostly for four. Lengthy duets occur within all styles (though not always in shorter pieces) and may occupy as much as a third of a composition. It is in duets that the English handling of discant is seen at its most perfect, with a high proportion of vertical 3rds and 6ths (characteristic intervals in any case between discantus and tenor parts in English compositions), but rarely more than three or four successive parallel intervals (ex.3*d*). In the duets between the upper voices of isorhythmic motets, parallel motion is often avoided by crossing of parts. Duets and full sections (marked in some manuscripts for soloists and chorus respectively) are often contrasted by the use of faster note values and harmonic rhythm for the former.

Although the two lower parts of a three-part piece may be virtually equal in range, the contratenor tends to be higher in tessitura and more rhythmically active than in average contemporary continental pieces. This may be linked with an English tendency to supply text for low-lying second upper parts that are not true contratenors in some mass settings, text which was usually ignored by continental scribes who construed them as contratenor parts.

The overwhelming majority of Dunstaple's works start in triple time. Duple-time openings are confined to four mass movements, plus the canonic Gloria, one antiphon and O rosa bella. Except in a few short pieces (and the longer, anonymous Credo, no.10), which are in triple time throughout, there is usually a change to duple time about midway, and there may also be a shorter, final return to triple time towards the end.

WORKS

Edition: John Dunstable: Complete Works, ed. M.F. Bukofzer, MB, viii (1953, rev. 2/1970 by M. Bent, I. Bent and B. Trowell adding nos. 36a, 69–73) [MB]

Title	Voices	No. in MB	Remarks
		MASS CYCLES AND INTERRELATED MASS MOVEMENTS
Gloria, Credo	4	11, 12
Gloria, Credo	3	15, 16	Isorhythmic; on 'Jesu Christe Fili Dei'
Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus	3	69, 72, 17, 18	Isorhythmic; on 'Da gaudiorum premia'; Sanctus anon.
Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei	3	70, 19–22	Cyclic mass on 'Rex seculorum'; also attrib. Leonel Power
Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei	3	71, 56–9	Cyclic mass; also attrib. Benet and Leonel Power
		SINGLE MASS MOVEMENTS
Kyrie	3	1
Kyrie	3	65	One v survives complete, the others are fragmentary (see Bent, 1981)
Gloria	3	2	?Scribal pairing with Credo no.10
Gloria	3	3	Also attrib. Leonel Power
Gloria	3	4
Gloria	3	7	Scribal pairing with Credo no.8
Gloria	3	9	Trope: 'Spiritus et alme'; ?scribal pairing with Credo no.10
Gloria	?6	—	One v survives for canon four-in-one (with rubric and attribution); one or two accopanying voices are lacking (ed. in Bent, 1996)
Credo	3	5
Credo	3	8	Scribal pairing with Gloria no.7
Credo	3	10	Anon.; scribal pairing with Gloria no.2 or Gloria no.9
Sanctus	3	6
Sanctus	3	68	Anon.; scribal pairing with Agnus Dei no.14
Sanctus	3	13	Sanctus melody Sarum no.2 in third voice
Agnus Dei	3	14	Agnus Dei melody Sarum no.5 in third voice
		OTHER SETTINGS OF SACRED LATIN TEXTS
Alma redemptoris	3	40	Marian ant for Vespers and processions; also attrib. Leonel Power
Alma redemptoris	3	60	Marian ant for Vespers and processions; also attrib. Leonel Power
Ascendit Christus	3	61	Marian ant for Assumption BVM and processions; also attrib. Forest; plainchant 'Alma redemptoris' in third voice

Title	Voices	No. in MB	Remarks
Ave maris stella	3	35	Hymn to the BVM; plainchant in third voice
Ave regina celorum, ave domina	3	37	Marian ant; plainchant in third voice
Beata Dei genitrix	3	41	Marian ant for Lauds, Vespers and processions; also attrib. Binchois
Beata mater	3	42	Marian ant for Nativity of the BVM and other occasions; also attrib. Binchois
Crux fidelis	3	39	Ant for Saturday after Trinity Sunday, sung before the Cross; plainchant in second (also first) voice
Descendi in ortum meum	4	73	Marian ant
Gaude flore virginali	5	—	Not extant; see §3 above
Gaude virgo Katerina	3	52	Seq to St Catherine
Gloria sanctorum	3	43	Seq to the BVM
Magnificat (2 versions)	3	36, 36a	Plainchant of canticle in first voice; 2nd version alternatim
Magnificat	?	—	Not extant; see §3 above
Magnificat	3	—	Also attrib. Du Fay; attrib. Dunstaple in D-Mbs
O crux gloriosa	3	53	Processional ant sung before the cross, Vespers Saturday after Trinity Sunday
Quam pulchra es	3	44	Processional ant to the BVM; 'Dunstapell' erased, 'Egidius' added, in I-AO
(see BINCHOIS, GILLES DE BINS DIT)
Regina celi	3	38	Marian ant; plainchant in first voice
Salve mater salvatoris	3	62	Seq to the BVM; also attrib. Leonel Power
Salve regina mater mire	3	45	Marian ant; trope of 'Salve regina'
Salve regina mater misericordie	3	63	Trope: 'Virgo mater'; also attrib. Leonel Power
Salve regina misericordie	3	46	Marian ant; trope: 'Virgo mater'
Sancta Dei genitrix	3	47	For the Office, All Saints'Day
Sancta Maria, non est tibi similis	3	48	Processional respond and ant to the BVM
Sancta Maria, succurre miseris	3	49	Marian ant for the Magnificat
Speciosa facta es	3	50	Processional ant to the BVM
Sub tuam protectionen	3	51	Marian ant for Vespers of the Conception and Nativity of the BVM; 2 keyboard arrs. in the Buxheim Organbook (MB, nos.51a–b)
		ISORHYTHMIC MOTETS
Albanus roseo rutilat/Quoque ferendus eras/Albanus domini laudans	3	23	To St Alban; ant 'Primus in anglorum' from rhymed Office 'Inclita martyrii' in T
Ave regina celorum, ave decus/Ave mater expers paris/Ave mundi spes Maria	3	24	To the BVM; seq 'Ave mundi spes' in T
Christe sanctorum decus/Tibi Christe splendor Patris/Tibi Christe	3	25	To St Michael; hymn 'Tibi Christe splendor Patris' in T
Dies dignus decorari/Demon dolens dum domatur/Iste confessor	3	26	To St Germanus; hymn 'Iste confessor' (Vespers for Nativity of a Confessor) in T
Gaude felix Anna/Gaude mater matris Christe/Anna parens	3	27	To St Anne; verse of respond 'Matronarum hec matrona' from rhymed Office 'Felix Anna' in T
Gaude virgo salutata/Gaude virgo singularis/Virgo mater comprobaris/ Ave gemma	4	28	Seq to BVM
Preco preheminencie/Precursor premittitur/[textless]/Inter natos mulierum	4	29	Ant 'Inter natos' from Nativity of St John the Baptist in T
Salve schema sanctitatis/Salve salus servulorum/Cantant celi agmina/ [textless]	4	30	To St Catherine; T from repetenda of respond 'Virgo flagellatur'
Specialis virgo/Specialis virgo/Salve parens	3	31	T from seq 'Post partum Virgo Maria' (Assumption of the BVM)
Veni Sancte Spiritus et emitte/Veni Sancte Spiritus et infunde/Veni Creator Spiritus/Mentes tuorum	4	32	Hymn 'Veni Creator' for Whitsunday
Veni Sancte Spiritus et emmite/Consolator optime/Sancti Spiritus assit	3	33	Hymn 'Veni Creator' and sequence 'Sancti Spiritus assis' for Whitsunday
[textless]	3	34	Bukofzer supplies editorially the text of the Marian ant 'Nesciens mater'
[textless]	?	66	Only T survives (in treatise)
Nesciens mater	4	67	Fragment of T only (rhythmicized plainchant) quoted by Morley in Plaine and Easie Introduction (London, 1597), p.178; probably from isorhythmic motet
		SECULAR AND VERNACULAR
Durer ne puis	3	64	Rondeau; also attrib. Bedyngham

Title	Voices	No. in MB	Remarks
I pray you all	2	—	Carol; anon., but attrib. 'J.D.' in earliest source; ed. in MB, iv (1952), no.15 (=65)
Je languis en piteux martire	3	—	Ballade; Dunstaple's name erased and replaced by that of Du Fay 'Dumstable' (I-TRmp 92)
O rosa bella (? L. Giustiniani)	3–6	54	Modified ballata; more plausibly attrib. Bedyngham; exceptionally widely copied and recomposed; 2 keyboard arrs. in Buxheim Organbook (MB, nos.54a–b)
Puisque m'amour	3	55	Rondeau; 1 keyboard arr. (Buxheim Organbook) and 4 different 2-part versions (in GB-Lbl Titus A XXVI) survive (MB, nos.55a–b)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HarrisonMMB
H. Davey: History of English Music (London, 1895, 2/1921/R), 45
C. Stainer: 'Dunstable and the Various Settings of "O Rosa bella"', SIMG, ii (1900–01), 1–15
V. Lederer: Über Heimat und Ursprung der mehrstimmigen Tonkunst (Leipzig, 1906)
C. Maclean: 'The Dunstable Inscription in London', SIMG, xi (1909–10), 232–49
J. Noble: 'John Dunstable (d.1453): a Line of Approach and a Point of Departure', MT, xcv (1954), 185–7
M.F. Bukofzer: 'John Dunstable: a Quincentenary Report', MQ, xl (1954), 29–49
M.F. Bukofzer: 'English Church Music of the Fifteenth Century', NOHM, iii (1960/R), 165–213
E. Kovarik: 'A Newly Discovered Dunstable Fragment', JAMS, xxi (1968), 21–33
M. and I. Bent: 'Dufay, Dunstable, Plummer: a New Source', JAMS, xxii (1969), 394–424
D.R. Howlett: 'A Possible Date for a Dunstable Motet', MR, xxxvi (1975), 81–4
B. Trowell: 'Proportion in the Music of Dunstable', PRMA, cv (1978–9), 100–41
M. Bent: Dunstaple (London, 1981)
A. Wathey and J. Stell: 'New Light on the Biography of John Dunstable?', ML, lxii (1981), 60–63
M. Bent: 'The Progeny of Old Hall: More Leaves from a Royal English Choirbook', Gordon Athol Anderson, 1929–1981, in memoriam, ed. L.A. Dittmer (Henryville, PA, 1984), 1–54
A. Wathey: Music in the Royal and Noble Households in Late Medieval England: Studies of Sources and Patronage (New York, 1989)
P. Lanzilotta: '"Novae artis fons et origo": John Dunstable nel 6° centenario della nascità', Studi musicali, xxii (1993), 279–95
J.M. Allsen: Style and Intertextuality in the Isorhythmic Motet 1400–1440 (diss., U. of Wisconsin, 1992)
D. Fallows: 'Dunstable, Bedyngham and O rosa bella', JM, xii (1994), 287–305
M. Bent: 'A New Canonic Gloria and the Changing Profile of Dunstaple', PMM, v (1996), 45–67
J.-M. Evans: 'A Unique Cantus Firmus Usage in a 15th Century Mass Movement', EMc, xxvi (1998), 469–77

MARGARET BENT

Duny, Egide. See DUNI, EGIDIO.

Duo. A term frequently applied, in preference to DUET (of which it is the exact French equivalent), to instrumental compositions for two performers. It is sometimes applied to vocal duets in the Renaissance and early Baroque periods (see BICINIUM). In German a strict terminological distinction is made between 'Duo', now used only of instrumental works, and 'Duett', which since the 17th century has denoted a piece for two voices, with or without instrumental accompaniment. The distinction has its roots in the development, traceable back to early polyphony, of works for like-sounding voices or instruments (both formerly designated 'Duett') and in the rise, in the continuo era, of works for accompanied solo instrument. The latter led to a flowering of the instrumental form during the 18th century. The term 'duo' is sometimes coupled with an adjective, for example in Weber's Grand duo concertant op.48 for clarinet and piano and J.-F. Mazas' sets of Duos brillants opp.64–5 for two violins; it is also often used to refer to the performers who play music for two instruments.

□

Duo-Art. Trade name for a REPRODUCING PIANO introduced by the Aeolian Co. in 1913. See AEOLIAN (i).

Duodecima (It.; Ger. Duodezime). See TWELFTH (i).

Duodrama. By extension of the term MONODRAMA, a two-character MELODRAMA, sometimes with a chorus, using spoken words alternating with or set over music, popular from the 1770s to the 1790s in the German theatre. Two well-known examples are Georg Benda's Ariadne auf Naxos and Medea (both 1775).

ANNE DHU McLUCAS

Duparc, Elisabeth ['Francesina'] (d 1773). French soprano. Trained in Italy, she sang in several operas at Florence in 1731 and 1734–5. In 1736 she was engaged by the Opera of the Nobility for London, making her King's Theatre début in Hasse's Siroe, and singing in operas by Broschi, Pescetti, Veracini and Duni. The following season (1737–8) she appeared in operas by Pescetti and Veracini, the Handel pasticcio Alessandro Severo and Handel's new operas Faramondo (Clotilde) and Serse(Romilda). From then she was known almost exclusively as a Handel singer. She was his leading soprano at the King's Theatre in early 1739 and 1744–5, at Lincoln's Inn Fields in 1739–40 and 1740–41 and at Covent Garden in early 1744 and 1746. She sang in many oratorios (including the first performances of Handel's Saul (Michal) and Israel in Egypt), probably in Giove in Argo (1739), in the Ode for St Cecilia's Day and L'Allegro (1739–40) Imeneo (Rosmene) and Deidamia (title role) in 1740–41, Semele (title role) and Joseph and his Brethren (Asenath) in 1744, Hercules (Iole) and Belshazzar (Nitocris) in 1745 and the Occasional Oratorio in 1746. She also sang in both the English and bilingual versions of Acis and Galatea, the title roles in Esther and Deborah and in Alexander's Feast and Messiah. At the second performance of Israel in Egypt (11 April 1739) Handel added three Italian arias and one English aria for her. Though seldom heard at concerts, she had a part in a 'New Eclogue' by Veracini at the New Haymarket Theatre on 9 March 1741 and sang Handel arias at the annual Musicians Fund benefit at Covent Garden on 10 April 1745. In January 1752 she took part in a concert at the Great Room, Dean Street. She was also a painter.

Francesina's bright soprano improved greatly under Handel's tuition and she became a worthy successor to Strada and even Cuzzoni. Many of her arias resemble

Elisabeth Duparc: mezzotint (1737) by John Faber after George Knapton

Cuzzoni's in their demand for rapid and agile decoration, frequent trills and a melodious warbling style; Handel gave her several bird songs. His high opinion of her powers of characterization and all-round musicianship is clear from the many superb parts he wrote for her. Burney ranked her as a singer of the second class, but also wrote of 'her lark-like execution', 'a light, airy, pleasing movement, suited to [her] active throat'. Her compass was c′ to b″.

WINTON DEAN

Duparc [Fouques Duparc], (Marie Eugène) Henri (b Paris, 21 Jan 1848; d Mont-de-Marsan, 12 Feb 1933). French composer. At the Jesuit College of Vaugirard in Paris he had César Franck as his piano teacher, and while studying law he found time for composition lessons from Franck, writing and in some cases publishing a number of works which he later destroyed. Of five mélodies for voice and piano, published in 1868, he wished only Soupir and Chanson triste preserved; but Sérénade, Romance de Mignon and Le galop were later reclaimed and, though not forming part of the strict canon of the composer's works, provide interesting evidence of the influences of Gounod, Liszt and Wagner. A duet, La fuite, was later published with the composer's assent. Of his orchestral essays, a symphonic poem Lénore after Bürger's ballad, written in 1875, was performed on several occasions at the time, and the nocturne Aux étoiles is all that was eventually preserved of a Poème nocturne performed in 1894. An opera Roussalka based on Pushkin was never finished; when Duparc abandoned composition in 1885, his completed and acknowledged artistic legacy consisted simply of 13 songs composed between 1868 and 1884.

The cause of his abandoning composition was a neurasthenic condition, no doubt of physical origin but predominantly psychological in its manifestations of crippling hyperaesthesia. Far from being insane, Duparc led a very quiet but otherwise normal life, at first in south-western France and later in Switzerland, devoted to his wife and family; he continued to read, to interest himself in music (but not to compose) and to execute watercolours, pastels and sepia drawings until he became blind. A visit to Lourdes in 1906 with Paul Claudel and Francis Jammes was the occasion of an experience that greatly increased his already deeply religious cast of mind, and his private journal witnesses to the sincerity and intensity of his inner life. A characteristic entry dated 1916 refers to his blindness: 'Have I not loved too well the beauty of shapes and colours, and does not God wish me to live from now on a more interior life concerned solely with Him?' He had a very French wit, often biting but never cruel, and his characteristic humour may be seen in a letter to his close friend Ernest Chausson, who was agonizing over the composition of his opera Le roi Arthus:

> Since you've got that fearsome old battle-axe Guinevere by the short hairs, give her a good shaking; when you've gutted her properly, you'll find it easier to settle the quarrel with her old cuckold of a husband.

Duparc lived on, blind and latterly paralysed, to 1933.

The extreme sensibility which was to cripple him psychologically at the age of 36 was reflected in Duparc's attitude to music from the outset. His admiration, like that of all Franck's pupils, was directed primarily to Bach, Beethoven (especially the Ninth Symphony and last quartets) and, among contemporaries, Wagner. Duparc heard Wagner performances in Munich in 1869 and, as Liszt's guest, met Wagner the same year at Weimar. In 1879 he visited Bayreuth with Chabrier, one of a number of visits both earlier and later. He even tried to persuade Wagner to abandon the realistic production of his works in favour of a simple symbolism – Brünnhilde, he believed, should be surrounded at the end of Die Walküre by a simple 'circle of light' rather than stage flames. In this, as in other aesthetic matters, he was in advance of his times. He was among the earliest French admirers of Tolstoy's War and Peace, of Ibsen's plays, of French primitive paintings and of oriental art, not only Japanese prints but Japanese theatre and Cambodian dancing, both of which he saw at the Paris exhibition of 1900. He was a great Dante enthusiast, an early champion of Baudelaire and Verlaine, and deeply attached to Mistral's poetry.

The foundation of Duparc's artistic sensibility was not far removed from that of his malady. The criterion suggested by his 'je veux être ému' is the same as that of Lekeu's 'pour moi l'art est infiniment sentimental', and the emotional temperature of the Franck circle first attracted and then further stimulated these precariously balanced addicts of feeling. Duparc's songs are preserved from the mawkishness that sometimes mars Franck's own music, and more often that of his weaker disciples, by the innate taste shown in his choice of poems (confirmed by his enthusiasm for the austere virtues of primitive painting and Japanese theatre), and by the solidity and painstaking finish of his craftsmanship, the result, in many cases, of countless revisions. Even when the form of a song, or its accompaniment, suggests the romance de salon, Duparc transcends the genre. The rippling chordal figuration of Chanson triste, for instance, clothes an ambitious and beautifully designed harmonic structure (e.g. the excursion from the tonic E♭ major, through G♭ (F♯), A major, D major-minor back to E♭). In L'invitation au voyage the gently insistent oscillation over an open 5th is contrasted with the complete stillness of the refrain, reintroduced in the last (major) verse against an echo from the first (minor). Many of the songs are strophic with variations, and the complexity of the vocal line depends on the nature of the poem. It is simplest in Théophile Gautier's ballade Au pays où se fait la guerre, where the dramatic element is more naive and more theatrical than in Le manoir de Rosemonde, where the syncopated dotted rhythm and interrupted cadences give this interior drama a sinister character, enhanced by the concentrated rhythmic and harmonic tensions of the final verse (whose postlude recalls that of Schumann's Ich hab' im Traum geweinet). The shifting chromaticism produced by the enharmonic modulations of Soupir, though sustained by a single rhythmic pattern, shows a distinct Wagnerian influence. This is even clearer in the minor 9th chords of Elégie and the deliberate 'Tristanisms' of Extase.

Only one of Duparc's songs, La vague et la cloche, was designed for the orchestra, and it is not as strictly unified as the songs composed with piano accompaniment. The composer orchestrated the accompaniments of Chanson triste, Au pays où se fait la guerre, L'invitation au voyage, Le manoir de Rosemonde, Phidylé, Testament and La vie antérieure; but although he complained to Chausson that he 'would never learn to write well for the piano', the piano versions are in each case preferable. Their chief fault lies in a readiness to fill out harmonies by broken chord figuration (Phidylé, Testament), perhaps to counteract the static character of the bass lines as well as to provide that fictitious amplitude that was the bane of Franck's pupils in general. A fondness for harmonic progressions based on consecutive 5ths (as in Lamento) did not exclude carefully worked contrapuntal detail in the inner voices of the accompaniments. In his handling of French prosody Duparc was no more scrupulous than other French composers of the day, as his setting of Chanson triste shows, but his feeling for poetic atmosphere and his ability to communicate it in music was unequalled among his contemporaries. He was unique in giving the French mélodie a musical substance, an emotional intensity and a unity of poem and music that were not to be equalled until the songs of Fauré's maturity.

WORKS

orchestration by composer; all printed works published in Paris

Editions: Cinq mélodies, op.2 (Paris, 1869) [C]
Recueil de mélodies (Paris, 1894, rev. 2/1894) [R]
Nouvelle édition complète (Paris, 1911) [N]

SONGS

Chanson triste (H. Cazalis), E♭, 1868(?9), C[4]; final version (1902), N[9]; orch version (1912)
Soupir (S. Prudhomme), d, 1869(?8), C[1]; final version (1902), N[11]
Romance de Mignon (V. Wilder, after Goethe: Kennst du das Land), E, 1869, C[3]
Sérénade (G. Marc), G, 1869, C[2]
Le galop (Prudhomme), g, 1869, C[5]; ed. C. Panzéra (1948)
Au pays où se fait la guerre (T. Gautier), f, ?1869–70, Journal de musique, ed. A. Gouzien, i (1877), no.51, suppl.; orchd *c*1876; final version N[13]; rev. orch version ?1911–13 (n.d.) [orig. title Absence, intended for opera Roussalka]
L'invitation au voyage (C. Baudelaire), c, 1870, R[1], N[1]; orch version ?1892–?5 (n.d.)
La vague et la cloche (F. Coppée), e, 1871, orch acc.; R[3] (1st edn. arr. pf by d'Indy, 2nd edn. arr. pf by composer), N[3]; orch version (*c*1913)
Elégie (T. Moore, trans. ? E. MacSwiney), f, 1874, Journal de Musique, ii (1878), no.85, suppl.; final version (1902), N[10]
Extase (J. Lahor), D, 1874, ?rev. 1884, R[4], N[4]
Le manoir de Rosemonde (R. de Bonnières), d, 1879(?82), R[6], N[6]; orchd by 1912 (n.d.)
Sérénade florentine (Lahor), F, ?1880–81(?83); R[2], N[2]
Phidylé (Leconte de Lisle), A♭, 1882, R[5], N[5]; orch version 1891–2 (1909)
Lamento (Gautier), d, 1883(?5), R7, N7
Testament (A. Silvestre), c, 1883(?5), R[8], N[8]; orch version 1900–01, rev. 1911–13 (n.d.)
La vie antérieure (Baudelaire), E♭, 1884 (1902), N[12]; orch version 1911–13 (n.d.)
Recueillement (?), *c*1886, inc., destroyed

OTHER VOCAL

Roussalka (op, 3, Duparc, after Pushkin), ?1879–?95; inc., destroyed
Benedicat vobis Dominus, motet, STB, 1882 (1920)
La fuite, duet, S, T, pf, 1871 (1903)

ORCHESTRAL

Suite de valses (Ländler), by 1874, perf. Paris, Société National, 24 Jan 1874; MS orch pts. in archives of Editions Salabert
Poème nocturne: 1 Aux étoiles, 2 Lutins et follets, 3 Duo: L'aurore, 1874; perf. Société National, 11 April 1874; pts.2–3 lost; pt.1 rev. 1910 (1911), arr. pf (1911)
Lénore, G, sym. poem, 1875 (?1894–5)
Danse lente, C (intended for Roussalka), ?1892; MS copy by E. Ansermet in archives of Editions Salabert
Prelude and fugue, chorale, org, by J.S. Bach, transcr. orch; MS formerly in private collection of E. Ansermet

OTHER INSTRUMENTAL

Sonate, a, pf, vc, 1867; MS in private collection of composer's daughter, Mme d'Armagnac
6 rêveries, pf, ?1864–5, printed, not pubd; copy in collection of Mme d'Armagnac
[5] Feuilles volantes, pf, op.1, ?1867–9 (1869)
Beaulieu, pf, 1869; MS in collection of Mme d'Armagnac
2 preludes and fugues, org, by J.S. Bach, transcr. 2 pf (1903)
6 org works by C. Franck, transcr. 2 pf (1908)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Boîte à Musique: 'Sur les mélodies d'Henri Duparc', Courrier musical, iii (1900), 1
O. Séré [J. Poueigh]: Musiciens français d'aujourd'hui (Paris 1911, 2/1921)
F.L. Merle: Psychologie et pathologie d'un artiste, Henri Duparc (Bordeaux, 1933)
C. Oulmont: Musique de l'amour: Ernest Chausson et la 'bande à Franck' et Henri Duparc ou 'de l'invitation au voyage à la vie éternelle' (Paris, 1935/R)
G. Ferchault: Henri Duparc: une amitié mystique (Paris, 1944)
S. Morthcote: The Songs of Henri Duparc (London, 1949)
H. Schouten: Drie Franse liederencomponisten: Duparc, Fauré, Debussy (Amsterdam, 1950)
M. Cooper: French Music from the Death of Berlioz to the Death of Fauré (London, 1951)
F. Noske: La mélodie française de Berlioz à Duparc (Amsterdam and Paris, 1954; Eng. trans., rev., 1970)
Y. Gérard, ed.: 'Lettres de Henri Duparc à Ernest Chausson', RdM, xxxviii (1956), 125
M.-L. Sérieyx, ed.: Vincent d'Indy, Henri Duparc, Albert Roussel: lettres à Auguste Sérieyx (Lausanne, 1961)
R. Stricker: Henri Duparc et ses mélodies (diss., Paris Conservatoire, 1961)
L. Davies: César Franck and his Circle (London, 1970/R)
N. Van Der Elst: Henri Duparc: l'homme et son oeuvre (diss., U of Paris, Lille, 1972) [incl. complete catalogues of works and correspondence and comprehensive bibliography]
B. Meister: Nineteenth-Century French Song: Fauré, Chausson, Duparc, and Debussy (Bloomington, IN, 1980)
J.-L. Rigault: 'Les mélodies de Duparc', Autour de la mélodie française (Rouen, 1987), 71–86 [incl. list of works]
R. Stricker: Les mélodies de Duparc (Arles, 1996)

MARTIN COOPER

Duphly [Dufly, Du Phly etc.], Jacques (b Rouen, 12 Jan 1715; d Paris, 15 July 1789). French harpsichordist and composer. He was the son of Jacques-Agathe Duphly and Marie-Louise Boivin of the parish of St Eloi, whose registers supply the little that is known of his early life. On 11 September 1734 'le sieur Dufliq, organist of the cathedral of Evreux' applied for a position at St Eloi; the register goes on to make clear that he had been trained by Dagincourt at Rouen, went to Evreux (*c*1732) for what must have been his first appointment (he was only 19 when he resigned from it) and returned to his native parish. His tenure at St Eloi began inauspiciously with his being shut out of the organ loft by his aged predecessor; but the church quickly changed the locks. To St Eloi he added Notre Dame de la Ronde in 1740, his sister Marie-Anne-Agathe filling in when duties conflicted. He left both appointments in 1742 and moved to Paris; according to the clerk of St Eloi, it was affaires that drew him there, but other reports suggest that it was the realization that he would do better as a specialist of the harpsichord in Paris than as an organist in Rouen. Pierre-Louis Daquin, son of the organist, said of 'Duflitz' in 1752:

> For some time he was organist at Rouen, but doubtless finding that he had a greater gift for the harpsichord, he abandoned his first instrument. One may suppose that he did well, since he passes in Paris for a very good harpsichordist. He has much lightness of touch and a certain softness which, sustained by ornaments, marvellously render the character of his pieces.

Marpurg (1754) remarked that 'Duphly, a pupil of Dagincourt, plays the harpsichord only, in order, as he says, not to spoil his hand with the organ. He lives in Paris, where he instructs the leading families'.

His reputation seems to have reached its peak in the 1750s and 60s. Marpurg's Raccolta delle più nuove composizioni di clavicembalo, ii (1757), contains a pair of rondeaux from Duphly's first book. In 1764 Walsh brought out an edition of his second book; in 1765 the 20-year-old Richard Fitzwilliam was studying with him. That year Pascal Taskin, the harpsichord maker, reckoned 'Dufly' among the best teachers in Paris, along with Armand-Louis Couperin, Balbastre and Le Grand. The article on fingering in Rousseau's Dictionnaire (1768) contains rules which the author presents 'with confidence, because I have them from M Dupli, excellent harpsichord teacher who possesses above all perfection in fingering' (though either Duphly or Rousseau overlooked the fact that these 'rules' were lifted word for word from Rameau's, in his Pièces de clavecin of 1724). The titles and dedications of Duphly's pieces show him to have been a part of the inner circle of professional and aristocratic connoisseurs; yet he seems to have been unambitious and content with a simple life. D'Aquin wrote that 'in general his pieces are sweet and amiable: they take after their father'. Although this represents a curious judgment of his music, which is more often flashy and energetic, it may reflect a nature that allowed him to drift gently from view to a point of obscurity where it became necessary to inquire in the Journal général de la France (27 November 1788) 'what has become of M Duphlis, former harpsichord teacher in Paris, where he was in 1767. If he no longer exists, one would like to know his heirs, to whom there is something to communicate'. When he died, the next year, no heirs appeared; even his sister could not be located. But his will and the inventory of his effects show that he had been living in modest comfort in a small apartment overlooking the garden in the Hôtel de Juigné. His dedication of his last pieces to the Marchioness of Juigné, 21 years before, did not exempt him from paying 300 livres a year for rent. Evidently Duphly never married: his chief legatee was his manservant of 30 years. There was not even a harpsichord.

Dagincourt may have been Duphly's teacher, but Rameau's harpsichord music served as Duphly's chief model. Rameau's shadow falls on themes (the courante La Boucon in book 1 begins like Rameau's E minor courante, transformed in metre) and on whole pieces (Les colombes in book 2 – which D'Aquin must have meant when he said of Duphly's music: 'On connaît les tourterelles, qui affectent le coeur' – is almost a condensed paraphrase of La timide from Rameau's Pièces de clavecin en concerts, 1741). Scarlatti's fast 3/8 sonatas have their echo in La De Caze (book 2) and La De la Tour (book 3), and Dagincourt (or Couperin, whom Dagincourt imitated) can be felt in a rondeau in C (book 1) and La De Brissac (book 2), among other pieces.

Book 3 mixes solos and two sonata-like groups with violin accompaniment; the latter are singularly unimaginative in their use of the violin, which seems to have been more a hindrance than a resource. Two solo groups in F minor and D are excellent, however. The first consists of a sombre rondeau in bass-viol range called La Forqueray after the late virtuoso of that instrument, a brilliant chaconne of 285 bars, and a savage tirade entitled La Médée and marked 'vivement et fort'. In the 12 years between books 3 and 4 fashion passed Duphly by: book 4 contains but six half-hearted essays in Alberti-bass style.

WORKS

Edition: Jacques Duphly: Pièces pour clavecin, Le pupitre, i, ed. F. Petit (Paris, 1967)

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

Kbd: Pièces de clavecin (1744/R); Second livre de pièces de clavecin (1748/R), as A Collection of Lessons for the Harpsichord (London, 1764); Troisième livre de pièces de clavecin (1756/R), 3 pieces ed. J. Volant-Panel (Paris, 1961); Quatrième livre de pièces de clavecin (1768/R), from which La de Drummond, arr. 1v, hpd as Rondeau gracieux, in Collection lyrique (1774)

Pedagogical: figured bass method, 1765, attrib. Duphly by R. Fitzwilliam, GB-Cfm

Some anon. kbd pieces in F-Pn D.8170 (incl. L'orageuse, ed. in Jean-Philippe Rameau: Oeuvres complètes, ed. C. Saint-Saëns and others, i, Paris, 1895) may be by Duphly

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P.-L. D'Aquin: Lettres sur les hommes célèbres … sous le règne de Louis XV (Paris, 1752, 2/1753)

F.W. Marpurg: Historisch-kritische Beyträge zur Aufnahme der Musik, i (Berlin, 1754–5/R), 459

J.-J. Rousseau: 'Doigter', Dictionnaire de musique (Paris, 1768/R; Eng. trans., 1771, 2/1779/R)

L. Panel: 'Jacques Du Phly', Etudes normandes, nos.13–16 (1954–5), 278–82

F. Lesure: Introduction to Jacques Duphly: Pièces pour clavecin, ed. F. Petit (Paris, 1967)

F. Petit: 'Sur l'oeuvre de Jacques Duphly', Courrier musical de France, no.23 (1968), 188–90

B. Gustafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780 (Oxford, 1990)

DAVID FULLER

Dupin, Paul (b Roubaix, 14 Aug 1865; d Paris, 6 March 1949). French composer. Descended from a family of German musicians on his mother's side, and the son of a Breton businessman, he intended to make a career in industry. He attended the Ecole des Arts et Métiers in Toulouse, and then took a position in a Toulouse factory. However, his love of music was such that he resigned his post in 1886 and settled in Paris to study music. He worked for some months with Emile Durand, but tired of Durand's reactionary attitude and was then entirely self-taught. In 1894 he took a post with the Compagnie des Chemins der Fer de l'Ouest, and although his work for the railway company was very demanding it did provide some financial security. He was discovered around 1908 by Romain Rolland and others, attained some celebrity, and several of his works were published. Arising as it did from his curiosity value, Dupin's fame faded quickly, and since he had resigned from the railway to devote himself to composition, the rest of his life was spent in a state of poverty not far from destitution.

Dupin forged his own musical language, unrelated to any schools or aesthetic currents. Attracted by polyphony, he employed a proliferation of melodic lines and a highly charged, contorted harmony that obeyed no rules. As a result, his style is totally original. However, there were latent shortcomings in this approach, and they proved a severe handicap in the construction of his large-scale instrumental works, where his writing sometimes verges on the incoherent. These deficiencies, together with his often inadequate skill in instrumentation, have prevented his works from finding recognition despite some genuinely interesting ideas. The best of Dupin's composition is in his mélodies, and especially in his choral canons, about 370 in all, inspired by diverse subjects and written for ensembles of two to 12 voices.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Lyszelle (drame lyrique, 3, P. Dupin), 1901–4, unperf. [1st version entitled Marcelle]

Orch: Symphonie d'Erigne (Sym. no.2), 1931

Choral: Les suppliantes (orat., after Aeschylus), 1912, unfinished; Hymne aux alliés (Symphonie populaire à la gloire de la Belgique), solo vv, chorus, orch, 1914–22; Oremus pro pontefice, chorus, fl, str, 1928; 3 répons aux matines du samedi saint, Mez, chorus, *c*1930

Vocal canons: Gerbes et faisceaux; Les frises du Nil (1923); Daou baradoz breiz (1926); Tri baradoz breiz (1927); Le chant de ma bouilloire (1932)

Chbr: Poëmes, 2 vn, va, vc (1909); Pastorale (Sabine no.1: dans le jardinet), 2 vn, va, vc, pf (1910); Sonate, vn, pf (1912); Rythmes berceurs, vc, pf (1914); Trio, vn, vc, pf (1914); Sonatine, va, pf, 1922; Sonatine, vc, pf, 1922; Pièces dialoguées, esquisses instrumentales d'après 6 peintres français. 1.: Watteau, fl, vc, hp (1923); Le jardin de l'évêché de Blois (no.1), vn, vc, pf (1930)

Songs (1v, pf): 6 légendes françaises anciennes et modernes (1893); 12 mélodies (1909); 3 légendes (P. Dupin, M. Tinayre, E. Hollande) (1913); 3 chansons dans le caractère populaire (Dupin) (1913); 7 noëls familiers (Etienne, Dupin) (1928); 3 noëls (1935)

Pf: Pastels et fusains; Dans les monts d'Annam, scènes, 1 and 2 pf; L'offrande à la danse, pf 4 hands; Jean-Christophe (1908); Sonata (1912); Le beau jardin, pf 4 hands (1912); 3 esquisses fuguées (1913); 3 esquisses fuguées, set 2 (1914); Dentelles (1927)

Principal publishers: Deiss, Durand, Senart

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (G. Ferchault)

R. Rolland: 'Paul Dupin', BSIM, xii (1908), 1237–50

A. Coeuroy: La musique française moderne (Paris, 1922), 107–12

C. Koechlin: 'Paul Dupin', ReM, iv/1–3 (1923), 227–41

M. Fleury: 'Un compositeur à redécouvrir: Paul Dupin', Revue Internationale de musique française, no.18 (1985), 111–30

JACQUES TCHAMKERTEN

Dupla (Lat.: 'duple'). In early music theory, a term denoting the ratio 2:1. In harmonic theory this represented the octave, which could be produced by two notes on the monochord whose respective lengths of vibrating string were in the ratio 2:1. In the system of PROPORTIONAL NOTATION of the late Middle Ages and Renaissance, proportio dupla indicates a diminution in the relative value of each note shape in the ratio 2:1. In modern practice, duple time has two beats to the bar.

PETER WRIGHT

Duplessis [Duplessy, Plessis, Plessy]. French family of composers and musicians. Several musicians of this name were active in France between the 17th and 19th centuries. In most cases their relationship with each other, if any, is obscure.

(1) Jean-Baptiste Duplessis (fl 1687–98). Harpsichordist and opera director. In October 1687 he signed a three-year contract with the director of the Lyons Opéra to accompany and coach the singers; his annual salary was 700 livres. He was still in Lyons on 4 May 1692 when he witnessed the baptism of dancer Guillaume La Bruyère's son in the church of Saint Nizier. In 1697–8 he was involved in directing operas in Marseilles (including productions of Lully's Persée), and in August 1698 he directed an opera at Avignon.

(2) Joseph Duplessis (fl 1697). Composer. A manuscript of a sarabande and air for two instruments dated 1697 (D-SWl) bears his name.

(3) Duplessis [l'aîné] (fl 1699–1748). Violinist and composer. He was in the Paris Opéra orchestra from 1704 to 1748. His salary in 1738 was 500 livres. According to Fétis he composed two volumes of violin sonatas; these appear to be no longer extant. He was probably the Duplessis who contributed 82 chansons (for one to three voices, with or without basso continuo) to Ballard's Recueil d'airs sérieux et à boire de différents auteurs pour l'année between 1699 and 1721, some of which reappear in the series Nouveau recueil de chansons choisies between 1724 and 1732. An air à boire by 'Mr Duplessis' published in Recueil de cantates françoises et italienne et d'airs serieux et à boire choisis de differens Autheurs (1726) may also be the work of Duplessis l'aîné.

(4) François Duplessis (fl 1709–40). Engraver. He engraved François Couperin's four books of Pièces de clavecin (1713–30) and Leçons de ténèbres (1715), Nicolas Bernier's fifth and sixth books of cantatas (1715, 1718), Campra's fifth book of motets (1720), Marais's Pièces de viole (1686–1725) and Corelli's opus 1–4 (engravings undated). He was among the first to place page turns conveniently for instrumentalists.

(5) Duplessis (fl 1722–44). Singer (taille=tenor). He entered the Paris Opéra chorus in 1711 and received an annual salary of 500 livres. He officially stopped singing in 1733 and collected tickets at the door of the Opéra until Easter 1744 when he received a pension; however, chorus lists in contemporary librettos show that he remained active as a singer well after 1733: he was involved in the 1744 production of Rameau's Dardanus. Eastwood suggests that he may have been the composer of the 82 chansons attributed to (3) Duplessis l'aîné.

(6) Duplessis [le cadet] (fl 1725–56). Violinist, viola player and composer, brother of (3) Duplessis l'aîné. He was a member of the Paris Opéra orchestra from 1725 until at least 1756. He entered as a violinist at a salary of 450 livres, but by 1751 was listed as principal viola, in receipt of 500 livres. In that year he was also employed at the Concert Spirituel. By December 1749 he had retired from the position of maître de musique at the Opéra; how long he had held this appointment is unclear. On 22 July 1734 the Paris Opéra staged Les fêtes nouvelles, an opéra-ballet comprising a prologue and three entrées with music by Duplessis le cadet and libretto by Massip. The famous dancer Marie-Anne Cupis de Camargo was involved; the singers included Pierre de Jélyotte and Mlles Antier and Eremans. According to the Mercure de France, the work was withdrawn after three performances. Two motets (Jubilate Deo, Domine non est exaltamus) and 'une grande symphonie à timbales et trompettes' by Duplessis le cadet were performed at the Concert Spirituel between 1749 and 1753; the latter received several performances. The chanson Amour, je ne songe qu'à rire (Mercure de France, September 1736) was probably another of his works.

(7) Lenoir Duplessis (b Paris, 1754). Composer. He was known as 'Chevalier Lenoir Duplessis'. On 27 January 1779 a one-act 'melodrame pantomime et ballet héroique', L'Amour enchaïné par Diane, was staged at the Théâtre des Eleves pour la Danse de l'Opéra. Lenoir Duplessis provided the music for the melodrama; the ballet music was by others. In 1780 Duplessis compiled Don Carlos, ou La belle invisible, incorporating music from Italian operas.

Other musicians of the same name include Mathurin Duplessis (d 1656), who was a hautbois du roi and hautbois de Poitou in the grand écurie and was based at Saint-Germain-en-Laye. The brothers Jean Duplessis (fl 1704–13) and Charles Duplessis (fl 1704–13) were both violinists in the Paris Opéra orchestra, each earning a salary of 400 livres. It is conceivable that one of these was (3) Duplessis l'aîné. A singer named Duplessis was a chorus member at the Paris Opéra, entering in 1732. She sang the role of Junon in the 1737 revival of Lully's Cadmus. Another was a soprano chorus member in the theatre of the Opéra-Comique; her two-year contract expired on 3 March 1833.

A further work labelled 'Plessis' which cannot be attributed specifically to any of the above composersis a bassoon concerto (located in B-Bc); the score is undated but indicates that the work was performed 'au Concert des Amateurs de Napoléon-Ville'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookSF; EitnerQ; FétisB; MGG1 ('Plessius'; E. Borrel)
J.-B. Durey de Noinville: Histoire du théâtre de l'Académie royale de musique en France depuis son établissement jusqu'à present (Paris, 1753, 2/1757/R)
L. de la Laurencie and G. de Sainte-Foix: 'Contribution à l'histoire de la symphonie française vers 1750', Année musicale, i (1911/R), 1–123
L. Vallas: Un siècle de musique et de théâtre à Lyon 1688–1789 (Lyons, 1932/R)
C. Pierre: Histoire du Concert spirituel, 1725–1790 (Paris, 1975)
C. Massip: 'Musique et musiciens à Saint-Germain-en-Laye (1651–1683)', RMFC, xvi (1976), 117–52
G. Sadler: 'Rameau's Singers and Players at the Paris Opéra: a Little-Known Inventory of 1738', EMc, xi (1983), 453–67
A.C. Eastwood: Stylistic Development and Melodic Transmission in some Secular Song Books published in Paris (1695–1740) (diss., U. of Western Australia, 1987)
J. de La Gorce: 'L'orchestre de l'Opéra et son évolution de Campra à Rameau', RdM, lxxvi (1990), 23–43
M. Benoit: Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1992)

NICHOLAS ANDERSON/SHIRLEY THOMPSON

Du Plessis, Hubert (Lawrence) (b Malmesbury district, Cape Province, 7 June 1922). South African composer. He studied at Stellenbosch University (1940–43), privately with W.H. Bell for composition (1942–3), and with Friedrich Hartmann in Grahamstown (1944–5), where he was later a lecturer at Rhodes University College (1946–51). In 1951 he went to London on a PRS scholarship to the RAM and studied composition with Alan Bush and Howard Ferguson (1951–4). From 1955 to 1957 he taught at both the universities of Cape Town and Stellenbosch; in 1958 he was appointed to a full-time post at Stellenbosch, where he remained until his retirement in 1982, and from where he received an honorary doctorate in 1989.

Du Plessis is renowned as a versatile musician, and in addition to lecturing and composing is well-known as a pianist, harpsichordist and writer. Although a successful composer of instrumental works, he feels himself to be essentially a vocal composer. He at first rejected the use of South African elements in his music, but from 1958 he used Afrikaans and Cape Malay folksongs on account of their symbolic significance. Although he has written serial works, his music does not sever connection with traditional tonality. Vocally-rooted melody is a salient feature of his essentially neo-Romantic music, whether serial or free, and his music displays emotions ranging from tenderness to violence. A deep sense of fatality often manifests itself, from the Seven Preludes (1956), dedicated to the memory of the pianist Noel Mewton-Wood, to the Sonata for solo cello (1991), the second movement of which has the Gregorian chant inscription Media vita in morte sumus. Further information is given in E. Aitchison: 'Hubert du Plessis', Composers in South Africa Today, ed. P. Klatzow (Cape Town, 1987), 33–75.

WORKS
(selective list)

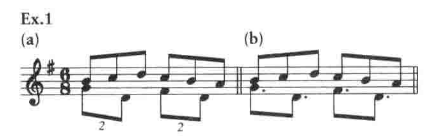
Choral and orch: Sym., op.14, 1954; Slamse beelde, op.21, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1959; Die dans van die reën, op.22, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1960; Music after 3 Paintings by Henri Rousseau, op.24, orch, 1962; Suid-Afrika: nag en daeraad, op.29, S, chorus, orch, 1966; En boplaas sing koortal, op.32, SATB, 1970; Requiem aeternam, op.39, chorus, 1975; Festival Suite, op.44, chbr orch, 1978; Krokos, op.48, SATB, 1983; Hugenote-kantate, op.51, solo vv, SATB, orch, 1986–7

Chbr and solo inst: 4 Pf Pieces, op.1, 1945; 6 Miniatures, op.3, pf, 1949; Sonata no.1, op.8, pf, 1952; Str Qt, op.13, 1953; 7 Preludes, op.18, pf, 1956; Pf Trio, op.20, 1960; Inspiré par mes chats, suite, op.27, pf, 1964; 4 Pieces, op.28, pf, 1965; When I was a Child, suite, op.33, pf, 1971; Sonata no.2, op.40, pf, 1975; 10 Pf Pieces for Children and Young People, op.41, 1975; Sonata, op.43, va, 1977; Sonata, op.52, vc, 1991

Songs (for 1v, pf): 4 herfsliedere (Du Plessis), 1944; 5 liedekens (P. van Ostaijen), op.2, 1946; Herbst (R.M. Rilke), op.4, 1946; In den ronde (H. Marsman), op.5, 1945–8; 2 middelnederlandse liedere, op.6, 1949–52; Vreemde liefde (I.D. du Plessis), 1951; 6 galgenlieder (C. Morgenstern), op.9, 1952; 5 Invocations (Webster, Fletcher), op.12, 1953; 3 Sonnets from the Portuguese (E.B. Browning), op.15, 1954, rev. 1973; 4 slampamperliedjies (C. Louis Leipoldt), op.23, 1961; Die vrou (E. Eybers, Bible: Song of Solomon, Marsman, Morgenstern), op.30, 1966; 3 nokturnes (Totius, E. van Heerden, E. Marais), op.36, 1974; 3 liefdesliedere (G. Bredero, P. van Ostaijen, Bible: Samuel, op.37, 1974); 10 Boerneef-toonsettings, op.38, 1974–5; 3 kabaretliedere (H. Aucamp), op.45, 1978; 3 komische Lieder (C. Morgenstern), op.49, 1983

Principal publishers: Novello; Studio Holland (Cape Town); HAUM (Cape Town); UNISA (Johannesburg); DALRO (Johannesburg); Voortrekkerpers (Johannesburg)



WRITINGS

Johann Sebastian Bach (Cape Town, 1960)
Dagboek van 'Die dans van die reën' (Cape Town, 1970)
ed.: Letters from William Henry Bell (Cape Town, 1973)

JAN BOUWS/JAMES MAY

Duplet. A group of two notes or chords occupying the time of three. It usually occurs in a movement in compound time (i.e. where the main beat is divisible by three), and is the exact opposite of the triplet occurring in simple time (i.e. where the main beat is divisible by two). Duplets are usually written as in ex.1*a* but since each note in such a group occupies exactly half as much time again as in the normal, grouping of three, thus having the value of a dotted note, duplets may equally well be notated as in ex.1*b* (as occurred increasingly from the late 19th century).

ERIC BLOM/R

Duple time. In modern practice, two beats to the bar. See DUPLA.

Duplex. A term for an instrument, played by one performer, which embodies the characteristics of two different instruments: the performer chooses which of the two to use. Most duplex instruments have been brass. The earliest known was a flugelhorn/cornet by Gisborne of Birmingham in 1851. In 1855 Pelitti of Milan made a family of gemelli (It.: 'twins') of which the euphonium-/valve trombone was the most popular. Such instruments were still found in makers' catalogues of the 1960s. In the 1990s there began something of a revival of the manufacture of these instruments. See also EUPHONIUM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY
P. Bate: The Trumpet and Trombone (London, 1966, 2/1972)
C. Bevan: The Tuba Family (London, 1978)

CLIFFORD BEVAN

Duplex longa. See LARGE.

Duplex scaling. A system of ALIQUOT scaling introduced by Steinway to provide sympathetic resonance to enrich the treble register of the piano. In the 'octave duplex' piano by Hoerr of Toronto, each note had four strings, of which two, three or four might be struck by the hammer depending on one of four pedals being depressed (see 'The Octave Duplex Piano', MO, xxi (1897–8, 842 only).

Lyrophone: a duplex instrument by Sediva, as illustrated in C. Pierre's 'La facture instrumentale' (Paris, 1890)

Steinway's duplex scale was anticipated a half century earlier by an experiment undertaken by the German piano maker Wilhelm Leberecht Petzoldt, in which a small bridge was placed behind the normal large one in an attempt to exploit the potential additional resonance of a sympathetically vibrating extra length of string.

Duplum, duplex (Lat.: 'double', 'twofold'). Terms used in medieval theory to denote principally (1) two-voiced polyphony. In 13th-century theoretical writing both terms were used as nouns in this sense, or as adjectives in phrases such as 'organum duplum' and 'conductus duplices' (see ORGANUM and CONDUCTUS). In earlier theory the term 'diaphonia' was used (e.g. in Musica enchiriadis, *c*850), but in the Montpellier organum treatise (*c*1100) diaphonia was defined as 'duplex cantus'.

(2) Compound, of an interval: hence 'duplex diapason'. Musica enchiriadis employed 'duplex organum' to refer to the doubling at the octave of an organal voice in parallel organum, as distinct from 'simplex organum'; likewise, 'duplex cantus' for the doubling of the principal voice. Consequently, 'duplex' has the force of 'composite' as distinct from 'simple' organum.

(3) The second voice of a polyphonic composition – the voice composed as a duet against a tenor. In theory of the 9th to 12th centuries the phrase 'vox organalis' was generally used (though 'dupla vox' appears in Musica enchiriadis), and elsewhere simply 'organa ad ...' and 'organa super ...' (both appearing in the Winchester troper, GB-Ccc), 'organica cantica' etc. The term 'duplum' arose in 13th-century theory (e.g. Anonymous IV), in descriptions of florid ORGANUM, of DISCANT and CLAUSULA. But when the second voice of a clausula was set to a poetic text, thus transforming the composition into a motet, it was subsequently called motellus or MOTETUS.

(4) Lengthening of duration, as in 'longa duplex', 'duplex pausatio' (see NOTATION, §III, 3(ii)); also diminution or augmentation by a factor of two ('dupla', 'proportio dupla') in mensural notation of the 14th century to the 16th (see PROPORTIONAL NOTATION).

IAN D. BENT

Dupoitt, G. (*fl c*1420–30). ?French composer. The one work attributed to him is a three-voice motet, Salve mater misericordie, stella maris, which sets a text otherwise known from a 13th-century English conductus (GB-Ob 489 and 591; ed. PMFC, xiv). The motet is found in I-TRbc 92, where the ascription has been consistently misread as 'Dupont'. Though of some interest on account of its mensural usage, the piece is marred by awkwardness in the melodic and harmonic writing. 'Dupoitt' may be a corruption, or alternative spelling, of 'Dubois'.

PETER WRIGHT

Duponchel, Jacques [Giacomo] (b Douai; d Osimo, nr Ancona, 1685). Flemish composer and organist, active in Italy. It is not known when he went to Italy, nor when he became a Franciscan friar: the titles of his prints describe him as 'Duaceno in Flandria Minorum Conventualium S Francisci'. From the same sources it is apparent that he was maestro di cappella of SS Apostoli, Rome, by 1665 but had become organist to Cardinal Bicchi at Osimo by 1671. From about 1676 until 1683 he was organist of Osimo Cathedral. Apart from including Duponchel's four-part Domine, probasti in his collection of Salmi vespertini (Rome, 1683[1]), G.B. Caifabri dedicated to him with lavish praise the posthumous reprint in 1677 of some solo motets by Bonifazio Graziani.

WORKS

Psalmi vespertini una cum litaniis BMV, 3vv, org, op.1 (Rome, 1665)
Sacrae cantiones una cum litaniis BMV, 2–4vv, org, op.2 (Bologna, 1671)
Messe concertate, 3–5vv, vns, str ad lib, op.3 (Rome, 1676)
Domine, probasti (ps cxxxviii), 4vv, 1683[1]

JOHN HARPER

Dupont, G. See DUPOITT, G.

Dupont, Gabriel Edouard Xavier (b Caen, 1 March 1878; d Le Vésinet, 2 Aug 1914). French composer. He studied first with his father, an organist, and subsequently with Gédalge, Widor and Massenet at the Paris Conservatoire. Ill-health dogged his subsequent career and his death (on the day World War I was declared) deprived French music of a major voice.

After having gained a second prize in the Prix de Rome (1902), his first success was achieved with La Cabrera, a village-tale opera set near San Sebastián whose title role is a goat-herd who causes her son's death in order to win her lover. This verismo work won a lucrative competition organized by the Milanese publisher Sonzogno and was selected for the first prize out of 143 pieces from all over the world, subsequently bringing the young Dupont a degree of fame, with productions at several European opera houses. La Glu, based on the novel by Richepin, was his next major opera and is set on the coast of Brittany. Some Breton folk music and a fair scene are incorporated into this gripping, strongly regionalist opera.

Antar is an orientalist tale of a brave Muslim warrior who is in love with the daughter of a rival. Using a skilfully crafted harmonic language with elaborate vocalises based on oriental scales, the opera incorporates much ballet music as well as intricate motivic interplay. Chromatically rich duets provide evidence of Dupont's debt to Massenet and are used for the love scenes.

Dupont also left a legacy of songs which set late Romantic and symbolist poetry and display both a melodic gift and a highly developed style of piano writing. His most impressive cycles of piano music are the set of ten pieces La maison dans les dunes, composed at Arcachon where, for reasons of health, he spent the winter, and Les heures dolentes. The former was inspired by the coastal landscape while the latter have enigmatic titles and are unconventional in nature. Rich added-note and chromatic harmony, and arabesque-like figurations characterize Dupont's piano writing. Büsser used passages from Antar as illustrations in his revision of Guiraud's Traité pratique d'instrumentation.

WORKS

Stage: La Cabrera (drame lyrique, 2, H. Cain), Milan, Lirico, 16 May 1904; La Glu (drame musical populaire, 4, J. Richepin and Cain), Nice, Opéra, 24 Jan 1910; La farce du cuvier (op, 2, M. Léna), Brussels, Monnaie, 21 March 1921
Vocal (songs for 1v, pf, unless otherwise stated): Chansons normandes, 2vv, pf, 1900; Mandoline (P. Verlaine), 1901; Le foyer (Verlaine), 1901; Monsieur Destin (G. Vanor [?]), 1901; Alcyone (cant., Eugène and Edouard Adenis), vv, orch, 1902; La chanson de Myrrha (F. Beissier), 1902; A la nuit (A. Lacaussade), 1902; En aimant! (A. Silvestre), 1903; Les effarés (A. Rimbaud), 1903; Poèmes d'automne (A. Rimbaud, Rodenbach, H. de Régnier, S. Merrill, Verlaine etc.), 1904; 2 mélodies (J. Richepin), 1908; 2 mélodies (E. Verhaeren, Verlaine), 1909; 2 poèmes d'Alfred de Musset, 1910; Les caresses (Richepin), 1v, pf, 1912; Chansons des six petits oiseaux (Richepin), 1912; Crépuscule d'été (C. Périn), 1912; Chanson des noisettes (T. Klingsor), 1v, pf, 1919; Hymne à Aphrodite, chorus, orch
Inst: Journée de printemps, vn, pf, 1901; La maison dans les dunes, pf, 1905; Les heures dolentes, pf, 1905; Le chant de la destinée, orch, 1908; Poème, pf, str qt, 1911; Feuillets d'album, pf; Pour la Toussaint, org
Principal publisher: Heugel

WRITINGS

'La mélodie chez Massenet', Musica, no.120 (Sept 1912), 171–2

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (J. Wagstaff)
H. Collet: 'Un musicien trop oublié: Gabriel Dupont', L'information musicale, no.142 (1944)
M. Dumesnil: 'Gabriel Dupont: Musician of Normandy', MQ, xxx (1944), 441–7
P. Bertrand: Le monde de la musique: souvenirs d'un éditeur (Geneva, 1947)
G. Samazeuilh: Musiciens de mon temps (Paris, 1947)
M. Kelkel: Naturalisme, vérisme et réalisme dans l'opéra d'1890 à 1930 (Paris, 1984)

RICHARD LANGHAM SMITH

Dupont, Guillaume-Pierre [Pierre-Guillaume] (b Paris, 22 June 1718; d Paris, after 1777). French violinist, son of PIERRE DUPONT. He is not to be confused with Guillaume Dupont, one of the 24 Violons du Roi in the 1720s and 30s. Dupont studied with Jean-Marie Leclair l'aîné, and in 1738 a report in Mercure de France listed him among young violin pupils 'who promise much and who cause astonishment to many people'. He made his début at the Concert Spirituel in Paris in September and November 1739, playing three concertos by Leclair; between 1739 and 1755 he appeared as soloist at those concerts on 13 occasions. About 1745 he joined the orchestras of the Académie Royale de Musique and the Concert Spirituel, in both of which he played until pensioned in 1773. De Jeze's Etat de Paris of 1759 listed Dupont as 'maître de violon'. For Leclair's memorial service, proposed for December 1765 but never realized, Dupont orchestrated his master's Tombeau (op.5 no.6). In 1772 Dupont published in Paris Airs variés pour un violon seul (a second volume appeared in 1778), and some of the compositions published without given name under the surname 'Dupont', and attributed to JEAN-BAPTISTE DUPONT, may also be by Guillaume-Pierre. Marpurg, who heard Dupont in the late 1740s, called him 'ein annehmlicher Violinist'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LabordeMP; La LaurencieEF; PierreH
Almanach historique et chronologique de tous les spectacles de Paris (Paris, 1752–1815)
F.W. Marpurg: 'Nachricht von verschiedenen berühmten Violinisten und Flötenisten itziger Zeit zu Paris', Historisch-kritische Beyträge zur Aufnahme der Musik, i (Berlin, 1754–5/R), 466
Etat actuel de la musique de la chambre du Roi et des trois spectacles de Paris (1760–78)
B. Gérard: 'Inventaire alphabétique des documents répertoriés relatif aux musiciens parisiens conservés aux Archives de Paris', RMFC, xiii (1973), 181–213

NEAL ZASLAW

Dupont, Henri-Denis (bap. Liège, 22 Sept 1664; d Liège, 1 Sept 1727). Flemish composer and organist. He was duodenus at Liège Cathedral, and then entered the Jesuit college on 4 September 1680. He studied the organ with Jean-Guillaume Lexhy (1640–84), who in view of his own ill-health applied on 5 June 1682 to have Dupont appointed deputy cathedral organist. On 26 January 1685, after his master's death, Dupont was appointed organist. He regularly received increases in his salary and obtained various prebends (he was rector of the altar in the churches of St Cosme and St Remacle). Around 1688 he was described as organist and clerk; later, towards 1690, he appears in the records as priest. On the retirement of Pierre Lamalle as phonascus of the cathedral, Dupont was proposed and elected to the post as singing master, occupying it until his death in 1727. He was buried in the cathedral under the picture of St Cecilia painted by Bertholet Flémal. Henri Hamal credited Dupont with a leading role in introducing Italian musical styles into Liège.

WORKS

9 anthems, 4vv, bc, B-Lc
Te Deum pro turcarum destructione, on the victory over the Turks at Belgrade, 1717, lost, mentioned by Terry
Re, 4vv, bc, lost, mentioned by Terry

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.-L. Terry: Simples notes pour servir à l'histoire des beaux-arts au pays de Liège (MS, B-Lc)
J. Quitin: 'Orgues, organiers et organistes de l'église cathédrale Notre-Dame et Saint-Lambert à Liège aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles', Bulletin de l'Institut archéologique liégeois, lxxx (1967), 5–58

PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Dupont, Jacques. See PONT, JACQUES DU.

Dupont, Jean-Baptiste (fl Dunkirk, 1773–83). French violinist and composer. His biography is confused with that of GUILLAUME-PIERRE DUPONT (most 18th-century documents mention only 'Dupont' without given names). From 1773 there are records of Dupont as leader of the town orchestra, violin teacher and 'marchand de musique' at Dunkirk. He is assigned the authorship of the compositions listed below on the basis of a listing in the Breitkopf thematic catalogue and the list 'Auteurs ou compositeurs de musique' (Almanach musical, Paris, 1777–9), which shows under 'Dupont' only 'premier violon du Concert de Dunkerque, à Dunkerque', and no other Duponts. Jean-Baptiste may have moved to Paris at the time of the Revolution, for a 'Dupont' was listed in the orchestras of the Théâtre de l'Ambigu-Comique and Théâtre Français Comique et Lyrique in 1792, and the Théâtre d'Emulation in 1799.

WORKS

Recueils d'ariettes avec accompagnement en quatuor (Paris, 1775), lost, cited in Breitkopf catalogue
[2] concerto à violon principal ... arrangé sur des ariettes des opéra de Lucile [Grétry] et du Déserteur [Monsigny], vn, str, bc (Dunkirk and Paris, *c*1774)
[2] concerto à violon prinicpal ... arrangé sur des ariettes choisies dans les opéra comique, vn, str, bc (Dunkirk and Paris, 1777)
A la ville ainsi qu'au village, chansonnette, 1v, pf (Paris, *c*1780)
Nouvelle symphonie, perf. Paris, Théâtre Feydeau, 8 April 1792

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; BrookSF; GerberL; GerberNL; JohanssonFMP; La LaurencieEF
Almanach musical (1775–83/R)
Calendrier musical universel (1778–9/R)

NEAL ZASLAW

Dupont, Nicolas (b ?Liège or at or nr Namur, *c*1575; d Madrid, 25 Sept 1623). Flemish composer and singer. He was one of 14 boy sopranos aged between seven and 12, including Géry de Ghersem, Mathieu Rosmarin (Mateo Romero), Philippe Dubois, Jean Dufon and Jean de Loncin, who were recruited in the Netherlands in 1585 to serve in the chapel of Philip II of Spain. He arrived in Madrid at the beginning of 1586 and was a pupil of Philippe Rogier until he was promoted to the rank of cantor on 1 December 1593. On the death of Philip II he continued in the service of Philip III and subsequently of Philip IV until his death. From 1616 onwards he combined his duties as royal cantor and composer with those of maestro de capilla at the Convento de la Encarnación, Madrid. On 26 February 1602 he was invested by Archduke Albrecht and Archduchess Isabella with a prebend at Andenne (which he resigned in favour of his brother in 1616) and on 2 June 1614 with a benefice at the chapel of St Jean-Baptiste at the castle at Namur. According to Gaspar de Arratia, a copyist at the royal chapel at Madrid at the beginning of the 17th century, he was highly regarded as a composer in Spain and could have been the musical director of any chapel there. Diego de Pontac was among his pupils. There is a five-part villancico by Dupont at E-Zvp, and the catalogue of the library of King John IV of Portugal, destroyed in the Lisbon earthquake of 1755, records 20 other works by him, both sacred and secular, for three to eight voices; five had Latin texts, four Spanish and 11 French.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BNB (P. Becquart); JoãoIL; MGG1 suppl. (P. Becquart)
P. Becquart: 'Un compositeur néerlandais à la cour de Philippe II et de Philippe III: Nicolas Dupont (*c*1575–1623)', AnM, xvi (1961), 81–8
P. Becquart: Musiciens néerlandais à la cour de Madrid: Philippe Rogier et son école (1560–1647) (Brussels, 1967)
P. Becquart: P. 'Philippe Rogier et son école à la cour des Philippe d'Espagne: un ultime foyer de la création musicale des Pays-Bas (1560–1647)', Musique des Pays-Bas anciens – musique espagnole ancienne: Brussels 1985, 215–29

PAUL BECQUART

Dupont, Pierre (d Paris, 1740). French violin teacher and dancing-master. He published Principes de musique par demandes et réponce (Paris, 1713, 3/1719/R, 4/1740), which is valuable for its systematic exposition of the French performing practice called notes inégales (unequal notes). He also published Principes de violon par demandes et par réponce, par le quel toutes personnes, pourant aprendre d'eux-mêmes a jouer du dit instrument (Paris, 1718, 2/1740), valuable for its explanations of the strict bowing patterns used in French dance music. Both treatises, although they reflected the conservative practice of the Lullian school, remained in print throughout the 18th century. At Dupont's death legal documents referred to him as 'marchand de musique'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

JohanssonFMP; LabordeMP; La LaurencieEF
B. Gérard: 'Inventaire alphabétique des documents répertoriés relatif aux musiciens parisiens conservés aux Archives de Paris', RMFC, xiii (1973), 181–213
C.L. Schlundt and J.L. Schwartz: French Court Dance and Dance Music (Stuyvesant, 1987)

NEAL ZASLAW

Duport. French family of cellists and composers.

(1) Duport [first name unknown]. Cellist and harpsichordist. He was employed at the court of Louis XV, and collaborated with a certain Dugué in the composition of the opera Jupiter et Europe, performed at court in February 1749. His name is mentioned on several occasions as early as 1738 in the memoirs of the Duke of Luynes. He served as huissier de la chambre du roi, and in 1748, according to Luynes, was rewarded for his services with a snuff box bearing the portrait of the king. Luynes also referred to him as a 'grand musicien' who played 'fort bien'. He was perhaps the father of (2) Jean-Pierre Duport and (3) Jean-Louis Duport; the lineage of the Duport family remains unknown (see Moore).

(2) Jean-Pierre Duport [l'aîné] (b Paris, 27 Nov 1741; d Berlin, 31 Dec 1818). Cellist and composer. A student of Berteau, he made his début at the Concert Spirituel in February 1761; his subsequent performances earned the praise of an anonymous reviewer in the Mercure de France (April 1762, ii, 189):

> In his hands the instrument is no longer recognizable; it speaks, expresses and renders everything with a charm greater than that thought to be exclusive to the violin. The vigour of his execution is always accentuated by the most exact precision in the performance of difficulties of which one can have no idea without a knowledge of the instrument. It appears to be unanimously agreed that this young man is the most singular phenomenon to have appeared in our salons.

During the next two years Duport performed frequently at the Concert Spirituel and was always favourably received. From 1766 he appeared less often, while employed (until 1769) by the Prince of Conti. He then went to England and two years later to Spain. In 1773 he accepted an invitation from Frederick the Great of Prussia to become first cellist of the Königliche Kapelle in Berlin. There he taught the prince, Friedrich Wilhelm II, and supervised concerts at court from 1787 to 1806, when Prussia was defeated by Napoleon and the Kapelle dissolved. Duport remained with the court and received his pension in 1811.

Friedrich Wilhelm's patronage (until his death in 1797), coupled with Duport's virtuosity, meant that Berlin was a magnet for new compositions for the cello. Works written for the Prussian court include concertos by Carl Stamitz, chamber compositions by Peter Ritter and Boccherini, Mozart's 'Prussian' string quartets and a set of piano variations (K573) on a minuet by Duport, and Beethoven's op.5 sonatas, played by Beethoven himself with either Duport or his brother (see Moran).

Contemporary reports credit Duport with balancing the court's appreciation for Italian performance style with that of French. Gerber deemed him 'a perfect virtuoso out of the old French school'. As with other French cellists of the era, his compositions and reviews attest to an affinity for complex, well-organized bow strokes and use of natural harmonics. His geographical distance from innovative centres of string performance meant that new developments in bow and instrument design were rarely integrated into his performance style. However, his abilities as an orchestral leader, and the virtuosity of his thumb-position playing, elicited unequivocal commendation. His fingering skills in particular advanced methodology initiated by Berteau and codified by his brother and student, Jean-Louis.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

Orch: 3 vn concs. (1792); Vc Conc., A (n.d.), ?lost; Conc., D, vn, vc, unpubd, lost, vn part by P. Vachon

Sonatas: 6 for vn/vc, b (1766); 6 for vc, b, op.2 (1772/R in Late Eighteenth-Century Cello Sonatas, ed. J. Adas (New York, 1991)); 6 for vc, b, op.3 (1773); 6 for vc, bc, op.1 (Berlin and Amsterdam, 1787), also as op.4 (1808–14/R in Late Eighteenth-Century Cello Sonatas); 12 for vc, b, ?D-Bsb; 1 for vc, b, ?Bsb

Other: 8 airs variés, 2 vc (1796); 3 duos, 2 vc, op.1 (n.d.); 3 Airs . . . with Variations, vc, b (London, n.d.); Menuett, used by Mozart in pf variations K573; 2 airs variés, vn, vc (n.d.), collab. G.M. Giornovichi, also attrib. J.-L. Duport

(3) Jean-Louis Duport [le jeune] (b Paris, 4 Oct 1749; d Paris, 7 Sept 1819). Cellist and composer, brother of (2) Jean-Pierre Duport. He began to study the cello as a pupil of his brother, and soon became his equal in ability. At the age of 18, he played a sonata at the Concert Spirituel (2 February 1768) and he quickly became a member of the Parisian musical establishment. He took up a position with the Prince of Guéménée, and also taught, composed and continued to perform at numerous Paris venues. He enjoyed the patronage of the Baron de Bagge, thanks to their shared freemasonry associations, and he was introduced to the violinist Viotti when he arrived in Paris in 1782. The two became close friends, playing together frequently; Duport was a member of Viotti's orchestra for the Concert de la Loge Olympique and the violinist later composed three divertissements for him. Duport went abroad in 1783, spending the first half of the year in London under the auspices of his friend, John Crosdill. When he returned to Paris he was recognized (until the French Revolution) as the nation's foremost cellist. Political associations forced him to flee in 1790, and he took refuge with his brother at the Berlin court. Here he became principal cellist in the opera orchestra, and also performed chamber music; Nikolaus Kraft studied with him in 1801. Bernhard Romberg was his desk partner in the opera orchestra in 1805, and he later dedicated his op.10 Fantasy to Duport. Following the dissolution of the Kapelle after the Battle of Jena, and his wife's death, Duport returned to Paris. However, the only position he was able to find was with the dethroned Spanish king, Carlos IV, in Marseilles. Although named Professeur Honoraire at the Conservatoire, he was politically unemployable in Paris until 1812. In that year he shared the first desk with C.-N. Baudiot at the imperial chapel and obtained a full professorship at the Conservatoire for 1814–15. Forced to retire when the Conservatoire was reorganized, he continued to compose and to perform both privately and at the revitalized Concert Spirituel until his death.

The culmination of Duport's Berlin experiences was the publication of his cello treatise Essai sur le doigté du violoncelle et sur la conduite de l'archet in 1806, which drew immediate approbation from J.F. Reichardt: 'the friends of the violoncello, this beautiful, noble instrument, must be very grateful for the diligence with which he has composed his work'. Building upon the systemization devised by Berteau and amplified by his brother, Duport delineated idiomatic cello technique, distinct from the influences of the viola da gamba and violin. His methodology of sequential, diatonic fingerings for note patterns in all keys became fundamental to many subsequent players. Teaching excerpts from his concertos are found in the English cello method of John Gunn (1789) and the Essai is quoted in the later tutors of Baudiot, Dotzauer and Robert Lindley. One of the earliest advocates of Tourte bows, Duport epitomized French bowing skills and sound production with his refined playing style and his above-the-frog bow hold yielding what contemporaries described as a light, unforced and very pure sound. His 1711 Stradivari cello was purchased by Auguste Franchomme in 1843 for 22,000 francs and in 1974 was acquired by Mstislav Rostropovich.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris unless otherwise stated

Vc concs.: no.1 (before 1785), also as op.1 (Berlin and Amsterdam, 1792); no.2 (before 1785); no.3 (1787); nos.4 and 5 (1801–14); no.6 (*c*1815)

Sonatas: 3 sonates faciles, vc, b (*c*1814); 3 sets of 6, vc, opp.1–3 (Paris and Amsterdam, n.d.), lost; 6 for vc, b, pf, op.4 (n.d.), also pubd Amsterdam; 6 for vn (1772); Grande sonate, vc, b (n.d.)

Duos: 3 for 2 vc (1782), also pubd London; 3, hp/vc, op.40 (1818), collab. F.-J. Naderman; 8 airs variés, 2 vc (n.d.), also pubd London and Leipzig, also attrib. J.-P. Duport

Duos with N.C. Bochsa and R. Kreutzer (all *c*1816): 3 nocturnes, bk 1, vc/vn, pf; 3 nocturnes, bk 2, vc/vn, hp, op.69; 3 nocturnes, bk 3, vc/vn, hp, op.70; Mélange de thèmes nouveaux, vc/vn, hp, op.75; 3 nocturnes, cl/vn, hp

Other chbr (selective list): Romance, vc, pf (Berlin, *c*1812), also pubd Paris; Fantaisie, vc/vn, pf (*c*1817), collab. C. Martainville; Fantaisie et variations sur un thème de Rigel, vc, pf (*c*1817); Variations sur un thème de Desmoulins, vc, pf, *c*1817, unpubd; Nouveau nocturne, vc, pf (*c*1818); Duo concertant, vc, pf (?1825)

Pedagogical: Essai sur le doigté du violoncelle et sur la conduite de l'archet (1806); 21 exercices . . . faisants suite à l'essai sur le doigté (*c*1813)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FasquelleE; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; La BordeE; MGG1 (K. Stephenson); PierreH

C.P. d'Albert, Duke of Luynes: Mémoires du duc de Luynes sur la cour de Louis XV, 1735–1758, ed. L. Dussieux and E. Soulié (Paris, 1860–65)

A. Vidal: Les instruments à archet: les faiseurs, les joueurs d'instrument, leur histoire (Paris, 1877/R)

M. Decourcelle: La Société académique des enfants d'Apollon (Paris,1881)

J.W. von Wasielewski: Das Violoncell und seine Geschichte (Leipzig, 1889, enlarged 3/1925/R; Eng. trans., 1894/R)

E. van der Straeten: The History of the Violoncello (London, 1915/R)

F. Kohlmorgen: Die Brüder Duport und die Entwicklung der Violoncelltechnik von ihren Anfängen bis zur Zeit Bernhard Rombergs (diss., U. of Berlin, 1922)

G.J. Shaw: The Violoncello Sonata Literature in France during the Eighteenth Century (diss., Catholic U., Washington DC, 1963)

L. Moore: 'The Duport Mystery', Dance Perspectives, no.7 (1964)

S. Milliot: Le violoncelle en France au XVIIIe siècle (Paris, 1985)

S. McVeigh: Concert Life in London from Mozart to Haydn (Cambridge, 1993)

V. Walden: An Investigation and Comparison of the French and Austro-German Schools of Violoncello Bowing Techniques: 1785–1839 (diss., U. of Auckland, 1993)

J. Moran: Fingering in Beethoven's Cello Music: an Evaluation of the Historical Sources (thesis, Schola Cantorum Basiliensis, Basle, 1994)

V. Walden: One Hundred Years of Violoncello: a History of Technique and Performance Practice 1740–1840 (Cambridge, 1998)

MARY CYR/VALERIE WALDEN (1, 2), VALERIE WALDEN (3)

Duprat, Régis (Ronchi) (b Rio de Janeiro, 11 July 1930). Brazilian musicologist and viola player. He studied the violin and viola with Johannes Oelsner (1944–54) and music theory and composition with Olivier Toni (1948–52) and Cláudio Santoro (1954–59); he then went to the University of São Paulo, where he took the BA and licenciate in history (1958–61). In Paris, as a fellow of the French government, he attended research seminars at the Institut de Musicologie (1962–3); having returned to Brazil he took the doctorate at the University of Brasilia in 1966 with a dissertation on the music of the São Paulo Cathedral during the colonial period. Concurrently he was active as a violist, being a member of the Radio Nacional SO (São Paulo, 1954–9) and the São Paulo Municipal SO (1956–64). With a fellowship from the Gulbenkian Foundation (1964) he did archival research in Portugal on Brazilian music history and in the same year was appointed professor of musicology and the viola at the University of Brasilia. From 1972 to 1980 he worked in Rio de Janeiro for the Federal National Council of Research, and taught at the Universidade Federal Fluminense. Back in São Paulo in 1980, he taught at the Arts Institute of the Universidade Estadual Paulista, a post he occupied until 1997. Since then, he has been teaching at the Universidade de São Paulo. He coordinated the entries on art-music in the Enciclopédia da música brasileira; erudita, folclórica, popular (São Paulo, 1977, 2/1998) and helped organize the collection of colonial music of the Francisco Curt Lange estate at the Inconfidência Museum in Ouro Preto. He has contributed substantially to the history of colonial church music in Brazil, particularly in São Paulo Cathedral and the Paraíba do Sul valley. His work in Brazilian and Portuguese colonial archives has revealed important primary sources of the late 18th century. In 1970 he was awarded a special prize of the Associação Paulista dos Críticos Teatrais for his outstanding contribution to Brazilian musicology.

WRITINGS

'Música e nacionalismo', Revista brasiliense, xxviii (1960), 147–8

'Nova música brasileira: manifesto', Invenção [São Paulo], iii (1963), 5–6

'O Colóquio internacional para una sociologia da música e a intervenção de Michel Philipot', Invenção [São Paulo], iii (1963), 89–91

'Música na Bahia Colonial', Revista de história, no.61 (1965), 93–116

Música na Matriz e Sé de São Paulo Colonial (diss., U. of Brasilia, 1966)

'Música na matriz de São Paulo colonial', Revista de história, no.75 (1968), 85–103 with N. Obino: 'O estanco da música no Brasil colonial', YIAMR, iv (1968), 98–109

'Recitativo e ária para soprano, violinos e baixo', Universitas [Salvador, Bahia], nos.8–9 (1971), 291–9, appx

'Metodologia da pesquisa histórico-musical brasileira', Anais de história [Assis], iv (1972), 101–8

'Música na matriz e Sé de São Paulo colonial', YIAMR, ix (1975), 8–68

'Música brasileira do século XVIII e a definição do seu estilo', Art [Salvador, Bahia], no.7 (1983), 3–8

Garimpo Musical (São Paulo, 1985)

ed.: Acervo de manuscritos musicais: coleção Curt Lange: compositores mineiros dos séculos XVIII e XIX (Belo Horizonte, 1991)

Música na Sé de São Paulo colonial (São Paulo, 1995)

EDITIONS

André da Silva Gomes: Adjuvanos Deus, Immutemur (São Paulo, 1962); Missa a 8 vozes e instrumentos (Brasilia, 1966)

Manoel Julião da Silva Rarnos: Credo (São Paulo, 1968)

Anon.: Ofertório de Nossa Senhora, c1770 (São Paulo, 1968)

Anon. [?Caetano de Mello Jesus]: Recitativo e ária (Salvador, Bahia, 1971)

Música do Brasil Colonial (São Paulo and Ouro Preto, 1994) [works by Lobo de Mesquita and Coelho Neto]

GERARD BÉHAGUE

Duprat, Rogério (b Rio de Janeiro, 7 Feb 1932). Brazilian composer. He studied the cello and other subjects at the Villa-Lobos Conservatory, São Paulo, and took lessons in theory and composition with Toni and Santoro. In 1962 he attended the Darmstadt summer courses and studied electronic music at the studios of Cologne, Karlsruhe and Paris. He was a co-founder in São Paulo of the Estadual SO and of the São Paulo Chamber Orchestra, whose experimental chamber group he directed for a time.

In his music he abandoned an early nationalist manner in favour of 12-note writing, serialism and electronic work. Together with Mendes, Cozzella and Corrêa de Oliveira, he was associated with the Musica Nova group of São Paulo, whose manifesto (1963) called for strict adherence to avant-garde beliefs and techniques. However, by the mid-1960s he had declared art music dead, believing instead in the possibility of a total integration with mass-mediated music. He then turned to composing and arranging urban popular music and was quite influential in the emergence of new trends such as tropicalismo. Subsequently he wrote a series of soundtracks for films that won him several prizes, and worked as artistic director for various phonographic companies in São Paulo. His writings on music include 'El torno al "pronunciamento"', RMC, no.86 (1963), 33–8.

WORKS
(selective list)

Dança e cantilena, fl, pf, 1955; Noturno, fls, cl, str, 1956; Lírica no.1, vc, pf, 1956; 6 pequenas peças, vc, 1956; Sonatina, vc, pf, 1956; Suite para crianças, str, 1956; Variações sôbre um copo d'água, str, 1956; Str Qt no.1, 1958; Concertino, ob, hn, str, 1958; Lírica no.2, cl, va, str, 1959; Variações, 12 insts, perc, 1959; Organismo (D. Pignatari), 5 solo vv, 11 insts, perc, ?1960; Mbaepré I, 17 insts, 1961; Antinomies I, chbr orch, 1963; Antinomies II, str, pf, 1963

Principal publisher: Pan American Union [Antinomies I]

GERARD BÉHAGUE

Dupré [Du Pré]. Several French lutenists and composers of lute music of the 17th century bore this name; it is not known if they were related. The most important are Laurent Dupré (fl 1642; d 23 Oct 1709) and Charles Dupré (fl 1659–?*c*1670). Laurent was a lutenist and theorbo player, the son of Jeanne Marais and another Laurent Dupré (fl 1627–43), who is described in records after 1627 as a singing master and lute teacher. In 1671 the younger Dupré succeeded François Pinel as ordinaire de la musique du roi; however, he had to wait until May 1709 to receive the full benefit of the post. In 1683 he participated in the première of Lalande's Les fontaines de Versailles. On his death he was succeeded at court by Robert de Visée.

Charles Dupré was a lute teacher and composer. He has been credited with 14 works, but it seems impossible to identify them. The Vaudry and Milleran manuscript collections (F-B and F-Pn) attribute pieces to 'Dupré d'Angleterre', who may or may not be identified with Charles Dupré.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Rave: Some Manuscripts of French Lute Music, 1630–1700: an Introductory Study (diss., U. of Illinois, 1972)
D. Ledbetter: Harpsichord and Lute Music in 17th-Century France (London, 1987)
P. Vendrix: 'Le tombeau en musique en France à l'époque baroque', RMFC, xxv (1987), 105–38

PHILIPPE VENDRIX

Dupré, Desmond (John) (b London, 19 Dec 1916; d nr Tonbridge, 16 Aug 1974). English lutenist and viol player. He read chemistry at St John's College, Oxford, from 1936 to 1940, but after the war began a formal musical education at the RCM (1946–7), where he studied the cello with Ivor James and harmony with Herbert Howells. In 1947 he took up the viol, teaching himself, but his professional playing was at first confined to the cello (Boyd Neel Orchestra, 1948–9) and the guitar (many broadcasts). In 1950 he made his first recording with Alfred Deller, accompanying him on the guitar, and in 1951 they gave a Wigmore Hall concert, in which he played the lute (which, like the viol, he had taught himself). After that, he often appeared with Deller and his consort.

He also played with many other pre-Classical music ensembles, such as the Julian Bream Consort, Jacobean Ensemble and Musica Reservata, and his joint talents as lutenist and viol player were often heard to advantage in Bach's St John Passion, in which he played the obbligato parts in both 'Betrachte, meine Seele' and 'Es ist vollbracht'. He formed a recital partnership with Thurston Dart with whom he recorded Bach's sonatas for viola da gamba and harpsichord, and he played in the first performance of Dart's reconstruction of a Handel concerto for lute and harp. He was the first president of the Lute Society (1956–73).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Obituary, The Times (23 Aug 1974)
A. Deller: 'In memoriam: Desmond Dupré', LSJ, xvi (1974), 7–8

DAVID SCOTT

Dupré, Elias [Dupre, Helias] (fl 1507). Composer. His music has survived almost exclusively in Petrucci's seventh and ninth frottola books; a further frottola appeared in Petrucci's second book of frottolas intabulated by Bossinensis for lute and voice (RISM 1511), which probably originated in Petrucci's tenth book, now lost. Within the fairly restricted metrical framework of the forms of the barzelletta and oda, typical choices of the frottolists of the first decade of the 16th century, Dupré's settings range from effective homophonic simplicity to a more involved and seamless style. In this style, often used by Tromboncino and Cara, the inner parts provide an active and almost continuous accompaniment to a more leisurely and syllabic cantus with a simple harmonic bass. In Chi à martello, Dio gl'il toglia (1507^3) Dupré constructed an inverted barzelletta with the ripresa delayed until after the stanza. Like other such inverted barzelette, the ripresa cites a popular tune, in this case E quando andarastu al monte.

WORKS
for titles see Jeppesen

7 frottolas, 1507^3, 1509^2 and 1511; Ai ceco e crudo amore, ed. in IMa, 2nd ser., iii (1964); Chi à martello ed. in PirrottaDO

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Jeppesen: La frottola, i (Århus and Copenhagen, 1968)
F. Luisi: La musica vocale nel Rinascimento (Turin, 1977)
C. Gallico: Rimeria musicale popolare italiana nel Rinascimento (Lucca, 1996)

JOAN WESS/WILLIAM F. PRIZER

Du Pré, Jacqueline (b Oxford, 26 Jan 1945; d London, 19 Oct 1987). English cellist. At four she demanded a cello, and at five she entered Herbert Walenn's London Violoncello School, where her tutor was Alison Dalrymple. From 1955 she studied with William Pleeth. In 1956 she was awarded the Suggia Gift and in 1960 the Queen's Prize. Meanwhile in 1959 she gave her first public performance of the work which above all was to be associated with her, the Elgar Concerto. She attended Pablo Casals's summer school at Zermatt (1960) and Alberto Lysy's summer school at Sermoneta (1961–4). In 1961 she was given her first Stradivari cello, just before her recital début at the Wigmore Hall, London. The following year she gave several important performances of the Elgar, including the first of an annual series at the Proms, formed a sonata duo with George Malcolm and began six months' study with Paul Tortelier in Paris. In 1964 she formed another duo, with Stephen Kovacevich, and gave the première of Priaulx Rainier's Concerto. In 1965 she toured the USA with the BBC SO, made her

New York début at Carnegie Hall and acquired the 'Davydov' Stradivari, her main concert instrument from then onwards. In 1966 she studied in Moscow with Rostropovich. The following year she married Daniel Barenboim, forming a duo with him; the violinist Pinchas Zukerman often played with them in a trio. In 1968 she gave the first performance of Romanze for cello and orchestra, written for her by Alexander Goehr. By now she had embarked on an international career, although worrying symptoms sometimes affected her playing and in 1971 she had to take a year off. In 1973 multiple sclerosis was diagnosed, soon after concerts in New York which turned out to be her last. In 1976 she was created an OBE. Her last years saw her suffer a gradual decline which was borne with great fortitude; one positive outcome was a heightening of public awareness of multiple sclerosis.

Although Jacqueline du Pré's concert career lasted little more than a decade, she ranks as one of Britain's finest 20th-century string players, along with Sammons, Tertis, Primrose and her successor, Steven Isserlis. Her platform demeanour was marked by a good deal of physical movement – a trait inculcated by Pleeth – which was not to everyone's taste. She was also conservative in her outlook: the few contemporary pieces in her repertory were rarely performed more than once and she favoured dubious editions such as Grützmacher's travesty of the Boccherini B flat Concerto. Nor was the partnership with Barenboim in sonatas and concertos always beneficial, as his musical personality often intensified a tendency to self-indulgence and mannerism in her interpretations. Her faults were those of generosity, however; she produced a big, voluptuous tone and her public sensed that she not only loved her chosen repertory but passionately believed in it. Despite the brevity of her prime as a player, she recorded much of the cello literature. Her most successful concerto recording is arguably that of the Schumann. Of the Elgar Concerto she left a number of documents, the best known being a 1965 studio recording conducted by Barbirolli; a 1967 BBC TV performance conducted by Barenboim and filmed by Christopher Nupen is even better artistically. Nupen also filmed her in performances of Beethoven's 'Ghost' Trio (with Barenboim and Zukerman) and Schubert's 'Trout' Quintet (with Barenboim, Perlman, Zukerman and Mehta). Of her recordings of chamber music, Beethoven's D major Sonata (with Kovacevich), Fauré's Elégie (with Gerald Moore) and a 1972 live performance of Tchaikovsky's Trio are especially revealing of her powers of communication.

Jacqueline du Pré, 1970

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Wordsworth, ed.: Jacqueline du Pré: Impressions (London, 1983)
C. Easton: Jacqueline du Pré (London, 1989)
H. and P. du Pré: A Genius in the Family (London, 1997)
E. Wilson: Jacqueline du Pré (London, 1998)

TULLY POTTER

Dupré, Louis (b 1697; d 1774). French dancer. See BALLET, §1(iii).

Dupré, Marcel (b Rouen, 3 May 1886; d Meudon, 30 May 1971). French organist and composer. His father, Albert Dupré, was organist of St Ouen in Rouen and his mother was a pianist. He served his musical apprenticeship, at first under his parents' tuition, in his native town, where he became organist of St Vivien at the age of 12. He had already met Guilmant in 1894, on the occasion of the inauguration of the organ at the church of the Immaculée Conception in Elbeuf (in which Dupré took part) and became his pupil three years later. He entered the Paris Conservatoire in 1902 to study the piano with Diémer, the organ with Guilmant and Vierne, and fugue with Widor. He won first prizes in these three disciplines in turn (1905, 1907, 1909), as well as the Prix de Rome in 1914. He was Widor's deputy at St Sulpice from 1906 and deputized for Vierne at Notre-Dame (1916–20). His Three Preludes and Fugues op.7 (1912) were received enthusiastically by an audience in the Salle Gaveau in 1917. Gifted with a prodigious memory, Dupré was the first to perform the entire organ works of J.S. Bach in a series of concerts given at the Paris Conservatoire in 1920, and repeated at the Trocadéro in the following year. His renown as an improviser gained him an international reputation; during his first American tour in 1921 he gave an impressive demonstration of his talents on the monumental Wanamaker organ in Philadelphia, improvising a vast fresco on plainsong motives, which later became his Symphonie-Passion. Thereafter he travelled the world: to England, where the patron Claude Johnson (managing director of Rolls-Royce) had earlier encouraged him to write down and publish versets improvised in 1919 (Vêpres du commun des fêtes de la Sainte-Vierge); to Belgium, where once again an improvisation, on texts by Claudel, performed in Brussels in 1931, gave him the impetus for Le chemin de la croix; and as far as Australia (1939). In 1925 he bought a house at Meudon, close to where Guilmant had lived, and installed his master's organ in a private concert hall. In 1926 Dupré succeeded Gigout as professor of organ at the Paris Conservatoire. He held the post until 1954, when he became director of the Conservatoire for two years; he also taught at the Ecole Normale and the American Conservatory at Fontainebleau, of which he was director in 1947. In 1934 Widor nominated Dupré to be his successor as organist at St Sulpice.

As a performer, Dupré belongs to the tradition of Lemmens, Guilmant and Widor: players of technical excellence who made every aspect of performance the object of meticulous study, including use of the pedal, double-pedalling, legato and staccato playing, and choices of fingering. We can form an accurate view of his playing from his Méthode d'orgue (1927) and from the virtuosity demanded by works such as the Esquisses of 1945. His pupils included André Fleury, Olivier Messiaen, Jean Langlais, Jehan Alain and Jean Guillou.

Dupré's exceptional talent as an improviser was due to his brilliant technique, his understanding of counterpoint, his mastery of form and his cultural breadth. Using a post-romantic symphonic language, he handled every genre with precision, from the simple verset to the symphony or the prelude and fugue. His Traité d'improvisation à l'orgue (1926) bears witness to this. As a player, he showed a preference for the large organs he encountered in the United States: instruments equipped with numerous expressive devices, electric action and all the advantages of modern technology for registrations and combinations.

As a composer, Dupré left a succession of works which, along with those of Messaien and Alain, represent some of the last great examples of the virtuoso symphonic tradition in French organ music. Outstanding among the earlier pieces are the Three Preludes and Fugues op.7 and the Vêpres du commun des fêtes de la Sainte-Vierge op.18, in which Dupré foreshadows the dazzling style, the chromatic language and the elaborate counterpoint of his mature works such as the Variations sur un Noël op.20, the Suite bretonne op.21, the Symphonie-Passion op.23 or the Esquisses op.41. While displaying the same compositional rigour and harmonic refinement, Le chemin de la croix op.29 belongs to a more highly-charged expressive world, with a black humour extending the guilt-ridden avowals of Claudel's words. In the postwar period he made greater use of diminished and augmented intervals, 7ths or 9ths, although without undermining the tonal stability. In Nymphéas op.54 the title alludes to the pictorial play of colours that these 'eight impressions after Claude Monet' suggest by the evocative means available from Dupré's Meudon instrument. It is again light, that of the stained-glass windows of St Ouen in Rouen, which inspired Vitrail op.65, his last work.

As well as his music for the organ, Dupré composed several piano pieces (1916–24), chamber music (a sonata for violin and piano op.5, a quartet and a quartet and trio for strings and organ), and vocal works (including a De profundis op.17, composed in 1917 in memory of soldiers killed in the Great War, and the oratorio La France au Calvaire op.49). His experiments in combining the organ with other instruments, especially the piano, are also of interest, as are his substantial works for organ and orchestra: the Symphony in G minor op.25 and the Concerto in E minor op.31.

WORKS
(selective list)

ORGAN

Solo: 3 preludes and fugues, op.7, 1912; Scherzo, op.16, 1919; Vêpres du commun des fêtes de la Sainte-Vierge, op.18, 1919; Variations sur un Noël, op.20, 1922; Suite bretonne, op.21, 1923; Symphonie-Passion, op.23, 1924; Lamento, op.24, 1926; Sym. no.2, c♯, op.26, 1929; 7 pieces, op.27, 1931; 79 chorales, op.28, 1931; Le chemin de la croix, op.29, 1931–2; 3 élévations, op.32, 1935; Angélus, op.34 no.2, 1936; 3 preludes and fugues, op.36, 1938; Evocation, sym. poem, op.37, 1941; Le tombeau de Titelouze, 16 chorales, op.38, 1942–3; Suite, op.39, 1944; Offrande à la Vierge, op.40, 1944; Esquisses, op.41, 1945 [nos.2, 3 as '2 esquisses' (1946), no.1 as 'Esquisse' (1975)]; Vision, sym. poem, op.44, 1947; Miserere mei, op.46, 1948

Ps xviii, sym. poem, op.47, 1950; 6 antiennes pour le temps de Noël, op.48, 1952; 24 inventions, op.50, 1956; Triptyque, op.51, 1957; Nymphéas, op.54, 1959; Annonciation, 2 meditations, op.56, 1961; Chorale and Fugue, op.57, 1962; 3 hymnes, op.58, 1963; 2 chorales, op.59, 1963; In Memoriam, 6 pieces, op.61, 1965; Entrée, méditation, sortie, op.62, 1967; 4 fugues modales, op.63, 1968; 2 antiennes, op.64, 1969; Vitrail, op.65, 1969

With insts: Sym., g, op.25, org, orch, 1927–8; Ballade, op.30, pf, org, 1932; Conc., e, op.31, org, orch, 1934; Poème héroïque (Verdun), op.33, org, brass, 1936; Variations à 2 thèmes, op.35, pf, org, 1938; Résonances, org, orch, 1943; Sinfonia, op.42, pf, org, 1946; Qt, d, op.52, org, str trio, 1958; Trio, f, op.55, org, vn, vc, 1960; Sonata, a, op.60, vc, org, 1964

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: Les Normands, cant., chorus, orch, 1911; A l'amie perdue (A. Angellier), op.11, 7 songs 1v, pf/orch, 1911; Mélodies, op.6, 1913; Psyché (cant.), op.4, 1914; 4 motets, op.9, chorus, 2 org, 1916; De profundis, op.17, solo vv, chorus, orch, org, 1917; La France au Calvaire (orat, R. Herval), op.49, 1945–56; 2 motets, op.53, 1958

Inst: Sonata, op.5, vn, pf, 1909; Fantaisie, b, op.8, pf, orch, 1912; 6 preludes, op.12, pf, 1916; 3 pieces, vc, pf, 1916; 4 pieces, op.19, pf, 1921, no.4 'Cortège et litanie' arr. org/org, orch, 1921; Variations, c♯, op.22, pf, 1924

PEDAGOGICAL WORKS

Traité d'improvisation à l'orgue (Paris, 1926); Méthode d'orgue (Paris, 1927); Cours d'harmonie analytique (Paris, 1936); Données élémentaires d'acoustique (Paris, 1937); Exercices préparatoires à l'improvisation libre (Paris, 1937); Manuel d'accompagnement du plain-chant grégorien (Paris, 1937); Cours de contrepoint (Paris, 1938); Cours de fugue (Paris, 1938)

Edns: organ works by J.S. Bach (12 vols); C. Franck (4 vols); G.F. Handel (16 concs); F. Liszt; F. Mendelssohn; R. Schumann; Anthologies des maîtres classiques, series 1 (36 nos.)

Principal publishers: Bornemann, Leduc, Philippo, Gray

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N. Dufourcq: La musique d'orgue française de Jehan Titelouze à Jehan Alain (Paris, 1941, 2/1949)

B. Gavoty: Silhouettes d'organistes (Paris, 1944)

R. Delestre: L'oeuvre de Marcel Dupré (Paris, 1952)

B. Gavoty and R. Hauert: Marcel Dupré (Geneva, 1955)

N. Dufourcq: 'Hommage à Marcel Dupré', Orgue, no.140 (1971), 109–11

R. Smith: 'Dupré in the Twenties', Diapason, vii (1971), 26–7

M. Dupré: Marcel Dupré raconte . . . (Paris, 1972); Eng. trans. as Recollections (Melville, NY, 1975) [preface by O. Messiaen in Eng. edn]

Hommage à Marcel Dupré, 1886–1971, Musée d'art et d'histoire de Meudon, May–Oct 1982 (Meudon, 1982) [exhibition catalogue; incl. list of works, 40–43]

M. Murray: Marcel Dupré: the Work of a Master Organist (Boston, 1985)

C. Colleney: 'Marcel Dupré (1886–1971) ou la cause de l'orgue', Jeunesse et orgue, nos.65–7 (1986) [entire issue]

X. Darasse: 'Marcel Dupré', Guide de la musique d'orgue, ed. G. Cantagrel (Paris, 1991), 330–35

F. Sabatier: 'Mozart transcrit par Dupré', L'orgue, no.218 (1991), 1–7

R. Falcinelli: 'La Symphonie-Passion de Marcel Dupré', Orgue francophone, no.16 (1994), 5–25

FRANÇOIS SABATIER

Duprez, Gilbert(-Louis) (b Paris, 6 Dec 1806; d Paris, 23 Sept 1896). French tenor and composer. He sang as a treble in Fétis's incidental music to Racine's Athalie at the Comédie-Française, and later studied with Choron. His début at the Odéon (Il barbiere di Siviglia, 1825) and the première of his opera La cabane du pêcheur at Versailles the next year met with mixed success; he continued his studies in Italy after the Odéon closed in 1828. He soon distinguished himself as a tenore di grazia, but revealed his gifts as a dramatic tenor in Bellini's Il pirata at Turin in 1831. In the service of the impresario Alessandro Lanari, he enjoyed an almost uninterrupted run of successes in leading romantic roles, beginning with Arnold in the Italian première of Guillaume Tell (1831, Lucca), where he was the first tenor to sing the top high C as a chest note. Duprez scored a triumph as Percy in Donizetti's Anna Bolena in Florence in 1831 (repeating his success at his first appearance in Rome in 1834), before going on to create further Donizetti roles there – Ugo in Parisina (1833) and Henry II in Rosmonda d'Inghilterra (1834). The highlight of his stay in Italy was perhaps his creation of Edgardo in Lucia di Lammermoor (1835, Naples); apparently he advised his close friend Donizetti on the structure and composition of the last scene. With the interpretation of these roles his voice became progressively darker.

Returning to France, he was engaged at the Opéra, where he made his début in Guillaume Tell (1837), achieving immediate and overwhelming success with Paris audiences. His 'chest' C, in spite of the disappointment of Rossini, who compared it to 'the squawk of a capon with its throat cut', aroused wild enthusiasm and affected the taste of the public, who would listen to Guillaume Tell only when Duprez was singing. He created leading roles in Halévy's Guido e Ginevra (1838), La reine de Chypre (1841) and Charles VI (1843), Berlioz's Benvenuto Cellini (1838), Auber's Le lac des fées (1839), Donizetti's Les martyrs (1840), La favorite (1840) and Dom Sébastien (1843) and Verdi's Jérusalem (I Lombardi) (1847), and established himself as Nourrit's successor in Robert le diable, Les Huguenots, La Juive and La muette de Portici. He also sang in London (1844–5, Lucia) and toured Germany (1850). He taught at the Paris Conservatoire (1842–50) and in 1853 founded his Ecole Spéciale de Chant; during this time his own operas were being staged in Paris.

According to Scudo, Duprez was already outstanding as a student for the breadth and incisiveness of his phrasing, though his voice then was not large. Gradually he became the first great tenore di forza, despite a vocal tessitura limited in its lower range (as shown in his refusal to sing Pollione in Norma at Rome in 1834). In France he was praised as the first true Romantic tenor and for his excellent declamation and the smoothness of his canto spianato; but his acting style was said to be exaggerated. Presumably through forcing his voice, and also because of the great number of performances he gave during his years in Italy where he had to sing as many as six times a week, a decline set in early; Berlioz greatly admired him in the vigorous music of Benvenuto Cellini in 1838, though noting (Mémoires) that his voice had coarsened somewhat. The story of the famous tenor's rise and fall in Les soirées de l'orchestre is largely based on Duprez's career. He composed a number of operas and his writings include L'art du chant (1845) and Souvenirs d'un chanteur (1880), a valuable account of his times and distinguished contemporaries.

In 1827 he married Alexandrine Duperron (d 1872), a soprano who made her début at the Odéon that same year. She had a reasonably successful career, often singing with her husband during the Italian period. Her repertory included Imogene in Il pirata (1831, Turin) and Adalgisa (1834, Rome), a role in which she was warmly applauded. She retired from the stage about 1837. Their daughter Caroline (b Florence, 10 April 1832; d Pau, 17 April 1875) was a soprano leggero who also sang with her father, appearing in Paris and other French cities and (1851) in London; she created a number of roles at the Opéra-Comique.

WORKS

OPERAS

La cabane du pêcheur (oc, 1, E. Duprez), Versailles, 1826
Le songe du comte Egmont (scène lyrique, Duprez), Brussels, Monnaie, 25 Dec 1842
L'abîme de la maladetta (oc, 3, Duprez and G. Oppelt), Brussels, Monnaie, 19 Nov 1851; rev. as Joanita, Paris, Lyrique, 11 March 1852
La lettre au bon Dieu (oc, 3, E. Scribe and F. de Courcy), Paris, OC (Favart), 28 April 1853
Jélyotte, ou Un passe-temps de duchesse (opérette, 1), Paris, private perf., 7 April 1854
Samson (opérette, 4, A. Dumas père and Duprez), Paris, concert perf., 1 Oct 1857
Jeanne d'arc (grand op, 5, J. Méry and Duprez), Paris, Grand, 24 Oct 1865
La pazzia della regina (op, 2), Paris, private perf., 1877
Unperf.: Amelina (2, op); Tariotti (grand op); Zéphora (5, op)

OTHER WORKS

Le jugement dernier, orat, 3 parties, vs (Paris, ?1860)
Songs, incl. La fiancée d'Antar (Tu me veux) (E. Duprez), chant arabe (Paris, ?1840); Say not I have loved (C. Rosenberg), ballad (London, 1844); Le grillon (Triste à ma cellule) (M. Desbordes Valmore) (Paris, 1863); Maria (Quoi? vous mourez) (C. Maquet), cantilène (Paris, 1863); Nina la biondina (Son la Nina) (Paris, 1864); Saison nouvelle (Fuyez frimas), pastorale (Paris, 1864); La vue, l'ouïe et l'odorat, petit rien poetico-musical pour voix de ténor (1869)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BerliozM; ES (R. Celletti)
A. Elwart: Duprez: sa vie artistique, avec une biographie authentique de son maître Alexandre Choron (Paris, 1838)
L. and M. Escudier: Etudes biographiques sur les chanteurs contemporains (Paris, 1840)
E. Devrient: Galerie des artistes dramatiques de Paris (Paris, 1840–42)
H. Berlioz: Les soirées de l'orchestre (Paris, 1852/R, 5/1895; Eng. trans., 1956/R, 2/1973); ed. L. Guichard (Paris, 1968)
P. Scudo: Critique et littérature musicales, ii (Paris, 1859)
N. Desarbres: Deux siècles à l'Opéra (Paris, 1868)
Jarro [G. Piccinni]: Memorie d'un impresario fiorentino (Florence, 1892)
U. Morini: La Reale Accademia degli immobili ed il suo teatro 'La Pergola' (1649–1926) (Pisa, 1926)
G. Monaldi: Cantanti celebri (Rome, 1929)
G. Landini: 'Gilbert-Louis Duprez ovvero l'importanza di cantar Rossini', Bollettino del Centro rossiniano di studi (1982), 1–3, 29
J. Rosselli: The Opera Industry in Italy from Cimarosa to Verdi (Cambridge, 1984)
R. Celletti: Voce di tenore (Milan, 1989)
S. Corti: Edizione critica delle lettere del tenore G.L. Duprez nell'archivio dell'impresario teatrale Alessandro Lanari presso la Biblioteca nazionale di Firenze (diss., U. of Pisa, 1991)
M. Beghelli: 'Il "Do di petto": dissacrazione di un mito', Il jaggiatore musicale, iii (1996), 105–49

SANDRO CORTI

Dupuis, Albert (b Verviers, 1 March 1877; d Brussels, 19 Sept 1967). Belgian composer. While he was a student at the Verviers Conservatoire his work began to attract notice: a comic opera was performed at the town theatre when he was 18. In 1897 he settled in Paris, following the courses of d'Indy, Guilmant and Bordes at the Schola Cantorum; he won the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1903 with the cantata La chanson d'Halewyn. After a brief career as a conductor he was director of the Verviers Conservatory (1907–47). In his compositions he remained faithful to the teaching of the Schola Cantorum, using Franckian cyclic form in instrumental works. His 13 operatic pieces show the influence of Massenet, and it was to the theatre that his work was best suited.

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

Jean-Michel (nouvelle musicale, 4, G. Garnier and H. Vallier), Brussels, Monnaie, 5 March 1903
Martille (drame lyrique, 2, E. Cattier), Brussels, Monnaie, 3 March 1905
Le château de la Bretêche (drame lyrique, 4, P. Milliet and J. Dor, after H. de Balzac), Nice, 28 March 1913
La chanson d'Halewyn (légende dramatique, 3, L. Solvay), Antwerp, Vlaamse Opera, 14 Feb 1914
La passion (drame lyrique, 4, J. Méry and P. de Choudens), Monte Carlo, 2 April 1916
La barrière (drame lyrique, 3), Verviers, Grand, 26 Feb 1920
La victoire (tragédie antique, 4, H. Cain, after L. Payen), Brussels, Monnaie, 28 March 1923
Hassan (conte orientale, 5 épisodes, Dor), Antwerp, Royal, 5 Nov 1931
Ce n'était qu'un rêve (comédie féerique, 1, V. Gille), Antwerp, Royal, 26 Jan 1932

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Fantaisie rhapsodique, vn, orch, 1900–01; Sym., 1904; Sym., 1922–3; suites; sym. poems; Pf Conc.; Vn Conc.; Vc Conc.
Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, vn, pf, 1904; Str Qt; Pf Qt; 2 pf trios; Sonatine à la mode, wind qnt; works for vn, pf; va, pf; vc, pf; hn, pf; piano music
Vocal: orats, cants., songs, other works

MSS at Conservatoire de musique, Verviers

Principal publishers: Schott (Brussels), Eschig, Cranz, Sénart

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Bor: Albert Dupuis (Liège, 1935)
[R. Michel]: Un grand musicien belge méconnu: Albert Dupuis (Verviers, 1967)

HENRI VANHULST

Dupuis, Sylvain (b Liège, 9 Oct 1856; d Bruges, 28 Sept 1931). Belgian conductor and composer. He studied at the Liège Conservatoire (1865–76) and won the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1881 with the cantata Le chant de la création. The prize journey took him to Bayreuth and to Paris where he formed a friendship with d'Indy. Back in Liège he was appointed professor of harmony at the conservatory; from 1886 he conducted the choral society La Légia and in 1888 he founded 'Les nouveaux concerts'. He conducted at the Théâtre Royal de la Monnaie (1900–11) and he simultaneously directed the Brussels 'Concerts populaires'. Dupuis was responsible for introducing music from Wagner to Debussy into Belgium. He was elected to the Belgian Royal Academy in 1911 and was director of the Liège Conservatoire (1911–25). His compositions show a remarkable feeling for drama in a moderately advanced harmonic style.

WORKS
(selective list)

MSS at Centre de Documentation Musicale–Bibliothèque Gustav Mahler, Paris

Stage: Désespoir de Judas, incid music, Liege, 10 May 1896
Orch: Macbeth (1912); 2 suites; ov.; Concertino, ob, orch; Prélude et danse, vn, orch (1925); Poème, vc, orch (1928)
Chbr and solo inst: works for pf; org; vn, pf; vc, pf
Songs, cants., other choral works

Principal publishers: Schott, Muraille, Art Belge, Breitkopf & Härtel

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Jongen: 'Notice sur Sylvain Dupuis', Annuaire de l'Académie royale de Belgique, cxxi (1955), 197–217
J. Quitin: 'Le retour de Franck a Liège', RBM, xlv (1991), 85–96
M.-T. Roskam-Dupuis and F. Montfort: 'Quelques notes sur Sylvain Dupuis', RBM, xlvii (1993), 189–211
P. Gilson: 'Neuf lettres de Désiré Pâque à Sylvain Dupuis', RBM, xlvii (1993), 251–8
J.L. Zychowicz: 'Music Manuscripts in the Bibliothèque Musicale Gustav Mahler', FAM, xli (1994), 279–95

HENRI VANHULST

Dupuis, Thomas Sanders [Saunders] (b London, 5 Nov 1733; d London, 17 July 1796). English organist and composer. He was a chorister in the Chapel Royal, where he studied with Bernard Gates and John Travers and established lifelong connections with the younger choristers Philip Hayes and Samuel Arnold. He was elected a member of the Society of Musicians on 3 December 1758. Subscriptions were invited for his concertos op.1 on 11 October 1760. Earlier that year he also contributed to the pasticcio Antigona, prepared by Giardini for the King's Theatre. Dupuis married Martha Skelton of Fulham on 16 July 1765. He was regarded by his contemporaries as one of the finest organists in England and he was often called upon to design or 'open' newly installed instruments; he is said to have supervised the rebuilding of the Chapel Royal organ. Dupuis served as an organist from 1773 at the Charlotte Street Chapel, London, and in 1779, on Boyce's death, was appointed organist and composer of the Chapel Royal. He was one of the directors of the Handel Commemoration in 1784. On 26 June 1790 he took the degrees of BMus and DMus at Oxford; his degree piece was titled Ode to the Genius of Britain. Subsequently Dupuis instigated the formation of the Graduates Meeting, a group of musicians with degrees in London.

Dupuis' teaching activity is reflected in the didactic intent of most of his keyboard publications. The sonatas op.2 were among the earliest to offer the option of performance on the piano. Few of his compositions rise above the ordinary, although details found in the concertos reflect his improvisatory practices. In his Notebooks Haydn referred to him as 'a great organist'; Haydn was ecstatic in his praise after hearing Dupuis improvise fugues at St James's. In Burney's opinion (Rees's Cyclopaedia, 1819–20) 'he was a correct harmonist in his compositions and a good performer on the organ, with a fancy not very rich or original; but his finger was lively and he knew his instrument well'. In the obituary notice in the Gentleman's Magazine (lxvi, 62) he was praised as 'distinguished for good sense, knowledge of mankind, integrity and benevolence'. A substantial collection of Dupuis' church music was edited and published posthumously as Cathedral Music by his student and friend, John Spencer.

A son, the Rev. T. Skelton Dupuis (1766–95), provided texts for some of his father's and others' works, including the Ode on the Late Providential Escape of His Majesty (1786). Two sets of 'easy' songs by J.C. Luther were based mostly on Dupuis' poems, and his libretto Elijah was set by Callcott in 1785.

WORKS
printed works published in London

SACRED VOCAL

16 Double and Single Chants (*c*1775)
24 Double and Single Chants (*c*1795)
4 services and 14 anthems, ed. J. Spencer, Cathedral Music in Score (1797) [incl. engraved portrait]

Numerous MSS containing anthems, chants, hymns and services in GB-Cfm, Ckc, Lbl, Ob, Och; selections pubd in 18th-century anthologies

SECULAR VOCAL

op.
—	Song in Antigona, pubd in Favourite Songs (1760)
5	A Collection of 8 Songs, 1v, 2 vn, va, 2 hn, bc (hpd), and 6 Glees, 3–4vv, bc (1784)
—	Hail, Festive Day, ode, solo vv, chorus, pf, 1784, *Lbl
—	Ode on the late Providential Escape of His Majesty from Assassination (T. Skelton Dupuis), 3 solo vv, bc (1786)
—	Ode to the Genius of Britain, solo vv, chorus, orch, 1788, Lbl, Ob

Numerous songs and glees pubd singly and in 18th-century anthologies

INSTRUMENTAL

—	A Second Collection of 12 New Minuets, vn/fl, bc (hpd) (*c*1755)
1	6 Concertos, org/hpd, 2 ob/vn, 2 vn, va, vc, bc (1760)
2	[7] Sonatas, hpd/org/pf, vn (1768); also incl. Lady Coventry's Minuet with Variations
3	6 Familiar Lessons, hpd/pf (*c*1774); also includes [8] Variations on God Save Great George
4	8 Easy Lessons, hpd/pf (*c*1775)
6	6 Sonatas, pf/hpd, vn (1788)
'8'	6 Duettes, 2 vc, bc (*c*1790), ed. A. Pejtsik (Adliswil, 1995)
8	[11] Pieces ... for the use of Young Organists, org/hpd (1794)
10	A Second Set of [7] Pieces ... for the use of Young Organists, org/pf/hpd (*c*1795)
—	5 Concertos, org/hpd, orch (*c*1797)
—	9 Voluntaries, org (*c*1805)

6 voluntaries, org, ed. J. Spencer, Cathedral Music, iii (1797); prelude and fugue, org, 1789, *Lbl

WRITINGS

Rules for Playing a Thorough Bass (MS, *GB-Cu)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyH; DNB ('Dupuis, T.S.'; W.B. Squire); EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL

ABC Dario Musico (Bath, 1780)

C.F. Pohl: Mozart und Haydn in London (Vienna, 1867/R)

J.S. Bumpus: A History of English Cathedral Music 1549–1889 (London, 1908/R)

P. Scholes: The Great Dr Burney (London, 1948/R), ii, 119

C.L. Cudworth: 'The English Organ Concerto', The Score, no.8 (1953), 51–60

R.R. Kidd: The Sonata for Keyboard with Violin Accompaniment in England (1750–1790) (diss., Yale U., 1967), 299

Z.E. Pixley: The Keyboard Concerto in London Society, 1760–1790 (diss., U. of Michigan, 1986)

H.D. Johnstone and R.Fiske, eds.: Music in Britain: the Eighteenth Century (Oxford, 1990)

RONALD R. KIDD

Dupuits (des Bricettes), Jean-Baptiste (fl 1741–57). French composer and teacher of the harpsichord and hurdy-gurdy. He advertised himself as a student of (André) Campra and 'other great masters' in the Mercure (February 1753). His works are substantial in both quantity and quality, and merit something better than the total obscurity into which they have fallen, even though many are written for so unsatisfactory an instrument as the hurdy-gurdy.

In 1753 Dupuits opened a public school of music which by 1757 had expanded to include all instruments, and where 'lessons in the various styles are given every day except Sundays and holidays, and three times a week concerts for learning ensemble and keeping in time'. At some time, probably in the 1740s, he was employed by the Duke of Cambray. He was either very friendly with the engraver Jean Robert or was willing to spend considerable sums on the appearance of his publications, for nearly all have handsome pictorial title-pages by that artist. The collection of songs Les mille et une bagatelles is decorated with 30 designs. He was also close to the royal librarian, to whom he dedicated his hurdy-gurdy method, and with whom he exchanged large amounts of music, including the famous 'Bauyn' manuscript (F-Pn). The last record of him is a request for subscribers to a proposed guitar method in 1757.

His two grands motets are the work of a highly skilled craftsman. Quam delicta is 62 pages long, with ten movements, all differing in scoring or technique. His music for hurdy-gurdy pushes the instrument to the limit of its resources in the attempt to supply it with a respectable literature. The sonatas for harpsichord with hurdy-gurdy accompaniment include a fuga da capella and a canone, while the handsomely engraved Pièces de caractères are an attempt to adapt the titled and delicately detailed pièce de clavecin to the rustic instrument. The Italian sonatas for flutes or violins hover on the threshold of the style galant, most movements proceeding in long-breathed Baroque sweeps, occasionally broken by shorter phrases and modern melodic details. The method for hurdy-gurdy is lucid and very detailed in its explanation of the technique of the instrument and contains valuable comments on the performance of each movement of the six sonatas included with it.

WORKS

Published in Paris, undated: opp.1–4, 1741–2; opp.5–17, 1742–51; opp.18–19, 1751–7 [according to Mercure, June 1757]

op.
1	Principes pour toucher de la vièle avec 6 sonates
2	Première [-sixième] suite d'amusemens en duo, 2 insts; pubd separately
3	Sonates, kbd, hurdy-gurdy/other insts
4	Sonates ou suites, 2 hurdy-gurdys
5	Pièces de caractères, hurdy-gurdy, bc
6	Les mille et une bagatelles, pts1–6, 1v, bc
7	Cantatilles, 1v, bc; pubd separately: Les faveurs du sommeil, L'Inconstance, La Jeunesse, Pan et Syrinx
8	Les mille et une bagatelles, pts7–12, 1v, bc
9	Cantates, pubd separately: Le retour de Mars, 1v, orch; Le bouquet, 1v, hurdy-gurdy/other insts; Le retour de Thémire, 1v, insts; Les plaisirs de l'Himen, 2vv
10	Les mille et une bagatelles, pts13–18, 1v, bc
11	Menuets nouveaux exécutés aux comédies françaises et italiennes, insts
12	Les mille et une bagatelles, pts19–24, 1v, bc
13	Menuets nouveaux italiens et françois pour les bals, premier livre, 2 insts
14	Sei sonate, fl/vn, bc
15	Les mille et une bagatelles, pts25–30, 1v, bc
16	Sei sonate, 2 vn, bc, libro primo
17	Six sonates en duo, 2 vc/2 bn
18	[6] Concert, 5 en duo ('Recréations'), 2 vn/fl/ob; lost
19	Cours de leçons, ou nouvelle méthode de musique, première partie; lost

2 grands motets, 6vv, 2 vn/fl, va, b, bc; Quam delicta (Ps lxxxiii), Omnes gentes plaudit (Ps xlvi): in F-Pn

DAVID FULLER (with BRUCE GUSTAFSON)

Du Puy, (Jean Baptiste) Edouard (Louis Camille) (b Baigory, Basse Navarre, *c*1770; d Stockholm, 3 April 1822). French composer and singer. He was brought up by a paternal uncle in Geneva and studied in Paris with Charles Chabran (C.F. Chiabrano) (violin) and J.L. Dussek (piano). In 1786 he was appointed musician to Prince Heinrich of Prussia at Rheinsberg; he became Konzertmeister in 1788 and studied with C.F.C. Fasch in Berlin. In 1792 he was banished from Rheinsberg because, in the spirit of Voltaire, he interrupted a Sunday service by riding into church on horseback. After working as a touring violinist in Germany and Poland he went to Stockholm in 1793, where he joined the opera orchestra as a violinist. In 1795 he became a member of the Swedish Academy of Music. Two ballet pantomimes and others of his compositions were given at the Royal Opera. In 1799 he sang Pierrot in Grétry's Le tableau parlant and in D. Della-Maria's Le prisonnier and was given a 16-year contract. But political factors – in particular his threateningly emphatic diction of some lines in Gaveaux's Le petit matelot – led to his exile.

Du Puy went to Copenhagen, joining the opera orchestra as a violinist and making his stage début as Firman in the Singspiel Domherren i Milano with music by Claus Schall, adapted from the comedy Le souper imprévu, ou Le chanoine de Milan by A. Duval. A highpoint in his stage career was the première of his Ungdom og galskab ('Youth and Folly') in 1806, for which he composed the music and sang the role of Ritmester Rose. In 1807 Du Puy directed the first performance of Mozart's Don Giovanni in Scandinavia, singing the title role himself. In 1809 he sang the first act of this opera with his pupil Crown Princess Charlotte Frederika (consort of Crown Prince Christian Frederik, afterwards Christian VIII) at Amalienborg Palace; but scandal broke out later in the year when Du Puy was discovered in bed with the princess and had to leave Denmark at two hours' notice.

He went to Paris, but with the election of Napoleon's commander Jean Baptiste Bernadotte to the Swedish throne he was able to return to Stockholm; he became court violinist and singer and from 1812 enjoyed high esteem as a conductor. He sang 18 roles at the Opera, including Mozart's Figaro and Don Giovanni and repeating the part of Ritmester Rose in Ungdom og galskab. Though not powerful, his voice (according to Beskow) had agility and a wide range in both tenor and baritone registers, and he always sang with verve and feeling. His music has fleeting charm, evident particularly in the graceful ballads and merry drinking-songs of the operas and divertissements. For many years the lively tunes in Ungdom og galskab assured his popularity in Denmark. His colourful life inspired Auguste Bournonville's vaudeville-ballet Livjaegerne paa amager.

WORKS
(selective list)

MSS in DK-Kk, S-L, Skma, Sm, Sn, St

THEATRICAL WORKS
first produced in Stockholm unless otherwise stated

Arlequin magicien par amor (comic ballet-pantomine, 2, J. Marcadet), Arsenal, 18 Dec 1793
Stråtrövaren, eller Den ädelmodiga soldaten [The Highwayman, or The Noble Soldier] (ballet-pantomine, 1, L. Deland), Arsenal, 18 Dec 1794
Ballet music for an epilogue to R. Kreutzer's Lodöiska, 2 Nov 1795
De ädelmodiga bönderna [The Noble Peasant] (scene, C.J. Lindegren), Arsenal, 10 Feb 1797 [perf. with N. Dezède: Les trois fermiers]
Ungdom og galskab, eller List over list [Youth and Folly, or Trick for Trick] (Spl, 2, N.T. Brunn, after J.N. Bouilly: Une folie), Copenhagen, Royal, 19 May 1806; as Ungdom och dårskap, eller List not list (trans. C.G. Nordforss), Stockholm, Opera, 31 Oct 1814
Föreningen [Union] (divertissement, 1, G. Löwenhielm, Nordforss), 2 Jan 1815; for the union of Sweden and Norway
Jenny Mortimer, eller Röverbandet i skotska bergen [Jenny Mortimer, or The Bandits in the Scottish Highlands] (incid music, 3), 5 June 1817
Björn Jernsida (op, Valerius), unfinished
Skattan och tjenstpigan i Palaiseau [The Magpie and the Maid of Palaiseau] (divertissement dansé, J.L. Abergsson, after Caignez, Daubigne: La pie voleuse), 21 April 1818
Hamlet (incid music, W. Shakespeare), Arsenal, 26 March 1819
Sömngångerskan (incid music, 2, L. Hjortsberg, after Scribe, Delavigne: La somnambule), 6 Oct 1820
Felicie, eller Den romanska flickan [Felicie, or The Maid of Rome] (comic op, 3, Hjortsberg. after E. Mercier-Dupaty), 19 Dec 1821
12 other works, 1797–1820

OTHER WORKS

Coronation music for Carl XIV Johan, 2S, T, B, 4vv, orch, Stockholm, 11 May 1818
4 other works for state occasions, 1813–17
Orch and chbr music, pf pieces, songs

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (R. Cotte) [with detailed work-list]
C. Palmstedt: Edouard Du Puy, minnersteckning (Stockholm, 1866)
B. von Beskow: Lefnadsminnen (Stockholm, 1870)
A. Buntzen: Edouard Dupuy (Stockholm, 1902)
R. Neiiendam: Ungdom og galskab (Copenhagen, 1923)
J. Neiiendam, ed.: Personalhistorisk tidsskrift, lvi (Copenhagen, 1935), 265–71 [letters from Du Puy]
F. Eibe: 'Dupuy: forskningen', DMt, xi (1936), 135–40
F. Lauterbach: Edouard du Puy 1771–1822 (Copenhagen, 1949)
A. Kjaerulf: Nordens Don Juan (Copenhagen, 1952)

KLAUS NEIIENDAM

Du Puy, Henry. See PUTEANUS, ERYCIUS.

Dupuy, Martine (b Marseilles, 10 Dec 1952). French mezzo-soprano. She studied in Marseilles, and after winning several international singing competitions she sang Eurydice in Campra's Le carnaval de Venise at Aix-en-Provence in 1975. At Martina Franca (1976–86) she sang Isaura (Tancredi), Ismene (Traetta's Antigona), Bellini's Romeo, which became one of her finest roles, Lady Pamela (Fra Diavolo), Arsace (Semiramide) and Handel's Julius Caesar. She made her Metropolitan début in 1988 as Handel's Sextus. Dupuy's other roles include Monteverdi's Octavia and Penelope, Mozart's Sextus and Cecilius (Lucio Silla), Gluck's Armide, Charlotte, Nicklausse and Giulietta (Les contes d'Hoffmann), Eboli and Mother Marie (Dialogues des Carmélites), which she has also recorded. However, her impeccable style, smoothly produced voice and strong coloratura technique are best displayed in her bel canto repertory, which embraces such roles as Rossini's Arsace, Cenerentola, Rosina, Isabella, Néocles (Le siège de Corinthe) and Malcolm (La donna del lago), which she sang at La Scala (1992) and has recorded, Donizetti's Maffio Orsini and Jane Seymour, and Adalgisa in Norma.

ELIZABETH FORBES

Duquesnoy [Lanctin, Lanetin], Charles-François-Honoré (b Beuzet, 18 May 1759; d Brussels, 9 May 1822). Flemish tenor and composer. He showed special gifts as a choirboy; from 1781 to 1786 he was at the Paris Opéra and in 1787 he became first countertenor at the Théâtre de la Monnaie in Brussels. He had started composing religious music at an early age but turned to opera in the early 1780s. In 1787 he produced in Brussels a two-act opéra-ballet, Almanzor, ou Le triomphe de la gloire, which must have been inspired by the repertory in Paris. In 1794, following the French invasion, he changed his name to Duquesnoy and moved to The Hague, where he lived until 1795. He then established himself in Hamburg and, with the help of some other musicians from the Monnaie theatre, founded an opera house for French immigrants. His stage music does not depart in any way from the standard idioms of French opera between 1780 and 1800.

In 1802 Duquesnoy returned to his native land, where he devoted himself wholly to religious music. He became a choirmaster, first at Aalst and then, in 1814, at the church of St Michel et Ste Gudule in Brussels; there he exercised an important influence on Roman Catholic church music in the Netherlands.

WORKS

STAGE

Diane jalouse, ou Le triomphe de l'amour (opéra, 1, H.D.C.), Bordeaux, 1784
Almanzor, ou Le triomphe de la gloire (opéra-ballet, 2, d'Aumale de Corsenville), Brussels, 1787
Le mari vengé, ou Le mystificateur mystifié (oc, 3), Brussels, Monnaie, 1789
Le prix des arts, ou La fête flamande (opéra, 1), Brussels, 20 Juen 1791, B-Ac
L'hommage de Bruxelles (scène lyrique), 1793, Ac
Le médecin et l'apothicaire (opéra, 3, after C.D. von Dittersdorf: Doktor und Apotheker), Brussels, 2 May 1794
La fête des mariages, ou Le tirage de la milice (oc), Hamburg, 1798
L'héroine villageoise (ballet-pantomime, 4), St Petersburg, Aug 1800, F-Pn
Le mari garçon (opéra), B-Ac

SACRED

Missa cui titulis Vivat rex!, 4vv, orch, 1816, B-Bc; 5 other masses, incl. 4 with orch, 1779–1819, Ac
1 Mag, 10 motets and psalms, 4vv, orch, 1775–1812, Ac; 3 other motets, 4vv, orch, 1816–21, Bc
2 cantatas, Ac; 3 sacred odes (Rousseau), 1787, Ac
Regina coeli, 1764, F-Pn (doubtful)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; FétisBS; VannesD
L. Renieu: Histoire des théâtres à Bruxelles (Paris, 1928)
A. Corbet: 'Onbekende werken van Charles Duquesnoy (1759–1822)', RBM, ii (1947–8), 44–54
M. Couvreur, ed.: La Théâtre de la Monnaie au XVIIIe siècle (Brussels, 1996)

AUGUST CORBET/JOHN LADE

Dur (Ger., from Lat. durus: 'hard'). Major (see MAJOR (i)), as in G dur (G major), Durklang (major triad) etc. The term is contrasted with moll (from Lat.: 'soft'), which is German for 'minor'. The names dur and moll fundamentally derive from the two forms of the letter 'b' in musical notation: b durum, or 'square b', was used to denote the pitch b♮, and it is this form of the letter that developed into the modern natural sign (♮) and sharp sign (♯); b molle, or 'round b', was used for the pitch b♭, and this form of the letter developed into the modern flat sign (♭). The use of these terms is also reflected in the names of the hexachords (see HEXACHORD) in which they appear; the hexachordum durum (or cantus durus) always included a B♮, the hexachordum molle (or cantus mollis) a B♭. The present meaning of dur and moll seems to have occurred first in Andreas Werckmeister's Die nothwendigsten Anmerckungen und Regeln, wie der Bassus continuus oder General-Bass wol könne tractiret werden (1698).

JULIAN RUSHTON

Durán, Domingo Marcos (b Garrovillas, Cáceres, *c*1460; d Santiago de Compostela, before 5 Sept 1529). Spanish theorist. He studied liberal arts and philosophy in Salamanca. In 1525 he was a singer in Santiago de Compostela and from 1526 maestro de capilla there. Between 1492 and about 1504 he published two treatises on music. The first, Lux bella, is very brief and is written in Spanish and Latin. The style and content of these treatises are more practical than theoretical, and in their manner of presentation they are very like the work of medieval theorists. Durán believed that music had primarily a religious function, and deplored its profane usage. He put his own interpretation on its traditional triple division, the enharmonic genus and the evaluation of the major and minor semitone, discussing in some detail both solmization and the practices of hexachord mutation and accidentals. He classified Gregorian modes into 'regulares', 'mixtos', 'irregulares', 'comixtos' and 'respectivos', with the priority given to the seventh degree; he also discussed the expressive effects attributed to the different modes. In his discussion of compositional technique he formulated precise rules of counterpoint and admitted greater harmonic freedom in syncopation. His Sumula de canto de órgano is a valuable source of information on mensural practice; he discussed in great detail the proportional system and the various mensuration signs prevailing before his own time. But he recognized the changes taking place and was clearly forward-looking in his ideas, accepting that a binary relationship between notes had become the norm, and relating the new theories based on this to earlier practice.

WRITINGS

Lux bella (Seville, 1492, 2/1518/R)
Comento sobre Lux bella (Salamanca, 1498/R)
Sumula de canto de órgano, contrapunto y composición vocal e instrumental práctica y especulativa (Salamanca, *c*1504/R)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StevensonSM; SubiráHME
J. Subirá: Introduction to D.M. Durán: Lux bella (Barcelona, 1951)
F.J. León Tello: Estudios de historia de la teoría musical (Madrid, 1962/R)
J. Subirá: Los tres tratados musicales de Domingo Marcos Durán (Madrid, 1977)

F.J. LEÓN TELLO

Duran, Josep [Durán, José] (b Cadaqués, nr Roses, *c*1730; d Barcelona, 24 Jan 1802). Spanish composer. In 1748 he was admitted as a singer to the musical chapel of the Palau de la Comtessa in Barcelona. In June 1749, sponsored by the Marqués de Vilafranca y de los Vélez, he moved to Naples and studied with Durante. He returned to Barcelona in December 1754 and became maestro de capilla of the Palau de la Comtessa. Between 1756 and 1757 he was embroiled in a controversy with Jaime Casellas over a censure made by the latter to a madrigal composed by Duran during his stay in Naples. Casellas reproached Duran for the use of certain compositional techniques originating from the Neapolitan School and totally opposed Casellas's Baroque aesthetic vision. Duran wrote two operas for the Teatre de la S Creu, in Barcelona. His first opera seria, Antigono, was performed in 1760, to celebrate Queen Amalia of Saxony's nameday. His second opera, Temistocle, on a text by Metastasio was performed two years later at the nameday of King Carlo III. Although Duran retired from being maestro de capilla of the Palau de la Comtessa in June 1780, he continued composing for the chapel. Between 1782 and 1783 he corresponded with Padre Martini and both composers exchanged and revised each other's works. Duran contributed to Martini's projected Storia della musica, providing information on Hispanic music and sending copies of music. Duran was one of the first composers to introduce the Italian style into Spain. He was also one of the first to perform operas there, at a time when Italian opera was prominent in most European theatres. On the other hand, Duran's modern musical thinking favoured a search for more modern stylistic alternatives, in line with musical developments in other European countries. This was undoubtedly his principal contribution to the enrichment of Hispanic music in the 18th century.

Only 17 of Duran's works survive (mostly sacred works, in E-Bbc, Mn, Mp, Manresa Cathedral, TAc, Vilafranca del Penedès, Museu de Preveres and I-Bc) as well as the librettos to his two operas, six oratorios and eight villancicos. His knowledge of the traditional Hispanic Baroque style is demonstrated in his Latin church music, though he adopted formal schemes and more modern Italianate stylistic techniques in his church music in the vernacular. The villancicos reveal some influences from the Italian cantata: the traditional estribillo–coplas structure is replaced by recitatives alternating with lyrical arias. The result is the so-called villancico-cantata, which is usually accompanied by an orchestra. Duran also composed three overtures (ed. A. Cazurra, Barcelona, 1995). In these he adopted the Italianate pattern of three movements, Allegro–Andante–Allegro, with a simple framework. The movements contain elements of Classical sonata form.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LaborD
F. Pedrell: Diccionario biográfico y bibliográfico de músicos y escritores de música, españoles, portugueses e hispanoamericanos, antiguos y modernos (Barcelona, 1894–7)
A. Martín Moreno: Historia de la música española, iv: Siglo XVIII (Madrid, 1985)
R. Alier: L'opera a Barcelona (Barcelona, 1990)

ANNA CAZURRA

Duran, Profiat [Isaac ben Moses] (d southern France or Spain, *c*1414). Philosopher, physician and grammarian. He discusses music in the introduction to his grammatical treatise Ma'aseh Efod ('The Work of Ephod', 1403), which survives in 28 manuscript sources. Two kinds of music are described: cantillation, or the melodic formulae for intoning the scriptures (ta'amei ha-miqra); and the melodies for piyyutim, or post-biblical religious hymns. The author's main concern is with cantillation, for unlike the piyyutim that, according to him, appeal to the senses, cantillation appeals to the mind. It is used for both liturgical reading (the Bible, the Mishnah, prayers) and study. Duran's preference for cantillation follows from the premise that the Torah is perfect, hence a preoccupation with its content is essential for attaining happiness on earth and forever after.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Friedländer and J. Kohn, eds.: Maase Efod: Einleitung in das Studium und Grammatik der hebräischen Sprache von Profiat Duran (Vienna, 1865)
J.S. Levinger and I. Garbell: 'Duran, Profait', Encyclopaedia judaica, ed. C. Roth and G. Wigoder (Jerusalem, 1971–2, 3/1996)
I. Adler, ed.: Hebrew Writings Concerning Music in Manuscripts and Printed Books from Geonic Times up to 1800, RISM, B/IX/2 (1975), 126–30

DON HARRÁN

Duran, Simeon (ben Zemah) (b Mallorca, 1361; d Algiers, 1444). Rabbi, kabbalist and philosopher. Music is discussed in three different passages in his Magen avot ('The protection of the Fathers') which survives in seven manuscript sources, not all of them complete. Three themes are emphasized: music in relation to speech; te'amim as distinct from piyyutim; and the spiritual importance of te'amim (see JEWISH MUSIC, §I, 3(i)). Under the first theme the author described music as inherent to speech, indeed, 'musical speech' (ha-nigun asher ba-dibur) consists of three elements: consonants, vowels and musical formulae for intoning the sacred texts; the power of music was recognized in ancient Israel, where, after the example of King David, the Levites employed song for reciting the sacred texts in the temple liturgy. Under te'amim, the author differentiated between three kinds of melody, according to whether they were used for chanting the Pentateuch, the Prophets or the Hagiographa; he described their various syntactic, hermeneutic, melodic and rhythmic qualities. The te'amim are to be distinguished from the melodies for piyyutim, which have discrete intervals and measured rhythm ('inflection and lengthening') and often draw for their music on Arabic, French or Christian songs (as contrafacta). Turning to the spiritual force of the te'amim, the author started with a double premise: music is essential for transmitting the content of the Biblical texts; and of all arts, music is the most metaphorical. He then proceeded to a kabbalistic exegesis whereby te'amim are related to the sefirot, or the different emanations of God.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Encyclopaedia judaica, ed. C. Roth and G. Wigoder (Jerusalem, 1971–2/R, 3/1996), vi, 302–6
I. Adler, ed.: Hebrew Writings Concerning Music in Manuscripts and Printed Books from Geonic Times up to 1800, RISM, B/IX/2 (1975), 130–39

DON HARRÁN

Durand. French firm of publishers. The firm was founded as Durand-Schoenewerk & Cie on 30 December 1869 and that same day bought the catalogue of Gustave-Alexandre Flaxland as well as his premises at 4 place de la Madeleine, Paris. Schoenewerk withdrew from the business on 19 November 1891, and his co-founder Auguste Durand (b Paris, 10 July 1830; d Paris, 31 May 1909) reorganized the firm the next day as A. Durand & Fils, in partnership with his son Jacques Massacrié Durand (b Paris, 22 Feb 1865; d Avon, Seine-et-Marne, 22 Aug 1928). Jacques Durand succeeded his father, and taking as partner his cousin Gaston Choisnel (d 9 June 1921), renamed the firm Durand & Cie on 23 December 1909. Another cousin, René Dommange, joined the firm in July 1920 and became a partner on 23 April 1921. At Jacques Durand's death, his widow (d 1958) became a partner; subsequent partners have been Maquaire (1937–44), Adrien Raveau (from 1944), Mme René Dommange and Marcel and Jean Dommange (from 1959). The company became a 'société à responsabilité limitée' from 19 June 1947. Guy Kaufmann (b Neuchâtel, 12 May 1923) was appointed general director in 1972. The firm continued to operate from its original premises until 1980, when it moved to 21 rue Vernet; early in 1987 the firm moved to 215 rue du Faubourg St-Honoré.

Auguste Durand, who was a classmate of Franck and Saint-Saëns at the Paris Conservatoire, studied the organ under Benoît and was organist at St Ambroise, Ste Geneviève, St Roch and St Vincent-de-Paul. He was also a music critic; his compositions include sacred and secular vocal music and many works for the piano and organ. He also composed, arranged and published extensively for the harmonium.

Jacques Durand also studied at the Conservatoire, where he developed lasting friendships with Dukas and Debussy. He studied harmony with Dubois and composition with Guiraud. Besides being a prolific composer, he edited and transcribed quantities of works by others. His writings include Eléments d'harmonie (1919); Cours professionel à l'usage des employés de commerce de la musique (i: Edition musicale, historique et technique, ii: Abrégé de l'histoire de la musique, both 1923); Quelques souvenirs d'un éditeur de musique (1924–5); and Lettres de Claude Debussy à son éditeur (1927). Durand was purchased in 1982 by Jean-Manuel de Scarano, but retained its individuality. Unlike many other French publishing houses, Durand has no catalogue of light music, and conducts all its international promotion from Paris.

Durand's plate numbers are, in general, reliably chronological. By 1875, after six years of publishing activity, the series of plate numbers had exceeded 2100; by 1890 the catalogue had grown to more than 4000 items, passing 6100 in 1902, 7000 in 1908, 9000 in 1915, 10,600 in 1924, 12,100 in 1932 and 15,000 in 1985.

The first major composer to be published regularly by Durand-Schoenewerk & Cie was Saint-Saëns: the firm issued Samson et Dalila (1877), Danse macabre (1875) and the Third Symphony (1886), along with almost all the remainder of his mature output. Le carnaval des animaux was published in its complete form by Durand in 1922, after the ban imposed by the composer on performance or publication was revoked on his death in 1921. Durand-Schoenewerk & Cie first published a work by Debussy in October 1884 (the piano-vocal score of L'enfant prodigue). In 1894 the firm issued the String Quartet and in 1903 composer and publisher began a close relationship which was to last until Debussy's death. A succession of masterpieces emerged: La mer (1905; see illustration), the Préludes (book 1, 1910; book 2, 1913), Jeux (piano reduction, 1912; full score, 1914), En blanc et noir (1915), the Etudes (1916) and the three sonatas (1915–17) among many others, including some works (notably Pelléas et Mélisande) acquired from other publishers. Ravel's Sonatine was published by Durand in 1905; thereafter almost all the composer's major works were issued by the firm, including Daphnis et Chloé (piano score, *c*1912; full score, 1913). L'heure espagnole (piano-vocal score, 1908; full score, 1911), L'enfant et les sortilèges (1925) and Boléro (1929), along with new editions of works acquired from other publishers, including the String Quartet and Shéhérazade.

Durand's pre-eminent position in French music publishing is emphasized by the other composers whose music was issued by the firm, among them Dukas, Roussel, Fauré, Schmitt, Falla, Widor, Büsser, Milhaud, Poulenc, d'Indy (including his Cours de composition musicale), Ibert, Auric, Jolivet, Koechlin and Duruflé. In June 1931 Durand published Messiaen's Preludes for piano and subsequently issued a number of his early works, including Poèmes pour Mi (1937), Chants de terre et de ciel (1939), Quatuor pour la fin du temps (1942), Visions de l'amen (1946), Vingt regards sur l'enfant Jésus (1947), Trois petites liturgies de la Présence Divine (1952) and the Turangalîla-symphonie (composed 1948, published 1953).

In 1894 Durand began to publish the collected works of Rameau, with Saint-Saëns as general editor. This undertaking comprised 18 volumes by 1924 but has never been completed. In 1914 the firm embarked on the series known as Edition classique Durand & Fils, an edition of the classics which was intended to have a strong French identity and be a commercially viable rival to similar editions of Peters and Breitkopf & Härtel. Principal editors included Saint-Saëns (piano works of Mozart), Fauré (piano works of Schumann), d'Indy, Debussy (complete works of Chopin), Ravel (piano works of Mendelssohn), Roussel (chamber works of Mendelssohn), Dukas, Schmitt and Guilmant (Archives des maîtres de l'orgue). Support of French contemporary music was demonstrated by the series of Concerts Durand for new chamber music, produced by Jacques Durand from 1910 to 1913, and a biennial cash prize for the best French symphonic composition, which the firm instituted in 1927 (since discontinued). Composers taken on in recent years include Gilbert Amy, Nicolas Bacri, Ahmed Essyad, Renaud Gagneux, Philippe Hersant, Gerd Hühr, François-Bernard Mâche and Philippe Manoury. Durand is also publisher (sole publisher since 1996) of the new Debussy Edition.

Cover of the first edition (piano score) of Debussy's 'La mer' (Paris: Durand & Fils, 1905)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Durand: 'L'édition musicale', Encyclopédie de la musique et dictionnaire du Conservatoire, pt. 2/6 (Paris, 1931), 3334

1869/1969: Livre du centenaire des Editions Durand & Cie (Paris, 1969)

A. Orenstein: 'Scorography: the Music of Ravel', Musical Newsletter, v (1975), 10

A. Devriès and F. Lesure, eds.: Dictionnaire des éditeurs de musique français (Geneva, 1979–88)

ROBERT S. NICHOLS/NIGEL SIMEONE, JEREMY DRAKE

Durand, August (Fryderyk). See DURANOWSKI, AUGUST (FRYDERYK).

Durand, Joël-François (b Orléans, 17 Sept 1954). French composer. He received his musical education at the Musikhochschule in Freiburg im Breisgau with Ferneyhough (1981–4), and at Stony Brook University, New York, with Arel and Semegen (1984–6). He was appointed assistant professor of composition at the University of Washington, Seattle, in 1991, and invited to teach at the University of California at San Diego in the autumn of 1992. He became associate professor at the University of Washington in 1996. He has been a regular guest at the Darmstadt summer school, where he won the Kranichstein prize in 1990. In 1993 he was co-director of the composition course of the Centre de la voix de Royaumont. He gave masterclasses at the Saarbrücken course in interpretation and performing practice in 1996.

Durand was at first influenced by postwar European serialism. During the 1990s he developed a growing interest in the linear developmental processes involved in dramatic, large-scale harmonic progressions. Consequently, he has developed techniques based on both the principle of melodic contours which vary on repetition, and on more traditional motivic principles. His work is characterized by an intense and introspective lyricism.

WORKS
(selective list)

Str Trio, 1980–81; Roman, vn, 1983; . . . d'asiles déchirés . . ., pf, 1983; So er, 20 insts, 1985; 3 mélodies, Mez, inst ens, 1986; Lichtung, 10 insts, 1987; Die innere Grenze, str sextet, 1988; L'exil du feu, 16 insts, elecs, 1989–91; Un feu distinct, fl, cl, vc, pf, 1991; B.F., ein Mittelpunkt, fl, cl, vn, va, db, pf, hp, perc, 1992; La mesure des choses I: la musique de l'air, cl, 1992; La mesure des choses II: la mesure de la mer, pf, 1993; Pf Conc., 1993; Le chemin, pf, 1994 [based on Pf Conc., 1993]; Les raisons des forces mouvantes, org, 1996; Par le feu recueilli, fl, 1997; 5 Pieces, orch, 1998; La terre et le feu, ob and 12 insts, 1999; La mesure des choses III, VI, ob and va, 1999

Principal publisher: Durand

WRITINGS

'La sonate de Barraqué', Entretemps, v (1987), 89–117
'Découvrir la musique de Ruth Crawford Seeger', Voix nouvelles (Royaumont, 1992)

JEAN-NOËL VON DER WEID

Durango, Juan de (b Falces, Navarre, before 14 Sept 1632; d El Escorial, 1696). Spanish composer and harpist. He entered the Real Monasterio de San Lorenzo de El Escorial on 5 March 1650, serving at various times as choirboy and adult singer, harpist and maestro de capilla; his skill as a harpist was praised by Luis de Santa María in Octava sagradamente culta (pubd 1664), an account of the monastery's centennial celebration. The Escorial manuscript legacy attests Durango's role as one of the monastery's most important composers and scribes before Antonio Soler; he copied his own works and many by other composers.

His 12-voice mass and a number of large villancicos are fine examples of polychoral writing. Although villancicos are often in a more popular style, the estribillo of the Corpus Christi villancico A tirar convida el amor (ed. in Laird, 1986, ii, 41–9) shows Durango's ability as a contrapuntist. The work's solo coplas are in triple metre with hemiola, a trait of the Spanish vernacular style. The source for his tonos humanos also includes works by Manuel del Valle. Many of Durango's works include continuo parts for harp, some elaborately figured with ciphers indicating possible transpositions, which were played by the composer himself.

WORKS

MSS in E-E unless otherwise stated; mostly 8 voices/12 voices, basso continuo

2 masses: 4vv, 1732; 12vv
16 pss: incl. 2 Beatus vir, 2 Credidi, 3 Dixit Dominus, 3 Laudate Dominum omnes gentes
3 hymns; 6 Mag settings; 2 Nunc; 2 Benedicamus Domino (1 with Alleluia); lit to BVM; Officium defunctorum responsory; lesson for burial services; seq for Pentecost; grad for Easter; 3 ants; piece for Corpus Christi, Sp. text
14 villancicos: 7 for San Lorenzo, 1671, 1680, 1684; 4 for Corpus Christi; 1 for Corpus Christi, 1699; 1 for San Jerónimo; 1 for entrance of the king into El Escorial, V
43 tonos humanos

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. de Larrea Palacin: 'Catálogo de monjes músicos en El Escorial', Revista de archivos, bibliotecas y museos, lxxi (1963), 371–400
S. Rubio and J. Sierra: Catálogo del Archivo de Música del Monasterio de San Lorenzo El Real de El Escorial (Cuenca, 1976)
P.R. Laird: The Villancico Repertory at San Lorenzo el Real del Escorial c1630–c1715 (diss., U. of North Carolina, 1986), i, 187, 243–9, 390–91, 504, 523, 562–3; ii, 41–9
J. Sierra: 'La música de escena y tonos humanos en el Monasterio de El Escorial', La música en el Monasterio del Escorial: El Escorial 1992, 267–319
P.R. Laird: Towards a History of the Spanish Villancico (Warren, MI, 1997), 74, 79, 87–91

PAUL R. LAIRD

Durán-Loriga, Jacobo (b Madrid, 9 June 1958). Spanish composer. He began his studies at the Madrid Conservatory (1971–83), where the teachers who exerted the greatest influence on him were Bernaola and de Pablo. He played in the early music ensemble Atrium Musicae (1979–82) and was one of the composers in the Grupo del Bierzo from its foundation in 1985. He completed his composition studies at the Cologne Musikhochschule, specializing in electro-acoustics under the guidance of Humpert. On a grant from the Alexander von Humboldt Foundation, he carried out research on the speaking voice and its manipulation by computer. The electro-acoustic works Les Djinns (I and II) of 1987 are the products of this experience, which had already been preceded by a few pieces in the same genre such as Disforia and Entropía (both 1984), and Contrafacta (1985). His favoured fields of research are computer-aided composition and the relationship between musical analysis and psycho-acoustics. His most notable works include the opera Timón de Atenas (1992), Cántico de Mallick (1993) for narrator, choir and orchestra, Spa (1986), Ocaso boreal (1997) for orchestra, and Greffé (1986) for oboe and instrumental ensemble. His formal structures and melodic style suggest the influence of traditional, not necessarily European, elements.

WORKS

Dramatic: Tata mía (film score, J.L. Borau), 1986; Timón de Atenas (chbr op, 2, L. Carandell), 1992, Madrid, April 1992
Vocal: Cántico de Mallick (P. Casariego), spkr, chorus, orch, 1993; Clamor, S, Mez, eng hn, b cl, tuba, va, db, hp, perc, 1985; Viento saltando, 2 choruses, 1985; Niña, arranca las rosas, 1v, 1998
Orch: Kammerkonzert, chbr orch, tape, 1983; Toccata, pf and chbr ens, 1984; Spa, 1986; Petit ensemble bleu, chbr orch, 1987; De sol a sol, 1988; Ocaso boreal, 1997
Chbr: 2 piezas, 10 insts, 1983; Trío in memoriam E. Sempere, cl, va, vc, 1985; Greffé, ob solo, b cl, bn, vn, va, vc, db, perc, 1986; 2 bocetos, vc, wind ens, 1987; Petit ensemble jaune, hp solo, 11 str insts, 3 perc, 1987; Postscriptum, insts, tape, 1987; Libro de las constelaciones, fl, ob, cl, bn, perc, pf, vn, va, vc, db, 1988; Tropos, fl solo, cl, vc, pf, 1989; La isla perdida, pf solo, ob, 2 cl, bn, hn, vn, va, vc, perc, 1990; Marsias y Apolo, gui, requinto, chbr ens, 1998
Solo inst: Per a Jep, fl, 1988; Obstinato galopante, pf, 1995
Elecs: Disforia, 1984; Entropía, 1984; Contrafacta, 1985; Les Djinns I–II, 1987

Principal publisher: Pygmalión (Madrid)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.L. Pérez de Arteaga: 'Jacobo Durán-Loriga: golpe de Timón', Revista reseña, no.229 (1992), 2–5

J.L. Pérez de Arteaga: 'Comentario de "Ocaso Boreal"', 47 Festival Internacional de Música y Danza de Granada, Granada, 1998 [programme book] 4–6

MARTA CURESES

Duranowski [Durand], August (Fryderyk) (b Warsaw, *c*1770; d Strasbourg, 1834). Polish violinist and composer. He was born to a Polish mother and a French father, the émigré Durand who, according to Chybiński, was the leader of the orchestra at the court of Duke Ogiński in Słonim; according to Fétis he was later in the service of the King of Poland. He studied the violin with his father and in Paris from 1787 with Viotti, becoming leader of the Brussels opera orchestra in 1790. In 1794–5 he toured Italy and Germany as a virtuoso, but for unknown reasons he interrupted his career about 1796 to enter the French army. He was imprisoned in Milan, but once released he returned to his former activities as a soloist. In 1809–10 he gave concerts in Warsaw, where he lived for some time; his fantasias on operatic arias and songs were particularly well received, as were his national dances, for example those in his Potpourri op.11. During the next four years he also played in Leipzig, Dresden, Kassel, Frankfurt, Mainz, Darmstadt, Prague and possibly St Petersburg. After a brief tenure as leader of the court orchestras in Kassel and at Aschaffenburg (1812), he settled permanently in Strasbourg as leader of the theatre orchestra, occasionally absenting himself for short periods to perform in Germany and France.

Duranowski was one of the most eminent violinists of his time. His unprecedented success as a virtuoso may be attributed to his large, full tone and extraordinary technique, especially in trilling, bowing and passage-work. He had a remarkable memory and played with precision and fire; he was particularly fond of the works of Rode and Viotti and his own fantasias on the melodies of national songs. His technique fascinated the young Paganini, who declared that it was Duranowski who had shown him new possibilities in violin playing and to whose revelatory talent he owed his own. His works, almost exclusively for the violin, were performed by other violinists during his lifetime (especially by Serwaczyński in Poland) and published in Leipzig, Offenbach and Paris, often in arrangements for various combinations of instruments.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Vn Conc., A, op.8 (Leipzig, *c*1810); Potpourris: from Mozart: Die Zauberflöte, perf. Warsaw, 1810, D, op.10 (Leipzig, 1811), B, op.11 (Offenbach, 1814); 2 airs variés (Bonn, 1813)

Chbr: Duos, 2 vn: op.1, bks I and II (Leipzig, *c*1797), op.2, bk I (Leipzig, 1798), op.2, bk II (Leipzig, 1804); Duos, vn, vc, opp.3, 4, 6 (Leipzig, 1799), also arr. for vn, 2 vc (Leipzig and Paris, before 1817); 3 thèmes variés, vla, vc (Leipzig, 1799); Fantasie suivie de 2 airs variés, 2 vn, va, vc, op.12 (Leipzig, 1812); 6 caprices ou études, vn, op.15 (Mainz, 1813); 2 airs variés, vn, op.5 (Paris, Leipzig, Vienna, before 1817); Potpourri z pieśni patriotycznych [Potpourri of Patriotic Songs], pf (Warsaw, 1810); Fantaisie avec 2 airs variés (sur le mazurek), pf, op.9 (Leipzig, 1811)

Vocal: 6 Lieder mit Guitarre-Begleitung (F. Schiller) (Offenbach, 1814); 6 deutsche Arien (Dresden, before 1817); Mon âme est triste (romance) (Leipzig, before 1834)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; SMP

A. Sowiński: Les musiciens polonais et slaves (Paris, 1874/R; Pol. trans. 1874/R as Słownik muzyków polskich dawnych i nowoczesnych)

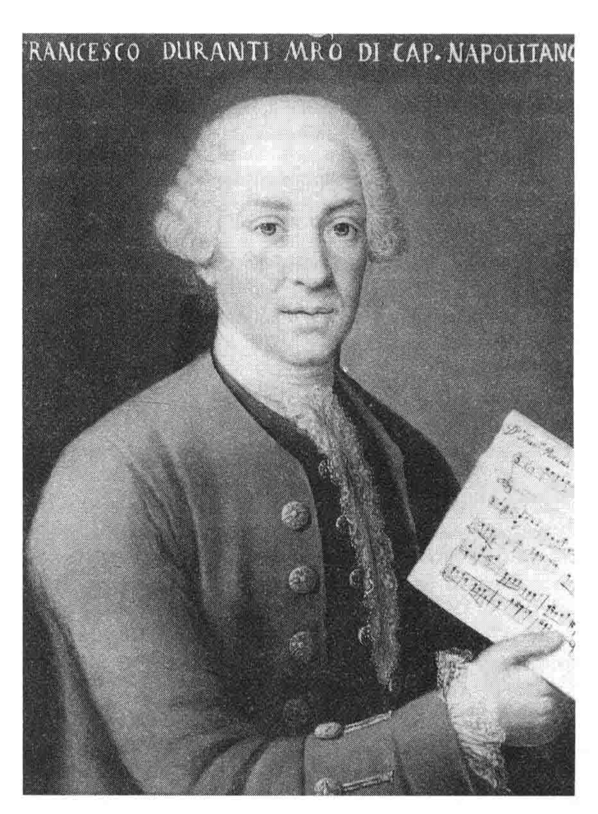
A. Chybiński: Słownik muzyków dawnej Polski [Dictionary of early Polish musicians] (Kraków, 1949)

B. Chmara-Żaczkiewicz: 'Duranowski August Fryderyk', Encyklopedia muzyczna PWM (Warsaw, 1985)

BARBARA CHMARA-ŻACZKIEWICZ

Durante, Francesco (b Frattamaggiore, Aversa, 31 March 1684; d Naples, 30 Sept 1755). Italian composer. He was a leading composer of church music and an outstanding teacher of international repute.



1. LIFE. He was the seventh of 11 children of Gaetano Durante and Orsola Capasso. His father, a woolcomber, served as sexton and singer at S Maria degli Angeli e S Sossio, Frattamaggiore, where he and his wife had married on 31 October 1674 and where all their children were baptized. His uncle, Don Angelo Durante (*c*1650 – after 1704), was a priest and musician who in 1690 succeeded Cristoforo Caresana as primo maestro of the Neapolitan Conservatorio di S Onofrio a Capuana, of which he was rector until 1699. Don Angelo composed several drammi sacri (Gara amorosa tra Cileo, la Terra e 'l Mare, Monteforte, 1697; S Giuliano martire in Sora, Naples, 1700; L'Anacoreta reale S Onofrio di Persia, Naples, 1705), as well as church music, of which a Dies irae attributed to him is extant (two voices and continuo, D-BNu). Nothing is known of Francesco's education until after his father's death on 18 March 1699, when his uncle took over his musical training. Don Angelo left Naples to assist his widowed sister-in-law and her children, and Nicola Sabini assumed his duties at the conservatory; but in 1702 he returned to his post at S Onofrio and Francesco enrolled as a convittore to study with his uncle and the violinist Gaetano Francone. Three years later Francesco left the conservatory, and on 13 June 1705 his first known creative effort, a scherzo drammatico entitled Prodigii della divina misericordia verso I devoti del glorioso S Antonio di Padova, was performed in Naples.

Little is known about Durante's life between then and 1728, when he was appointed primo maestro of the Neapolitan Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo. Choron and Fayolle (1810) stated that he studied with Pasquini and Pitoni in Rome for five years, and although that was later disavowed (by Villarosa and Florimo), circumstantial evidence seems to support them. Girolamo Chiti, in a letter to Padre Martini of 10 September 1746, identified Durante as a 'scolaro di Pitoni'; Chiti himself had been a pupil of Pitoni about 1713, so his statement has some authority. Durante could have been in Rome either between 1705 and 1710, which would have allowed studies with Pasquini (who died in 1710), or between 1711 and 1719. The only dated composition by Durante from the first period, his Missa S Ildefonsi of 1709, could have been written for the Spanish church in Rome or Naples. By July 1710 he was in Naples, where he began teaching at the Conservatorio di S Onofrio. He remained there for only six months, leaving the institution on 12 January 1711, perhaps to return to Rome or to study there with Pitoni for the first time. A register of the masters and professors of the Congregazione and Accademia di S Cecilia in Rome, compiled in 1851, lists Durante as a maestro there for 1718, but offers no documentation. Several aspects of Durante's music have been interpreted as pointing to Roman influences: his concentration on sacred music to the exclusion of opera, his preoccupation with the problems of a stile alla Palestrina, and his interest in keyboard music and the concerto. He was, however, in Naples on 4 January 1714, when he married Orsola de Laurentis, 12 years his senior, and is certain to have been present in the city at the first performance of his sacred drama La cerva assetata ovvero L'anima nelle fiamme on 18 February 1719. Thereafter, nothing is known of Durante's whereabouts until 1728. It could have been during these years that he travelled to Austria [Bohemia] and Saxony, as some older sources report (though for periods when he now is known to have resided in Naples). There is, however, no documentary evidence other than some unique sacred works attributed to Durante that are preserved in Brno, Prague and Dresden in local manuscript copies dating from the early to mid-1720s.

In October 1728 the governors of the Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo appointed Durante, now aged 44, primo maestro replacing the elderly Gaetano Greco: his election attests to his high reputation. About the same time he must have been invited to write music for the choruses of Duke Annibale Marchese's tragedy Flavio Valente, published in the duke's Tragedie cristiane (Naples, 1729). With this contribution he joined the ranks of the then celebrated older and younger Neapolitan composers, Carapella, Mancini, Sarro, Nicola Fago, Porpora, Hasse, Vinci and Leo, who had written music for other tragedies in the collection. Dated copies of his compositions now become more numerous: a Litanie (1731), Laudate pueri (1732), Missa breve (1734), and the oratorio Abigaile (libretto, 1736). His well-known Sonate per cembalo divisi in studii e divertimenti, however, were not published in Naples in 1732, as has been assumed, but between January 1747 and December 1749, since the dedication refers to the Principe d'Ardore, Don Giacomo Francesco Milano as ambassador to France (which he was between 1741 and 1749) and as Cavaliere di Santo Spirito (which he was named in January 1747). The prince, a student of Durante, dedicated a Salve regina for one voice and instruments 'al suo maestro Francesco Durante' D-MÜs, WRgs). Durante's Requiem in G minor is dated 27 November 1738, and his Missa in Palestrina (in a copy by Famulari) 17–18 October 1739. Also from those years come the two Atti di Contrizioni for the alumni of the Conservatorio dei Poveri di Gesù Cristo. Among his students there were Pergolesi, who completed his education under Durante's guidance, Girolamo Abos, Domenico Terradellas and for about two years Joseph Doll.

After ten years of service, Durante resigned from the conservatory, and in September 1739 he was succeeded by Francesco Feo. The reasons for his resignation are unknown, and there is no information about his activities until 1742, when he was called to the Neapolitan Conservatorio di S Maria di Loreto. This oldest and largest of the four Neapolitan conservatories had been without a primo maestro since October 1741, when Porpora went on leave to Venice and did not return; with the death of Giovanni Veneziano on 13 April 1742 it had lost its secondo maestro. On 25 April 1742 the governors elected Durante primo maestro, at the same time appointing P.A. Gallo to assist him as secondo maestro. Under Durante's directorship the Loreto conservatory regained stability and quality of education. During his 13 years' service such later masters as Pasquale Anfossi, Tommaso Traetta, Pietro Guglielmi, Alessandro Speranza, Antonio Sacchini and Fedele Fenaroli received their musical education there. When, with the death of Leo on 31 October 1744, the primo maestro position at the Conservatorio di S Onofrio became vacant, Durante, then 60, was awarded the succession as from 1 January 1745. He also petitioned the king to appoint him Leo's successor as primo maestro of the royal chapel. A competition, however, was held, in which Durante took part on 21 April 1745 along with Giuseppe de Majo, Giuseppe Marchitti, Nicola Sala and others. The judges were Constanzi of Rome, Perti of Bologna, Jommelli of Venice, and Hasse, then also in Venice. Jommelli praised Durante's a cappella setting on the cantus firmus Protexisti me Deus, of which Perti was critical; the appointment went to Majo, vicemaestro of the chapel (although only Hasse had found his works satisfactory). Durante continued to hold his positions at both S Maria di Loreto and S Onofrio, and during the last ten years of his life was venerated as the most distinguished of all Neapolitan teachers. According to tradition Nicolo Piccinni became Durante's favourite pupil, of whom he is supposed to have said: 'The others are my pupils, but Nicolo alone is my son'. Dated compositions from his last decade include the five-voice Miserere for the basilica of S Nicola, Bari, the Requiem in C minor for eight voices, performed in 1746 at S Giacomo degli Spagnoli in Rome, an F major mass (1749), the F minor Litany (1750), and the componimento sacro S Antonio di Padova (1753).

Francesco Durante: portrait by an unknown artist, mid-18th century (Civico Museo Bibliografico Musicale, Bologna)

Durante married three times. His first wife died on 27 February 1741; early biographies characterized her as a 'maledetta vecchia' who made the 27 years of their marriage a misery. On 26 January 1744 he married his second wife, Anna Furano, of Naples, who is said to have brought happiness back into his life; but she died on 10 August 1747. Only four months later, on 18 December 1747, he was married again, to the 22-year-old Angela Anna Carmina Giacobbe, the niece of Anna Furano and a domestic in his household. Reports of Durante's character and personality are primarily based on anecdotes related by Giuseppe Sigismondo, who had known the composer, and by Giovanni Furno, who related stories he had heard from his teacher Carlo Cotumacci, Durante's successor at S Onofrio. According to these sources Durante was a man of simple manners, but profoundly wise in matters concerning his art and a respected arbiter over questions of harmony and counterpoint. He was dedicated to his pupils' welfare and education; they in turn, like Paisiello, who began his studies at S Onofrio during the last year of Durante's life, always spoke of him with enthusiasm and admiration. He was buried in S Lorenzo Maggiore in Naples.

2. WORKS. Unlike his Neapolitan contemporaries Porpora, Feo, Leo and Vinci, who attracted international notice with their operas, Durante achieved recognition through his church music, along with some vocal chamber and instrumental works. Although a career like his was not unusual for the older masters, or among Roman musicians of his day (like Bencini, Chiti or Cannicciari), it was remarkable for a Neapolitan. Almost all the composers active in Naples during the second quarter of the 18th century, including Nicola Fago and Ignazio Prota, at least attempted to compete in opera before devoting themselves completely to church music and teaching. Of those Neapolitan maestri who followed Durante's example, notably P.A. Antonio Gallo, Carlo Cotumacci and Lorenzo Fago, none equalled his reputation. In 1705, after leaving S Onofrio, Durante, like many a Neapolitan student before and after him, composed a theatrical work. The libretto to Prodigii della divina misericordia was by Abbentio Rolandi, and even included a comic role in Neapolitan dialect. However, the music is lost, and it is not even known how it was received. It did not gain him – or he did not seek – a commission for an opera. His second effort in sacred drama, La cerva assetata (1719), was according to Florimo dry and monotonous, too strict and old-fashioned in style to be successful. Since his choruses for Flavio Valente (1729) offer little insight, and his music to Abigaile (1736) is lost, any judgment on Durante's approach to the dramatic genre must rest on his S Antonio di Padova of 1753. Surprisingly for a work written only two years before his death, this dramma sacro does not seem old-fashioned but, like other works of his late period, shows Durante in tune with the stylistic tendencies that the younger Neapolitans had begun to pursue in their operas during the 1740s. It contains several accompanied recitatives, and its da capo arias show vigorous, often contrasting gestures as well as effective vocal lines. In total, however, it reveals less concern for dramatic intensity than for pleasant musical entertainment. Basically his was not an operatic talent, yet in his masses, requiems, litanies and Lamentations he could provide moments of strong expression. The absence of opera by him was perhaps caused by both circumstances and critical self-awareness.

Any assessment of Durante's development as a composer is troubled by questions concerning the authenticity of manuscript attributions, and restricted by the fact that few of his works can with certainty be assigned to his early years. The Missa S Ildefonsi of 1709, which requires three violins, chorus and continuo, shows its proximity to late 17th-century practices. Its Gloria excludes the words of the intonation, subdivides into sections rather than formal numbers, and contains ensembles a 2 and a 3, but no solo aria. Most of Durante's surviving compositions were written after he settled at Naples in 1728: they reflect the art of the mature composer with firm control over his craft, often imaginative and forward-looking, not insensitive to the traditions of church music that he inherited, and above all responsive to the changing stylistic currents of his time – that is to say, to the situation in Naples. His work encompasses all genres and styles of liturgical and devotional music, from the large, representational orchestral 'number' masses and psalms to a cappella or accompanied stile breve settings; from the motet-cantatas, litanies and Lamentations for chorus, solo voices and orchestra to the cantate spirituali and Holy Week lessons for solo voices and continuo. In his choral numbers, unlike Nicola Fago or Feo, he preferred four- and five-part settings, with, in the latter, one or both sopranos serving as the solo, concertato voices. Also characteristic for Durante are a number of works or arrangements for two sopranos and bass (e.g. the Requiem in A minor and the Dixit Dominus in B♭). Double chorus textures occur, with few exceptions, only in works of his last decade. After Scarlatti, Durante was the first composer in Naples to set several complete mass cycles in a cappella stile antico. One of these he explicitly labelled 'Missa in Palestrina' (D minor, four voices, 1739). He was well able to handle the contrapuntal techniques of the old style, and even alluded to Palestrina's Missa 'In te Domine speravi'; but because of his own deep-rooted feeling for harmonically guided phrasing he recreated only the Palestrina style's outer appearance and mannerisms. These masses in strict style remain isolated in his work. In later years he allowed his a cappella (with continuo) settings to follow freely his own expressive dictum (e.g. in the Miserere per la Chiesa di S Nicolò di Bari and the two Misericordias Domini settings).

Leo, too, occupied himself seriously with the traditional style from the 1730s onwards, and much has been made of the difference in approach which the two masters present and which is said to have split Naples into the camps of 'Durantisti' and 'Leisti'. The difference has been explained (by Fellerer) as concerning the question whether old and new style should and could achieve a symbiosis ('Durantismo'), or whether they should remain separated, with the one treated strictly, the other in as modern a manner as possible ('Leismo'). It seems, however, that historicism overstated the problem. To set parts of the Kyrie or the 'Christe', the 'Cum sancto' or 'Sicut erat', and the 'Amen' as fugues in stile antico fashion was a Neapolitan tradition by the first quarter of the 18th century; both Durante and Leo adhered to it. Both also attempted in many of their works to unify older and modern practices through a stile misto. The true controversy was more likely based on nothing more than the academic question of whether the interval of the 4th should be regarded as consonance or dissonance and in what circumstances (RosaM). The stylistic difference between the two masters was less one of goal than one of result, caused by character and temperament. It has been stated that 'Durante is sentimental and Leo is not' (Dent). If 'sentimental' is understood in 18th-century terms, then the characterization makes a point. Leo was conservative, and had a stricter, more vigorous counterpoint. Durante was also a master of learned device, but favoured lighter, more transparent, often pseudo-contrapuntal textures. His stile moderno comprised startling dissonances, expressive use of dynamics, diminished chords and chromaticism (e.g. Salve regina, 1739; Dixit Dominus, 1751) as well as thematic and harmonic contrasts (motet Tacete sonate; Missa, 1753), and had a tendency towards periodic phrasing and clearcut cadential structure that could produce a truly popular tone (masses in pastorale; Laudate pueri, 1732). Many of his smaller choral works in motet style (e.g. Vespro breve; Dixit Dominus a 3) were written with ease of vocal performance in mind, while in his arias he made considerable demands on the virtuosity of singers but often attempted to integrate coloratura passages into a larger design.

Compared with other Neapolitans, Durante was not prolific. His concern was not quantity; instead he strove, within the limits of a style beset by standard vocabulary, formulae and genre traditions, towards the realization of a variety of individual concepts and exemplary solutions. In his six Sonate per cembalo, published by Phillipus de Grado at Naples, he explored formal as well as technical aspects of keyboard music. Each sonata combines and contrasts an extended fugal 'studio' with a short, non-fugal 'divertimento', united by key and sometimes by motivic elements. Emphasis on variety and on synthesis of diverse stylistic and formal features distinguish his nine Concerti a quartetto, the most significant Neapolitan contribution to the genre. Probably written during the late 1730s or early 40s, their formal plans include wholly original successions of tempo contrasts (as in the concertos in E♭ and A, 'La pazzia'). Interplay of solo and tutti is fluent and stresses participation of the viola. His three-movement Harpsichord Concerto in B♭ with violins, cello and double bass is the most notable of the few keyboard concertos by early 18th-century Italians. Here contrapuntal inclinations are held in check, and the outer movements are dominated by a playful abandon befitting the virtuoso and entertaining nature of the solo concerto.

It is one of the remarkable aspects of Durante's career that with old age he did not have to resort to repeating himself in routine fashion. His creative imagination remained fertile until death. His Messa de' morti for Rome (eight voices, C minor) of 1746 is among the first in a series of masterworks composed during his last decade and, aside from any theological considerations of what constitutes 'true church music', must be counted as the most important orchestral requiem of the early 18th century. Distinctive shape and character, thematic as well as structural, a preoccupation with special expressive effects and orchestration, and a concern for unifying multi-movement structures mark all his late works. The 'Quoniam' of the F major Missa in afflictionis tempore (1749) is an echo concerto for soprano solo, two trombe da caccia, oboes, strings (with violin passages marked 'grazioso') and continuo. Instruments partake in presenting the fugue subject independently of the chorus in the concluding 'Cum sancto', in which the home key of the Kyrie (F) rather than the Gloria (D) is re-established. In the 'Qui tollis'-'Qui sedes' movement of the great A major mass (eight voices, 1753), a four-voice 'choro da lontano' echoes sections of the soprano solo, providing a theatrical effect. In the Missa col canto fermo in D, the hymn Sancte Michael defende nos dominates the contrapuntal textures of the Kyrie and 'Christe', and reappears in the 'Cum sancto' at the end of the Gloria. In the five-part Magnificat in B♭, the closing 'Sicut erat' is a near-literal repeat of the opening chorus with its psalm tone cantus firmus; such recapitulations were to become a tradition with Neapolitan composers in the second half of the century, particularly in settings of the psalm Dixit Dominus. Durante's fondness for experimentation is shown in the opening orchestral Larghetto of the motet Cessent corda, in D (five solo voices and chorus), which begins in accompanied recitative style on a dissonant chord, then follows an unorthodox harmonic progression, reaching a cadence in the tonic only in the 11th bar, whereupon a brief allegro follows.

It was without doubt his dedication to matters of his art, and his openness to new ideas, which made Durante a sought-after and venerated maestro; nearly 20 years after his death Burney could observe that his 'masses and motets are still in use, and models of correct writing with the students of several conservatories of Naples'. Many of his scores reveal the teacher. It is telling that he labelled his cantus firmi (Protexisti me Deus, 1745) and his canons (Messa de' morti, 1746), and wrote 'si nota' to draw attention to a learned device hidden in the parts (Missa col canto fermo). His approach to the teaching of musicianship and composition can be viewed through his Partimenti ... per ben suonare il cembalo, extant in variously titled copies, which progress from basic cadential exercises to fugal and free-style improvisations over a variety of bass patterns. (That Vincenzo Bellini and Alfredo Catalani owned copies of these partimentos attests their use throughout the 19th century.) The countless solfeggios attributed to him run the gamut of vocal exercises and include duos and trios ('canoni'). Two popular 'arias by Durante', which persistently appear even in modern anthologies of Italian songs, Danza, danza fanunciulla and Vergin tutt' amore, are nothing but solfeggios to which texts and elaborate piano accompaniments were added in the 19th century. The most famous of his didactic compositions became his XII duetti (or madrigali) da camera, in which he transformed recitatives from solo cantatas by Alessandro Scarlatti into expressive, often highly chromatic duos, by adding a second vocal part and interludes, and considerably modifying and extending the originals. These Duetti may be called brilliant examples of 18th-century 'parody technique'. To Burney it seemed 'as if art and refinement in this species of composition could go no further'.

The central position that Durante held in the educational life of Naples, and the fame of his many pupils, from Pergolesi to Paisiello, prevented his name and work from being forgotten after death. Rousseau (1767) exuberantly extolled him as 'the greatest master of harmony of Italy, that is to say, of the whole world'. Although voices were raised taking exception to Rousseau's overstatement (Hasse, for example, thought Durante to be 'not only dry, but baroque, that is coarse and uncouth'), most late 18th-century critics looking backward were attracted by his style, in which the late Baroque anticipated the Classical, and contrapuntal dexterity was tempered by a natural amenity. To Grétry (Mémoires, 1789), therefore, he was the undisputed master of 'contrepoint sentimental'. Works attributed to Durante are preserved in over 1000 manuscripts from the 18th and 19th centuries, and a number of them were included in the anthologies of old masterworks published by Choron and Porro in France and Rochlitz and Commer in Germany. Performances of his music, particularly the Missa in Palestrina and other a cappella works, were fostered through the Cecilian movement. The most popular and widely performed of Durante's sacred works, however, was the five-part Magnificat in B♭ (second version), which Kretzschmar (Führer durch den Konzertsaal, ii/1, 1888) praised as 'in a certain sense the ideal setting' of the Marian canticle and Hanslick (Aus dem Tagebuche eines Musikers, 1892) was moved to call a 'Tondichtung which in the beauty of religion celebrates the religion of beauty'. The modern historical point of view has abandonded these assessments; Durante's importance as a focal point in the development of 18th-century Neapolitan church music, and the merit of his contributions to instrumental music, remain unchallenged, however.

WORKS

Vocal music is with instruments unless otherwise stated; only autographs, unique or rare copies and extensive collections are noted

SACRED DRAMAS

Prodigii della divina misericordia verso I devoti del glorioso S Antonio di Padova (scherzo drammatico, A. Rolandi), Naples, street perf., 13 June 1705, music lost, lib I-Nn

La cerva assetata ovvero L'anima nelle fiamme della gloria (dramma sacro), Naples, 18 Feb 1719, lost

5 (monodic) choruses for Flavio Valente (tragedy, Duke Annibale Marchese), in A. Marchese dei Marchesi di Camerota: Tragedie cristiane (Naples, 1729), D-Bsb, I-Bc, Mc, Nc

Abigaile (dramma sacro), Rome, Oratorio de' RR PP della S Filippo Neri, 22 Nov 1736, music lost, lib CDN-Tu

S Antonio di Padova (dramma sacro, G. Terribilino), Naples, Oratorio de' RR PP della Congregazione di S Filippo Neri, 1753, I-Vsmc

MASSES, MASS MOVEMENTS

25 masses (Ky-Gl): Missa S Ildefonsi, e, 5vv, 1709, *D-MÜs; Missa breve, F, 4vv, 1734, *F-Pc; G, 8vv, 1742, GB-Lbl [4vv missing]; Missa in afflictionis tempore, F, 5vv, 1749, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, I-Nc [without obs]; A, 8vv, 1753, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; C, 8vv, CZ-Pak; C, 5vv, D-Dl [2 copies, 1 with Cr, a, 4vv, and alterations by J. Zelenka], I-Fa; Missa col canto fermo, D, 5vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, I-Nc; Missa in pastorale, D, 4vv, Nc, PIp, PIst; D, 4vv, F-Pc [solo vv missing]; D, 4vv, GB-Lbl; D, 4vv (SSAB), I-Nc; F, 3vv (SSB), bc, *BGi; G, 5vv, GB-Lbl; G, 4vv, I-PAc; Missa in pastorale, A, 4vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Missa in pastorale, A, 4vv, I-Rvat; B♭, 5vv, CZ-Pak, D-Dl [with addns and alterations by Zelenka]; B♭, 4vv, CZ-Pak [2 copies, 1 attrib. Pellegrini]; B♭, 4vv, Pak [2 copies, 1 attrib. Ursini]; B♭, 4vv, F-Pc, GB-Lbl [Qui tollis is separate], I-Nc [no Qui tollis]; c, 5vv, F-Pc; c, 4vv, CZ-Pak, D-LEbh [with autograph alterations by J.S. Bach, see BWV, Anhang 26, and without attrib. to Durante]; d, 4–8vv, D-Müs [incl. separate copy of a Gl, C, 4vv, 1724]; a, 5vv, MÜs [attrib. Angelo Durante], US-Bp

2 masses (Ky-Gl-Cr), both doubtful: G, 4vv, NL-At; a, 5vv, F-Pc

3 a cappella mass cycles: C, 3vv (ATB), org, GB-Lcm; C (without Cr), 3vv (TTB), org, D-Bsb, F-Pc, Vnm, ed. in Musica sacra, ii/11 (n.d.); Missa in Palestrina, d, 4vv, org, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-BGc, Nc [dated 17–18 Oct 1739] and over 30 other copies, ed. V. Dufaut (Paris, 1821)

Mass cycle, a, 3vv (SSB), org, Mc [2 copies, 1 with Funzione delle palme, 4vv, org, and proper of mass for Palm Sunday (int, grad, off, post communion)]

Gl, D, 8vv, GB-Lcm; Cr, D, 4vv, I-Mc; Cr, D, 4vv, Mc; Cr, G, 4vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Cr, G, 4vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Cr, A, 4vv (SSTB), I-Nc, Td; Cr, a, 4vv, D-Dl [with mass, C, 5vv, and addns by Zelenka]; Cr-San-Benedictus-Ag, D, 4vv, F-Pc

3 Requiem masses: c, 8vv, Pc, *GB-Lbl [dated 1746]; g, 4vv, F-Pc, I-Mc, Nc [dated 1755], Nf [dated 27 Nov 1738]; a, 3vv (SSB), D-Mbs, MÜs

3 Requiem masses, all doubtful: F, 4vv, I-Bc; F, 4vv, Sd; G, 3vv (SSB), GB-Lbl, inc.

OTHER SACRED VOCAL

13 motets: Ad presepe venite (Motetto in pastorale), 4vv, *GB-Lbl; Ave virgo sancti amoris, S, *Lbl; Cessent corda, D, 5vv, *Lbl; Cito pastores (à pastorale), 4vv, *Lbl, I-Nc [O sapienta eterna]; Ecce pietatis [Dormine benigne Jesu] (Nonna in pastorale), S, Nc; Inter choros virginales, 5vv, GB-Lbl; Jam si redit luminosa, 8vv, *Lbl; Jam videtur, 4vv, 1743, F-Pc, GB-Lbl [Inter coeli delitias]; O vos chori triumphales, CZ-Pak; Sacerdotes sancti, S, A, ?1713, D-MÜs; Surge aurora, 4vv, *GB-Lbl; Surge fama, 5vv, *Lbl; Tacete sonate, 4vv, *Lbl

Ants, hymns, offs, seqs: Alma Redemptoris, E♭, B, Dec 1739, Lbl, ed. in Musique sacrée, vii (Paris, n.d.); Alma Redemptoris, g, S, 1739, A-Wn; Ego sum panis, 4vv, bc, GB-Lbl; Inviolata integra, S, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, ed. A. Lafitte (Paris, 1859); Iste confessor, 4vv, Lbl; O divi amoris (Inno per S Francisci), 4vv, *Lbl; O glorioso Domina, A, 5vv, Lbl; Pange lingua, 5vv, Lbl, Tantum ergo ed. in Musique sacrée, xviii (Paris, n.d.); Per signum crucis, 4vv, org, I-Mc, ed. F.X. Witt, Cantus sacris (Regensburg, 1874); Salve flos (cantus de scto Wenceslao Martyre), S, C-BM; Salve regina, F, B, Nc; Salve regina [per il Sigr Praun], d, B, 1739, *GB-Lbl; Salve regina, d, B, B, unacc., 1753, *Lbl, ed. in Musica sacra, iii (n.d.); Salve regina [per gli alunni del Conservatorio di S Onofrio], c, S, D-MÜs; Stabat mater, S, S, A, (SA), org, F-Pc [frags.*]; TeD, 5vv, Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Ac [4vv], Nc [4vv]; Veni sponsa Christi, D, 4vv, F-Pc; Veni sponsa Christi, D, 5vv, *GB-Lbl; Vexilla regis, 4vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, ed. in Musique sacrée (Paris, n.d.)

Canticles: Mag, D, 4vv, bc, A-Wn, D-Mbs; Mag, B♭, 5vv, *I-Nc, revised version, 4vv, D-Dl, F-Pc, I-BGc [attrib. G.B. Pergolesi], Nc, ed. D. Hellmann (Stuttgart, 1968), arr., 4vv, org, D-MÜs [dated 1746], F-Pc, I-Nc, Rvat, arr. G. Jannaconi, 8vv, org, D-MÜs, inc.; Mag, B♭, 4vv, I-PIp; Mag, B♭, 4vv, org, A-Wn, D-Mbs; Mag, E♭, 4vv, *Bsb, arr. 3vv (SSB), org, *Bsb, I-Mc; Mag, a, 4vv, org, Mc; Mag, a, 4vv, GB-Lbl, I-Nc, US-BEm; Mag, a, 8vv, 1752, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Nunc dimittis, 5vv, 1749, Lbl

Pss: Beatus vir, C, 4vv, Lbl; Beatus vir, C, 4vv, Lbl; Beatus vir, C, 5vv, ?1715, D-MÜs; Beatus vir, A, 5vv, ?1735, MÜs, attrib. Francesco Feo, Dl, *I-Fn; Beatus vir, F, 4vv, D-Bsb [misattributed to Pergolesi], F-Pc, GB-Lbl; Benedictus Dominus Deus Israel, 3vv (SSB), org, I-Mc; Confitebor, D, 1v, Nov 1744, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Confitebor, A, 4vv, Lbl; Confitebor, a, 4vv, I-Sd; Confitebor, c, 4vv, org, D-WRgs; Crediti, 4vv, org, I-Mc; De profundis, 8vv, org, D-WRgs; De profundis, a, 8vv, org, WRgs; Dixit Dominus, D, 4vv, F-Pc, GB-Lbl; Dixit Dominus, D, 5vv, A-Wn, B-Bc; Dixit Dominus, D, 5vv, 1751, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, Dixit Dominus, D, 5vv, D-MÜs; Dixit Dominus, D, 8vv, 1753, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Dixit Dominus, D, 8vv, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl; Dixit Dominus, F, 8vv, Lbl; Dixit Dominus, B♭, 3vv [SSB], bc, *Lbl; Laetatus sum, a, 4vv, F-Pc, GB-Lbl; Laudate pueri, C, 4vv, bc, D-MÜs, Dl, I-Vnm; Laudate pueri [detto il Grottesco], G, 4vv, D-MÜs [dated 1732], F-Pc, GB-Lbl?* [dated 7 Dec 1731]; Laudate pueri, G, 8vv, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Nc (arr. 4vv); Laudate pueri, D, 8vv, 1714, D-MÜs; Laudate pueri, A, 1v, *GB-Lbl; Miserere per la Chiesa di S Nicolò di Bari, 5vv, org, D-MÜs [misattributed to A. Sacchini], GB-Lbl [dated 1754, inc.], I-Mc [misattributed to P. Cafaro], MOe [dated 1765, 'fatto 1745'], Nc, US-Lc; 2 Misericordias Domini, 8vv, org, A-Wn, D-Bsb, MÜs, F-Pc, I-Mc, Nc, GB-Lbl [1 setting only, both ed. G. Goebel, Die Motette (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1974); Nisi Dominus, 4vv, D-MÜs

Vespro breve (Dixit Dominus, C, 4vv; Confitebor, e, 4vv; Beatus vir, c, 3vv; Laudate pueri, A, 4vv; Mag, c, 4vv), Bsb [Mag, 4vv, org, only], MÜs [Mag, 4vv, org, only], WRgs [Mag, 4vv, org, only], F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Mc [Dixit Dominus, Confitebor and Beatus vir only], Nc

Dixit Dominus solenne, 4vv (Dixit Dominus, d; Confitebor, g; Beatus vir, B♭; Laudate pueri, D; Laudate Dominum, F; Mag, G), CZ-Pak

Vesper pss with canticle, 4vv, org (Dixit, D; Dixit, C; Confitebor; Beatus vir; Laudate pueri; Lauda Jerusalem; Crediti; In convertendo Domine; Mag; Laetatus sum; Nisi Dominus), I-Mc

3 Lessons for Christmas Day: nocturn 1/I–III, S, S, B, org, Mc

Lessons for Holy Week: Maundy Thursday: nocturn 1/I, S, S, B, org, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-Mc, nocturn 1/II, S, S, B, org, Mc, nocturn 1/III, S, S, B, org, GB-Lcm [dated 1752], *I-Fc, Mc; Good Friday: nocturn 1/I, S, S, B, org, GB-Lbl, Lcm, *I-Fc, Mc, nocturn 1/II, GB-Lbl, Lcm, *I-Fc, Mc, nocturn 1/II, S, 2 other vv, org, GB-Lbl, Lcm [dated 1751], I-Mc, nocturn 1/III, S, S, B, org, *Fc, Mc; Holy Saturday: nocturn 1/I, S, org, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-LU, Mc, nocturn 1/II, S, S, B, org, Mc, nocturn 1/III, S, org, Mc

3 Lamentations for Holy Saturday, with insts: De Lamentatione Jeremiiae Prophetae, f, S, A-Wn, D-Bsb, MÜs, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-BGc, LU, Mc; Aleph Quomodo, c, S, A, A-Wn, GB-Lcm, I-BGc, Mc; Incipit Oratio Jeremiae Prophetae, g, 4vv, A-Wn, D-MÜs, Dl, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-BGc, Mc

Responses, Benedictus, Christus, Miserere for Holy Week, S, S, B, org: Maundy Thursday: nocturn 1/I–III, F-Pc, *I-Fc, Mc, nocturn 3/I–III, Fc; Good Friday: nocturn 1/I–III, F-Pc, *I-Fc, Mc, nocturn 3/I–III, Fc; Holy Saturday: nocturn 1/I–III, F-Pc, *I-Fc, Mc, nocturn 3/I–III, Fc; Benedictus, Fc, Mc; Christus factus est, Miserere, F-Pc, *I-Fc, Mc, PS [with addl Requiem aeternam and Et lux perpetua], ed. in Musica sacra (1841)

Si quaeris miracula (Responsorio di S Antonio), S, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl

6 Litanies BMV: 3vv, I-Nf, Rieti; a, 4vv, GB-Lbl, I-LANc [dated 1731]; e, S, A, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, ed. in Musique sacrée, xxxvii (Paris, n.d.); e [Breve], 4vv, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-Mc, Nc; g, 4vv, B-Br, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Nc, ed. in Musique sacrée, xxxvii (Paris, n.d.); f, 4vv, 1750, F-Pc, *GB-Lbl, I-Nc

STUDIES

Canon cum tribus vocibus, 4vv, D-Bsb, F-Pc, I-BGc

Memento Domino David (motet), 8vv, org, for the Real Capella di Napoli, 21 April 1745, D-MÜs

Protexisti me Deus (motet), 5vv, for the Real Capella di Napoli, 21 April 1745, A-Wn, D-Bsb, LEm, Mbs, MÜs, TRb, F-Pc, GB-Cfm, Lbl, Lcm, I-Baf, Mc, Nc, ed. in Musique sacrée, xxxiii (Paris, *c*1815) and in The Fitzwilliam Music, iii (London, 1825)

6 Motetti sopra il canto fermo, 4vv, I-BGc

CANTATAS, ARIAS, DUETS, TERZETTOS

6 Cantate spirituali, A, bc, D-MÜs, GB-Lbl, I-Mc, Nc: Vincesti pur vincesti [Seneca funato ossia La crudelta di Nerone]; *Dove infelice [L'anima del ricco Epulone parlante nell'Inferno]; Lascia alfin mio cor [Il fine dell' uomo]; Dunque fra pochi stanti [Il giudizio particolare], also F-Pc; Chi per pietà [Figliuol prodigo], with Non più figlio [Accoglienza pietosa]; Al risuonar di spaventose [Il giudizio universale]

2 Atti di contrizioni per gli Alunni del Conservatorio di Gesù Cristo, 1v: De più pene al fiero aspetto (aria), D, F; Si, se pentita (aria), D, e, D-MÜs

A le sue sponde torna il ruscello, S, bc, GB-Lbl; Almen se non possio (aria), S, F-Pc; Ciel se mai in giusto sei, S, bc, Pc; De sventura passo lore (aria), S, Pc

XII duetti [madrigali, canzoni] da camera, S, A, bc [based on recits from solo cantatas by A. Scarlatti]: Andate, o miei sospiri; Son io, barbara donna; Qualor tento scoprire; Alme, voi che provaste; Mitilde, alma mia; O quante volte; Mitilde, mio tesoro; Fiero, acerbo destin; La vezzosa Celinde; Amor, Mitilde, è morta; Dormono l'aure estive; Alfin m'ucciderete: principal source, GB-Lbl, arr. S, S, bc with embellishments by G. Masi, 1776, as Duetti per studio di maniera di cantare e per essercizio di accompagnare al cembalo, Lcm, I-Rsc; ed. L. Cherubini (Paris, *c*1822), ed. F. Maier (Leipzig, 1844), ed. M. Ivanoff-Boretsky (Moscow, 1931)

Solitudine care, S, A, bc, F-Pc [setting of first recit of Scarlatti's cantata Solitudine, often attached to above duets]

Also attrib. Durante, duets for S, A, bc, from Scarlatti's cantatas: Questo silenzio, Dolce piange, Or mentre io dormo, Sia pur sonno di morte, in Canzoni, all Pc; Deh, mio ben, E pur vuole il cielo, In si duro martire, O penosa lontananza, Cosi pietade [from Flora and Tirsi], all GB-Lbl

Canoni [Terzettos] (P. Metastasio), S, S, S, unacc., D-MÜs, GB-Lbl [inc. and unattributed]: Ah che il destino; Al povere d'amore; Chi vive amante (from Alessandro nel India]; Chi viver vuol contento; Comincio solo; Di liberta son privo; La sorte tiranna; Mi vien in odio il solfeggiar; No' non parlar d'amore; Perche vezzosirai; Se un vero amante; So che vanti un core; Voi sole

SOLFEGGIOS

Edition: Solfèges D'Italie, i (Paris, 1772), ii (Paris, 1786), v (Paris, *c*1812)

13 duetti, S, S, all in D-MÜs; 12 in Bsb, ed. G.W. Teschner (Berlin, 1869); 11 in F-Pc, GB-Lbl; 6 transposed (A, A) in D-MÜs, Rp, F-Pc

12 duetti per solfeggiare, S, A, D-MÜs, Rp, F-Pc

5 duetti per solfeggiare, S, B, D-MÜs, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Gl, Rrostirolla

Ludus puerorum, S, S, I-Nc; 4 Solfeggi, S, S, bc, Mc

4 canoni e 12 solfeggi, S, A, D-Rp, F-Pc, I-Mc [solfeggios only], MOe

Solfeggios, 1v, bc, D-Mbs, MÜs, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, Lcm, I-Ac, Gl, MAC, Mc, Nc, Rrostirolla, Tn; solfeggios, B, B, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Ac, Fc, MAC, Mc, Nc; solfeggios, Bar/B, BGi; solfeggios, B, GB-Lbl, I-Ac, Mc, Nc

Danza, danza fanunciella, ed. in Arie antiche, ii (Milan, 1890) and in Italian Songs of the 17th and 18th Centuries, ii (New York, 1922/R); Vergin tutt'amore, ed. F. Caudana (Bergamo, 1954); Solfeggio detta la stravaganza, ed. R. Luckhardt, Zeitschrift für Spielmusik (Celle, 1986–8)

INSTRUMENTAL

9 concerti a quattro, str, bc: C, e, A, A (La Pazzia), E♭, B-Bc, D-Dl, F-Pc (2 copies), I-Gl, Nc, Vc; f, B-Bc, D-Dl, F-Pc, I-Gl, LEpastore, Nc, Vc; A, g, B-Bc, D-Dl, F-Pc (2 copies), I-Nc, Vc; B♭, Gl: ed. A. Lualdi (Milan, 1948), based on Nc MSS; ed. E. Doflein (Mainz, 1966), f, g, e, based on D-Dl MSS; ed. R. Blanchard (Paris, 1970), based on F-Pc MSS

Conc., C, str, I-LEpastore

Conc., B♭, hpd, str, I-Nc, Vc, ed. F. Degrada (Milan, 1968)

3 concerti da camera (sonatas), 2 vn, bc, arr. of concerti a quattro, C, E♭, e in Vc

Sonata, A, vn, hpd, F-Pc, GB-Lbl inc.

KEYBOARD

6 Sonate per cembalo divisi in studii e divertimenti, g, D, c, A, f, B♭ (Naples, 1747–9/R), D-Mbs, Sl, WRtl, F-Pc, GB-Lbl, I-Nc; ed. P. Carrer (Rome, 1986)

Invertura (ov.), org, C, D-MÜs; Essercizio o sonata, org, C, I-Mc, Nc; Partite (o sonate), Mc, Nc; 3 partiti, c: no.1, GB-Lbl, I-Bc, PLcon, Ria; nos.2–3, PLcon, Ria

Le quattro stagioni del anno, sonata per cembalo, 1747, P-Ln, ed. A. Iesuè (Rome, 1983); as Toccatino sopra le quattro stagioni del anno, I-Ria

[9] Toccate per cembalo, GB-Lbl [no.9 only], I-Mc, Nc, some ed. G. Pannain (Milan, 1930) and in Antologia di musica antica e moderna, xi (Milan, 1932)

Toccata, a, F-Pc, GB-Lbl; toccata, B♭, I-PAc

Various kbd pieces, GB-Lbl: c, 3 movts; a, same as toccata no.6, movt 1, I-Nc (see above); F, = toccata no.6, movt 2, Nc (see above); c; A, = toccata no.9, Nc (see above); C, = toccata no.2, Nc (see above); d (fuga); F, = toccata no.1, Nc (see above); d, = toccata no.4, Nc (see above); d, d, C, 3 movts, = toccata no.8, Nc (see above); g (minuetto); g; c; C; D, 3 movts, also as Partite (o sonate), Nc (see above); D; A; D (fuga); D (minuetto); D; F, 4 movts; c (toccata), 1731, also in Bc [with addl movt], Vc [2 copies, 1 with addl movt]; a (toccata), 2 movts, also in F-Pc

Miscellaneous kbd pieces, I-Ria: Sonata, org, D, 3 movts, variant version of Partite (o sonate), Nc (see above); D (allegro); sonata, D (allegro); c, 4 movts, movts 2 and 3 also in 3 partiti, PLcon (see above); a (allegro); Fuga, G; Fuga, a, = toccata no.6, movt 1, Nc (see above)

Addl kbd pieces attrib. Durante: [6] Sonatas con diverse chiave (Anne Smith, 18 May 1754), GB-Lbl, doubtful; Sonata fugato, org, g, I-Mc (?M. Santucci); [6] Toccate per cembalo (Antonius Severino, 1770), nos.1 and 4 (e and F) = fugue movts from Handel Suites, D-Rp, GB-Lbl (no.5 only)

Partimentos: Regole di partimenti numerati e diminuiti, I-Nc [dated 1761, 1769, 1797]; over 20 MSS, D-MÜs, F-Pc, GB-Cfm [incl. 36 realizations by M. Stecher], I-Bc, Fc, Gl, Mc, MOe [incl. 20 realizations by F. Fenaroli], PAc, PESc, Ria, some ed. K.G. Fellerer, Der Partimento-Spieler (Leipzig, 1940) and J. Napoli, Bassi della scuola napoletano (Milan, 1959)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyGN; BurneyH; ES (E. Zanetti); FellererP; FétisB; FlorimoN; GerberNL; GiacomoC; NewmanSBE; RosaM

J.F. Reichardt, ed.: Musikalisches Kunstmagazin (Berlin, 1782–91/R)

P.L. Ginguené: Notice sur la vie et les ouvrages de Nicolas Piccinni (Paris, 1800)

G.B. Grossi: I corifei della scuola di Napoli (Naples, 1820)

F. Parasini, ed.: Carteggio inedito del P. Giambattista Martini coi più celebri musicisti del suo tempo (Bologna, 1888/R)

E.J. Dent: 'Leonardo Leo', PMA, xxxii (1905–6), 59–71
H. Leichtentritt: Geschichte der Motette (Leipzig, 1908/R)
K. Weinmann: 'Die neapolitanische Komponistenschule', Musica sacra [Regensburg], xlv (1912), 222–6
G.C. Paribeni: 'Francesco Durante cembalista', Il pianoforte, ii (1921), 303–7
R. Fimmanò: Per la posa della prima pietra del monumento a Francesco Durante in Frattamaggiore (Naples, 1930)
F. Torrefranca: Le origini italiane del romanticismo musicale (Turin, 1930/R)
O. Ursprung: Die katholische Kirchenmusik (Potsdam, 1931/R), 228ff
R. Fimmanò: 'Francesco Durante: in margine alle celebrazioni campane', Musica d'oggi, xviii (1936), 276–8
A. Lualdi: 'Musiche sconosciute del fondatore della scuola musicale di Napoli: F. Durante', RMI, li (1949), 117–29
U. Prota-Giurleo: 'Francesco Durante', Riscatto: giornale provinciale di Frattamaggiore, iii/5 (1952); iv/1–4 (1953)
J.M. Auerbach: Die Messen des Francesco Durante (diss., U. of Munich, 1954)
L. Hoffmann-Erbrecht: Deutsche and italienische Klaviermusik zur Bachzeit (Leipzig, 1954)
A. Lualdi: 'Francesco Durante da Frattamaggiore, il frainteso (1684–1755)', Tutti vivi (Milan, 1955), 87–108
U. Prota-Giurleo: Francesco Durante nel 2° centenario della sua morte (Frattamaggiore, 1955)
E.T. Ferand: 'Embellished "Parody Cantatas" in the Early Eighteenth Century', MQ, xliv (1958), 40–64
G.A. Brungardt: Some Selected Motets of Francesco Durante (diss., U. of Illinois, 1967)
F. Degrada: 'Appunti critici sui concerti di Francesco Durante', Chigiana, new ser., iv (1967), 145–65
R.G. Luoma: Francesco Durante's Oratio Jeremiae Prophetae (diss., Stanford U., 1967)
B. Frum: The Dramatic-Dualistic Style Element in Keyboard Music Published Before 1750 (diss., Columbia U., 1969)
H.-B. Dietz: 'A Chronology of Maestri and Organisti at the Cappella Reale in Naples, 1745–1800', JAMS, xxv (1972), 379–406
H.-B. Dietz: 'Zur Frage der musikalischen Leitung des Conservatorio di Santa Maria di Loreto in Neapel im 18. Jahrhundert', Mf, xxv (1972), 419–29
M.F. Robinson: 'The Governers' Minutes of the Conservatory S Maria di Loreto Naples', RMARC, x (1972), 1–97, esp. 94
D.W. Barnett: Francesco Durante's Magnificat in B flat: a Conductor's Analysis (diss., U. of Miami, 1980)
S. Martinotti: 'Apporti strumentali degli allievi di G.O. Pitoni (Feo, Leo, Durante e Bomporti)', Giuseppe Ottavio Pitoni: Rieti 1981, 79–88
J.L. Hunt: 'The Durante "Pergolesi" Magnificat: a New Source', ML, lxiv (1983), 225–8
H.-B. Dietz: 'Alte Musik im Schatten alter Musik: zur historisch-ästhetischen Stellung der Kirchenmusik neapolitanischer Meister der Bach-Händel Generation', Alte Musik als ästhetische Gegenwart: Bach, Händel, Schutz: Stuttgart 1985, 453–60
A. Maggaudda and D. Costanini: 'Un musicista calabrese alla corte di Francia: notizie inedite sulla residenza napoletana e il periodo francese del Principe d'Ardore', Civilità musicale calabrese nel Settecento: Réggio Calábria 1986, 71–94
M. Marx-Weber: 'Neapolitanische und venezianische Miserere-Vertonungen im 18. und frühen 19. Jahrhundert', AMw, xliii (1986), 17–45, 136–63
W. Horn: Die Dresdner Hofkirchenmusik 1720–1745: Studien zu ihren Vorausetzungen und ihrem Repertoire (Kassel, 1987), 179–80, 198–9
H.-B. Dietz: 'Durante, Feo, and Pergolesi: Concerning Misattributions among their Sacred Music', Studi Pergolesiani, ii (1988), 128–43
H.-B. Dietz: A Thematic Catalogue of the Works Attributed to Francesco Durante (1684–1755) (forthcoming)

HANNS-BERTOLD DIETZ

Durante, Ottavio (fl Rome and Viterbo, 1608–18). Italian composer. A philosopher, scientist and nobleman of considerable wealth, he possessed villas in Bagnaia, a resort used by curial cardinals, and Viterbo. From a letter he wrote to Duke Ranuccio I of Parma on 9 July 1618 (in I-PAas), it appears that Durante was a native of Parma, or at least his forebears were. His father, Castore, and his brother Giulio were physicians in the Jesuit Collegio Romano in Rome. The letter, in which Durante seeks a subvention for the publication of six new works, indicates the range of his learning and interest: two supplementary volumes (dealing respectively with virtue and vice) to his father's book Il principe virtuoso, which had been published five years earlier; Inimici dell'humana natura, a dialogue on morality; excerpts concerning health from the writings of his father and brother; Il marinaro distinto, dealing principally with meteorology; Le quattro stagioni perpetue, an almanac; and La 2.a parte delle Arie devote, containing instructions for singing with expression. None is known to survive.

Durante's only extant work is his Arie devote, le quali contengono in se la maniera di cantar' con gratia, l'imitation' delle parole, et il modo di scriver' passaggi, et altri affetti (Rome, 1608; extracts transcr. in Goldschmidt, Adrio, and R. Haas, Die Musik des Barocks, Potsdam, 1928, pp.57–8). It contains settings of 20 mostly anti-Calvinist texts, 18 in Latin and two in Italian, for soprano and thoroughbass. They are comparable in style to the madrigals in Caccini's Le nuove musiche (1601/2) and are the first such monodies published in Rome. Durante's extensive preface pays homage to Caccini, whose own preface it paraphrases, sometimes with greater clarity than the original. By comparison with Caccini's works, however, Durante's 'arias' use melismas, even on unaccented syllables, rather than speech-like declamation as the primary means of text expression, and his bass lines reveal a polyphonic orientation through greater rhythmic and melodic activity. The division of some arias into sections, defined occasionally by changes of metre and often by contrasts between recitational and metrical style, is typical of composers of monody in the circles around Cardinal Montalto, to whom Durante dedicated the collection. This characteristic was extended by subsequent Roman monodists in the creation of the Italian chamber cantata.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Mandosio: Bibliotheca romana, seu romanorum scriptorum centuriae (Rome, 1682), ii, 135
H. Goldschmidt: Die italienische Gesangsmethode des XVII. Jahrhunderts (Breslau, 1890/R)
A. Adrio: Die Anfänge des geistlichen Konzerts (Berlin, 1935)
W. Matejka: 'Ottavio Durante und seine Arie devote (1608): eine Korrektur', Mf, xxxi (1978), 443–6
J.W. Hill: Roman Monody, Cantata, and Opera from the Circles around Cardinal Montalto (Oxford, 1997)

JOHN WALTER HILL

Durante, Silvestro (b ?Rome; d ?Rome, after 1671). Italian composer. From December 1637 to 1662 he was maestro di cappella of S Maria in Trastevere, Rome, and he later held this post again, at least in 1668 and 1672; in 1664 he was maestro at the Consolazione. He appears to have published no volume of music himself, but his music was frequently anthologized in collections of the mid-17th century, especially those of Florido de Silvestris. Some 30 works by him, mostly sacred and including a mass, appear in anthologies (RISM 1643[1], 1643[2], 1645[2], 1647[2], 1648[1], 1649[2], 1650[1], 1651[1], 1652[1], 1652[3], 1655[1], 1656[2], 1659[1], 1661[1], 1662[2], 1664[1], 1667[1], 1668[1] and 1672[1]); there is also a piece in Alias cantiones (Rotterdam, 1657). A few works by him are also to be found in manuscripts (e.g. in GB-Lbl, I-Bc and S-Uu).

□

Durastanti, Margherita (fl 1700–34). Italian soprano. Her first known appearances were in a pasticcio at Venice in 1700 and in two operas at Mantua (where she may have been in court service) in 1700–01. From 1707 she was in the service of Marquis Ruspoli at Rome, her colleagues including Caldara and Handel, who composed for her many of his finest solo cantatas and the part of Magdalene in the oratorio La Resurrezione. She was prima donna at the S Giovanni Grisostomo theatre in Venice, 1709–12, where she sang in nine operas by Lotti and C.F. Pollarolo and created the title part in Handel's Agrippina (1709). She sang at Bologna and Reggio nell'Emilia in 1710–11, Milan and Reggio nell'Emilia again in 1713, Parma in 1714, Florence in 1715, and in 1715–16 in five operas at Naples, including Alessandro Scarlatti's Carlo rè d'Alemagna and La virtù trionfante. Veracini engaged her for Dresden in 1719. Handel heard her there in Lotti's Teofane and engaged her for the Royal Academy in London, where she made her début in the first production, Porta's Numitore, in 1720, and played the title roles in Handel's Radamisto and Domenico Scarlatti's Narciso. The following season she sang in Giovanni Bononcini's Astarto, the revival of Radamisto (now as Zenobia; her old role was taken by Senesino), Arsace (Orlandini-Amadei), the composite Muzio Scevola and Odio ed amore.

In February 1721 Durastanti bore a daughter (she was married to one Casimiro Avelloni), to whom King George I and the Princess Royal stood as godparents on 2 March, and in the autumn she was singing in Munich. She missed the London season that year owing to illness, but returned in 1722–4, appearing in Handel's Floridante (Rossane), Ottone, Flavio and Giulio Cesare, and in operas by Bononcini and Ariosti. She was singing in Paris in summer 1724. She rejoined Handel's company in 1733–4, singing in Ottone, Sosarme, Il pastor fido, Arianna and several pasticcios. Durastanti had a longer personal association with Handel than any other singer. The operatic parts he wrote for her – Agrippina, Radamisto, Cloelia in Muzio Scevola, Gismonda in Ottone, Vitige in Flavio, Sextus in Giulio Cesare and Tauride in Arianna – show an exceptionally wide range of character, suggesting that she was a gifted actress. Her voice was never a high soprano, and its compass gradually dropped from d′ to a″ in Agrippina to b to g″ in 1733–4, when her tessitura was that of a mezzo-soprano. She frequently played male roles. Burney said that her 'person was coarse and masculine', but she seems to have been a dramatic singer and a good musician.

Margherita Durastanti: caricature by Anton Maria Zanetti (i), pen and brown ink (Fondazione Giorgio Cini, Venice)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDA

U. Kirkendale: 'The Ruspoli Documents on Handel', JAMS, xx (1967), 222–73

WINTON DEAN

Durazzo, Count Giacomo (Pio Francesco Antonio Maria) (b Genoa, 27 April 1717; d Padua, 15 Oct 1794). Italian diplomat, theatre director, librettist and art collector, and one of the principal catalysts of reform in 18th-century opera and ballet. The francophilia that coloured nearly all Durazzo's theatrical endeavours was largely the result of his birth into a noble Genoese family (of Albanian origin) with a long history of commercial and political dealings with France. The Durazzos (who produced several doges, including Giacomo's older brother Marcello) were active in Genoa's theatrical life, notably as proprietors of the Teatro del Falcone. Following his inscription into the nobility in 1744, Giacomo was entrusted with several commercial and diplomatic missions to France, during one of which, in 1748, he and his compatriot Agostino Lomellini conceived a plan to rework Quinault and Lully's Armide as an Italian opera on reformed principles. As versified by Migliavacca and set by Traetta, this project was realized in Vienna in 1761, under Durazzo's direction.

Durazzo went to the Habsburg capital in 1749 as 'inviato straordinario', with the task of reopening financial relations with the Empire, whose forces Genoa had opposed in the War of the Austrian Succession. Though the Empress Maria Theresa remained distrustful of him, Durazzo quickly came under the protection of Wenzel Kaunitz (imperial chancellor, from 1753), who in 1750 arranged his marriage to Ernestine Aloisia Ungnad von Weissenwolff, a noblewoman with close connections at court. In Vienna as in Genoa, Durazzo took part in amateur performances of French plays, even writing one (La joie imprévue, 1756); he also contributed an act to a trilingual opera, La gara (1755, set by Reutter). When in 1752 Kaunitz hired a company of professional French actors as part of a reorganization of the court's theatres, Durazzo was named assistant to the director, Count Franz Esterházy, whom he succeeded two years later.

As intendant des spectacles, Durazzo oversaw for a decade the personnel, finances and repertories of the Burgtheater (adjacent to the Hofburg), in which both the French actors and Italian singers performed, and of the Kärntnertortheater, where 'regular' German dramas only gradually replaced a largely improvised repertory. Among Durazzo's first steps was the introduction of public concerts in the Burgtheater, for the direction of which he hired Gluck (then Kapellmeister to Prince von Hildburghausen). Unofficially, Gluck was also made musical director for stage works. Durazzo took a particular interest in both theatres' ballet companies, often suggesting subjects or plans of ballets. As offerings improved in quality, Durazzo began publicizing the Viennese stages internationally, an effort that helped lay the foundation for Gluck's later triumphs in Paris.

In 1755 Durazzo introduced opéra comique into the Burgtheater's repertory. Initially, only simple vaudeville comedies were given, edited to suit Viennese morals, but Gluck was soon called upon to supplement their music and later to compose original scores in the genre. Largely in order to further Gluck's efforts in opéra comique, Durazzo visited Paris in October 1759 and secured the services of C.-S. Favart as his theatrical correspondent and recruiting agent. A collaboration with Gluck was discussed, but the opéra-ballet scenario Favart sent for the 1760 wedding celebrations of Archduke Joseph proved too ambitious and was not used.

Durazzo cultivated Gluck's talents in other directions as well. The count himself provided recitative and chorus texts for the composer's L'innocenza giustificata (8 December 1755), a work that departed from Metastasian norms in important ways, despite Durazzo's borrowing of aria texts by the court poet. Gluck's La danza of 1756, an 'introduction to a ballet', was but one of several spectacles informed by Durazzo's experience of Parisian opéra-ballet; his own libretto to Le cacciatrici amanti (for G.C. Wagenseil, 1755) had imitated the genre even more closely. In 1759 Durazzo entrusted Gluck with the composition of ballet music in both theatres, thus providing him with essential preparation for the integrated spectacles of the next decade.

Recognizing that the recent experience of the fertile Paris theatrical scene of the newly arrived Ranieri Calzabigi could provide a fresh impetus to both ballet and opera in Vienna, early in 1761 Durazzo and/or Kaunitz put him in contact with both Gluck and his choreographer at the Burgtheater, Gasparo Angiolini. With Don Juan (17 October 1761), this creative team inaugurated a series of ambitious danced dramas accompanied by manifestos (largely drafted by Calzabigi) that simultaneously invoked ancient pantomine and prepared the public for a new, more absorbing model of opera. That model was first embodied in Orfeo ed Euridice (5 October 1762), in which these same artists collaborated with another Durazzo protégé, the alto castrato Gaetano Guadagni, who (as Orpheus) was happy to eschew florid display in favour of simple, heartfelt utterance. Durazzo's letters to Favart regarding the Parisian edition of Orfeo he had commissioned reveal his pride in the success of this work with the public; his assistant Philipp Gumpenhuber's manuscript chronicle of Viennese theatrical activities shows in practical terms how Durazzo, for this and other projects (such as Traetta's Ifigenia in Tauride, 1763), had marshalled the combined musical and balletic forces of Vienna's theatres, fulfilling conditions described by Algarotti as necessary if a true operatic reform were to be carried out.

Even as Durazzo cultivated new types of spectacle, he continued to work with the more conservative faction of Metastasio, even aiding in the drafting of his Alcide al bivio for Hasse, the main opera for the 1760 wedding festivities. Yet Durazzo's relations with the court were chronically difficult. The performance of 'his' Armida in January 1761 coincided with a bitter quarrel with the Hofkapellmeister, Reutter, who complained that his musicians were being siphoned off for theatrical service, and that Durazzo's protégé Gluck was usurping duties relating to the court's Tafelmusik. This dispute (deriving from Durazzo's appointment in March 1760 as cavagliere di musica), and court-imposed economies in the theatres, caused Durazzo temporarily to leave his post in June 1761; he worked briefly on opera-related projects at Eisenstadt for Prince Esterházy (one of his wife's relations) before returning to court service. Durazzo's dismissal came during a spring 1764 visit along with Gluck, Guadagni and others to Frankfurt (with a stop also in Paris) for the coronation of Joseph as King of the Romans. The causes of the count's disgrace were several, including a calumny by Favart and an alleged liaison with the dancer Louise Joffroy-Bodin. Durazzo was compensated (thanks to Kaunitz) with the 'lucrative' post of ambassador to Venice, which he held for nearly two decades. During his tenure he entertained visiting musicians (such as the Mozarts, in 1771), patronized opera locally, and in 1783 helped recruit the singers for whom Mozart wrote Le nozze di Figaro. By this time he had regained imperial favour, in large part through his efforts in amassing a huge collection of graphic arts for Prince Albert of Saxe-Teschen; this forms the nucleus of the modern Albertina. A large group of Vivaldi manuscripts purchased by Durazzo about 1780 is now at Turin.

In dedicating his Armida libretto to Durazzo, Migliavacca called the opera 'the first example of that new species of spectacle', and there can be little doubt that Durazzo had an early and conspicuous part – through actions both premeditated and opportunistic – in the dethroning of the Metastasian archetype in favour of a more fluid, French-orientated model. In this connection, several scholars have attributed to him the anonymous Lettre sur le méchanisme de l'opéra italien (published with the allegorical imprint Naples/Paris in 1756, and long attributed to a shadowy Daniel Jost [or Josse] de Villeneuve), which takes as its point of departure a letter in the Journal étranger concerning Calzabigi's remarks on Metastasio. While there is circumstantial evidence that Durazzo helped finance the publication of the Lettre, certain references in the text tend to preclude his authorship, and Heartz (1995) has more plausibly proposed Calzabigi himself as the author. In writings of more secure attribution, Durazzo shows his disapproval of encoring numbers in opera, criticizes French ideals of singing and reveals the Viennese audience's preference, even in comedy, for a 'stile simple, et quelques fois Elevé'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DBI (G. Assereto); GroveO (G. Croll, D. Heartz)

Répertoire des théâtres de la ville de Vienne depuis l'année 1752 jusqu'à l'année 1757 (Vienna, 1757)

B. Benincasa: Descrizione della raccolta di stampe di S.E. il Sig. Conte Jacopo Durazzo esposta in una dissertazione sull'arte dell'intaglio a stampa (Parma, 1784)

C. Ditters von Dittersdorf: Lebensbeschreibung, seinem Sohne in die Feder diktirt (Leipzig, 1801; Eng. trans. 1896/R; ed. N. Miller, Munich, 1967)
C.-S. Favart: Mémoires et correspondance littéraires, dramatique et anecdotiques, ed. A.-P.C. Favart (Paris, 1808/R)
R. Haas: 'Josse de Villeneuves Brief über der Mechanismus der italienischen Oper von 1756', ZMw, vii (1924–5), 129–63 [incl. Ger. trans. of Lettre]
R. Haas: Gluck und Durazzo im Burgtheater (Zürich, 1925)
H. Bédarida: 'L'opéra italien jugé par un amateur français en 1756', Mélanges de musicologie offerts à M. Lionel de La Laurencie (Paris, 1933), 185–200
M. Varagnolo: Giacomo Durazzo (diss., U. of Padua, 1964/5)
G. Gentili Verona: 'Le collezioni Foà e Giordano della Biblioteca Nazionale di Torino', Vivaldiana, i (1969), 31–56
G. Zechmeister: Die Wiener Theater nächst der Burg und nächst dem Kärntnerthor von 1747 bis 1776 (Vienna, 1971)
G. Croll: 'Neue Quellen zu Musik und Theater in Wien 1758–1763: ein erster Bericht', Festschrift Walter Senn, ed. E. Egg and E. Fässler (Munich, 1975), 8–12
W. Koschatzky, ed.: Giacomo Conte Durazzo, 1717–1794, Graphische Sammlung Albertina, 20 May–5 Sept 1976 (Vienna, 1976) [exhibition catalogue]
A.F. Ivaldi: 'Divagazioni sui Durazzo, mecenati di "prestigio"', Atti della Società Ligure di Storia Patria, xciii (1979), 315–31
D. Heartz: 'Traetta in Vienna: Armida (1761) and Ifigenia in Tauride (1763)', SMC, vii (1982), 65–88
F. Karro: 'De la Querelle des Bouffons à la réforme de Gluck: les lettres du Comte Giacomo Durazzo à Charles-Simon Favart conservées à la Bibliothèque de l'Opéra', Mitteilungen des Österreichischen Staatsarchivs, xxxviii (1985), 163–96
A.F. Ivaldi: 'La famiglia di Giacomo Durazzo: i personaggi decisivi, l'ambiente genovese', Alceste di Cristoph Willibald Gluck (Genoa, Teatro Comunale, 1987), 103–222 [programme book]
D. Puncuh: 'Giacomo Durazzo: famiglia, ambiente, personalità', Gluck in Wien: Vienna 1987, 69–77
P. Gallarati: 'La poetica di Giacomo Durazzo e la Lettre sur le méchanisme de l'opéra italien', Musica/Realtà, no.26 (1988), 53–73
A. Basso: 'I codici vivaldiani di Torino, ovvero fatti e misfatti, avventure e disavventure del collezionismo musicale', Chigiana, xli, new ser. xxi (1989), 161–84
B.A. Brown: 'Durazzo, Duni, and the Frontispiece to Orfeo ed Euridice', Studies in Eighteenth-Century Culture, no.19 (East Lansing, MI, 1989), 71–97
B.A. Brown: Gluck and the French Theatre in Vienna (Oxford, 1991)
A.F. Ivaldi: Giacomo Durazzo da Genova a Vienna (1742–1749) (Genoa, 1995)
D. Heartz: Haydn, Mozart and the Viennese School, 1740–1780 (New York, 1995)
G. Croll: 'Musiker und Musik in der Privatkorrespondenz von Wenzel Anton Fürst von Kaunitz: Informanten und Informationen', Staatskanzler Wenzel Anton von Kaunitz-Rietberg, 1711–1794, ed. G. Klingenstein and F.A.J. Szabo (Graz, 1996), 341–59
J. Sasportes: 'Durazzo e la danza', Creature di Prometeo: il ballo teatrale dal divertimento al dramma, ed. G. Morelli (Florence, 1996), 177–89
B.A. Brown: 'I cacciatori amanti: the Portrait of Count Giacomo Durazzo and his Wife by Martin van Meytens the Younger', Metropolitan Museum Journal, xxxii (1997), 161–74

BRUCE ALAN BROWN

Durbin, Deanna [Edna Mae] (b Winnipeg, MB, 4 Dec 1921). Canadian actress and singer. At the age of 14, Durbin caught the attention of MGM producers, who cast her in Every Sunday (1935) alongside Judy Garland. She then signed on with Universal Pictures and became the effervescent teenager who sang like an angel but frequently found mischief. Her sunny disposition and gleeful songs would rescue her from any of her ill-fated schemes. Her 21 films included Three Smart Girls (1936), One Hundred Men and a Girl (1937), Mad About Music (1938), That Certain Age (1938), First Love (1939), Three Smart Girls Grow Up (1939), It's a Date (1940), Spring Parade (1940) and Can't Help Singing (1944). Although her Hollywood career lasted only 13 years, she made a lasting impression as the quintessential precocious innocent with a natural vocal charm. She received a special Academy Award in 1938. The possessor of a legitimate soprano voice with a wide range, Durbin had the technical ability to use all areas of the voice effectively. She is a rare example of a singer who was known only for her work in motion pictures but nonetheless was considered to be a role model for many young women considering a career on the operatic and concert stages.

WILLIAM A. EVERETT, LEE SNOOK

Durchführung (Ger.: 'leading through'). Development, in particular the DEVELOPMENT section of a work in SONATA FORM; it has also been applied to the opening section, normally called the exposition, of a FUGUE.

Durchgang (Ger.). See PASSING NOTE.

Durchimitation (Ger.: 'through imitation'). IMITATION at the beginnings of phrases which is applied to all the parts of a composition as they enter in the polyphonic texture, either individually or in pairs. It developed towards the end of the 15th century in motets without cantus firmi, became the norm in the sacred works of Josquin des Prez and flourished in the high Renaissance, particularly in sacred music in the 'Palestrina style'.

□

Durchkomponiert (Ger.). See THROUGH-COMPOSED.

Durdreiklang (Ger.). Major TRIAD.

Durées, langue des. See LANGUE DES DURÉES.

Du Reneau. See OUVRARD, RENÉ.

Duret. A term used by Michael Praetorius in Terpsichore (1612) as the title of a courante-like dance. The term seems to have the same connotation in the texts of some 17th-century English masques, such as Beaumont and Fletcher's Masque at Gray's Inn (1612), where the stage directions indicate that the knights and ladies are to dance 'galliards, durets, corantoes'.

□

Du Retz, Jakub. See REYS, JAKUB.

Durey, Louis (Edmond) (b Paris, 27 May 1888; d St Tropez, 3 July 1979). French composer. The son of a printer and type founder, Durey did not decide to be a composer until 1907, after hearing a performance of Debussy's Pelléas. Before obtaining the diploma of Hautes Etudes Commerciales (1908), he had started to study piano, solfège, harmony, counterpoint and fugue with Léon Saint-Requier. He was entirely self-taught as a composer and orchestrator. His earliest compositions date from 1914, but the first to be performed in public was Carillons, for piano four hands, played in 1917 at a concert in honour of Satie. Satie dubbed Durey, Auric and Honegger 'mes nouveaux jeunes' and the three were to be associated with Tailleferre, Milhaud and Poulenc in the Groupe des Six, as the critic and composer Henri Collet baptized them in 1920. But already in 1921 Durey's absence from Cocteau's Mariés de la Tour Eiffel signalled the end of collective activities by Les Six around Cocteau. Durey's rate of composition grew slower between 1929 and 1937, as he recognized the need to avoid repeating himself after years of great creativity. In 1936 he joined the Fédération Musicale Populaire; before long he was secretary-general, and he became president in 1956. He was a leading figure among the musicians who joined the resistance during the occupation, just as he was later a leader of progressive musicians after 1948. SACEM awarded him the Prix National de la Musique Française in 1960. He retired to St Tropez in 1961.

His career lasted 60 years (1914–74), with the composition of 116 works, puncutated by long periods of creative silence. From 1914 onwards his choruses and mélodies revealed his predilection for vocal and polyphonic writing, in spite of Debussy's hold (which outlived the influences of Schoenberg, Satie, Stravinsky, Ravel, Renaissance polyphonists and agricultural work songs). The discovery of Schoenberg in 1914 enabled Durey to escape from the world of Debussy, so that his op.4, L'offrande lyrique – a landmark in French music – is his earliest work of true originality. 1916 saw the start of the most productive period in Durey's life, one dominated by mélodies and by choral works with instrumental ensemble. At the same time, chamber music remained a preferred genre, while his only opera, L'occasion, has an intimate, understated character.

In 1944, after seven years' silence, Durey devoted himself to massed choral works and arrangements for amateur choirs, until 1953, when he returned to other areas of musical expression without any lessening of his political militancy. A new aesthetic equilibrium appeared, this late period dominated by mélodies and choral works with solo instrumental accompaniments, worthy successors to his earlier vocal works.

WORKS

(selective list)

DRAMATIC

Judith (drame, G. Gallimard and P. Lanux, after F. Hebbel), op.12, 1918 [Act 1 only]; L'occasion (comédie lyrique, 1, after P. Mérimée), op.34, 1923, orchd 1925, ORTF, 11 Aug 1974; L'intruse (incid music, after Maeterlinck), op.44, 1933; Feu la mère de madame (music for radio play, G. Feydeau), op.49, 1945; Chant des partisans coréens (incid music, R. Vaillant: Le Colonel Foster plaidera coupable), op.72, 1952 for solo voice and piano unless otherwise stated

SONGS

3 poèmes de Verlaine, op.2, 1914; 5 poèmes de Francis Jammes, op.3, 1914; L'offrande lyrique (R. Tagore trans. A. Gide), op.4, 1914; Le voyage d'Urien (A. Gide), op.5, 1916, no.2 arr. 1v, orch, op.5b, *c*1921; Images à Crusoe (A.St-L. Léger), op.11a, 1918, arr. 1v, str qt, fl, cl, cel/hp, op.11b, 1918; Epigrammes de Théocrite, op.13, 1918; 3 poèmes de Pétrone, op.15, 1918; Inscriptions sur un oranger (E. Parny), op.16, 1918; Le bestiaire (G. Apollinaire), op.17a, 1919, arr. 1v, 12 insts, op.17b, 1958; 2 Lieder romantiques (H. Heine), op.20, 1919; 6 madrigaux de Mallarmé, op.22, 1919, arr. 1v, fl, ob, cl, bn, pf, op.22b, 1919; Chansons basques (J. Cocteau), op.23a, 1919, arr. 1v, ob, eng hn, cl, bn/str qt, op.23b, 1919; Le printemps au fond de la mer (cant., Cocteau), op.34, 1v, 10 wind insts; 3 poèmes de Paul Valéry, op.31, 1921–3; Cantate de la prison (G. Apollinaire), op.32a, 1922–3, arr. 1v, orch, op.32b, 1922–3; 3 poèmes de Rémy de Gourmont op.33, 1v, fl, cl, bn, str qt, pf; La vivier (R. Chalupt), op.38, 1927; Verger (R.M. Rilke), op.42, 1931–2; 4 stances de Moréas, op.45, 1935; 4 poèmes de minuit (G. Audisio), op.47, 1944, nos.1 and 2 arr. 1v, orch, 1944. lost; Une femme du sud chante (L. Hughes), op.65, 1950; Grève de la faim (N. Hikmet), op.64, 1950; 2 poèmes de Ho-Chi-Minh, op.69, 1951; 3 poèmes de Paul Eluard, op.74a, 1952–3, arr. 1v, orch, op.74b, 1952–3; Cantate de la rose et de l'amour (L. Emié), op.104a, 1965, arr. 1v, str orch, op.104b, 1966; Le dit du petit garçon Khoa (Tran Dang Khoa), op.110, 1968; 6 poèmes d'enfants vietnamiens, op.113, S, 9 insts

Folksongs arr. 1v, pf

CHORAL

2 choeurs (H. de Régnier, C. d'Orléans), op.1, SATB, 1914; Eloges (A.St-L. Léger), op.8a, SATB, str qt, db, wind qnt, hp, perc, 1916–17, rev. 1962, arr SATB, orch, op.8b; 3 quatuors vocaux (S. Mallarmé, P. Valéry, L. Tailhade), op.37, SATB, 1926–7; Prière pour dormir heureux (M. Fombeure), op.43a, SSAA, str pf, 1933, arr. SSAA, str orch, op.43b, 1964; Calendrier des enfants (Y. Lacôte), op.46a, children's chorus, pf, 1937, arr. children's chorus, str orch, op.46b, 1964; Les constructeurs (P. Seghers), op.50, unison vv, pf/SATB, 1947; Aux armes! (A. Wazyk), op.52, SATB, pf, 1947; Chant des combattants de la liberté (E. Guillevic), op.54, SATB, 1948; 3 chansons musicales (F. Garcia Lorca), op.55, SATB, 1948; La grotte aux glaçons (E. Guillevic), op.56, 3vv, 1948; La guerre et la paix (J. Fréville), op.57a, T, B, SATB, 9 wind insts, pf, 1949, arr. T, B, SATB, pf, op.57b; La longue marche (Mao Tse Tung), op.59a, T, SATB, orch, 1949; Paix aux hommes par millions (V.V. Mayakovsky), op.60a, S, SATB, orch, 1949; 28 avril (J. Fréville), op.61, unison vv, pf/SATB, 1950; Sur l'aile de la colombe (J. Marcenac), op.63, unison vv, pf, 1950; 4 chants de lutte pour la jeunesse républicaine de France (J. Gaucheron), op.70a, chorus, orch, 1951; Cantate à Ben Ali (B. Fontenelle), op.73a, T/S, SATB, chbr orch, 1952; 10 choeurs de métiers (J. Marcenac), op.82, SATB, insts, 1956–7; 3 polyphonies (M. Hernández, L. Emié, M. Fombeure), op.94, SATB, insts, 1963; España 63 (C. Alvarez), op.95a, male chorus, pf, 1963, arr. mixed chorus, pf, op.95c, 1963

Folksongs arr. mixed chorus

ORCHESTRAL

2 pièces, op.7, orchd 1918; Pastorale, op.27, 1920; Fantaisie concertante, op.53a, vc, orch, 1947; Ile de France, Ov. de concert, op.78, 1954–5; Concertino, op.83, pf, 16 wind insts, 1956–7; Sym. movt, op.97, str orch, pf, 1964; Sinfonietta, op.105, str orch, 1965–6; Obsession, op.108 no.8, wind ens, hp, orchd 1968

Works arranged for str orch

CHAMBER

Pf Trio, op.6, 1916–17, lost; Str Qt no.1, op.10, 1917; Pièce, op.18, 2 ob, eng hn, bn, 1919, destroyed; Str Qt no.2, op.19, 1919–22; 10 inventions, op.35, 1924–7, pubd as 5 duos op.35a, vn, vc, 5 duos, vn, va, op.35b; Sonatine, op.25, fl, pf, 1925, arr. fl, str, op.103 1965; Str Qt no.3, op.39, 1927–8; Trio-Sérénade 'à la mémoire de Béla Bartók', op.79, vn, va, vc, 1955; Les soirées de Valfère, op.96, wind qnt, 1963; Octophonies, op.106a, 3 vn, 2 va, 2 vc, 1 db, 1965, arr. str orch, op.106b, 1965; Divertissement, op.107, ob, cl, bn, 1967; Nicolios et la flûte, op.111, fl, hp, 1968; Interlude, op.112, 4 tpt, 4 hn, 3 trbn, tuba, timp, 1973; 2 dialogues, op.114, fl; 3 pièces brèves, op.115, ob, 1974

PIANO

for piano solo unless otherwise stated

2 pièces, Carillons, Neige, op.7, pf 4 hands, 1916, 1918; Scènes de cirque, op.9, 1917; Romance sans paroles, op.21, for L'Album des Six, 1919; 3 préludes, op.26, 1920; Prélude et élégie, op.28, 1921; 2 études, op.29, 1921; Le blé en herbe, op.30, lost; 3 sonatines, op.36, 1926; Nocturne, op.40, 1928; 10 inventions, op.41a, after op.35, 1924–8, arr. hpd, op.41b; 6 pièces 'de l'automne 53', op.75, 1953; Autoportraits, 16 pieces, op.108a, 1967–9; 3 pièces 'en complément aux autoportraits', op.109, 1970; Poème, op.116, 1974

Folksongs arr. pf

FILM

Oradour (P. Céria), op.48, 1944; La bataille de la vie (L. Daquin), op.58, 1949, collab. S. Nigg; Grande pêche; (H. Fabiani), op.76, 1954; Des hommes comme les autres (H. Fabiani, R. Vogel), op.77, 1955

ARRANGEMENTS

A. Honegger: Jeunesse, arr. mixed chorus, 1959; A. Bruant: Les canuts, arr. mixed chorus, 1959; F. Couperin: 6 pièces de clavecin, arr. wind qnt, 1959; J.S. Bach: Fantasie et fugue, a, BWV904, arr. str orch, 1965

Edns of works by Janequin, Josquin, Gossec and others

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Rostand: La musique française contemporaine (Paris, 1952)
F. Robert: Louis Durey: l'aîné des Six (Paris, 1968)
B. de Boeck: Les mélodies vocales de Louis Durey (diss., Catholic U. of Leuven, 1970)

J. Harding: The Ox on the Roof (London, 1972)
J. Roy: Le groupe des Six (Paris, 1994)

FRÉDÉRIC ROBERT

Durezza (It.: 'hardness', 'harshness'). Originally a 16th-century term used to describe the 'harsh' aural effects of dissonance (Zarlino); it later came to denote a style of keyboard writing in the early 17th century, in which chromaticism, irregular resolutions and bold dissonances were explored by means of discords (durezze) and suspensions (ligature). Giovanni de Macque's Durezze e ligature (MS, I-Nc) are the first of their type, but numerous other composers wrote similarly striking works, including Ercole Pasquini, Trabaci, Frescobaldi, Kerll and Johann Pachelbel.

□

D'Urfey [Durfey], Thomas (b Devon, *c*1653; d London, 26 Feb 1723). English poet and dramatist. He is said to have been a clerk's apprentice in early life. His first two plays were produced in 1676, and from then, despite a pronounced stutter, he gradually became accepted at court as a singer and entertainer. He spent much of 1689 as a singing master at Josias Priest's boarding-school in Chelsea and while there wrote the epilogue for Purcell's Dido and Aeneas. By then he had become a popular playwright. He was at his best in farcical comedies, though in his later works he sometimes explored deeper romantic feeling. He provided texts for two semi-operas: Cinthia and Endimion, first performed in 1697 but probably initially conceived about 1684, and The Wonders of the Sun (1706), a burlesque pasticcio. He used music extensively in other plays also, sometimes to good dramatic effect as in the two parts of Massaniello (1699) but often inadequately integrated into the action. His three Don Quixote plays (1694–5) are virtually semi-operas; indeed the first two (with music mainly by Purcell and John Eccles) took the place of an opera in the 1693–4 season. D'Urfey was also a prolific writer of odes and lyrics, noted for his ability to fit words to pre-existing tunes. In 1719 he published five volumes of poems, mainly with tunes, entitled Wit and Mirth, or Pills to Purge Melancholy (also issued under the title Songs Compleat, Pleasant and Divertive), with a sixth volume in 1720. Between them they contained over 1000 items. Most, though not all, of the texts were his own; many had already appeared in five earlier volumes, also called Wit and Mirth, published between 1699 and 1714. He set some of his poems himself; his responsibility for The Lady Devoted and The Valiant Eugene [A New Health to Prince Eugene] is undisputed, but How vile are the sordid intrigues (from his play The Marriage Hater Match'd, 1692) is also attributed to Purcell.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.L. Day, ed.: The Songs of Thomas D'Urfey (Cambridge, MA, 1933)
C.A. Price: 'Music as Drama', The London Theatre World, 1660–1800, ed. R.D. Hume (Carbondale, IL, 1980), 210–35
C.M. Kephart: The Use of Music in Thomas Durfey's Dramatic Works (diss., Pennsylvania State U., 1983)
C. Price: Introduction to Don Quixote: the Music in the Three Plays of Thomas Durfey, MLE, A2 (1984)
C. Kephart: 'Thomas Durfey's Cinthia and Endimion: a Reconsideration', Theatre Notebook, xxxix (1984–5), 134–9
C.A. Price: 'Orpheus in Britannia', Music and Context: Essays for John M. Ward, ed. A.D. Shapiro with P. Benjamin (Cambridge, MA, 1985), 264–77
O. Baldwin and T. Wilson: 'The Music for Durfey's Cinthia and Endimion', Theatre Notebook, xci (1986–7), 70–74

MARGARET LAURIE

Durham. City in England. The cathedral dates from 995 when Saxon monks made it the resting-place for St Cuthbert's body. The monastic cathedral was reconstituted a cathedral only in 1541. In 1390 the monastery decided to employ a music instructor to train a group of boys, and from 1416 the list of these instructors is virtually complete. Possibly because of Durham's distance from London, and because from 1576 to 1681 all of its organists came from the choir, few Durham-based musicians of that period became widely known. An exception is the minor canon (and former chorister) William Smith (1603–45), whose Responses are still acclaimed. Smith responded musically to the liturgical innovations of the high-churchman John Cosin (prebendary 1624–60, Bishop 1660–72), who seems to have augmented the choir and organ from about 1625 with two cornetts and two sackbuts.

The organists James Hesletine and Thomas Ebdon, both composers, enjoyed long 'reigns' (1711–63 and 1763–1811 respectively). They and John Garth promoted subscription concerts in Durham. John Bacchus Dykes, precentor of the cathedral (1849–62) and later vicar of St Oswald's (1862–76), was a prolific writer of hymn tunes, many of them still popular. Philip Armes (organist, 1862–1907) rekindled interest in 16th-and 17th-century music, editing anthems and services from the cathedral's manuscripts. He helped to establish the Department of Music at the University of Durham. His scheme for a degree in music was accepted in 1886 and he was appointed its first professor in 1897.

The Dean and Chapter Library holds the cathedral's music manuscripts, Philip Falle's (1656–1742) collection with many rare printed items, music used by Richard Fawcett (1714–82) and the music section of the family library housed in Bamburgh Castle in the late 18th century by John Sharp (1723–92).

Harrison & Harrison, organ builders in Durham since 1872, built the Royal Festival Hall organ in London, organs in many English cathedrals, and others in Australia, New Zealand, Japan, South Korea, Nigeria and the USA.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Crosby: A Catalogue of Durham Cathedral Music Manuscripts (Oxford, 1986)
W. Shaw: The Succession of Organists (Oxford, 1991)
I. Spink: Restoration Cathedral Music 1660–1714 (Oxford, 1995)

BRIAN CROSBY

Đurić-Klajn [Djurić-Klajn], Stana (b Belgrade, 22 April/5 May 1908; d Belgrade, 18 Feb 1986). Serbian musicologist. At the University of Belgrade she studied comparative literature, and music history with Miloje Milojević (1923–7), she also studied the piano with Lazare Lévy at the Sorbonne (1927–8). She was among the first professors in the department of music history and folklore at the Belgrade Academy of Music (1945–71) and made an important contribution to the newly-formed musicology institute at the Serbian Academy of Sciences and Arts (director 1962–74). She was editor-in-chief of two series of Zvuk (1932–36, 1955–66).

Most of her studies were devoted to the history of music in Serbia. In particular she discussed many details of the development of Serbian music from the late 18th to the 19th century when, after the long Turkish occupation, cultural life in Serbia greatly intensified. She also wrote a biography of the composer Stevan Mokranjac. Her writings are accessible to a wide audience, while losing none of their depth. A Survey of Serbian Music through the Ages (1972) was the first survey of its kind.

WRITINGS

Muzika i muzičari [Music and musicians] (Belgrade, 1956)
'Razvoj muzičke umetnosti u Srbiji' [The development of the art of music in Serbia], in J. Andreis, D. Cvetko and S. Đurić-Klajn: Historijski razvoj muzičke kulture u Jugoslaviji (Zagreb, 1962), 529–75
A Survey of Serbian Music through the Ages (Belgrade, 1972)
ed.: Srpska muzika kroz vekove/La musique serbe à travers les siècles (Belgrade, 1973) [incl. 'Sur le trace de la musique de XVIIIe siècle', 169–83]
Akordi prošlosti [Chords of the past] (Belgrade, 1981)
Mladi dani Stevana Mokranjca [The young days of Stevan Mokranjac] (Negotin, 1981)
Muzički zapisi [Musical jottings] (Belgrade, 1986)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Pejović: Muzikolog Stana Đurić-Klajn: istoriografska, esejistička i kritičarska delatnost (Belgrade, 1994)

ROKSANDA PEJOVIĆ

Durieux, Frédéric (b Paris, 27 Feb 1959). French composer. He studied composition with Ivo Malec and analysis with Betsy Jolas at the Paris Conservatoire (1982–6), and later on, he benefited from the advice of André Boucourechliev. As research fellow under the direction of Boulez at IRCAM (1985–7), he continued as artist-in-residence at the Villa Medici (1987–9). He has taught analysis for instrumentalists at the Paris Conservatoire since 1990. Clearly affiliated with the serialist lineage of Stockhausen, Boulez, and Berio, as well as the Viennese School and Debussy, Durieux has developed a complex and refined body of work, written largely for ensembles of 20 or so musicians (Seuil déployé) or for orchestra (Macle). Beginning with his marked predilection for the poetic world of Yves Bonnefoy (Exil II) and Emmanuel Hocquard (Viridaria, Cristal et corps), whose texts he used in scores for voice and instrumental ensemble, Durieux has established a subtle relationship between text and music, whether with contemporary poetry or with old texts such as the one from Bach's Cantata BWV26 taken up in So schnell, zu früh, written in memory of the choreographer Dominique Bagouet. Electronics, associated with instrumental writing (Devenir), are important in Durieux's vision of composition in which technology exists to serve a language whose expression is both intense and delicate.

WORKS

Exil II (Y. Bonnefoy), S, A, 14 insts, 1983, rev. 1984; Gemme, org, 1984; Macle, orch, 1985–6; Parcours pluriel, 17 insts, 1987; Seuil déployé, 22 insts, 1988–9; Marges I, amp hpd, perc, 1989; Là, cl, 1989; Marges II, pf, 8 insts, 1989; Marges III, ob, 13 insts, 1989–90; Origine, fl, synth, perc, tape, 1990; Là, au-delà, 26 insts, 1990–91; Marges IV, pf, 1992; Devenir, cl, live elec, 1993; So schnell, zu früh, S, 18 insts, 1993; Alliances, fl, cl, 1994; Cristal et corps (E. Hocquard), 8vv, chbr orch, 1994–5; Viridaria (Hocquard), S, orch, 1994–5; Départ, cl, 1995; Pièce traversière I, orch, 1995; Incidences, perc, 1996; Pour tous ceux qui tombent (Hommage à Ravel), pf, 1997

WRITINGS

'A Mirror on Which to Dwell, domaines d'une écriture', Entretemps, no.4 (1987), 55–67
'Héritage/Propositions', Inharmoniques, no.4 (Sept 1988), 32–61
'Réseaux et création', Cahiers de l'Ircam, no.1 (1992), 87–103
'L'ancien et le nouveau', Les cahiers de l'Ircam, no.7 (1995), 73–9
'Texte et musique: l'alliance paradoxale', Le travail de l'art, no.1 (1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Texier: 'La musique procédurale: réflexions après un concert', Art press, no.13 (1992)
M. Rigoni: 'Entretien avec F. Durieux', Les cahiers de l'Ircam, no.7 (1995), 25–50, 51–72
M. Rigoni: ' "Parcours", "Devenir et So schnell, zu früh, analyse"', cahiers de l'Ircam, no.7 (1995), 7–24

ALAIN POIRIER

Ďuriš, Juraj (b Nitra, 1 March 1954). Slovak composer. He studied experimental electro-physics at the Slovak Technical University, Bratislava, before taking private composition lessons from Kubička (1978–80). In 1978 Ďuriš was appointed producer at the Experimental Studio of Slovak Radio, becoming its director in 1992. He composes exclusively for the electro-acoustic medium, capitalizing on the expertise he acquired while working as a producer. At the Experimental Studio he has collaborated on numerous compositions in addition to realizing his own. His works are based on transformation of sound objects (both musical and non-musical) into complex, contrapuntal structures. His interest in electro-acoustic composition during later years has extended to experimental forms and to multimedia projects realized in collaboration with the visual artist Miloš Bod'a; these include Hammerschlag '91, an interactive installation, and Hundred Times Victory, a laser and music work created for the symposium Laser Art Work, Symbiosis Art and Technology. Ďuriš is also director of the annual Festival of Electro-Acoustic Music held in Bratislava. He has received several international awards, including first prize at the Russolo competition in Varese (1987) and the prize of the International Rostrum of Electronic Music (1988).

WORKS

Tape: Chronos I, 1983; Zrodenie svedomia [Birth of Conscience], 1984; Spomienky [Memories], 1985; Sny [Dreams], cymbal, tape, 1987; Portrét, 1989
Multimedia (collab. M. Bod'a): Portrét, 1990; Hammerschlag '91, 1991; 100 × V (100 Times Victory), Mojmírovce, 1993

Principal recording company: Slovak Radio

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Kaduch: Česká a slovenská elektroakustická hudba, 1964–1994 (Ostrava, 1994), 39–40
L. Zajíček: 'The History of Electroacoustic Music in the Czech and Slovak Republics', Leonardo Music Journal, v (1995), 39–48
J. Ďuriš and V. Godár: 'Tri stretnutia. Rozhovor s Mirom Bázlikom' [3 meetings: an interview with Miro Bázlik], SH, xxii (1996), 215–46
J. Ďuriš: 'Mýtus obrov sa rozpadá!?' [The myth of giants is falling apart!?], SH, xxii (1996), 136–40
J. Ďuriš and V. Godár: 'Slovenská elektroakustická hudba' [Slovak electro-acoustic music], SH, xxii (1996)
J. Ďuriš: 'Symbol i', SH, xxii (1996), 196–200

VLADIMIR GODÁR

Durkó, Zsolt (b Szeged, 10 April 1934; d Budapest, 2 April 1997). Hungarian composer. He began his composition studies at the secondary music school in Szeged, and then moved to the Bartók Secondary Music School in Budapest as a pupil of Sugár; his studies were continued under Farkas at the Liszt Academy of Music, from which he graduated in 1960, and under Petrassi, whose master-classes he attended at the Accademia di S Cecilia, Rome (1961–3). He was lecturer in 20th-century composition at the Liszt Academy (1971–7) and chief adviser to Hungarian Radio (from 1982). He founded the Hungarian Musical Society in 1987, and the Mini Festival, an international forum for contemporary music, in 1988. He received a number of awards, including third prize in a Jeunesses Musicales competition at the Montreal Expo '67 for his String Quartet no.1, for which he also received the Erkel Prize (1968); second prize in the Bartók competition (1970) for the Second Quartet; a Koussevitzky Special Citation (1971) for the recording of his Fioriture; and first prize at the 1975 UNESCO International Rostrum of Composers for Halotti beszéd ('Burial Prayer'). In 1978 he was awarded the Kossuth prize, in 1985 and 1997 the Bartók-Pásztory prize, in 1987 the Hungarian title of Outstanding Artist, and in 1992 was elected a full member of the Hungarian Academy of Arts and the Széchenyi Academy of Arts.

From about 1959 composers in Hungary began to follow new technical directions, casting aside the slavish imitation of Kodály that had been the dominant trend. Durkó, after his studies in Rome, was well placed to take a leading part in the foundation of a style drawing on international developments. His music stemmed from ideas 'that have been scattered in history and in our consciousness'; such ideas, or 'relics', for example medieval melodic formulae or rhythms or ornaments taken from folk traditions, may be employed as a cantus firmus or, more frequently, present as a less tangible influence. For example, the rubato of gypsy musicians, the melisma of peasant dirges and the ornamentation of the verbunkos style are transmuted in Fioriture, affecting melody, rhythm and orchestration. Indeed, the characteristic folk timbres of clarinet, violin and cimbalom are often present in Durkó's work. The one aspect of folk music that did not influence him was its modality, since most of his music is atonal.

Durkó's early period of predominantly instrumental works, in which textless voices are used merely as another timbral resource (e.g. Fioriture, Altamira and Colloides), culminates in the Second Quartet (1970). His music from this period is characterized by cluster-like harmonies and by webs of tiny motifs moving within narrow ranges and in constant variation. By contrast, the later work replaces this with broad melodic planes, more attuned to vocal possibilities, and with chords dominated by certain intervals. In form, his earlier works consist of strings of short structures built on identical cells, while works after Cantilene and the Second Quartet place greater emphasis on overall form.

Yet within the broad development of Durkó's music there is considerable variety of genre and style. His handling of rhythm remains wide in scope: some works, such as Altamira, have a clear, fluid pulse, while in others the perception of metre is lessened through the intervention of chance in the small-scale structure (e.g. the wind quintet and Fioriture), although in these works dynamics and articulation are marked precisely. During the 1970s Durkó focussed mainly on vocal genres. The oratorio Halotti beszéd, a natural successor to the two Ady cantatas of 1971–2, unites the composer's artistic objectives with a by now familiar instrumental style: variations on a particular interval or melodic phrase, a florid style of writing evoking the image of organic unfolding or blossoming; use of organum and leitmotivic characterization, and alternating fixed and free playing. His Turner Illustrations (1976), like the opera Mózes, displays a refined instrumental palette: its resonating music conveys the open-air radiance of the Turner tableaux, while its instrumental lyricism and great arches of melody are reminiscent of the solo writing for clarinet, violin and cimbalom in works of the 1960s. The Piano Concerto, first performed in 1981, is notable for its narrative, delicate piano writing and for its use of melodic ornamentation as thematic material, a technique that is typical of his style as a whole.

The 1990s heralded a period of summation and of changing perceptions. The rhythmic phrases are more flowing, the harmony radiant and confident, while the dramatic element is characterized by closer ties between harmony and melody. The Revelation to St John, completed in 1996 and performed posthumously, symbolically summarizes his output: it acknowledges his indebtedness to the European classical tradition by drawing from the Baroque oratorio and from the music of Bartók and Kodály, while at the same time retaining personal hallmarks such as individuality, a strict sense of artistic order and a national consciousness that is European in outlook.

WORKS

(selective list)

STAGE AND VOCAL

Mózes [Moses] (op, 3, Durkó, after I. Madách), 1972–7, Budapest, Hungarian State Opera, 15 May 1977

Dartmouth Conc. (J. Masefield), S, chbr orch, 1966; Fioriture, chbr chorus, orch, 1966; Altamira, chbr chorus, orch, 1968; Colloides, 5 A, fl, a fl+pic, bn, str qnt, 1969; Négy tanulmány [4 Studies] (A. József), male chorus, 1971; Cant. no.1 (E. Ady), Bar, chorus, orch, 1971; Cant. no.2 (E. Ady), double chorus, orch, 1972; Halotti beszéd [Burial Prayer] (orat, 13th-century prayer), T, Bar, chorus, orch, 1972; Széchenyi (orat, I. Széchenyi), T, Bar, chorus, orch, 1982; Ilmarínen, chorus, 1986; Pillanatképek a Kalevalából [Snapshots from Kalevala], chorus, 1986; Suoni tenebrosi e corale, female chorus, orch, org, 1989; 3 English Verses (W. Wordsworth, W. Blake, T.S. Eliot), S, 12 insts, 1991; A Jelenések könyvének margójára [The Revelation to St John] (orat), A, T, B, chorus, orch, 1996

ORCHESTRAL

Episodi sul tema B–A–C–H, 1963; Organismi, vn, orch, 1964; Una rapsodia ungherese, 2 cl, orch, 1965; Cantilene, pf, orch, 1968; Conc., 1969; Chbr Music, 2 pf, 11 str, 1973; Turner Illustrations, vn, 14 insts, 1976; 4 dialoghi, 2 perc, orch, 1979; Refrains, vn, chbr orch, 1979; Zongoraverseny [Pf Conc.], 1981; Rapsodia, 1979; Ludus stellaris, collective improvisatory music, chbr orch, 1984; Ornamenti no.1, 1984; Ornamenti no.2, 1985; Hegedűverseny [Vn Conc.], 1993

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Il pezzi, str qt, 1962; Psicogramma, pf, 1964; Improvvisazioni, wind qnt, 1965; Str Qt no.1, 1966; Symbols, hn, pf, 1969; Str Qt no.2, 1970; Brass Qt, 2 tpt, trbn, tuba, 1970; Iconography no.1, 2 b viol/2 vc, hpd/pf, 1970; Fire Music, fl, cl, pf, str trio, 1971; Iconography no.2, hn, 7 insts, 1971; Assonanze, org, 1972; Serenata, 4 hp, 1973; Chance, pf, 1973; Törpék és óriások [Dwarfs and Giants], pf, 1974; Varianti, va, pf, 1974; Gyermekzene [Children's Music], pf, 1978; Solo Suite, vc, 1978; Andromeda, org, 1980; Son et lumière, pf, 1980; Három esszé [3 Essays], cl, pf, 1983; Quartina, pf, 1983; Sinfonietta, 4 tpt, 4 trbn, hn, tuba, 1983; Impromptus in F, fl, chbr ens, 1983; Téli zene [Winter Music], hn, chbr ens, 1983; Clair-obscur, tpt, org, 1984; Három rondó [3 Rondos], pf, 1984; Laude, org, 1987; Sextet, 5 cl, pf, 1987; Octet, 8 ww, db ad lib, 1988; Divertimento, gui, 1989; Résonances, cl, basset hn, pf, 1989; Flautocapriccio, fl, 1991; A gömb története [The History of the Spheres], 60 pieces, pf, 1991

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, Chester, Editio Musica (Budapest)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

CC (P. Horner)

S. Walsh: 'An Introduction to the Music of Zsolt Durkó', Tempo, no.85 (1968), 19–24

I. Földes: Harmincasok (Budapest, 1969)

G. Kroó: A magyar zeneszerzés 30 éve [30 years of Hungarian music] (Budapest, 1975)

A. Boros: Harminc év magyar operái 1948–1978 [30 Years of Hungarian opera] (Budapest, 1979)
B. Varga: 3 kérdés, 82 zeneszerzö [3 questions, 82 composers] (Budapest, 1986)
P. Hill: 'Aspects of Zsolt Durkó's Piano Concerto', Tempo, no.169 (1989), 47–9
E. Olsvay: 'A Conversation with Zsolt Durkó', Hungarian Music Quarterly, iii/3–4 (1992), 14–19
S. Veszelszky: 'An Interview: Zsolt Durkó', Zene-zene-tánc (1997), 8
R. Gerencsér: Durkó Zsolt (Budapest, 2000)

GYÖRGY KROÓ/RITA GERENCSÉR

Durlach. German town. See KARLSRUHE.

Durlet, Emmanuel (b Antwerp, 11 Oct 1893; d Antwerp, 7 Feb 1977). Belgian pianist, composer and teacher. At the age of 16 he entered the Royal Flemish Conservatory, Antwerp, where he studied with Franz Lenaerts (piano), Edward Verheyen (harmony) and Mortelmans (composition). He undertook further study with Godowsky in Vienna (1912–14) and, on his return to Belgium, began a successful career as a piano soloist. In 1920 he became professor of advanced piano studies at the Antwerp Conservatory, a post he held until 1959. An influential teacher, he published two piano methods, Je jouerai 'bien' du piano (Antwerp, 1935) for beginners and the four-volume Pianostudie en -spel (Antwerp, 1950–60). His compositions include a piano concerto (subtitled 'Images médiévales', 1939), a violin concerto ('La Chapelle de Marie-Madeleine extra muros', 1946), a violin sonata ('Récits enluminés', 1936) and numerous songs, in addition to around 50 piano miniatures, mainly studies and descriptive character pieces, in a colourful harmonic idiom tinged with modality and with melodies often reminiscent of Flemish folksong. He also adapted for the piano more than 350 harpsichord pieces by 18th-century Flemish composers. In 1979 an international competition was instituted in Antwerp for the Emmanuel Durlet Prize for Piano.

□

Durme, Jef van. See VAN DURME, JEF.

Durner, Charles [Karl] F. (b Württemberg, 3 April 1838; d Quakertown, PA, 8 Dec 1914). German-American organ builder. Apprenticed to an organ builder at the age of 14, he later worked in various German and French organ factories, and emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1859. A year later he opened a workshop in Quakertown, where he remained until his death, making both pipe organs and reed organs. He was succeeded by his son, Charles E. Durner (1863–1932); a year after the latter's death the firm completed its last organ and closed. All Durner organs had mechanical action until the period 1895–1915, when some with tubular-pneumatic action were built, but electro-pneumatic action was employed after 1917. Most Durner organs were of modest size, one of the largest being that built in 1881 for the Zion Lutheran Church in Lancaster, Pennsylvania; the firm also exhibited an elaborate two-manual organ at the 1876 Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, later sold to an Episcopal Church in Clarksville, Tennessee.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.L. Speller: 'The Life and Work of Charles F. Durner', The Tracker, xxxvii/3 (1992–3), 20–28

BARBARA OWEN

Durocher (fl 1733). French organist and composer. He wrote one of the very few collections of French harpsichord music to be set in type, Pièces de clavecin … première suite (Paris, 1733/R); according to the title-page, he was organist at Saint Jean-de-Luz. Most of the pieces in the collection are in two-part texture, melody and accompaniment, reducing the traditional French harpsichord style to its simplest terms. The book, which is dominated by pattern variations, begins with a late example of the unmeasured prelude, printed throughout in alternating semibreves and minims. Six minuets are attributed to him in a manuscript for melody instrument (F-Pn). (B. Gustafson and D. Fuller: A Catalogue of French Harpsichord Music, 1699–1780, Oxford, 1990)

DAVID FULLER (with BRUCE GUSTAFSON)

Durollet [Du Rollet], Marie François Louis Gand Leblanc. See ROULLET, MARIE FRANÇOIS LOUIS GAND LEBLANC.

Durón, Diego (b Brihuega, bap. 3 Aug 1653; d Las Palmas, 15 March 1731). Spanish composer. He was the elder half-brother of Sebastián Durón, with whom he has been often confused. At the age of nine he began to study music at the royal Hieronymite monastery, Guadalajara. He moved to Cuenca at the age of 21, where he studied with Alonso Xuárez until 1675. In the following year he became maestro de capilla of Las Palmas Cathedral, where he remained until his death despite frequent invitations back to the peninsula, beginning with Teruel Cathedral in 1684.

Ironically his enormous surviving repertory of 422 villancicos and 38 Latin works (including three Masses, two Salve regina settings and three Lamentations; all in E-LPA) preceded his more famous half-brother's in being catalogued and in beginning to be recorded. The superb élan and richness of the instrumentation of his eight-voice Christmas villancico of 1690 with shawms, sackbuts and harp continuo, Ya rompen sus velos, reveal one facet of his genius, another is revealed by his angels and shepherds villancico of 1962, while the expressiveness of his contrasting four-voice Latin motets Adjuva nos and Hodie nobis shows equal power.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L.G. Siemens Hernández: 'Nuevos documentos sobre el músico Sebastián Durón', AnM, xvi (1961), 177–93, esp. 183
L.G. Siemens Hernández: 'Nuevos aportaciones para la biografia de Sebastián Durón', AnM, xviii (1963), 139–59
L. Siemens Hernández: disc notes, Hispaniae Musica: Meister des Barock, Archiv Produktion 198454
L. de la Torre de Trujillo: 'El archivo de música de la Catedral de Las Palmas', El Museo Canario, xxv (1964), 197, 203
L. Siemens Hernández: 'Las pasiones polifónicas tradicionales en la catedral de Las Palmas', Revista de musicología, i (1978), 239–42
L. Siemens Hernández, ed.: Ya rompen sus velos: villancico de Navidad a 8 con chirimías y bajo continuo (Madrid, 1984)
L.Siemens Hernández, ed.: 'Villancicos representados en el siglo XVII: el de ángeles y pastores de Diego Dúron (1692) ', Revista de musicología, X/2 (1987), 547–58

ROBERT STEVENSON

Duron, Jean (b Montpon-sur-l'Isle, Dordogne, 1 March 1952). French musicologist. He received his musical education at the Paris Conservatoire (1971–83), where he studied orchestration and instrumentation with Marius Constant, the history of music with Norbert Dufourcq, musicology with Marcelle Benoit and analysis with Claude Ballif. Concurrently he studied music at the University of Paris IV (agrégation 1977). After teaching in secondary education (1970–84), he became a research assistant at the Centre National de la Recherche Scientifique (1984–6), and from 1986 to 1988 held an Académie de France research scholarship at the Villa Medici, Rome. In 1988 he founded and became director of the Atelier d'Etudes sur la Musique Française des XVIIe et XVIIIe Siècles, the research department of the Centre de Musique Baroque at Versailles; he became artistic director of the whole centre in 1996.

Duron has undertaken research principally on French music during the reign of Louis XIV. He has studied both sacred and secular vocal genres of this period, including the motet, oratorio, opera and college music drama, and has produced critical editions and catalogues of works. He has also studied the formal consequences of the transition from modality to tonality. In addition to his research work and the important role he plays in French musicology through his work at the Centre de Musique Baroque, Duron pursues many other musical activities. Most notably, he has been assistant to William Christie for the production of Lully's Atys (1987, Paris) and to René Jacobs for Lully's Roland (1994, Paris).

WRITINGS

L'oeuvres religieux de Henry Desmarets (1661–1741) (diss., Paris Conservatoire, 1977)

'L'année musicale 1688', XVIIe siècle, no.139 (1983), 229–41

'L'orchestre à cordes français avant 1715, nouveaux problèmes: les quintes de violon', RdM, lxx (1984), 260–69

'L'orchestre de Marc-Antoine Charpentier', RdM, lxxii (1986), 23–65

'La structure-fugue dans le grand motet français avant Rameau', Le grand motet français: Paris 1984, 129–66

'Le grand motet: Rameau face à ses contemporains', Jean-Philippe Rameau: Dijon 1983, 331–70

'L'Académie Royale de Musique', Musical, no.7 (1988), 76–87

'Orkestr vo Francii v XVII-XVIII vv' [The orchestra in France in the 17th–18th centuries], Starinnaja muzyka v kontekste sovremennoj kul'tury, ed. T. Baranova (Moscow, 1989), 381–96

'Le rapport choeur-orchestre dans les grands motets de Lully', Jean-Baptiste Lully: Saint Germain-en-Laye and Heidelberg 1987, 99–144

'Marc-Antoine Charpentier: Mors Saülis et Jonathae, David et Jonathas: de l'histoire sacrée à l'opéra biblique', RdM, lxxvii (1991), 221–68

'L'instinct de M. de Lully', La tragédie lyrique, ed. J.-P. Néraudau and others (Paris, 1991), 65–118

ed.: L'oeuvre de Sébastien de Brossard (1655–1730): catalogue thématique (Paris, 1995)

ed.: Sébastien de Brossard à Versailles (Versailles, 1995) [incl. 'Un portrait de Sébastien de Brossard', 101–18]

'Le grand motet à l'époque de Rameau: le cas de Claude-Mathieu Pelegrin (1682-1763), maître de chapelle à la cathédrale St-Sauveur d'Aix-en-Provence', La musique dans le midi de la France, i: XVIIe–XVIIIe siècles, ed. F. Lesure (Paris, 1996), 133–78

ed.: Plain-chant et liturgie en France au XVIIe siècle (Paris, 1997) [incl. 'Quelques réflexions sur la poésie religieuse néo-latine en France: les "Paroles de Musique" sous le règne de Louis XIV', 125–84]

'La musique italienne en France: le témoignage de Sébastien de Brossard', Studi musicali, xxv (1996), 209–53

ed.: Sébastien de Brossard, musicien (Paris, forthcoming) [incl. 'Quelques réflexions sur les brouillons de Monsieur Brossard']

EDITIONS

M.-A. Charpentier: David et Jonathas (Paris, 1981)

H. Desmarets: Lauda Jerusalem (Paris, 1981)

H. Desmarets: Confitebor tibi (Paris, 1982)

H. Desmarets: Domine ne in furore (Paris, 1982)

H. Desmarets: De profundis (Paris, 1983)

J.A. Hasse: Cleofide (Cologne, 1986)

M. Ravel: Alyssa: cantate pour le concours du Prix de Rome (Paris, 1990)

Marc-Antoine Charpentier: Motets à 4, 5, ou 6 parties et basse continue (Paris, 1991)

M.-A. Charpentier: Mors Saülis et Jonathae, Monumentales, i/1/i (Versailles, 1992); Josué, ibid., i/1/ii (Versailles, 1992); Missa 'Assumpta est Maria', ibid., i/2/i (Versailles, 1994)

Sébastien de Brossard: L'oeuvre Chorale Monumentales, iii/1 (Versailles, 1993); Petits motets manuscrits, ibid., iii/3 (Versailles, 1995); Les oratorios, ibid., iii/5 (Versailles, 1998)

M. Ravel: Myrrha: cantate pour le concours du Prix de Rome (Paris, 1995)

E. Moulinié: Meslanges de sujets chrestiens et motet 'Flores apparuerunt', Monumentales, iv/1 (Versailles, 1996)

M. Ravel: Alcyone: cantate pour le concours du Prix de Rome (Paris, 1996)

H. Desmarets: La Diane de Fontainebleau, Monumentales, v/5 (Versailles, 1998)

M.-A. Charpentier: Les funérailles de la Reine Marie-Thérèse (Paris, forthcoming)

JEAN GRIBENSKI

Durón, Sebastián (b Brihuega, bap. 19 April 1660; d Cambó, 3 Aug 1716). Spanish organist and composer. He was the first child of the church sacristan of Brihuega, Sebastián Durón (1626–68), and his second wife Margarita Picazo (1634– after 1685). He had two younger brothers, Francisco and Alonso (both born before November 1662), and three sisters, two of whom became Hieronymite nuns in the convent of S Ildefonso in Brihuega. The composer Diego Durón was his half-brother.

Durón's first known teacher was Andrés de Sola, first organist of the cathedral of La Seo, Zaragoza. On 19 June 1679, Sola recommended that Durón be his paid assistant, a position Durón held for only nine months before being appointed second organist at Seville Cathedral. The maestro de capilla at Seville, Alonso Xuares, who had taught Diego Durón, supported Sebastián in his application for the post. Durón won the oposición by a majority vote of the judges (14 March) and remained in this prestigious position until 24 September 1685. At Seville he composed liturgical works and villancicos for the cathedral choir, and took minor ecclesiastical orders. For financial reasons he left Seville to become first organist at the cathedral in Burgo de Osma (October 1685), which offered him a prebend along with his salary as organist. In December 1686 he left Burgo de Osma for a more lucrative position at Palencia Cathedral, where he spent five years teaching and composing.

On 23 September 1691 Durón was hired as an organist at the royal chapel in Madrid, under the principal organist José de Torres y Martínez Bravo. In 1702 he became royal maestro de capilla and director of the royal choir school. According to court documents, by 1697 he had distinguished himself at court not only through his excellent sacred compositions, but especially as a superior theatrical composer, deemed 'without equal'. After supplying excellent scores for a number of important productions, Durón's employment in Madrid ended abruptly in 1706 when he was dismissed and exiled because he had openly supported the Austrian cause against the Bourbon Philip V in the War of the Spanish Succession. In January 1707 Durón was still in Madrid and was further dishonoured because he attempted to remove a great many scores 'of the best pieces' (including his own) from the music library of the royal chapel. He fled to France and ended his days in the service of Mariana of Neuburg. His will directed that the income from his considerable estate be used to endow the chapel of Nuestra Señora de la Zarza in the Brihuega church where he was baptized.

Durón wrote a large quantity of both sacred and secular music. Many of the Latin-texted sacred works are predictably conservative, within what was expected for service music in Counter-Reformation Spain. Some of them, however, especially the motets, Misereres, Te Deum, and Lamentations, show Durón at his most modern and are important as well for their new textures and use of instruments. The villancicos include large and small pieces for voices and instruments that preserve the Spanish Baroque musical heritage of earlier composers such as Juan Hidalgo, yet go beyond what Hidalgo and others had achieved in the deployment of new musical techniques and genres for textual expression and effect. Durón's villancicos seem especially 'theatrical'; he employed virtually the same fresh approach to setting their sacred texts in the vernacular as he displayed in his brilliant theatrical scores.

His first theatrical score was probably the zarzuela Salir el amor del mundo. This was followed by music for other zarzuelas and comedias with texts by Cañizares and other fashionable dramatists. The highly successful Veneno es de amor la envidia was perhaps Durón's last composition for the Spanish stage. Its première in Madrid, by the company of Joseph de Prado, together with Prado's public performances of two other Durón zarzuelas in Madrid 1710–1711 (well after Durón's exile in 1707) could indicate that Durón sent scores to Madrid from his place of exile, or left copies of these works in Madrid before his departure. Some of Durón's zarzuelas were presented in privately sponsored performances in Lisbon, 1718–23, and copies of his cantatas and excerpted theatrical songs are preserved in Latin America.

Durón's 'ópera scénica' La guerra de los gigantes was composed as an aristocratic commission for the Count of Salvatierra. The story and five characters of the opera are taken from the legend of the revolt of the giants against the gods of Olympus. With no libretto surviving, it is difficult to know precisely if the one-act manuscript score presents a complete opera and indeed whether it was fully sung in performance. Because the work has barely any recitative, the plot unfolds through a series of set pieces (largely strophic airs and four-part choruses). It seems likely that this was actually a partly-sung entertainment in the manner of a zarzuela, with spoken roles for additional secondary characters and further dramatic dialogue. Most contemporary works included eight or more characters. In Durón's own Veneno es de amor la envidia, perhaps his most italianate work, three of the eight characters have entirely spoken roles, and only the three supernatural roles are sung entirely.

Although his career as a theatrical composer was brief, Durón's contribution to the history of Spanish theatre music is important. Along with those of Juan de Navas and Antonio de Literes, his scores demonstrate the co-existence of native and imported musical styles that came to characterize musical life in Madrid in the early 18th century. Several years after Durón's death, his theatre music was still controversial; for some nationalist critics, he had introduced contemporary foreign musical genres and styles to the Spanish stage, thereby opening the door to all sorts of modern abuses. His scores contain French minuets in addition to popular Spanish dance songs such as the seguidilla, italianate da capo arias beside traditional Spanish tonos and tonadas. Beyond formal distinctions, Durón's approach to text setting and to the musical phrase differs considerably from the established Spanish techniques associated with the music of Hidalgo. For these new sounds, Durón was accused by later writers of having polluted the 'purely Spanish' style with capricious foreign 'barbarisms', to the detriment of traditional Spanish gravity.

WORKS

SACRED

Missa sobre el 'Ave maris stella', 8vv, E-E, PAMc; Missa sobre el Ave Maria, 8vv, VAcp; 2 Missae sobre el Ave María, 8vv, bc, E; Missa 'Dios te salve María', 8vv, bc, E; Missa de batalla, 7vv, Mn; Missa 'a la moda valenciana', 3 choirs (10vv), E; Misa de difuntos, 3 choruses, bc, E, Mp, funeral lessons, Taedet, 10vv, insts, Pelli mei, 8vv, insts, Mp

3 vespers collections, 8vv, bc, E; 6 vespers pss, 8vv, bc, E; Completas, 8vv, CU, E; Completas, 8vv, orch, Mp (collab. F. Corselli); Letanía de los santos, 8vv, org, orch, Mp; 2 litanies, 8vv, E; 4 lamentations, 4vv, 8vv, with and without insts, MEX-Mc, GCA-Gc; Lamentation (Incipit Lamentatio), 8vv, vns, E-E; Lamentation (Aleph. Quomodo obsucatum est), S, 3 vn, bc, E; Lamentation (De lamentatione Jeremiae), a12, vns, E; Lamentation (Incipit Oratio Jeremiae), 4 choirs, vns, clarín, bc, E

Miserere, 8vv, vns, violón, bc, E; Miserere, 12vv, vns, fls, bc, E; Dixit Dominus, 3 choirs (9vv), bc, SA; TeD, 4 choirs, vns, clarín, bc, E; María: in idirem ungüentorum tuorum, motet, 2vv, bc, E; Ego sum resurrectio, motet, 4vv, bc, E; Responsorio de difuntos, 4vv; Laudate pueri Dominum, 4vv, 1694, San Antonio Abad Seminary Library, Cuzco, Peru; Regina Caeli, 8vv, org, bc, E-E

Salve; Salve Regina, 8vv, VAcp; 3 Salve regina, 8vv, org, bc, SA; Salve Regina, 8vv, org, E; Salve a nuestra Señora 'a dos coros y el primero canta siempre en eco', E

ZARZUELAS AND OPERAS

all first performed in Madrid

Salir el amor del mundo (zar, 2, J. de Cañizares), 1696, ed. A. Martín Moreno (Málaga, 1979); Muerte en amor es la ausencia (comedia, 3, A. de Zamora), 1697, Mn; El imposible mayor en amor, le vence amor (zar, Cañizares), 1711, P-EVp; Las nuevas armas de amor (zar, Cañizares), 1711, E-Mn, P-EVp, ed. in Hart, 1 song E-Bc; Veneno es de amor la envidia (zar, Cañizares), 22 Jan 1711, Mn

Acis y Galatea (zar, Cañizares), 1 song Mn (incorrect attrib.); Amor es quinto elemento (Zamora), 1 song Bc, 1 song Mn; Apolo y Dafne (zar), Mn, collab. J. de Navas; Los elementos de amor, voz, cristal, luz, y color (M. de Vidal Salvador), 1 song Mn; El estrago en la fineza (zar, Cañizares), P-EVp; La guerra de los gigantes (ópera scénica, 1), 1700–07, E-Mn; Selva encantada de amor (zar), Mn

SPANISH VOCAL

52 Villancicos, 1–9vv: 7, Sucre, Bolivia, E-CU; 12, E; 7, PAc; 7, SAc; 15, SEc; 4, VAc

Villancicos, theatrical songs, other songs, Santuario de Aránzazu, Bc, cathedral archive, Calzada, Cu, Convento de las Descalzas Reales, Madrid, Mn, SEc, V, GCA-Gc, MEX-Mc, Instituto Nacional de Bellas Artes, Mexico City, San Antonio Abad Seminary Library, Cuzco, Peru, US-NYp, SFs

OTHER WORKS

org, P-Pm

DOUBTFUL WORKS

Celos vencidos de amor (zar, M. de Lanuza), 1698, ?lost; Júpiter y Yoo (zar, Lanuza), 1699, E-Mn, score anon

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Pedrell, ed.: Teatro lírico español anterior al siglo XIX (La Coruña, 1897–8)

N.A. Solar Quintes: 'Nuevas obras de Sebastián Durón y de Luigi Boccherini', AnM, xiii (1958), 225–59

L. Siemens Hernández: 'Nuevos documentos sobre el músico Sebastián Durón', AnM, xvi (1961), 177–93

L. Siemens Hernández: 'Nuevas aportaciones para la biografía de Sebastián Durón', AnM, xviii (1963), 139–59

A. Martín Moreno: 'El músico Sebastián Durón: su testamento y muerte: hacia una posible biografía', AnM, xxvii (1972), 163–88

G.Q. Hart: A Study and Edition of the Zarzuela 'Las nuevas armas de amor', Libretto by José de Cañizares, Music by Sebastián Durón (diss., U. of Newcastle upon Tyne, 1974)

L.K. Stein: 'Un manuscrito de música teatral reaparecido: Veneno es de amor la envidia', RdMc, v (1982), 225–33

C. Caballero: 'El manuscrito Gayangos-Barbieri', RdMc, xii (1989), 199–268
L.K. Stein: Songs of Mortals, Dialogues of the Gods: Music and Theatre in Seventeenth-Century Spain (Oxford, 1993)
L.K. Stein: 'The Iberian Peninsula', in The Late Baroque Era: From the 1680s to 1740, ed. G. Buelow (London, 1993), 411–34
J.J. Carreras: 'La cantata de cámara española de principios del siglo XVIII: el manuscrito M2618 de la Biblioteca Nacional de Madrid y sus concordancias', Música y literatura en la Península Ibérica 1600–1750 (Valladolid, 1997), 65–126
L.K. Stein: '"Este nada dichoso género": la zarzuela y sus convenciones', ibid., 185–217
J. Koegel: 'New Sources of Music from Spain and Colonial Mexico at the Sutro Library', Notes, lv/3 (1998–9), 583–613 [incl. 'Mexican Anthologies of Dance and Salon Music', pp.592–601]

LOUISE K. STEIN (with JACK SAGE and JOHN H. BARON)

Duronceray, Marie-Justine-Benoîte. French singer, actress, dancer and dramatist. See FAVART family, (2).

Dürr, Alfred (b Berlin, 3 March 1918). German musicologist. After 1945 he studied musicology under Gerber and took the doctorate in 1950 with a dissertation on Bach's early cantatas. He was a research assistant (1951–83) and subsequently acting director (1962–81) at the Johann-Sebastian-Bach-Institut in Göttingen. He also edited the Bach-Jahrbuch with Werner Neumann from 1953 to 1974. As a Bach scholar Dürr is a principal contributor to the Bach Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, of which he has edited several volumes. His standard works on Bach (particularly on the chronology of his output and on the cantatas) are the result not only of purely musical research, but also of the investigation of other considerations such as the theological and historical aspects of Bach's work and detailed analysis of the sources. The Festschrift Bachiana et alia musicologica: Festschrift Alfred Dürr (ed. W. Rehm, Kassel, 1983), was published to mark his 65th birthday and he has received the honorary doctorate from Oxford University.

WRITINGS

Studien über die frühen Kantaten J.S. Bachs (diss., U. of Göttingen, 1950; Leipzig, 1951, 2/1977)
'Zur Chronologie der Leipziger Vokalwerke J.S. Bachs', BJb 1957, 5–162
J.S. Bach, Weihnachtsoratorium (Munich, 1967)
'Eine Handschriftensammlung des 18. Jahrhunderts in Göttingen', AMw, xxv (1968), 308–16
Die Kantaten von J.S. Bach (Kassel, 1971, 6/1995)
'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte des 5. Brandenburgischen Konzerts', BJb 1975, 63–9
Johann Sebastian Bach: seine Handschrift: Abbild seines Schaffens (Wiesbaden, 1984)
Im Mittelpunkt Bach: ausgewählte Aufsätze und Vorträge (Kassel, 1988)
Die Johannes-Passion von Johann Sebastian Bach (Kassel, 1988, 2/1992)
Bachs Werk vom Einfall bis zur Drucklegung (Wiesbaden, 1989)

EDITIONS

Johann Sebastian Bach: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, I/i: Adventskantaten (Kassel, 1954) [with W. Neumann]; I/x: Kantaten zum 2. und 3. Ostertag (Kassel, 1955); II/iii: Magnificat (Kassel, 1955); I/ii: Kantaten zum 1. Weihnachtstag (Kassel, 1957); I/xii: Kantaten zum Sonntag Cantate bis zum Sonntag Exaudi (Kassel, 1960); II/vi: Weihnachtsoratorium (Kassel, 1960) [with W. Blankenburg]; I/xiv: Kantaten zum 2. und 3. Pfingstag (Kassel, 1962) [with A. Mendel]; I/xxxv: Festmusiken für die Fürstenhäuser von Weimar, Weissenfels und Köthen (Kassel, 1963); I/xviii: Kantaten zum 7. und 8. Sonntag nach Trinitatis (Kassel, 1966) [with L. Treitler]; I/xv: Kantaten zu Trinitatis und zum 1. Sonntag nach Trinitatis (Kassel, 1967) [with R. Freeman and R. Webster]; I/xxvii: Kantaten zum 24.–27. Sonntag nach Trinitatis (Kassel, 1968); II/v-va: Matthäus-Passion (Kassel, 1972); V/vii: Die sechs Englischen Suiten (Kassel, 1979); V/viii: Die sechs Französischen Suiten, Zwei Suiten a-Moll und Es-Dur(Kassel, 1980); V/vi/1: Das wohltemperierte Klavier, i (Kassel, 1989); V/vi/2: Das wohltemperierte Klavier, ii, Fünf Präludien und Fughetten (Kassel, 1995)
Gottfried Kirchhoff und Johann Gottlieb Goldberg: Kirchenkantaten, EDM, 1st ser., xxxv (1957)

HANS HEINRICH EGGEBRECHT/KONRAD KÜSTER

Dürr, Walther (b Berlin, 27 March 1932). German musicologist. He studied musicology with Gerstenberg from 1951 to 1952 at the Free University of Berlin and at Tübingen University, where he took the doctorate in 1956 with a dissertation on rhythm and metre in the Italian madrigal. In 1956 he held a scholarship at the institute of German language and literature at Bologna University; from 1957 to 1962 he was research assistant and lecturer there. He then became research assistant and lecturer at the department for foreigners of Tübingen University until 1965, when he joined the editorial board of the Neue Schubert-Ausgabe in Tübingen. In 1977 he was made an honorary professor of the University of Tübingen. Although he began his career specializing in the Italian madrigal, Dürr has become a recognized Schubert scholar and expert on German song; he has also written extensively on the relationship between speech and music.

WRITINGS

Studien zu Rhythmus und Metrum im italienischen Madrigal, insbesondere bei Luca Marenzio (diss., U. of Tübingen, 1956)
'Die italienische Canzonette und das deutsche Lied im Ausgang des XVI. Jahrhunderts', Studi in onore di Lorenzo Bianchi (Bologna, 1960), 73–102
'Rhythm in Music: a Formal Scaffolding of Time', The Voices of Time, ed. J.T. Fraser (New York, 1966, 2/1981), 180–200
'Formen und Möglichkeiten des musikalischen Vortrages', Mf, xxi (1968), 182–98
'Wer vermag nach Beethoven noch etwas zu machen? Gedanken über die Beziehungen Schuberts zu Beethoven', BeJb 1973–7, 47–67
Franz Schuberts Werke in Abschriften: Liederalben und Sammlungen, Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, viii/8, pt.2 (Kassel, 1975) with A. Feil: 'Die Neue Schubert-Ausgabe: zum editorischen Konzept einer kritischen Gesamtausgabe', Musica, xxxii (1978), 131–6
'Schubert and Johann Michael Vogl: a Reappraisal', 19CM, iii (1979–80), 126–40
'Schubert's Songs and their Poetry: Reflections and Poetic Aspects of Song Composition', Schubert Studies, ed. E. Badura-Skoda and P. Branscombe (Cambridge, 1982), 1–24
Das deutsche Sololied im 19. Jahrhundert: Untersuchungen zu Sprache und Musik (Wilhelmshaven, 1984)
'I Wesendonck Lieder di Richard Wagner e la tradizione ottocentestica del lied', Effetto Wagner, ed. L. Secci (Perugia, 1986), 27–44
'Semantische Zeichen in Schuberts Instrumentalmusik', IMSCR XIV: Bologna 1987, 781–91
'"Ausweichungen ohne Sinn, Ordnung und Zweck": zu Tonart und Tonalität bei Schubert', Franz Schubert – der Fortschrittliche? Analysen – Perspektiven – Fakten, ed. E.W. Partsch (Tutzing, 1989), 73–103
'Franz Schuberts nachgelassene musikalische Dichtungen: Zu Diabellis "Nachlasslieferungen" und ihrer Ordnung', Festschrift Wolfgang Rehm, ed. D. Berke and H. Heckmann (Kassel, 1989), 214–25
'Zyklische Form und "poetische Idee": Schuberts grosse C-dur-Sinfonie', Probleme der symphonischen Tradition im 19. Jahrhundert: Bonn 1989, 455–69
'Entwurf – Ausarbeitung – Revision: zur Arbeitsweise Schuberts am Beispiel des Liedes "Der Unglückliche" (D 713)', Mf, xliv (1991), 221–36 with A. Feil and W. Litschauer: Musikführer Franz Schubert (Stuttgart, 1991)
'Über Schuberts Verhältnis zu Bach', Johann Sebastian Bach: Beiträge zur Wirkungsgeschichte, ed. I. Fuchs (Vienna, 1992), 69–79
'Von Modellen und Rastern: Schubert studiert Mozart?', Mozart-Studien, i (1992), 173–93

ed. W. Aderhold and W. Litschauer: Zeichen Setzung: Aufsätze zur musikalischen Poetik (Kassel, 1992)
'Music as an Analogue of Speech: Musical Syntax in the Writings of Heinrich Christoph Koch and in the Works of Schubert', Eighteenth-Century Music in Theory and Practice: Essays in Honor of Alfred Mann, ed. M.A. Parker (Stuyvesant, NY, 1994), 227–40
Sprache und Musik: Geschichte – Gattungen – Analysemodelle (Kassel, 1994)
'Überlegungen zur Edition von Musik und Text am Beispiel vertonter Texte', Editio, viii (1994), 39–52
ed., with G. Braungardt: Über Schubert: von Musikern, Dichtern und Liebhabern: eine Anthologie (Stuttgart, 1996)
ed., with A. Krause: Schubert-Handbuch (Kassel, 1997)

EDITIONS

Franz Schubert: Neue Ausgabe sämtlicher Werke, iv/1–7, 11–14: Lieder (Kassel, 1968–); vii/2/5: Klavierstücke II (Kassel, 1984) [with C. Landon]; ii/6: Alfonso und Estrella (Kassel, 1993–5)
Franz Schubert: Fantasie für Klavier (Kassel, 1969)

HANS HEINRICH EGGEBRECHT/KONRAD KÜSTER

Dürrner, Johann(es) Rupprecht (b Ansbach, 15 July 1810; d Edinburgh, 10 June 1859). German composer and conductor. During his youth in Ansbach and at the teacher-training college at Altdorf he showed great skill as a violinist, singer and clarinettist. He also studied composition with Friedrich Schneider at Dessau, and in 1831 became Kantor of the church of St Gumbertus in Ansbach. There he founded and conducted a choral and orchestral society and the male-voice choir Liederkranz. During these years he continued his musical studies with Bernhard Molique at Stuttgart and with Ferdinand David and Moritz Hauptmann at Leipzig, where he became acquainted with Mendelssohn. In 1844 Dürrner moved to Edinburgh, where he participated in all areas of musical life, gaining a reputation as a teacher and as the conductor of the Edinburgh Musical Association.

Dürrner's compositions enjoyed considerable popularity during his lifetime, notably his lieder, arrangements of Scottish folksongs and especially his compositions for four male voices, which were as highly esteemed as Mendelssohn's. These compositions combine naturalness of melody with subtle harmonies, contrapuntal techniques and depth of feeling. A symphony in A minor was performed in Berlin, Leipzig and Nuremberg but all his orchestral works and most of his chamber music do not seem to have survived.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (F. Krautwurst)
P. Körber: 'Joh. Rupprecht Dürrner', Erinnerungsblätter für die Mitglieder des Nürnberger Sängertages (Nuremberg, 1859), 114–20
D. Baptie: Musical Scotland Past and Present (Paisley, 1894/R), 50
H.G. Farmer: A History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947/R), 381

BARBARA EICHNER

Durrschmied, Carl. See TÜRRSCHMIDT, CARL.

Duruflé [née Chevalier], Marie-Madeleine (b Marseilles, 8 May 1921). French organist and composer. She was born into a musical family, and from the age of seven wrote pieces for piano, organ and voice; at the age of eleven she was made organist at Cavaillon Cathedral, Vaucluse. She studied solfège, piano and harmony at the Avignon Conservatoire, and in 1946 entered the Paris Conservatoire, where she studied organ and improvisation with Dupré, winning a premier prix in 1949; she then deputized for Dupré as organist at St Sulpice. In 1953 she won first prize for organ and improvisation in the Widor International Competition, and the same year married Maurice Duruflé, with whom she became co-organist of St Etienne-du-Mont. She has given numerous recitals, both solo and jointly with her husband, and has recorded music by Bach and by Duruflé and other French composers. She has taught at the University of North Texas and the Académie d'Orgue de Toulouse, and has given masterclasses in the USA and France. She has also composed choral works and harmonizations of popular songs.

GILLES CANTAGREL

Duruflé, Maurice (b Louviers, 11 Jan 1902; d Paris, 16 June 1986). French composer and organist. He received his early musical education (1912–18) at a choir school in Rouen, where he deputised at the cathedral for his teacher Jules Haelling, a pupil of Guilmant. The choral plainsong tradition which thrived there became a profound influence. Maurice Emmanuel heard him play and arranged for him to go to Paris and meet Tournemire who prepared him for entry to the Conservatoire. Duruflé became his deputy at St Clothilde in 1920 but turned to Vierne as a teacher. The entirely contrasting musical temperaments and inspirations of these two composers can be traced in Duruflé's compositions. (He was later to transcribe a number of their recorded improvisations.) From Tournemire he inherited the mystical world of plainsong and the rich ambiguities of modal harmony. From Vierne came a more rigorous sense of structure and proportion and an awareness of the breadth of the organ's capabilities. In 1920 he entered the Conservatoire and achieved outstanding success, winning premier prix in five classes: organ with Gigout (1922), harmony with Jean Gallon (1924), fugue with Caussade (1924), accompaniment with Estyle (1926) and composition with Dukas (1928). In 1927 he became deputy to Vierne at Notre-Dame; Vierne spoke highly of his talents and reputedly expressed the hope that he would succeed him there. But it was to the post of organist at St Etienne-du-Mont that Duruflé was appointed in 1930 and he was to remain there for the rest of his life. In 1942 he deputised for Dupré as professor of the organ class at the Paris Conservatoire and from 1943 to 1970 he held the post of professor of harmony there, counting among his pupils Cochereau, Guillou and Marie-Claire Alain. As an organist he toured Europe, the USA and the USSR.

Introspective and enormously self-critical, Duruflé was not a prolific composer. His output nonetheless manifests an evenness of quality and a distinctive voice in the 20th-century French repertory. Plainsong is the life-blood of most of his works but its use proves liberating rather than restrictive, inspiring modal harmonies, polyphonic structures and, often, changes of mood ranging from the ethereal to the powerfully foreboding.

His first published work, the Scherzo (1924) is dedicated to Tournemire. Like many of Duruflé's works, it underwent several revisions, including a colourful orchestration in 1940. Prélude, adagio et choral varié sur le 'Veni Creator' is dedicated to Vierne and won a prize from the Amies de l'Orgue in 1930. Rather in the manner of an organ improvisation, the Veni Creator plainsong theme is not revealed fully until the end of the Adagio. The highly varied Suite opens with a mystical, brooding Prelude and ends with a dazzling Toccata, one of his most memorable pieces of organ writing. As a secular orchestral work, Trois danses is an all too rare example of his exotic, masterly use of instrumental colours, a legacy of his studies with Dukas. Prélude et fugue sur le nom d'Alain is based not on plainsong but on a pitch cell which enciphers the letters of Alain's name: the lucid, defiant fugue is an enduring memorial to a promising contemporary, killed in action in World War II. The Requiem, composed in 1947, has rightfully earned its place as a masterpiece of the genre alongside that of Fauré. The rhythm and flow of plainsong is present under the surface of the music and is supplemented in the full orchestral version by colourful instrumentation which is nonetheless never employed for mere theatrical effect. The vision of hope accompanies a sense of spiritual struggle: the firm counterpoint of the Kyrie gives way to an anguished Domine Jesu Christe and the poignant Pie Jesu evokes not doubt, but the composer's empathy with suffering humanity. The Mass 'Cum jubilo' is a work of greater restraint, more overtly based on Gregorian chant, which again becomes an effective vehicle for the composer's spiritual vision.

WORKS

(selective list)

Org: Scherzo, op.2, 1924, orchd 1940; Prélude, adagio et choral varié sur le 'Veni Creator', op.4, 1930; Suite, op.5, 1933; Prélude et fugue sur le nom d'Alain, op.7, 1942

Choral: Requiem, op.9, solo vv, chorus, org, orch, 1947; 4 Motets: Ubi caritas, Tota pulchra es, Tu es Petrus, Tantum ergo, op.10, chorus, 1960; Mass 'Cum jubilo', op.11, Bar, Bar chorus, orch, 1966

Other works: Tryptique, pf, 1926; Prélude, récitatif et variations, op.3, fl, va, pf, 1928; 3 danses, op.6, orch, 1932; Andante et scherzo, op.8, orch, 1940; Tambourin [from 3 danses], pf, 1961

Transcrs.: L. Vierne: 3 Improvisations (Paris, 1954); C. Tournemire: 5 improvisations (Paris, 1958)

Principal publisher: Durand

WRITINGS

(selective list)

'Cinq improvisations pour orgue de Charles Tournemire', L'orgue, no.92 (1959), 126 only

'L'orgue dans la nouvelle liturgie', L'orgue, no.115 (1965), 141–3

'USA-USSR', L'orgue, nos.122–3 (1967), 191–6

'Une table ronde sur la musique religieuse', L'orgue, no.130 (1969), 33–7

'La masse silencieuse du clergé', L'orgue, no.134 (1970), 49–51

'Où allons-nous?', L'orgue, no.145 (1973), 1–3

'Le concerto pour orgue et orchestre à cordes de Francis Poulenc', L'orgue, no.154 (1975), 40–42

'L'orgue français de l'an 2000', L'orgue, no.160–61 (1976), 80–89

'Mes souvenirs sur Tournemire et Vierne', L'orgue, no.162 (1977), 1–7

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C. Rostand: 'Un maître normand et son chef d'oeuvre: Maurice Duruflé et son Requiem', Etudes normandes, no.26–9 (1958), 18–20

G. Beechey: 'The Music of Maurice Duruflé', MR, xxxii (1971), 146–55

G. Baker: 'An Interview with Maurice Duruflé', The American Organist, xiv/11 (1980), 57–60

R. Nichols: 'Maurice Duruflé 1902–1986', Choir & Organ, iv/3 (1996), 30–31

NICHOLAS KAYE

Durville, Philippe (b Bourg-la-Reine, 10 March 1957). French composer. In 1982 Durville entered the analysis class of Betsy Jolas and the composition class of Ivo Malec at the Paris Conservatoire, where he made a study of Grisey's Partiels, which proved significant for his compositional development and, in 1984, won a number of premiers prix. Subsequently he studied with Dutilleux, Stockhausen, Xenakis and Murail. A trainee at IRCAM, he was appointed to its department of musical research (1984–7). In 1984 he helped set up the course in computer-aided composition at the Conservatoire, which he directed jointly with David Wessel until 1988. He held a residency at the Villa Medici from 1991 to 1993.

Durville's art is a kind of musique spectrale which seeks a new form of thematicism by means of psycho-acoustic and computer-aided exploration of sonic 'patterns'. His music is subject essentially to three influences: that of Ligeti, in its attention to sound and its acoustic evolution, metamorphoses and anamorphoses; that of Nancarrow's experiments with the compression and expansion of time, the breaking-up of a simple object to the point where its elements achieve total autonomy; and finally that of Scelsi's primitivism, the hedonism of unprecedented combinations of sonic strata. L'espace du dedans (1990) confronts the notion of a work that remains confined in its own restricted space, in which the density of the material is absorbed by the void.

WORKS

(selective list)

Orch: Alpha centaure, large orch, 1984; Imac, wind, brass, 2 perc, 2 synth, 1984 [rev. 1991]; Miroir du double, 10 insts, 2 computer-controlled synth, 1986; L'espace du dedans, large orch, 1990 [rev. 1994]

Chbr: T. Tauri, fl, ob, a sax, tpt, hn, trbn, mar, hp, pf, perc, 1982 [rev. 1991]; Le temps de l'espace, 6 perc, sax, 1995

Principal publisher: Billaudot

LAURENT FENEYROU

Du Sablon, Antoine. See ARENA, ANTONIUS DE.

Dusapin, Pascal (b Nancy, 29 May 1955). French composer. His introduction to music came by way of playing the organ, and then of hearing Varèse's Arcana. He studied art and art history at the Sorbonne (1974–8), during which time he briefly attended Messiaen's classes at the Conservatoire (1976) and found a teacher more to his taste in Xenakis. He also had lessons with Donatoni. Early works won him notice and awards, including a stay at the Villa Medici in Rome (1981–3). Another grant took him to New York for six months in 1988 and he was composer-in-residence with the Orchestre National de Lyon in 1993–5, but his existence has essentially been that of an independent composer living in Paris.

A kind of expression at once excessive (marked by strident, wind-based sonorities and frenetic speed) and frozen (unchanging, objectified) is evident in his works of the early 1980s, after which came a concentration on smaller pieces that emerged as offshoots from work on his first opera, Roméo et Juliette (1985–9). These smaller pieces are extravagantly virtuosic and plunge into a modernist world of microtones, wide intervals and marginal effects, but their pace is considerably slower and their expressive focus more defined. Many of them involve the clarinet, and there is an important role for solo clarinettist in the opera, which again unfolds in expanses of sustained expressive colour. At times the narrative seems very close, intense, at other times very distant, memorialized, this being an effect largely of the orchestral music, while the vocal texture remains generally complex and diffused, involving singing and speaking soloists (often muttering at speed), a quartet and a chorus. Similarly diffused is the drama, for the work is at once a love story and a metaphor of social change (four scenes precede 'La Révolution', an 'orchestral solo', and four come after), of world discovery (the first scene after 'La Révolution' is of Amerindian songs sung by a quartet) and of the formation of an opera.

Always a fecund composer, Dusapin became extraordinarily prolific in the 1990s, producing a rapid sequence of large-scale works, four quartets for the Arditti and more pieces for the ensemble Accroche Note (founded by a singer and a clarinettist), with whom he had worked in the previous decade. His second opera, Medeamaterial, was written as a companion piece for Dido and Aeneas and takes the form of an extended lament with choral interjections, the whole more harmonically conceived than his music had been hitherto. Other characteristics of this period suggest a kinship with folk music: the frequent prominence of drones, the use of restricted modes (though without tonal centres becoming obvious). What remains from Dusapin's earlier work is a powerful sense of vocal expression, even when the music is instrumental, as in a new set of 'orchestral solos' (Go, Extenso, Apex, Clam), which still recall Varèse.

WORKS

Ops: Roméo et Juliette (O. Cadiot), 1985–9, Montpellier, Opéra, 10 July 1989; Medeamaterial (H. Müller), S, chorus, Baroque orch, tape, 1991, Brussels, Monnaie, March 1992; To Be Sung (P. Dusapin, after G. Stein), 3 S, spkr, ens, elecs, 1993–4, Nanterre, Amandiers, 17 Nov 1994

Large-scale vocal: Niobé (R. Fohr, after Lat.), S, 12 solo vv, 8 wind, 1982; La melancholia (Classical and Medieval), S, Mez, Ct, T, chorus, orch, tape, 1991; Granum sinapis, chorus, 1992–7, Umbrae mortis, chorus, 1997; Dona eis (Requiem, Cadiot), 1997

Small-scale vocal: To God (W. Blake), S, cl, 1985; Mimi (Cadiot), 2 S, ob, b cl, trbn, 1986; Anacoluthe (Cadiot), S, b cl, db, 1987; Il-li-ko (Cadiot), S, 1987; Aks (Oc trad.), Mez, 7 insts, 1987; For O. (S. Daniel), 2 S, 2 b cl, 1989; So Full of Shapes is Fancy (W. Shakespeare), S, b cl, 1990; Comoedia (D. Alighieri), S, 6 insts, 1993; Canto (G. Leopardi), S, cl, vc, 1994; Two Walking (Stein), 2 S, 1994

Orch: La rivière, 1979, rev. 1980; Tre scalini, 1981; L'aven, 1980–82; Assaï, 1984; Haro, 1984–5; Go, 1992; Khora, str, 1993; Extenso, 1994; Watt, trbn, orch, 1994; Apex, 1995; Celo [sic], vc, chbr orch, 1996; Clam, 1997–8; Galim, fl, str, 1998

Ens: Musique captive, 8 wind, 1980; Fist, 8 insts, 1982; Hop', 12 insts, 1983–4; Aria, cl, 13 insts, 1991; Coda, 13 insts, 1992; Quad, 8 vc, 1996; Cascando, fl, 15 insts, 1997

Chbr: Musique fugitive, str trio, 1979; Str Qt no.1, 1983; Laps, cl, db, 1987; Sly, trbn qt, 1987; Time Zones (Str Qt no.2), 1988–90; Attacca, 2 tpt, drums, 1991; Stanze, brass qnt, 1991; Str Qt no.3, 1992; Trio Rombach, pf trio, 1997; Str Qt no.4, 1997

Solo inst: Inside, va, 1980; Incisa, vc, 1982; If, cl, 1984; Item, vc, 1985; Itou, b cl, 1985; Ici, fl, 1986; Indeed, trbn, 1987; Iti, vn, 1987; In & Out, db, 1989; I pesci, fl, 1989; Invece, vc, 1991; Ipso, cl, 1994; Immer, vc, 1996

Principal publisher: Salabert

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Stoïanova: 'Pascal Dusapin: Febrile Music', CMR, viii/1 (1993), 183–96

D. Cohen-Lévinas: Fragment d'un discours musical: dialogue (La Rochelle, 1995)

P. Dusapin and J. Turrell: To be Sung (Arles, 1997) [libretto with other documentation]

PAUL GRIFFITHS

Du Sart [Doussart, Dusart, Dussart], Jean [Petit Jean, Petit Jehan; Sart Janne de] (d Brussels, 12 Oct 1485). Franco-Flemish composer and singer. He was at Cambrai Cathedral as a petit-vicaire from 21 November 1446 (as Jean Du Sart and 'Petit Jean'; see C. Wright, reported in CMM, lxxxvii, 1979, XIII), and as master of the choirboys intermittently between 1458 and 1466. He resigned his chaplaincy there on 29 May 1467 for one at Valenciennes and can therefore be identified with the 'Janne de Sart', known as 'Petit Jehan', who was zangmeester at Ste Gudule in Brussels when he died there in 1485 (Haggh, 655). He matriculated at the University of Leuven on 28 August 1466 and became a canon of Notre Dame de la Salle-le-Combe, Valenciennes, by 7 August 1467. He is one of the musicians named (as 'Johannem Dussart') in Compère's Omnium bonorum plena (*c*1472), which seems to record a meeting of musicians in Cambrai about 1472. A reference to 'Domino Johanne Dusart presbitero' in the accounts of the Ste Chapelle, Paris, for 1483 (Brenet, 38), includes no hint that he was a musician; nor is he likely to be identifiable with the earlier composer JOHANNES DE SARTO.

The three-voice rondeau Rose plaisante (ed. Brown, no.219) is ascribed to him in I-Rc 2856; its musical relationship with Allez regretz by Hayne van Ghizeghem (whose De tous biens plaine formed the tenor of Omnium bonorum plena), including an apparent direct quote, suggests that Du Sart is indeed its composer, despite later contrary ascriptions to both Caron (Fn B.R.229) and Philipon (RISM 1504[3]) in less trustworthy sources; it survives in six sources and was used as the basis of a mass by Obrecht. The combinative chanson Mon trestout et mon assotee/Il estoit ung bonhomme survives uniquely in the Mellon Chansonnier (US-NH 91, ed. Perkins, no.28), where it is ascribed to 'Petit Jan'. Its style seems compatible with that of Rose plaisante; both works could have been composed in the early 1460s.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrenetM

C. Wright: 'Dufay at Cambrai: Discoveries and Revisions', JAMS, xxviii (1975), 175–229, esp. 205–6

L.L. Perkins and H. Garey, eds.: The Mellon Chansonnier (New Haven, CT, 1979)

H.M. Brown, ed.: A Florentine Chansonnier from the Time of Lorenzo the Magnificent (Chicago, 1983)

B.H. Haggh: Music, Liturgy, and Ceremony in Brussels, 1350–1500 (diss., U. of Illinois-Urbana, 1988), 341, 655

DAVID FALLOWS / BARBARA HAGGH

Duschmalui, Joseph. See TOUCHEMOULIN, JOSEPH.

Dušek, František (b Dolní Dobrouč, 1 Sept 1780; d Dolní Dobrouč, 18 May 1844). Czech choirmaster, sometimes confused with FRANTIŠEK XAVER DUŠEK.

Dušek [Duschek, Duscheck, Dussek], František Xaver (b Chotěborky, nr Jaroměř, Bohemia, bap. 8 Dec 1731; d Prague, 12 Feb 1799). Czech composer, pianist and music teacher. The son of a peasant, he was enabled by his patron, Count Johann Karl Sporck, to attend the Jesuit Gymnasium at Hradec Králové. Later he studied music in Prague with Franz Habermann and in Vienna with Wagenseil. Not later than 1770 he settled in Prague, where he became very influential as a music teacher and pianist. The most outstanding of his pupils were Leopold Kozeluch, Jan Vitásek and Vincenc Mašek. As a composer he appears to have had some connection with the orchestras of Count Pachta and Count Clam-Gallas. Dušek's house was an important centre of Prague musical life and was visited by many musicians from abroad. He and his wife Josefa were probably among those who invited Mozart to witness the Prague success of Le nozze di Figaro (January 1787). In the Dušeks' summer residence, the villa Bertramka at Smíchov near Prague, Mozart completed Don Giovanni (October 1787) and probably also La clemenza di Tito (September 1791).

Of the native Bohemian musicians of the second half of the 18th century Dušek was the most prominent composer of secular music. Most of his works were written between 1761 and 1796; their style varies between the galant and high Classical, but some Baroque traits also appear. His symphonies and string quartets date mostly from the 1760s. The symphonies are in either three movements, fast–slow–fast, or four in Classical order; the string quartets have mostly four movements. The first movements are in sonata form with two subject groups, usually without marked contrast, and short development sections. Some of the finales are remarkable as early specimens of elaborate rondo form. His concertos and concertinos, as well as his sonatas, show a transition from harpsichord towards piano style; their melodic figurations are much like those of Wagenseil, but in the solo part the hands are more equally balanced. The solo keyboard works were written mainly as teaching material. Most of them are three-movement cycles of sonatina proportions with the accent on expressiveness. Dušek's melodic inspiration is notable for its occasional use of Czech idioms and slight tinges of melancholy in the minor-key movements.

WORKS

Edition: The Symphony in Hungary, The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, xii (New York, 1984) [H]

Thematic catalogues: Sýkora (1958); H unless otherwise stated all are MS (mostly in CZ-Pnm, some dated 1761–8)

Br. cat. – listed in Breitkopf catalogue(s)

ORCHESTRAL

Orch: 37 syms., several Br. cat. (1774, 1776–7), 4 ed. in H; Sym., F, in 6 simphonies a grand orchestre par Mr Hayden, op.9 (Paris, *c*1770), not listed in H; Sym., A, Br. cat. (1773), lost; 2 serenatas, F, D; 13 menuetti

Concs., hpd/pf, orch/chbr ens: 6 concs., 2 Br. cat. (1773); 3 concs., Br. cat. (1778, 1781, 1785–7), lost; Adagio, B♭

Concertinos: 4 for hpd, vn, vc, Br. cat. (1773, 1779–80), 1 movt ed. in DCHP, cxxvi (1958); A, hpd, fl, vn, vc, b, Br. cat. (1774), lost; B♭, hpd, vn, b, Br. cat. (1782–4), lost; G, hpd, 2 vn, va, b (Linz, *c*1784); G, hpd, vn, va, b

CHAMBER

Ww: 37 parthias (partitas), 2 ob, 2 hn, 2 bn; 6 parthias, 2 ob, 2 hn, bn, 1 ed. in MAB, xxxv (1958); 6 parthias, 2 ob, bn, ed. M. Klement (Prague, 1979)

Strs: 20 str qts (quadri, divertimentos), 6 pubd as 6 quartetti ... dal signore Giorgio Hayden, op.18 (Paris, 1774), 7 ed. E. Gross (Sydney, 1972); Serenata, C, str qt; str qt, B♭, Br. cat. (1771), lost; 21 trios (divertimentos), 2 vn, b; Notturno, a, 2 vn, b; Serenata, A, 2 vn, b

Ww, str: Divertimento, F, 2 vn, 2 hn, va, b; 2 divertimentos, D, E♭, vn, va, 2 hn, b; Serenata, E♭, vn, eng hn, va, hn, bn

KEYBOARD

2 hands: 14 sonatas, some Br. cat. (1773), 8 ed. in MAB, viii (1951), 1 ed. in MVH, xxxi (1974), 2 movts ed. in MAB, xiv (1953); Sonata (Prague, 1771); Sonata, B♭ (Prague, 1774), 1 movt ed. in MAB, xvii (1954), MVH, v (1961); Sonate, B♭, pf (Prague, 1796), 1 movt ed. in MAB, xvii (1954), MVH, v (1961); Andante mit Variationen, pf (Prague, *c*1796); Andante con menuetto, G; Sonata, *D-Bsb; several other sonatas, Br. cat. (1773–4), lost; 6 sonatinas, ed. in Edice Medailón, 1 (Prague, 1973); 4 sets of variations

4 hands: 2 sonates, C, E♭ (Vienna, 1788); Sonata, G (n.p., *c*1796); 2 sonatas; 2 divertimentos; 2 sets of variations; Menuetto, C

Diversae partes, hpd (Sýkora no.11), by F. Dušek

VOCAL

5 songs in XXV Lieder für Kinder und Kinderfreunde von F.A. Spielman mit Melodien von Vinzenz Maschek und Franz Duschek (Prague, *c*1792)

Sacred works, attrib. Dušek by Sýkora, mostly doubtful: Sýkora nos.11, 180–81, 183–7 by F. Dušek; others by B. Dušek (b 1801), F.B. Dussek, J.L. Dussek

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrookB; DlabacžKL; GerberL; GerberNL; NewmanSCE

J.F. Reichardt: Briefe eines aufmerksamen Reisenden die Musik betreffend, i (Frankfurt and Leipzig, 1774/R), 116

C.F. Cramer, ed.: Magazin der Musik, i (Hamburg, 1783/R), 997

J.F. von Schönfeld, ed.: Jb der Tonkunst von Wien und Prag (Vienna, 1796/R), 113–14

AMZ, i (1798–9), 444–5; ii (1799–1800), 513–23; vii (1805–6), 783 only

J. Patera: Bertramka v Praze [Bertramka at Prague] (Prague, 1948) [incl. list of compositions]

H. Abert: W.A. Mozart, ii (Leipzig, 3/1956), 338ff

V.J. Sýkora: František Xaver Dušek: život a dílo [Dušek: life and works] (Prague, 1958)

T. Volek: 'Über den Ursprung von Mozarts Oper La clemenza di Tito', MJb 1959, 274–86

E. Gross: 'Background and Problems for an Historical and Critical Edition of the String Quartets of F.X. Dušek', MMA, vi (1972), 4–37

R.M. Longyear and K.Covington: 'Sources of the Three-Key Exposition', JM, vi (1988), 448–70

M. Kabelková: 'Hudební archív a kapela hrabete Jana Josefa Filipa Pachty' [The music archives and orchestra of Count Jan Josef Filip Pachta], HV, xxviii (1991), 329–33

MILAN POŠTOLKA/R

Dušek [Dušková] [née Hambacher], Josefa [Duschek, Josepha] (b Prague, bap. 6 March 1754; d Prague, 8 Jan 1824). Czech soprano, wife of FRANTIŠEK XAVER DUŠEK. She was a pupil of Dušek and married him on 21 October 1776. The Dušeks occasionally visited Salzburg, the home town of Josefa's mother, and a result of their meeting the Mozart family there in August 1777 was the recitative and aria Ah, lo previdi K272, composed for Josefa. In spring 1786 Mozart accompanied her at a private concert before the Viennese court, and in 1787 he wrote for her the recitative and aria Bella mia fiamma, addio K528 (dated Prague, 3 November 1787). In 1789 she sang at Mozart's concerts in Dresden and Leipzig.

During her long career, which lasted from the 1770s to the first decade of the 19th century, Dušek sang at various concerts and academies in Prague, Vienna (1786, 1798), Salzburg (1777, 1786), Dresden (1785–9), Weimar (1788), Leipzig (1789, 1796), Warsaw and Berlin. Her repertory included operatic and concert arias by Mozart, J.G. Naumann (Amphion, Orpheus og Eurydike), Beethoven (she gave the first performance of Ah!, perfido op.65 on 21 November 1796 in Leipzig), F.D. Weber (König der Genien) and others. She also sang in the Prague performances of Leopold Kozeluch's coronation cantata (1791), Haydn's The Creation (16 March 1800, 10 April 1803) and The Seasons (December 1803) and Handel's Messiah (1 April 1804). She was appreciated for the sonority, range and flexibility of her voice, for her musicianship, and superb execution of both bravura arias and recitatives. Even her critics Schiller and Leopold Mozart agreed on the dramatic expressiveness of her singing.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Flothius: 'Welche Arien sang Josepha Duschek am 26. April 1791?', MISM, xxxvii (1989), 81–2

For further bibliography see DUŠEK, FRANTIŠEK XAVER.

MILAN POŠTOLKA/R

Dushkin, Samuel (b Suwałki, 13 Dec 1891; d New York, 24 June 1976). American violinist of Polish birth. He was taken to the USA as a child, and his talent was discovered at the Music School Settlement of New York. He became a protégé of the composer Blair Fairchild, who brought about his studies with Guillaume Rémy (violin) and Ganaye (composition) at the Paris Conservatoire, and with Auer and Kreisler in New York. Dushkin began to tour in Europe from 1918, and in the USA from 1924, when he first appeared with the New York SO. As well as making a number of successful transcriptions of works by other composers for his own use, he became known as a persuasive advocate of contemporary music, a reputation consolidated by his friendship with Stravinsky, who composed for him his Violin Concerto (1931) and Duo concertant (1932). Stravinsky, in his autobiography, praised Dushkin's 'remarkable gifts as a violinist' and referred to his 'delicate understanding and, in the exercise of his profession, an abnegation that is very rare'. Dushkin collaborated with Stravinsky in making transcriptions from Pulcinella and Le baiser de la fée, and he played these and the Duo concertant during extensive European tours, with Stravinsky as pianist, between 1932 and 1934; he also recorded these works with the composer. Dushkin described their collaboration in an essay written in 1936 (reprinted in Igor Stravinsky, ed. E. Corle, New York, 1949/R). He also published teaching manuals for the violin and editions of Baroque and Classical violin works (some of them in fact his own compositions attributed to earlier composers, including (3) Johann Benda and Boccherini).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Stravinsky: Chroniques de ma vie (Paris, 1935–6, 2/1962; Eng. trans., 1936/R as An Autobiography)
E.W. White: Stravinsky: the Composer and his Works (London, 1966, 2/1979)
J. Creighton: Discopaedia of the Violin, 1889–1971 (Toronto, 1974, 2/1994)
B. Schwarz: Great Masters of the Violin (New York, 1983)

NOËL GOODWIN

Dusík. See DUSSEK family.

Dusíkova, Veronika Elisabeta. Bohemian musician. See DUSSEK family, (4).

Dusinello, Giuseppe (b Venice, ? between 1540 and 1550; d after 1574). Italian composer and instrumentalist. He was engaged on 1 November 1567 as trumpeter at the court of Emperor Maximilian II, and several gifts of money indicate that he was esteemed there. One of them probably relates to a composition that he dedicated to the emperor in 1570 and another to a trip to Venice in 1574, made on the emperor's instructions, to obtain musical instruments. His name does not appear in court records after Maximilian's death (12 October 1576). His only known composition is a four-voice mass (in A-Wn). (W. Pass: Musik und Musiker am Hof Maximilians II, Tutzing, 1980)

WALTER PASS

Dušková, Josefa. See DUŠEK, JOSEFA.

Dussek [Dusík, Dussik]. Bohemian family of musicians. The spelling 'Dussek' is the normal one in English and German literature and was the form used by the most important member of the family, (2) Jan Ladislav; the original Bohemian spelling is 'Dussik', and present-day Czech 'Dusík'.

(1) Jan (Josef) [Johann Joseph] Dussek (b Mlázovice, nr Hořice, 16 Aug 1738; d Čáslav, 24 June 1818). Organist and composer. A well-known musician in his day, he was an organist and elementary-school teacher in Čáslav, where he married Veronika Štěbetová, who was the daughter of the local judge and a talented harpist. He was responsible for the early musical training of the three of his eight children who became noted musicians.

(2) Jan Ladislav [Johann Ladislaus (Ludwig)] Dussek [Dusík] (b Čáslav, 12 Feb 1760; d Saint Germain-en-Laye or Paris, 20 March 1812). Pianist and composer, son of (1) Jan Dussek.

1. LIFE. Despite conflicting evidence, the date of birth given above is confirmed by baptismal records. He began to learn the piano at the age of five and the organ at nine. Because of his fine voice he was sent as a chorister to the Franciscan church in Iglau (now Jihlava), and later he was a pupil at the Jesuit gymnasiums there and at Kutná Hora. Later in Prague he attended the New City Gymnasium for the school year 1776–7 and the University of Prague for one term in 1778.

Under the patronage of a captain of the Austrian artillery, Count Männer, Dussek travelled in 1779 to Malines (now Mechelen), where he stayed as a piano teacher (for an undetermined period) and also appeared in public as a pianist (16 December 1779). He then went to Bergen op Zoom and Amsterdam, and to The Hague, where he seems to have stayed for about a year giving lessons to the children of the stadtholder, William V. During all this time his playing was winning him a brilliant reputation. In 1782 he arrived in Hamburg, where he gave a concert on 12 July and met C.P.E. Bach, who is said to have advised or actually taught him. In 1783 Dussek was in St Petersburg, where he performed at the court of Catherine II. There is a story that he was later implicated in a plot against the empress and had to flee to Lithuania, where he became Kapellmeister to Prince Karl Radziwił for about two years. On leaving the service of Prince Radziwił, probably towards the end of 1784, he made an extended concert tour of Germany, performing on the glass harmonica as well as the piano. This tour included performances in Berlin, Mainz, Cassel, Frankfurt, and possibly Dresden and Ludwigslust. Towards the end of 1786, in the company of the steward (Hofmeister) of the French ambassador to Berlin, he travelled to Paris, where he appeared before the court and was particularly noticed by Marie Antoinette; he also made the acquaintance of Napoleon. He remained in Paris performing and teaching until early 1789, except for a short trip to Milan to perform and to visit his brother (3) Franz Benedikt Dussek.

At the time of the French Revolution Dussek fled to England. Because of his connections with the aristocracy in Paris he was unpopular with the Revolutionary regime, and like many musicians of the time he took refuge in London. He spent the next 11 years in London, where he became very popular as a piano teacher and appeared frequently in concerts, first at the Hanover Square Rooms on 1 June 1789. He was a frequent performer at Salomon's concerts, and appeared with Haydn during his two visits to London. In a letter to Dussek's father (26 February 1792) Haydn paid him one of the highest compliments he ever received:

> I ... consider myself fortunate in being able to assure you that you have one of the most upright, moral, and, in music, most eminent of men for a son. I love him just as you do, for he fully deserves it. Give him, then, daily a father's blessing, and thus will he be ever fortunate, which I heartily wish him to be, for his remarkable talents.

On 31 August 1792 in St Anne's Church, Westminster, Dussek married Sophia Corri (see §(5) below), who became famous as a singer, pianist and harpist. During the remainder of his stay in London, he was associated with his father-in-law, Domenico Corri, in a music publishing business (Corri, Dussek & Co.), which printed many of his works. While in London he also encouraged the firm of Broadwood to extend the range of the piano – in 1791 from five to five and a half octaves, and in 1794 to six octaves. Compositions written for the extended keyboard were said to be for 'piano with additional keys'; many compositions of this period were published with two versions for the right hand, so that they could be performed 'with or without the additional keys'.

Neither Dussek nor Corri was a businessman, and when the publishing business ran hopelessly into debt Dussek fled to Hamburg (late 1799), leaving his father-in-law to be jailed for bankruptcy. Although Dussek wrote to his wife later, there is no evidence that he ever saw her or their daughter, Olivia, again.

Dussek appeared in concerts in Hamburg and met the young Louis Spohr (who was appearing there as a violinist). In mid-1802 he made a long-projected trip to Čáslav to visit his parents and to give a concert; he played there twice (14 and 15 September), with the horn player Giovanni Punto. In October he gave three concerts in Prague with great success. The composer and pianist Václav Jan Křtitel Tomášek was much impressed by his playing, and reported that Dussek was the first to place the piano sideways on the stage so that the audience could see the performer's profile.

From October 1804 to October 1806 Dussek was Kapellmeister to Prince Louis Ferdinand of Prussia, himself an excellent musician and composer. Spohr, in his autobiography, reported on the wild and reckless life they led together as they travelled with the prince from one battlefield to another. The prince's death at the battle of Saalfeld (10 October 1806) occasioned Dussek's well-known piano sonata Elégie harmonique sur la mort du Prince Louis Ferdinand de Prusse op.61 (*c*211). Early editions of this work published by Pleyel and by Breitkopf & Härtel were annotated: 'L'auteur, qui a eu le bonheur de jouir du commerce très intime de S.A.R. ne l'a quitté qu'au moment, où il a versé son précieux sang pour sa patrie'. After the prince's death Dussek briefly served Prince Isenburg, and then in September 1807 accepted a position with Talleyrand in Paris, where he remained until his death. During this period he taught a few piano pupils and gave numerous concerts, often at the Odéon, with the violinists Pierre Rode and Pierre Baillot and the cellist Jacques-Michel de Lamare. In a review of one such concert, on 22 December 1808, Méreaux wrote:

> In 1808, in one of the concerts given at the Odéon by Rode and Lamare, he obtained a triumph without precedent. The violin and violoncello, accustomed to being kings of all concerts, were eclipsed this time by an Erard piano under the enchanted fingers of Dussek, who had a magic of performance, a power and a charm of expression which were truly irresistible.

During the last months of his life Dussek was obese and spent much of his time in bed. He also drank too much; he died of gout. His burial place is not known. The Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung carried a lengthy obituary by its Paris correspondent eulogizing Dussek's abilities as a pianist and composer.

Jan Ladislav Dussek: stipple engraving by Jean Godefroy

2. Works. Dussek is an unjustly neglected composer. Admittedly some of his more insignificant works (e.g. rondos and variations on popular tunes of the day) are trivial and deservedly forgotten, but there is a body of piano sonatas, piano concertos and chamber works that are of sufficient musical worth to be performed and enjoyed today. His music seems to have been received with enthusiasm in his own time; reviews of the original editions in the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung praise Dussek's originality and expressiveness, and the appropriateness to the piano of his melody, harmony and scoring – though they do point out such irregularities as consecutive 5ths and octaves and improper dissonances.

Dussek was one of the early touring concert pianists, so it is not surprising that most of his works are for piano or include piano. In view of the time at which he lived it might be expected that his music would be primarily Classical in style. This is true of the early works, but those composed in the last 20 years of his life show definite Romantic characteristics in the expression markings, the use of full chords, the choice of keys and the frequent modulations to remote keys, and in the use of altered chords and non-harmonic notes. His harmony includes a wider variety of chords and is considerably more chromatic than that of Mozart, Haydn and even Beethoven. His piano music is in general fuller in texture than that of C.P.E. Bach, Mozart or Haydn. He showed a predilection for modulating to the key a semitone above or below.

Dussek's piano style, as might be expected, is often brilliant and virtuoso in character: octaves, 3rds, double 3rds, rapid scale passages and all types of pianistic figuration are exploited, some of which anticipate piano writing later in the 19th century. The music is always pianistic. Although his early piano works are only moderately difficult, the technical demands became much greater from about 1797, with the Sonata in B♭c149. Specific pedal indications appeared occasionally from about 1798, the date of the 'Military' Concerto op.40 (c153), though doubtless these markings indicated only special effects, and the ordinary pedalling of the piece was left unmarked.

As has been frequently observed, much of Dussek's music resembles that of other composers. Most often, however, these composers are later than Dussek, and such resemblances show him to have been very much ahead of his time in the development of a Romantic piano style. The second movement of C166 and the first of C179 anticipate Schubert, for example, and the first movements of C151 and C168 and the second of C62 Beethoven. Other works foreshadow Weber (first movement of C149), Rossini (second of C59), Mendelssohn (C80 and C211, second movements), Chopin (fourth movement of C221, second of C259) and Schumann (C178 and C259, fourth movements); still others suggest styles as late as Liszt's, Smetana's, Dvořák's and Brahms's.

Dussek's works were remarkably popular in his lifetime; most were reprinted at least once, and some as many as ten times (some important works appeared in as many as three different editions by Breitkopf & Härtel alone, who issued a 12-volume collected edition of his works just after his death). He quickly fell into disregard, however, and his name does not appear at all in the letters of Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Chopin or Moscheles. Between 1860 and 1880 a revival of interest in Dussek brought about new editions of the piano sonatas by Breitkopf & Härtel and Litolff, as well as many performances of them, particularly in London.

WORKS

Editions: Oeuvres de J.L. Dussek (Leipzig, 1813–17/R) [OD]
J.L. Dussek: Selected Piano Works, ed. H.A. Craw (Madison, WI, 1977) [SP]

Thematic catalogue: Craw (1964), [c; incl. details of edns and arrs. of works by other composers; catalogue numbers of doubtful works and works with conflicting attributions are prefixed d]

dates in parentheses show year of earliest known edition; MSS are autograph unless otherwise stated

VOCAL AND STAGE

c
26	Auszug aus einer Oster-Cantate (K.W. Ramler), 1786, D-SWl
155	The Captive of Spilberg (musical drama, Prince Hoare), London, Drury Lane, 14 Nov 1798, selections (1798)
159	Ov. to M. Kelly: Feudal Times, London, Drury Lane, 19 Jan 1799 (1799)
173	Ov. and characteristic pieces to M. Kelly: Pizarro, London, Drury Lane, 24 May 1799, arr. pf (1799)
200–05	6 Canzonets (Eng., It. and Ger.), 1v, pf, op.52 (1804), also without op. no.
215–20	6 Canons, 3–4vv (1807)
256	Solemn Mass, solo vv, 4vv, orch, 1811, I-Fc
262	Il escorcismo della podagra, canon, 4vv, F-Pc

CONCERTOS

for piano and orchestra unless otherwise stated

c	op.
1	—	B♭, 1779, lost
2–4	1	3 in C, E♭, G (before 1783)
33	3	E♭ (1787)
53/265	15	E♭, hp/pf, orch, 1789; 1st movt autograph frag. formerly in private collection of Mrs W.M. Dussek, Guildford, Surrey; as op.15 (1791), also as op.26 and without op. no.
77	14	F (?1791)
78/266	17	F, pf/hp, orch (*c*1792), last movt also arr. as Duetto C102
97	22	B♭ (1793), 2nd movt also pubd with movts fromC104 as op.66; 3rd movt also as Rondo, pf solo, OD vi
104	27	F (1794), 1st, 3rd movts also pubd with movt from C97 as op.66
125	29	C (1795); MS copy in B-Bc, mentioned in EitnerQ as op.20
129/267	30	C, pf/hp, orch (1795)
153	40	B♭, 'Military' (1798)
158	—	The Favourite Concerto, F, pf/hp, orch (?1798)
187	49	g (1801), also as op.50
206	63	B♭, for 2 pf, orch, 1805–6, F-Pc (1807), ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser.B, xi (New York, 1983)
238	70	E♭ (1810)
264	—	B♭, for harp, orch, lost; arr. (5) S. Dussek Moralt for harp solo (1813)

ACCOMPANIED SONATAS

for piano and violin unless otherwise stated

c	op.
5–7	1	B♭, G, C (1782)
11–13	1	3 for pf, vn, vc (1786), lost
14–16	2	C, F, c (*c*1786)
17–22	3	C, F, B♭, C, D, G (*c*1786), OD iv, also as op.46
23–5	4	G, D, C for pf, fl/vn (*c*1786), OD x, also as op.51
27–9	1	C, B♭, F (1787)
30–32	2	C, B♭, e for pf, vn, vc (1787)
34–6	1	3 for pf, vn, vc (1787), lost
37–9	4	F, E♭, f (1787)
41–3	5	G, B♭, A♭ (1788), no.3 for pf
54–6	8	C, F, A (*c*1789), with vc as op.20/21; pf, vn in OD vi
57–9	9	B♭, C, D (*c*1789), also arr. as pf sonatas
60–62	10	A, g, E (*c*1789), also arr. as pf sonatas
64–6	12	F, B♭, C (1790), OD xii
67–9	13	B♭, D, G (1790)
71–3	14	C, G, F (1791), also arr. as pf sonatas
74–6	16	C, F, G (1791), also as opp.17 and 18
79–81	18	B♭, a, E♭ (*c*1792), no.2 for pf, also as op.19
88–93	19	6 Sonatinas, G, C, F, A, C, E♭, pf, fl/vn (1793), also as op.20, also arr. pf; ed. L. Salter (London, 1984), 1 movt of no.3 ed. pf, vn in MAB, xi (1953)
96	24	B♭ (1793), also as opp.23 and 27 [arr. from pf sonata]
118–23	28	C, F, B♭, D, g, E♭ (1795), OD iv
126–8	25	F, D, G for pf, vn/fl (1795), no.2 for pf, OD x
132–4	31	B♭, D, C for pf, vn/fl, vc (*c*1795), no.2 for pf, also as op.61
141–3	—	F, D, B♭ for pf, vn, vc (1796), also as opp.24 and 29
154	36	C (1798)
169	37	Favourite Sonata, E♭, pf, vn, vc (1799)
240–42	69	B♭, G, D (1811), no.3 for pf, also as op.72; nos.1–2 ed. in MAB, xli (1959)
260–61	posth.	E♭, B♭ for pf, vn, db (1812), no.2 completed by S. Neukomm

OTHER CHAMBER

sonatas unless otherwise stated

c	op.
50–52	7	C, G, E♭ for pf, fl (1789)
63	11	Duo, F, pf/hp, pf (*c*1789), also as op.26, 2 movts arr. in C102
94	21	C, for pf, fl, vc (1793)

c	op.
102	26	Duetto, F, pf/hp, pf (1794) [movts 1–2 from C63, movt 3 arr. from pf conc. C78], ed. for 2 pf, M. Madden and O. Rees (London, 1957) and in LPS, xx (1986)
147–8	34	E♭, B♭, for hp, vn, vc (1797)
152	—	The Naval Battle and Total Defeat of the Dutch Fleet by Admiral Duncan, 11 Oct 1797, pf, vn, vc, perc (1797)
170	38	Duet, E♭, pf/hp, pf, 2–3 hn ad lib (1799), also as op.36
172	41	Qnt, f, pf, vn, va, vc, db, 1799 (1803), also as op.47; ed. (Munich, 1992)
189–90	—	2 Duettinos, C, F, pf/harp, pf (*c*1802)
197	56	Pf Qt, E♭ (1804), also as op.53 and without op. no.; 1st movt pf part as op.46, 1803, in F-Pc
208–10	60	3 str qts, G, B♭, E♭ (1807), nos.2–3, 1806, Pc
214	65	Trio, F, pf, fl, vc, 1807, Pc(1807)
233	68	Notturno concertante, E♭, pf, vn, hn ad lib (1809), also as op.69
234	69/1	B♭, hp, pf (1810), also as op.74, also arr. pf 4 hands
239	69/2	E♭, hp, pf (1811), also as op.72 [arr. from pf 4 hands]
243	69/3	F, hp, pf (1811), also as op.73, also arr. pf 4 hands
250–55	58	6 duos, 2 vn (1811), lost
D11	34	Serenade, E♭, 2 vn, 2 ob/cl, 2 hn, va, vc, db, by (3) F.B. Dussek

PIANO SONATAS

for piano solo unless otherwise stated

c	op.
40	—	G, pf/hpd (1788), ed. F. Marvin (Vienna, 1989)
43	5/3	A♭ (1788), ed. in MAB, lxiii (1963), ed. F. Marvin (Vienna, 1989) [nos.1–2 for pf, vn]
57–9	9	B♭, C, D [arr. from acc. sonatas], OD i, ed. in MAB, xlvi (1960)
60–62	10	A, g, E [arr. from acc. sonatas], OD i, ed. in MAB, xlvi (1960)
71–3	14	C, G, F [arr. from acc. sonatas]
80	18/2	a (*c*1792), also as op.19 no.2, ed. in MAB, xlvi (1960) and in LPS, vi (1985) [nos.1, 3 for vn, pf]
96	24	B♭ (1793), also as opp.23 and 27, also arr. pf, vn, OD viii, ed. in MAB, liii (1961) and in LPS, vi (1985)
127	25/2	D (1795), OD x, ed. in MAB, liii (1961) [nos.1, 3 for pf, vn/fl]
133	31/2	D (*c*1795), ed. in MAB, liii (1961) [nos.1, 3 for pf, vn/fl, vc]
144	—	Sonata (Grande Overture), C, pf 4 hands (1796), also as opp.32 and 33, OD vii, SP i, ed. in LPS, xix (1986)
149–51	35	B♭, G, c (1797), OD ii, ed. in MAB, liii (1961), nos.2–3 ed. in LPS, vi (1985)
166–8	39	G, C, B♭ (1799), OD viii, ed. in MAB, liii (1961), nos.1 and 3 ed. in LPS, vi (1985)
177	43	A (1800), OD ii, ed. in MAB, lix (1962) and in LPS, vi (1985)
178	44	E♭, 'The Farewell' (1800), OD v, ed. in MAB, lix (1962) and in LPS, vi (1985)
179–81	45	B♭, G, D, 1800 (1802), OD v, ed. in MAB, lix (1962)
182	45	B♭, microchordon/pf (*c*1800)
184–5	47	D, G (1801), OD viii, ed. in MAB, lix (1962) and in LPS, vi (1985)
186	48	C, pf 4 hands (*c*1801), OD vii
207	—	Sonata (Sonatina), C, pf 4 hands (1806)
211	61	f♯, 'Elégie harmonique sur la mort du Prince Louis Ferdinand de Prusse', 1806–7, 1st movt *D-WRtl, complete (1807), ed. in MAB, xx (1954), lxiii (1963)
221	64	A♭, 'Le retour à Paris', 'Plus ultra' (1807), also as opp.70, 71 and 77, OD xi, ed. in MAB, lxiii (1963)
230–32	66	C, F, B♭, pf 4 hands (1809), also as op.67, OD iv
234	74	B♭, pf 4 hands (1811) [arr. from hp, pf], OD vii
239	72	E♭, pf 4 hands (1810), also arr. hp, pf, OD ix
242	69/3	D (1811), also as op.72/3, ed. in MAB, lxiii (1963) [nos.1–2 for pf, vn]
243	73	F, pf 4 hands (1813) [arr. from hp, pf], SP i
247	75	E♭ (1811), OD xi, ed. in MAB, lxiii (1963)
259	77	f, 'L'invocation' (1812), ed. in MAB, lxiii (1963)

OTHER KEYBOARD AND HARP

c	op.
10	—	General Suwarrow's Original Military March, pf, E♭, 1783 (*c*1795)
44–9	6	[6] Airs variés, E♭, F, A, d, g, g, pf (1788), OD iii
88–93	19	6 Sonatinas, pf, also as op.20 [arr. from Sonatinas, pf, fl/vn]
98	23	The Sufferings of the Queen of France, pf (1793), also as op.44 and without op. no., ed. in LPS, vi (1985)
106–17	—	12 Progressive Lessons, pf (*c*1794), also as opp.16, 32 and 30, ed. in MAB, xxi (1954)
135–7	31	3 preludes, B♭, D, C, pf (*c*1795) [to precede sonatas C132–4], nos.2–3 ed. in MAB, xx (1954)
146	—	La chasse, F, pf, 1796 (1797), also as op.22, OD vi
156	—	A Complete … Delineation of the Ceremony from St James's to St Paul's … 19 Dec 1797, pf (1798)
183	—	Sonata with The Lass of Richmond Hill, F, hp (*c*1800)
188	50	Duet polonoise, E♭, pf 3 hands (?1802)
199	—	Fantasia and Fugue, f, pf (1804), also as opp.50 and 55, OD xi, SP ii, ed. in LPS, vi (1985)
212	62	La consolation, B♭, pf (1807), also as op.61
227–9	64	3 fugues à la camera, D g, F, pf 4 hands (1808), OD ix
235–7	71	(bk i) Recueil d'[3]airs connus variés, B♭, F, C, pf (1810), OD iii, SP ii
244–6	71	(bk ii) Recueil d'[3]airs connus variés, G, c, B♭, pf (1811), OD iii, SP ii
248	76	Fantaisie, F, pf (1811), OD xii, SP ii; 4th movt ed. in MAB, xvii (1954) and in MVH, v (1961)
249	—	Partant pour la Syrie, with variations, E♭, pf (1811), OD i
D12–14	2	3 sonatas, B♭, G, c, hp (1797), by (5) S. Dussek
D160–65	—	6 Sonatinas, C, F, G, B♭, F, E♭, hp (1799), ed. in MAB, xxii (1956), by (5) S. Dussek

THEORETICAL WORKS

c
284	Instructions on the Art of Playing the Piano Forte or Harpsichord (London, 1796, and many later edns; Fr. edn as Méthode pour le piano forte, Paris, 1799/R, c285; Ger. edn as Pianoforte-Schule, Leipzig, 1802, 4/?1815, c287)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; NewmanSSB

Obituary, AM2 (21 March 1812)

'Memoir of Johann Ludwig Dussek', The Harmonicon, iii (1825), 1–2

P. Cianchettini: 'Memoir of Dussek', Musical World, xxi (1846), 312

A.W. Thayer: 'Dussik, Dussek, Duschek', Dwight's Journal of Music, xviii (1860–61), 211–12, 218–19, 225–7, 233–4, 241–2

A. Méreaux: Les clavecinistes de 1637 à 1790: portraits et biographies des célèbres clavecinistes (Paris, 1867), 80

H. Truscott: 'Dussek and the Concerto', MR, xvi (1955), 29–53

E. Blom: 'The Prophecies of Dussek', Classics Major and Minor (London, 1958/R), 88–117

H.A. Craw: A Biography and Thematic Catalog of the Works of J.L. Dussek (1760–1812) (diss., U. of Southern California, 1964)

A.L. Ringer: 'Beethoven and the London Pianoforte School', MQ, lvi (1970), 742–58

O.L. Grossman: The Solo Piano Sonatas of Jan Ladislav Dussek (diss., Yale U., 1975)

V. Klíma: 'Návštěva Jana Ladislava Dusíka v Čechách v roce 1802' [Dussek's visit to Bohemia in 1802], HV, xii (1975), 140–53 [with Ger. summary]

T.B. Milligan: The Concerto in London, 1790–1800 (diss., U. of Rochester, 1978)

Z. Pilková: 'Houslové sonáty českých skladatelů z let 1730–1810' [Violin sonatas by Czech composers from the years 1730–1810], HV, xxiii (1986), 291–311

M.E. Doutt: The Concertos of Jan Ladislav Dussek (1760–1812) (diss., U. of Kentucky, 1989)

R. Schmitt Scheubel: Johann Ludwig Dussek im Spiegel der deutschen, französischen und englischen Tagespresse seiner Zeit, nebst Verzeichnis seiner in Berliner Bibliotheken Werke der auffindbaren Autographen, Handschriften und Schallaufnahmen (diss., Technische Universität, Berlin, 1994)

A. Gerard: 'Jan Ladislav Dusseks Le retour à Paris: eine Klaviersonate zwischen "Aufklärung" und "Romantik"', AMw, liii (1996), 207–21

S.D. Lindeman: Structural Novelty and Tradition in the Early Romantic Piano Concerto (Stuyvesant, NY, 1999)

(3) Franz Benedikt Dussek [František Josef Dusík] (b Čáslav, 22 March 1766; d Zatičina, after 1816). Composer, son of (1) Jan Dussek. He was taught music by his father, for whom, at quite an early age, he was proficient enough to deputize at the organ. He played the violin, cello and piano. Later he went to Italy, where he wrote a number of serious and comic operas (including La caffetiera di spirito, La feudataria, L'impostore and Roma salvata), an oratorio (Gerusalemme distrutta), piano and violin concertos, and several chamber works, of which a Serenade in E♭ op.34, a Trio ou Notturno for three flutes, and a Sonata for violin and piano op.2 were published; the Serenade, for two oboes or clarinets, two horns and strings, was formerly attributed to (2) Jan Ladislav Dussek (D11). According to Bergamo (1992) Dussek became a Kapellmeister in Ljubljana in 1790, after his time in Italy, and composed a number of symphonies and serenades, which survive in Ljubljana.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Bergamo: 'Značilnosti glasbenega gradiva, sintakse in strukturalnega reda Simfonije v C duru F.B. Dusíka kot kriteriji slogovne opredelitve in vrednostne sodbe' [Characteristics of the musical material, syntax and structural ordering in F.B. Dussek's Symphony in C major as criteria for stylistic determination and evaluation], Evropski glasbeni klasicizem in njegov odmev na Slovenskem/Der europäische Musikklassizismus und sein Widerhall in Slowenien: Ljubljana 1988, 91–2 [with Ger. summary; see also MZ, xxiv (1988), 39–46]

J. Snížková: 'František Josef Benedikt Dusík', MZ, xxvi (1990), 29–35 [incl. list of works]

M. Bergamo: 'Zwischen Serenade und Symphonie: Frantisek Josef Benedikt Dusik', Off-Mozart: glazbena kultura i mali majstori srednje Europe 1750.–1820.: Zagreb 1992, 55–66

(4) Kateřina Veronika Anna Dusíkova [Veronika Rosalia Dussek; Veronika Elisabeta Dusíkova; Veronica Cianchettini] (b Čáslav, 8 March 1769; d London, 1833). Singer and composer, daughter of (1) Jan Dussek. A pupil of her father, she went to London about 1795 to perform at the invitation of her brother (2) Jan Ladislav Dussek. She married Francesco Cianchettini, a music dealer and publisher who in association with Sperati had the English rights for J.L. Dussek's works from 1807 to 1811. A successful teacher, singer, pianist and harpist, she composed two concertos and published some solo piano works, including three sonatas using 'favorite airs as adagios and rondos' (op.6), sets of variations and short pieces based on well-known tunes. Her son Pio Cianchettini was a pianist and composer.

(5) Sophia (Giustina) Dussek [née Corri; later Moralt] (b Edinburgh, 1 May 1775; d London,1847). English singer and composer of Italian descent, wife of (2) Jan Ladislav Dussek. She was taught the piano by her father, the composer, music publisher and teacher Domenico Corri, and performed in public at an early age. In 1788 the family moved from Edinburgh to London, where she studied singing with Luigi Marchesi, Giuseppe Viganoni and Giambattista Cimador. She made a successful début as a singer at the Salomon concerts in 1791, with Haydn directing from the harpsichord, and thereafter sang regularly in the series, taking part in the first performance of Haydn's The Storm (24 February 1792). She also played a significant part in the introduction of Mozart's music to London; she was a soloist in the London première of the Requiem, given at John Ashley's Lenten Oratorios, Covent Garden, on 20 February 1801. In 1792 she married Dussek, with whom she performed, singing and playing the piano and harp. Their daughter, (6) Olivia, was also a pianist, harpist and composer. After Jan Ladislav's death in 1812 Sophia married the viola player John Alvis Moralt; they lived in Paddington, where she established a music school. She published sonatas, rondos, variations and numerous arrangements for the piano or harp. The popular C minor harp sonata from op.2 appears to have been incorrectly attributed to Jan Ladislav (see Dunn). The 1797 Pleyel edition lists only the composer's surname, probably deliberately, as the name of Sophia's famous husband would be expected to generate more sales. However, the title-page of the British edition published at some time between 1796 and 1801 by the family firm, Corri, Dussek & Co., clearly states 'By Madame Dussek' and this is unlikely to be incorrect.

Sophia's great-niece, Ghita Auber Corri (1869/70–1937), composed songs and sang in the Carl Rosa Opera Company; she married the playwright Richard Neville Lynn in 1899.

WORKS
(selective list)

Kbd: Sonata, pf/hpd, vn/Ger. fl acc., op.1 (London, *c*1793); 3 Sonates, hpd/pf, vn acc., op.1 (Paris, n.d.); Sonata, pf (London, *c*1805)

Hp: 3 Sonatas, E♭, F, C (London and Edinburgh, *c*1795); 3 Sonatas, B♭, G, c, op.2 (Paris, 1797; London and Edinburgh, ?1798); 6 Sonatinas, C, F, G, B♭, F, E♭ (London, 1799), formerly attrib. (2)

J.L. Dussek, ed. in MAB, xxii (1956); Introduction and March (London, 1822); Variations on God Save the King (London, 1822); 6 bks of Favorite Airs (London); arrs., some with variations, of more than 30 airs, waltzes, rondos, ovs. and concs., some with fl/vn ad lib

Hp, pf: A Duett (London, ?1812); Introduction and Waltz (London, 1822); Duett ... in which is Introduced a Favorite Air [Ah vous dirai-je], with variations and an introduction (London, 1823); other arrs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.A. Craw: 'Dussek, a Forgotten Composer', American Harp Journal, vi/4 (1978), 14–18
D. Dunn: 'Dussek vs Dussek', United Kingdom Harpists Association Journal, no.71 (1984), 11–14
J.B. Weidensaul: 'Notes on Jan Ladislav Dussek and Mrs. Dussek (Sophia Corri): a Review of Contemporary Sources', American Harp Journal, xiv/2 (1993), 3–5
U.M. Rempel: 'Sophia Dussek (1775–*c*1830)', Women Composers: Music through the Ages, iii: Women Born Before 1799, ed. M.F. Schleifer and S. Glickman (New York, 1998), 233–5

(6) Olivia Buckley [née Dussek] (b London, ?1798/9; d after 1841). English composer, daughter of (2) Jan Ladislav and (5) Sophia Dussek. She composed a number of charming pieces for the harp, mainly settings of familiar folk melodies. Her London publishers advertised her music as being by 'O.B. Dussek'. She is reported to have been organist successively of Kensington and Paddington parish churches, although her name does not appear in the registers.

HOWARD ALLEN CRAW (1–4), HOWARD ALLEN CRAW, BONNIE SHALJEAN (5 text, 6), B.G. JACKSON (5 work-list)

Dussek, Franz Xaver. See DUŠEK, FRANTIŠEK XAVER.

Düsseldorf. City in Germany, originally a village on the Düssel, now a large city on the Rhine. The musical history of Düsseldorf is characterized by the cultivation of music at the court (15th–18th centuries) and by the civic Niederrheinisches Musikfest (since 1818). Documents relating to the earliest period of musical culture are now lost; the earliest important church is St Lambertus (1288–1394), but the first record of musical activity is a 15th-century Easter play with vernacular songs from Gerresheim, a suburb. Various 16th-century works were printed in Düsseldorf: motets by the Flemish composer and Hofkapellmeister Martin Peudargent in 1555 and 1561, an introduction to music by his pupil Johann Oridryus and Die Psalmen Davids by Konrad Hagius from Westphalia in 1589. From 1588 to 1591 the Flemish composer Jean de Castro worked at the Düsseldorf court.

In 1614 Düsseldorf became the residence of the Count Palatine, and many musicians were attracted from Italy. The Roman Giovanni Giacomo Neri (Negri) and Gilles Hayne from Liège worked together there. Biagio Marini lived in Düsseldorf for 22 years, and in the middle of the century Carissimi had charge of the town's musical life. His pupil Giovanni Battista Mocchi wrote a Christmas play around 1675. During this period two of the most important churches were founded, St Andreas (originally the Jesuit church, 1629) and the Neanderkirche (1684), named after the pastor and hymn writer Joachim Neander. Under the Elector Johann Wilhelm (1692–1716) music in Düsseldorf had an international reputation. Corelli dedicated his 12 concerti grossi op.6 to the prince, and the opera was directed by Steffani, who performed three new works. The fullest account of the period is a panegyric by the librettist Georgio Maria Rapparini (1709), which mentions Johann Hugo von Wilderer (a pupil of Legrenzi), Georg Kraft, Johannes Schenck, Johann Sigismund Weiss, Carlo Luigi Pietro Grua (from Milan), noted for his chamber cantatas, Stefano Benedetto Pallavicino (from Venice) and Sebastiano Moratelli (whose compositions are lost). In 1711 Handel went to Düsseldorf to secure the castrato Baldassari for the London opera, and in 1715 the violinist Francesco Veracini played in Düsseldorf.

In 1720 the court moved to Mannheim. After the Napoleonic wars local music lovers founded a municipal music society to perform concerts and church music and to promote large-scale musical performances, especially at Whitsuntide. The first Niederrheinisches Musikfest opened in 1818 with Haydn's oratorios. The leading musicians at this time were Johann A.F. Burgmüller and his son Norbert. In 1833 Mendelssohn, while enjoying great success as a conductor in Düsseldorf, composed and conducted his first oratorio, St Paul (1836), and his activities gave the orchestra a leading position in the city's musical life. His association with Düsseldorf ended after three years through controversy with Immermann, the director of the theatre. Meanwhile musical life continued to flourish. In 1849 the conductorship was offered to Schumann, but his tenure was unsuccessful and he was induced to resign in 1853. While in Düsseldorf he wrote his Third Symphony (1850) and his famous essay about the young Brahms. In 1864 the municipal orchestra was founded, and in 1866 the Tonhalle concert hall (destroyed in World War II) was inaugurated by Clara Schumann, Jenny Lind and Julius Stockhausen. In 1890 Julius Buths was appointed conductor; he promoted contemporary music (Richard Strauss, Mahler and Reger) and performed choral works by Elgar, translating the English texts into German. Buths and his friend Otto Neitzel founded a conservatory which became the Robert-Schumann-Hochschule Düsseldorf; the city also has a music school. Since 1949 Protestant church music has been taught at the Rheinische Kirchenmusikschule.

The opera house was rebuilt in 1958 and houses the Deutsche Oper am Rhein, which was founded in co-operation with nearby Duisburg in 1956. It performs classical and modern works and has its own ballet. The Städtisches SO gives numerous concerts during the year, some with choral societies; the concerts of the Bach-Verein are generally of early music. The city's other cultural organizations, including the Musikverein, promote concerts with international soloists and orchestras, and jazz and folk music concerts. The two main concert halls are the Rheinhalle and the Schumannsaal. The hall of the Kunstakademie and the orangery of Schloss Benrath (1773) are used for chamber music. The Robert-Schumann-Gesellschaft was founded in 1978, and in 1981 launched the first International Schumann Festival in Düsseldorf. In 1984 the tradition of the Niederrheinische Musikfeste was revived with the first Rheinisches Musikfest.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Redlich: 'Die ältesten Düsseldorfer Drucker', Beiträge zur Geschichte des Niederrheins, xiv (1900), 229 only
W.H. Fischer: Festschrift zur hundertjährigen Jubelfeier des städtischen Musikvereins Düsseldorf und zum hundertjährigen Bestehen der Niederrheinischen Musikfeste (Düsseldorf, 1918)
F. Vogl: 'Düsseldorfer Theater vor Immerman', Düsseldorfer Jb, xxxvi (1931)
J. Alf: 'Geschichte und Bedeutung der Niederrheinischen Musikfeste', Düsseldorfer Jb, xlii (1940), 131–245
L. Schiedermair: Musik am Rheinstrom (Cologne, 1947)
G. Croll: 'Musikgeschichtliches aus Rapparinis Johann-Wilhelm-Manuskript (1709)', Mf, xi (1958), 257–64

G. Steffen: Johann Hugo Wilderer (1670 bis 1724), Kapellmeister am kurpfälzischen Hofe zu Düsseldorf und Mannheim (Cologne, 1960)
P. Krellmann, ed.: 150 Jahre Städtischer Musikverein Düsseldorf, 1818–1968 (Düsseldorf, 1968)
P. Darius: Die Musik in den Elementarschulen und Kirchen Düsseldorfs im 19. Jahrhundert (Cologne, 1969)
H. Riemenschneider: Tanz und Hofoper in der Residenz Düsseldorf (Cologne, 1972)
J. Alf, ed.: Beiträge zur Musikgeschichte der Stadt Düsseldorf (Cologne, 1977)
P. Kast, ed.: Schumanns rheinische Jahre (Düsseldorf, 1981)
O.G. Blarr and T. Kersken, eds.: Orgelstadt Düsseldorf: Instrumente, Spieler, Komponisten (Düsseldorf, 1982)
H. Riemenschneider: Theatergeschichte der Stadt Düsseldorf (Düsseldorf, 1987)
A. Freiträger: Die Barockoper unter Jan Wellem (1679–1716) (Düsseldorf, 1989)
D.M. Weber: Der Städtische Musikverein zu Düsseldorf und die Düsseldorfer Oper in der Zeit von 1890 bis 1923 (Kassel, 1990)

WOLFDIETER MEINARDUS/DOROTHEA SCHRÖDER

Dussik. See DUSSEK family.

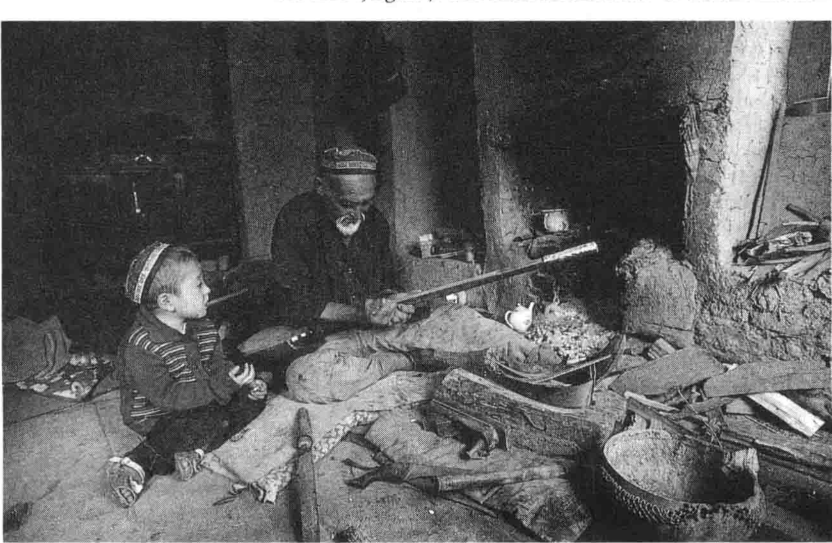
Dustmann-Meyer, (Marie) Louise (b Aachen, 22 Aug 1831; d Berlin, 2 March 1899). German soprano. She made her début in 1848 at the Theater in der Josefstadt, Vienna. She then went on to sing in Breslau, Kassel, Dresden and Prague. Engaged at the Vienna Hofoper from 1857 until her retirement in 1875, she had a wide repertory ranging from the Queen of Night, Donna Anna and Susanna to Senta, Elisabeth, Ortrud and Eva. She also sang both of Gluck's Iphigenias, Spohr's Jessonda, Linda (Linda di Chamounix), Norma, Valentine (Les Huguenots), Euryanthe, Reiza (Oberon), Anna (Hans Heiling), Marguerite (Faust) and Amelia (Un ballo in maschera). She sang Elsa in the first performance of Lohengrin heard by Wagner, who admired her enough to consider her as a possible creator of Isolde. Her opulent voice combined power, flexibility and dramatic conviction.

ELIZABETH FORBES



Dutār [dotār]. Term applied to various types of long-necked fretted lute in Central Asia and Iran (in Iran it is usually rendered as 'dotār'). The name derives from Persian, meaning 'two strings', but some kinds of dutār have more than two.

The various types of dutār are thought to derive from the ancient ṭunbūr of Khorāssān (Khorāssān being a historical region now divided between Iran, Afghanistan and Turkmenistan, and also the name of a large province of north-eastern Iran; see ṬANBŪR). In their various forms, *dutār*s are known by the ethnic group with which they are associated (Uzbek, Tajik, Turkmen or Uighur) or the region where they are found (Khorāssān or Herat). Common features of the dutār are its long, slightly tapering neck; a soundtable (belly) made of mulberry wood; the use of frets; and (originally) two strings which used to be of silk or gut (fig.1). Silk strings are still used on the Uzbek amd Uighur dutār, but from the mid-20th century steel strings were adopted. On some kinds of dutār only the first string is stopped with the fingers, the second acting as a drone; on others, the second string is also stopped, usually with the thumb.

The Uzbek dutār (fig.2*a*) is distinguished by the construction of its pear-shaped resonator, which is carvel-built from a number of shaped wooden strips. Its wooden belly is pierced with small soundholes. The gut or nylon frets are tied round the neck; they are positioned to give a gapped chromatic scale, generally with the omission (relative to the note of the open string) of frets for the flattened 5th and flattened 9th. The strings are vibrated with a highly sophisticated variety of right-hand strokes, and double stopping with the thumb is common. In China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region, the Uighur dutār is very like the Uzbek model, with a carvel-built resonator, and an exceptionally long neck and large sounbox.

The Turkmen dutār, found in Turkmenistan and among Turkmen peoples of Afghanistan and Iran, is a much smaller instrument. Its resonator is carved from a single block of mulberry wood. The two strings, the frets and the pegs are of steel and the fretting is chromatic.

The term Khorāssāni dotār is applied to two distinct types of dotār found in the Iranian province of Khorāssān. The dotār of northern Khorāssān (especially around the cities of Bojnurd and Quchan) is related to the Turkmen instrument, with the pear-shaped resonator carved from a single block of mulberry wood (fig.2*e*). It is played by Kurdish-, Turkic- and Persian-speakers (for illustration see IRAN, fig.19). The Khorāssāni dotār of eastern Iranian

1. Dutār maker, Uzbekistan, 1987

2. Examples of dutārs: (a) Uzbek dutār; (b) enlarged form of Khorāssāni dotār, made in Torbat-e Jam area, 1990s; (c) Herati 14-string dutār, made in Herat city, c1970; (d) Herati three-string dutār, 1960s; (e) Khorāssāni dotār, 1960s/70s (John Baily Collection)

Khorāssān (especially around the town of Torbat-e Jām) is somewhat different (fig.2*b*). The resonator has a small ridge running along the back, and a characteristic form of decoration consists of bone strips inlaid round the back and sides of the resonator where it joins the neck. Tuning pegs are inserted medially and laterally. The fretting is unusual, giving the following intervals above the open first string: major 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, minor 7th, octave, 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th; the 6th and 10th are flattened by 60 to 70 cents, producing neutral intervals typical of certain Persian modes. The 4th or 5th usually serves as a 'final', with the second (drone) string tuned an octave below it. The two strings are vibrated together with various hand strokes. This type of dutār used to have gut or silk strings, but since about 1950 steel has been used, with nylon frets. In recent times this type of Khorāssāni dotār has undergone some degree of change, with a much larger resonator, longer neck, sometimes three (metal) strings, and extra frets. These changes seem to be inspired by the dotār of northern Khorāssān, from which techniques such as double stopping have been borrowed.

Afghanistan and Iran used to share a similar type of dutār. The Torbat-e Jām type of Khorāssāni dotār described immediately above was formerly common in rural areas of Herat province (western Afghanistan). It had the same idiosyncratic system of fretting and was equipped with gut strings. From about 1950 this kind of dutār underwent various changes in the city of Herat, under the influence of Afghan popular music disseminated from Radio Afghanistan in Kabul. It was fitted with three metal strings and its total size increased (fig.2*d*). Extra frets were added to produce a gapped chromatic scale like that of the Uzbek dutār, and this eliminated the idiosyncratic 'Persian' neutral intervals. A metal plectrum, worn like a thimble on the first finger, was adopted from the Afghan tanbur; scraping this across the dutār belly became an important sonic aspect of the instrument. By 1965 a larger type of dutār was developed, with three drone strings and ten or (usually) 11 sympathetic strings running along the side of the neck. The length of the body was reduced in proportion to the total length of the instrument (allowing more frets to be tied round the neck in the higher pitch range). In some models the resonator was rounder and the ridge at the back was eliminated. The so-called 14-string dutār (dutār-e-chahārdah jelau, fig.2*c*) in fact usually has 15 strings in all; it was to some extent inspired by the example of the Afghan rubāb (see RABĀB, §5(i)). The shortest sympathetic string of the 14-string dutār is raised by a protuberance on the bridge (as on the rubāb) so that it can be struck separately, and the right-hand sīmkārī playing technique has also been transferred to the dutār. The three- and 14-string forms of the Khorasani instrument may be termed the Herati dutār.

Taken as a group, *dutār*s have various applications. The Uzbek dutār has been used in Uzbekistan for about a century for the genre of art music known as shash makom. Prior to the Afghan civil war, some Uzbeks of northern Afghanistan also used the Uzbek dutār for art music, especially around the town of Andkhui. In Uzbekistan the dutār is also used for popular and regional music, as an accompaniment for songs. In the Fergana valley, Khorezm and China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region it was especially associated with women,and was common in most households; the women's instrument is said to be smaller and softer in tone.Among the Uighur people of China's Xinjiang Uighur Autonomous Region, the dutār is (or was) also common in many homes, and is used to accompany singing and dancing. In Turkmenistan the dutār is used singly, with other dutārs, or with the spike fiddle (gyjak) as an accompaniment to epics and as an instrument with its own repertory.

In Iran the dotār has an extensive repertory as a solo instrument, used for instrumental pieces and to accompany songs or dances. It is sometimes used to accompany Sufi rituals at the shrine of Torbat-e Jām. In western Afghanistan, the various changes to the instrument are reflected in different uses. The three-string Herati dutār was associated with radio music and dance music. The 14-string Herati dutār was played by a new kind of urban professional musician in Herat, used within a band including a vocalist/harmonium-player, other melodic instruments (e.g. rubāb) and tablā drums.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Baily: 'Recent Changes in the dutār of Herat', AsM, viii/1 (1976), 29–64; repr. in Musical Processes, Resources and Technologies, ed. K.K. Shelemay (New York, 1990), 223–57

M. Slobin: Music in the Culture of Northern Afghanistan (Tucson, AZ, 1976)

J. Baily: 'Movement Patterns in Playing the Herati dutār', The Anthropology of the Body, ed. J. Blacking (London, 1977), 275–330

L. Sakata: 'Afgan Musical Instruments dutār and tambura', Afghanistan Journal, v/4 (1980), 150–52

J. During: 'Dotar', Encyclopaedia Iranica, ed. E. Yarshater (London and Costa Mesa, CA, 1982–)

J. During: disc notes, Asie Centrale: les maîtres du dotâr: Ouzbekistan – Tadjikistan – Iran (Khorâsân) – Turkmenistan, AIMP XXVI VDE CD 735 (1993), 16–35

J. During: disc notes, Ouzbékistan: l'art du dotâr, OCORA, C 560111 (1997), 13–21

JEAN DURING/JOHN BAILY

Du Tartre [Dutartre], Jean-Baptiste (d Paris, 1749). French composer. His date of death was given by Fétis. He worked in Paris as maître de musique, and may have been associated with the household of the Prince de Vaudémont, to whom most of his larger works are dedicated. Du Tartre's music became known in 1714 when his Miserere mei Deus, a motet for three soloists, choir and instruments, was twice performed by the Musique du Roi in the presence of the king. It displays considerable contrapuntal mastery. A few weeks later the cantata-like Divertissement pour la paix was sung before the Prince de Vaudémont, the following year receiving a performance at the Opéra, where shortly afterwards some of his airs were sung at a performance of Zéphire et Flore (presumably the opera by Lully's two sons which, written in 1688, enjoyed a single revival in 1715). His cantata La paix was twice performed at Philidor's concerts at the Tuileries (2 April 1728, 4 July 1729). Within the limits of an urbane, Rococo style, Du Tartre's music reveals a genuine melodic gift, seen at its best in Divertissement pour la paix, Homage funèbre, the cantata La volupté, and above all in the many airs sérieux et à boire which appeared in his own collections and in anthologies published in France and Holland up to the middle of the century.

WORKS

printed works published in Paris

Divertissement pour la paix, S, vn, fl, ob, bc (1714)

L'amour mutuel, pastorale (1730), lost [text in F-Pn]

Cants.: Sensibles coeurs, in Airs nouveaux sérieux et à boire (1719); La paix, S, vn, fl, bc (*c*1728); La volupté, S, vn, fl, bc (1738)

Motets etc.: Miserere mei Deus, S, T, B, fl, vn, bc (1717); Homage funèbre sur la mort d'une jeune dame, S, vn, fl, bc (1738); Laudate Dominum in sanctis ejus, Bar, 2 vn, bc, Pn

1e [–7e] Recueil d'airs nouveaux sérieux et à boire (1715–22)

Airs ajoutez à l'opéra de Zéphire et Flore (1715)

Recueil des plus beaux airs … et vaudevilles, 1/2vv (n.d.)

Numerous airs pubd singly and in 18th-century anthologies, also in MSS, Pn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB

D. Tunley: The Eighteenth-Century French Cantata (London, 1974, 2/1997)

M. Benoit, ed.: Dictionnaire de la musique en France aux XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1992)

DAVID TUNLEY

Dutch Guiana. See SURINAME.

Dutch organ. See BARREL ORGAN.

Du Tertre, Estienne (fl Paris, mid-16th century). French composer. Only a few details have come down to us concerning his life. In Laborde's fichier, he is listed as an organist; this entry also says that in 1556 he and the lutenist Brayssing acted as godfathers at the christening of the son of a court musician, Pierre Joly. Other information about Du Tertre, who appears to have passed all his creative years in Paris, comes from title-pages of the publications in which his works appeared.

Du Tertre's output includes 57 complete four-part chansons, and 14 more which survive in incomplete form. He served as editor, composer and arranger for Attaingnant's final collection of ensemble dances, the VIIme livre de danceries, printed by Attaingnant's widow in 1557. Since his chansons came out between 1543 and 1568, some changes in his musical style can be observed. The four earliest chansons are densely contrapuntal, low in tessitura and serious in nature. They have certain musical and poetic interrelationships with other contemporary chansons of Sandrin and Sermisy. But the great bulk of Du Tertre's chansons formed part of a huge number published in the late 1540s and early 1550s, when Du Chemin's output rivalled Attaingnant's. In the 26 chansons which Du Tertre published with Attaingnant, and the 26 published with Du Chemin, Du Tertre used a more homophonic texture and clearcut form. Most of the poems that he set were huitains, concerning unfulfilled love. Several are lively, bawdy rondeaux set contrapuntally. Two chansons are homophonic, homorhythmic and dance-like, closely resembling the branles in the VIIme livre de danceries.

The 14 incomplete chansons, all published after 1552, display great stylistic diversity. Two are chansons spirituelles, one is a setting of a Ronsard ode, seven are light, bawdy patter songs, three are serious love songs, and one is a homophonic chanson à danser.

Du Tertre set many of the same chanson texts as Certon, Gervaise and Goudimel. Janequin set 25 of the same texts as Du Tertre, and the musical style of the two composers' settings is often remarkably similar. Most of these texts are anonymous; it is possible that the composers wrote them.

Du Tertre became Attaingnant's dance editor in 1557, and, like Claude Gervaise, who had preceded him, Du Tertre made use of the musical style of the chanson in the 33 pavanes, galliards and branles of the seventh book. In particular, he used varied writing for each of the four or five parts, clear phrasing and well-defined form.

Du Tertre was the first editor to use the term 'suytte', indicating a group of branles. Vocal and instrumental styles are close in both the chansons and dances of Du Tertre.

WORKS

CHANSONS

all for 4 voices

† – incomplete

Aussy tost, 1549[19]; Avant que partiez, 1549[3]; Ca ces beaux yeux, 1550[9]; Ce disoit une jeune dame, 1550[12]; Cent baisers, 1550[11]; Cent mille fois, 1550[12]; Ce qui pour moy, 1549[23]; Ces deux flambeaux†, 1559[12]; Coeur ennobly†, 1553[19] (chanson spirituelle); Dieu doibt le bon jour, 1549[25]; Elle a pour vrai, 1550[5]; En esperant, 1549[20]; En l'eau, 1547[9]; Et vray dieu, 1550[10]; Frerot un jour†, 1557[10]; Il n'est que d'estre, 1549[23]

J'ay d'un coste, 1550[7]; Je ly au cueur, ed. M. Cauchie, Quinze chansons françaises du XVIe siècle (Paris, 1926); Je ne cognois, 1549[19]; Je ne suis de vin, 1550[10]; Je ne veux tant, 1549[23]; Je sentz en moy†, 1559[10]; Je suis a vous, 1550[10]; Jeunes espritz, 1552[4]; Je vouldrois ce gentil clerc, 1549[27]; La nuict passée, 1548[3]; Las, si tu as plaisir, 1551[9]; Las si tu veux, 1549[22]; Las voudriez vous, 1549[23]; La terre les eaux†, 1559[12]; L'autr'hier mi cheminoye†, 1557[11]; Le mal que sent, 1547[12]; Le noir a noirci†, 1557[11]; Le petit peton†, 1557[11]

Malade si fut, 1549[23]; M'amye a bien, 1557[15], ed. in SCC, ix (1994); Mon amy est, 1548[4]; Mon pere, 1553[20]; Mon pere m'y marie†, 1557[11]; Ne vous faschez, 1551[9]; Or me vois-tu†, 1553[19] (chanson spirituelle); Or perdz je celle, 1549[23]; Or suis-je bien, 1550[11]; Or sus, or sus, 1549[21]; Ou est ce temps, 1550[11]; Par un matin†, 1557[12]; Passible corps, 1553[20]; Petit bonhomme†, 1556[20]; Petite damoyselle, 1550[11]; Petit jardin, 1550[11]; Petitte fille, 1550[5]; Plus que je desire, 1554[22]; Puis qu'amour, 1547[9]; Puisque je n'ay†, 1568[10a]; Puys que je n'ay, 1549[21]

Quand tant me mectz, 1550[10]; Quel Dieu du ciel, 1549[21]; Quel playsant songe, 1549[20]; Qu'est-ce qu'amour, 1549[20]; Qu'on m'appelle, 1549[23]; Si l'amitié, 1548[3]; Si a te veoir, 1550[12]; Si Dieu vouloyt, 1549[21]; Si j'ay grand desire, 1549[27]; Si je n'avois, 1550[10]; Si me voyez, 1549[27]; Un jour dormoit, 1550[9]; Un jour Tassin†, 1557[10]; Viva sera, 1543[11]; Voici le printemps, 1552[4]; Vous souvient, 1549[21]

DANCES

33 pavans, galliards and branles in VIIme livre de danceries (Paris, 1557/R); ed. in the Attaingnant Dance Prints, vii (London, *c*1972)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LabordeMP

C.M. Cunningham: Estienne Du Tertre, scavant musicien, Jean d'Estrée, joueur de hautbois du Roy, and the Mid-Sixteenth-Century Franco-Flemish Chanson and Ensemble Dance (diss., Bryn Mawr College, 1969)

C.M. Cunningham: 'Estienne Du Tertre and the Mid-Sixteenth-Century Parisian Chanson', MD, xxv (1971), 127–70 [contains edn of 7 of Du Tertre's works]

CAROLINE M. CUNNINGHAM

Dutilleux, Henri (b Angers, 22 Jan 1916). French composer. Dutilleux was born into an artistic family; a great-grandfather, Constant Dutilleux, was a painter and friend of Delacroix and Corot, and his maternal grandfather, Julien Koszul, was a composer, organist and lifelong friend of Fauré. Koszul was director of the Roubaix Conservatoire, where his pupils included Roussel, whom he persuaded to leave the navy and devote himself to music. Dutilleux was brought up in Douai, studying harmony, counterpoint and piano with Victor Gallois at the local conservatory until 1933, when he moved to Paris. Gallois also encouraged Dutilleux to play percussion in the local orchestra, an interest which later bore fruit in the elaborate timpani parts of many of his orchestral works. At the Paris Conservatoire, he studied harmony with Jean Gallon, fugue with Noël Gallon, history of music with Maurice Emmanuel, conducting with Gaubert and composition with Büsser; he won the Prix de Rome at his third attempt in 1938 with the cantata L'anneau du roi. He was aware of the limitations of his Conservatoire education, which did not feature much contemporary music and lacked an analysis class. To fill the gaps in his education, he studied d'Indy's composition treatise on his own during the war years (d'Indy's analytical approach to early music interested him), and discovered works by Stravinsky and Roussel. He did not become familiar with the music of the Second Viennese School or Bartók's later works until the postwar period. Dutilleux spent only four months in Rome as a Prix de Rome winner, returning to France before the outbreak of World War II. He was enlisted as a stretcher-bearer in September 1939. Demobilized in August 1940, he worked as chef de chant at the Paris Opéra for a few months (replacing the permanent member of staff) under the Occupation. From 1945 he was director of music productions at French radio, resigning from this post in 1963 to devote himself to composition. Dutilleux has had few formal teaching posts; he was professor of composition at the Ecole Normale de Musique (1961–70), and taught at the Paris Conservatoire (1970), but he has frequently attended summer schools (including Tanglewood) as a guest teacher

Dutilleux disowned almost all the music he composed before the Piano Sonata (1946–8), which he considers to be his op.1. During the Occupation, he wrote a number of test pieces for wind instruments, commissioned by Delvincourt for Conservatoire competitions, and four mélodies to texts by Jean Cassou, a poet imprisoned for his Resistance activities. The Sonatine for flute (1943) shows the influences of Ravel, Debussy and Roussel on his early works, and Dutilleux later expressed reservations about its unoriginal musical language.

With the Piano Sonata (1946–8), written for the pianist Geneviève Joy whom he married in 1946, he produced a substantial work which demonstrated this growing detachment from tonality. The musical language is as much modal as tonal, and the final pages of the last movement, a Chorale and Variations, perhaps show Messiaen's influence in their combination of F♯ major and the octatonic mode. But non-French music was perhaps the determining influence on Dutilleux' mature style. Bartók's methods of musical organization and the 19th-century Germanic concept of the large-scale masterpiece were two of the factors which enabled him to move away from the attractive yet derivative style of his early works. His two symphonies, written in the wake of the Piano Sonata, demonstrate his enthusiasm for traditional, large-scale forms and his rejection of the view that French music is essentially frivolous and charming. The spirit of the variation was to permeate Dutilleux' subsequent works, though after the Piano Sonata he tended to avoid the conventional set of variations using contrasting figurations. His First Symphony opens with a Passacaglia based on a theme which gradually moves from the double basses up to the treble register of the orchestra; this upward movement is a characteristic feature of Dutilleux' music, and he has acknowledged its spiritual symbolism. The jazzy inflections of this movement betray another influence on Dutilleux, one which has persisted up to the final section of The Shadows of Time, the appropriately bluesy 'Dominante bleue?'.

Henri Dutilleux, 1982

Although the work was uncommissioned, the First Symphony was given its first performance, soon after its completion, by the ORTF orchestra under Désormière. Most of his major works from the Second Symphony onwards were commissioned by American organizations (the Second Symphony by the Boston SO). Many later pieces were written with specific performers in mind (the Cello Concerto Tout un monde lointain. . . was composed for Rostropovitch, the Violin Concerto L'arbre des songes for Isaac Stern), and Paul Sacher commissioned Mystère de l'instant and was the inspiration behind the Trois strophes sur le nom de Sacher for solo cello, based on the musical letters of his name.

Dutilleux has a tendency not to expose a theme in its definitive state from the beginning, distinguishing this process of progressive growth from cyclic form, where the theme is determined from the start. He has acknowledged the crucial influence of Proust on this technique: in the third movement (Intermezzo) of his First Symphony, a theme appears in several related, but slightly different forms, paralleling Proust's evocations of the instability of the human personality. The third and fourth movements of this symphony are both thematically and temporally linked; indeed, Dutilleux dislikes breaks between movements because they 'spoil music's power to enchant us'. There is a similar connection between the slow second movement and the finale of his Second Symphony, subtitled 'Le double'. Moreover, the opening of the finale of this symphony bears a strong resemblance to the first bars of Dutilleux' next major orchestral work, Métaboles, suggesting that the technique of 'progressive growth' applies across different works.

The multiple plays on time in Dutilleux' music reveal the influence of Proust's concept of memory, which embraces anticipation and variation as well as the straightforward recollection of material. Four 'parenthesis' sections are included in the string quartet Ainsi la nuit; these act as reservoirs of material for the seven movements of the work, either foreshadowing or recalling musical ideas. Interludes with a broadly similar function separate the four movements of the violin concerto L'arbre des songes.

With Mystère de l'instant, Dutilleux' conscious aim was to move away from 'progressive growth' and the interrelationships between movements typical of his previous works. It consists of ten brief sections which have no musical connections with each other, and its original title was 'Instantanés' (Snapshots). Stylistically, the work does not represent a new departure, but Dutilleux did introduce a new technique in other works from the 1970s onwards: the quotation of music by other composers. Dutilleux deliberately chooses quotations which blend well with his own musical style. The brief extract from Bartók's Music for Strings, Percussion and Celesta which appears in the first of the Trois strophes sur le nom de Sacher is a dual homage to the work's composer and its commissioner and dedicatee (Paul Sacher). The extracts of music by Britten, Janequin and Alain used in Les citations for oboe, harpsichord, double bass and percussion are also used without ironic intent, but as homages to their composers.

Dutilleux' musical style has remained remarkably consistent since his Second Symphony. The symphony originally ended on a major triad, but Dutilleux decided that this was too conclusive, and it now finishes with an ambiguous chord, which emphasizes the spirit of questioning in the work. Although he tends to avoid perfect chords, the impact of polytonality is discernible, and although he admires the rigour of dodecaphonic writing, he once said that he is 'at heart, not a serial composer'. Only one movement, 'Obsessionnel', the third movement of Métaboles, uses a note row, but it does not provide the source for all the musical material, and the wide leaps and offbeat rhythms he uses give the row a parodistic quality. What Dutilleux feels uncomfortable with in serial writing is the lack of hierarchy: he frequently organizes music around pivot notes, which provide stability in an otherwise chromatic harmonic context. Pivot chords, which generally appear in several related forms, are also used as a recurring device to ensure unity, notably in the Second Symphony and the piano prelude Sur un même accord.

Dutilleux is not an innovator in instrumental technique, but demonstrates a concern with the spatial element of music in 'Le double'. Here, a conventional orchestra surrounds a group of 12 soloists, drawn from each of the instrumental families; the small ensemble frequently exchanges musical material with the large orchestra, and sometimes prolongs the resonances of a chord played by the large group of instruments. Many of Dutilleux' later piano works could, similarly, be considered to be experiments in sonority. The other arts have proved an important stimulus for Dutilleux. A project for a ballet based on Baudelaire's Les fleurs du mal did not materialize, but instead Baudelaire's poetry inspired the Cello Concerto Tout un monde lointain. . .; all five movements feature a Baudelaire epigraph at the head of the score. Dutilleux denies that the movements should be viewed as illustrative of the poems which inspired them, but he tends to choose poems featuring a strong visual image which can have a musical equivalent, as is the case for the fourth movement, 'Miroirs', a tour de force of musical shapes which are symmetrical around either the horizontal or the vertical axis.

A great lover of painting, Dutilleux claimed to have van Gogh's La nuit étoilée always in mind when writing Timbres, espace, mouvement, and later added the title of the painting as a subtitle to his work. The whirling motion in the painting is given a musical equivalent, and Dutilleux uses the extreme registers of the orchestra to convey the chasm between the earth and sky. Moreover, he aimed to reflect van Gogh's state of mind in the work, in particular his yearning for spiritual certainty. Dutilleux' choices of titles for movements of various works perhaps reveal something of his own spiritual concerns: 'Litanies' and 'Constellations' are titles first used in the string quartet Ainsi la nuit which are re-employed in later works. The commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II was one of the stimuli behind his orchestral work The Shadows of Time, given its première in Boston in 1997; the third movement, 'Mémoire des ombres', is dedicated 'to Anne Frank and to all innocent children of the world' and features three children's voices in unison.

Dutilleux is very concerned about the physical appearance of a score; his manuscripts are marvels of calligraphy, and there is a strong visual stimulus behind certain passages in his works. Manuscript evidence reveals that a passage may be conceived as a shape, and only later is it given musical substance, and his fondness for symmetrical musical figures (palindromes or fan-shaped phrases) again suggests Bartók's influence. Dutilleux' reputation rests on a small number of works; he is a highly self-critical composer who is almost obsessively concerned about the integrity of his output. Stylistic unity is evident from frequent self-quotations or allusions to previous works, and the general avoidance of new notational devices introduced by his contemporaries. He has often revised scores, adding an interlude and titles for each of the two movements to Timbres, espace, mouvement 12 years after the première, and making minor adjustments to several pieces. Dutilleux' feeling for instrumental timbre and continuing attachment to modality place him securely within the French tradition, and his exquisite craftsmanship and infallible ear for orchestral sonority secure his position as one of France's leading 20th-century composers.

WORKS
(selective list)
for fuller list see Potter (1997)

DRAMATIC

Petite lumière et l'ourse (radio score, A. Arnoux), 1944; Les hauts de Hurlevent (incid music, M.-L. Villiers, after E. Brontë: Wuthering Heights), 1945; La princesse d'Elide (incid music, Molière), 1946; Monsieur de Pourceaugnac (incid music, Molière), 1948; Hernani (incid music, V. Hugo), 1952; Le loup (ballet, R. Petit, after J. Anouilh and G. Neveux), 1953, Paris, Empire, 18 March 1953

ORCHESTRAL

Sarabande, 1941; Danse fantastique, 1943; Sym. no.1, 1950–51; Sym. no.2 'Le double', 1955–9; Serenade for La couronne de Marguerite Long, 1956; Métaboles, 1959–64; 'Tout un monde lointain. . .', conc., vc, orch, 1967–70; Timbres, espace, mouvement, 1976–8, rev. 1990; L'arbre des songes, conc., vn, orch, 1979–85; Mystère de l'instant, 24 str, cimb, perc, 1985–9; The Shadows of Time, 3 children's vv, orch, 1995–7

CHAMBER AND SOLO INSTRUMENTAL

Sarabande et cortège, bn, pf, 1942; Sonatine, fl, pf, 1943; Au gré des ondes, 6 pieces, pf, 1946; Pf Sonata, 1946–8; Sonata, ob, pf, 1947; Choral, cadence et fugato, trbn, pf, 1950; Résonances, pf, 1965; Figures de résonances, 4 pieces, 2 pf, 1970, 1976; Ainsi la nuit, str qt, 1973–6; 3 préludes, pf: D'ombre et de silence, 1973, Sur un même accord, 1977, Le jeu des contraires, 1988; 3 strophes sur le nom de Sacher, vc, 1976, 1982; Les citations, ob, hpd, db, perc, 1985, 1990–91

VOCAL

L'anneau du roi (scène lyrique, E. Vollène), 1938; 4 mélodies (R. Genty, E. Borsent, A. de Noailles, A. Bellessort), Bar/Mez, pf/orch, 1941–2; La geôle (J. Cassou), Bar/Mez, pf/orch, 1944; Chanson de la déportée (J. Gandrey-Réty), Mez, pf, 1945; 3 sonnets de Jean Cassou, Bar, pf/orch, 1946–54; San Francisco Night (P. Gilson), Mez, pf, 1963

ARRANGEMENTS

A. Roussel: Des fleurs font une broderie, 1v, orch, 1941–2
J. Alain: Prière pour nous autres charnels, T, Bar, orch, 1944
Chansons de bord, 3-pt children's chorus, 1950

MSS in F-Pn; CH-Bps

Principal publishers: Heugel, Durand, Leduc, Schott

WRITINGS

'Opinion d'un musicien sur le théâtre musical radiophonique', Polyphonie, i (1948), 121–8
'Diversities in Contemporary French Music', The Modern Composer and his World (Toronto, 1962), 77–85
'Qui reste fidèle à la musique symphonique?', Nouvel observateur (10 June 1965)
'Au service de tous', Roger Désormière et son temps, ed. D. Mayer and P. Souvtchinsky (Monaco, 1966), 115–26
'Confidences sur sa 2ème symphonie', Journal musical français (4 Jan 1966)
'Liberté de l'artiste?', Harmonie, no.64 (1971), 19

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Machabey: Portraits de trente musiciens français (Paris, 1949), 72–6
A. Goléa: Vingt ans de musique contemporaine (Paris, 1962/R), 159–65
J. Roy: Présences contemporaines: musique française (Paris, 1962), 405–24
J. Roy: 'Henri Dutilleux', Musique de notre temps (Paris, 1973), 83–5
R. Jacobs: Henri Dutilleux (Paris, 1974)
P. Mari: Henri Dutilleux (Paris, 1974, 2/1988)
F. Bayer: 'Henri Dutilleux', Komponisten des 20. Jahrhunderts in der Paul Sacher Stiftung (Basle, 1986), 283–6
D. Humbert: Henri Dutilleux, l'oeuvre et le style musical (Paris, 1986)
C. Desmarets and J.-M. Lhôte, ed.: Ainsi Dutilleux. . . (Lille, 1991)
C. Gilly and C. Samuel: Acanthes an XV (Paris, 1991), 59–65
M. de Saint-Pulgent: 'Henri Dutilleux', suppl. to Le point, no.1000 ('Vive l'écrit!') (16 Nov 1991), 42–5
C. Glayman: Mystère et mémoire des sons (Paris, 1993, 2/1997) [interviews]
R. Brunner: 'Les Métaboles pour orchestre: déconstruire un texte musical', Revue musicale de Suisse romande, iii (1994), 9–31
R. Brunner: 'Variations, prémonitions, instantanés: approche d'un projet compositionnel', Revue musicale de Suisse romande, iii (1994), 32–43
R. Nichols: 'Dutilleux at 75', MT, cxxxii (1994), 701–2
R. Nichols: 'Progressive Growth', MT, cxxxv (1994), 87–90
C. Potter: Henri Dutilleux: his Life and Works (Aldershot, 1997)

CAROLINE POTTER

Dutillieu [Dutilleu, Du Tilleul], Pierre (b Lyons, 15 May 1754; d Vienna, 28 June 1798). Italian composer of French descent. He was educated in Naples and worked in Italy, mainly at the Teatro del Fondo in Naples. In 1791 he and his wife, the singer Irene Tomeoni, were engaged at the Burgtheater in Vienna. He achieved little success with his operas in Vienna (though Gli accidenti della villa was performed many times in Naples up to 1814); his ballets were more favourably received. Among his other works are instrumental pieces and songs.

WORKS
lost, unless otherwise indicated

Opere buffe (all first perf. Vienna, Burgtheater): Il trionfo d'amore (C. Mazzolà), 14 Nov 1791; Nannerina e Pandolfino, o sia Gli sposi in cimento (G. Bertati), 15 Dec 1792, excerpts in A-Wgm;

Gli accidenti della villa (F.S. Zini), 19 Sept 1794, I-Nc, excerpts pubd; La superba corretta (2), 30 April 1795; Il nemico delle donne (Zini), 17 Aug 1797

Ballets: Pizzarro, Naples, 1784; Il Beverlei, o sia Il giocatore inglese, Venice, 1787; Astarbea, o sia Pimmalione vendicato, Naples, 1788; I Curlandesi, Naples, 1790; Arminio, Vienna, 1792; Die Freywilligen, Vienna, 1793; at least 5 others

Other works: Vn Conc., mentioned by Gerber and others; 6 vn duos, op.1 (Vienna, 1800), extant; trios, kbd works, ariettes, romances, canzonettas, some extant

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; ES (E. Borrel) [incl. detailed list of works]; FétisB; GerberNL; SchillingE

O. Michtner: Das alte Burgtheater als Opernbühne (Vienna, 1970)

GERNOT GRUBER

Dutoit, Charles (b Lausanne, 7 Oct 1936). Swiss conductor. At the Lausanne Conservatoire he studied the violin with Wachsmuth and theory of music with Mermoud and Haug, from whom he also acquired his early education in conducting. Then he went to Geneva to Baud-Bovy (obtaining a diploma in conducting), and studied the viola with Golan and instrumentation with Marescotti; he took further studies with Galliera and, in 1959, with Münch at Tanglewood. He conducted an amateur orchestra in Renans, 1957–8; in 1959 he became conductor of the choir at the University of Lausanne and, in 1963, of the Lausanne Bach Choir. He became second conductor of the Berne SO in 1964 and in 1967 succeeded Kletzki as principal, holding that position until 1978. He served as director of the National SO of Mexico (1973–5) and the Göteborg SO (1976–9) before being appointed to his most important post: music director of the Montreal SO. Since assuming this appointment in 1977, Dutoit has managed the extraordinary feat of making it the leading orchestra in the French-speaking world. International tours and over 75 Montreal recordings have won remarkable acclaim and garnered numerous international awards. Dutoit's Bartók and Prokofiev concertos recorded with his former wife Martha Argerich have received particular praise. In 1990 Dutoit became music director of the French National Orchestra and in 1998 music director of the NHK SO in Tokyo. Dutoit also serves as director of the Philadelphia and Saratoga Springs summer festivals, and has appeared as guest conductor with the principal orchestras of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Berlin, Cleveland, Chicago, Munich, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and San Francisco. He also has a significant career in opera, having made his Covent Garden début in 1983 and his Metropolitan Opera début in 1987. Dutoit's great strengths lie in French and Russian music, and in 20th-century tonal music generally. In this repertory his natural gift for colour and lyric line are shown to excellent advantage, as can be heard on his recordings of works ranging from Berlioz (including Les Troyens) and Saint-Saëns to Tchaikovsky, Shostakovich, Ravel (in whose music he has few peers), and Falla.

CHARLES BARBER

Dütsch [Dyutsh], Georgy Ottonovich (b St Petersburg, 8/20 Jan 1857; d St Petersburg, 16/28 Sept 1891). Russian conductor and folksong collector, son of Otto Johann Anton Dütsch. He studied at the St Petersburg Conservatory (1866–75). After Borodin's death he assisted with the preparation for publication of the vocal score of Prince Igor. From 1886 he was principal conductor of Belyayev's Russian Public Symphony Concerts, and from 1889 he was in charge of the orchestral class at the conservatory. In 1886 he collected the music of 114 folksongs, Pesni russkogo naroda, sobranniye v guberniyakh Arkhangel'skoy i Olonetskoy v 1886 godu ('Songs of the Russian people, collected in the Arkhangel and Olonets governments in 1886'); F.M. Istomin was responsible for the words, and the collection was published in St Petersburg in 1894. Later, Balakirev, Rachmaninoff and Prokofiev all made arrangements of songs in his edition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

N.F. Findeyzen: 'Dyutshi – otets i sïn' [The Dütsches – father and son], RMG, iii/2 (1896), 4–10

EDWARD GARDEN

Dütsch [Dyutsh], Otto Johann Anton (b Copenhagen, *c*1823; d Frankfurt, 21 April 1863). Danish composer and conductor, probably of German descent, father of Georgy Ottonovich Dütsch. He was educated at the Leipzig Conservatory (1842–7) and went to Russia in 1848. He became well known as a conductor and chorus master in St Petersburg and taught theory at the conservatory there from 1862. His most notable composition is the opera Kroatka, ili Sopernitsï ('The Croatian Girl, or The Rivals', 4, N. Kulikov; St Petersburg, Mariinsky, 9/21 Dec 1860), of which Rimsky-Korsakov and Balakirev thought highly, in spite of its inadequate libretto. He also wrote incidental music, two operettas, 70 songs, a sonata for two pianos and orchestra, and piano pieces.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveO (R. Taruskin)

N.F. Findeyzen: 'Dyutshi – otets i sïn' [The Dütsches – father and son], RMG, iii/2 (1896), 4–10

EDWARD GARDEN

Duval, Mlle (first name unknown) (b 1718; d Paris, after 1775). French composer, dancer, ?singer and harpsichordist. In his contemporary manuscript, Notices sur les oeuvres de théâtre, the Marquis d'Argenson commented that Duval, 'une jeune fille de l'Opéra', was 18 in 1736 when she composed Les Génies, ou Les caractères de l'Amour. Fétis gave 1769 as her death date; Choron identified her as a 'singer at the Paris Opéra' and claimed that she was 'still living in 1770'; the Anecdotes dramatiques for 1775 referred to her as a 'former actress at the Opéra' and included a 'Mlle Duval' as a supernumerary among the dancers.

Duval was best known as the composer of Les Génies, ou Les caractères de l'Amour (libretto by Fleury [de Lyon]), a ballet-héröique in a prologue and four entrées (printed in Paris about 1736). The dedication page reveals that the Prince of Carignan was her 'Protecteur'. Les Génies, the second opera by a woman to have been performed at the Paris Opéra (the first was Jacquet de La Guerre's Céphise et Procis in 1694) was first heard on 18 October 1736. Although it was performed only nine times (the brothers Parfaict found the libretto 'détestable'), its music was highly praised. Desfontaines, for one, found some pieces 'worthy of the harmony of J.-P. Rameau's Les Indes galantes'. The Mercure de France of November 1736 reported:

> It is easy to be persuaded by this work that Mlle Duval is a young person with much talent. [The opera] is varied and extremely well developed [travaillé] in many respects. In general, the recitatives were applauded, the scenes well treated, some violin airs and choruses well composed and quite lively.

Most accounts refer to her as an 'actrice de l'Opéra', but 'Duval' is a very common French name. She was perhaps the 'Mlle Duval' who sang as a sailor in the prologue to J.B. de Boismortier's pastoral Daphnis et Chloë (in the revival of 1752) and as a dryade in the prologue to J.-B. Lully's Acis et Galatée, revived in the same year. Léris stated that she 'appeared on the stage of the Académie Royale de Musique for rather a long time and retired with a pension of 300 livres'.

Duval was certainly an accomplished harpsichordist, judging from the Mercure review: 'To the astonishment and pleasure of the Public, this young person seated in the orchestra, accompanied her entire Opera from the Overture to the last Note'. One month earlier the Mercure printed a duo, Du Dieu qui fait aimer by Duval (October 1736, p.2307).

However, the air, Tout ce que je vois me rappelle, by 'Mlle Duv' printed in the June 1776 Mercure is probably by Marie Elisabeth Cléry. The treatise Méthode agréable et utile pour apprendre facilement à chanter juste, attributed by Fétis and Choron to Duval is by Abbé Pierre Duval.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrenetC; Choron-FayolleD; FétisB; GerberL; GroveW; LaBordeE; SainsburyD

Recueil général des opéra (Paris, 1703–45/R)

Marquis d'Argenson [René Louisde Voyer de Paulmy]: Notice sur les oeuvres de théâtre (MS, 1725–56, F-Pa); ed. T. Besterman, Studies on Voltaire and the Eighteenth Century, xlii–xliii (Geneva, 1966)

P.-F.G. Desfontaines: Observations sur les écrits modernes (Paris, 1735–45), vi, 314–15

C. and F. Parfaict: Histoire de l'Académie royale de musique (MS, 1741, F-Pn)

[A. de Léris]: Dictionnaire portatif des théâtres ... de Paris (Paris, 2/1763)

C. and F. Parfaict: Dictionnaire des théâtres de Paris (Paris, 1756, 2/1767–70)

Anecdotes dramatiques, i (Paris, 1775)

T. de Lajarte: Bibliothèque musicale du théâtre de l'Opéra: catalogue historique, chronologique, anecdotique (Paris, 1878)

M. Barthélemy: 'L'actualité musicale dans les publications périodiques de Pierre-François Guyot Desfontaines (1735–1746)', RMFC, x (1970), 107–116

S. Pitou: The Paris Opera: an Encyclopedia of Operas, Ballets, Composers and Perfomers, ii: 1715–1815 (Westport, CT, 1983)

JAMES R. ANTHONY

Duval, Denise (b Paris, 23 Oct 1921). French soprano. She made her début at Bordeaux in 1943 as Lola (Cavalleria rusticana), then appeared at the Folies Bergères. In 1947 she made her début at the Opéra-Comique as Butterfly and was chosen by Poulenc to create Thérèse in Les mamelles de Tirésias, a role written with her charm and intelligence in mind. At the Opéra-Comique she also created Francesca in Hahn's Le oui des jeunes filles (1949). At the Opéra (where she made her début in 1947 as Salome in Hérodiade), she sang Thaïs, Rosenn (Le roi d'Ys), the Princess in Rabaud's Mârouf, Portia in Hahn's Le marchand de Venise, Ravel's Concepción, and sang Blanche in the Paris première of Dialogues des Carmélites (1957). She created Elle in La voix humaine (1959, Opéra-Comique), a vulnerable, subtle portrayal of a part admirably suited to her gifts, and repeated the role in the American première at Carnegie Hall and the British première with the Glyndebourne company at Edinburgh (1960). At Glyndebourne she sang an affecting Mélisande (1962). Duval was a most gifted singing actress, as the roles composed for her by Poulenc demonstrate. She recorded all three of these roles, together with a delightful Concepción in Cluytens's set of L'heure espagnole.

ANDRÉ TUBEUF, ELIZABETH FORBES

Duval, François (b Paris, 1672/3; d Versailles, 27 Jan 1728). French violinist and composer. He was the son of a Parisian dancing-master of the same name. It is probably the senior Duval who was listed in the highest rank of the 'Communauté des maîtres á dancer et jouers d'instruments de la ville et faubourgs de Paris' in 1695 and who danced at the Paris Opéra in 1711 in a revival of Lully's Cadmus. François senior had died by 13 November 1713. It is not known how or whether this branch of the family was related to the other Duvals (nearly a dozen) who practised music in Paris in the 17th and 18th centuries.

An air nouveau, published in Le mercure galant in December 1699, is probably the first evidence known of the younger Duval's existence. By 1704 he was in the service of the Duke of Orléans, an enthusiastic musical amateur to whom he dedicated his first opus. This was a set of violin sonatas, the first to be published in France; they show a knowledge of the style and technique of Corelli, subtly mixed with the style of the French harpsichord pièce. The sonata was regarded by the French at that time as an Italian genre; the few composed in France in the 1690s were circulated in manuscript to a small circle of professionals and connoisseurs. Between the appearance of Duval's op.1 and that in 1723 of Leclair's op.1, the earliest French sonatas to earn a permanent place in the repertory, more than two dozen volumes of violin sonatas were published.

Duval had another patron, the Duke of Noailles, to whom he dedicated his op.2. The duke brought Duval to court to play for Louis XIV, and shortly afterwards Duval brought out an op.3, dedicating it to the king: in his letter of dedication he stated, 'The most ardent of my wishes is to be able to provide Your Majesty with a few moments of diversion'. His wish was granted in 1714 when he became a member of the 24 Violons du Roi and played for the king Couperin's Concerts royaux with the composer at the harpsichord, Hilaire Verloge on the viola da gamba and Dubois on the bassoon.

On 13 November 1713 Duval married Monique Augustine de Behague; the couple apparently had no children, for after his death the only heirs named were his widow and two sisters. Duval spent his last 14 years at the French court, where his contemporaries considered him one of the best of the king's violinists. His music, although not technically advanced when compared to that of Vivaldi or of the slightly later generation of Locatelli, Geminiani, Veracini and Leclair, shows a full grasp of the idiomatic possibilities of the violin as found in the works of such Italians as Corelli and Torelli. Duval's performances of Corelli's sonatas were praised, but how he came by his knowledge of Italian music remains unknown.

WORKS

all published in Paris

op.
1	Sonates et autres pièces, vn, bc (1704)
2	Sonates a 3 parties, 2 vn, bc (1706)
3	Sonates, vn, bc (1707)
4	Sonates, vn, bc (1708)
5	Sonates, vn, bc (1715)
6	Amusemens pour la chambre: sonates, vn, bc (1718)
7	Les idées musiciennes: sonates, vn, bc (1720)

Monde trompeur, esperance mortelle, air nouveau, Le mercure galant (Dec 1699)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

La LaurencieEF; NewmanSBE

N. Dufourcq and M. Benoît: 'Les musiciens de Versailles à travers les minutes notariales de LAMY versées aux Archives Départementales de Seine-et-Oise', RMFC, iii (1963), 189–206

C.H. Bates: 'The Early French Sonatas for Solo Instruments: a Study in Diversity', RMFC, xxvii (1991–2), 71–95

NEAL ZASLAW

Duverger [Duvergé]. See CLÉRY, MARIE-ELIZABETH.

Duvernoy [Duvernois], Frédéric Nicolas (b Montbéliard, 16 Oct 1765; d Paris, 19 July 1838). French horn player, teacher and composer. He was the first major figure of the native French school of horn playing; his playing and teaching marked the definitive break from the parent Austro-Bohemian tradition. He was self-taught and reportedly specialized in the so-called cor mixte, generally understood to be the horn's middle range. While this elicited criticism from Fétis, he apparently achieved a remarkably high standard, and was considered by many to be the leading player of his day.

In 1788 Duvernoy joined the orchestra of the Comédie-Italienne in Paris, and made his solo début on 18 March at the Concert Spirituel, playing a concerto by Punto. He appeared six more times before the series was suspended in 1790, and also played at the Concerts de la Rue de Cléry, which lasted until 1802. In 1790 he became a second horn player at the Opéra-Comique and joined the first organized band of the National Guard. Entering the Opéra orchestra in 1796 he became solo horn in 1801, which meant he was responsible only for playing exposed solos; beyond that he could choose what he played. He had quite a high profile, as evidenced from the bill announcing the première of Spontini's La vestale in 1807: Duvernoy's full name in larger capital letters appears above all others on the cast list, whereas Spontini's name is nowhere to be found. Later in his career, he was often identified only by his first name. He was pensioned from the Opéra on 1 July 1817. Napoleon was a great admirer of Duvernoy's playing, and during the Empire Duvernoy was appointed first horn of the imperial chapel, a post he retained until the 1830 revolution. He was made a Chevalier of the Légion d'Honneur in 1817.

Frédéric Nicolas Duvernoy: portrait by an unknown artist, c1800 (Bibliothèque et Musée de l'Opéra, Paris)

Duvernoy was on the original staff of the Paris Conservatoire, remaining there until his retirement on 1 January 1816. His Méthode pour le cor (Paris, 1802/R; repr. with Eng. trans., Rock Hill, SC, 1987) has a simple, clear approach, making it a useful point of departure for learning hand-horn technique. In it, he makes no reference to cor mixte, advocating 'first' or 'second' designations. Instead, his method presents an approach that is clearly more advanced than its predecessors; for the first time, a three-octave chromatic range for the horn is presented, with indications for the degree of handstopping required for each note. Clearly, Duvernoy felt that players needed to master the entire range of the horn, in effect mixing the two species of 'first' and 'second' together. Duvernoy wrote several concertos, solos with piano, duets and trios, none of which brought him recognition as a composer. These are in the Bibliothèque Nationale and in the collection of Edmond Leloir. An anonymous contemporary portrait showing Duvernoy with a silver horn by L.J. Raoux is in the Opéra library (see illustration).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FétisB; MGG1(R. Cotte) [incl. detailed list of works]

C.F. Whistling: Handbuch der musikalischen Literatur (Leipzig, 1828, 2/1834/R)

C. Pierre: Le Conservatoire National de Musique et de Déclamation (Paris, 1900)

B. Coar: A Critical Study of the Nineteenth-Century Virtuosi in France (De Kalb, IL, 1952)

R. Morley-Pegge: The French Horn (London, 1960, 2/1973)

R. Gregory: The Horn (New York, 1961, 2/1969)

H. Fitzpatrick: The Horn and Horn-Playing and the Austro-Bohemian Tradition from 1680 to 1830 (London, 1970)

REGINALD MORLEY-PEGGE/HORACE FITZPATRICK/JEFFREY L. SNEDEKER

Duvernoy, Victor Alphonse (b Paris, 30 Aug 1842; d Paris, 7 March 1907). French pianist and composer. He was a pupil at the Paris Conservatoire under Marmontel, Bazin and lastly Barbereau, and at first intended to adopt the career of a virtuoso, but afterwards devoted himself to composition and became master of a piano class at the Conservatoire. His symphonic poem La tempête obtained the prize of the City of Paris in 1880 and in 1888 his chamber music won the Prix Chartiér. He was for 11 years music critic of the République française, and in 1891 became a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur.

WORKS

(selective list)

all published in Paris

Stage: Sardanapale (op, 3, P. Berton, after G. Byron), Paris, Lamoureux Concerts, 1882, Liège, Théâtre Royal, 1892, vs (1882); Le Baron Frick (pastiche operetta, 1, E. Depré, C. Clairville), Paris, 1885; Hellé (op, 4, C. du Locle, C.-L.-E. Nuitter), Paris, Opéra, 1896, vs (1896); Bacchus (ballet, 3, G. Hartmann, J. Hansen, after A. Mermet), Paris, Opéra, 26 Nov 1902, pf score (1902)

Vocal: La tempête (poème symphonique, A. Silvestre, P. Berton, after W. Shakespeare), solo vv, 4vv, orch, vs (*c*1880); Cléopatre (scène lyrique, L. Gallet), S, 4vv, orch, vs (*c*1890)

Orch: Hernani, dramatic ov. (1890); 2 fragments symphoniques, pf, orch, 1876, pf score (1885); Concertstück, pf, orch, op.20 (1877); Scène de bal, pf, orch, op.28 (1885); Fantaisie symphonique, pf, orch (1906); Concertino, fl, orch/pf (1899)

Chbr: Pf trio, e, op.11 (1880); Sonata, G, vn, pf, op.23 (1885); Sérénade, tpt, 2 vn, va, vc, db, pf, op.24 (1906); Str qt, c, op.46 (1899); Lied, va, pf, op.47 (1901); Sonata, c, vn, pf, op.51 (1905)
Pf: Sonata, A, op.52 (1906)

THEORETICAL WORKS

L'école du mécanisme (Paris, 1903) [100 exercises, pf]

WRITINGS

with L.-E. Gratia: 'Le piano et sa technique', EMDC, II/iii (1927), 2073–2116

GUSTAVE FERRARI/R

Dűvő. (Hung., ? from Romany dui: 'twice'). A common accompanimental figure in the verbunkos, csárdás and other duple-metre dances played by Hungarian and Transylvanian Gypsy and folk ensembles. It is characterized by repeated notes played portato by any combination of viola, cello and string bass, with two notes to a single bowstroke and the second of the pair heavily accented. Dűvő can be notated in either slurred crotchets or slurred quavers, and at least the viola usually uses double stops. Adaptations of dűvő accompaniments can be found in works of Antal Csermák, Vanos Bihari, Bartók and other Hungarian composers.

See also HUNGARY, §II.

DAVID E. SCHNEIDER

Dux, Benedictus. See DUCIS, BENEDICTUS.

Dux, Claire (b Witkowicz, 2 Aug 1885; d Chicago, 8 Oct 1967). Polish soprano. She studied in Berlin and made her début in Cologne as Pamina in 1906. From 1911 to 1918 she was a member of the Royal Opera, Berlin, where she sang the leading lyrical German and Italian roles. In 1911 she sang in Britain for the first time, with Beecham at His Majesty's Theatre, and in 1913 she was Covent Garden's first Sophie in Der Rosenkavalier. In 1921 she went to the USA, where she appeared frequently with the Chicago Civic Opera, also making concert tours throughout the country. After a brief return to Germany she settled in Chicago and retired from the stage, but still sang occasionally in concerts. Dux's voice was a lyric soprano of the utmost purity, controlled by a firm technique, and capable of exquisite pianissimo. She was admired as an actress, and her Sophie, Eva and Pamina were particularly distinguished. In later years her lieder singing was much praised, but on the evidence of her records her style in this field was not as faultless as in opera. Beecham called her 1914 Drury Lane Pamina 'the most exquisite exhibition of bel canto that London has heard for more than a generation' (A Mingled Chime, London, 1944).

ALAN BLYTH

Dux (Lat.: 'leader', 'guide'), comes (Lat.: 'companion', 'follower'). These terms refer, respectively, to the original version of the fugue subject and the ANSWER form of the subject (see FUGUE, §1). They were introduced by Sethus Calvisius (Melopoeia, 1592) as direct translations of Zarlino's Guida and Consequente. For Calvisius and Zarlino, dux, or guida referred to the first voice to enter in a canonic or fugal passage, and comes or consequente referred to each of the remaining voices that enter subsequently and follow after the first. The first writer known to use dux and comes with their modern meanings was Andreas Werkmeister in the chapter on fuge in Musicae mathematicae hodegus curiosus (1686). While Zarlino's words have long since disappeared from fugal terminology, dux and comes remain in use today, especially in Germany.

PAUL WALKER

Duyse, Flor [Florimond] van (b Ghent, 4 Aug 1843; d Ghent, 18 May 1910). Belgian musicologist and composer. The son of the poet Prudens van Duyse, he studied the violin from the age of seven. When he was ten he entered the Ghent Conservatory, where he was a pupil of Karel Miry; he won prizes in harmony (1859) and counterpoint (1861–2). His operetta Teniers te Grimbergen, on a libretto by his father, was produced in 1860 at the Minardtheater in Ghent, and several short vaudevilles followed at the Nationaal Toneel in Antwerp; his opéra comique Rosalinde was also produced there in 1864. At about this time he entered the University of Ghent, where he took a degree in law in 1867. While continuing to compose (in 1873 he won second prize in the Belgian Prix de Rome with his cantata Torquato Tasso's dood), he made a career as a magistrate and as a musicologist. He played an important part in the cultural education of the working class by organizing evenings of singing, which were highly successful. However, his greatest musical achievements lie in his researches into folksong, in which connection he did epoch-making work. His last monograph, Het oude nederlandse lied (1903–8), remains today the principal reference work on early Dutch song.

WRITINGS

Het eenstemmig Fransch en Nederlandsch wereldlijk lied in de Belgische gewesten (Ghent, 1896)
De melodie van het Nederlandsche lied en hare rhythmische vormen (The Hague, 1902)
Een Duytsch musyckboek naar de uitgave van 1572, UVNM, xxvi (Amsterdam, 1903)
Het oude Nederlandsche lied (The Hague, 1903–22) [incl. index and suppl.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AMe (J. Robijns, M. Zijlstra); BNB (A. vanden Linden)
P. Bergmans: Notice sur la vie et les travaux de Florimond Van Duyse (Brussels, 1919)

ERIC BLOM/ANNE-MARIE RIESSAUW

Dvangs-bzang, A-lce (fl Kyomolung, near Lhasa, early 20th century). Tibetan lha-mo (musical theatre) director. With her husband Padma bsTan-'dzin, she directed a Tibetan lha-mo performing group that became so successful that it supplanted the sKyor-mo-lung official troupe of the zho-ston festival while keeping its name. She brought many improvements to the theatrical genre, particularly in singing style, movements and jokes on the stage. The new sKyor-mo-lung troupe soon acquired immense popularity throughout Tibet and became the first professional opera troupe of the region, transforming the life-style of actors from that of peasants to that of performer-beggars roaming all over Tibet. Images of her large size, unconventional demeanour and facial pilosity are evoked in folk tradition.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Bod-ljongs lha-mo tshogs-pa [Tibet opera troupe], Bod kyi lha-mo 'lugs-khag ngo-sprod byed-pa [Introducing the different schools of Tibetan opera] (MS, Lhasa, 1980), 3
'lHa-mo mkhas-can A-lce Dvangs-bzang' [The lha-mo expert A-lce Dvangs-bzang], Grong-khyer lHa-sa 'lo-rgyus rig-gnas deb gsum-pa : sTod-lung bDe-chen rdzong [History and culture of Lhasa City, iii: Tölung Dechen County], ed. Grong-khyer lHa-sa srid-gros lo-rgyus rig-gnas dpyad-yig rgyu-cha rtsom-'bri [Lhasa CPCC compiling office for materials on history and culture] (Lhasa, 1995), 92–3

ISABELLE HENRION-DOURCY

Dvarionas, Balys (b Liepāja, Latvia, 19 June 1904; d Vilnius, 23 Aug 1972). Lithuanian composer, pianist and conductor. The youngest child in a family of 11 children, he first studied music with his father, an organist and instrument maker. Serious study began under Alfrēds Kalniņš, and in 1920, along with several other Lithuanian musicians including Jadvyga Čiurlionytė and Juozas Gruodis, he entered the Leipzig Conservatory, where he studied with Teichmüller and Karg-Elert. He made his début as a pianist while still a student at Leipzig, with programmes featuring works by Debussy, Skryabin, Prokofiev, Čiurlionis and Gruodis. After graduating in 1924, he went on to Berlin in 1925 to take a postgraduate piano course under Egon Petri, before settling in Lithuania in 1926. He later made appearances as a pianist in Moscow and Leningrad (1933), Paris (1935), Stockholm (1936), Hamburg and elsewhere.

In 1926 Dvarionas took up a teaching post at the Kaunas Music School (later renamed the Kaunas Conservatory), which he held until his death. It was at this institution that he began his conducting career, directing student ensembles. He conducted in Berlin in 1932, studied with Walter and Karajan at the Salzburg Mozarteum in 1934, and in 1936 directed the first Lithuanian performance of Shostakovich's First Symphony and the première of Čiurlionis's The Sea. He took a diploma in conducting under Abendroth in Leipzig in 1939. In January 1940 he conducted the Lithuanian SO in their first concert, which featured Čiurlionis's In the Forest. After the war he moved to Vilnius, the new Lithuanian capital, with his wife, the pianist A. Smilgaite, and their two children. There he continued to conduct and to teach in the newly unified conservatory.

Dvarionas wrote many of his most important compositions during the period immediately after the war. Works such as the Violin Concerto are notable for their combination of a folk-inspired lyricism with structural confidence and developmental coherence. His output is essentially conservative in tone, and as such it found favour with the Soviet authorities. He composed the Lithuanian national anthem, and in 1964 received the Order of Lenin and was made a People's Artist of the USSR. His daughter Margarita Dvarionaitė (b 1928) studied in Leningrad and became conductor of the Lithuanian PO and Opera.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Piršlybos [The Marriage Proposal] (ballet, 1, L. Gira), 1931; Dalia (op, 4, Mackonis), 1958; incid music for plays by H. Ibsen, W. Shakespeare, O. Wilde Or

Orch: Festival Ov., 1945; Prie girstaro kranto [At the Amber Shore], ov., 1946; Sym., e, 1947; Vn Conc., b, 1948; Childhood Suite, 1954; Pf Conc., g, 1960; Pf Conc. [no.2], e, pf, chbr orch, 1961; Hn Conc., d, 1963; Ov. 'Zaria', 1967

Chbr: Pezzo elegiaco, vn, pf, 1946; Theme and Variations, bn, pf, 1946; Piesas [Piece], vn, pf, 1950; Sonata-ballada, vn, pf, 1965; Elegija, vn, pf, 1960; Scherzo, ob, pf, 1962; Introduction and Rondo, vc, pf, 1963

Pf: Little Suite, 1949–52; Intermezzo, 1953; Žiemos eskizai [Winter Sketches], 1953–4; Sorrow, 1954; Sonatina, c♯, 1962; Sonatina, C, 1966; Miraz, 3 Micropreludes, 1972

Songs, 1v, pf, to texts by J. Djagutite, J. Macevicius, E. Mezelajtis, L. Stepanauskas and I. Vaiciulionis

Other works, incl. cants., choruses, pieces for folk inst ens, folksong arrs., choruses for children

Principal publishers: Muzgiz, Vaga

BIBLIOGRAPHY

V. Zuckermann [Tsukerman]: 'Noviye instrumental'nïye kontsertï' [New instrumental concertos], Sovetskaya simfonicheskaya muzïka (Moscow, 1955), 132–9

G. Zialvis: Balsis Dvarionas: zhiznennïy i tvorcheskiy put', fortepiannoye tvorchestvo, ispolnitel'skaya i pedagogicheskaya deyatel'nost' [His life, creative path, piano works, and his performing and teaching activities] (diss., Leningrad Conservatory, 1978)

J. Gaudrimas, ed.: Balis Dvarionas: stat'i, pis'ma, vospominaniya sovremennikov [Articles, letters, reminiscences of his contemporaries] (Leningrad, 1989)

JONATHAN POWELL

Dvořák, Antonín (Leopold) (b Nelahozeves, nr Kralupy, 8 Sept 1841; d Prague, 1 May 1904). Czech composer. With Smetana, Fibich and Janáček he is regarded as one of the great nationalist Czech composers of the 19th century. Long neglected and dismissed by the German-speaking musical world as a naive Czech musician, he is now considered by both Czech and international musicologists Smetana's true heir. He earned worldwide admiration and prestige for 19th-century Czech music with his symphonies, chamber music, oratorios, songs and, to a lesser extent, his operas.

1. EARLY YEARS, 1841–59. Dvořák was born into the unsophisticated cultural and social background of a Czech family. His father, František, was a butcher and innkeeper who played the zither, originally to entertain his guests, in later years professionally. His mother, Anna, came from the family of an estate steward in Uhy. Dvořák was the eldest of their eight children. He received his first musical education in 1847 on entering the village school, where the teacher and Kantor Joseph Spitz taught him singing and gave him violin lessons. He made such good progress on the violin that he soon participated in the musical life of the countryside, playing in church and with the village band, which performed the usual repertory of ceremonial and popular music such as polkas, mazurkas, marches and waltzes. In autumn 1853, after Dvořák had spent six years at the school, his parents sent him to the nearby small town of Zlonice, where he could continue to learn German (essential in Bohemia at that time), besides continuing his musical education with the church choirmaster Joseph Toman and with the Kantor Antonín Liehmann, who taught him the violin, piano, organ and continuo playing, and music theory. In late 20th-century biographies it was still claimed that Dvořák was sent to Zlonice primarily to learn his father's trade of butchery and was a butcher's apprentice for more than two years, but it has now been proved (Burghauser, D1993–4) that his supposed certificate of apprenticeship dated 2 November 1856 is a forgery. The story must therefore be seen as a myth obscuring the fact that Dvořák's parents recognized their son's musical talent from the first and did all they could to encourage it. After his years with Liehmann, Dvořák was sent in autumn 1856 to the northern Bohemian town of Česká Kamenice, where he attended the German municipal school and was taught the organ zur grossen Musikaufführung

Programm

unter persönlicher Leitung von

Richard Wagner.

8. Februar 1863.

1. Eine Faustouverture.
2. a) Versammlung der Meistersingerzunft. (für Orchester allein) neu.
   b) Pogners Anrede an die Versammlung, gesungen von Herrn Rokitanský, neu.
3. Vorspiel zu den „Meistersingern", neu.
4. Vorspiel zu „Tristan und Isolde".
5. Siegmunds Liebesgesang, (gesungen von Herrn Bernard) neu.
6. Ouverture zu „Tannhäuser".

Sämmtliche Compositionen von Richard Wagner.

Die Herren Rokitanský und Bernard haben aus besonderer Gefälligkeit die obgenannten Parthien übernommen.

Program

k velké hudebni produkci

osobním řízením

Richarda Wagnera.

8. února 1863.

1. Ouvertura k Faustu.
2. a) Shromáždéni cechu mistrných pěvců, (pro orchestr samý) nové.
   b) Pognerovo osloveni shromáždéni, nové, zpívá pan Rokitanský.
3. Předehra k „mistrným pěvcům," nová;
4. Předehra k „Tristanu a Isoldě."
5. Milostný zpěv Siegmunda, zpívá pan Bernard, nový.
6. Ouyertura k „Tannhäuseru."

Veskrz skladby Richarda Wagnera.

Pánové Rokitanský a Bernard převzali z obzvláštní ochoty nadzmíněné úlohy.

1. Programme of concert conducted by Wagner, Žofin concert hall, Prague, 8 February 1863, in which Dvořák played the viola and music theory by Franz Hanke. A year later, in autumn 1857, he began to study at the Prague Organ School, where the teachers included Karl Pietsch, Josef Krejčí, František Blažek, Josef Leopold Zvonař and Josef Foerster; his subjects included continuo, harmony, modulation, the playing of chorales, improvising, and counterpoint and fugue. (Some of his exercises have survived.) At the time he attended the Maria Schnee secondary school. From November 1857 he played the viola in the concerts of the Cecilia Society conducted by Anton Apt. The programmes included works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Schumann, Raff and Wagner. Musical life in Prague at the time also gave Dvořák a chance to hear Liszt conducting his own works (in March 1858) and to attend concerts at which Hans von Bülow conducted and Clara Schumann performed (both in March 1859). The extensive collection of scores owned by his fellow student and friend Karel Bendl gave him the opportunity to extend and deepen his knowledge of music. Dvořák finished his studies at the Prague Organ School in July 1859 as the second best student of his year, and he left as a trained organist.

2. Working as a musician in Prague, 1859–71. In late summer 1859 Dvořák joined the dance band of the elder Karel Komzák as a viola player. The band played in restaurants and for balls, and when Dvořák's application for the post of organist at the church of St Jindřich was rejected he stayed on as a permanent member. When the newly built Provisional Theatre, the first Czech theatre in Prague, opened in November 1862 in the wake of Vienna's more liberal policy on nationalism (it was constructed at state expense) Komzák's band formed the nucleus of the theatre orchestra, with Dvořák as principal violist. The first conductor was Johann Nepomuk Maýr, under whom Dvořák played in many German (Mozart, Weber, Lortzing) and French stage works (Auber, Méhul, Halévy, Boieldieu and Offenbach), but above all in Italian operas by Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini and Verdi. After the end of 1866, when Smetana took over as conductor, works by Czech (Smetana, Šebor, Bendl, Blodek) and Slav composers (Glinka, Moniuszko) increasingly began to be included in the repertory. Besides playing at the theatre the orchestra was sometimes called upon for concerts given by the Academic Reading Union and the Artistic Society, or for concerts on Žofín Island. In February and November 1863 Dvořák played in the three concerts conducted by Wagner in the Žofin concert hall which included his Faust overture, the overture to Tannhäuser, the prelude to Lohengrin and extracts from Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg, Tristan und Isolde, Die Walküre and Siegfried (fig.1).

At the beginning of 1865 Dvořák began giving piano lessons to the daughters of a Prague goldsmith, Josefína and Anna Čermáková (Anna later became his wife), but he remained a member of the Provisional Theatre orchestra until the summer of 1871, and to all appearances was simply a practical musician. Privately, however, he was composing. The String Quintet in A minor op.1, the String Quartets nos.1–4, the first two symphonies (both 1865), the song cycle Cypřiše ('Cypresses', B11), the Concerto in A for cello with piano accompaniment (1865, B10) and the opera Alfred make up a series of works in which he moved almost systematically from small-scale to larger forms. Setting out from the example of Mozart and middle-period Beethoven, he progressively extended his musical language by way of Mendelssohn, Schumann and Wagner to the state of composition in his own time.

3. Early years as a Czech composer, 1871–82. In June 1871, shortly before he left the orchestra of the Provisional Theatre, Dvořák announced in the journal Hudební listy (which informed the musical world of Prague) that he was composing, and working on an opera to a Czech libretto by Bernard J. Lobeský entitled Král a uhlíř ('King and Charcoal Burner', B21). He showed parts of it to Ludevít Procházka (editor of the journal and a former pupil of Smetana), who thought highly of Dvořák's talents and began to promote his career at the song recitals he organized in Prague. The first song by Dvořák performed at one of these recitals (10 December 1871) was Vzpomínáni ('Remembrance', B23/5, to a text by Eliška Krásnohorská), in a concert that also included works by Bendl and Fibich. Two more of his songs were performed in April 1872: Proto ('The Reason', B23/2, Krásnohorská) and Sirotek ('The Orphan', B24, text by K.J. Erben). An Adagio from a piano trio (B25 or 26, both lost) was given its première several months later, with Procházka at the piano, and soon afterwards (22 November 1872) the Piano Quintet in A (B28) also received its première.

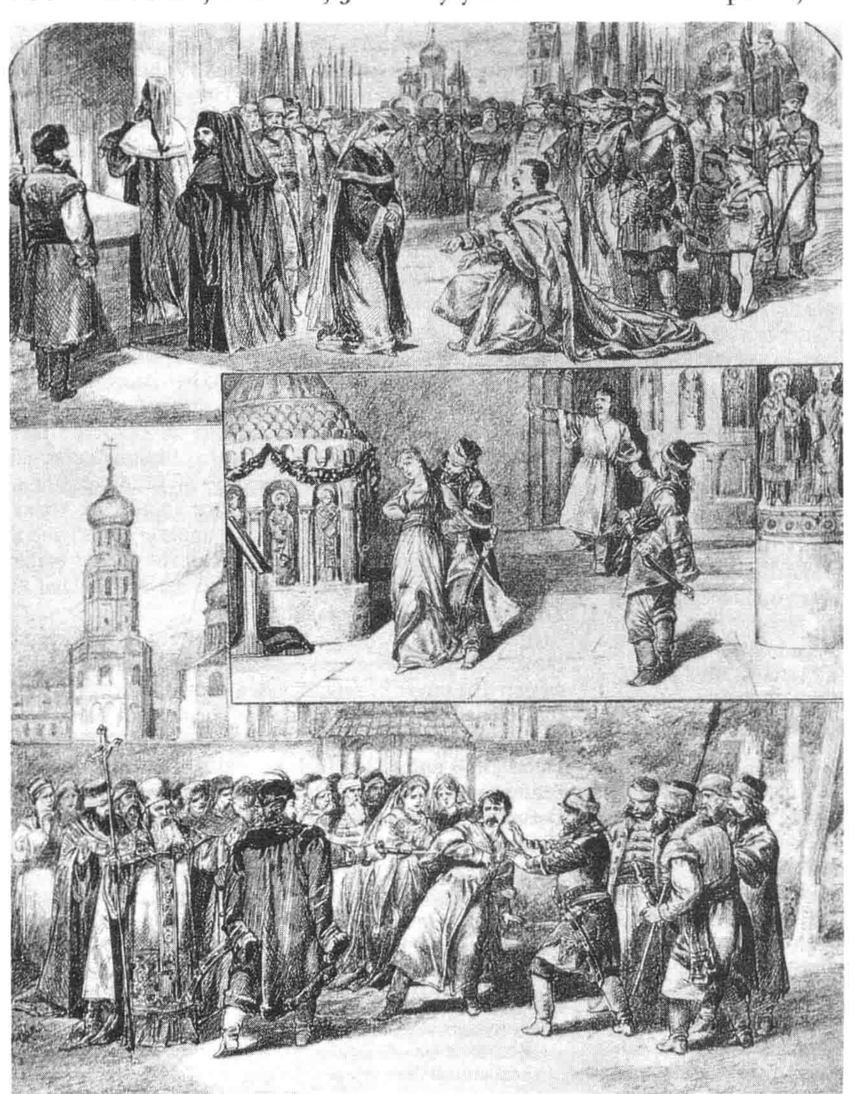
In the same year Smetana performed the overture to King and Charcoal Burner at a concert on Žofín Island (14 April 1872). The first of Dvořák's works to appear in print, the song Skřivánek ('The Lark', B30/3), was published in 1873, in the November supplement to the first volume of the journal Dalibor. However, the event that established Dvořák among the leading composers of Prague occurred on 9 March 1873 when the Prague Hlahol, conducted by Bendl, gave a successful performance of his patriotic cantata for male voices Hymnus: Dědicové bílé hory ('Hymn: the Heirs of the White Mountain', B27). Encouraged by its reception, Dvořák offered King and Charcoal Burner to the management of the Provisional Theatre, which accepted the work and promised to produce it. He was now making his living solely by giving piano lessons and applied to Svatobor, a Prague association for the support of artists, for a stipendium to enable him to visit Liszt in Weimar, so that he could seek his advice and study with him. The application was refused, and to improve his financial situation Dvořák began teaching at Jan August Starý's private music school. A little earlier, in August 1873, rehearsals had begun under Smetana for King and Charcoal Burner. The opera was clearly influenced by Wagnerian principles of declamation, harmony and orchestral treatment. During rehearsals it soon appeared that its almost insuperable demands on soloists, chorus and orchestra were likely to be beyond the capabilities of the Czech stage. Rehearsals were halted in September 1873 and the opera was taken off the programme.

Dvořák did not let this setback shake his belief in himself as a composer, but it caused him to undertake a critical assessment of his work so far and to seek new directions. He destroyed many of the works from what he later described as his 'mad period' of 1866–71 and began his opus numbering again. His compositions perceptibly moved away from modern German influence, turning instead to a new classicism of form and content, with elements of Slavonic folklore, of which he made a special study. The first works from this transitional period included the string quartets no.5 in F minor (1873, B37), no.6 in A minor (B40) and no.7 in A minor (B45), and the second version of King and Charcoal Burner (B42), which had not a note in common with the first version, was 'national rather than Wagnerian', as Dvořák himself said, and was very successful at its première (24 November 1874).



In February 1874 Dvořák, by now married, was appointed organist at the church of St Vojtěch), a post he held until the beginning of 1877. However, the appointment had no influence on his composition, which continued to consist mainly of instrumental music and opera. A few months later, soon after Smetana had performed his Third Symphony (B34) and the scherzo from his Fourth (B41), Dvořák applied for the Austrian State Stipendium granted to artists. His application of July 1874 was accompanied by 15 compositions, including symphonies, overtures and the Písně z Rukopisu Královédvorského ('Songs from the Dvůr Králové Manuscript, B30); in 1875 the jury, consisting of Eduard Hanslick, Johann Herbeck and Otto Dessoff, granted him 400 gulden. Dvořák received this stipendium on four further occasions. When he applied in 1875 the jury (Dessoff's place had been taken by Brahms) granted another 400 gulden. His application of 1876, accompanied by the Piano Trio in G minor (B56), the String Quartet no.8 in E (B57), the Fifth Symphony (B54) and a version with piano accompaniment of the Stabat mater (B71), won him 500 gulden; he received 600 gulden in 1877 and 400 gulden again in 1878.

Apart from the financial considerations, however, Dvořák's application of 1877 was crucial to his future career. The music he sent included another set of quartets, the Serenade for strings (B52), the Theme with Variations for piano (B65), and the Moravské dvojzpěvy ('Moravian Duets', B60 and 62), which he had had printed himself. Brahms was so enthusiastic about the duets that in early December 1877 he wrote to his Berlin publisher Fritz Simrock:

> As for the state stipendium, for several years I have enjoyed works sent in by Antonín Dvořák (pronounced Dvorschak) of Prague. This year he has sent works including a volume of 10 duets for two sopranos and piano, which seem to me very pretty, and a practical proposition for publishing. . . . Play them through and you will like them as much as I do. As a publisher, you will be particularly pleased with their piquancy. . . . Dvořák has written all manner of things: operas (Czech), symphonies, quartets, piano pieces. In any case, he is a very talented man. Moreover, he is poor! I ask you to think about it! The duets will show you what I mean, and could be a 'good article'.

This letter from Brahms, who soon formed a close friendship with Dvořák, set off a kind of avalanche of publication and performance. Simrock accepted the duets, and in one of his earliest letters to Dvořák commissioned the Slovanské tance ('Slavonic Dances', for piano four hands, B78, also orchestrated, B83). On 15 November 1878, when they appeared, the critic Louis Ehlert wrote an enthusiastic review in the Berlin National-Zeitung which – as Ehlert said to Dvořák – led to 'a positive assault on the sheet music shops', and made the previously unknown Czech composer's name 'in the course of a day'.

Suddenly illuminated by the bright spotlight of publicity, Dvořák was besieged by requests from German publishers and at the end of 1878 his compositions began to be played in international concert halls. Within a few months, the Slavonic Dances were performed in Dresden, Hamburg, Berlin, Nice, London and New York. As soon as the Slavonic Rhapsodies (B86) had been published in 1879 by Simrock (now Dvořák's principal publisher), they were performed in Dresden, Berlin, Vienna, Budapest, Lugano and Baltimore. Early in November 1879 Joseph Joachim's quartet performed the String Sextet (B80) in Berlin. Joachim, his wife Amalie, Hans Richter, Hans von Bülow, Jean Becker and Hanslick were important advocates of Dvořák's music. At the end of 1879 Richter asked Dvořák to write a symphony for Vienna (the Sixth, B112), Joseph Hellmesberger asked for a string quartet (op.61, B121) and Simrock suggested the composition of a violin concerto for Joachim (op.53, B96/108).

2. Scenes from the original production of Dvořák's 'Dimitrij', New Czech Theatre, Prague, 8 October 1882; engraving after Emanuel Zillich from 'Svetozor', xvii (1884)

Dvořák's success abroad was recognized in Bohemia. In Prague, as early as 1878, he conducted a concert of his own works which was received with great enthusiasm. Shortly afterwards he became an honorary member of the male-voice choral society Hlahol, and like Smetana before him, was later made chairman of the musicians' section of the Artistic society. Dvořák was now the composer commissioned for special occasions in Prague; he wrote the Slavostní pochod ('Festival March', B88) for the silver wedding anniversary of the Emperor Franz Joseph and the Empress Elisabeth, the Pražské valčíky ('Prague Waltzes', B99) for the ball of the Národní Beseda and a Polonaise (B100) for the evening dance given by the Academic Reading Union.

Besides commissioned works and smaller occasional pieces, however, and after completing the orchestral Legendy ('Legends', B122), he was chiefly occupied with the composition of a historical grand opera, Dimitrij (B127), to a libretto by Marie Červinková-Riegrová. The libretto was based on an episode of Russian history forming a sequel to that of Boris Godunov, and its dramatic situations, love scenes and crowd scenes appealed strongly to Dvořák. He was unable to finish it, as he had intended, in time for the planned opening of the Czech National Theatre (built with donations from the Czech population of Bohemia and Moravia), expected to take place in September 1881. But when the theatre burnt down (in August 1881) before the official opening there was no more need for haste, and a year later (8 October 1882) Dimitrij was given its première at the New Czech Theatre (fig.2). It was a great success for Dvořák, who regarded opera as very important to his art.

However, in spite of revisions made on the advice of Simrock and Hanslick, he was disappointed in his hopes that Dimitrij would make its way into the international musical world like his earlier opera Šelma sedlák ('The Cunning Peasant', B67), successfully performed in Dresden in 1882 and Hamburg in 1883. A major reason was the increase during the 1880s of political tension which also affected theatres and concert halls. Dvořák had been made aware of anti-Czech feeling at the Viennese performance of his third Slavonic Rhapsody at the end of 1879. Hanslick, reviewing the concert, strongly condemned any intrusion of politics into art in assessing Dvořák's music, but his adjurations were in vain. Richter had promised to give the first Viennese performance of the Sixth Symphony at the end of 1880, but it was cancelled and then repeatedly postponed. Since it was thought unwise in Vienna to give prominence to works by a Czech composer, the symphony fell victim to the political climate, causing Dvořák to write to Richter in October 1884:

> In the Viennese papers yesterday I read the programme of the Philharmonic concerts in Vienna . . . I am glad you have remembered my humble self again, but I have some misgivings about the choice of the Slavonic Rhapsody, because Viennese audiences seem to be prejudiced against a composition with a Slav flavour, so it may not be as successful as it might in other circumstances. It went very well in London and Berlin, and will do well elsewhere too, but in the national and political conditions prevailing here I am afraid it will not be well received.

In view of these tensions Dvořák – who had once written to Simrock 'I just wanted to tell you that an artist too has a fatherland in which he must also have a firm faith and which he must love' – wrote to his publisher several times after 1880 asking for the title-pages of his compositions to be printed in both German and Czech, and for editions of his vocal works to give the texts in both languages. He also wanted his first name to be printed simply as 'Ant.', since this 'would be equally good in both languages' as a neutral abbreviation for both German 'Anton' and Czech 'Antonín'. At this turbulent period rather ill-timed requests from Vienna such as those made by Franz Jauner in 1882 and Hanslick in 1884, both asking him to write music to a German libretto for Vienna and guaranteeing performance, placed Dvořák, who saw himself as 'an artist who hopes to be of some significance', in a difficult personal and artistic situation: a dilemma of whether to choose loyalty to his country or disloyalty in order to achieve success among 'enemies' abroad.

It has often been suggested that this situation was directly connected with Dvořák's adopting a new musical language, less permeated by a Slavonic tone and dramatic, dark and aggressive rather than carefree. He used that language in the works of this period: there are already hints of it in the String Quartet in C op.61 (B121), it is present in the Scherzo capriccioso op.66 (B131), and finds clear expression in the Piano Trio in F minor op.65 (B130), the Husitská overture op.67 (B132), the Ballad in D minor for violin and piano (B139) and the Seventh Symphony op.70 (B141). The absence from some of the autograph manuscripts (opp.65, 66 and 67) of the comment 'Bohu díky' ('Thanks be to God') – which Dvořák had regularly added at the end of each work from op.2 onwards and resumed with op.70 – suggests that he was indeed suffering some distress in these years.

4. ON THE WAY TO INTERNATIONAL FAME, 1883–92. Early in August 1883 Dvořák was invited to London by the Philharmonic Society to conduct orchestral performances of his works in the coming season. A few months later, at the beginning of November 1883, the London music publishing firm of Novello asked him to conduct a performance of his Stabat mater during his visit and to compose a work for soloists, chorus and orchestra for the 1885 Birmingham Festival and conduct it himself. Dvořák was already known in London from performances of such works as the Slavonic Dances (conducted in 1879 and 1880 by Manns), the Slavonic Rhapsodies (conducted in 1880 and 1881 by Manns, Richter and Hallé), the String Sextet (given by Joachim in 1880) and the Sixth Symphony (conducted by Manns in 1882), and they had received favourable reviews. However, the performance of the Stabat mater under Barnby on 10 March 1883, received enthusiastically by both the audience and the critics, was probably the main reason for the Philharmonic Society's invitation.

On 5 March 1884 Dvořák travelled to England for the first time and on 13 March conducted the Stabat mater in the Albert Hall. A week later he conducted his overture Husitská, the Sixth Symphony and the Slavonic Rhapsody no.2 in St James's Hall, and on 22 March, at the Crystal Palace, he conducted the Scherzo capriccioso and the Nocturne in B (B47). The musical world of London regarded his visit as an 'event of "red letter" significance', and fêted him as the 'musical hero of the hour'. The Philharmonic Society made him an honorary member. He promised it a new symphony, and he was expected to write choral works for both the forthcoming Birmingham Festival and the Leeds Festival of 1886.

Dvořák's great success in England led to eight more visits. In November 1884 he travelled to London and to Worcester (where he gave a performance of the Stabat mater); in April 1885 he visited London for the première of the Seventh Symphony; in August 1885 he gave concerts in London and in Birmingham, where he conducted the British première of the cantata Svatební košile ('The Spectre's Bride'); in October 1886 he visited London, Birmingham and Leeds, where he gave the première of the oratorio Svatá Ludmila ('St Ludmilla'); in April 1890 he went to London to give a performance of the Eighth Symphony; in July 1891 he visited London and Cambridge, where he received an honorary doctorate, and in October of the same year he went to Birmingham for the première of the Requiem. His last visit, in March 1896, was to London for the première of the Cello Concerto.

The importance to Dvořák of his success in England can scarcely be overestimated: at a time when political feeling was detrimental to the reception of his work in Germany and Austria, England, far removed from continental bickering, appreciated him properly as an artist and contributed greatly to the growth of his international fame. For English audiences, Dvořák was able to base his commissioned choral works on Czech subjects (a fairy tale in The Spectre's Bride, a legend in St Ludmilla) without fearing that his work would meet with prejudice even before it was heard. Dvořák met prominent figures of English musical society who judged his work without arrogance or preconceptions, in contrast to the sometimes tactless conduct of some of his continental friends. He also became friendly with Henry and Alfred Littleton, owners of Novello, who were interested in publishing Dvořák's works, and this placed him in a better position in his dealings with Simrock. Early in 1884 (probably as a result of Dvořák's invitation to England) a discordant note had crept into their relationship: Simrock began complaining of the poor quality of Dvořák's manuscripts and at first tried to prevent the planned London production on 20 March 1884 of the Husitská overture, which had not yet been published. A dispute over the fee for the Seventh Symphony almost ended the friendship that had existed for many years. Simrock offered Dvořák 3000 marks, exactly a fifth of the sum he paid Brahms for a symphony, and half what the Czech composer was expecting. However, a rupture was averted when they agreed on a compromise: Dvořák undertook to compose a second set of Slavonic Dances, while Simrock paid what the composer expected for the symphony.

Dvořák's visits to England also marked the beginning of a period free from financial anxieties, and he was able to fulfil his dream of buying a small country property in Vysoká, a village near the south Bohemian silver-mining town of Příbram. From that time he spent the summer months there with his family, in a retreat where he felt 'as if cut off from the world' and 'cared nothing for all the world', but instead could 'enjoy the beauties of God's nature'. In composition he concentrated first on the works commissioned for England (1884–6), then on the second set of Slavonic Dances (1886) and in 1887 and 1888 he turned his attention mainly to the opera Jakobín ('The Jacobin'), his first stage work since Dimitrij. He remarked to his friend Alois Göbl, 'I believe that this time the doubters will be satisfied with my gift for drama, and even surprised by it!' During these two years he also revised earlier, unpublished works. They included the Symphonic Variations (B70); the Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Symphonies; the String Quartet no.8 in E (B57); the String Quintet with double bass (B49); and the song cycle Cypresses (B11), which he arranged for string quartet (B152) under the title Ohlas písní ('Echo of Songs') and revised as Písně milostné ('Love Songs')(B160). Simrock immediately published most of these works, with opus numbers that do not correspond to the chronology of their composition. From 1889, however, Dvořák composed new music, including the Poetické nálady ('Poetic Tone Pictures') for piano (B161); the Eighth Symphony (B163); the Requiem (B165); the Dumky Trio (B166); and the three concert overtures opp.91–3, V přírodě ('In Nature's Realm', op. 91, B168), Karneval ('Carnival', op.92, B169) and Othello (op.93, B174). These works show a new side of the composer that he described to his friend Emanuel Chvála, saying 'Here I am a poet as well as a musician.'

Dvořák's growing fame brought him many honours and awards. In June 1889 he was awarded the Austrian Order of the Iron Crown and a few months later he went to Vienna to be received by the emperor. In February 1890 the Prague Artistic Society held a banquet in his honour, two months later he received an honorary doctorate from the Czech University of Prague and shortly afterwards he was elected to the Czech Academy of Sciences and Arts. In between receiving these honours, Dvořák went on a spring concert tour to Moscow and St Petersburg as a result of his friendship with Tchaikovsky, who had conducted several concerts in Prague in 1888 and met Dvořák there on a number of occasions. Finally, some months after his return from Russia Dvořák heard that the University of Cambridge wanted to give him an honorary doctorate.

5. DVOŘÁK AS A TEACHER. At the end of January 1889 Josef Tragy, managing director of the Prague Association for the Promotion of Music, had offered Dvořák a post as professor of composition and instrumentation at Prague Conservatory. At first he refused, but at the end of October 1890, when he was asked again, he accepted the offer. A contributing factor to his decision was probably the rupture with Simrock over the fee for the Eighth Symphony (subsequently published by Novello as Symphony no.4). Dvořák took up his post at the Conservatory in January 1891.

He was not a natural teacher; his lectures and his comments on students' work were too often determined by his own moods. Nonetheless, according to the students he taught them well. He aimed to make them think for themselves: he would criticize and discuss weak passages and errors in their compositions and get them to say what effects they wanted to achieve, but refrained from providing all the answers, so that they had the useful experience of working out their own alternatives. Dvořák expected a great deal of hard work from his students ('If you cannot do that, then you are no composer', he said), as well as originality ('I have heard something like that before; try again and think about it . . . just as we were trying to do'). He also required mastery of the skills of composition ('The writing must be clean and distinct; a composer is equally responsible for all the parts, principal and accompanying parts alike') and suggested they should be studied in the works of Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and Wagner. Another of his demands was an abundance of ideas, for he saw composition as the ability 'to make a great deal – a very great deal – out of nothing much'.

Among his outstanding students in Prague were Vitězslav Novák, Oskar Nedbal and Josef Suk; his American students included Rubin Goldmark (later the teacher of Copland and Gershwin), William Arms Fisher and Harry Rowe Shelley (who later taught Charles Ives).

6. THE AMERICAN PERIOD, 1892–5. In June 1891 Jeannette Thurber, president of the National Conservatory of Music in America (in New York), had asked Dvořák if he would accept the post of artistic director and professor of composition there from October 1892 at an annual salary of $15,000 (25 times what he was paid at the Prague Conservatory). Besides Dvořák's fame in the USA, where his works had been performed since 1879, a significant reason for the offer was his reputation as a composer in a nationalistic style; Mrs Thurber had long dreamt of the creation of a national American style of art music. (The story that Sibelius was considered as an alternative to Dvořák is apocryphal.) Dvořák did not find the decision easy to make. On the one hand the salary was a powerful inducement since, at almost 50, he had to provide for six children aged between three and 13. On the other hand, acceptance would mean not only leaving his country, his beloved Vysoká and all his friends to confront another world, but would also create family problems. However, once these were solved Dvořák signed a contract with the National Conservatory in December 1891. His acceptance immediately affected his life. He spent the period from early January to the end of May 1892 on a concert tour of Bohemia, saying goodbye to his friends (fig.3). For these concerts – there were more than 40, often with Dvořák as pianist – he composed the Rondo in G minor for cello and piano (B171) and arranged for the same instruments the eighth Slavonic Dance from the orchestral set op.46 (B172) and the piano piece Klid ('Silent Woods', B173). At Mrs Thurber's request he wrote the Te Deum (B176) for the celebration of the 400th anniversary of Columbus's discovery of America.

On 15 September 1892 Dvořák left Prague with his wife, his daughter Otilie and his son Antonín; they arrived

3. Hanuš Wihan, Dvořák and Ferdinand Lachner, who toured together between January and May 1892 playing the 'Dumky' Trio in New York on 26 September after an Atlantic crossing of nine days on the SS Saale. Dvořák was officially welcomed to the National Conservatory on 1 October and made his first American appearance as a conductor at Carnegie Hall in a concert which gave the Te Deum its première on 21 October. It was on this occasion that the music patron Thomas Wentworth Higginson said in his address that Dvořák 'may help add the new world of music to the continent which Columbus found', reiterating the expectations that American musical society had of the Czech composer's presence in New York. Dvořák took those expectations seriously. On 27 November 1892 he wrote to his friend Hlávka:

> The Americans expect great things of me. I am to show them the way into the Promised Land, the realm of a new, independent art, in short a national style of music! . . . This will certainly be a great and lofty task, and I hope that with God's help I shall succeed in it. I have plenty of encouragement to do so.

In search of possible basic material for a characteristic style, Dvořák asked Henry Thacker Burleigh, a black student at the National Conservatory, to sing him spirituals and plantation songs from the South and he asked the music critic Henry Krehbiel for transcriptions of Amerindian melodies; he probably also studied Theodore Baker's book Über die Musik der nordamerikanischen Wilden (1882). In many newspaper articles and interviews he expressed his belief that a national American style could be based on such elements from traditional music, among which he included pentatonism in the melodic line, a flattened leading note, plagal cadences, drone accompaniment, rhythmic ostinato and strongly syncopated rhythms (with the Scotch snap constituting a special case). These features occur in the works composed in the USA more often than in any other works. The American compositions were the Ninth Symphony 'From the New World' (B178), the String Quartet no.12 in F (B179), the String Quintet in E♭ (B180), the Sonatina in G for violin and piano (B183), the Suite in A for piano (B184) and the Biblické písně ('Biblical Songs', B185).

Dvořák spent the summer vacation of 1893 in Spillville, a village in Iowa with a mainly Czech population, with his family (the children who had stayed at home in Prague went to the USA especially for this holiday). He went from Spillville to visit the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago, where he gave a concert on 'Czech Day', conducting his Eighth Symphony, three of the Slavonic Dances from the second series (B147) and the overture Domov můj ('My Homeland'). In September he went on an excursion to St Paul and saw the Minnehaha Falls, which put him in mind of the heroine of Longfellow's Amerindian epic Hiawatha; Mrs Thurber had given Dvořák an opera libretto based on the poem and he was working on it (sketches are extant in his American notebooks). At the end of September the family returned to New York, viewing the Niagara Falls on the way.

Once back in New York, Dvořák resumed his work at the National Conservatory, and to all outward appearances the first months of this second academic year were satisfactory. Simrock had expressed interest in Dvořák's new compositions, and Anton Seidl, conductor of the New York PO, conducted the première of the Ninth

4. Dvořák conducting a concert during his stay in New York

5. Family group at Vsokà, c1901, including Dvořák (centre), his wife Anna (centre right), and his children Aloisie and Antonín (front left and centre), Anna and Magda (back left and right)

Symphony at Carnegie Hall on 16 December 1893. It was one of Dvořák's greatest successes. Mrs Thurber had asked if the contract could be extended for another two years, and Dvořák agreed. However, the economic crisis of April 1893 was disastrous for Mrs Thurber's husband, whose money had provided essential financial support for the National Conservatory, and who was now facing bankruptcy. Mrs Thurber was no longer in a position to fulfil her obligations to Dvořák; even the payment for the last months of the first academic year, 1892–3, was considerably delayed. At the beginning of the second academic year she was able to pay him only part of the salary due. Nonetheless, after spending the summer holidays in Bohemia he returned to the USA in October 1894. The atmosphere was however quite different from that of the two previous academic years; he missed his family, he was having difficulty with his creative work – mainly the Cello Concerto (B191) – and he was very homesick:

> If I could work with as few anxieties as I do in Vysoká, I would have been finished long ago. However, I cannot do it here – I have to teach on Monday – I have Tuesday free – but I am more or less busy on the other days of the week – in short, I cannot give so much time to my work – and if I could I would not feel like it – and so on. In short, it would be best to be back in Vysoká – I am refreshed there, I rest, I am happy. Oh, if only I were home again!

On 16 April 1895 Dvořák and his wife returned to Bohemia, and in August 1895, after taking legal advice, he told Mrs Thurber, who still owed him money, that he would not be returning to the USA in accordance with his contract.

7. FINAL YEARS, 1895–1904. For the first few months after his return from the USA Dvořák's time was devoted chiefly to resting and enjoying the company of his family and the pleasant surroundings of Vysoká. However, there were soon official engagements to be met: Dvořák was present when the revision of Dimitrij he had undertaken in the USA was performed successfully in Prague; he went to the funeral of his sister-in-law Josefína Kounicová (née Čermáková), whom he commemorated in the second and third movements of the Cello Concerto with a quotation from the song Lasst mich allein (op.82 no.1, B157). He went to Karlsbad to meet Simrock and Hanslick again after a gap of some years, and resumed teaching at Prague Conservatory on 1 November 1895. He went to London in March 1896 to conduct the première of the Cello Concerto and to Vienna several times. There he met Richter and Bruckner, visited Brahms, and attended Brahms's funeral in April 1897.

While Dvořák's creative work in 1895 followed a familiar path with the completion of a string quartet begun in the USA (op.105, B193) and the composition of the Quartet in G op.106 (B192), in 1896–7 he presented himself in a new and surprising guise as a composer of programme music. Taking his subjects from ballads by the Czech poet K.J. Erben, he wrote the symphonic poems Vodník ('The Water Goblin', B195), Polednice ('The Noon Witch', B196), Zlatý kolovrat ('The Golden Spinning-Wheel', B197) and Holoubek ('The Wild Dove', B198). The symphonic poem Píseň bohatýrská ('A Hero's Song', B199) was not based on a text, and its programme was only roughly outlined later in a letter. However, it is not as surprising as was generally supposed that Dvořák should turn to the symphonic poem at that time: the literary element in his musical language, which began to be heard in the Poetic Tone pictures (1889) and marked the Dumky Trio and the overtures opp.91–3, was a strong factor in the American works as well. In the sketches for the Ninth Symphony he gave the slow movement the title 'Legenda'; the String Quartet no.12 in F ('The American') had autobiographical features, in its pastoral tone, the quotation of birdsong in the third movement and the echoes of church music in the fourth; and the American sketchbooks contain ideas for a symphony to be entitled Neptune. Dvořák planned to give its third and fourth movements the titles 'Chorale' and 'Storm, Calm, and Fortunate Return to Land'.

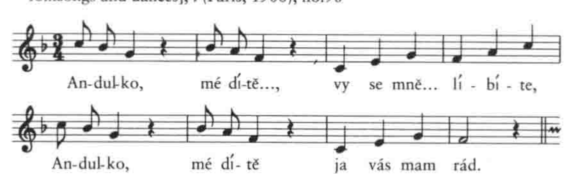
In October 1897 Dvořák was appointed a member of the jury for the Viennese Artists' Stipendium, and a year later was awarded a medal 'litteris et artibus'. Soon afterwards he was elected a member of the committee of experts on copyright in music, and in March 1901 he was made a member of the Herrenhaus of the Austrian government (he attended only one session). Several of his operas were produced at the National Theatre to celebrate his 60th birthday, and St Ludmilla was performed in a stage version. The Artistic Society organized several concerts for the occasion and gave a banquet in Dvořák's honour. In November 1901 he was appointed director of the Prague Conservatory. All the compositions from Dvořák's last years were operas. Shortly before his death, he tried to explain why: 'Over the last few years I have written nothing but operas. Not out of vanity or the desire for fame, but because I consider opera the most advantageous of genres for the nation too. Large sections of society hear such music, and hear it very often.' The first of these late operas was Čert a Káča ('The Devil and Kate', B201), to a libretto based on a Czech fairy tale. It was followed in 1901 by Rusalka (B203), a fairy tale opera in three acts taking Fouqué's Undine as its subject, with elements from Hans Christian Andersen's The Little Mermaid and Gerhart Hauptmann's fairytale play Die versunkene Glocke. The première of Rusalka was given on 31 March 1901 in Prague, and it was Dvořák's greatest operatic success. In Vienna, Mahler also expressed interest in it; the fact that the projected Viennese production never took place has long been attributed solely to Mahler. He is known to have had doubts about the opera, but to a great extent the failure was due to the composer himself, who was asking a very high fee (Mahler successfully supported Dvořák in his request to the management), and the time-consuming tactics he employed in the negotiations, which lasted several months. Another contributing factor was an increase in political pressure on opera productions in Vienna, resulting in the staging of fewer works by Czech composers, whose participation in the official musical life of the city had to be reduced.

Dvořák's last opera, Armida (B206), was based on a world-famous literary work, Torquato Tasso's epic poem Gerusalemme liberata. In choosing this subject Dvořák may have been influenced by both his liking for the story and the idea that after the success of Rusalka as a Czech national opera, he should write a stage work of an international character and at last succeed as an operatic composer outside Bohemia. However, when the première was given in Prague on 25 March 1904, it was considerably less successful than Rusalka had been three years earlier. Dvořák had to leave the first performance of Armida early, because of a sudden pain in the region of his hip. After five weeks of illness, he died on 1 May 1904. Four days later he was buried in the Vyšehrad cemetery beside many other famous Czechs.

8. ARTISTIC CHARACTER. Dvořák's music, often described as merely 'spontaneous' or 'national' in character, is in fact marked by its variety, complexity and versatility. His musical career contains sudden breaks and contrasts. In his early period as a composer (1860–65), he himself described the situation as 'not that I was unable to produce music, but I had not technique enough to express all that was in me. I had ideas but I could not utter them perfectly'. At this stage, in teaching himself, he tried to bring his musical language close to the technical standards of Mozart, Beethoven and Mendelssohn so that he could make use of their formal structures for his own purposes. A particularly important feature of his formal design is a well-developed technique of thematic separation and variation, as well as an awareness of the problems of the cyclical entity: a relationship between the main themes of the four movements of the First String Quartet and a five-note rhythmic motif heard clearly in all four movements of the First Symphony provide coherence.



Dvořák's style in his 'New German' phase (from the late 1860s to 1872) seems to show him turning away from this approach: in instrumental compositions sonata form loses its normal character, notably in the String Quartets nos.2–4 and in the Tragická ouvertura. Short thematic units that are constantly changed, shaped and developed determine the melodic structure, which increasingly moves away from phrases of equal length and traditional accented metre. A constant movement to distant tonal regions, tonal ambiguity and the undermining of familiar tonal functions (for example, the E minor quartet, no.4, ends in B major) mark the harmony in this advanced style, which moves between musical extremes going beyond the 'New German' examples, and containing a high degree of subjective expressivity.

6. Design by Jan Kotěra for Act 2 (the grounds of the Prince's castle) of Dvořák's 'Rusalka', National Theatre, Prague, 31 March 1901

Ex.1

(a) Czech folksong from Č. Holas: České národní písně a tance [Czech folksongs and dances], i (Paris, 1908), no.90

(b) Dvořák, String Quartet no.5 in F minor, 1st movt

In 1873 Dvořák began to turn away from this style too and from the influence of Liszt and Wagner, although he was not at that time influenced by Brahms, as is still sometimes claimed (he began taking Brahms as a model no earlier than 1877). Once again melodic invention is expressed in equal phrase lengths and repetition, and themes are highlighted and developed in a traditional manner. Modulations – often reminiscent of Schubert – are more moderate, more conventional and more easily grasped. Boldness of form is susperseded by organization that has links with the style of 1865, but sonata form is now more balanced, logical and more recognizable.

At the same time as Dvořák turned to a new classicism, elements of Slavonic folklore begin to permeate his musical language, a style he had learnt from Smetana and from friends (taking the dumka, for example, from Janáček), and through his study of folk collections such as those of František Sušil and K.J. Erben. The absence of an upbeat in the melody – like the Czech language, which always places the emphasis on the first syllable (ex.1) – some pentatonic phrasing, the sharpened fourth degree in the minor, strongly syncopated rhythm with elements from dances such as the polka, mazurka, spacirka, sousedská and furiant (in the third movement of the Sixth Symphony) and contrasts derived from the dumka (as in the second movement of the String Sextet) are characteristics of this musical language, with which Dvořák created something original from traditional elements (although there are some examples of direct quotation). For example, the main theme of the Slavonic Dance op.46 no.7 (B83) refers to the melodies of two dance songs: Hop škrk Helena ('Hop, Helena!') and Tetka kam dete? ('Where are you going, Auntie?', ex.2), and the main theme of the Maličkosti ('Bagatelles', B79) uses the opening of the folksong Hrály dudy ('The bagpipes were playing', ex.3). This style reaches a peak in Dvořák's so-called first Slavonic period, from about the mid-1870s to 1881 (the Moravian Duets to the Sixth Symphony).

In the following years, up to 1886, it is superseded by a phase in which the music is considerably more subtle and full of detail; although there is only a slight suggestion of the Slav colouring that dominated preceding works, moments of 'Czechness' arise through quotations such as the Hussite hymn in the Husitská overture and the 15th-century hymn tune in the Seventh Symphony. The prime feature of this phase, however, is its dramatic quality, producing a hitherto unusual formal dynamism in works ranging from the String Quartet no.11 to the Piano Trio in F minor, the Husitská overture and the Seventh Symphony. There are strong contrasts of dynamics and expression, often within a very small area, and the melody frequently contains leaps of large intervals, while rhythm has a strong and forceful effect on the development.

With the Slavonic Dances op.72 (B147), however, Dvořák returned to his earlier use of traditional folk colour in a second Slavonic period (1886–92), which from op.85 (1889, B161) onwards contains a fundamentally new element of poetic music, the picturesque, a musical language of association. The previous rigour of the thematic treatment gives way to a more rhapsodic structure; elements of the funeral march, fanfares, pastoral themes, birdcalls in 'Nature' passages, or themes of special significance such as the so-called death motif (ex.4) are all prominent in the works of this period. They include the Dumky Trio, the Eighth Symphony and the concert overtures In Nature's Realm, Carnival and Othello (the

Ex.2

(a) Hop škrk Helena

(b) Tetka kam dete?

(c) Slavonic Dance op.46 no.7

Ex.3

(a) Hrály dudy u Popudy (Erben)

(b) Bagatelles op.47, no.1

overtures were to form a cycle entitled Nature, Life and Love).

Against the background of this increasingly poetic style, which is still perceptible in the works composed in the USA and which led (in the finale of the String Quartet no.13, written in 1895 after Dvořák had returned to Bohemia) to music entirely of expressive language, it seems logical and almost inevitable that Dvořák should have begun writing programme music in 1896. In taking that step he made use of the general picturesque nature of his previous poetic composition to represent concrete subjects and characters.

Dvořák's music is notable for a wide variety of genres; few of his contemporaries wrote in so many. Almost all the genres of his time are represented: opera, oratorio, cantata and mass; symphony, symphonic poem, concert overture, serenade, suite, dance and march; concert piece and solo concerto; chamber music ranging from the solo sonata to the sextet; piano music; and secular choral works and songs. This variety was largely the result of commissions, including works for specific occasions, and it contributed a good deal to his image as a composer who spontaneously wrote prolifically and fast and who, as Simrock described him, could 'pull melodies out of his sleeve'. But although Dvořák always retained something of the attitude of the Bohemian Kantor ready to write occasional music, as inculcated into him by Liehmann, what mattered to him was not just 'artistic integrity' and the general fulfilment of the 'main conditions to be required of a work of art', but first and foremost enthusiasm for the task he had set himself or to which some external stimulus had moved him. This enthusiasm or, as Dvořák once called it, 'stimulation of the imagination' could be kindled by various factors: by the poetry of a text (as in the cantata The American Flag); by an intriguing problem of composition (for example, the simple music in folk idiom that had to be written for the String Quartet no.10, or the 'very small means' of the Drobností 'Miniatures', for two violins and viola); by peculiarities in the forces available (as in the Bagatelles for two violins, cello and harmonium, or in the Mass in D, accompanied solely by organ in its original version); or by certain musical ideas (as in the combination of rhapsodic freedom and sonata form in the Slavonic Rhapsody op.45 no.1, or the ironic alienation effect of the national colouring required in Mazurek for violin and piano/orchestra, B89 and 90). Broadly speaking, Dvořák was a craftsman in his musical thinking; his aim was to go 'a step further' with every work, and to write works that would 'move the world'. Like his friend Brahms, Dvořák's artistic attitude was pledged to the aesthetic premise that gives the treatment of an idea precedence over the idea itself:

> To have a fine idea is nothing special. The idea comes of itself, and if it is fine and great, then that is not because of the person who has it. But to develop the idea well and make something great of it, that is the hardest part – that is art!

A glance at the sketches and autograph manuscripts shows that there were four stages to Dvořák's method of composition. First there are sketches above which he wrote 'motivy', motifs merely recording the melody of a 'fine idea', as yet unconnected with any definite project (fig.7). Second are sketches of rough musical outlines of the whole or part of planned work. Third is a continuity sketch (fig.8) in which the melodic and thematic plan for the work is written out section by section with many indications of harmony, dynamics and instrumentation, and which shows the rejection of a way previously taken, the search for new solutions and the disentangling of problems (or 'knots', as Dvořák called them). Finally there is a fair copy of the score, with the definitive refinement of details that were outlined in the continuity sketch. This fourth version shows the counterparts, subsidiary parts and accompanying figures; musical second thoughts about the sketch, improvements on it and clarifications; and the conversion of the sketched material to orchestral sound, in which Dvořák aimed to have 'no instrument demoted to a part that is merely filling in', but to ensure that every instrument 'speaks an eloquent language of its own' (H. Krigar, D1880). The music itself, however, betrays nothing of this process of development: Dvořák, like Schubert, had the ability to give the density, complexity and richness of his music – often achieved by much hard work – the appearance of being uncomplicated and spontaneous, and expressing the simple pleasure of making music.

9. Operas. As Dvořák emphasized in the first interview he gave in London in 1885, from the beginning of his creative career he regarded opera as central to his work. Born at a period when the idea of a Czech national opera was being formulated, he was familiar with the discussions set off by the competition initiated in 1861 by Count Jan Harrach for the best Czech historical and comic operas. Debate centred chiefly on the fundamental nature of Czech nationalism and how it could be incorporated into music drama. As a viola player at the Provisional Theatre (where he acquired a comprehensive knowledge of the international opera of the time) Dvořák saw the works of his colleagues Bendl, Šebor, Blodek, Rozkošný and Skuherský, and the premières of Smetanas's The Brandenburgers in Bohemia, The Bartered Bride and Dalibor. He adopted the three subjects found in these Czech operas for his own works: they were rural Czech village life with its typical characters in Turdé palice ('The Stubborn Lovers'), The Jacobin and The Cunning Peasant; Czech stories and fairytales in King and Charcoal Burner, The Devil and Kate and Rusalka; and subjects from Slavonic history in Vanda (on a Polish subject) and Dimitrij (on an episode in Russian history). An exception was Alfred, Dvořák's first opera, to German libretto, although its subject (the liberation of the Anglo-Saxons from Danish rule) is in the tradition of Šebor's Templáři na Moravě ('The Templars in Moravia') and Smetana's The Brandenburgers in Bohemia. Another exception was Armida, Dvořák's last opera, with an international subject that had often been set before.

Dvořák drew on existing traditions, often aiming to adapt them in a unique and individual way. His first two operas, Alfred (1870) and the first version of King and Charcoal Burner (1871), resemble Wagner's Tannhäuser, Lohengrin and Die Meistersinger in harmony, declamation and the symphonic style of orchestration; in general concept, employing large formal scenes in which the influence of the number opera still lingers; and in a network of motifs signifying personal characteristics and reminiscences. His abandonment of Wagnerian style as he turned to comic opera in the second version of King and Charcoal Burner (1874, revised 1880–81 and 1887), The Stubborn Lovers (1874) and the The Cunning Peasant (1877) led to changes in his concept of opera; these works were in the tradition of composers such as Lortzing and above all Smetana's The Bartered Bride. However, these changes did not entail simplification of his musical methods. Dvořák was still employing extended structures and through-composition to achieve seamless transition from one scene to another, with orchestral references involving reminiscent themes and motifs and the development of theatrical contrasts and effects, as in the cumulative finale of The Cunning Peasant, into which all eight soloists are gradually drawn one by one.

7. 'Motivy New York': autograph sketches from Dvořák's 'American Sketchbook 1'

Dvořák turned to historical subjects in 1875 with the five-act Vanda, which clearly shows the influence of grand opera in its tableaux and ensembles and in the use of the chorus. His greatest achievement in this genre is Dimitrij (1881–2, revised 1894). This opera and the lyric fairytale Rusalka are Dvořák's most important stage works. In Dimitrij he succeeded in combining the tradition of Meyerbeer with elements of Wagnerian music drama. Besides employing local colour (mazurka rhythms for the Poles, suggestions of modal Russian folk music for the Russians), large ensemble scenes with eight-part double choruses and solo scenes included in tableaux rich in contrasts, the orchestral language uses a leitmotif effect to comment on the action, thereby taking part in the drama itself. Another notable feature of Dimitrij is the principle of the contemplative ensemble: dramatic incident shifts to the minds of the characters and groups involved and balances the turbulent events on stage, so that the music describes feelings and emotional situations, illustrating the motivation of the characters beyond the words they sing (for example, in a 'resonant silence' in the finale of the last act Marfa, who is expected to swear that Dimitrij is her son and thus the legitimate tsar, says nothing).

The Jacobin (1887–8, revised 1897) is considerably less tightly constructed and more varied in its internal structure, which again is reminiscent of the number opera. Its libretto, like that of Dimitrij, was by Marie Červinková-Riegrová, and the character of the village Kantor Benda suggests nostalgic memories of Dvořák's former teacher Liehmann. Elements of comedy and merriment on the one hand and tragedy and melancholy on the other are brought out by motifs that are readily associated with, for example, a lullaby, a mocking song, or a eulogy, and are interlinked in variations, so that different points of time in the action are symbolized in musical terms, giving an effect of epic drama.

Dvořák's last three operas are like a survey or concentrated résumé of his earlier career as an operatic composer. In The Devil and Kate (1898–9) he reverted to Wagnerian principles. Its large formal structure is permeated by thematic-motivic reminiscences and is dominated by a symphonic orchestral language that draws musical contrasts between earth and hell and, in the preludes to the second and the third acts, comments on the action. The libretto provided no occasion for lyrical duets and there are none of the large ensembles as in the earlier operas. Dances (at an inn and in hell) give structure to the dramatic action; their themes derive from musical accounts of a place (a theme for hell) or motifs that suit the characters (Kate's bagpipe melody).

8. Autograph sketch of the beginning of Dvořák's Eighth Symphony, composed 26 August–8 November 1889

A similar kind of structure is perceptible in Rusalka (1900), but here it is much more dense and concentrated. There is a strong contrast between the world of the Nature spirits, whose music includes augmented triads, unusual progressions and highly coloured instrumentation, and the world of men, whose harmonies and orchestration are traditional. A dense network of leitmotifs (referring to Nature, a lament, a curse, fate) is typical of the symphonic orchestral language, and by combining these motifs Dvořák related all elements of the action to each other in terms of music drama. Rusalka's personal motif, with its many variants of expression, is put to the service of contemplative meditation, the musical depiction of a state of mind that has less to do with the dramatic action than with musical analysis of a psychological situation.

In his last opera, Armida (1902–3), Dvořák changed to a different genre; his point of departure was late grand opera in the style of Massenet. The elaborate and often fantastic course of the action is marked by a series of tableaux; the motifs are less densely interwoven, so that in many passages the orchestra indicates a general atmosphere rather than individual characterization; and older formal traditions are sometimes introduced, including a return to the contrast between recitative and aria. All this is done not in a reactionary manner but as a successful extension of the possibilities for post-Wagnerian operatic composition around 1900.

10. CHORAL WORKS. Large-scale choral works were of importance at various times in Dvořák's career. He made his name as a Czech composer in 1873 with the first performance of a work for chorus and orchestra, Hymn: The Heirs of the White Mountain; the successful performance of his Stabat mater in England in 1883 led to further opportunities there; and he successfully introduced himself to the American musical public with the Te Deum, composed in 1892. Dvořák turned to choral composition comparatively early, probably because of the significance such works had for the sense of nationality developing in Czech musical life at the beginning of the 1860s. The Prague Hlahol male-voice choral society was founded in 1861 and many Czech composers including Smetana and Bendl wrote for it, composing pieces in which a nationalist element was often prominent.

9. Růžena Maturová as Rusalka in the first performance of Dvořák's opera, National Theatre, Prague, 1901

Dvořák followed this trend with Hymn: The Heirs of the White Mountain (1872), which has a text based on the closing verses of the epic poem written in 1869 by Vítězslav Hálek. Hálek's hymn sings first of the sad loss of the motherland after the Battle of the White Mountain in 1620, which had such momentous consequences for Bohemia ('As springs anoint the ground beneath the alder / So, Mother, thou must bend ever a-weeping'); he then calls on her children to keep faith ('Let's make our hearts our mother's living shelter') and hold fast to their love for the troubled land ('We'd love her still, / As nation never loved its country before'). The mood of the text becomes more positive as it continues, and Dvořák traced this movement in his setting.

Apart from two masses (B2 and B806, both lost), written while he was studying at the Prague Organ School, church music did not feature in Dvořák's work for many years. It was not until February 1876 that he turned to sacred music. By the beginning of May he had sketched out the Stabat mater, which, however, like all his large religious works (with the exception of the organ version of the Mass in D), was meant for concert performance rather than as part of a church service, in line with the 19th-century trend away from liturgical use. It is not known exactly why Dvořák turned to a sacred subject at that time, but there may have been a connection with the death of his daughter Josefa in August 1875 (two days after her birth), particularly as he did no more work on it until October 1877, soon after two other children had died; he then completed its orchestration within a few weeks. However, one should not forget that Dvořák began the Stabat mater when he was occupied daily with sacred music as organist of St Vojtěch, and this fact may have inspired him. He had learnt ecclesiastical Latin at the Prague Organ School and was thus able to divide the text into ten self-contained sections. Similarities of setting and theme between the first and last sections give the work a cyclic form. It is profoundly meditative, with soft dynamics, slow tempos, melodies interspersed with sighing motifs, suspensions and chromaticism; its transparent orchestration suggests chamber music and avoids theatrical effects. The music does not so much interpret the words as provide realization of the subjects dominating the text: mourning, lamentation and hope.

Dvořák was primarily concerned with the musical depiction of a basic emotion also in Psalm cxlix, 'O sing unto the Lord a new song', set first for male-voice chorus and orchestra (1879, B91) and later revised for mixed-voices and orchestra (1887, B154). When the Hlahol society asked him for a work for its annual concert, he chose this psalm because the text, with several musical references and its call to jubilant thanksgiving, made it especially suitable for choral setting.

The textual basis of the The Spectre's Bride (1884), for the soloists, chorus and orchestra (written for the Birmingham Festival, but first performed in Plzeň), was the ballad Svatebni košile, from Erben's collection Kytice ('The Bouquet'). Its subject is closely connected with G.A. Bürger's Lenore. Unlike Bürger's poem, however, Erben's ballad ends not with death but with the deliverance of the girl through her steadfast faith in God, an element that appealed to both Dvořák's own piety and the musical taste of the English public, which liked religious subjects. Dvořák divided the ballad into 18 sections. He gave the narrative parts to a bass soloist and to the chorus, which comments on or dramatizes the remarks of the soloist. The parts spoken by the girl in the ballad are sung by the soprano, and the words of her bridegroom by the tenor. Monologues occur as arioso scenes and dialogues as duets in which the parts are not only sung in succession but also go beyond Erben's text in providing simultaneous and often contrasting dialogue. An overall cyclical form is created by a catchy theme of a falling 5th appearing first in the prelude and running through the various sections, and a thematic reference to the beginning of the work in the final section. The girl's two solo arias also frame the drama: her prayer (no.2) begins the uncanny nocturnal events and her renewed appeal to God (no.17) puts an end to them and brings the action back to the real world. The musical forces employed, the prominence of the chorus, the dominant ballad tone and the prevalence of an epic dramatic principle suggest that this work (sometimes described as a cantata or a dramatic cantata and sometimes as an oratorio) may be classified as a 19th-century 'choral ballad' comprising elements of both opera and oratorio in the tradition of Schumann, Gade and Bruch.

Dvořák adopted the tradition of legend-based oratorio in St Ludmilla (1885–6, text by Jaroslav Vrchlický), written for the Leeds Festival; he arranged it as a 'sacred opera in three parts' in 1901. The subject is the conversion of Ludmilla, in legend the wife of Duke Bořivoj, and the coming of Christianity to Bohemia. Dvořák's treatment of the chorus is variously reminiscent of Handel's techniques; the principle of separate numbers predominates, but the numbers are linked by the use of thematic reminiscences. In the third part, the use of the Czech chorale Hospodine, pomiluj ni ('Lord, have mercy on us') is particularly expressive as a means of depicting the situation.

Dvořák wrote the Mass in D op.86 (1887, for soloists, chorus and organ) for the consecration of the private chapel of the Prague artistic patron Josef Hlávka. The commission, as Dvořák said, established the 'modest means' at his disposal, ruling out any large-scale musical exposition of the text. However, it is not merely an occasional work. Responsorial techniques, a pastoral character, a wealth of harmonic colour and unique tonal charm are characteristic of this mass 'in praise of the Most High'. Dvořák arranged it for orchestra at Novello's request in 1892. The Requiem (1890), written for the Birmingham Festival, is considerably denser and more concentrated in structure. A four-note chromatic motif reminiscent of the fugue subject of the second Kyrie in Bach's B minor Mass, recurring in almost all sections of the Requiem (planned as a large work in two parts), is the structural point of departure and of reference for the melodic invention. Dvořák had used this motif at the close of the sixth song from op.83 (1888, B160), setting the words 'Koly ach ulna života une odnese?' ('Oh when will the wave of life carry me away?'), and in the Requiem it thus had personally significant as well as structural status, as a musical statement of questions about growth, existence and decay.

Although the text of the Te Deum falls into three parts, Dvořák's setting (1892), for soprano and bass soloists, chorus and orchestra, is in four independent musical sections, linked by the recurrence of the opening at the end of the fourth section. In character, tempo and time signature (Allegro moderato maestoso, 4/4; Lento maestoso, 4/4; Vivace, 3/4; Lento–poco più mosso, 4/4 – Allegro moderato, 4/4) the sections suggest the traditional four-movement construction of a symphony, and the simultaneity of vocal and instrumental music as an idea connected with that structure. Besides the tone of rejoicing required by the subject, there are many moments of lyrical meditation, for example in the prayer-like Sanctus and in the 'Dignare Domine' whose main theme achieves telling musical gestures of sung prayer in a sequence of expressive intervals and suspensions.

The cantata The American Flag (1892–3, B177), for alto, tenor and bass soloists, chorus and orchestra (composed at the request of Jeannette Thurber), is based on a poem by Joseph Rodman Drake. Written to commemorate the soldiers of the American war of 1812, Drake's verses were a kind of patriotic hymn, set by Dvořák in a more general tone than was usual for him. Wagnerian harmonies and thematic treatment reminiscent of Liszt are characteristic of the music, which comprises the opening number ('The Colours of the Flag'), a scherzo ('First and Second Hymn to the Eagle'), an extended march ('First and Second Address to the Flag') and a finale which is dramatic at first, developing into a song of triumph ('Third Address to the Flag' and 'Apotheosis'), thus suggesting symphonic movements in the formal structure, as in the Te Deum (completed a few days before the cantata was begun).

11. Orchestral works.

(i) Symphonies. The whole range of 19th-century orchestral composition is reflected in Dvořák's orchestral works, which include symphonies, symphonic poems, symphonic variations, concert overtures, a 'Scherzo capriccioso', rhapsodies, serenades and a suite, concertos and concertante pieces, dances and a march. Except during later years Dvořák wrote orchestral works at every stage of his creative career. However, the symphony is at the heart of his orchestral writing. Educated in a tradition which regarded the string quartet as a composer's journeyman piece and the symphony as his masterpiece, Dvořák did not turn to symphonies until he had produced his first chamber music. Symphony no.1 in C minor was written in 1865. Its title 'Zlonické zvony' ('The Bells of Zlonice'), was not intended as a programmatic description but was simply for identification when the work was entered for a competition. The symphony refers back to those of Beethoven (the tonal structure of its four movements corresponds to Beethoven's Fifth): Dvořák (unlike Brahms) did not feel inhibited by Beethoven's example. As in the Second Symphony (also of 1865 but extant only in the revised version of 1887), the First Symphony displays not only thematic shaping and development of the material but also structural elements which are block-like in form, a series of individual sections set side by side, suggesting that Dvořák was also following Schubert's principles in mastering the large-scale form of the monumental symphony. The Third Symphony, in E♭ (1873), occupies something of a special position and was written at the end of Dvořák's phase of enthusiasm for the New German style. It has only three movements (the only such symphony that Dvořák wrote), lacking a scherzo. The first movement is monothematic in tendency, while the final movement makes very free use of sonata form. The fluctuating C♯ minor/D♭ major of the slow movement imparts a relaxed, colourful tonality to the work, and the movement is integrated into the general structure by the inclusion of reminiscences of a motif from the first movement.

Although the beginning of the slow movement of the Fourth Symphony (1874) sounds somewhat Wagnerian, the work shows a departure from the New German style and opens up the way to Dvořák's own symphonic style. This makes its first typical appearance in the Fifth Symphony (B54, published as no.3), composed in 1875 and revised in 1887. The style here is notable for thematic plasticity and stringent form – proportional phrase-length between the main and subsidiary subjects, formal retracing of the thematic complex in the development section and résumé-like contrapuntal coupling of the main and subsidiary themes at the beginning of the coda – and for the range of expression. The first movement is bucolic and pastoral, the second meditative (anticipating later dumka movements in countering elegiac and serenade-like moods), the third is in a lively dance rhythm and the finale is dramatic and expressive.

The Sixth Symphony, in D (1880), was the first of Dvořák's symphonies to be published and the first to make him internationally known as a symphonic composer. Specially composed for Vienna and the Vienna PO it contains a series of allusions to the symphonies of Beethoven, which were highly regarded by the Viennese: for example in the main theme of the first movement; the opening of the slow movement, which resembles the Adagio of Beethoven's Ninth; and a melody of descending 5ths and 4ths in the third movement, four bars before the return of the scherzo, reminiscent again of the Ninth. In particular there are allusions to Brahms, with clear parallels to his Symphony no.2: in the main key; in the time signature, tempo and character of the outer movements; and in the thematic shaping, which resembles Brahms's technique of development and separation. These allusions, through which Dvořák presented himself almost deliberately as a composer in the Viennese symphonic tradition, are woven into an individual style displaying a wealth of melody, skilful combination of themes, formal cogency, strength of expression and national colouring. From the Sixth Symphony onwards, this style, which Dvořák had begun to develop in the Fourth Symphony, made him a significant contributor to the 'second age' of the symphony.

10. Autograph score of part of the first movement of Dvořák's Symphony no.9 ('From the New World'), composed 10 January–24 May 1893

In the Seventh Symphony (1884–5, B141; published as no.2) the achievements of the Sixth are built on through formal cogency and economy (the ideas of the exposition are used in the first-movement coda but are omitted from the recapitulation), and through variety and a strict development of musical ideas. However, the Seventh is essentially different from the Sixth: the thematic treatment is more rigorous, development is greater, there are strong contrasts of detail and in the overall effect, and folk colouring is used sparingly (for example in the ff repetition of the subsidiary subject in the finale and in a change of tempo to one similar to that of a furiant in the otherwise restrained scherzo), all in a musical language notable for a degree of expressivity and depth of emotional density not previously found in Dvořák's symphonic writing.

The influence of folk music is heard again clearly in the Eighth Symphony (1889, B163; published as no.4), with which Dvořák allegedly (Šourek) hoped 'to write something different from his other symphonies and shape the musical content of his ideas in a new manner'. The variety and diversity of those ideas is striking, and they are often expressed in a musical language peculiar to them (with imitations of natural sounds, pastoral subjects, signals, fanfares, the suggestion of a funeral march and the idiom of a chorale). Sonata form is loosely applied and gives way to a more rhapsodic unfolding of ideas, but musical coherence is maintained through related melodic motifs and above all by rhythmic structures. In both the enhancement of musical language and the relaxation of formal structure, the Eighth Symphony reflects for the first time in a large instrumental work the new poetic element in Dvořák's music after the spring of 1889.

Dvořák pointed out several times in letters and interviews that the influence of American music could clearly be heard in his Symphony no.9 in E minor ('From the New World', first published as no.5), written in New York in 1893 (fig.10). He emphasized that he had tried to compose it in the spirit of the folklore of the black and Amerindian peoples and it includes features of that music (pentatonism, a flattened leading note, plagal cadences, drone accompaniment, certain tonal circles, rhythmic ostinato and strongly syncopated rhythms). In view of the expectations that American musical society had of him it is significant that this work, the first Dvořák wrote on American soil, was a symphony, the genre representing the greatest and noblest kind of orchestral composition. This significance, which included the elevation of American folk material frequently regarded as trivial, was demonstrated through the skill of Dvořák's symphonic language as well as in many individual features, such as the reference to the scherzo of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the beginning of the third movement and the emphasis on symphonic treatment of thematic reminiscence: the second and third movements quote a prominent part of the main theme of the first movement, and the coda of the finale refers successively to the main theme of the first movement, sequences of sounds in the introduction of the second movement and to its main theme in contrapuntal combination with the theme of the scherzo.

(ii) Overtures and symphonic poems. Dvořák seems to have been reluctant to embark on programme music early in his career. Even when he turned to the New German style of composition, he remained chiefly devoted to musical genres of absolute music; he described his op.14 of 1874 (B44), written in a kind of free form, as both a rhapsody and a symphonic poem. His first real attempt was the Husitská overture, commissioned by the Prague National Theatre and composed in 1883. Its programme is based broadly on František Šubert's planned dramatic trilogy on the Hussite period, its three parts covering the rise of the Hussite movement, the Hussite wars and the return of peace. Externally, it retains the structure of a somewhat extended concert overture in sonata form, with the slow introduction symbolizing the pre-Hussite situation, the allegro exposition the rise of the conflict, the development the war itself, and the recapitulation, now in the major, the return of peace. As illustration of the subject Dvořák used two chorale melodies, Svatý Václave ('St Wenceslas') and the Hussite hymn Ktož jsú boží bojovníce ('Those who are God's warriors'), employed both in simple quotation and as combined or contrasted themes dramatizing the course of events.

The three overtures In Nature's Realm op.91 (1891, B168), Carnival op.92 (1891, B169) and Othello op.93 (1891–2, B174) are clearly programmatic in character. Composed as a trilogy, with the title Nature, Life and Love, they are musically connected by the main theme of op.91 and constitute a general reflection on existence. With characteristic understatement, Dvořák wrote to Simrock: 'But there is something of programme music about them after all.' Dvořák's depiction of Nature (op.91) is both general and individual: general in its choice of the traditional 'Nature' key of F major and reference to the depiction of Nature as found in Wagner (prelude to Das Rheingold and the forest murmurs of Siegfried) and Mahler (First Symphony), a quiet, restful sound broken only by pre-thematic natural noises; and individual in that the first theme in the main section is followed by a second subject also in F major (balanced by an analogous pair of themes in the subsidiary section) that has a close thematic connection with the Czech hymn Vesele zpívejme, Boha Otce chvalme ('Let us sing joyfully, praise God the Father'; ex.5). Thus Nature is depicted as an aspect of the nature of God, very much in line with Dvořák's own religious thinking, according to documentary evidence. There is a similar approach in Carnival – a subject dedicated to life with all its hustle and bustle – where the contrasting 'death' motif from the Requiem (though here in the major key) is heard in an intermediate section. The musical picture of love in Othello is tragic love, derived from the world of Shakespeare's play. At certain places in the score, Dvořák made references to situations in the play (for example, 'They embrace blissfully', 'Jealousy and a thirst for revenge mature in Othello', 'Othello murders her in frenzied rage').

Ex.5

(a) Vesely zpívejme (Kancional cili kniha duchovních, Prague, 1863)

(b) In Nature's Realm op.91

Dvořák's first four symphonic poems, composed in 1896 (The Water Goblin op.107, The Noon Witch op.108, The Golden Spinning-Wheel op.109 and The Wild Dove op.110) are based on four ballads (with the same titles) from Erben's collection Kytice, which contains verses on eerie and bloodthirsty subjects. Such material was not appropriate to the Lisztian concept of the symphonic poem as an idealized work of art, which Dvořák attempted only in his last symphonic poem, A Hero's Song op.111 (1897). He handled Erben's subjects by delineating the broad outline of the action and above all, he wrote, by 'casting light on the various protagonists, their characters and the poetic atmosphere', and thus transferring the basis of his programme into terms of musical pictures and descriptive situations (for example the idyllic opening of The Noon Witch and the funeral procession at the beginning of The Wild Dove). The form is based on motifs depicting the characters and situations, with psychological development in the transformation of those motifs. There are rondo elements in The Water Goblin; features of the symphony and sonata form are combined in The Noon Witch, conforming to the Lisztian 'double-function form'; broad, arching structures predominate in The Golden Spinning-Wheel; and the structure of The Wild Dove resembles sonata form on a large scale, with an epilogue. In the melodic invention of the motifs, particularly in The Water Goblin and The Golden Spinning-Wheel, Dvořák kept close to the declamatory tone of spoken language in Erben's verses (questions, harsh objections, expressions of rejoicing, etc.), employing a method of composition that in Janáček's works became the important structural element of 'speech-melody'.

(iii) Concertos. Although Dvořák was a trained instrumentalist who performed in public and he turned relatively early to the concerto, composing one for cello with piano accompaniment (B10) for his orchestral colleague Ludevít Peer as early as 1865, the genre remained on the periphery of his composition as a whole. 11 years passed before he wrote his second concerto, in 1876, probably at the suggestion of Karel Slavkovský, a pianist in Prague; this was the Piano Concerto in G minor. It is a symphonic work in the tradition of Beethoven that makes very high technical demands on the pianist, but the solo part merges with the work as a whole so that there is little opportunity for virtuoso display. Despite expressive strength in the first movement, lyrical tenderness in the second and elements of burlesque in the third, even contemporary pianists regarded it as 'ungrateful'.

The original version of the Violin Concerto in A minor, written for and dedicated to Joseph Joachim in 1879 at the suggestion of Simrock, was destroyed by Dvořák after he revised it in 1880, acting on advice from Joachim himself ('I have retained the themes, and composed some new ones too, but the whole concept of the work is different'). The solo part is mainly in a cantabile style but is virtuoso in its rich tonality; it is closely connected with the work as a whole, for example in the allocation of the thematic antecedent phrase to the orchestra and the consequent phrase to the soloist. There is no orchestral introduction and the first movement leads directly into the second; the finale draws on both dance and song, the outer sections having the character of a furiant, while the central section is in the nature of a dumka.

Dvořák's last concerto, the Cello Concerto in B minor (1894–5), was written in the USA, but contains none of the Americanisms found in the works composed just before it. It was intended for the Czech virtuoso cellist Hanuš Wihan, whom Dvořák consulted about the solo part several times when he revised it on his return to Prague (fig.11). The concerto follows the traditional three-movement form with an extensive orchestral exposition in the first movement; it unites virtuoso playing with symphonic detail (for example in reminiscences of themes from the first and second movement in the coda of the finale) and concertante-style richness of contrasts. In the second movement, the quotation of the melody from the song Lasst mich allein op.82 no.1 (B.157) is a reminiscence of Dvořák's sister-in-law, who was dangerously ill; after her death in May 1895 he also included this quotation in the finale, which is striking in its orchestration (employing solo violin) and recalls the non-related tonal areas in Wagner and Mahler. The quotation makes the concerto one of Dvořák's most personal works.

11. Autograph letter (14 February 1896) from Dvořák to the secretary of the Philharmonic Society, London, objecting to the engagement of Leo Stern to play the world première of his Cello Concerto

(iv) Other works. With the String Serenade in E (1875, B52) and the Wind Serenade in D minor (1878, B77) Dvořák took up an orchestral genre that was less demanding than the symphony, aiming only to provide pleasure and entertainment, but that required skill of the composer. Dvořák ingeniously combined all kinds of expressive characteristics into a whole: the String Serenade unites cantabile style (first movement, Moderato) with a melancholy waltz (second movement, Tempo di valse), humorous high spirits (third movement, Scherzo vivace), lyrical beauty (fourth movement, Larghetto) and exuberance (fifth movement, Allegro vivace). The Wind Serenade unites a military march (first movement, Moderato, quasi marcia), a pleasing dance (second movement, Minuetto), a pastoral idyll (third movement, Andante con moto) and cheerful wit (fourth movement, Allegro molto).

The Symphonic Variations (1877, B70), consist of 27 variations and a finale, based on the three-part melody of Huslař ('The Fiddler'), the third of the choral songs for male voices (B66). The melody is asymmetrical and harmonically ambiguous, with a sharpened fourth degree. In variations 19–26 the structure of the theme becomes unrecognizable and musically and expressively it is entirely new. Variation and the creation of thematically distant variants is also an important feature of the three Slavonic Rhapsodies op.45 (1878, B86). This approach allowed Dvořák the external variety demanded of the rhapsody by the aesthetics of his time; however, this variety is always under musical control and logically conveyed in the form: for example the first rhapsody follows sonata form in its main sections.

The Czech Suite (1879, B93) is like a kaleidoscope of folk music: there are suggestions of Czech bagpipe melodies in the first movement; the Lydian 4th, typical of many Czech folksongs, threads its way through the fourth movement (Romance); and the other movements relate to Czech dances (the second is a polka, the third a sousedská, the final movement a fiery furiant). The overture My Homeland (1881, B125*a*), also based on folk music, was originally the prelude to the incidental music for the play Josef Kajetán Tyl. Two songs permeate the melodic and thematic invention here: the melody of F.J. Škroup's song Kde domov můj? ('Where is my homeland'?), later incorporated into the Czech national anthem, and the folksong Na tom našem dvoře ('There on our farm'), which Dvořák used as a dance-like counterweight to the more solemn tone of Kde domov můj.

The Scherzo capriccioso (1883, B131) was written in the same period as the Piano Trio in F minor (B130) and the Husitská overture. As in those two works, the carefree folk style of Dvořák's Slavonic period yields to a dark, reflective tone, as if caricaturing the title of the work; the exposition includes what appear to be development sections, counterpoint (imitation, fugato) creates dense structure and the orchestral sound is often interrupted by striking use of the english horn and bass clarinet.

12. CHAMBER MUSIC. A viola player himself, Dvořák seems to have felt a natural affinity with chamber music and it is not surprising that his first official opus – as it were the initial work in his career as a composer – was a string quintet with two violas (B7). Chamber music remained central to his work and was significant at crucial points in his artistic development. The String Quartet no.1 in A (1862, B8), dedicated to his teacher at the Prague Organ School, Josef Krejčí, may be regarded as his journeyman work; like a primal cell, the main theme of the first movement gives rise to the themes of the three following movements, the scherzo metre is skilfully varied and the movements are closely linked. The string quartets in B♭, D and E minor of 1868–70 (nos.2–4) – later destroyed as works of the composer's 'mad period', but preserved in copies – provide a record of Dvořák's progress. His highly developed musical language is used in the third movement of the D major quartet to shape the melody of the banned Slav freedom song Hej Slovane ('Hey, Slavs!') in the manner of a variation (ex.6). The single-movement quartet in E minor includes a slow central section of 63 bars based on an F♯ pedal point. Dvořák later published this central section as an independent work, the Nocturne op.40, arranged first for orchestra (B47), then for violin and piano (B48*a*) and for piano four hands (B48*b*)

The Piano Quintet in A (B28), composed in 1872, is a transitional work, like the String Quartet no.5 in F minor and no.6 in A minor; in each case the search for individual ideas revived traditional formal demands. A marked alteration between experiment and tradition (no.6 was originally planned as a single movement consisting of five large sections) lends the works a distinct and often unique charm. In each case, also, there is cautious use of national colouring, sometimes brought to the fore and then receding.

The end of the transitional phase is marked by the String Quartet no.7 in A minor (1874), which has balanced formal proportions and logical stringency (the first movement's development leads from A minor to E♭ major and back symmetrically to A minor for recapitulation), with a tendency towards developing variation, guaranteeing unity in diversity, and clear references to folk music (the third movement is based on elements of the mazurka and the sousedská). A similar economy and thematic density characterizes the String Quintet op.77 for two violins, viola, cello and double bass, written

Ex.6

(a) Hej Slovane

(b) String quartet no.3 in D, 3rd movt

shortly afterwards (1875, B49), but here the extension of variation to all sections and movements gives it symphonic features.

The Piano Trios in B♭ (1875, B51) and G minor (1876, B56), and the Piano Quartet in D (1875, B53) show a return to traditional chamber music. In these works Dvořák refined his achievements, with contrasting developments and links beneath the surface of the music, and created melodic and tonal balance and opposition between the piano and the strings. The String Quartet no.8 in E, composed in 1876 and revised in 1888, shows exceptional individuality and skill in the mirror symmetry of the first movement, the unconventional but distinctive disposition of keys in both detail and overall effect, the dumka style of the Andante and in the asymmetrical periodic structure of the scherzo. This is the musical point of departure evident in many of Dvořák's later chamber works.

The String Quartet no.9 in D minor (1877), composed soon afterwards and dedicated to Brahms, suggests an enhancement of what has gone before, with fluctuating tonality, only indirectly circumventing the main key (which is avoided), rigorous allocation of themes to all parts and a lively polka in the second movement. The Bagatelles (1878, B79) are original in their instrumentation (harmonium, two violins and cello), in their five-part structure – suite-like and cyclical as if subliminally connected by the use of quotation – and in their echoes of Czech bagpipe melodies.

The String Sextet in A (1878, B80) and the String Quartet no.10 in E♭ (1878–9) represent the predominance of a nationalist style probably to a greater extent than in any previous work. In the quartet in particular – it was commissioned by Jean Becker, who asked for Slavonic features – Dvořák concentrated on folklike themes, with obvious consequences not only for the colouring (elements of the polka in the first movement, the dumka in the second and the skočná in the fourth), but for the whole structure, including striking triadic melodies, catchy thematic periodicity and the dominance of formal repetition. The Violin Sonata in F (1880, B106), written shortly after the E♭ quartet and the only sonata in Dvořák's output to survive (the Violin Sonata in A minor B33 and the Cello Sonata in F minor B20 of the early 1870s are lost), is in the same folk-inspired vein, but already shows some of the subtlety and stylistic refinement of the String Quartet no.11 in C (1881), which departs from the folk style with themes based on chords, thematic density and polyrhythmic accompanying structures. This refinement reaches a peak in the dramatic expressiveness of the Piano Trio in F minor (1883, B130), (ex.7) unique in Dvořák's writing. Not only the outer movements but also the scherzo-like second movement and the imitative central section of the cantabile third movement are dominated by this expressiveness. In only six bars at the beginning of the first movement, for example, the music moves from the opening pp to a first climactic ff, rhythmically and melodically intensifies the closing motif of the strings playing in unison, quickens the tempo with triplets for the piano and, as if impulsively, opens up the tonal area to cover several octaves.

Dvořák wrote no more chamber music for four years, apart from the Ballad in D minor for violin and piano (1884, B139), a small-scale work but very much in Dvořák's dramatic style of that time. This gap can probably be explained by the time spent on commissions from England and for Simrock. At the beginning of 1887 he returned to chamber music with the Terzetto in C (B148) for two violins and viola, an occasional work of 'very small means', its third movement being a furiant and its finale a variation. This was followed by the Drobnosti ('Miniatures', 1887, B149), for the same forces and with the same 'small means', comprising a Cavatina (no.1), a Capriccio (no.2), a Romance (no.3) and Ballade (no.4); Dvořák arranged them immediately afterwards for violin and piano, and Simrock published them without individual titles as Romatické kusy ('Romantic Pieces' B150). In the same year Dvořák arranged 12 songs from his 1865 song cycle Cypresses for string quartet as Echo of Songs (B152), as if transferring the tradition of the character-piece to the string quartet.

Ex.7 Piano Trio in F minor op.65

In the Piano Quintet in A op.81 (B155), also composed in 1887, he returned stylistically to the chamber works of the late 1870s: a carefree tone, distinctly national colouring, melodic variety, rhythmic vitality and harmonic colour combine in a well-balanced formal structure with differentiated instrumental sound. The same can be said of the Piano Quartet in E♭ (1889, B162), whose musical organization depends on 3rds in the main theme of the first movement. Dvořák adopted a new plan for the Piano Trio op.90 (the Dumky, 1890–91, B166). Here the structure consists of neither the classical four movements nor traditional sonata form, but a series of six dumky movements in two groups. The first part consists of movements 1–3, which merge into one another without a break and are grouped harmonically around the tonal centre C#, the key of the second movement; the second part consists of movements 4–6. Relationships of character and sporadic correspondences of motif ensure cyclical coherence between the two parts.

The String Quartet no.12 in F op.96 ('The American'), the String Quintet in E♭ op.97 (B180) and the Sonatina in G op.100 for violin and piano (B183) were all written in the USA in 1893. Besides the clearly perceptible American tone it is their simplicity that distinguishes these three works from the earlier and later chamber music. Dvořák stated that he 'wanted to write something really melodious and simple'. This simplicity seems therefore to have been deliberate. It is reflected in the relative brevity of the works, the restraint of technical demands on performers, the diatonic rather than chromatic melodic structure, and the emphasis on phrases of equal length. There is also less shaping of thematic material, leading to repetition (either precise or in variation), and less attention to development. Coherence is provided not so much by development as by simultaneous contrasting passages of rhythmic ostinato and harmonic repose (as at the beginning of the Quartet op.96, structurally reminiscent of Smetana's string quartet 'From my Life'), and the subliminal interlocking of themes. These works differ in many respects from the 19th-century European tradition, but represent an original and unusual aspect of Dvořák's chamber music.

The String Quartet no.14 in A♭ op.105 – begun in New York early in 1895 and completed at the end of the year – resembles an enhanced résumé of Dvořák's previous chamber music. As in the First String Quartet there is a slow introduction, a kind of preparation for the following Allegro, which has a subject developed from ideas already presented. The theme is based on a motif (alternating upper and lower notes, tonal repetition) that threads its way through the entire work, in which (as in many of the earlier works) it is obvious that Dvořák paid particular attention to the proportions of the individual sections and movements and to cyclical cohesion. Less a résumé than a fundamentally new departure is the String Quartet no.13 in G op.106, begun after op.105 but finished earlier. The thematic material is not cantabile and extended, but consists of short, fragmented motifs. For example, the main theme of the first movement includes leaping 6ths, tonal repetition, a motif of alternating notes and triad-like descending triplets, combining the most disparate qualities – separated by rests – in the space of only four bars (ex.8). In the following section these and other elements are treated like building-blocks that can be combined at will. In the second movement (which almost eludes traditional analysis) this principle affects the form, which is marked less by cadences than by breaks in forward movement and by moments of repose created by general pauses and fermata. The finale has no development section and many passages show little formal development. Thematic elements from the first movement are quoted in a manner that seems to anticipate Janáček's 'speech-melody' in its asymmetrical prose-like nature and rhetorical language.

Ex.8 String Quartet no.13 in G op.106, 1st movt

13. Piano music. Although Dvořák was an accomplished pianist, writing for the piano was never as important to him as, for example, orchestral or chamber music. His piano works are mainly entertaining dances and character-pieces rather than musically and technically ambitious sonatas, fantasias and études. The pieces include the two Furianty B85 (1878) and single works such as dumky (B136) (1884) and B64 (*c*1876), and the Impromptu in D minor B129 (1883), as well as larger sets, including the eight Waltzes B101 (1879–1880) and the six Mazurkas B111 (1880), which are reminiscent of Chopin but are considerably more natural-sounding and direct. The two Minuets B58 (1876) have expressive, cantabile melodies. The four Eclogues B103 (1880) are full of tonal colour; Dvořák took the subject of the central section of no.4 (Allegretto) as a contrasting theme for the first of the orchestral set of Slavonic Dances B147. The eight Humoresques B187 (1894) show American influence in their striking pentatonism.

Another important group among Dvořák's compositions for piano are those with cyclic features. The eight variations of the Theme with Variations in A♭ B65 (1876) show an ever-increasing development, which is technically demanding but rather impersonal in expression. 12 pieces linked by motifs make up the Silhouettes, written between 1875 and 1879 (B98). They are based on thematic material from the First and Second Symphonies (1865) and on motifs from no.14 of the song cycle Cypresses (also of 1865); as the title suggests, it is as if Dvořák were trying to trace the outlines of works from the earlier period and reformulate them. He proved himself a musical poet in the nature of Schumann in the set Poetic Tone Pictures B161 (1889), which has 13 sections, each bearing a title (for example, Nočnícestou, 'Twilight Way'; Žertem, 'Toying'; Jarní, 'Spring Song'. Their pictorial nature is expressed through musical idioms and typical mood-setting. There are five movements in the Suite in A B184 (1894), revolving around the tonal centre of A and linked by motifs, but differing in tempo and character. The melodies show the influence of American spirituals and there are many pastoral features.

The third group consists of the piano duets. The two series of Slavonic Dances (B78 and B145, also arranged for orchestra) contain elements of the furiant, dumka, polka, sousedská, skočna, odzemek, kolo, starodávný, špacirka and mazurka in their melodic and rhythmic inventions. The epic nature of the ten Legends B117 (1880–81, also orchestrated) is expressed in the sudden switching from a cheerful to a dark and gloomy tone. The six character-pieces Ze Šumavy ('From the Bohemian Forest', B133) anticipate to some extent the later Poetic Tone Pictures in their programmatic delineation and tone-painting, although they are less specific; their titles include Na přástkách ('In the Spinning-Room'), Klid ('Silent Woods', also arranged for cello and piano), and Z bouřlivých dob ('In Troublous Times'), the main theme of which resembles the theme of the scherzo in the Fourth Symphony.

14. Songs and duets. Dvořák wrote more than 100 solo songs and duets. The texts were either from Czech, Moravian, Slovak, Serbian, modern Greek, Russian, Lithuanian and Irish folk poetry or by Czech poets such as K.J. Erben, Vítěslav Hálek, Adolf Heyduk, Eliška Krásnohorská and Gustav Pfleger-Moravský. The last-named was also the author of the 18 poems that were the first texts Dvořák set to music, in the song cycle Cypresses (1865, B11). These settings distinguish the individual moods of the poems and their romanticism places them in the tradition of Schubert and Schumann. They already display many of the elements generally characteristic of Dvořák's word-setting: melodic and rhythmic ideas are closely connected with the metrical qualities of the text. The structure of lines and verses is retained in the shape of the musical phrases and the form, and dramatic passages are strongly emphasized. However, Dvořák was primarily concerned to illustrate the mood and content of the texts, for example, the music hovers like the dream of which it sings in Ó byl to krásný zlatý sen ('Oh, it was a lovely, golden dream'; ex.9). Moreover, the composer can be seen reacting to concepts and key words in the text in no.13, Na horách ticho ('Everything's still'), where the piano part imitates the rustling of the woods, and in other places. The 1865 cycle was not published, but Dvořák revised the songs several times: as the six songs B123 (1881–2), the four songs B124 (1881–2) and as the eight well-known Love Songs (1888, B160). In the five songs to words by Eliška Krasnohorska (B23), the four songs on Serbian folk poems (B29) and the six songs from the Dvůr Králové Manuscript (B30) – written in the early 1870s as a result of Dvořák's acquaintance with Ludevít Procházka and the musical evenings he promoted – Dvořák tried to do justice to the sobriety of the texts through an unforced vocal line, concealed strophic structures and a simple but characteristic accompaniment.

Ex.9 Cypresses, no.5

['Oh, it was a lovely golden dream which we dreamt together there']

The Moravian Duets, op.20 (B50, for soprano and tenor, and alto and tenor), op.29 (B60, for soprano and alto) and op.32 (B62, for soprano and alto) were written between 1875 and 1876. They represent a high point in Dvořák's settings for such forces, in the charm of their apparent simplicity, their appealing melodic and rhythmic style, and their expression of both joy and melancholy. There is a great range of emotion, from carefree jubilation to profound meditation, in the 12 Večerní písně ('Evening Songs', opp.3, 9 and 31, B61), probably composed in 1876. Dvořák arranged nos.2 and 3, Mně zdálo se žes umřela ('I dreamt that you were dead') and Já jsem ten rytíř z pohádky 'I am that knight of fairy tale'), for voice and orchestra in 1882. Another high point in Dvořák's output of songs is the set of Zigeunermelodien B104 (1880), composed to a German text. The songs unite expressive use of the voice and a colourful, often dance-like piano accompaniment that sometimes imitates the dulcimer. In the famous fourth song, Als die alte Mutter ('Songs my mother taught me'), the voice part in 2/4 contrasts in an unusual way with the piano accompaniment in 6/8. Also among Dvořák's best songs are those of V národním tónu ('In Folk Tone', 1886, B146) and the Vier Lieder (1887–8, B157). Ach není, není, tu, co by mě těšilo ('There is nothing here to comfort me', no.3 of B146) is notable for its harmonic colour and Lasst mich Allein (no.1 of the Vier Lieder) for its meditative tone.

Verses from the Psalms selected by Dvořák from the Bible of Kralice are the basis of the Biblical Songs (1894, B185), Dvořák's last song set and in its religious approach his most personal. Often reminiscent of archetypal sacred music, as if part of an imaginary church service, the songs suggest chanting (for example in no.4, Hospodin jest můj pastýř, 'The Lord is my shepherd'). The text is highlighted and its meaning emphasized by the restrained, often sparse, piano accompaniment.

WORKS

Edition: Antonín Dvořák: Souborné výdaní [Complete edition], ed. O. Šourek and others (Prague, 1955–) [AD]

B – Burghauser thematic catalogue no.
S – Šourek catalogue no.
† – completed at some time between dates given

SYMPHONIES

B	S	Op.	No.	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
9	—	—	no.1, c	before 14 Feb – 24 March 1865	—	called 'Zlonické zvony' [The Bells of Zlonice]; 1st perf. Brno, 4 Oct 1936	iii/1
12	7	4	no.2, B♭	1 Aug – 9 Oct 1865	—	rev. 1887; 1st perf. Prague, 11 March 1888	iii/2
34	19	10	no.3, E♭	?April – 4 July 1873	Berlin, 1911	1st perf. Prague, 29 March 1874; rev. 1887–9	iii/3
41	22	13	no.4, d	1 Jan – 26 March 1874	Berlin, 1912	rev. 1887–8 1st perf. Prague, 6 April 1982; listed variously as opp.18, 19, 24	iii/4
54	32	76	no.5, F	15 June – 23 July 1875	Berlin, 1888	1st perf. Prague, 25 March 1879; ded. H. von Bülow; rev. 1887; 1st pubd as Sym. no.3; once known as op.24	iii/5
112	78	60	no.6, D	27 Aug – 15 Oct 1880	Berlin, 1882	1st perf. Prague, 25 March 1881; ded. H. Richter; 1st pubd as Sym. no.1; formerly called op.58	iii/6
141	94	70	no.7, d	13 Dec 1884 –17 March 1885	Berlin, 1885	1st perf. London, 22 April 1885; rev. June 1885; 1st pubd as Sym. no.2	iii/7
163	109	88	no.8, G	26 Aug – 8 Nov 1889	London 1892	1st perf. Prague, 2 Feb 1890; 1st pubd as Sym. no.4	iii/8
178	117	95	no.9, e	10 Jan–24 May 1893	Berlin, 1894	called 'Z Nového světa' [From the New World]; 1st perf. New York, 16 Dec 1893; 1st pubd as Sym. no.5	iii/9

CONCERTOS AND OTHER WORKS FOR SOLO INSTRUMENT WITH ORCHESTRA

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
10	—	—	Cello Concerto, A	completed 30 June 1865	—	with pf acc.; ? 1st perf. Prague, 26 April 1929; rev. G. Raphael (Leipzig, 1929); orchd J. Burghauser (Prague, 1977)	iv/2
39	20	11	Romance, f, vn	†Oct 1873 – 9 Dec 1877	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Prague, 9 Dec 1877; arr. of Andante from Str Qt B37	iii/23
63	42	33	Piano Concerto, g	?Aug – 14 Sept 1876	Breslau, 1883	1st perf. Prague, 24 March 1878	iii/10
90	64	49	Mazurek, vn	completed 15 Feb 1879	Berlin, 1879		iii/23
96 } 108 }	68	53	Violin Concerto, a	5 July – mid-Sept 1879 4 April – 25 May 1880	Berlin, 1883	rev. 1882; 1st perf. Prague, 14 Oct 1883	iii/11
181	114	94	Rondo, g, vc	16 – 22 Oct 1893	Berlin, 1894	arr. from B171	iii/23
182	90	68/5	Klid [Silent woods], vc	28 Oct 1893	Berlin, 1894	arr. from B133/5	iii/23
191	125	104	Cello Concerto, b	8 Nov 1894 – 9 Feb 1895	Berlin, 1896	rev., completed 11 June 1895; 1st perf. London, 19 March 1896	iii/12

OTHER ORCHESTRAL

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
4	—	—	Harfenice [The woman harpist], polka	?1862 – 4	—	lost	—
5–6	3	—	Polka and Galop	?1861 or 1862	—	lost	—
15	—	—	Seven pieces (Interludes), small orch	12 Jan–5 Feb 1867	—	1st perf. London, 31 Jan 1991	iii/24
15bis	—	—	[Serenade], fl, vn, vc, triangle]	completed 26 Jan 1867	—		vii/9
16a	(8)	(1)	Tragická ouvertura (Dramatická ouvertura)	completed 19 Oct 1870	Berlin, 1912	ov. to Alfred (B16); also listed as op.10, op.13	i/1a
21a	12	(12)	Overture, F	completed 20 Dec 1871	—	ov. to King and Charcoal Burner (i) (B21); also listed as op.2, op.13, op.14	i/2
31	—	—	Three nocturnes, no.2: Májová noc [May night]	?Oct 1872	—	nos.1, 3, lost; also listed as op.18	vii/10
35	—	—	Romeo a Julie, overture	June – July 1873	—	lost; also listed as op.21	—
44	24	14	Symfonická báseň [Sym, Poem] (Rhapsodie), a	Aug – 12 Sept 1874	Berlin, 1912	1st perf. Vienna, 17 Dec 1901; also known as op.15, op.18, op.19	iii/18
47	10	40	Nocturne, B str	?Jan 1875	Berlin, 1883	rev. 1882 or 1883; arr. from Str Qt B19 and Str Qnt B49	iii/24
52	29	22	Serenade, E, str	3–14 May 1875	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Prague, 10 Dec 1876; arr. pf 4 hands (Prague, 1877)	iii/16
70	48	78(28)	Symfonické variace [Symphonic Variations]	6 Aug – 28 Sept 1877	Berlin, 1888	on 'Já jsem huslař' [I am a Fiddler], B66/3; 1st perf. Prague, 2 Dec 1877	iii/22
77	53	44	Serenade, cl, 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 bn, dbn, 3 hn, vc, db	4–18 Jan 1878	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Prague, 17 Nov 1878	iii/16
83	55	46	Slovanské tance [Slavonic Dances], 1st ser.	April – 22 Aug 1878	Berlin, 1878	arr. from B78; 1st perf., nos.1, 3, 4, Prague, 16 May 1878; complete, Dresden, 4 Dec 1878 (nos.1–4), 18 Dec 1878 (nos.5–8)	iii/19
86	54	45	Slavonic Rhapsodies, 1 D, 2 g, 3 A♭	13 Feb – 3 Dec 1878	Berlin, 1879	1st perf., nos.1–2, Prague, 17 Nov 1878; no.3, Berlin, 24 Sept 1879	iii/18
88	65	54	Slavnostní pochod [Festival March]	? Jan or Feb 1879	Prague, 1879	for the silver wedding of Franz Josef and Elisabeth of Austria; 1st perf. Prague, 23 April 1879	iii/24
93	66	39	Česká suita [Czech Suite], D	?April 1879	Berlin, 1881	1st perf. Prague, 16 May 1879	iii/17
97	33	25	Vanda Overture	Aug – ?Oct 1879	Leipzig, ?1885	for Vanda, B55	iii/24
99	72	—	Pražské valčiky [Prague Waltzes]	? 10–12 Dec 1879	—	1st perf. Prague, 28 Dec 1879; arr. pf (Prague, 1880)	iii/24
100	67	—	Polonaise, E♭	20–24 Dec 1879	—	1st perf. Prague, 6 Jan 1880; arr. pf 4 hands by J. Zubatý, rev. Dvořák (Prague, 1883)	iii/24
105	71	54	Two Waltzes, str	†9Dec 1879 – March 1880	Berlin, 1911	1st perf. Prague, 29 March 1880; arr. of B101, nos.1, 4	iv/6

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
114	(3)	53A/1	Polka 'Pražským akademikum' [For Prague Students], B♭	14 Dec 1880	—	1st perf. Prague, 6 Jan 1881; arr. pf (Prague, 1882)	iii/24
119	(3)	53A/2	Kvapík [Galop], E	? Dec 1881	—	1st perf. Prague, 6 Jan 1882; anon. arr. pf (Prague, 1882)	vii
122	80	59	Legendy [Legends]	13 Nov – 9 Dec 1881	Berlin, 1882	arr. from B117	iii/21
125a	(83)	62	Domov můj [My Homeland], overture	21–3 Jan 1881	Berlin, 1882	from Josef Kajetán Tyl, incid music, B125; 1st perf. Prague, 3 Feb 1882	i/9
131	88	66	Scherzo capriccioso	4 April – 2 May 1883	Berlin, 1884	1st perf. Prague, 16 May 1883	iii/22
132	89	67	Husitská, dramatická ouvertura [Hussite overture]	before 9 Aug – 9 Sept 1883	Berlin, 1884	1st perf. Prague, 18 Nov 1883	iii/13
147	98	72	Slovanské tance [Slavonic Dances], 2nd ser.	mid-Nov 1886 – 5 Jan 1887	Berlin, 1887	arr. from B145; 1st perf., nos.9, 10, 15, Prague, 6 Jan 1887	iii/20
167	—	—	Fanfares, 4 tpt, timp	30 April 1891	—	for the opening festivities of the Regional Jubilee Exhibition in Prague; 1st perf. Prague, 15 May 1891	vii
168	113	91	V přírodě [In Nature's Realm], concert overture	31 March–8 July 1891	Berlin, 1894	B168, 169, 174 composed together as Příroda, Život a Láska [Nature, Life and Love]; 1st perf. Prague, 28 April 1892; earlier known as op.91, nos.1–3	iii/13
169	113	92	Karneval [Carnival], concert overture	28 July – 12 Sept 1891	Berlin, 1894		iii/13
174	113	93	Othello, concert overture	before Nov 1891 – 18 Jan 1892	Berlin, 1894		iii/13
190	121	98b	Suite, A	begun 19 Jan 1895	Berlin, 1911	arr. from B184	iii/7
195	129	107	Vodník [The Water Goblin], sym. poem after K.J. Erben	6 Jan – 11 Feb 1896	Berlin, 1896	private perf. Prague, 3 June 1896; London, 14 Nov 1896	iii/14
196	130	108	Polednice [The Noon Witch], sym. poem after Erben	11 Jan – 27 Feb 1896	Berlin, 1896	private perf., Prague, 3 June 1896; London, 21 Nov 1896	iii/14
197	131	109	Zlatý kolovrat [The Golden Spinning-Wheel], sym. poem after Erben	15 Jan – 25 April 1896	Berlin, 1896	private perf., Prague, 3 June 1896; London, 26 Oct 1896	iii/14
198	132	110	Holoubek [The Wild Dove], sym. poem after Erben	22 Oct – 18 Nov 1896	Berlin, 1899	1st perf. Brno, 20 March 1898	iii/15
199	133	111	Píseň bohatýrská [A Hero's Song], sym. poem	4 Aug – 25 Oct 1897	Berlin, 1899	1st perf. Vienna, 4 Dec 1898	iii/15

CHAMBER

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
7	4	1	String Quintet, a, 2 vn, 2 va, vc	begun 6 June 1861	Prague, 1943	1st perf. Prague, 15 Dec 1921	iv/8
8	5	2	String Quartet no.1, A	March 1862	Prague, 1948	1st perf. Prague, 6 Jan 1888; once listed as op.1	iv/5
14	—	—	Clarinet Quintet, b♭	†? 1865 or 1869	—	lost, ?destroyed; listed as ?op.5, ?op.6	—
17	—	—	String Quartet no.2, B♭	†?1868–70	—		iv/5
18	9	—	String Quartet no.3, D	†?1869–70	—	1st perf. Prague, 12 Jan 1969	iv/5
19	10	—	String Quartet no.4, e	? Dec 1870	—	once listed as op.9; Andante religioso adapted in Nocturne B48a and Str Qnt B49	iv/5
20	11	—	Cello Sonata, f	completed 4 Jan 1871	—	lost; once listed as op.10	vii
25	—	(13)	Piano Trio	? 1871 or 1872	—	lost (destroyed); listed as op.13, [no.1]	—
26	—	(13)	Piano Trio	? 1871 or 1872	—	lost (destroyed); listed as op.13, [no.2]	—
28	16	5	Piano Quintet, A	?Aug – ?Sept 1872	—	1st perf. Prague, 22 Nov 1872; once listed as op.15	iv/11

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
33	—	—	Violin Sonata, a	Feb 1873	—	lost (destroyed); once listed as op.19	—
36	—	—	Octet (Serenade), 2 vn, va, db, cl, bn, hn, pf	completed Sept 1873	—	lost (destroyed); once listed as op.22	—
37	20	9	String Quartet no.5, f	Sept–4 Oct 1873	Leipzig, 1929	rev. for pubn by G. Raphael once listed as op.23	iv/5
38	—	11	Romance, f, vn, pf	†Oct 1873 – 9 Dec 1877	Berlin, 1879	transcr. of Andante con moto from Str Qt B37 pubd pf part by J. Zubatý	iv/1
40	21	12	String Quartet no.6, a	Nov – 5 Dec 1873	—	rev., inc.; completed by J. Burghauser	iv/5
40a	—	—	Andante appassionato, F, 2 vn, va, vc	Nov/Dec 1873	—	once part of Str Qt B40	iv/5
45	25	16	String Quartet no.7, a	?14–24 Sept 1874	Prague, 1875	1st perf. Prague, 29 Dec 1878; score (Berlin, 1894)	iv/6
48a	—	40	Nocturne, B, vn, pf	†1875–83	Berlin, 1883	adapted from Andante religioso, St Qt B19	iv/1
49	27	77	String Quintet, G, 2 vn, va, vc, db	?Jan – March 1875	Berlin, 1888	orig. slow movt adapted from Andante religioso, Str Qt B19; 1st perf. Prague, 18 March 1876; definitive (4-movt) version, Boston, 25 Nov 1889; 1st listed as op.18; rev. Jan 1888	iv/8
51	30	21	Piano Trio, B♭	by 14 May 1875	Berlin, 1880	1st perf. Prague, 17 Feb 1877; rev. ?1880	iv/9
53	31	23	Piano Quartet, D	24 May – 10 June 1875	Berlin, 1880	1st perf. Prague, 16 Dec 1880	iv/10
56	34	26	Piano Trio, g	4–20 Jan 1876	Berlin, 1880	1st perf. Turnov, 29 June 1879	iv/9
57	35	80	String Quartet no.8, E	20 Jan – 4 Feb 1876	Berlin, 1888	rev. 1888; 1st perf. Hamburg, 19 Nov 1888; 1st listed as op.27	iv/6
75	52	34	String Quartet no.9, d	7–18 Dec 1877	Berlin, 1880	rev. 1879; 1st perf. ?Trieste, 14 Dec 1881; ? once listed as op.43	iv/6
79	56	47	Maličkosti [Bagatelles], 2 vn, vc, hmn	1–12 May 1878	Berlin, 1880	1st perf. 2 Feb 1879	iv/10
80	57	48	String Sextet, A, 2 vn, 2 va, 2 vc	14–27 May 1878	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Berlin, 9 Nov 1879	iv/8
81	58	—	Capriccio, vn, pf	?June 1878	Leipzig, 1929	rev. 1892; rev. for pubn by G. Raphael; also known as Concert Rondo; variously listed as opp.24, 27; ? also arr. vn, orch, lost	iv/8
89	64	49	Mazurek, vn, pf	Feb 1879	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Prague, 29 March 1879; arr. vn, orch as B90	iv/1
92	62	51	String Quartet no.10, E♭	25 Dec 1878–28 March 1879	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Magdeburg, 10 Nov 1879	iv/6
94	—	—	Polonaise, A, vc, pf	?June 1879	Vienna, 1925	1st perf. Turnov, 29 June 1879; rev. for pubn by W. Feral	iv/3
105	71	54	2 Waltzes, str, qt, ad lib db/str orch	? Feb 1880	Berlin, 1911	arr. of nos.1, 4 of B101	iv/6
106	75	57	Violin Sonata, F	3–17 March 1880	Berlin, 1880	1st perf. ?Chrudim, 23 Sept 1880	iv/1
120	—	—	Quartet movement, F, str qt	completed 7–9 Oct 1881	Prague, 1951	1st perf. Prague radio, 29 April 1945	iv/6
121	82	61	String Quartet no.11, C	before 25 Oct – 10 Nov 1881	Berlin, 1882	1st perf. Berlin, 2 Nov 1882	iv/7
130	87	65	Piano Trio, f	1 Feb – 31 March 1883	Berlin, 1883	once listed as op.64	iv/9
139	95	15/1	Ballad, d, vn, pf	†?Sept – Oct 1884		1st pubd in Magazine of Music, i (1884), Christmas suppl.	iv/1
148	100	74	Terzetto, C, 2 vn, va	7–14 Jan 1887	Berlin, 1887	1st perf. Prague, 30 March 1887	iv/4
149	—	75a	Drobnosti [Miniatures], 2 vn, va	? completed 18 Jan 1887	Prague, 1945	rev. as Romantic Pieces, B150; ? 1st perf. Prague, 24 Feb 1938	iv/4
150	101	75	Romantické kusy [Romantic pieces], vn, pf	?20–25 Jan 1887	Berlin, 1887	1st perf. Prague, 30 March 1887; rev. of Miniatures, B149	iv/1
152	(6)	—	Ohlas písní [Echo of Songs], 2 vn, va, vc	21 April – 21 May 1887	Prague, 1921	arr. of nos.6, 3, 2, 8, 12, 7, 9, 14, 4, 16, 17, 18 from Cypřiše, B11; nos.16, 18 unpubd	iv/7
155	103	81	Piano Quintet, A	18 Aug–3 Oct 1887	Berlin, 1888	1st perf. Prague, 6 Jan 1888; once listed as op.77	iv/11
162	108	87	Piano Quartet, E♭	10 July – 19 Aug 1889	Berlin, 1890	1st perf. Frankfurt, 17 Oct 1890	iv/10
164	111	—	Gavotte, 3 vn	19 Aug 1890	Prague, 1890	pubd in Mladý houslista, i, ed. V.J. Novotný	iv/4
166	112	90	Dumky, pf, vn, vc	Nov 1890 – 12 Feb 1891	Berlin, 1894	1st perf. Prague, 11 April 1891	iv/9
170	—	46/2	Slovanský tance [Slavonic Dance], e, vn, pf	1879 or ? Dec 1891	—	1st perf. Turnov, 29 June 1879; arr. of B78 no.2	iv/1

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
171	114	94	Rondo, g, vc, pf	25–6 Dec 1891	Berlin, 1894	1st perf. Rakovník, 3 Jan 1892; orchd as B181; once listed as op.92	iv/3
172	(55)	46/8	Slovanský, [Slavonic Dance], g, vc, pf	27 Dec 1891	—	1st perf. Chrudim, 8 Jan 1892; arr. of B78 no.8	iv/3
173	(90)	68/5	Klid [Silent Woods], vc, pf	28 Dec 1891	Berlin, 1894	1st perf. Rakovník, 3 Jan 1892; arr. of B133 no.5	iv/3
179	118	96	String Quartet no.12, F	8–23 June 1893	Berlin, 1894	'The American', 1st perf. Boston, MA, 1 Jan 1894	iv/7
180	119	97	String Quintet, E♭, 2 vn, 2 va, vc	26 June – 1 Aug 1893	Berlin, 1894	'The American', 1st perf. New York, 12 Jan 1894	iv/8
183	120	100	Sonatina, G, vn, pf	19 Nov – 3 Dec 1893	Berlin, 1894	1st perf. Brno, 10 Jan 1896	iv/1
192	128	106	String Quartet no.13, G	before 11 Nov–9 Dec 1895	Berlin 1896	1st perf. Prague, 9 Oct 1896	iv/7
193	127	105	String Quartet no.14, A♭	26 March – 30 Dec 1895	Berlin, 1896	1st perf. Prague, 20 Oct 1896	iv/7

KEYBOARD

for piano 2 hands, unless otherwise stated

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
1	1	—	Polka pomněnka [Forget-me-not Polka], C	†1854–?1865	—	trio by A. Liehmann	vii
302	—	—	Preludes and Fuges, org: 1–4, Preludes, D, G, a, B♭; 5, Prelude on a Given Theme, D; [6], Fughetta 1, D; [7], Fugue, D; [8], Fugue, g	1859		nos.1, [7], pubd in Česká varhanní tvorba, i (1954)	vii
3	2	—	Polka, E	27 Feb 1860	—	? doubtful	v/1
22	(12)	—	Themes [Motivy] from King and Charcoal Burner (i)	†?1871–3	Prague, 1873		vii
43	(23)	—	Potpourri [Směs] from King and Charcoal Burner (ii)	†?1874–5	Prague, 1875		vii
48b	—	(40)	Nocturne, B, pf 4 hands	?1882	—	adapted from Andante religioso, Str Qt B19	v/6
58	36	28	Two Minuets, A♭, F	?Feb 1876	Prague, 1879		v/1
64	43	35	Dumka, d	Dec 1876 or ?1878	Berlin, 1879		v/1
65	44	36	Tema con variazioni, A♭	Dec 1876 or ?1878	Berlin, 1879		v/1
74	50	41	Skotské tance [Scottish Dances], d	†? Nov – Dec 1877	Prague, 1879		v/1
78	55	46	Slovanské tancy, [Slavonic Dances], 1st ser., pf 4 hands: C, e, A♭, F, A, D, c, g	18 March – 7 May 1878	Berlin, 1878	orchd as B83; no.2 arr. vn, pf, B170; no.8 arr. vc, pf, B172	v/5
85	50	42	Furianty, D, F	29 May – 25 Sept 1878	Berlin, 1879	1st perf. Prague, 17 Nov 1878	v/1
98	70	8	[12] Silhouettes: c♯, D♭, D♭, f♯, f♯, B♭, b, b, B, e, A, c♯	†1875 – Oct/Nov 1879	Leipzig, 1880	early drafts made *c*1870–72, known as B32	v/1
101	71	54	[8] Waltzes: A, a, E, d♭, g, F, d, E♭	1 Dec 1879 – 17 Jan 1880	Berlin, 1880	nos.1, 4 arr. str qt as B105	v/2
103	74	56	Eclogues: 1 Allegro non tanto (quasi polka), 2 Quasi allegretto, 3 Moderato, 4 Allegretto	24 Jan–7 Feb 1880	Prague, 1921		v/2
109	—	—	Lístky do památníku [Album Leaves]	27–31 May 1880	Prague, 1921		v/2

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
110	76	52	Piano pieces: 1 Impromptu, 2 Intermezzo, 3 Gigue, 4 Eclogue, 5 Allegro molto, 6 Tempo di marcia	?June 1880		nos.1–4 (Leipzig, 1881), no.5 (Prague, 1921)	v/2
111	77	56	Mazurkas: A♭, C, B♭, d, F, b	13 – ?23 June 1880	Berlin, 1880	1st edn omits no.4, incl. inc. version of Eclogue B103, no.1	v/2
116	—	—	Moderato, A	3 Feb 1881	Prague, 1921		v/2
117	80	59	[10] Legends, pf 4 hands: d, G, g, C, A♭, c♯, A, F, D, b♭	before 30 Dec 1880 – 22 March 1881	Berlin, 1881	orchd as B122	v/6
128bis	—	—	Otázka [Question]	13 Dec 1882	—	v/2
129	86	—	Impromptu, d?	Jan 1883	Prague, 1883	pubd as first musical suppl. to Humoristické listy	v/3
133	90	68	Ze Šumavy [From the Bohemian Forest], pf 4 hands: 1 Na přástkách [In the Spinning-Room], 2 U černého jezera [By the Black Lake], 3 Noc filipojakubská [Witches' Sabbath], 4 Na čekání [On the Watch], 5 Klid [Silent Woods], 6 Z bouřlivých dob [In Troublous Times]	?Sept 1883 – 12 Jan 1884	Berlin, 1884	no.5 arr. vc, pf, B172	v/6
136	93	12/1	Dumka, c	?Sept 1884	Prague and Paris, 1885		v/3
137	93	12/2	Furiant, g	?Sept 1884		1st pubd in Magazine of Music i (1884), Christmas suppl.	v/3
138	92	—	Humoreska, F♯	†1884–92	Prague, ?1884		v/3
145	98	72	Slovanské tance, [Slavonic Dances], 2nd ser, pf 4 hands: B, e, F, D♭, b♭, B♭, C, A♭	before 9 June – 9 July 1886	Berlin, 1886	orchd as B147	v/5
156	104	—	Dvě perličky [Two little pearls]: 1 Do kola [In a Ring], 2 Dědeček tančí s babičkou [Grandpa Dances with Grandma]	?Dec 1887	Prague, 1888		v/3
158	—	—	Lístek do památníku [Album Leaf], E♭	21 July 1888	—		v/2
161	107	85	Poetické nálady [Poetic tone pictures]: 1 Noční cestou [Twilight Way], 2 Žertem [Toying], 3 Na starém hradě [In the Old Castle], 4 Jarni [Spring Song], 5 Selská balada [Peasant Ballad], 6 Vzpomínání [Reverie], 7 Furiant, 8 Rej skřítků [Goblins' Dance], 9	16 April– 6 June 1889	Berlin, 1889	once listed as op.84	v/3

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
			Serenade, 10 Bacchanalia, 11 Na táčkách [Tittle-Tattle], 12 U mohyly [At a Hero's Grave], 13 Na svaté hoře [On the Holy Mountain]
303	—	—	Theme for Variations (for O. Nedbal)	?1891	Prague, 1894		vii
184	121	98	Suite, A	19 Feb – 1 March 1894	Berlin, 1894	known earlier as op.101; orchd as B190	v/4
187	123	101	[8] Humoresky: e♭, B, A♭, F, a, B, G♭, b♭	7–27 Aug 1894	Berlin, 1895		v/4
188	124	—	2 pieces: 1 Ukolébavka [Lullaby], 2 Capriccio	28 Aug – 7 Sept 1894	Berlin, 1911	op. posth.	v/4

STAGE

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
16	8	—	Alfred (heroic opera, 3, K.T. Körner)	before 26 May –19 Oct 1870	—	text in Ger.; 1st perf. Olomouc, Czech Theatre, 10 Dec 1938; listed both as op. 1 and as op.10	i/1
21	12	—	Král a uhlíř [King and Charcoal Burner] (opera, 3, B.J. Lobeský [B. Guldener]	?April – 20 Dec 1871	—	1st perf. Prague, National, 28 May 1929	i/2
42	23	(14)	Král a uhlíř (ii) (opera, Lobeský)	17 April – 3 Nov 1874	—	1st perf. Prague, Provisional, 24 Nov 1874; with new version of 'Balada Krále Matyáše' [Ballad of King Mathias], composed †Dec 1880 – Jan 1881 (B115); rev. as B151	i/3
46	26	17	Tvrdé palice [The Stubborn Lovers] (comic opera, 1, J. Stolba)	?Sept (before 4 Oct) 1874 – 24 Dec 1874	vocal score, Berlin, 1882	1st perf. Prague, New Czech, 2 Oct 1881	i/4
55	33	25	Vanda (tragic opera, 5, V.B. Šumavský and F. Zákrejs, after J. Surzycki)	9 Aug – 22 Dec 1875	—	1st perf. Prague, Provisional, 17 April 1876; rev. 1879–80, 1883, 1900–01; ov. written 1879 as B97	i/5
67	46	37	Šelma sedlák [The Cunning Peasant] (comic opera, 2, J.O. Veselý)	Feb – July 1877	Berlin, 1882	1st perf. Prague, Provisional, 27 Jan 1878; ov. pubd Berlin, 1879	i/6
125	83	62	Josef Kajetán Tyl (ov. and incidental music, F.F. Šamberk)	Dec 1881 – 23 Jan 1882	arr. pf 4 hands, Prague, 1882	1st perf. Prague, Provisional, 3 Feb 1882; pf arr. by J. Zubatý; ov. pubd as Domov můj, B125a	i/9
127	85	64	Dimitrij (i) (opera, 4, M. Červinková-Riegrová)	8 May 1881 – 23 Sept 1882	vocal score, Prague, 1885	1st perf. Prague, New Czech, 8 Oct 1882; rev. 1883, 1885 [pubd vs arr. Zubatý, J. Kàan]; rev. 1894–5 as B186	1/7
151	23	14	Král a uhlíř (iii) (comic opera, 3, Lobeský, rev. V.J. Novotný)	1 Feb – March 1887	vocal score, Prague, 1915	rev. of B42; 1st perf. Prague, National, 15 June 1887; pubd vs arr. R. Veselý	i/3
159	106	84	Jakobín (i) [The Jacobin] (opera, 3. Červinková-Riegrová)	10 Nov 1887 – 18 Nov 1888	vocal score, Prague, 1911	1st perf. Prague, National, 12 Feb 1889; vs rev. K. Kovařovic, arr. Veselý; rev. as B200	I/10
186	—	64	Dimitrij (ii) (opera, 4, Červinková-Riegrová)	9 April – 31 July 1894	vocal score, Prague, 1912	rev. of B127; 1st perf. Prague, National, 7 Nov 1894; pubd vs rev. K. Kovařovic	1/8
200	(106)	84	Jakobín (ii) (opera, 3, Červinková-Riegrová, rev. with F.L. Rieger)	17 Feb – 7 Dec 1897	vocal score, Prague, 1911	rev. of B159; 1st perf. Prague, National, 19 June 1898	i/10

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
201	134	112	Čert a Káča [The Devil and Kate] (comic opera, 3, A. Wenig, after Cz. fairy tale)	5 May 1898 – 27 Feb 1899	vocal score, Prague, 1908	1st perf. Prague, National, 23 Nov 1899	i/11
203	136	114	Rusalka (lyric fairy tale, 3, J. Kvapil, after F. de La Motte Fouqué: Undine	21 April – 27 Nov 1900	vocal score, Prague, 1905	1st perf. Prague, National, 31 March 1901; pubd vs arr. J. Faměra	i/12
206	138	115	Armida (opera, 4, J. Vrchlický, after T. Tasso: Gerusalemme liberata	11 March 1902 – 23 Aug 1903	vocal score, Prague, 1941	1st perf. Prague, National, 25 March 1904; pubd vs arr. K. Šolc	i/13

CANTATAS, MASSES, ORATORIOS

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
2	—	—	Mass, B♭	†1857–9	—	lost (destroyed)	—
27	15	30	Hymnus: Dědicové bílé hory [Hymn: the Heirs of the White Mountain] (V. Hálek), chorus, orch	?May – 3 June 1872	3rd version, London 1885	1st perf. Prague, 9 March 1873; 1st version listed as op.4 and op.14; rev. Jan 1880 as B102; 2nd rev., completed 3 May 1884, London, 13 May 1885	ii/5
71	38	58	Stabat mater (Jacopone da Todi), S, A, T, B, chorus, orch	19 Feb 1876 – 13 Nov 1877	Berlin, 1881	1st perf. Prague, 23 Dec 1880; once listed as op.28	ii/1
91	63	79	Psalm cxlix (Bible of Kralice), male vv, orch	13 Jan – 24 Feb 1879	rev. version, Berlin, 1888	1st perf. Prague, 16 March 1879; once listed as op.52; rev. for mixed choir as B154, op.79. ?July 1887; 1st perf. Rotterdam, 14 Dec 1888	ii/6
135	91	69	Svatební košile [The spectre's bride] (dramatic cantata, K.J. Erben), S, T, B, chorus, orch	26 May – 27 Nov 1884	London, 1885	1st perf. Plzeň, 28 March 1885	ii/2
144	97	71	Svatá Ludmila [St Ludmilla] (oratorio, J. Vrchlický), S, A, T, B, chorus, orch	17 Sept 1885–30 May 1886	London, 1887	1st perf. Leeds, 15 Oct 1886; add recit by Vrchlický, V.J. Novotný [B205], for stage perf., Prague, 30 Oct 1901	ii/3
153	102	86	Mass, D (S, A, T, B)/small choir, chorus, org	26 March – 17 June 1887	orchd version, London, 1893	private perf., Lužany, 11 Sept 1887; once listed as op.76; orchd as B175, 24 March – 15 June 1892; perf. London, 11 March 1893	ii/7, 8
165	110	89	Requiem, S, A, T, B, chorus, orch	1 Jan – 31 Oct 1890	London, 1891	1st perf. Birmingham, 9 Oct 1891	ii/4
176	115	103	Te Deum, S, B, chorus, orch	25 June – 28 July 1892	Berlin, 1896	1st perf. New York, 21 Oct 1892; once listed as op.93, op.98	ii/6
177	116	102	The American Flag (cantata, J.R. Drake), A, T, B, chorus, orch	3 Aug 1892 – 8 Jan 1893	vs, New York 1895	1st perf. New York, 4 May 1895; once listed as op.94 and op.99	ii/5
202	135	113	Slavnostní zpěv [Festival song] (Vrchlický), chorus, orch	?7–17 April 1900	vs, Prague, 1902	private perf., Prague, 29 May 1900	ii/5

OTHER CHORAL

B	S	Op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
59	37	29	Čtyři sbory [4 Choruses], mixed vv, unacc.: 1 Místo klekání [Evening's blessing] (A. Heyduk), 2 Ukolébavka [Lullaby] (Heyduk), 3 Nepovím [I don't say it], 4 Opuštěný [The Forsaken One]	†7 Feb 1876 – 1878	Prague, 1879	nos.3, 4 set to Moravian folk poems	vi/4
66	45	—	Sbotové písně [Choral Songs], male vv, unacc.: 1 Převozníček [The Ferryman], 2 Milenka travička [The Beloved as Poisoner], 3 Huslař [The Fiddler] (Heyduk)	12–16 Jan 1877	Prague, 1921	nos.1, 2 set to Moravian folk poems	vi/4
72	45	41	Kytice z českých národnich písní [Bouquet of Czech Folksongs], male vv, unacc.: 1 Zavedený ovčák [The Betrayed Shepherd], 2 Úmysl milenčin [The Sweetheart's Resolve], 3 Kalina [The Guelder Rose], 4 Český Diogenes [Czech Diogenes]	?Nov 1877	nos.1–3 Prague, 1877	set to Cz. and Moravian folk poems; nos.1–4 (Prague, 1921), with B66	vi/4
73	—	—	Píseň čecha [The song of a Czech] (F.J. Vacek-Kamenický, male vv, unacc.	?Nov 1877	Prague, 1921	inc.	vi/4
76	51	43	Z kytice národních písní slovanských [From a bouquet of Slavonic Folksongs], male vv, pf: 1 Žal [Sorrow], 2 Divná voda [Miraculous Water], 3 Děvče v háji [The Girl in the Woods]	21 Dec 1877 – 6 Jan 1878	Prague, 1879	nos.1, 3, set to Slovak folk poems; no.2 Moravian folk poem; arr. pf 4 hands by F. Zubatý for pubnn	vi/4
87	61	27	Pět sborů [5 Partsongs], male vv, unacc.: 1 Pomluva [Village Gossip], 2 Pomořané [Dwellers by the Sea], 3 Přípověď lásky [The Love Promise], 4 Ztracená ovečka [The Lost Lamb], 5 Hostina [The Sparrow's Party]	completed 12 Dec 1878	Prague, 1890	Lithuanian folk poems, trans. F.L. Čelakovský; once listed as op.30	vi/4
107	—	29/32	Moravské dvojzpěvyh [Moravian Duets], female vv, unacc.	?18–19 March 1880		transcr. of B60, 62, nos.6, 10, 13, 2, 3	vi/4
126	84	63	V přírodě [In Nature's Realm] (V. Hálek), mixed vv, unacc.: 1 Napadly písně v duši mou [Music Descended to my Soul], 2 Večerní les rozvázal zvonky [Bells Ring at Dusk], 3 Žitné pole, žitné pole [The Rye Field], 4 Vyběhla bříza běličká [The Silver Birch], 5 Dnes do skoku a do písničky! [With Dance and Song]	24–7 Jan 1882	Leipzig, 1882	1st perf. Tábor, 22 Nov 1882	vi/6
143	96	28	Hymna českého rolnictva [Hymn of the Czech peasants] (K. Pippich), mixed vv, orch	13 Aug 1885	vs, Prague, 1885	pubd score arr. Zubatý, rev. Dvořák	ii/5

SONGS AND DUETS

for 1 voice and piano unless otherwise stated

B	S	op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
11	6	—	Cypřiše [Cypresses] (G. Pfleger-Moravský): 1 Vy vroucí písně [Sing fervent songs], 2 V té sladké moci [When thy sweet glances], 3 V tak mnohém srdci mrtvo jest [Death reigns], 4 Ó duše drahá jedinká [Thou only dear one], 5 Ó byl to krásný zlatý sen [Oh, it was a lovely golden dream], 6 Já vím, že v sladké naději [I know that on my love], 7 Ó zlatá růže, spanilá [O charming golden rose], 8 O naši lásce nekvete [Never will love lead us], 9 Kol domu se teď potácím [I wander oft], 10 Mne často týrá pochyba [Tormented oft by doubt], 11 mé srdce často v bolesti [Downcast am I], 12 Zde hledím na ten drahý list [Here gaze I], 13 Na horách ticho a v údolí ticho [Everything's still], 14 Zde v lese u potoka [In deepest forest glade], 15 Mou celou duší zádumně [Painful emotions pierce my soul], 16 Tam stojí stará skála [There stands an ancient rock], 17 Nad krajem vévodi lehký spánek [Nature lies peaceful], 18 Ty se ptáš proč moje zpěvy bouří [You are asking why]	10–27 July 1865	—	nos.1, 5, 9, 8, 13, 11 rev. as B123; nos.1, 5, 11, 13 rev. as B124; nos.8, 3, 9, 6, 17, 14, 2, 4, rev. as B160; nos.6, 3, 2, 8, 12, 7, 9, 14, 4, 16, 17, 18 arr. str qt as B152; no.10 pubd in Dvořákova čítanka (Prague, 1929); Eng. trans. by J. Clapham, provided to replace the composer's faulty declamation in setting the Cz. text	vii
13	—	—	Dvě písně pro baryton [2 Baritone Songs] (A. Heyduk): 1 Kdybys, milé děvče [If dear lass], 2 A kdybys písní stvořená [If only there were a song]	24 Oct 1865	—		vii
23	13	—	Písně [Songs] (E. Krásnohorská): 1 Lipy [Lime Trees], 2 Proto [The Reason], 3 Překážky [Obstacles], 4 Přemítání [Meditation], 5 Vzpomínání [Remembrance]	Nov 1871		nos.2, 4 pubd in Ger. as nos.1, 2 of 4 Lieder, op.9 (Berlin, 1880); no.5 frag.	vi/1
24	14	5	Sirotek [The Orphan] (K.J. Erben)	?Nov/Dec 1871	Prague, 1883		vi/1
24bis	—	—	Rozmarýna [Rosmarine] (Erben)	?1871	—		vi/1
29	17	6	Čtyři písně [4 Songs] (Serbian folk poems, trans. S. Kapper): 1 Panenka a tráva [The Maiden and the Grass], 2 Připamatování [Warning], 3 Výklad znamení [Flower Omens], 4 Lásce neujdeš [No Escape]	?Sept 1872	Berlin, 1879	pubd in Ger. and Eng.; once listed as op.16	vi/1
30	18	7	Písně z Rukopisu Královédvoyského [Songs from the Dvůr Králové Manuscript]: 1 Žežhulice [The Cuckoo], 2 Opuščená [Forsaken], 3 Skřivánek [The Lark], 4 Róže [The Rose], 5 Kytice [Flowery Message], 6 Jahody [The Strawberries]	2 Feb – 21 Sept 1872	Prague, 1873	no.2 completed 2 Feb 1872, pubd in Dalibor, i (1873), suppl.; pubd complete as op.17; nos.5, 4, 1, 3 rev. as 4 Lieder aus der Königinhofer Handschrift, op.7 (Berlin, 1879); all trans. Eng. in 16 Songs, op.17 (London, 1887)	vi/1
50	28	20	Moravské dvojzpěvy [Moravian Duets], S, T, pf and A, T, pf: 1 Proměny [Destined], 2 Rozloučení [The Parting], 3 Chudoba [Poverty, or The Silken Band], 4 Vuře šuhaj, vuře [The Last Wish]	?March 1875	Berlin, 1879	Moravian folk poems; no.4 completed 3 July 1876 for S, A, pf as part of B62	vi/3
60	39	29(32)	Moravské dvojzpěvy [Moravian Duets], S, A, pf: 1 A já ti uplynu [From thee now], 2 Velet', vtáčku [Fly sweetsongster], 3 Dyby byla kosa nabróšená [The Slighted Heart], 4 V dobrým sme se sešli [Parting Without Sorrow], 5 Slavíkovský polečko malý [The Pledge of Love]	17–21 May 1876	Prague, 1876	Moravian folk poems; nos.1–5 1st pubd as op.29; nos.6–13 1st pubd as op.32; nos.1–13 as op.32 (Berlin, 1878) no.14 unpubd	vi/3

B	S	op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
62	41	32	6 Holub na javoře [Forsaken], 7 Voda a pláč [Sad of Heart], 8 Skromná [The Modest Maid], 9 Prsten [The Ring], 10 Zelenaj se, zelenaj [Omens], 11 Zajatá [The Maid Imprisoned], 12 Neveta [Comfort], 13 Šípek [The Wild Rose], [14] Život vojenský [The Soldier's Farewell]	26 June–13 July 1876	Prague, 1876	no. 14 unpubd	vi/3
61	40	3	Večerní písně [Evening Songs] (V. Hálek): 1 Ty hvězdičky tam na nebi [The stars that twinkle in the sky], 2 Mně zdálo se žes umřela [I dreamt that you were dead], 3 Já jsem ten rytíř z pohádky [I am that knight of fairy tale], 4 Když Bůh byl nejvíc rozkochán [When God was a happy mood]	? June – July 1876	nos.1–4 rev., pubd as op.3 (Leipzig, 1881); nos.5, 6 rev., pubd in Ger. as nos.3, 4 of 4 Lieder, op.9 (Berlin, 1880); nos.7–11 rev., pubd as op.31 (Prague, 1883); no.12 unpubd; nos.2–3 orchd as B128	vi/1
		9/3	5 Umlklo stromů šumění [The soughing of the trees]
		9/4	6 Přilítlo jaro z daleka [The spring came flying]
		31	7 Když jsem se díval do nebe [When I was gazing], 8 Vy malí, drobní ptáčkové [You little tiny singing birds], 9 Jsem jako lípa košatá [Just like a lime tree], 10 Vy všichni, kdo jste stísněni [All you with burdens], 11 Ten ptáček, ten se nazpívá [That little bird sings]
			12 Tak jak ten měsíc v nebes báň [Thus as the moon]
68	(69)	19b	Ave Maria (sacred), A/Bar, org	23–4 July 1877	Prague, 1883	pubd with B95A	vi/1
69	47	38	Moravské dvojzpěvy [Moravian Duets], S, A, pf: 1 Možnost [Hoping in Vain], 2 Jablko [Greeting from Afar], 3 Věneček [The Crown], 4 Hoře [The Smart]	?Aug 1877	Berlin, 1879	Moravian folk poems; 1st pubd in Ger. and Eng.; pubd in Cz. (Prague, 1913)	vi/3
82	59	—	Hymnus k Nejsvětější Tvojici [Hymn to the Most Holy Trinity] (sacred), 1v, org	14 Aug 1878	Prague, 1911	pubd version rev. J. Suk as Hymnus ad laudes in festo Sanctae Trinitatis	vi/1
84a	(60)	(50)	Tři novořecké básně [3 Modern Greek Poems] v, orch	completed 22 Aug 1878		lost	—
84b	60	50	Tři novořecké básně [3 Modern Greek Poems] (trans. V.B. Nebeský): 1 Koljas (Píseň kleftská) [Klepht Song], 2 Nereidy [Nereids], ballad, 3 Žalozpěv Pargy [Parga's Lament], heroic song	completed 22 Aug 1878? 1883?	Breslau, 1883		vi/1
95A	(69)	19b	Ave maris stella (sacred), 1v, org	4 Sept 1879	Prague, 1883	pubd with B68	vi/1
95B	69	19a	O sanctissima dulcis virgo Maria (sacred), A, Bar, org	6 Sept 1879	Prague, 1883		vi/3
95Bbis	(69)	19a	O sanctissima dulcis virgo Maria! (sacred), S, A, org	28 May 1890	—	voice parts only	vi/3
104	73	55	Zigeunermelodien (Heyduk): 1 Mein Lied ertönt, ein Liebespsalm, 2 Ei, wie mein Triangel wunderherrlich läutet, 3 Rings ist der Wald so stumm und still, 4 Als die alte Mutter, 5 Reingestimmt die Saiten, 6 In dem weiten, breiten, luft'gen Leinenkleide, 7 Horstet hoch der Habicht auf den Felsenhöhen	? 18 Jan – ?23 Feb 1880	Berlin, 1880	composed to Ger. trans. by Heyduk; nos.1, 3, 1st perf. Vienna, 4 Feb 1881	vi/1

B	S	op.	Title	Composition	Publication	Remarks	AD
113	79	—	Dětská píseň [Child's Song] (Š. Bačkora), 2vv unacc.	14 Nov 1880		pubd in Hudební výchova, iv (1956)	vi/3
118	81	—	Na tej našej střeše laštovečka [There on our roof a swallow carries], S, A, pf	†?March – ?May 1881	Prague, 1882	Moravian folk poem; pubd in Album of Umělecká besedá	vi/3
123	(6)	—	[6] Písně [Songs] (Pfleger-Moravský)	†?1881–2	—	rev. of B11 nos.1, 5, 9, 8, 13, 11	vi/2
124	(6)	2	[4] Písně [Songs] (Pfleger-Moravský)	†?1881–2	Prague, 1882	rev. of B11 nos.1, 5, 11, 13	vi/2
128	—	(3)	Večerní písně [Evening Songs] (Hálek), 1v, orch	24 Nov 1882	—	orch of B61, nos.2, 3	ii/5
140	—	—	Kačena divoká [The Wild Duck]	Sept/Oct 1884	—	folk poem, lost; once listed as op.15/?2	—
142	—	—	Two songs: 1 Schlaf, mein Kind, in Ruh', 2 Seh' ich dich, mein liebes Mädchen	1–2 May 1885	Prague, 1921	Cz. folk poems; composed to Ger. trans.	vi/2
146	99	73	V národním tónu [In Folk Tone]: 1 Dobrú noc, má mila [Good-night, my darling], 2 Žalo dievča, žalo trávu [When a maiden was a-mowing], 3 Ach, není, není tu, co by mě těšilo [There is nothing here to comfort me], 4 Ej, mám já koňa faku [I have a faithful mare]	completed 13 Sept 1886	Berlin, 1887	nos.1, 2, 4 Slovak folk poems; no.3 Cz. folk poem	vi/2
157	105	82	Vier Lieder (O. Malybrok-Stieler): 1 Lasst mich allein, 2 Die Stickerin, 3 Frühling, 4 Am Bache	?22 Dec 1887 – 5 Jan 1888	Berlin, 1888	composed to orig. Ger.	vi/2
160	(6)	83	[8] Písně milostné [Love Songs] (Pfleger-Moravský)	Dec 1888	Berlin, 1889	rev. of B11, nos.8, 3, 9, 6, 17, 14, 2, 4	vi/2
185	122	99	[10] Biblické písně [Biblical songs] (Bible of Kralice): 1 Oblak a mrákota jest vůkol Něho [Clouds and Darkness], 2 Skrýše má a paveza má Ty jsí [Thou art my hiding-place], 3 Slyš, ó Bože, slyš modlitbu mou [Give ear to my prayer], 4 Hospodin jest můj pastýř [The Lord is my shepherd], 5 Bože! Bože! Píseň novou [I will sing a new song], 6 Slyš, ó Bože, volání mé [Hear my cry], 7 Při řekách babylonských [By the rivers of Babylon], 8 Popatřiž na mne a smiluj se nade mnou [Turn thee unto me], 9 Pozdvihuji očí svých k horám [I will lift up mine eyes], 10 Zpívejte Hospodinu píseň novou [O sing unto the Lord a new song]	5–26 March 1894	Berlin, 1895	nos.1–5 orchd as B189, 4–8 Jan 1895, pubd for S, orch (Berlin, 1929) with nos.6–10, arr. orch by V. Zemánek	vi/2
194	126	—	Ukolébavka [Lullaby] (F.L. Jelínek)	20 Dec 1895	Prague, 1896	pubd in Květy mládeže, ii (1896), suppl.	vi/4
204	137	—	Zpěv z Lešetínského kováře [Song from The Blacksmith of Lešetín] (S. Čech)	5–6 Aug 1901	Berlin, 1911	op.posth., inc., rev. J. Suk	vi/2

ARRANGEMENTS

B	Title	Arranged	Publication	Remarks	AD
601	Dvě irské písně [2 Irish Songs], male vv unacc: 1 Můj Konnor má tváře jak červená růže [Oh my Connor], 2 Nuž zdobte se kvítím, at'y zaplane zář [Ho! adorn yourself with flowers]	24 Oct 1878	—	no.2 from the Irish song Contented am I (Noch bonin shin doe), later known as The Battle Eve of the Brigade	vii
602	J. Brahms: Hungarian Dances nos.17–21, arr. orch	29 Oct – 6 Nov 1880	Berlin, 1881		vii
603	Ruské písně [Russian Songs], S, A, pf: 1 Povylétla holubice pode strání (Víletala golubina) [A dove flew away over the hillside], 2 Čím jsem já tě rozhněvala (Chem tebya ya gorchila?) [How have I angered you?], 3 Mladá, pěkná krasavice (Belolitsa, kruglolitsa) [A young, pretty beauty], 4 Cožpak, můj	?March 1883	Prague, 1951	2nd voice added and acc. rev. to songs in M. Bernard: Pyeseni ruskoga naroda (St Petersburg, 1866)	vii

B	Title	Arranged	Publication	Remarks	AD
	holoubku (Akh, chto zh tï, golubchik) [Ah, my little dove], 5 Zkvétal, zkvétal v máji květ (Tsveli, tsveli tsvetikï) [The flower was blooming, blooming in May], 6 Jako mhou se tmí (Akh, kak pal tuman) [It grows dark as if through the mist], 7 Ach, vy říčky šumivé (Akh, rechenki, rechenki) [Ah, you bubbling brooks], 8 Mladice ty krásná (Molodka, molodaya) [You beautiful young lady], 9 Po mátušce, mocné Volze (Vniz po matushke po Volge) [After the powerful mother Volga], 10 Na políčku bříza tam stála (Vo pole beryoza stoyala) [A birch tree stood there in the field], 11 Vyjdu já si podle říčky (Vïydu ya na rechenku) [I'll set out along the brook], 12 Na tom našem náměstí (Kak u nas na ulitse) [In that square of ours], 13 Já si zasil bez orání (Ya noseyal konopelku) [I sowed without ploughing], 14 Oj, ty luční kačko malá (Akh, utushka lygovaya) [Oh you little meadow duck], 15 V poli zrají višně (Gey, u poli vishnya) [The cherries are ripening in the field], 16 Oj, kráče havran černý (Oy, kryache, chernenkiy voron) [Ho, the black raven is walking]
604	J. Lev: Ha, ta láska [Ah, that love], 1v, orch	†?1880–84	—		vii
605	S. Foster: Old Folks at Home, arr. S, B, chorus, orch	†?Dec 1893 – Jan 1894	—	1st perf. New York, 23 Jan 1894	vii
606	Vysoká polka, arr. pf	11 June 1902	—		vii

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A Catalogues. B Source material. C Memoirs. D Biographical and critical studies. E Specific works.

A: CATALOGUES

O. Šourek: Dvořák's Werke: ein vollständiges Verzeichnis (Berlin, 1917)

J. Burghauser: Antonín Dvořák: Thematický katalog, bibliografie přehled života a díla [Thematic catalogue, bibliography, survey of life and work] (Prague, 1960, enlarged 2/1996, addl bibliography with J. Clapham)

B: SOURCE MATERIAL

P. Pry: 'Enthusiasts Interviewed, 7: "Pann" Antonín Dvořák', Sunday Times (London, 10 May 1885)

'From Butcher to Baton: an Interview with Herr Dvořák', Pall Mall Gazette (13 Oct 1886)

A. Dvořák: 'The Real Value of Negro Melodies', New York Herald (21 May 1893)

A. Dvořák: 'Franz Schubert', Century Magazine, xlviii (1894), 341–6; repr. in J. Clapham: Antonín Dvořák, Musician and Craftsman (London, 1966), 296–305

A. Dvořák: 'Music in America', Harper's New Monthly Magazine, xc (1895), 428–34; repr. in J.C. Tibbetts, ed.: Dvořák in America, 1892–1895 (Portland, OR, 1993)

'Bei Meister Dvorzak', Die Reichswehr [Vienna] (1 March 1904); Eng. trans. in Zprávy společnosti Antonína Dvořáka [Reports of the Antonín Dvořák Society], iv (Prague, 1984), 35–8

W. Altmann: 'Antonín Dvořák im Verkehr mit seinem Verleger Fritz Simrock', Die Musik, x/4 (1910–11), 259–92, 346–53; rev. in Simrock Jb, ii (1929), 84–151

O. Šourek: Dvořák ve vzpomínkách a dopisech (Prague, 1938, 9/1951; Eng. trans., 1954/R, as Antonín Dvořák: Letters and Reminiscences)

A. Hořejš: Antonín Dvořák: the Composer's Life and Work in Pictures (Prague, 1955) [also pubd in Cz., Ger. etc.]

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák and the Philharmonic Society', ML, xxxix (1958), 123–34

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák at Cambridge', MMR, lxxxix (1959), 135–41

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Visit to Russia', MQ, li (1965), 493–503

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Musical Directorship in New York', ML, xlviii (1967), 40–51

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Relations with Brahms and Hanslick', MQ, lvii (1971), 241–54; Cz. trans., HV, x (1973), 213–24 [incl. orig. Ger. text of letters]

J. Burghauser: Commentary to Antonín Dvořák: IX Symfonie E moll Z nového světa, op.95 (Prague, 1972)

K. Honolka: Antonín Dvořák in Selbstzeugnissen und Bilddokumenten (Reinbek, 1974)

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Unknown Letters on his Symphonic Poems', ML, lvi (1975), 277–87; Ger. trans., ÖMz, xxxi (1976), 645–58 [incl. orig. Ger. text of letters and facs.]

J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's First Contacts with England', MT, cxix (1978), 758–61

J. Clapham: 'Dvorak's Musical Directorship in New York: a Postscript', ML, lix (1978), 19–27

M. Kuna and others, eds.: Antonín Dvořák: Korespondence a dokumenty[Correspondence and documents], i–iv (Prague, 1987–95), [letters sent], v–viii (Prague, 1996–) [letters received]

J.H. Yoell: Antonín Dvořák on Records (New York, 1991)

M. Kuna: 'Umělecka stipendia Antonína Dvořáka' [The artistic scholarship of Antonín Dvořák], HV, xxix (1992), 293–315

M. Kuna: 'Čestný doktorát Antonína Dvořáka na české univerzitě v Praze' [Antonín Dvořák's honorary doctorate at the Czech University in Prague], HV, xxx (1993), 162–78

C: MEMOIRS

'How Dr. Dvořák gives a Lesson', New York Herald (14 Jan 1894) [mostly interview]; repr. in J.C. Tibbets, ed.: Dvořák in America, 1892–1895 (Portland, OR, 1993), 364–5

J. Michl: 'Rok u Dvořáka' [A year with Dvořák], HR, vi (1912–13), 169–80

J. Michl: 'Vzpomínky na Antonína Dvořáka' [Reminiscences of Dvořák], HR, x (1916–17), 293–302

J.M. Thurber: 'Dvořák as I knew him', The Etude, xxxvii (1919), 693–4; repr. in J.C. Tibbets, ed.: Dvořák in America, 1892–1895 (Portland, OR, 1993), 380ff

H.G. Kinscella: 'Dvořák and Spillville, Forty Years After', Musical America, liii/10 (1933), 4, 49

J. Bachtik: Antonín Dvořák dirigent (Prague, 1940)

K. Leitner: 'Antonín Dvořák jak učil' [How Dvořák taught], Newyorské listy (7 Sept 1941); pubd separately (New York, 1943)
P.J. Polansky, ed.: Otakar Dvořák: Antonín Dvořák, My Father (Spillville, IA, 1993)

D: BIOGRAPHICAL AND CRITICAL STUDIES

E. Hanslick: 'Anton Dvorak', Neue freie Presse (23 Nov 1879); repr. in Hanslick: Concerte, Componisten und Virtuosen (Berlin, 1886, 4/1896/R); Eng. trans. Musical Review (11 Dec 1879); Dwight's Journal of Music, xl (1880), 2; Musical Standard, new ser., xviii (1880), 58
E. Ehlert: 'Anton Dvořák', Westermanns illustrierte deutsche Monatshefte, xlviii (1880), 232–8
H. Krigar: Anton Dvořák: eine biographische Skizze (Leipzig, 1880/*R*1992 with commentary by J. Burghauser)
J. Bennett: 'The Music of Anton Dvořák', MT, xxii (1881), 165–9, 236–9
J. Zubatý: Anton Dvořák: eine biographische Skizze (Leipzig, 1886)
S. Taylor: 'Dvořák', Cambridge Review, xii (1890–91), 381–2
W.H. Hadow: 'Antonín Dvořák', Studies in Modern Music, ii (London, 1895, many later edns incl. 1926/R), 171–225
F.J. Sawyer: 'The Tendencies of Modern Harmony as Exemplified in the Works of Dvořák and Grieg', PMA, xxii (1895–6), 53–88
H.E. Krehbiel: 'Anton Dvořák', Looker-On, iii (1896), 261–71
'Dvořákův sborník' [Dvořák memorial volume], HR, iv (1910–11), 409–96 [28 articles by Šoureck and others, incl. L. Janáček: 'Za Antonínem Dvořákem', ed. B. Štědroň, in Musikologie, v (1958), 353–4]
Antonín Dvořák sborník: statí o jeho díla a životě [Dvořák memorial volume: essays on his work and life] (Prague, 1912)
O. Šourek: Život a dílo Antonína Dvořáka [Life and work of Dvořák] (Prague, 1916–33; i–ii, 3/1954–5; iii–iv, 2/1956–7)
K. Hoffmeister: Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1924; Eng. trans., 1928/R)
O. Šourek: Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1929, 3/1947; Eng. trans., 1952)
O. Šourek and P. Stefan: Dvořák: Leben und Werk (Vienna, 1935; Eng. trans., 1941/R as Anton Dvořák)
V. Fischl, ed.: Antonín Dvořák: his Achievement (London, 1943)
J.M. Květ: Mládí Antonína Dvořáka [The youth of Dvořák] (Prague, 1943, 3/1944)
A. Robertson: Dvořák (London, 1945, 2/1964)
R. Smetana: O místo a význam Dvořákova skladatelského díla v českém hudebním vývoji [The place and meaning of Dvořák's compositions in the development of Czech music] (Prague, 1956)
A. Hetschko: Antonín Dvořák (Leipzig, 1965)
J. Burghauser: Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1966; Eng. trans., 1967)
J. Clapham: Antonín Dvořák, Musician and Craftsman (London, 1966)
J. Clapham: 'Dvořák and the American Indian', MT, cvii (1966), 863–7
J. Berkovec: Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1969)
Z. Sádecký: 'Dvořákova tónina dur a moll: oblast diatonický I' [Dvořák's major and minor keys: diatonic], HV, viii (1971), 152–64, 318–42
R. Gerlach: 'War Schönberg von Dvořák beeinflusst? Zu Arnold Schönbergs Streichquartett D-Dur', NZM, Jg.133 (1972), 122–7
J. Bajer, ed.: Česká hudba světu, svet česke hudbě (Prague, 1974) [incl. M. Černý: 'K periodizaci tvorby Antonína Dvořáka' [The periodization of Dvořák's works], 87–104; V. Jegorovová: 'O některých společných rysech Dvořákova a Cajkovskéno symfonismu' [Some common traits in the symphonic style of Dvořák and Tchaikovsky], 105–18]
J. Clapham: 'Dvořáks Aufstieg zum Komponisten von internationalen Rang: einige neue Entdeckungen', MF, xxx (1977), 47–55
M. Kuna: 'Antonín Dvořák a Rusko', HRo, xxx (1977), 386–92
J. Clapham: 'The Dissemination Abroad of Czech Music Towards the End of the 19th Century: its Extent and its Limitations', Hudba slovanských národů a její vliv na evropskou hudební kulturu: Brno 1978, 119–25
J. Clapham: Dvořák (Newton Abbot, 1979)
N. Butterworth: Dvořák: his Life and Times (Tunbridge Wells, 1980)
J. Vysloužil: 'Anton Bruckner und Antonín Dvořák?', Bruckner Jb 1981, 106–13
J. Clapham: 'Dvořák on the American Scene', 19CM, v (1981–2), 16–23
U. Kurth: Aus der Neuen Welt: Untersuchungen zur Rezeption afroamerikanischer Musik in europäischer Kunstmusik des 19. und frühen 20. Jahrhunderts (Göppingen, 1982)
J. Clapham: 'New Dvořák Discoveries', HRo, xxxvi (1983), 138–45
J. Volek: 'Harmonické "lahůdky" Antonína Dvořáka' [Harmonic 'tit-bits' of Antonín Dvořák], OM, xv (1983), 71–9
T. Hirsbrunner: 'Mensch und Natur bei Dvořák: Komponist zwischen Romantik und Impressionismus', Universitas, xxxix (1984) 423–8
P. Petersen: 'Brahams und Dvořák', HJbMw, vii (1984), 125–46
H.H. Schönzeler: Dvořák (London and New York, 1984)
J. Volek: 'Tektonické ambivalence v symfoniích Antonína Dvořáka' [Structrual ambivalence in the symphonies of Antonín Dvořák], HV, xxi (1984), 2–29
J. Burghauser: Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1985)
R. Pečman, ed.: Dvořák, Janáček and their Time (Brno, 1985)
J. Musil: 'Neznámé rodové vztahy Antonína Dvořáka' [Unknown family relationships of Antonín Dvořák], HV, xxiii (1986), 217–37
M. Beckerman: 'In Search of Czechness in Music', 19CM, x (1986–7), 61–73
K. Döge: 'Ein Komponist ohne Problembewusstsein? Bausteine zu einem differenzierteren Dvořák-Bild', NZM, Jg.149/9 (1988), 5–10
J. Tyrrell: Czech Opera (Cambridge, 1988)
J. Liebscher: 'Dvořák und München: ein Beitrag zur Rezeption der tschechischen Nationaloper in Deutschland', Musik in Bayern, xxxiv (1989), 41–60
J. Vysloužil: 'Antonín Dvořák und Richard Wagner', Bayreuther Festspiele: Programmheft II (1989), 21–37
J. Clapham: 'Some Reflections on how Dvořák's Music was First Received Abroad', Czech Music, xvi/2 (1989–90), 30–38
J. Musil: 'Glosy o předcich Antonína Dvořáka' [Comments about the ancestors of Antonín Dvořák], HV, xxvii (1990), 32–8
Die Instrumentalmusik (Struktur – Funktion – Ästhetik): Brno XXVI 1991 [incl. M.K. Černý: 'Antonín Dvořáks Beitrag zur Entwicklung und Wandlung der Sonatenform', 145–9; V. Jegorova: 'Zur Anlage der Sonatensatzformen in Dvořák's Symphonien: Tradition und ihre Erneuerung', 151–60; A. Brandeis: 'Antonín Dvořák und Wien', 165–9]
J. Burghauser: 'Dvořáka a Janáčkova dumka' [The dumka in the music of Dvořák and Janáček], HRo, xliv (1991), 86–9
J. Clapham: 'Zapomenuty Dvořákuv triumf' [Dvořák's forgotten triumph], HRo, xliv (1991), 386–8
K. Döge: Antonín Dvořák: Leben-Werke-Dokumente (Mainz, 1991), enlarged 2/1997
K. Döge: 'Dvořák a Německo' [Dvořák and Germany], HV, xxviii (1991), 46–56
O. Specinger: 'Antonín Dvořák a Nelahozeves', OM, xxiii (1991), 262–8
S. Wollenberg: 'Celebrating Dvořák: Affinities between Schubert and Dvořák', MT, cxxxii (1991), 434–7
J. Burghauser: 'Dvořák and Smetana: Some Thoughts on Sources, Influences and Relationships', Czech Music, xvii/1 (1991–2), 16–24
G. Melville-Mason: 'Dvořák and Elgar', Czech Music, xvii/1 (1991–2), 30–38
G. Melville-Mason: 'Sir Thomas Beecham and Antonín Dvořák', Czech Music, xvii/2 (1991–2), 44–8
R. Pečman: Utok na Antonín Dvořák [The attack on Antonín Dvořák] (Brno, 1992)
M. Beckerman: 'Henry Krehbiel, Antonín Dvořák, and the Symphony "From the New World"', Notes, xlix (1992–3), 447–73
M. Beckerman, ed.: Dvořák and his World (Princeton, NJ, 1993)
J.J. Loven: Dvořák in Spillville: 100 Days, 100 Years ago 1893–1993 (Spillville, IA, 1993)
J.C. Tibbetts, ed.: Dvořák in America 1892–1895 (Portland, OR, 1993)
J. Burghauser: 'Concerning one of the Myths about Dvořák: Dvořák and the Apprentice Butcher', Czech Music, xviii/1 (1993–4), 17–24
Czech Music, xviii/2 (1993–4) [incl. J. Burghauser: 'The Beginnings of Dvořák's Musical Education', 32–52; P. Alexander: 'Tracking the Wrong Indians', 52–63; H. Klevar and P. Polansky: 'The Dvořák Myths in Spillville', 64–72; M. Beckerman: 'On the Real Value of Yellow Journalism: James Creelman and Antonín Dvořák', 83–100; J. Clapham and G. Melville-Mason: 'Dvořák in a New Role: Dvořák and the Economic Depression of 1893', 100–26
K. Döge and P. Jost, eds.: Dvořák-Studien (Mainz, 1994)
M. Negrey: 'Chopin i Dvořák: próba paraleli' [Chopin and Dvořák: some parallels], Muzyka, słowoo, sens: Mieczystawowi

Tomaszewskiemu w 70 rocznicę urodzin, ed. A. Obers (Kraków, 1994), 47–54
M. Pospíšil and M. Ottlová, eds.: Antonín Dvořák 1841–1991 (Prague, 1994)
J. Slavíková: Dvořák a Anglie [Dvořák and England] (Prague, 1994)
D. Beveridge: 'Nové poznatky o mládí Antonína Dvořáka' [New findings about Dvořák's youth], HV, xxxii (1995), 389–414
A. Houtchens: 'Dvořák and Janáček: New Insights into an Old Friendship', Janáček and Czech Music, ed. M. Beckerman (St Louis, 1995), 255–62
J. Smaczny: 'Dvořák and Harmonic Experiment', Czech Music, xix (1995–6), 30–43
D. Beveridge, ed.: Rethinking Dvořák: Views from Five Countries (Oxford, 1996)
J. Musil: 'Archivní nálezy k Františku Dvořákovi, otci skladatele Antonína Dvořáka' [Archive discoveries of František Dvořák, the father of the composer Antonín Dvořák], HV, xxxiii (1996), 286–9
J. Gabrielová, ed.: Antonín Dvořák a současníci [Antonín Dvořák and contemporaries] (Příbram, 1998)

E: SPECIFIC WORKS

L. Janáček: 'České proudy hudební' [Czech musical currents], Hlídka, ii (1897), 285–92 454–9, 594–600; iii (1898), 277–82; ed. B. Štědroň in Musikologie, v (1958), 342–52 [analyses of The Water Goblin, The Noon Witch, The Golden Spinning-Wheel and The Wild Dove]
O. Šourek: Dvořákovy symfonie (Prague, 1922, 3/1948; Eng. trans., 1952/R, in The Orchestral Works of Antonín Dvořák)
D. Tovey: Essays in Musical Analysis (London, 1935–9/R, abridged 2/1981)
O. Šourek: Dvořákovy skladby komorni [The chamber music of Dvořák] (Prague, 1943, 2/1949; Eng. trans., abridged, 1956/R)
O. Šourek: Dvořákovy skladby orchestralní [The orchestral works of Dvořák] (Prague, 1944–6; Eng. trans., abridged, 1956/R)
M. Očadlík: 'Antonín Dvořák', Svět orchestru [The world of the orchestra], ii (Prague, 1946, 3/1961), 243–335
H. Kull: Dvořáks Kammermusik (Berne, 1948)
J. Clapham: 'The Evolution of Dvořák's Symphony "From the New World"', MQ, xliv (1958), 167–83
J. Burghauser: Orchestrace Dvořákovy'ch Slovanských tanců [The orchestration of Dvořák's Slavonic dances] (Prague, 1959)
M. Černý: 'Smyčcový kvartet D dur Antonína Dvořáka' [Dvořák's String Quartet in D major], Živá hudba, i (1959), 109–58
J. Clapham: 'Blick in die Werkstatt eines Komponisten: die beiden Fassungen von Dvořák Klaviertrio f-moll', Musica, xiii (1959), 629–34
A. Sychra: Estetika Dvořákovy symfonické tvorby [The aesthetics of Dvořák's symphonic works] (Prague, 1959; Ger. trans., 1973)
J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Symphony in D minor : the Creative Process', ML, xlii (1961), 103–16
J. Clapham: 'The National Origins of Dvořák's Art', PRMA, lxxxix (1962–3), 75–88
J. Harrison: 'Antonin Dvořák', The Symphony, ed. R. Simpson, i (Harmondsworth, 1966, 2/1972)
J. Zich: 'Instrumentace dechové serenády Antonína Dvořáka' [The instrumentation of Dvořák's wind serenade], Živá hudba, iv (1968), 65–72
M. Černý: 'Zum Wort-Ton-Problem im Vokalwerk Antonín Dvořák's', Music and Word: Brno IV 1969, 139–57
J. Clapham: 'Indian Influence on Dvořák's American Chamber Music', Musica cameralis: Brno VI 1971, 174–56 [music exx., 525]
D. Beveridge: 'Sophisticated Primitivism: the Significance of Pentatonicism in Dvořák's American Quartet', CMc, no.24 (1977), 25–36
J. Smaczny: 'Armida: Dvořák's WrongTurning?', Zpráva [London], iii/5 (1977), 10–14
R. Layton: Dvořák Symphonies and Concertos (London, 1978)
J. Clapham: 'Dvořák's Cello Concerto, a Masterpiece in the Making', MR, xl (1979), 123–40
N. Jers: '"Dvořák, der Progressive": entwickelnde Variation in der 9. Symphonie', Musica, xxxiii (1979), 258–62
M. Kuna: 'Dvořák's "Dimitrij": its History', MT, cxx (1979), 23–4
M. Pospíšil: 'Dvořák's "Dimitrij": its Music', MT, cxx (1979), 24–5
D. Beveridge: Romantic Ideas in a Classical Frame: the Sonataforms of Dvořák (diss., U. of California, Berkeley, 1980)
J. Schläder: 'Märchenoper oder symbolistisches Musikdrama? Zum Interpretationsrahmen der Titelrolle in Dvořáks "Rusalka"', Mf, xxxiv (1981), 25–39
K. Stöckl and K. Döge: Antonín Dvořák, Sinfonie Nr.9 e-moll, op.95 'Aus der Neuen Welt': Einführung und Analyse (Mainz, 1982)
D. Beveridge: 'Dvořák's Piano Quintet, op.81 : the Schumann Connection', Chamber Music Quartetly (1984), spr., 2–10
K.-H. Stahmer: 'Drei Klavierquartettre aus den Jahren 1875/76: Brahms, Mahler und Dvořák im Vergleich', HJbMw, vii (1984), 113–23
M. Pospíšil: 'Dvořáks "Dimitrij" als Editionsproblem', JbO, ii (1986), 87–108
A. Houtchens: A Critical Study of Antonín Dvořák's 'Vanda' (diss., U. of California, Santa Barbara, 1987)
I. Vojtěch: 'Vertonte Sprache in der geistigen Tradition der Tschechischen Musik: A. Dvořák, Biblische Lieder op.99, Nr.4, "Hospodin jest můj pastýr"', Das musikalische Kunstwerk: Festschrift Carl Dahlhaus, ed. H. Danuser and others (Laaber, 1988), 579–88
D. Beveridge: 'Echoes of Dvořák in the Third Symphony of Brahms', Musik des Ostens, xii (1989), 221–30
M. Hallová, Z. Petrášková and J. Tauerová-Veverková, eds.: Musical Dramatic Works by Antonín Dvořák (Prague, 1989)
C.N. Kirkendall: Techniques of Choral and Orchestral Writing in the 'Te Deum' Settings of Berlioz, Bizet, Bruckner, Dvořák and Verdi (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1989)
J. Smaczny: A Study of the First Six Operas of Antonín Dvořák: the Foundations of an Operatic Style (diss., U. of Oxford, 1989)
H. Schick: Studien zu Dvořáks Streichquartetten (Laaber, 1990)
J. Smaczny: '"Alfred": Dvořák's Operatic Endeavour Surveyed', JRMA, cxv (1990), 80–106
J. Gabrielová: 'Antonín Dvořák und Johannes Brahms: Bemerkungen zur Kompositionsproblematik der Symphonie Nr.6 D-Dur, op.60', Die Instrumentalmusik (Struktur – Funktion – Ästhetik): Brno XXVI 1991, 157–64, JRMA, cxv (1990), 80–106
J. Gabrielová: Rané tvůrčí období Antonína Dvořáka: studie ke kompoziční problematice vybraných instrumentálních děl [The early creative period of Antonín Dvořák: an essay on problems of composition in selected instrumental works] (Prague, 1991)
R.M. Longyear: 'Motivic Unity and Harmonic Variety in Dvořák's Requiem', In Theory Only, xii/5–6 (1991–2), 51–64
J. Burghauser: 'Dvořákuv návrh americké hymny' [Dvořák's American anthem project], HRo, xlv (1992), 131–4
M. Beckerman: 'Dvořák's "New World" Largo and The Song of Hiawatha', 19CM, xvi (1992–3), 35–48
D. Beveridge: 'Dvořák's "Dumka" and the Concept of Nationalism in Music Histiography', JMR, xii (1992–3), 303–25
J. Gabrielová: 'Österreichische und böhmische Symphonik: ein Widerspruch? Die frühen Symphonien von Antonín Dvořák im Kontext der österreichischen Symphonik im zweiten Drittel des 19. Jahrhunderts', Entwicklungen, Parallelen, Kontraste: zur Frage einer 'österreichischen Symphonik': Linz 1993, 99–110
J.-H. Koo: A Study of Four Representative Piano Quintets by Major Composers of the Nineteenth Century: Schumann, Brahms, Dvořák, Franck (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1993)
L. Linnenbrügger: 'Antonín Dvořáks Sinfonische Dichtung "Die Waldtaube" op.100: Untersuchungen zur musikalischen Realisation der literarischen Vorlage und zur motivisch-Thematischen Arbeit', Neues Musikwissenschaftliches Jb, ii (1993), 113–44
S.R. Pelkey: Antonín Dvořák's First Cello Concerto in A-major: a Comparison of the Original, Raphael and Sádlo/Burghauser Editions (diss., U. of Houston, 1993)
D. Philippi: Antonín Dvořák: Die Geisterbraut/Svatební košile op.69 und Die heilige Ludmilla/Svatá Ludmila op.71 (Tutzing, 1993)
A. Houtchens: 'Libuše and Vanda: Legendary and Operatic Sisters', Czech Music, xviii/1 (1993–4), 63–72
H. Schick: 'What's American about Dvořák's "American" Quartet and Quintet', Czech Music, xviii/2 (1993–4), 72–83
J. Brabcová and J. Burghauser, eds.: Antonín Dvořák, Dramatik [Antonín Dvořák, the dramatist] (Prague, 1994)
D. Beveridge: 'Romantic and Twentieth-Century Styles in the 1870s: Music for String Orchestra by Dvořák and Janáček', Janáček and Czech Music, ed. M. Beckerman (St Louis, 1995), 263–71
D. Philippi: 'Dvořák's Suite Op.98 and Humoresques Op.101 for Pianoforte: American or Bohemian?', Czech Music, xix, (1995–6), 43–58

Y. You: A Historical Overview and Analysis of the Cello Concerto in B minor, op.104 by Antonín Dvořák (diss., U. of Cincinnati, 1996)
J. Smaczny: Dvořák: Cello Concerto (Cambridge, 1999)

KLAUS DÖGE

Dvorsky, Michel. See HOFMANN, JOSEF.

Dvorsky, Peter (b Partizánske, nr Topol'čany, 27 Sept 1951). Slovak tenor. He studied at the Bratislava Conservatory and the Scuola della Scala in Milan. After his début, with the Bratislava opera in 1972 as Lensky, he won the Moscow Tchaikovsky Competition in 1974 and the Geneva International Competition the next year. He first sang at the Vienna Staatsoper in 1977 (the Italian Singer in Der Rosenkavalier), and appeared as Alfredo at the Metropolitan Opera the same year. In 1978 Dvorsky sang Rodolfo at La Scala and the Duke in Rigoletto at Covent Garden, returning in 1988 as Lensky and as Riccardo (Un ballo in maschera); he has also appeared at the Bol'shoy, at the Teatro Colón, Buenos Aires, and with the Chicago Lyric Opera as well as in most major European centres, including Salzburg (Cavaradossi, 1989) and Edinburgh (Faust, 1990). He deploys his lyric tenor with strong dramatic feeling and much tonal beauty, if variable technique. He has recorded several operas by Donizetti, Puccini and Verdi, and has been particularly admired in his recordings of Czech operas, including Janáček's Jenůfa and The Makropulos Affair and Suchoň's The Whirlpool.

NOËL GOODWIN

Dwight, John Sullivan (b Boston, 13 May 1813; d Boston, 5 Sept 1893). American writer on music. A graduate of Harvard College (1832) and Harvard Divinity School (1836), Dwight manifested an early affinity with the German idealist tradition in his annotated translations of poetry by Goethe and Schiller. As a leading contributor to the Associationist Harbinger (1845–9) and Dwight's Journal of Music (1852–81), which he founded and edited, he elevated criticism to a higher and more educational plane. After the death of his wife in 1860, he spent his last 20 years as resident librarian and permanent president of the Harvard Musical Association, which sponsored an annual series of concerts under his management (1865–82).

Dwight's writings of the 1840s reflect New England transcendentalist currents and a familiarity with such European thinkers as E.T.A. Hoffmann, A.B. Marx, Gottfried Fink, Charles Fourier, F.-J. Fétis, Frédéric Kalkbrenner, Thomas Carlyle and William Gardiner. Championing aesthetic education and informed listening, Dwight proposed that music – as art, science, and language of feeling ennobling and uniting people – be made widely accessible. In America he was a pioneer in describing the humanistic importance and large-scale structures of Beethoven's symphonies.

Dwight wrote perceptively about orchestral music from Haydn to early Wagner, chamber music as it entered the public sphere, and Mozart's operas. He favoured German and French operas over the more fashionable Italian works of the day, but resisted Wagner's dramatic works. Although he disparaged striving for effects, he welcomed brilliant performances by virtuosos. He supported American composers such as James C.D. Parker and John Knowles Paine and urged the collecting and preservation of the African-American vocal heritage.

Dwight was the first major American-born music critic and contributed significantly to mid-19th-century American musical culture. His Journal is a valuable primary source for American musical developments, offering insights into scholarship and events in the USA and abroad through original essays, translations, reprints and reports representing diverse viewpoints about styles and composers. However, his differentiation between 'music as music and music as illustration' hindered his objective appraisal of the newer programmatic music, particularly in his later years.

WRITINGS

'On the Proper Character of Poetry and Music for Public Worship', Christian Examiner and General Review (Nov 1836), 254–63
'Music, as a Branch of Popular Education', Boston Musical Gazette (May 1838), 9–10
Select Minor Poems, Translated from the German of Goethe and Schiller (Boston, 1839)
'The Concerts of the Past Winter', The Dial (July 1840), 124–34
'Academy of Music – Beethoven's Symphonies', The Pioneer (Jan–Feb 1843), 26–8, 56–60
'Handel and his Messiah', United States Magazine, and Democratic Review (March 1843), 264–79; 'Mozart' (Nov 1843), 465–73; 'Haydn' (Jan 1844), 17–25
'The History of Music in Boston', The Memorial History of Boston, iv (Boston, 1881), 415–64 with C.C. Perkins: History of the Handel and Haydn Society, of Boston (Boston, 1883/R)
Dwight Papers in US-Bp

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveA (W.L. Fertig; R. Allen Lott)
G.W. Cooke: John Sullivan Dwight: Brook-Farmer, Editor, and Critic of Music: a Biography (Boston, 1898/R)
E. Waters: 'John Sullivan Dwight: First American Critic of Music', MQ, xxi (1935), 69–88
W.L. Fertig: John Sullivan Dwight, Transcendentalist and Literary Amateur of Music (diss., U. of Maryland, 1952)
M.W. Lebow: A Systematic Examination of the 'Journal of Music and Art' Edited by John Sullivan Dwight: 1852–1881, Boston, Massachusetts (diss., UCLA, 1970)
W.G. Heath: 'John Sullivan Dwight', The Transcendentalists: a Review of Research and Criticism, ed. J. Myerson (New York, 1984), 131–4
O.F. Saloman: 'Dwight and Perkins on Wagner: a Controversy within the American Cultivated Tradition, 1852–1854', Music and Civilization: Essays in Honor of Paul Henry Lang, ed. E. Strainchamps, R.M. Maniates and C. Hatch (New York, 1984), 78–92
B.E. Chmaj: 'Fry versus Dwight: American Music's Debate over Nationality', American Music, iii (1985), 63–84
I. Sablosky, ed.: What They Heard: Music in America, 1852–1881, from the Pages of 'Dwight's Journal of Music' (Baton Rouge, LA, and London, 1986)
O.F. Saloman: 'American Writers on Beethoven, 1838–1849: Dwight, Fuller, Cranch, Story', American Music, viii (1990), 12–28
O.F. Saloman: Beethoven's Symphonies and J.S. Dwight: the Birth of American Music Criticism (Boston, 1995)
O.F. Saloman: 'John Sullivan Dwight', Dictionary of Literary Biography, ed. W.T. Mott (Columbia, SC, forthcoming)

ORA FRISHBERG SALOMAN

Dyagilev, Sergey Pavlovich. See DIAGHILEV, SERGEY PAVLOVICH.

Dybeck, Richard (b Odensvi, Västmanland, 1 Sept 1811; d Södertälje, 28 July 1877). Swedish folk music collector and antiquarian. He studied law at Uppsala University (1831–4) and was then engaged in official duties until 1842. He was a good amateur singer but had no professional training in music. While still a student he made rune stones and the study of folk traditions his main interest in life. In spite of poor health, he travelled throughout Sweden in pursuit of this interest until a few years before his death, working particularly in the province of Dalarna. His work was partly supported by the Vitterhetsakademien and by the State. Most of his findings were published in Dybeck's journal Runa (1842–50 and 1865–76) or in separate editions of folk music (1846–56). The most important of these was Svenska vallvisor och hornlåtar (Stockholm, 1846), containing unarranged transcriptions of shepherds' music. Through his publications and his well-attended folk music concerts, Dybeck not only created a wide interest in folk music but also influenced Swedish art music, dominated after 1850 by a nationalist trend.

Dybeck's name is now associated above all with the text of the Swedish national anthem, Du gamla, du fria (originally friska), which was adapted to a folktune. It was sung at his first folk music concert in 1844 and printed in 1845. However, the song was officially recognized as a national anthem only after Dybeck's death.

WRITINGS

'Självbiografiska anteckningar', Västmanlands fornminnesförenings årsskrift, xliii (1961)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

SBL (G. Berg) [with full list of works]
C. Mangärd: Richard Dybeck: Romantikern och fornforskaren (Stockholm, 1937)
C.-A. Moberg: 'Richard Dybeck och svensk folkmusik', Arv, iv (1948), 1–27

FOLKE BOHLIN

Dyce, William (b Aberdeen, 19 Sept 1806; d Streatham, 14 Feb 1864). Scottish painter and pioneer in the revival of plainchant in Anglican use. The third son of a physician, Dyce showed a talent for painting and music at an early age. While still a pupil at Aberdeen Grammar School, he taught himself to play the organ, and at the age of 12 could extemporize 'with great facility'. He took the MA at Marischal College, Aberdeen, at the age of 16, going on to read medicine; but finding the subject uncongenial, he turned to theology with the intention of entering the priesthood, though his enthusiasm for painting remained strong. Thenceforward, the three main interests of his youth – painting, music and the church – were to exert their combined influence upon his activities. The religious subjects which Dyce found so congenial in his meticulously executed canvases display one aspect of that merging of influences. Another is to be found in his scholarly endeavours for the reform of church music.

After establishing a firm position as a professional painter, in 1838 Dyce was appointed superintendent of the Schools of Design, Somerset House. Two years later he was elected professor of the theory of fine art at King's College, London. It was during his first four years at King's that Dyce turned his attention to a serious study of church music. The result was seen in the formation of the Motett Society in 1841, and in the publication of his sumptuous edition of the Common Prayer, The Order of Daily Service ... with Plaintune (1842–4). In the preface and appendix to that volume Dyce examined the nature of plainchant, opening the way for a clearer understanding of the subject in England, and of its use with English text in the Anglican liturgy. The revival of Merbecke's music for the Communion Service and the production of Helmore's Manual of Plainsong were both helped by Dyce's pioneer activity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.S. Dyce: Life, Correspondence and Writings of William Dyce (MS, *c*1890, Aberdeen Art Gallery)
B. Rainbow: 'William Dyce', MT, cv (1964), 900–01
B. Rainbow: The Choral Revival in the Anglican Church, 1839–1872 (London, 1970)
P. Hardwick: 'The Revival of Interest in Plainsong in England, 1833–1850', Canadian Association of University Schools of Music, ix/2 (1979), 53–69

BERNARR RAINBOW

Dychko, Lesya (Lyudmila) Vasil'yevna (b Kiev, 24 Oct 1939). Ukrainian composer. In 1964 she graduated from the Kiev Conservatory where she studied composition with Dan'kevych and Lyatoshyns'ky, then completed postgraduate work with the latter and with Peyko at the Moscow Conservatory (1968–70). After teaching in various establishments in Kiev from 1963, in 1993 she was appointed lecturer on orchestration at the National Music Academy of Ukraine. In 1969 she won first prize at a Moscow young composers' competition and has since received the Nikolay Ostrovsky prize (1970) and the Taras Shevchenko prize (1989). She has served on the administrative bodies of the Ukrainian and the all-union composers' unions, and is a recipient of the titles Honoured Representative of the Arts of the Ukraine (1982) and People's Artist of the Ukraine (1995). A representative of the neo-folklorist trend in Ukrainian music, she chiefly composes choral works in which she reinterprets old traditional texts in specific folk genres. Ukrainian visual art of the 15th to 17th centuries has served as a creative starting point, as has the colour combinations of decorative folk art. She is drawn to both historical themes and also to nature – in works such as U Kyevi zori ('The Stars in Kiev') and Sonyachne kolo ('The Circle of the Sun') respectively – as sources of inspiration; in recent years she has composed much sacred music.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Dosvitni vogni [Fires Before Dawn] (ballet, 1, V. Nerodenko, after L. Ukraïnka), 1966; Natkhnennya [Inspiration] (ballet, after paintings by K. Bilokur), 1966, rev. 1983; Zolotoslov [The Mellifluous Talker] (op, trad.), 1995

Cants.: Chervona kalina [The Red Guelder Rose Tree] (Ukr. songs from 1400–1600), solo vv, chorus, chbr orch, 1969, rev. 1971; Karpatskaya [The Carpathian Cant.] (trad.), chorus, 1975; 4 pory roku [The 4 Seasons of the Year] (trad.), chorus, 1975; Sonyachne kolo [The Circle of the Sun], children's chorus, orch, 1975; Vesna [Spring], children's chorus, orch, 1976; Zdravstvuy, noviy, dobriy den'! [Greetings, New, Fine Day!], children's chorus, 1976; Slava rabochim professiyam! [Glory to the Working Professions!], children's chorus, chbr ens, 1980; U Kyevi zori [The Stars in Kiev] (trad.), 1982

Other vocal: 5 fantaziy (after paintings by Surikov, Levitan, Vasnetsov, Shishkin), chorus, orch, 1962; Privitannya zhittya [Greeting to Life] (sym., B.I. Antonïch), S, B, chbr orch, 1972; Veter revolyutsii [The Wind of Revolution] (sym., M. Ril'sky and P. Tichina), chorus, 1976; I narekosha imya Kiev [And They Gave it the Name Kiev] (orat, Russ. chronicles), 1982; Indiya-Lakshmi (orat, Indian poets), 1986; 5 khokku (choral conc., Bas'o), 1989; Liturgiya no.1 (choral conc.), 1994; Liturgiya no.2 (choral conc.), 1995; Frantsuzskiye freski [French Frescoes] (choral conc.), 1996; Ispanskiye freski [Spanish Frescoes] (choral conc.), 1996; romances (Ukraïnka, I. Franko, Ril'sky and Tichina)

Orch suites, str qt, solo inst works, film scores

MSS in UA-Km

Principal publishers: Muzychna Ukraïna, Muzika

BIBLIOGRAPHY

S. Pavlishin: 'Predrassvetnïye ogni' [Fires before Dawn], SovM (1968), no.2, pp.48–53
M. Hordiychuk: Lesya Dychko (Kiev, 1978)

N. Nekrasova: 'Impul'sy natkhnennya' [The impulses of inspiration], Muzïka [Kiev] (1995), no.3, pp.4–5

YELENA ZIN'KEVICH

Dyer, Mrs. See HODGSON, MARY.

Dygon [Wyldebore], John (fl 1497–1538). English composer. In 1497 he was at St Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury, where another John Dygon (possibly his uncle, or merely a patron) was abbot. In 1512 Dygon gained the BMus at Oxford but he returned to the abbey, becoming sub-prior before 1521. In that year he went to Leuven to study with Vives, with whom he returned to England to the abbey two years later. He was prior from 1528 to the Dissolution. In 1538, like other members of the abbey, he changed his name, calling himself John Wyldebore, and he is listed with that name in the record of pensions given to former monks. It is possible that Wyldebore was his family name (it is fairly common in Kent), and that he adopted 'Dygon' as a compliment to his patron. Several priests with similar names held livings in Kent at the time. The most celebrated, John Wilbore of Rochester, cannot be Dygon, although it is possible that the cleric at Willesborough in 1542 or the vicar of Minster from 1550 to 1557 may have been. Both these parishes had been in the gift of St Augustine's. It is possible that he was the John Dygon, sometime monk, whose burial in the parish of St Andrew, Canterbury, was recorded in August 1566.

Three short motets for three voices by Dygon, Ad lapidis posicionem, Quod enim vivit and Rex benedicte tuos, survive in the Baldwin Book (GB-Lbl R.M.24.d.2.). Considerations of text and mensuration, as well as Baldwin's choice of mensuration, indicate that they may be parts of a longer work, but they show a typically English blend of florid melismatic lines and syllabic sections. A treatise in Trinity College, Cambridge (Ctc O.3.38), has been ascribed to Dygon on the strength of a note following a music example: 'Quod Joannes Dygouns M° Vuylborns'. The treatise, written in the early 16th century, is a close copy of extracts from Gaffurius with new music examples.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HawkinsH
J. Twyne: De rebus albionicis (London, 1590)
F.A. Gasquet: The Eve of the Reformation (London, 1900/R), 40–41
W.H.G. Flood: Early Tudor Composers (London, 1925)
R. Hallmark: 'An Unknown English Treatise of the 16th Century', JAMS, xxii (1969), 273–4
R. Bray: 'British Museum MS Royal 24 d 2 (John Baldwin's Commonplace Book): an Index and Commentary', RMARC, no.12 (1974), 137–51
A.B. Emden: A Biographical Register of the University of Oxford, A.D. 1501 to 1540 (Oxford, 1974), 182
W. Urry: Christopher Marlowe and Canterbury (London, 1988), 9, 148

STANLEY BOORMAN (with ROGER BOWERS)

Dykes, John Bacchus (b Hull, 10 March 1823; d Ticehurst, Sussex, 22 Jan 1876). English composer. While still a schoolboy he played the organ in several churches in Hull, where his grandfather was an Evangelical vicar. Secular as well as sacred music was cultivated in his home, and he was taught the violin and the piano. He took a classics degree at St Catharine's College, Cambridge, in 1847. His letters from Cambridge hardly mention church music except T.A. Walmisley's organ playing. He took lessons from Walmisley and joined his madrigal society, in which he particularly enjoyed Morley's madrigals and balletts; as president of the Cambridge University Musical Society he revitalized orchestral playing. He was ordained priest in 1848. After a year as curate at Malton, Yorkshire, he became precentor and minor canon of Durham Cathedral in 1849; his duties included charge of the choir, which he improved by insisting on more rehearsal and the regular attendance of lay clerks. He also began the annual music festivals in the cathedral for choirs drawn from as far away as Newcastle, and during the long illness of William Henshaw (1814–62), the cathedral organist, his organ playing was admired. Some of the hymns he composed for various friends became locally popular through non-statutory services held in the Galilee Chapel of the cathedral. Hearing of the projected issue of Hymns Ancient and Modern, Dykes timorously sent seven of them to the music editor, W.H. Monk. All were accepted, more were requested and ultimately 60 tunes by Dykes were included in various editions. In the year of the first edition (1861) Durham University awarded him an honorary doctorate in music. Despite the later modern reaction against Victorian hymnody, and particularly against Dykes, his tunes have shown remarkable staying power. His 31 tunes in Hymns Ancient and Modern Revised (1951) far exceed those by any other composer in number. Six of them, all from the 1861 edition, persist in general use: 'Nicaea' (Holy, holy, holy), 'Hollingside' (Jesu, lover of my soul), 'Melita' (Eternal Father, strong to save), 'Horbury' (Nearer my God to thee), 'St Cross' (O come and mourn) and 'St Cuthbert' (Our blest Redeemer).

For all his love of playing, singing, hearing and directing music, there is no evidence that Dykes undertook professional training, even with Walmisley. The tribute to his tunes by H.C. Colles in The Oxford History of Music (vii, 1934) shrewdly describes him as an amateur musician who could not tell why he succeeded or failed in composition beyond judging whether the music suited the words or not. Composing was for him the by-product of a vocation to which he was wholly devoted, and which led him in 1862, despite Ouseley's remonstrances, to resign his cathedral post and become vicar of St Oswald, Durham, where he gradually introduced ritual reforms.

Both the nature and the varying quality of his music are directly related to the aims of the choral revival in the Church of England. 'Lux benigna' (1865), Dykes's treatment of Newman's 'Lead kindly light' which the cardinal himself greatly approved, shows the influence of the secular partsong. His tunes are harmonically based, often treating the congregation as merely one element in a concert-like production. As a contemporary observer, writing in the Church Choirmaster, noted, they tend to 'treat the short musical phrases . . . as connected sentences, rather than as made up of isolated chords. Hence the frequent occurrence of quasi-pedal phrases, and an indifference to passing dissonances so long as the musical passage brings itself well home at the close.'

Dykes's best hymn tune, 'St Cross' (1861), could almost be mistaken for music by Orlando Gibbons, his favourite church composer (except for the inspired unison of the last line). Less striking, but harmonically also in the Gibbons vein, is 'Lux vera' (1870). The augmented 6ths and other chromatic chords made familiar by Schubert, Spohr, Chopin and others in more appropriate contexts than congregational music were more characteristic of other Victorians than Dykes, who imitated some of his contemporaries, such as Hervey and Barnby; yet most of the tunes in which he did so are now obsolete. One or two remain because the melody itself is well shaped and its climaxes are well contrived, for example the evening hymn 'Strength and Stay' (1875). Where Dykes's music suggests unctuous piety it is normally inherent in cosy melodies which tend to hug the mediant and avoid striking leaps. This would be true of the admirable 'Horbury' (1859) but for the first modulation to the mediant minor and then the climax on the chord of the flattened 7th.

Dykes's canticles and anthems are less pretentious and elaborate than most of their time and kind, for the organ normally doubles the dull voice part. Only two of his longer works are worth reviving. One is an unaccompanied setting of the funeral sentences, I am the Resurrection and the Life – admittedly in extended homophonic hymn style, but with fine voice parts and in phrases so tempered by verbal rhythm that they avoid monotony and take varied lengths. The other is the anthem These are they. It is too long for all its sections to be used in normal cathedral services, but the opening movement is in the key and style of Walmisley's D minor service, its rich dignity including a well-managed fugato. The solo movement for soprano sounds like an extract from an oratorio or opera, even the organ parts resembling piano versions of an orchestral score; then, in the Mendelssohnian finale for solo quartet and chorus, comes the barcarolle-style response to 'God shall wipe away all the tears from their eyes'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (W.B. Squire)
'Contemporary Hymn-Tunes', Church Choirmaster and Organist, i (1867), 182–4
Obituary, MMR, vi (1876), 38
J.T. Fowler, ed.: The Life and Letters of John Bacchus Dykes (London, 1897/R)
H.C. Colles: 'England 1850–1900', OHM, vii (1934), 456–7
K. Parry and E. Routley: Companion to Congregational Praise (London, 1953)
E. Routley: The Music of Christian Hymnody (London, 1957)
Bulletin [Hymn Society of Great Britain and Ireland], v (1961)
M. Frost, ed.: Historical Companion to Hymns Ancient and Modern (London, 1962)
A. Hutchings: Church Music in the Nineteenth Century (London, 1967/R)
A. Hutchings: 'Dr. John Dykes, 1823–1876', English Church Music, new ser., xi (1973), 41–56
'Dykes: Amateur or Professional?', Bulletin [Hymn Society of Great Britain and Ireland], xxi (1977)
N. Temperley: The Music of the English Parish Church (Cambridge, 1979), i, 303–10

ARTHUR HUTCHINGS/NICHOLAS TEMPERLEY

Dykes Bower, Sir John (b Gloucester, 13 Aug 1905; d Bromley, 29 May 1981). English organist. He studied with Herbert Brewer and was organ scholar at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, where he took the MusB in 1928. Successively organist and master of the choir at Truro Cathedral (1926–9), New College, Oxford (1929–33), and Durham Cathedral (1933–6), he was appointed to St Paul's Cathedral, London, in 1936, where he served for 31 years. He was one of the two sub-conductors at the coronations of George VI and Elizabeth II in Westminster Abbey, and in 1953 conducted the St Paul's choir at the White House before President Eisenhower and at Carnegie Hall. As an organist his technique was soundly based, and his interpretations reflected the taste and style of his period. He instilled his high standards into students at the RCM, where he taught from 1936 to 1969. He was president of the Royal College of Organists, 1960–62, and Master of the Worshipful Company of Musicians, 1967–8. Dykes Bower received an honorary DMus (Oxon) in 1944 and was knighted in 1968.

STANLEY WEBB

Dylan, Bob [Zimmerman, Robert Allen] (b Duluth, MN, 24 May 1941). American singer-songwriter. From a certain conception of popular music, predominant in the second half of the 20th century and centred on songs as a form of individual expression, he is the single most important figure. His influence has been pervasive not only immediately upon a flowering of singer-songwriters and much of rock music's basic premise, but also in many other musical genres and in languages other than American English. As popular music itself became pervasive in the culture of the period, so Dylan acquired central and even iconic importance.

1. To 1967. From a Jewish middle-class background, his family moved from Duluth to Hibbing in 1947; Dylan dropped out of the University of Minnesota in 1959, changed his name (subsequently legally confirmed in 1962), and joined the folk scene in Greenwich Village, New York. A review by Robert Shelton in the New York Times (29 September 1961) was followed by a contract with the Columbia record label who subsequently released nearly all of his albums. Dylan's early recordings from Bob Dylan (1962) to Another Side of Bob Dylan (1964) corresponded with the then-prevailing folk style. His songs were congruent with the protest movement, and the most famous of them, Blowin' in the Wind (1962) and The times they are a-changin' (1963), were among its anthems, making his perceived eventual apostasy all the more bitter. In retrospect, Dylan's folk period (visiting Woody Guthrie, dressing, talking and sounding rural) seems an invention. In truth, his very first single, Mixed Up Confusion (1962) is a rockabilly thrash which looks beyond his acoustic albums, and the best of the early protest songs (The Lonesome Death of Hattie Carroll and Spanish Harlem Incident, both of 1964) are careful constructions in language, their attention to the materiality of the song-form as important as their authentic message. He seems, in retrospect, a young man needing to imitate local and current style, while honing the minutiae of the form.

Already Dylan was the most touching of love lyricists, with a sense of time passing impressive in someone so young, a facet seen in 1963 with Girl of the North Country and Boots of Spanish Leather, and in 1964 with One Too Many Mornings and Mama, you been on my mind. As a songwriter, Dylan covered ground quickly: finding his sources in folk-blues, he discovered many of the formal possibilities of song. Consequently he used minimal resources that remained constant throughout his recordings: his always-distinctive voice for words, guitar for chords (limited to the basic diatonic chords, making secondary sevenths and chromatic chords big events), and harmonica for formal breaks.

From Another Side of Bob Dylan to the recordings eventually issued in 1975 as The Basement Tapes, but recorded in 1967, is Dylan's heroic period, critically the most canonized, and his most decisive influence on rock's common practice. The defining steps for this were Another Side of Bob Dylan with its greater proportion of love songs, the song My Back Pages (1964) a commentary upon and refusal of his earlier work, and Bringing It All Back Home, which includes a rock-band backing, and with which he appeared in controversial concerts of the time. Musically this period is a rare case of Dylan's being influenced actively by pop music of the day, responding to such covers of his songs House of the Rising Sun by the British Beat group the Animals in 1964, and Mr. Tambourine Man by the American folk-rock group the Byrds in 1965. However, 'that thin, that wild, mercury sound' (Playboy, January 1978) which Dylan fostered, first with studio musicians and later with The Band, became its own rock music topos. This piano-based sound, with organ and room for searing solo guitar, eventually fed into Bruce Springsteen's E-Street Band, Graham Parker's Rumour, and Elvis Costello's Attractions. The important principle that Dylan established was to take this sound, however messy, and, against it, attend to the words. These in turn make most sense against the background of the Beat poetry of the day, mediated primarily through Allen Ginsberg: D.A. Pennebaker's film Don't Look Back (1967) has Ginsberg standing to the side as Dylan throws cards with keywords of the song Subterranean Homesick Blues.

Dylan, able to affect any amount of Beat poetry's prose-like surreal babble, and make sharp juxtapositions and cuts inherited from literary modernism, nevertheless preserves rhyme and is able to include consummatory cliché-choruses, thus maintaining an important difference between poetry and song. The idea of something as provocative, lengthy and literate as Like a Rolling Stone (1965) becoming mass material was a liberating moment for rock. This period had a great effect on the pop song and the pop group: consequently Dylan's influence can be found whenever a band is happy to thrash on simple chords, while one person works out words which are a carefully constructed statement. In that sense, the purest heirs to mid-1960s Dylan may be the garage bands in general as much as the American singer-songwriters who followed self-consciously in his wake. The Basement Tapes established Dylan's commitment to the fleeting nature of the present, his preference for song-in-performance, as opposed to song-as-published-document or to record-as-produced-sound. His Emersonian commitment to the present went beyond the song itself: he established the oblique interview for rock journalism, published doodles and a strange novel, and infiltrated sleeve notes with surreal prose. Live performance for Dylan was always a form of creative commentary upon an earlier song, and never a matter of accuracy or fidelity of imitation.

2. 1968–97. With John Wesley Harding (1968) and Nashville Skyline (1969), Dylan began a sustained exploration of the possibilities of the thematic content of song and of song-collection. A further series of albums eventually reached a second critical peak, with Blood on the Tracks (1974), Desire (1975) and Street Legal (1978). By this stage prolixity had become a key feature: Dylan's ability to spin out songs over five or more verses, with a consistent quality of rhyme had never been matched in rock music. Sound, and even quality of voice, changed with each of these albums; there is relatively little attention to the quality of production, and Dylan continued to seize the day, the visualized present, through the relation of albums to concert-as-theatre (the Rolling Thunder Revue) and the radical film Renaldo and Clara (1978). The range of songs at this time is impressive and perhaps unsurpassed: formally, they experiment with an unstable narrator (Jacques Levy acting as Dylan's guide in this); lyric is maintained, reaching a peak with Blood on the Tracks; in place of protest is an epic tone, with themes of justice ('Idiot Wind' on Blood on the Tracks, 'Hurricane' on Desire) and later redemption (Street Legal and those following); 'Lily Rosemary and the Jack of Hearts' from Blood on the Tracks is a virtuosic display of wit.

The four albums following Street Legal concerned religion, not a new theme for Dylan, but here with a new tone. The first two, Slow Train Coming and Saved, evoked the Revelation, Infidels evoked the Old Testament prophets. While Dylan's overall level of songwriting was still high, albums began to be handed over to producers in order to attend to the quality of sound, resulting in a polish and diversity that marks his albums through the 1980s. These included Slow Train Coming with producers Barry Beckett and Jerry Wexler, Infidels with Mark Knopfler, Empire Burlesque with Arthur Baker, Oh Mercy with Daniel Lanois, and, in 1990, Under the Red Sky with Don and David Was. With these the interest in the sound compensates for a general falling-off in the level of the songs, albeit with many exceptions ('Jokerman' and 'Blind Willie McTell' in 1983, 'Dark Eyes' in 1985, 'Brownsville Girl' in 1986, co-written with Sam Shephard, and 'Most of the Time' and 'Series of Dreams' in 1989). At this time Dylan also appeared with guest musicians, including a tour with the Grateful Dead and with the Traveling Wilburys. Dylan's 'pastness' was reinforced by tribute albums, concert tributes, awards and burgeoning literature. All of this seemed difficult for Dylan, who reacted as best he knew by an affirming commitment to the fleeting present, shown through his constant touring. He took part in various recording sessions with Woody Guthrie (1987), Doc Pomus (1994) and Jimmie Rodgers (1997). He returned to the cover-version content of his very first album with Good as I Been to You (1992), and with World Gone Wrong (1993), which presents the poignant sound of Dylan aging. The critical acclaim accorded the album Time out of Mind in 1997, again produced by Lanois, prompted promise of further reissues; the same year, Dylan continued as ever to expand the reach of pop music, playing at Bologna to a contemplative Pope.

3. Influence. By pop music's standards, the literature on Dylan is enormous. From the start he attracted learned criticism, probably because of the prominence and interest of words, but also a peculiar degree of of fan attention, shown classically by A.J. Weberman, who studied Dylan's household rubbish. Dylan fanzines, of which there have been many, carry the air of an academic approach. He was awarded the honorary doctorate in Music from Princeton in 1970, elected to the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1988, and made a Commandeur des Arts et des Lettres in 1990.

Dylan's part in wider musical culture is difficult to assess, due to several factors: to the nature of songwriter as part-musician and part-poet, to the status of recording, and to the wider purpose of art in the period. His influence is enormous, if selective, taking in singer-songwriters internationally and rock music generally. Any songwriter, either solo or writing for a band, tended to feel the necessity of coming to terms with Dylan, as the pre-eminent singer-songwriter of his generation; as a genre, folk music was forced to decide between preservation of a mythical past and engagement in the present. Many important areas remained untouched, however: soul, funk and rap were largely unaffected, his influence on the poetry world was negligible, and his relation to the world of contemporary music non-existent. However, Dylan's presence reflects uncomfortably on the social condition of artistic Modernism. In his ability (especially during the 1960s) to reflect historical circumstance, in minutiae (as rhymer, love lyricist, defender of the frailty of live performance), and as user of language, it may be in art's broadest and most generous sense that Dylan's innovations have greatest significance.

Bob Dylan, 1991

WRITINGS

Tarantula (London, 1971)
Writings and Drawings (London, 1973)
The Songs of Bob Dylan from 1966 through 1975 (New York, 1975)
Drawn Blank (New York, 1996)
Lyrics 1962–96 (New York, 1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BIBLIOGRAPHY AND DISCOGRAPHY

D. Price: 'Bibliography of Bob Dylan', Popular Music and Society, iii (1974), 227–41
P. Humphries and J. Bauldie: Oh No! Not Another Bob Dylan Book (Brentwood, 1991)
C. Heylin: Bob Dylan: the Recording Sessions 1960–1994 (New York, 1995)
C. Heylin: Bob Dylan: a Life in Stolen Moments. Day by Day 1941–95 (London, 1996)

ESSAY COLLECTIONS

C. McGregor: Bob Dylan: a Retrospective (New York, 1972, 2/1996)
M. Gray and J. Bauldie, eds.: All Across the Telegraph (London, 1987)
E. Thomson and D. Gutman, eds.: A Dylan Companion (London, 1990)
J. Bauldie, ed.: Wanted Man: In Search of Bob Dylan (Harmondsworth, 1992)

BIOGRAPHY

S. and B. Ribakoke: Folk Rock: the Bob Dylan Story (New York, 1966)
D. Kramer: Bob Dylan (New York, 1967)
T. Thompson: Positively Main Street: an Unorthodox View of Bob Dylan (New York, 1970)
A. Rémond: Les chemins de Bob Dylan (Paris, 1971)
A. Scaduto: Bob Dylan: an Intimate Biography (New York, 1971)
F. Ducray: Dylan (Paris, 1975)
S. Pickering: Bob Dylan Approximately: a Portrait of the Jewish Poet in Search of God (New York, 1975)
S. Shepard: Rolling Thunder Logbook (New York, 1978)
L. Sloman: On the Road with Bob Dylan: Rolling with the Thunder (New York, 1978)
J. Cott: Dylan (New York, 1984)
R. Shelton: No Direction Home (London, 1986)
B. Spitz: Dylan: a Biography (New York, 1988)
C. Heylin: Behind the Shades (Harmondsworth, 1991)
D. Engel: Just Like Bob Zimmerman's Blues: Dylan in Minnesota (London, 1997)
C.P. Lee: Like the Night: Bob Dylan and the Road to the Manchester Free Trade Hall (London, 1998)

CRITICISM

D.A. DeTurk and A. Poulin: 'I Will Show you Fear in a Handful of Songs', The American Folk Scene (New York, 1967), 270–79
F. Davey: 'Leonard Cohen and Bob Dylan: Poetry and the Popular Song', Alphabet, xvii (1969), 12–29
R.A. Rosenstone: '"The Times They Are A-Changin'": the Music of Protest', Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, no.382 (1969), 131–44
M. Gray: Song and Dance Man: the Art of Bob Dylan (London, 1972, 2/1981)
D. Monaghan: 'Taking Bob Dylan Seriously: the Wasteland Tradition', English Quarterly, vi (1973), 165–70
G. Moneiro: 'Dylan in the Sixties', South Atlantic Quarterly (1974), 160–72
L.A. Poague: 'Dylan as Auteur: Theoretical Notes, and an Analysis of "Love Minus Zero/No Limit"', Journal of Popular Culture, viii (1974), 53–8
G.M. Campbell: 'Bob Dylan and the Pastoral Apocalypse', Journal of Popular Culture, vii (1975), 696–707
B. Fong-Torres: 'Bob Dylan: Knockin' on Dylan's Door', What's That Sound (New York, 1976), 148–68
N. Lindstrom: 'Dylan: Song Returns to Poetry', Texas Quarterly, xix/4 (1976), 131–6
J.L. Rodnitzky: Minstrels of the Dawn: the Folk Protest Singer as Cultural Hero (Chicago, 1976)
T.S. Johnson: 'Desolation Row Revisited: Bob Dylan's Rock Poetry', Southwest Review, lxii (1977), 135–47
R. Serge Denisoff and D. Fandray: 'Hey, Hey, Woody Guthrie, I Wrote you a Song: the Political Side of Bob Dylan', Popular Music and Society, v/5 (1977), 31–42
J. Wells: 'Bent out of Shape from Society's Pliers: a Sociological Study of the Grotesque in the Songs of Bob Dylan', Popular Music and Society, vi/1 (1978), 39–44
D. Hattenhauer: 'Bob Dylan as Clown and Guru', Journal of American Culture, ii (1979), 176–85
E. Thomson, ed.: Conclusions on the Wall: the Bob Dylan Bootleg Records (Paris, 1980)
D. Hattenhauer: 'Bob Dylan as Hero: Rhetoric, History, Structuralism, and Psychoanalysis in Folklore as a Communicative Process', Southern Folklore Quarterly, xlv (1981), 69–88
C. Sumner: 'The Ballad of Dylan and Bob', Southwest Review, lxvi/1 (1981), 41–54
F. Bloom: 'Seeing Dylan Seeing', Yale Review, lxxi (1982), 304–20
B. Bowden: Performed Literature (Bloomington, IN, 1982)
J. Herdman: Voice Without Restraint (Edinburgh, 1982)
M. Roos: 'Fixin' to Die: the Death Theme in the Music of Bob Dylan', Popular Music and Society, viii/3–4 (1982), 103–16
A. Gonzalez and J.J. Makay: 'Rhetorical Ascription and the Gospel According to Dylan', Quarterly Journal of Speech, lxix (1983), 1–14

W. Mellers: A Darker Shade of Pale (London, 1984)
D. Williams: Bob Dylan: the Man, the Music, the Message (Revell, NJ, 1985)
M. Roos and D.O'Meara: 'Is Your Love in Vain: Dialetical Dilemmas in Bob Dylan's Recent Love Songs', Popular Music, vii (1987), 35–50
A. Day: Jokerman: Reading the Lyrics of Bob Dylan (Oxford, 1988)
P. Williams: Performing Artist: the Music of Bob Dylan, i: 1960–73 (New York, 1990)
T. Riley: Dylan: a Commentary (London, 1992)
P. Williams: Performing Artist: the Music of Bob Dylan, ii: 1974–86 (New York, 1992)
P. Williams: Watching the River Flow: Observations on his Art-In-Progress 1966–1995 (New York, 1996)
G. Marcus: Invisible Republic: Bob Dylan's Basement Tapes (London, 1997)
C. Heylin: Dylan's Daemon Lover (London, 1999)

DAI GRIFFITHS

Dylecki, Mikołaj. See DILETSKY, NIKOLAY.

Dynamics. The intensity of volume with which notes and sounds are expressed. In the 20th century dynamics came to be seen as one of the fundamental parameters of composition which function interdependently to create musical meaning and structure.

1. History. 2. Notation. 3. Performing practice.

1. HISTORY. Dynamic variation is so natural to the performance of almost all styles of music that its presence can normally be assumed even when indications for it are mainly or even entirely absent from the notation. That dynamic transitions occurred in the music of ancient Greece is suggested by Plutarch's accounts, and it is likely that the monophonic hymns of the 1st century CE displayed nuances of volume illustrating their meaning or imitating the tone of speech. Medieval musicians had no word for 'dynamics' per se, but it is implicit in the concepts of structura and processus. By the early Renaissance period dynamic values were reflected in changes in the number of voices and their registers. In Josquin's Missa 'Pange lingua', for instance, paired imitation heightens the dynamic effect: first tenor and bass, then soprano and alto, then all four voices together. Sweelinck and his pupils Scheidt and Jacob Praetorius (ii) cultivated a 'static' sound pattern linked to the manuals and registers of the organ, while the Venetian composers gave fuller play to dynamic contrasts in their polychoral works.

Vicentino and Zarlino were among the first theorists to pay attention to volume. Vicentino (1555, ff.37 and 88*v*) called for degrees of strength in vocal music appropriate to the text and the passage; Zarlino (1558, p.204) emphasized that 'one must sing with a voice that is moderate and in proportion to those of the other singers'. Later theorists linked dynamics to the rhetorical musical figures associated with the doctrine of the Affections. Michael Praetorius (1619, bk 3, p.132) described 'pian and forte' as methods used 'to express the affectus and move human feelings'; Mersenne (1634, bk 2, p.363) distinguished eight degrees of strength necessary to express different degrees of the passions.

In general, dynamic markings occur only sporadically in music of the Baroque period. The erroneous 20th-century concept of 'terrace dynamics' was based on an overly literal interpretation of the scanty dynamic performance terms of the time. Such graduated dynamics of register were more or less peculiar to the harpsichord and organ, which during the Baroque period gave way to continuo instruments capable of more nuanced dynamics. The organ too expanded its dynamic range with the invention of the swell-box in 1676 by Thomas Mace. The mechanism was widespread by the early 18th century, and was taken into account by Handel, though not by J.S. Bach.

In the mid-18th century a new concept of dynamics emerged in conjunction with the genres of the symphony and sonata. The tendency towards intensification and climaxes in the Classical style demanded a more flexible system of dynamics. In contrast to the ornamental dynamic effects characteristic of the Baroque concerto grosso, the dynamics employed by the Mannheim composers were not governed by theories of composition and affects. A crescendo passage in sonata form, for instance, could reappear later as a transition without a crescendo. C.P.E. Bach used abrupt changes and contrasts in dynamics to create a dialogue structure. Schubart (1784–5, pubd 1806, p.275) explained the markings sf, sfa and sforzato in Mozart's music as indicating a 'sudden and swift tonal emphasis', an effect that hardly existed 50 years earlier. Haydn's use of sforzati on rhythmically and metrically unstressed notes anticipated Beethoven's powerful dynamic contrasts, such as the sudden piano at climaxes that served as a 'dynamic deceptive cadence'.

With the emergence of dynamics as a structural principle in the music of Rossini and Berlioz, dynamics became even more vital to expression. The melodic and harmonic flow of Wagner's Tristan und Isolde owes much to a system of dynamics that helps create the impression of music in a permanent state of transition. Schumann's dynamics often have spatial aspects; for instance, the heading of op.6 no.17 reads 'Wie aus der Ferne' ('as if from a distance'), and at the beginning of the First Symphony Schumann adds the note 'Von der Höhe' ('from a height'). Webern often associated very small degrees of volume with moments of great tension; the slightest sound could produce the effect of the 'menacing shadow of an infinitely distant and infinitely mighty noise' (T. Adorno, Gesammelte Schriften, xvi, 118). Hindemith, in the Marienleben, referred to dynamics as 'an accompanying structural factor', a viewpoint shared by many of his contemporaries. Stravinsky in his earliest works employed a dynamics of register created by instrumental additions; after the mid-1920s he avoided crescendos and decrescendos, partly out of adherence to what he took to be the style of earlier periods. In Ravel's Bolero the gathering weight and intensity of the instrumentation generates a crescendo extending through the entire piece.

Dynamics withstood control by 12-tone serial technique better than any other of the musical parameters. Messiaen limited himself to seven degrees of intensity in his Mode de valeurs et d'intensités, and Stockhausen's Kreuzspiel (1951) uses not 12 but six dynamic qualities. Although in Inori (1973–4) Stockhausen associated 60 gradations of dynamics with various instrumentations, he subsequently came to believe that dynamics could not serve a structural function. Boulez observed that it was 'almost impossible for an interpreter to "standardize" the dynamic degrees'. He contrasted the 'punctual dynamics' of the late 20th century with the 'linear dynamics' of the pre-1950 period:

> By punctual dynamics we understand any established dynamic degree; the chains occur … without the existence of transitions or the appearance of transitions from one to the other. In linear dynamics, on the other hand, we are moving along the path from one given dynamic amplitude to another: crescendo, decrescendo and their combinations (Darmstädter Beiträge zur neuen Musik, v, 1983, p.53).

Postmodern composers exhibited a tendency to employ extremes at both ends of the dynamic spectrum. Ligeti's third piece for two pianos, for example, moves from fffff to pp in a single bar. Expressive and subtly nuanced dynamics occur in works of such composers as Nono, Crumb and Johanna Senfter. Cage and Feldman opened up the frontiers of silence. Feldman's music dispenses with dynamic form as inherited from the 19th century; the potency of quiet often makes itself felt in the absence of rhythmic organization. In electronic music, dynamic values precisely measured in decibels are combined with electronically generated tonal colour to create new spatial effects. A further extension of the concept of dynamics has been achieved through the use of microphones, amplification and regulation.

2. Notation. The Capirola Codex of 1517 (f.49*v*) contains the singular direction 'tocca pian piano'. The performance indications piano and forte are occasionally found in music composed around 1600, to indicate both echo effects (as in Bonelli's Primo libro delle vilanelle) and alternation between choirs (as in Giovanni Gabrieli's Sonata pian e forte). In Banchieri's madrigal comedy Pazzia senile the notated dynamics distinguish the characters from each other, and in the same composer's Barca di Venetia per Padova street criers and drinkers sing forte while the melodies of the fishermen are piano. In 17th-century notation, piano and Echo are often used synonymously. In genuine echo compositions it was usually sufficient to replace dynamic marks by appropriate headings; when solo voices or the chorus were to perform an echo effect, it was indicated by the words in Ecco or piano, or even more frequently by proposta – riposta.

Messe di voce (Domenico Mazzocchi used the sign C for the effect of increasing and decreasing sound) and diminuendos on long single notes were part of vocal and instrumental performing practice from the early 17th century. Caccini's principles of 'muovere de l'affetto' and 'cantare con affetto' would hardly have been conceivable without purposeful dynamics; those principles were adopted first by Monteverdi, Fantini and Castello, and later by Thomas Mace. In the foreword to Le nuove musiche (1601–2, p.63), Caccini described the esclamazione, which may already have been in use for decades, as 'really nothing but allowing some reinforcement of the voice.' In contrast to the messa di voce, the esclamazione involved letting the volume die down and immediately increase again. The dynamics developed in Italy in connection with affects and echoes stimulated German, French and English music and its notation. Italian dynamic markings were used throughout Europe, often alongside terminology from other languages. The notation of crescendos and decrescendos was particularly refined. Sometimes a crescendo was indicated by a graduated series of dynamic levels (e.g. p . . . f . . . ff), sometimes by phrases such as 'lowder by degrees' (Locke, The Tempest, 1675) or 'un peu plus forte et toujours en augmentant jusqu'à la fin' (Marais, Sonnaite à la mariesienne, 1723).

In the 18th century composers resorted to filled-in forks, equilateral triangles and needles to express constant changes of volume, for instance in violin sonatas by G.A. Piani (1712), Geminiani (1739) and Veracini (1744), and in Rameau's Hippolyte et Araicie (1733). Rameau and Geminiani indicated crescendos and decrescendos with wedges; Geminiani also used the direction rinforzando in the sense of a crescendo. The first edition of Leopold Mozart's Versuch einer gründlichen Violinschule (1756, pp.50–51) contains the following paraphrases: 'Piano . . . means quiet; forte . . . loud or strong. Mezzo . . . means half and is used to moderate the forte and piano. Piu . . . means more. Crescendo . . . growing. Decrescendo . . . on the other hand, indicates that the strength of the note is to diminish more and more'. Haydn used the markings pp, piu p, p, mezzo forte, poco f, f, f assai, ff, mezza voce, sotto voce, cresc., decresc., dim. and mancando. W.A. Mozart added mfp, sfz, sfp and callando to this stock of terms. Beethoven also used ppp (op.18), meno p, sempre p e dolce, piu f, sempre piu f, fff, fp, morendo, smorzando and perdendosi; in his scores such expressions as dolce, espressivo, cantabile and con espressione almost always indicate that the part thus described is the main one or its counterpart, not just a subordinate part.

In the course of the 19th century composers felt obliged to provide more and more performance indications; this led to proliferation of extreme values purportedly reflecting the composers' intentions. Berlioz was probably the first to resort to ffff, surpassing the fff found now and then in Weber and Beethoven. Carl Gollmick urged composers to treat pp and ff as superlatives, and to use ppp and fff only with reluctance (Critische Terminologie für Musiker und Musikfreunde, 1833). However, later composers ignored his plea for moderation. Verdi's Messa da Requiem contains the first ppppp, and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathétique' Symphony the first pppppp. The last movement of Skryabin's First Piano Sonata contains the marking Quasi niente, pppp, and his later directions range from velouté ('velvety') to éclatant ('piercing'). Schoenberg, in the fifth of the Kleine Klavierstücke op.19, added the phrase zart, aber voll ('tender but full') to a p. Mahler, Schreker, Berg, Draeseke, Puccini, Distler, Richard Strauss and Koechlin also used dynamic markings of above-average precision.

From the second half of the 19th century dynamic markings in scores by progressive composers are vertically differentiated. For instance, in Liszt's Tasso: lamento e trionfo, the adagio mesto section has four simultaneous markings: pp for the horn, ff for the harp, f espressivo for three solo cellos and bass clarinet, and p for the rest of the cellos and double basses. Debussy's performance indications such as en dehors, très en dehors and soutenu provide clarity over and beyond the hierarchy of the parts. In the later 19th century directions such as hervortretend and marki(e)rt were used by Draeseke, Wagner, Bruckner and others; the composers of the Second Viennese School began marking the main part (Hauptstimme) with 'H' and subordinate parts (Nebenstimmen) with 'N'. Schoenberg, whose op.19 prescribes vertically differentiated dynamics in several passages, required composers 'to show, in one's markings, whether the total loudness is meant or the instrument's own degree of loudness', the dynamic marking is therefore either related to the total sound of the work as composed, or subjectively absolute, not fitting into that sound 'from the point of view of the instrument' (Style and Idea, 2/1984, p.341).

Dynamic signs and terms can be taken as identical only within the works of individual composers, or at the most for historically limited periods. Even within a composer's personal style one must take account of diachronic developments; for instance, fortissimo denoting breadth of aspiration and conflict does not occur until Beethoven's middle period. 'Fortissimo does not always mean "as strong as possible" but can mean very strong, stronger than forte; like every term denoting strength, it comprises many degrees within itself' (A.B. Marx, Anleitung zum Vortrag Beethovenscher Klavierwerke, 1863, p.98). Marx took the ff in Beethoven's early works to be milder than the same marking in later works such as opp.57 and 106. The same observation applies to Schubert; the comparatively small expansion of a short piece such as one of his Ländler is hardly ever appropriate to the kind of large-scale fortissimo that has its place in sonata movements of larger dimensions.

In Le marteau sans maître, Boulez's instructions 'sans équilibre', as against 'sonorités très équilibrées entre elles' and 'Les nuances seront exécutées "ponctuellement"' (see §1 above), can be realized by a corresponding distribution of intensity. Notwithstanding the efforts of Schoenberg, Berg, Debussy, Stravinsky, Penderecki, Ligeti and Feldman, however, dynamics and the mingling of tonal colours, at least in the traditional instrumental make-up of an ensemble, are still not regarded as satisfactorily capable of notation. Moreover, the differences between, for instance, a piano played by only a few instruments and one played by a larger ensemble may be perceived, but no terms to describe them have been coined.

3. PERFORMING PRACTICE. An awareness of the significance of acoustics and dynamics in performance is attested at an early period. Zarlino (1558) wanted vocalization to be adapted to the conditions of performance: singing, he thought, should be more unobtrusive in a small than in a large space. Inadequately nuanced dynamics – even more than inadequate articulation – can disturb or even destroy the syntax set out by the composer, and in the case of vocal music distort the sense of the text. Beethoven directed his publisher to 'have all the p, pp, cresc., decresc., f and ff crossed out of my opera- none of them will be observed, after all, and if I were to hear them, I would lose all desire to write anything else'. Similar complaints have come down to us from C.P.E. Bach, Mozart, Wagner, Mahler, Pfitzner and other composers. In 1924 Richard Strauss lamented the tendency towards louder, less refined dynamics: 'Incompetent conductors, over-large opera houses, and sad to say, a lack of taste on the part of the general public, which is only too ready to prefer a strong voice to a fine one, have made good piano and messa voce singing a rarity' (Betrachtungen und Erinnerungen, 1949, p.138–9).

Smooth transitions, the 'glissando dynamics' (Boulez) of crescendo and decrescendo, had been in use for a long time before they were notated. Ganassi, in the first chapter of Opera intitulata Fontegara (1535), encouraged flautists 'to learn from and imitate' the human voice by allowing the breath to increase and decrease. Fantini's Modo per imparare a sonare di tromba (1638) requires every long note to be performed on the trumpet 'modo cantabile'. There is evidence for the performance of 'swelling' effects as early as the 16th century. Christoph Bernhard, in the mid-17th century, said that one should not 'suddenly fall from piano to forte' or the other way around, for this would 'become truly horrible to the ear'.

In L'art de toucher le clavecin (1716) François Couperin suggested how harpsichordists (and by implication organists as well) could give audiences the impression of an increase or decrease in sound, despite the instruments' lack of external dynamics, through the use of aspiration, céssation and suspension des sons. The latter two effects 'leave the ear uncertain [indéterminée], so that where bowed instruments will allow their sound to swell, the delaying of notes on the harpsichord . . . conveys the same impression'. Dissonances, according to all 18th- and 19th-century theoretical works on performance, are the first elements to be intentionally (or actually) emphasized. To a great extent, the suggestion of dynamics that a good harpsichordist can achieve depends on the technical quality of the instrument and the art of playing it with taste, experience and suggestibility.

When using modern instruments to play from 18th- and 19th-century notation, it must be remembered that 'the same dynamic markings must often be read in very different ways for different instruments' (W. Furtwängler, Ton und Wort, 8/1958, p.75). One should also remember that the sound of the Baroque orchestra was more slender and transparent than the denser, more compact sound of the orchestra after 1920, and that none of the instruments of the 19th century was as brilliant or capable of such intense and incisive performance as those available today. The selectivity of instruments and instrumental groups, and indeed their incompatibity with each other, has increased by comparison with the milder-sounding instrumental ensembles of earlier periods.

The relativity of musical dynamics is partly explained by the fact that every instrument has two, three or four registers defined by differences in tonal colour and the dynamic area in which it operates. For instance, if orchestral sound were not balanced then the subjective p of a tuba would sound louder than the ff of the flute in its low register; a piano possibile c″ of a tenor trombone would correspond in reality to a mezzo marking; the bass clarinet would never get beyond a real f in its low and middle register; and the oboe could not reach ff in its highest register. Even the best players are subject to the limits of their instruments. Furthermore, acoustic intensities cannot be calculated in proportion to the number of instruments employed; for instance, the number of string instruments would have to be multiplied by ten to achieve twice the volume. A comparison of Wolf's Italienische Serenade in the versions for quartet and small orchestra illustrates the dependence of a composer's intended dynamics on orchestral forces: nearly all the dynamic markings are increased by one step in the quartet setting (ff instead of f, f instead of p, p instead of pp, ppp instead of pppp).

In many cases dynamics are not explicitly notated but must be inferred on the basis of the performer's understanding of form, content and expression. For instance, both Riemann and Kurth argued that a modulation to the dominant key should always be accompanied by greater tension, while a modulation to the subdominant implied 'a sense of subsidence, relaxation and resignation' (AMZ, l, 1848, col.580). Hummel (2/1838, p.428) observed that ascending passages imply a crescendo and descending passages a diminuendo unless the composer specifies otherwise. The best guideline for the performer, in the absence of explicit dynamic markings, is to follow the internal sense of the music. 'If a theme exchanges the degree of its volume and tonal force, there must always be some inner necessity for it . . . : the plain expression of musical logic, intended by the creator, followed by the performer, and understood by the hearer' (Karl Grunsky, Musikästhetik, 1907, pp.162–3).

See also TEMPO AND EXPRESSION MARKS.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL

MGG2; PraetoriusSM, iii; WaltherML

S. di Ganassi dal Fontego: Opera intitulata Fontegara (Venice, 1535/*R*1969 in BMB, section 2, xviii; Eng. trans., 1959); ed. L. de Paolis (Rome, 1991)

N. Vicentino: L'antica musica ridotta alla moderna prattica (Rome, 1555, 2/1557; ed. in DM, 1st ser., Druckschriften-Faksimiles, xvii, 1959)

G. Zarlino: Le istitutioni harmoniche (Venice, 1558/R, 3/1573/R; Eng. trans. of pt iii, 1968/R as The Art of Counterpoint; Eng. trans. of pt iv, 1983, as On the Modes)

G. Caccini: Le nuove musiche (Florence, 1601/2/R); ed. in RRMBE, ix (1970)

M. Mersenne: Les préludes de l'harmonie universelle (Paris, 1634/R)

G. Fantini: Modo per imparare a sonare di tromba (Frankfurt, 1638/R); facs. with Eng. trans. and commentary by E.H. Tarr (Nashville, TN, 1978)

F. Couperin: L'art de toucher le clavecin (Paris, 1716, 2/1717/R); ed. M. Halford with Eng. trans. (New York, 1974)

L. Mozart: Versuch einer gründlichen Violinschule (Augsburg, 1756/R, 3/1787/R; Eng. trans., 1948 as A Treatise on the Fundamental Principles of Violon Playing, 2/1951/R)

J.G. Sulzer: Allgemeine Theorie der schönen Künste (Leipzig, 1771–4, enlarged 3/1786–7 by F. von Blankenburg, 4/1792–9/R)

J.K.F. Rellstab: Versuch über die Vereinigung der musikalischen und oratorischen Declamation (Berlin, 1786)

C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)

H.G. Nägeli and M.T. Pfeiffer: Gesangbildungslehre nach Pestalozzischen Grundsätzen (Zürich, 1810/R)

J.N. Hummel: Ausführliche theoretisch-practische Anweisung zum Piano-Forte-Spiel (Vienna, 1828, 2/1838; Eng. trans., 1829)

C. Gollmick: Critische Terminologie für Musiker und Musikfreunde (Frankfurt, 1833)

H. Riemann: Musikalische Dynamik und Agogik: Lehrbuch der musikalischen Phrasierung (Hamburg, 1884)

O. Tiersch: Rhythmik, Dynamik und Phrasierungslehre (Berlin, 1886)

H. Kretzschmar: 'Einige Bemerkungen über den Vortrag alter Musik', JbMP 1900, 53–68

K. Grunsky: Musikästhetik (Leipzig, 1907, 4/1923)

A. Heuss: 'Einige grundlegende Begriffe für eine historische Darstellung der musikalischen Dynamik', IMusSCR III: Vienna 1909, 144–7

P. Gilson: Le tutti orchestral (Brussels, 1913)

R. Steglich: Die elementare Dynamik des musikalischen Rhythmus (Leipzig, 1930)

A. Elston: On Musical Dynamics (diss., Harvard U., 1939)

A. Schoenberg: Style and Idea, ed. D. Newlin (New York, 1950, enlarged 2/1975 by L. Stein)

W. Furtwängler: Ton und Wort: Aufsätze und Vorträge 1918 bis 1954 (Wiesbaden, 1954, 9/1966/R)

W. Hess: Die Dynamik der musikalischen Formbildung (Vienna, 1960–64)

R. Donington: The Interpretation of Early Music (London, 1963, 4/1989)

K. Boehm: Die Dynamik in der Musik vom Barock bis [zur] Moderne (Vienna, 1975)

B. Meier: 'Hermann Fincks Practica Musica als Quelle zur musikalischen Dynamik', Mf, xxx/1 (1977), 43–6

T. Adorno: Gesammelte Schriften, xvi (Frankfurt, 1978)

P. Ackermann: 'Towards an Understanding of the Dynamics at Work in Koto Music', European Studies on Japan, ed. I. Nish and C. Dunn (Tenterden, 1979), 212–19

D. Patier: La dynamique musicale au XVIIIe siècle (Lille, 1983)

P. Boulez: Musikdenken heute, ii (Mainz, 1985)

W.S. Newman: 'The Poetic "Incise" as a Guide to Rhythmic Grouping and Dynamic Direction in Classical Music', España en la música de occidente: Salamanca 1985, ii, pp.139–42

K. Kroeger: 'Dynamics of Early American Psalmody', College Music Symposium, xxvi (1986), 97–105

E.T. Harris: 'Das Verhältnis von Lautstärke und Stimmlage im Barockgesang', Aufführungspraxis der Händel-Oper: Karlsruhe 1988 and 1989, 157–71

J. Uhde and R. Wieland: Denken und Spielen: Studien zu einer Theorie der musikalischen Darstellung (Kassel, 1988)

Y. Nakajima and others: 'Dynamic Pitch Perception for Complex Tones derived from Major Triads', Music Perception, vi (1988–9), 1–20

H. de La Motte-Haber: 'Simultane Klangkörper und kontrapunktische Dynamik', Edgard Varèse 1883–1965: Dokumenten zu Leben und Werke (Frankfurt, 1990), 31–44

D. Huron: 'The Rampe Archetype: a Score-Based Study of Musical Dynamics in 14 Piano Composers', Psychology of Music, xix (1991), 33–45

U. Wolf: Notation und Aufführungspraxis: Studien sum Wandel von Notenschrift und Notenbild in italienischen Musikdrucken der Jahre 1571–1630 (Kassel, 1992)

J. Feldman, D. Epstein and W. Richards: 'Force Dynamics of Tempo Change in Music', Music Perception, x (1992–3), 185–203

M. Thiemel: Tonale Dynamik: Theorie, musikalische Praxis und Vortragslehre seit 1800 (Sinzig, 1996)

C.Brown: Classical and Romantic Performance Practice 1750–1900 (Oxford, 1999)

SPECIFIC COMPOSERS

A.B. Marx: Anleitung zum Vortrag Beethovenscher Klavierwerke (Berlin, 1863, 5/1912; Eng. trans., 1895)

R. Wagner: 'Zum Vortrag der Neunten Symphonie Beethovens', Gesammelte Schriften und Dichtungen, ix (Leipzig, 1873, 4/1907; Eng. trans., v, 1896), 231–57

F. Weingartner: Ratschläge für Aufführungen der Symphonien Beethovens (Leipzig, 1906, 3/1928/R as Ratschläge für Aufführungen klassischer Symphonien, i; Eng. trans., 1907, as On the Performance of Beethoven's Symphonies, repr. in Weingartner on Music & Conducting, New York, 1969)

F. Weingartner: Ratschläge für Aufführungen klassischer Symphonien, ii: Schubert und Schumann (Leipzig, 1918)

A.G. Huber: Johann Sebastian Bach als Meister der Farben: Beiträge zur Entwicklungsgeschichte der musikalischen Dynamik (Zürich, 1949)

W. Schuh, ed.: R. Strauss: Betrachtungen und Erinnerungen (Zürich, 1949, 2/1957; Eng. trans., 1953/R)

H. Hering: 'Die Dynamik in Johann Sebastian Bachs Klaviermusik', BJb 1949–50, 65–80

T.-M. Langner: Studien zur Dynamik Max Regers (diss., Berlin U., 1953)

H. Besseler: 'Bach als Wegbereiter', AMw, xii (1955), 1–39

W. Kolneder: Aufführungspraxis bei Vivaldi (Leipzig, 1955, 2/1973)

F. Braun: Studien zur Dynamik in Schuberts Instrumentalmusik (diss., Tübingen U., 1960)

I. Fellinger: Über die Dynamik in der Musik von Johannes Brahms (Berlin, 1961)

E. Norman: 'The Interpretation of Schubert's Decrescendo Markings and Accents', MR, xxii (1961), 108–11

C. Dahlhaus: 'Innere Dynamik in Bachs Fugen', NZM, Jg.123 (1962), 498–501

H. Jurisch: 'Zur Dynamik im Klavierwerk Carl Philipp Emanuel Bachs', GfMKB: Kassel 1962, 178–81

P. Mies: 'Über ein besonderes Akzentzeichen bei Johannes Brahms', GfMKB: Kassel 1962, 215–17

V. Cukkerman: 'Die Beethovensche Dynamik in ihren strukturellen und formbildenden Erscheinungen', Beethoven Congress: Berlin 1970, 379–86

R.G. Luoma: 'Variant Dynamic Markings in Music: some Examples from Mozart and Beethoven', MR, xxxiv/3 (1973), 189–97

R.G. Luoma: 'The Functions of Dynamics in the Music of Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven: some Implications for the Performer', College Music Symposium, xvi (1976), 32–41

M. Staehelin: 'Zur Stellung der Dynamik in Beethovens Schaffensprozess', BeJb 1978–81, 319–24

C.T. Horton: 'A Structural Function of Dynamics in Schumann's Ich grolle nicht', In Theory Only, iv/8 (1979), 30–46

W. Hoffmann: 'Dynamik in Bachs Brandenburg Konzerten', Internationales Bachfest V: Leipzig 1985, 316–25

C. Prost: 'Modernité de Chopin: la dynamique et le timbre comme éléments constitutifs de la forme', Analyse musicale, viii (1987), 27–30

W. Hoffmann: 'Zur Dynamik bei Bach: Beobachten an den Brandenburgischen Konzerten', Johann Sebastian Bach: Weltbild, Menschenbild, Notenbild, Klangbild: Leipzig 1988, 323–9
M. Sheer: The Role of Dynamics in Beethoven's Instrumental Works (diss., Bar-Ilan U., 1989)
F. Messmer: 'Sforzato und Fortepiano in Beethovens Streichquartetten op.18. zum Schwerpunkrhytmus um 1800', Festschrift: Rudolf Bockholdt, ed. N. Duboury and S. Meyer (Pfaffenhofen, 1990), 299–320
M. Sheer: 'The Structural Functions of Dynamics in Beethoven's Instrumental Works', Beethoven Newsletter, v/3 (1990), 53, 62–6
A.E. Beurmann and A. Schneider: 'Struktur, Klang, Dynamik: Akustische Untersuchen an Ligetis Atmosphères', HJbMw, xi (1991), 311–34
G. Moens-Haenen: 'Die Dynamik in den Orchester- und Bühnenwerken Mozarts als Ausdruck eines geänderten Musikverständnisses un als Folge neuer Möglichkeiten des Orchesters', MJb 1991, 852–5
W.C. Wentzel: 'Dynamic and Attack Associations in Boulez's Le marteau san maître', PNM, xxix/1 (1991), 142–70

MATTHIAS THIEMEL

Dynamophone. See TELHARMONIUM.

Dynaphone. A dial-operated monophonic electronic instrument. It was developed by René Bertrand with the assistance of Nadal in Paris around 1927. A later version featured a keyboard. See ELECTRONIC INSTRUMENTS, §III, 1(iv).

Dyson, Sir George (b Halifax, 28 May 1883; d Winchester, 28 Sept 1964). English composer and educationist. An FRCO at 16, he became an open scholar at the RCM in 1900 and a composition student of Stanford. His travels after winning the Mendelssohn Scholarship in 1904 centred on Florence and Rome. Working particularly with Sgambati, he became a protégé of Clara Gigliucci, daughter of Vincent Novello. Later, in Vienna and Berlin, he was acquainted with leading musicians of the day and visited Strauss. A symphonic poem Siena, now lost, but said to be Straussian, was conducted by Nikisch. Dyson's Evening Service in D of 1907 is still sung, but otherwise little of his early music survives. He returned to England in 1907, when Parry recommended him to be director of music at the Royal Naval College at Osborne. From there he moved to Marlborough College in 1911, but enlisted in 1914. In 1915 he published a training pamphlet on grenade warfare for which he became celebrated. In 1918 he achieved the Oxford MusDoc, and in 1921 became a professor at the RCM.

After the war Dyson lectured on new music, soon publishing a series of four articles on 'The Texture of Modern Music' (Music & Letters, 1923), which were incorporated into his influential book The New Music, published in 1924. He became director of music at Wellington College in 1921, and in 1924 moved to Winchester, where the various strands of his mature career as a composer developed. His published music includes many unison songs for educational use, dating from 1919 to the 1950s, when his Hymn for a Musician was written for Eton College. Its Parryesque command of the wide-spanning single line informs much of his choral music, and he achieved his most characteristic voice with choral music of a tuneful, vigorous cast. In 1928 In Honour of the City established him as an approachable musical personality in the tradition of Parry and Elgar. This was followed by his most celebrated work, The Canterbury Pilgrims, first performed at Winchester in 1931 with leading soloists (Isobel Baillie, Steuart Wilson and Roy Henderson), conducted by the composer. It was popular for over 30 years, but was then neglected until its recording in 1996.

In the 1930s Dyson became associated with the Three Choirs Festival. For Hereford he wrote St Paul's Voyage to Melita (1933) and for Worcester Nebuchadnezzar (1935), which ends with a blazing setting of the Benedicite ('Praise Ye the Lord'); another extended score, Quo Vadis?, a suite of nine extended choral movements, was intended for the cancelled 1939 festival in Hereford. While its first part was first performed in London in 1945, the complete work was not given until 1949 in Hereford. In 1936 Hereford had also been the venue for the first performance of the Prelude, Fantasy and Chaconne for cello and orchestra.

His reputation as a composer quickly grew with two big orchestral works, the Symphony in G and the Violin Concerto, the latter championed by Albert Sammons. Dyson contributed music to the Coronations of 1937 and 1953. In 1938 he became director of the RCM, the first director to have been trained there. Knighted in 1942, he retired in 1952, and in a late compositional outpouring wrote a group of fine choral works. The sweetly nostalgic cantata Sweet Thames Run Softly, for baritone, chorus and orchestra, was in an idiom which in the mid-1950s seemed to suggest a pastoral imitator of Delius and Vaughan Williams, but is now seen as a vivid and timeless evocation, perfectly caught. A Christmas Garland and A Spring Garden are typical chains of lyrical settings, while in one of his last extended works, Agincourt (1955), he looks back to In Honour of the City in a Shakespearean choral setting of undimmed vigour and appeal.

WORKS
(selective list)

Choral with orch: In Honour of the City (W. Dunbar), chorus, orch, 1928; The Canterbury Pilgrims (G. Chaucer), S, T, Bar, chorus, orch, 1931; St Paul's Voyage to Melita (Bible: Acts), T, chorus, orch, 1933; The Blacksmiths (anon., 14th-century), pf, chorus, orch, 1934; Nebuchadnezzar (Bible: Daniel, Apocrypha), T, B, chorus, org, orch, 1935; 3 Songs of Praise, SATB/unison vv, str (1935); 3 Songs of Courage, 1935; O Praise God in his Holiness (Ps cl), coronation anthem, SATB, orch/org, 1937; Quo Vadis?: a Cycle of Poems, 2 pts, SATB soli, chorus, orch, 1939; Motherland (W. Watson), SATB, orch, 1940; 4 Songs for Sailors, 1948; Invocation to Science (W. Wordsworth), 1949; 3 Choral Hymns, SATB, str, 1951; Confortare (Be Strong and of a Good Courage), coronation anthem, SATB, orch, 1953; Sweet Thames Run Softly (E. Spenser), Bar, chorus, orch, 1954; Agincourt (W. Shakespeare), chorus, orch, 1955; Hierusalem (St Augustine), S, chorus, str qt, str, hp, org, 1956; Let's Go A-Maying (R. Herrick), SSA, str, 1957; A Christmas Garland, Mez, SSA, str, 1959

Choral (SATB unless otherwise stated): *c*50 works incl. Mag and Nunc in D, 1907; TeD laudamus, 1914; To Music, 1919; Benedicite in D, 1923; Jubilate, 1924; Mag and Nunc in D, 1924; TeD and Benedictus in C (1924); Song on a May Morning (J. Milton), SA, ob, hp, 1933; A Prayer for the King, 1937; O Praise God in his Holiness, 1937; The Rising Day, unison, 1938; God Made Us All (J. Keble), 2-pt, 1939; Vespers, 1939; Mag and Nunc in F, 1945; Song for a Festival (C.D. Lewis), B, SATB, 1951; Live for Ever Glorious Lord (J. Austin), tr vv, SATB, 1952; Ye Choir Above, unison, 1953; I Will Worship (Ps lxxxviii), unison, 1954; Ye That Do Your Master's Will, 1954; TeD and Benedictus in F (1955); Benedicite in F, 1956; 3 Rustic Songs (Herrick), male vv, 2 pf, 1957; A Spring Garden (Herrick), SA, hp, 1957; Hail, Universal Lord (Milton), SATB, org, 1958; Nocturne, 1960; A Summer Day (A. Hume), suite, SA, pf, 1961; The Canterbury Pilgrims, choral suite, SSAA, pf, 1964

Orch: Children's Suite (after W. de la Mare), 1920; Prelude, Fantasy and Chaconne, vc/va, orch, 1936; Sym., G, 1937 (1940); Vn Conc., 1941; At the Tabard Inn, ov., 1943; Conc. da camera, 1949; Conc. da chiesa, 1952; Conc. leggiero, pf, str, 1953

Kbd: The Open Window, 8 pf pieces, op.12a; 6 Lyrics, pf, 1920; Epigrams: 10 short pieces, op.9, pf, 1920; Twilight: 4 preludes, op.14, pf, 1920; My Birthday: 3 Little Pieces, pf, 1924; Prelude and Ballet, pf, 1925; Primrose Mount, pf, 1928; Bach's Birthday: 4 Fugal Sketches, pf, 1929; Revelry in D, pf, 1938; 12 Easy Pieces, pf, 1952; Prelude and Postlude, org, 1956; Voluntary in D, org, 1958; Variations on Old Psalm Tunes, org, 3 books, 1959–61; Fantasia and Ground Bass, org, 1960

Chbr: In Pixieland: 4 easy pieces, vn, pf 1918, reissued 1999 as Woodland Suite, also arr. str, wind ad lib; 3 Rhapsodies, str qt (1920); Revery in D, vn, pf, 1924

Songs, educational music, easy vn pieces, children's pf pieces

Principal publishers: Novello, Oxford, Stainer & Bell, Thames

WRITINGS

The New Music (London, 1924, 2/1926)
The Progress of Music (London, 1932)
Fiddling while Rome Burns: a Musician's Apology (London, 1954)
C. Palmer, ed.: Dyson's Delight: an Anthology of Sir George Dyson's Writing and Talks on Music (London, 1989)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. McNaught: 'Dr George Dyson's Symphony', MT, lxxix (1938), 13–17
W.R. Anderson: 'Dyson's Violin Concerto: an Appreciation', MR, iii (1942), 115–24
D. Brook: 'Sir George Dyson', Composer's Gallery (London, 1946), 61–3
A.O. Warburton: 'Sir George Dyson and Practical Musicianship', Music Teacher, xxxiii (1954), 236
A. Whittall: 'Dyson the Contemporary', ML, xlvi (1965), 35–8
I. Copley: 'Sir George Dyson', Music Teacher, lvi (1977), 13
H. Brian: 'Dyson', Havergal Brian on Music, ed. M. MacDonald, i (London, 1986), 254–60
C. Palmer: George Dyson: Man and Music (London, 1996)
J. Bishop: 'Repertoire 3 – Reassessing Dyson', Choir & Organ, v (1997), 64–6

LEWIS FOREMAN

Dyubyuk, Aleksandr Ivanovich. See DUBUQUE, ALEKSANDR IVANOVICH.

Dyutsh, Georgy Ottonovich. See DÜTSCH, GEORGY OTTONOVICH.

Dyutsh, Otto Johann Anton. See DÜTSCH, OTTO JOHANN ANTON.

Dzerzhinsky, Ivan Ivanovich (b Tambov, 9 April 1909; d Leningrad, 18 Jan 1978). Russian composer. He is exceptional in that the work for which he is mainly known, the opera Tikhiy Don ('Quiet Flows the Don', 1934) – later rarely performed in the Soviet Union – was successful more for its political potential than for any musical distinction. Dzerzhinsky had an extended formal training in music. After four years (1925–9) at the First College of Music in Moscow studying the piano with Yavorsky he entered the Gnesin School as a composition pupil of Mikhail Gnesin (1929–30). After moving to Leningrad in 1930, where Dzerzhinsky began working as an accompanist at the Society for Chamber Music, he spent two further years (1930–32) at the Leningrad Central College of Music, where he studied composition first with Gavriil Popov and then with P.B. Ryazanov, before proceeding to the Leningrad Conservatory for another two years (1932–4) to study with Asaf′yev. Though Ryazanov and Asaf′yev were progressive in their musical outlook, and both were connected with the Association of Contemporary Music, Dzerzhinsky's works were strongly traditional from the first. His early songs and piano pieces and the First Piano Concerto (1932) were influenced by Grieg, Rachmaninoff and early Ravel.

At the beginning of the 1930s Dzerzhinsky was much influenced by the music of Shostakovich (particularly in his later criticized Second Concerto of 1934), and he consulted Shostakovich in the preparation of Quiet Flows the Don. The libretto of the new opera, based loosely on Sholokhov's novel, was compiled by Dzerzhinsky's brother Leonid; the work was first performed at the Leningrad Maliy Theatre in October 1935. More significantly, it was seen by Stalin on 17 January 1936. Stalin at once recognized its propaganda value: its subject was heroic and patriotic; it glorified the spirit of the Don Cossacks, whose support would be necessary in the event of war (which was increasingly inevitable); and its music was strongly lyrical and immediately appealing. Within weeks the work was officially pronounced the model of Soviet realism in music, and won Dzerzhinsky a Stalin Prize; simultaneously Shostakovich's Lady Macbeth of Mtsensk, a very much finer score and one much admired by Dzerzhinsky, was officially banned as nefarious musical chaos. The resultant success of Quiet Flows the Don was overwhelming – it reached its 200th performance in May 1938; but its undistinguished idiom (it is lyrical and folklike in style, though not based on true folksong) held little potential for future musical development. Dzerzhinsky's next opera, Podnyataya tselina ('Virgin Soil Upturned', 1937), also based on Sholokhov, is dramatically tauter and similar in musical style, but it failed to repeat the sensational success of its predecessor. Indeed none of Dzerzhinsky's later operatic works has found a permanent place in the Soviet repertory. Nor did the attempt to provide a sequel to Quiet Flows the Don with the opera called Grigoriy Melekhov (1967) meet with any success. From 1936 he held important administrative posts in the Union of Soviet Composers and in party politics. In 1948 he was appointed to the central committee of the union, and at various times after 1946 he acted as a deputy to the Leningrad City Soviet. The composer's last work of note was the opera Sud'ba cheloveka ('The Fate of a Man', 1959), based on a short story by Sholokhov; the work was relatively popular on the Soviet stage.

WORKS
(selective list)

DRAMATIC

Zelyoniy tsekh [The Green Shop] (musical comedy), 1932
Tikhiy Don [Quiet Flows the Don] (op, 4, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after M. Sholokhov), 1934, Leningrad, Maliy, 22 Oct 1935, rev. 1955
Podnyataya tselina [Virgin Soil Upturned] (music drama, 4, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after Sholokhov), 1937, Moscow, Bol'shoy, 23 Oct 1937, rev. version, Perm, Theatre of Opera and Ballet, 30 May 1964
Volochayevskiye dni [Volochayev Days], 1939
Groza [The Storm] (4, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after A.N. Ostrovsky), 1940, rev. 1955, concert perf., Moscow, House of Actors, 17 April 1956
Krov′ naroda [The Blood of the People] (3, I.I. Dzerzhinsky and E.A. Riss), 1941, Orenburg, City Dramatic, 21 Jan 1942
Nadezhda Svetlova (lyrical scenes, 3, I.I. Dzerzhinsky, K.A. Lipskerov and Riss, after K. Simonov), 1942, Orenburg, City Dramatic, 8 Sept 1943
Metel′ 'v zimnyuyu noch′' [The Blizzard 'on a Winter's Night'] (comic op, 3, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after A.S. Pushkin), 1946, Leningrad, Musical Comedy, 24 Nov 1946
Knyaz′-ozero [The Prince-Lake] (folk op, 4, epilogue, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after P. Vershigora), 1947, Leningrad, Kirov, 26 Oct 1947
Daleko ot Moskvï [Far from Moscow] (4, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, after V. Azhayev), 1954, Leningrad, Maliy, 19 July 1954, rev. version, Leningrad, Maliy, 8 Nov 1954
Sud′ba cheloveka [The Fate of a Man] (3, I.I. Dzerzhinsky, after Sholokhov), 1959, Moscow, Bol'shoy, and Leningrad, Kirov, 17 Oct 1961

Grigoriy Melekhov (musical drama, 3, L.I. Dzerzhinsky, Ye.A. Karetnikova, A.V. Sokolov and A.D. Churkin, after Sholokhov), 1967, Leningrad, Kirov, 4 Nov 1967 [continuation of Tikhiy Don]

OTHER WORKS

Pf Conc. [no.1], 1932; Pf Conc. [no.2], 1934; Povest'o partizane [Tale about a Partisan], sym. poem, orch, 1934; Russkiye khudozhniki [Russian Artists], suite, orch, 1944; Pf Conc. [no.3], 1945; Yermak, sym. poem, orch, 1949; 3 Odes, Bar, orch, 1953; film scores, incid music, music for children, many songs and romances, pf music

WRITINGS

'Moy lyubimïy teatr' [My favourite theatre], Leningradskiy gosudarstvennïy ordena Lenina Akademicheskiy Malïy Teatr Operï i Baleta, 1918–1968 (Leningrad, 1968), 169–76

'S muzïkoy v serdtse: stranitsï vospominaniy' [With music in one's heart: pages from my reminiscences], Neva (1970), no.10, pp.209–15

'Komissar iskusstv' [The commissar for the arts], Vospominaniya o Borise Ivanoviche Zagurskom, ed. V.M. Bogdanov-Berezovsky (Leningrad, 1972), 24–7

'Sholokhov i muzïka' [Sholokhov and music], Sovetskaya kul'tura (13 May 1975)

'Shtrikhi k portretu' [Brushstrokes for a portrait], Vasily Pavlovich Solov'yov- Sedoy: vospominaniya, stat'i, materialï, ed. S.M. Khentova (Leningrad, 1987), 85–90

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Sollertinsky: 'Krupnaya pobeda sovetskoy operï' [A major triumph in Soviet opera], Krasnaya gazeta (23 Oct 1935)

D. Shostakovich: 'Neskol'ko slov ob opere Dzerzhinskogo' [A few words on Dzerzhinsky's opera], Vechernyaya Moskva (5 Jan 1936)

Ye. Berlyand: 'Tvorchestvo I. Dzerzhinskogo' [Dzerzhinsky's creative work], SovM (1948), no.9, pp.28–34

O.M. Tompakova: Ivan Ivanovich Dzerzhinskiy: ocherk zhizni i tvorchestva [An outline of his life and work] (Leningrad, 1964)

S.V. Aksyuk, ed.: Ivan Dzerzhinskiy: stat'i, vospominaniya [Articles and reminiscences] (Moscow, 1988)

RITA McALLISTER/IOSIF GENRIKHOVICH RAYSKIN

Dzhudzhev, Stoyan (b Pazardzhik, 19 Dec 1902). Bulgarian ethnomusicologist. After graduating from the State Music Academy in Sofia in 1924, he continued his studies in 1927 under André Pirro, André Mazon and Antoine Meillet at the Sorbonne, where he took the doctorate in 1931; he also attended Philippe Gaubert's lectures at the Paris Conservatoire and d'Indy's at the Schola Cantorum. On his return to Bulgaria he became reader in folk music (1937) and professor (1943) at the State Music Academy in Sofia, where from 1956 to 1968 he was head of the department of musicology. Dzhudzhev has studied not only Bulgarian folk music but that of the Balkans as a whole, devoting special attention to rhythmic and metric aspects, and has delivered papers on these and related subjects at international folk music congresses; he has also written a general introduction to acoustics.

WRITINGS

Rhythme et mesure dans la musique populaire bulgare (diss., U. of Paris, 1931; Paris, 1931)

'Die Zeitmessung in der orientalischen Musik', Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, xl (1931), 184–6

Balgarska narodna khoreografiya [Bulgarian folk choreography] (Sofia, 1945)

Teoriya na balgarskata narodna muzika [Theory of Bulgarian folk music] (Sofia, 1954–61)

Uvod v naukata za zvuka [Introduction to the science of sound] (Sofia, 1958)

'La genezo de la popolkantoj' [The genesis of folksongs], Sciencaj studoj bazitai sur originalaj esploroj kai observoj, ed. P. Neergaard (Copenhagen, 1958), 95–107

'Ritmul si măsura in muzica populară bulgară' [Rhythm and metre in Bulgarian folk music], Revista de folclor, iii/2 (1958), 7–46

'Stikh i melodiya v balgarskata narodna pesen' [Rhyme and melody in the Bulgarian folksong], IIM, xiii (1969), 89–130

Balgarska narodna muzika [Bulgarian folk music] (Sofia, 1970–75, 2/1980)

'Volksmusik in Bulgarien und Probleme der bulgarischen Volkskultur', Heutige Probleme der Volksmusik: Hindelang 1971, 163–71

'Johannes Kukezeles und die mittelalterliche bulgarische Musik', Monumenta musicae slavicae (1973)

Eléments distinctifs de la culture paysanne en musique et danse populaire (Cambridge, MA, 1974)

LADA BRASHOVANOVA

Dzhurov, Plamen (b Pleven, 21 April 1949). Bulgarian composer and conductor. In 1975 he graduated from the Bulgarian State Music Academy, Sofia, where his teachers included Goleminov and Iliev. He was a prizewinner at the 1972 Svetoslav Obretenov national piano competition, and in 1974 he received an award from the Union of Bulgarian Composers for his interpretation of new music. In 1984 he went to Vienna to study with Karl Österreicher at the Musikhochschule. In 1975 he made his début as conductor of the Pleven State PO, and in their following season he conducted a considerable number of new works by Bulgarian and foreign composers. In 1979 he took first prize at the Bulgarian symphony orchestras festival, and in 1985 he was appointed conductor of the world-famous Sofia Soloists, with whom he has since appeared in major festivals in Bulgaria and in more than 30 countries. In 1990 he was appointed instructor of the symphony orchestra at the State Academy.

One of the most gifted Bulgarian musicians of his generation, Dzhurov has won the prize of the Union of Bulgarian Composers on four occasions between 1974 and 1986. His music is characterized by its simplicity, and the economy of means associated with minimalism, emotional restraint and control from afar; at the same time it has an impressionistic quality.

WORKS
(selective list)

Variatsiya, orch, 1974; Sonata, pf, 1975; Sym., 1976; Conc. grosso, str, perc, pf, 1977; Music for Voice, Vc and Perc, 1978; Yelegiya, orch, 1980; Partita, str, 1981; Tokata, orch, 1982; Conc. for Str, 1984; Fantaziya, orch, 1985; Rekviyem, Mez, spkr, chorus, orch, 1988; 4 Ballads for a Quartet, fl, va, hp, hpd, 1989; Partita vc, 1991; cadenza, sax, 1994; Va Conc., 1997

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Various articles published in Balgarska muzika and Kultura

ANDA PALIEVA

E

E. See PITCH NOMENCLATURE.

Eaglen, Jane (b Lincoln, 4 April 1960). English soprano. She studied with Joseph Ward at the RNCM, Manchester, making her début in 1984 with the ENO as Lady Ella (Patience). Other roles for the ENO have included Donna Elvira, Sinais (Mosè), Elizabeth I (Maria Stuarda), Leonara (Il trovatore), Eva, Micaëla, Santuzza, Tosca, Fata Morgana (The Love for Three Oranges) and Ariadne. She made her Covent Garden début in 1986 as Berta (Il barbiere), returning as First Lady (Die Zauberflöte). For Scottish Opera she has sung Mimì, Fiordiligi, Donna Anna, Brünnhilde (Die Walküre) and Norma (1993). Embarking on an international career, Eaglen sang Mathilde (Guillaume Tell) in Geneva, Mozart's Electra, Senta, Brünnhilde and Donna Anna at the Vienna Staatsoper, Brünnhilde at La Scala and in Chicago, and Norma at Ravenna (1994), where she returned as Abigaille (Nabucco) in 1995; that year she also sang Amelia (Ballo in maschera) at the Opéra-Bastille in Paris and Odabella (Attila) in Houston. In 1996 she made her Metropolitan début as Donna Anna and sang Brünnhilde in a complete Ring cycle in Chicago. She has recorded Norma, Tosca and Mayr's Medea in Corinto. Though her voice, vibrant, powerful and dramatic, has the stamina required for Wagner, it retains the legato line and flexibility for bel canto roles.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Finch: 'Jane Eaglen', Opera, xlvi (1995), 511–16

M.J. White: 'The Norma Conquest', ON, lx (1996), 18–21

ELIZABETH FORBES

Eagles. See ECCLES family.

Eagles, the. American rock group. Formed in Los Angeles in 1971, they were the most important and successful country-rock group of the 1970s. Don Henley (b Gilmer, TX, 22 July 1947; drums and vocals) and Glenn Frey (b Detroit, 6 Nov 1948; guitar and vocals) left Linda Ronstadt's back-up band to form the Eagles with Bernie Leadon (b Minneapolis, 19 July 1947; guitar and vocals) and Randy Meisner (b Scottsbluff, NE, 8 March 1947; bass and vocals). Influenced by other southern California bands like the Byrds and the Flying Burrito Brothers, the Eagles blended strong songwriting, lush harmony vocals, acoustic rhythm guitar and distorted lead guitar to extend the country-rock style more toward hard rock than other groups had done. The group's debut album, Eagles (Asylum, 1972), contains three hit singles including Take it easy and Witchy Woman, which are representative of the group's early approach. The albums Desperado (Asylum, 1973), On the Border (Asylum, 1974), and One of These Nights (Asylum, 1975) continue in much the same style; Don Felder (guitar and vocals) joined the band in 1974. Leadon was replaced in 1976 by Joe Walsh (guitar and vocals), and the quintet's 1976 album, Hotel California (Asylum), marked an even stronger turn toward hard rock and rhythm and blues. The album spent eight weeks at number one in America and featured two number one hit singles, New Kid in Town and Hotel California. The next album, The Long Run (Asylum, 1979), was equally successful, marking the band's fourth consecutive number one album, as well as their last studio project. Frey, Henley and Walsh pursued successful solo careers during the 1980s; the band regrouped briefly to record Hell Freezes Over (Geffer, 1994) and tour.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Sims: 'The Eagles Take it Easy and Soar', Rolling Stone (17 Aug 1972)

C. Crowe: 'Chips Off the Old Buffalo: the Eagles', Rolling Stone (25 Sept 1975)

C. Charlesworth: 'Where Eagles Dare', Melody Maker (11 Dec 1976) [interview]

C.M. Young: 'Hell is for Heroes: the Eagles' Slow Burn in Rock and Roll Inferno', Rolling Stone (29 Nov 1979)

M. Shapiro: The Long Run: the Story of the Eagles (London, 1995)

JOHN COVACH

Eames, Emma (b Shanghai, 13 Aug 1865; d New York, 13 June 1952). American soprano. After early studies in Boston and with Mathilde Marchesi in Paris, she made a brilliant début at the Opéra on 13 March 1889 as Gounod's Juliet, with Jean de Reszke. In 1890 she created Colombe in Saint-Saëns's Ascanio. After two seasons in Paris, she made both her Covent Garden and her Metropolitan débuts in 1891. During the following decade she sang leading roles in Mozart, Wagner, Gounod and Verdi in London and New York, continuing at the Metropolitan until her farewell to the house, as Tosca, in 1909. Eames's unexpected retirement from the operatic stage came while she was still at the height of her powers. Her lyric soprano was of singularly pure and beautiful quality, and her technique was masterly. Although sometimes considered cold in timbre and temperament, she was nevertheless admired in such emotional roles as Sieglinde and Tosca. The best of her recordings, including arias from Roméo et Juliette, Faust and Tosca, and Schubert's Gretchen am Spinnrade, reveal considerable fullness and power as well as the expected technical perfection.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

E. Eames: Some Memories and Reflections (New York, 1927/R) [with discography]

L. Migliorini and J. Dennis: 'Emma Eames', Record Collector, viii (1953), 74–96 [with discography and commentary]

Emma Eames as Juliet in Gounod's 'Roméo et Juliette'

A.F.R. Lawrence and S. Smolian: 'Emma Eames', American Record Guide, xxix (1962), 210–17 [with discography and commentary]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/ALAN BLYTH

Early Christian Church, music of the. See CHRISTIAN CHURCH, MUSIC OF THE EARLY.

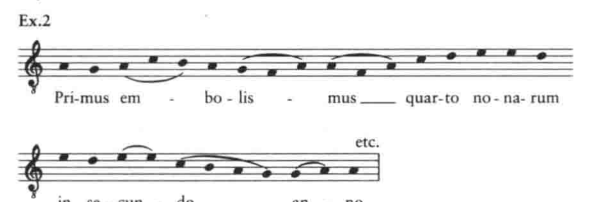
Early Latin secular song. A repertory which, largely because of the nature of poetic transmission in the Middle Ages, comprises much of the earliest surviving European secular song with music. In contrast to the many collections of liturgical chant and Latin sacred songs surviving from the millennium before about 1300, Latin secular songs with music are relatively rare; but secular poems that were probably sung are more plentiful. Of the songs preserved with music, very few notated before the 12th century can be transcribed with any certainty.

1. Late antiquity. 2. The Carolingian renaissance. 3. The 'goliard' period up to *c*1300.

1. LATE ANTIQUITY. From the time of the late Caesars solo song, dance and music for cithara, aulos and lyre accompanied tragedies and pantomimes; other references indicate that the populace would 'sing and dance in the forum', and many old musical traditions prevailed throughout the first six centuries of the Christian era, though modified by barbarian invasions and rapidly changing political and social conditions. Christian teaching gradually prevailed over this pagan background, so that by late antiquity the early Church Fathers had considerably curtailed the use of pagan songs, at least among Christians. A new tradition began, issuing from the lyrical hymns and secular songs of writers such as Hilary of Poitiers (*c*315–*c*367), Ambrose (*c*340–97), Prudentius (348–410), Sidonius Apollinaris (*c*430–79) and Venantius Fortunatus (540–*c*600). They used simple metres in strophic form, and gradually introduced rhymed couplets, as the quantitative metrical scansion of classical Latin was superseded by a more popular rhymed rhythmic structure based on the number of syllables per line. Other Latin secular songs are found in the mixed prose–verse forms of Martianus Capella (early 5th century) and Boethius (*c*480–*c*524). Even by the 8th century the cloister schools had not completely renounced secular song, and learned songs as well as those of a popular nature were studied despite synodal admonitions against 'base, over-exuberant, obscene and sacrilegious songs'. From this whole body of secular songs, stretching over some 500 years, no melody has been preserved.

2. THE CAROLINGIAN RENAISSANCE. The 8th and 9th centuries produced many sung Latin poems, not only sacred, but also epics, odes, laments, satires, eulogies, and lyric and didactic verses; yet a predilection for classical studies restricted the use of rhymed rhythmic verse, and might even have stifled it altogether had not a close association with music in the following two centuries given it new vigour. Meanwhile poetico-musical activity continued in the monasteries of southern France and northern Italy, an important outcome of which was the development of refrain forms and the addition of partly diastematic neumes to the texts in the manuscripts. The revival of classical studies resulted in a number of contemporary musical settings of ancient authors. Neumes survive for six Horace odes (i, 1, 3, 33; iii, 9, 13; iv, 11); two extracts from Virgil's Aeneid (ii, 281ff; iv, 651ff); three extracts from Statius's Thebais (v, 608ff; xii, 325ff, 336ff); Juvenal's Satires (viii, 78ff); Trajan's Ut belli sonuere; Priscian's Ad Boree partes; Scande celi from Martianus Capella's De nuptiis Philologiae et Mercurii (ii); and five poems from Boethius's De consolatione Philosophiae (metrum i, 1, 5; ii, 5; iii, 8; iv, 7). It is possible that these simple settings were used for didactic purposes, or to teach rhetoric or quantitative scansion: one of the two tunes (Horace, Ode, iv, 11) that can reliably be transcribed is set to the version of the hymn tune Ut queant laxis, which was later adapted to didactic use by Guido of Arezzo, and the other (Boethius, metrum iv, 7) occurs in the Dialogus de musica formerly attributed to Odo of Cluny (ex.1).

Ex.1



Several laments and eulogies from the 9th century are transmitted in partially heighted neumes in a manuscript probably from Toulouse or Narbonne (F-Pn lat.1154). Subjects treated are the death of Duke Eric of Frioul (799) by Paulinus of Aquileia, laments for Charlemagne (814) and his son Hugh of St Quentin (844), the Battle of Fontenoy (841) and the exile of Gottschalk (*c*840). Although they cannot be transcribed melodically, the neumes indicate simple melodies with occasional small melismas of two to four notes; most of the poems appear to be set strophically, and two of them have refrains. Scattered remains of Latin secular songs with unheighted neumes are extant from many areas of Europe. These include laments from Spain (7th–10th centuries); a lament on the destruction of the monastery of Glonnes, near Saumur (850); festival songs and greetings, for Odo's coronation (888), Charles the Thick (883) and Konrad I (912); a song for the watchers of the walls of Modena (after 892); a song by Leo of Vercelli praising Gregory V and Otto III (998); and a song by Azelin of Reims praising Henry III (*c*1050). Certain songs were designated by the term 'Modus', presumably indicating a pre-existing melody: 'Modus florum' (flowers), 'Modus liebinc' (love), 'Modus qui et Carelmanninc' (Charlemagne). Unfortunately these are all without music; but one has the first of its six sequence-like versicles set with neumes: the 'Modus Ottinc', in honour of Otto III (983–1002). Another interesting specimen is the 'Galluslied', written in Old German by Radpert at St Gallen towards the end of the 9th century; in the 11th century Ekkehard IV translated it into Latin 'lest such a sweet melody be lost from memory'; the neumes in MS 353 in the Stiftsbibliothek, St Gallen suggest a song with a lai-like structure of varied phrase repetition.

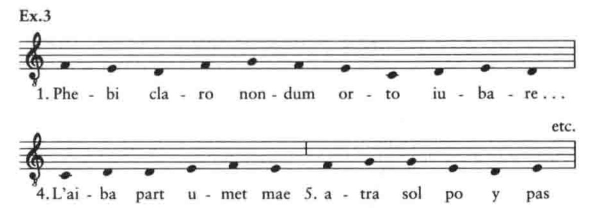
In a few secular Latin songs the use of an alphabetical notation allows accurate melodic transcription. The best known of these is the 10th-century song O Roma nobilis and its homoerotic contrafactum (O admirabile Veneris ydolum), a simple strophic, syllabic tune of a non-ecclesiastical character. Of two 10th-century songs to celebrate the nightingale, one is notated in unheighted neumes (Sum noctis socia), whereas the other, Aurea personet lyra (ed. in Gillingham, 1993), is in alphabetical notation; its form and melody are characteristic of the sequence and it contains extensive internal repetition. A final group of these songs consists of a lament by Guido of Luxeuil Hactenus tetendi liram, a short didactic poem Hic poterit solers ignotum discere cantum (a following eclogue on music and a song of the nine Muses unfortunately lack notation) and Guido's famous distinction Musicorum et cantorum magna est distantia.

A didactic purpose lies behind a number of melodies that accompany 10th- to 13th-century computus verses, which link the liberal arts studies of music and astronomy within the doctrine of the music of the spheres. Some of their melodies are in lined notation, and show a recitation style with some melodic emphasis at the cadences. A few are strophic, though generally they are through-composed, and some of them are of great length. The opening of a 12th-century German example (ex.2) illustrates the style.

Ex.2



3. THE 'GOLIARD' PERIOD UP TO *c*1300. A last great flowering of Latin secular song follows the period of Carolingian court songs. It issues principally from two interrelated sources: the monasteries of southern France and the so-called GOLIARDS or wandering scholars (the term has often been associated with secular Latin poets of the later Middle Ages, but is probably inaccurate). On the one hand, there occurred unparalleled activity in creating new paraliturgical and sacred musical works – tropes, sequences, conductus and motets; on the other hand, songs of a similar kind, but with secular texts – love-lyrics, spring songs, moral, satirical and drinking-songs – were written and preserved in great numbers, quite often in the same sources that transmit sacred texts. From the extant sources it is possible to trace the development of these forms from the 10th century to their highest point in the 12th century and through their gradual decline during the 13th century. The earlier period established the principle of rhymed, rhythmic and strophic verse meant for singing. During the ensuing development poetic rhyme, verse structure and musical balance coalesced into free forms that suggest increased attention to detail and formal design.

Besides sacred music, two further developments strongly influenced secular Latin songs: the vernacular chansons of the troubadours and trouvères, and the great popularity of Marian settings, the texts of which varied from poetic fancy rich in imagery and Old Testament exegesis to the most facile stringing together of Our Lady's attributes. The music tended to be less learned and of a popular cast. Owing to the close interaction of these various elements it is often very difficult to separate secular from sacred; manuscripts usually mix poems of both types, and the common use of contrafactum texts tends to obscure the distinction even further. Whereas vernacular song tended to become localized, the Latin tradition became truly international, and many songs are found separately transmitted in manuscripts from all over Europe.

A change of poetic-musical emphasis can be observed in several transitional 10th-century works which, though belonging to the older Carolingian tradition, point decisively to a new emphasis on lyricism in the manner of the vernacular repertories. Ex.3 (late 10th century) illustrates this trend and emphasizes the close connection between Latin and vernacular traditions, which in this dawn song with Latin stanza and Provençal refrain also suggests a clerical origin.

Ex.3

Both texts and music of the 'goliard' songs display a wide range of expression and musical forms. The poetry is often characterized by verbal charm and simplicity though framed in sophisticated verse forms enhanced by an interplay of rhymes and rhythms, while intricate word play is common. The more scurrilous songs display a penetrating understanding of the social and religious structures of the times, so that a carefree and abandoned attitude, often supremely witty and apposite, attacks by implication all that established tradition held to be sacrosanct, while directing trenchant satire and bitter polemic against official abuses. Charming and graceful lyrics that evoke tender or erotic feelings are also common. Similarly, the melodies range from simple strophic settings to highly complex and melismatic through-composed forms; the latter style is illustrated by the opening of a late 12th-century planctus from the Notre Dame conductus repertory (ex.4).

Ex.4

An - - - - [An-] - gli- a plan - - etc.

-ctus i - te-ra, et ad lu-ctum re-ver - te - re.

Many fragmentary sources and several large collections of songs are extant from the final period; taken together they present a remarkable and diverse picture of late Latin secular song. The main features of the repertory may be traced by reference to the songs in the larger collections.The earliest of these is an 11th-century manuscript known as 'The Cambridge Songs' (GB-Cu Gg.5.35; for illustration see SOURCES, MS, §III, 2, fig.20), which contains some pieces from previous centuries (such as O admirabile Veneris ydolum and the 'Modus Ottinc' already referred to) and bridges the late Carolingian period and the newer trends of the 'goliard' poets. It is significant that many of the pieces are in sequence form, and that this is the first extensive collection of secular texts that are unequivocally connected with musical settings. Also, these and the following secular Latin songs are products of a learned society and, though influenced by folklore and Latin colloquialisms, they would not have been understood by the laity. A most diverse collection of sacred music, proses, tropes and conductus, is contained in the four principal St Martial manuscripts (see ST MARTIAL); among them are some 14 wholly secular works, and others that belong to that indeterminate position between sacred and secular. They are mostly strophic in form, and show the influence of vernacular and sequence forms by frequently having a formal repeat of the first phrase or versicle, while many continue with still further repetition. Melismas and melodic ornaments are also commonly used, indicating a movement away from simpler syllabic styles for Latin secular songs, so that beauty of melodic form now gains emphasis. Two further collections of secular songs mixed with sacred, from a slightly later period, continue the tradition there established: the 28 'Arundel Songs' (GB-Lbl Arundel 384; 14th century) lack notation, and only a few of their melodies can be recovered from concordances; in a second Cambridge collection (GB-Cu Ff.i.17; 13th century) of 35 songs, all have staves, but some lack notation. Here we enter the mature period of songs with rhymed rhythmic Latin verse.

The largest and most important collection of 'goliard' songs is the CARMINA BURANA (D-Mbs Clm 4660) probably from southern Germany. Some 46 of its poems are provided with unheighted neumes, and one must look to concordances to decipher the melodies, about 30 of which have been recovered with some certainty. Closely related to this tradition are many Latin CONDUCTUS, lyric songs and rondeaux of the Notre Dame sources, and much of the Latin music in the ROMAN DE FAUVEL; written in excellent notation, they form the last great repository of medieval moral and secular songs. It would appear that with these collections the centre of activity shifted to Paris, that with the establishment of the university in the early 13th century the 'goliard' fraternity was replaced by resident teachers and scholars, and that from this point secular Latin song quickly waned.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Meyer: Die Arundel Sammlung mittellateinischer Lieder (Berlin, 1908)

M. Manitius: Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters (Munich, 1911–31/R)

F. Ludwig: 'Die geistliche nichtliturgische und weltliche einstimmige und die mehrstimmige Musik des Mittelalters bis zum Anfang des 15. Jahrhunderts', Handbuch der Musikgeschichte, ed. G. Adler (Frankfurt, 1924, 2/1930/R), 157–295

H. Spanke: 'St. Martial-Studien', Zeitschrift für französische Sprache und Literatur, liv (1930–31), 282–317, 385–422; lvi (1932–33), 450–78

F.J.E. Raby: A History of Secular Latin Poetry in the Middle Ages (Oxford, 1934, 2/1957)

H. Spanke: 'Ein lateinisches Liederbuch des 11. Jahrhunderts', Studi medievali, new ser., xv (1942), 111–42

O. Schumann: 'Die jüngere Cambridger Liedersammlung', Studi medievali, new ser., xvi (1943–50), 48–85

S. Corbin: 'Comment on chantait les classiques latins au moyen age', Mélanges d'histoire et d'esthetiques musicales, i (Paris, 1955), 107–13

G. Vecchi: 'Il "Planctus" di Gudino di Luxeuil: un ambiente scolastico, un ritmo, una melodia', Quadrivium, i (1956), 19–40

W. Irtenkauf: 'Der Computus ecclesiasticus in der Einstimmigkeit des Mittelalters', AMw, xiv (1957), 1–15

E. Jammers: 'Das mittelalterliche deutsche Epos und die Musik', Heidelberger Jb, i (1957), 31–90

M. Huglo: 'A Lament for William the Conqueror', MT, cviii (1967), 124–5

P. Dronke: Medieval Latin and the Rise of European Love-Lyric (Oxford, 1965–6, 2/1968)

M. Schuler: 'Die Musik an den Höfen der Karolinger', AMw, xxvii (1970), 23–40

J. Szövérffy: Weltliche Dichtungen des lateinischen Mittelalters: ein Handbuch (Berlin, 1970)

E. Jammers: Aufzeichnungweisen der einstimmigen ausserliturgischen Musik des Mittelalters (Cologne, 1975)

A.G. Rigg and G.R.Wieland: 'A Canterbury Classbook of the Mid-Eleventh Century', Anglo Saxon England, iv (1975), 113–30

P. Dronke: 'Profane Elements in Twelfth-Century Literature', Renaissance and Renewal in the Twelfth Century, ed. G. Constable and R.L. Benson (Cambridge, MA, 1982), 569–92

A.G. Rigg: 'Medieval Latin Poetic Anthologies', Medieval Studies, xxxix (1977), 281–330; xl (1978), 387–407; xli (1979), 468–505; xliii (1981), 472–97

D. Schaller and E. Könsgen: Initia carminum Latinorum saeculo undecimo antiquorum (Göttingen, 1977)

P. Dronke: 'The Song of Songs and Medieval Love-Lyric', The Bible and Medieval Culture, ed. W. Lourdaux and D. Verhelst (Leiden, 1979), 236–62

L. Richter: 'Die beiden ältesten Liederbucher des latienischen Mittelalters', Philologus, cxxiii (1979), 63–8

C. Page: 'The Boethian Metrum Bella bis quinis: a New Song from Saxon Canterbury', Boethius: his Life, Thought and Influence (Oxford, 1981), 306–11

J. Szövérffy: 'Cambridge Songs', Dictionary of the Middle Ages, iii (New York, 1982–9), 57–8

C. Page and others: 'Neumed Boethian metra from Canterbury: a Newly-Recovered Leaf of Cambridge, Gg 5.35', Anglo Saxon England, xii (1983), 141–52

P. Dronke: The Medieval Poet and his World (Rome, 1984)

A.G. Rigg: 'Eraclius Archipoeta: Bekynton Anthology nos. 14, 15, 20, 77', Medium aevum, liii (1984), 1–9

P. Godman: Poetry of the Carolingian Renaissance (Norman, OK, 1985)

J. Stevens: Words and Music in the Middle Ages: Song, Narrative, Dance, and Drama, 1050–1350 (Cambridge, 1986) [esp. chap.1–4]

B. Gillingham, ed.: Secular Medieval Latin Song, i: An Anthology, ii: A Critical Study (Ottawa, 1993–5)

J.M. Ziolkowski: The Cambridge Songs (Carmina Cantabrigensia) (Hamden, CT, 1994)

For more specific bibliography see CARMINA BURANA and GOLIARDS.

GORDON A. ANDERSON/THOMAS B. PAYNE

Early music. A term once applied to music of the Baroque and earlier periods, but now commonly used to denote any music for which a historically appropriate style of performance must be reconstructed on the basis of surviving scores, treatises, instruments and other contemporary evidence. The 'early music movement', involving a revival of interest in this repertory and in the instruments and performing styles associated with it, had a wide-ranging impact on musical life in the closing decades of the 20th century.

1. The rise of historicism, to 1890. 2. The historical performance movement, 1890–1945. 3. Since 1945.

1. The rise of historicism, to 1890. The roots of the modern early music revival lie in early 18th-century England, France and Prussia, where a complex of social and cultural conditions gave rise to the concept of a canonical repertory of 'ancient' music. In England, the religious upheavals of the Commonwealth and Restoration fostered a renewed appreciation of the sacred music tradition. Preservation efforts, led by musicians of the cathedrals and Chapel Royal, took on an increasingly moralistic character. The clergyman Arthur Bedford, for instance, in his Great Abuse of Musick (1711), prescribed a revival of Tudor church music as an antidote for the rampant secularism of the age, as reflected in the vogue for Italian opera. This indictment was scarcely new: as early as 1643 musicians in Nuremberg had presented a concert illustrating 'the practice and abuse of noble music' through examples ranging from Jewish temple songs to 17th-century motets. But the notion of a discrete body of early music distinct from – and putatively superior to – music of the present day set the tone of the early music movement for much of the next 250 years.

In 1731 the Academy of Ancient Music in London formally defined ancient music as that composed before the end of the 16th century, although Handel, Pergolesi, Pepusch and other moderns continued to appear on its programmes. By the latter part of the century works by Handel and Corelli dominated the repertory of the Concert of Ancient Music. The great Handel Commemoration of 1784 at Westminster Abbey and Samuel Arnold's pioneer Handel edition (1787–90) secured Handel's position as a mainstay of the revival. In France, Lully's operas and Lalande's motets survived in the active repertory past the mid-1700s, attesting to a widespread taste for 'la musique ancienne'. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries the rising spirit of historicism was represented by the amateur musicians Baron von Swieten and Raphael Georg Kiesewetter in Vienna, the choir director Alexandre Choron in Paris and the founders of the Handel and Haydn Society in Boston. Anton Friedrich Justus Thibaut, a legal scholar who conducted an amateur choir in Heidelberg in the early 1800s, described his attic as a 'temple' where 'Marcello furnishes the scriptural lessons for my edification, Handel delivers the sermon to me, with Palestrina I worship my God, and our religious language, the religion we practise, is music'.

Similarly lofty sentiments inspired the most celebrated manifestation of the 19th century's passion for musical archaeology: Mendelssohn's revival of the St Matthew Passion at the Berlin Sing-Akademie in 1829. A.B. Marx hailed the event as 'a religious high feast', but neither he nor Mendelssohn treated Bach's score as sacrosanct. Heavily cut, rearranged and romanticized, it was performed by a choir of 158 and a large orchestra, with Mendelssohn conducting from the piano. Like most of his contemporaries, Mendelssohn looked upon early music not as a body of historical artefacts to be painstakingly preserved in their original state but as a repository of living art that each generation could – indeed should – reinterpret in its own stylistic idiom. As a consequence of his St Matthew Passion revival, a network of Bach societies soon sprang up in Germany and elsewhere (see Bach revival), leading in 1850 to the founding of the Bach-Gesellschaft, which set exacting standards for its complete Bach edition and opened the gates for a flood of scholarly and popular publications of pre-Classical music in the late 1800s.

The 19th-century Bach revival fed on Germans' growing sense of cultural identity and a reaction against the Rococo art forms associated with the old European order. Bach's sober pietism chimed with the search for a deeper spirituality in an increasingly bourgeois age. Religious reformists, such as the adherents of the Oxford Movement in England, deplored the decadent worldliness of modern church music and pressed for a return to plainsong in its unadulterated form, shorn of anachronistic harmonies and instrumental accompaniments. The centre of musical revivalism in the Roman Catholic Church was the Benedictine abbey of Solesmes in France, where, beginning in the 1840s, Dom Prosper Guéranger and his successors revolutionized the study and performance of Gregorian chant. In place of a stiffly metrical modern style of chanting, they advocated a flexible, speech-like interpretation that eventually gained widespread acceptance. Many of the amateur and professional choral groups that proliferated in Europe and the USA in the 1800s were dedicated to raising the standard of vocal performance and composition, typically by cultivating the 'pure' a cappella works of the Palestrina school and the music of Bach, Handel and other Baroque composers. Among the many 19th-century composers influenced by the revival was Brahms, who championed early music as a choir director in Austria and Germany.

Early music, with its overtones of piety and refinement, became a favourite pastime among the European aristocracy and newly rich gentry. 'Historical concerts' – lengthy surveys of musical periods or genres, accompanied by didactic commentaries – given by such artists as Mendelssohn, Moscheles, Paur, Méreaux and Rubinstein, became popular. Fétis, whose historical concerts in Paris and Brussels in the 1830s and 40s helped stimulate popular interest in early music, rejected the Darwinian view that modern music was inherently superior to music of earlier eras. 'Art does not progress', he said, 'it transforms itself'. This argument fell on increasingly receptive ears in the latter part of the century, when such musicologists as Chrysander, Spitta and Jahn and such composers as Schumann, Liszt and Franck were investigating and drawing sustenance from the pre-Classical repertory. The French pianist Louis Diémer began giving harpsichord recitals in the 1860s and formed an early-instrument ensemble, the Société des Instruments Anciens, which toured widely in the 1890s. Instrument collectors such as Auguste Tolbecque in France, Paul de Wit in Germany, A.J. Hipkins in England and Moritz Steinert in the USA gave public concerts and lecture-demonstrations. By the last decade of the century modern harpsichords, viols, 'Bach trumpets' (designed to play Bach's high clarino parts but unrelated to any instrument he knew) and reproductions of other early instruments were readily available, and the revival was poised to enter a new phase.

2. THE HISTORICAL PERFORMANCE MOVEMENT, 1890–1945. A key figure in the modern early music revival was Arnold DOLMETSCH. A brilliant intuitive scholar, Dolmetsch was above all a practical musician, excelling both as a performer and as a maker of finely crafted instruments; his harpsichords, clavichords, lutes, viols and recorders reflected an unprecedented concern for historical fidelity in design, construction and materials. The informal 'house concerts' that he initiated in the fashionable Bloomsbury district of London in the 1890s won an enthusiastic following and praise from such critics as Shaw and John Runciman. From 1905 to 1911 Dolmetsch ran the department of early instruments at the Chickering piano factory in Boston, where he helped lay the groundwork for the revival in the USA. After returning to England he codified his research in The Interpretation of the Music of the XVII and XVIII Centuries (1915), a pioneering survey of early performing practice and source material. In concluding that 'we can no longer allow anyone to stand between us and the composer', he formulated a credo for the nascent historical performance movement. Although the musical establishment held Dolmetsch at arm's length during his lifetime, both performers and scholars gradually came to accept his conviction that no music could be fully appreciated without reference to the instruments on which it was originally played and the stylistic conventions of the period in which it was written.

While Dolmetsch concentrated on instrumental music, others were approaching early choral music in a similar spirit. Richard Runciman Terry, organist and choirmaster at Westminster Cathedral from 1901 to 1924, played a central role in the revival of medieval and Renaissance liturgical music; he was a prime mover, with Edmund Fellowes, behind the Tudor Church Music edition. Fellowes also worked with such groups as the English Singers and the Fleet Street Choir to revitalize the madrigal tradition. In Paris the Chanteurs de St Gervais, directed by Charles Bordes, won international acclaim for their performances of Renaissance and Baroque sacred music; Bordes' editions carried his influence to the USA, where Frank Damrosch used them in performances with the Musical Art Society in New York between 1894 and 1920. The Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Pennsylvania, gave the American première of the B minor Mass in 1900, inaugurating a series of annual festivals that were a major stimulus to the Bach revival in the USA. Its performances, like those of the Bach Choir in England, were traditionally large-scale and romanticized; not until after World War I were chamber-sized performances of Baroque music popularized by groups such as the Bach Cantata Club in England and the choir of the Thomaskirche in Leipzig under Karl Straube.

As the quest for the grail of AUTHENTICITY (a term first given currency by Dolmetsch) gained momentum in the years before the war, small period-instrument ensembles like the Casadesus family's Société des Instruments Anciens and the Deutsche Vereinigung für Alte Musik, co-founded by the viol player Christian Döbereiner, rose to prominence. Their programmes typically consisted of short salon pieces, largely by minor composers. An alumnus of the Casadesus ensemble organized the American Society of Ancient Instruments in Philadelphia in 1925. Dolmetsch made his USA début in 1903 with the American Symphony Orchestra, founded in New York by the violinist Sam Franko to perform Baroque and Classical works 'in the character of the time' with a reduced ensemble of modern instruments. German musicologists, meanwhile, revived the Baroque concept of the COLLEGIUM MUSICUM, an informal gathering of amateur and professional musicians who performed chiefly for their own pleasure and instruction; the best-known such academic ensembles were Riemann's at the University of Leipzig, established in 1908, and Gurlitt's at the University of Freiburg in the 1920s. Foremost among the instrumental soloists specializing in early music was Wanda Landowska, whose virtuosity on her modern Pleyel harpsichord captivated listeners on both sides of the Atlantic.

The early 1900s saw a sustained attempt to revive Baroque opera. Fétis included excerpts from Peri's Euridice and Monteverdi's Orfeo in the first of his historical concerts at the Paris Conservatoire in 1832, but the first full-scale stage revival seems to have been Handel's Almira, produced in 1878 as part of a festival of German opera in Hamburg. The procrustean cuts and alterations in the score drew sharp criticism from Chrysander, whose scholarly edition of the work had recently appeared. Vincent d'Indy likewise modernized the music of Rameau, Lully, Monteverdi and Destouches for the staged and concert performances presented in the first quarter of the century by the Schola Cantorum (the school for composers that d'Indy, Bordes and Alexandre Guilmant founded in Paris). For the 1904 revival of Orfeo, involving some 150 singers and instrumentalists, he omitted the first and last acts as undramatic and made substantial cuts in the remaining three, arguing that the opera was 'a work of art, not of archaeology'. Germany's 'Handel Renaissance' of the 1920s and 30s was similarly premised on a compromise between practicality and historical fidelity as then conceived. Productions ranged in style from Expressionistic to quasi-Baroque, and in scale from modest academic stagings to lavish outdoor spectacles with massed dancers and amplified music. The art historian Oskar Hagen took the lead in 1920 with the first modern production of Rodelinda at the University of Göttingen. His heavily abridged and rearranged editions were adopted by Werner Josten at Smith College in Massachusetts, where a series of Handel and Monteverdi productions took place in the late 1920s and early 30s. Other notable revivals in the interwar period were given by the Paris Opéra, the Cambridge University Musical Society and the Oxford University Opera Club, and the Juilliard School in New York.

The recording and radio industries were quick to recognize the potential for bringing early music to the masses. Chant recordings were commercially available from the turn of the century, and Landowska made her first piano rolls in 1903. By the 1920s the principal British and continental record companies were making substantial investments in early music, undertaking such major projects as Bach's B minor Mass, the Brandenburg Concertos, Purcell's Dido and Aeneas and Handel's Messiah. Recorded historical anthologies, such as L'Anthologie Sonore and The History of Music by Ear and Eye (supervised by Curt Sachs and Percy Scholes respectively), provided additional outlets for early music. Equally significant was the contribution to the revival made before World War II by the state-owned radio networks: from its inception in 1922 the BBC broadcast a wide range of pre-Classical music, and as early as 1930 Westdeutscher Rundfunk in Cologne formed its own period-instrument ensemble. In bringing groups such as the Munich Viol Quintet, the Chanterie de la Renaissance, Safford Cape's Pro Musica Antiqua of Brussels, the Boyd Neel Orchestra and Ars Rediviva to millions of listeners, radio and recordings hastened the transformation of the revival of early music into a genuinely popular and international movement.

German instrument makers began the mass production of harpsichords, recorders, lutes and other early instruments in the early 1900s, and by the 1920s the recorder was the virtual trademark of the burgeoning Youth Movement. Gurlitt's reconstruction of the 'Praetorius organ' at the University of Freiburg in 1921 initiated a trend towards neo-Baroque organ design, a goal long championed by organists like Schweitzer, Guilmant and Straube. Nationalism played an increasingly important role in the revival during the interwar period. Britain succumbed to an outbreak of 'Elizabethan fever' brought on by the tercentenaries of Byrd (1923) and Gibbons (1925). In Germany the collectivist mentality of the Youth and Singing movements played into the hands of the Nazis, who appropriated Bach, Schütz and Handel as icons of racial purity. The founding in 1933 of the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in Switzerland brought a countervailing spirit of internationalism to the revival; in establishing the first school dedicated to the training of early musicians, the viol player August Wenzinger and the conductor-patron Paul Sacher sought to promote 'a lively interaction between scholarship and performance'. This innovatory programme, together with the diaspora of European performers and scholars in the 1930s and 40s, helped produce a major realignment of the early music movement after World War II.

3. SINCE 1945. The postwar centres of the revival – England, the Low Countries, Austria and the USA – came to the fore for various reasons. In Austria the movement was led by the musicologist Josef Mertins and his pupils and colleagues at the Vienna Music Academy (among them Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Gustav Leonhardt, René Clemencic and Eduard Melkus). In the USA such distinguished émigrés as Schrade and Hindemith at Yale and Erwin Bodky at Harvard established European-style collegium musicum groups on university campuses. In Britain the BBC Third Programme, inaugurated in 1946, served as an adventurous showcase for performers and scholars such as Alfred Deller, Denis Stevens and Thurston Dart. Leonhardt emerged as one of the leading Dutch early musicians and the most influential harpsichordist since Landowska; he was closely associated with the postwar trend towards historical harpsichord design. Scattered pockets of activity sprang up in eastern Europe, Scandinavia and elsewhere. Japan, initially under the tutelage of the American occupation authorities, began to cultivate first a recorder movement and then a fully fledged early music revival.

The introduction of the long-playing record in the late 1940s and the ensuing proliferation of small, independent labels, many of them specializing in early music, fuelled the postwar 'Vivaldi craze' and helped make the New York Pro Musica's freely imaginative Play of Daniel (1958) a landmark of the revival. The 1960s were dominated by such charismatic performers as Harnoncourt, Noah Greenberg, Frans Brüggen and David Munrow (whose Early Music Consort of London set new standards of instrumental virtuosity); this was also a period of energetic experimentation, notably in the interpretation of medieval and Renaissance music. The Munich-based Studio der Frühen Musik, directed by the American Thomas Binkley, transformed the performance of medieval monophonic music by applying improvisatory techniques derived from Middle Eastern folk music. In England Musica Reservata cultivated a nasal, raucous singing style that departed radically from the mellifluous sound of the English cathedral choirs and such progeny as Pro Cantione Antiqua and the Clerkes of Oxenford. A resurgence of interest in early vocal music in the 1960s and 70s gave rise to such groups as the Monteverdi Choir, the Ensemble Clément Janequin, the Prague Madrigalists, Concerto Vocale, the Hilliard Ensemble and Gothic Voices, some of which shared, in the 1980s and 90s, a historically informed concern with such issues as pitch, musica ficta, text underlay, proportional rhythm and its relevance to tempo, the use of instruments and practice of ornamentation.

In the operatic field, the trend towards greater historical awareness became firmly established after the war. Two notable productions of Monteverdi's Orfeo – Hindemith's in Vienna in 1954 and Wenzinger's in Hitzacker in 1955 – used historical instruments as well as sets and costumes based on Baroque designs. A new generation of conductors concerned with the findings of recent scholarship, among them Charles Farncombe, Anthony Lewis, Newell Jenkins and Harnoncourt, exercised a strong influence on the performance of early opera. Significant productions of the 1960s and 70s include Harnoncourt's Monteverdi cycle for the Zürich Opera, with free-wheeling stagings by Jean-Pierre Ponnelle, and Raymond Leppard's popular but controversial arrangements of Cavalli and Monteverdi operas, with many cuts and rich orchestral textures, commissioned by the Glyndebourne Festival. In contrast, most recent operatic scholarship has sought to re-create every aspect of Baroque opera production: singing, playing, staging, gesture, the disposition of the orchestra, costumes, sets, choreography and lighting. At the same time, a school of singers, inspired in part by the renewed interest in 19th-century bel canto repertory and ornamentation in the 1950s and 60s, developed techniques apt to singing in an appropriate historical style with period instruments. A rigorously historical approach, however, is unsuited to the resources or the size of most modern opera houses, and much of the most innovatory work has been done by festivals, academic institutions and smaller companies. Many revivals have been associated with 18th-century theatres that survive in their original form or in reconstruction, such as those at Drottningholm (near Stockholm), Schwetzingen (near Mannheim) and Versailles. As the revival pushed forward into the Classical and Romantic eras, directors such as Arnold Östman, Roger Norrington, John Eliot Gardiner and Gabriele Ferro began to apply historical principles to the mainstream operatic repertory as well.

By the early 1970s the repercussions of the early music 'boom' could be felt outside early music circles. The revival's centre of gravity shifted perceptibly to the Baroque and later periods, as early musicians and their patrons in the electronic media awakened to the benefits of giving a fresh twist to familiar repertory. Record companies came to play a bigger role in supporting the leading early music ensembles and promoting the new generation of star performers, such as Christopher Hogwood, Reinhard Goebel, William Christie, Jordi Savall and the Kuijken brothers. Significantly, the most prominent early music ensembles of the 1970s and 80s were not collegium-type groups or small consorts but full orchestras of period instruments (among them the Academy of Ancient Music, the Amsterdam Baroque Orchestra, Les Arts Florissants and the Orchestra of the Eighteenth Century). A milestone in the musical establishment's acceptance of the early music movement was reached in 1989, when the Glyndebourne Festival invited the Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment to replace the LPO in the pit for a series of Mozart opera productions. By then performances of Mozart and Haydn on period instruments were commonplace, several 'authentic' recordings of the Beethoven symphonies and piano concertos were under way, and the boundaries of the movement were expanding into the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment engaged conductors from both within and outside the early music camp, just as modern-instrument orchestras and opera companies were turning their podiums over to Hogwood, Harnoncourt, Gardiner, Norrington and others. Several groups, notably the New Queen's Hall Orchestra, performed early modern music in period style, and reconstructions of vintage Broadway musicals with original scores and performing forces were mounted by the American conductor John McGlinn and others.

The expanding temporal and geographical boundaries of the early music movement are mirrored in the proliferation of specialist periodicals around the world. Among the most prominent are Early Music (UK), Historical Performance (USA), Concerto (Germany), the Tijdschrift voor oude muziek (the Netherlands) and Consort (Japan). Music publishing too has kept pace with the steady growing demand for critical and performing editions and facsimiles in the early music field. In addition to the 'monuments' and Denkmäler series, and collected works of individual composers, performers and scholars have access to authoritative Urtext-based editions of a vast range of music from the Middle Ages to the early 20th century.

The revival has had a wide-ranging impact on music education and concert life. Most music schools in Europe and the USA now offer courses in performing practice and tuition on historical instruments, and many have comprehensive early music programmes. These developments have raised standards of performance as well as helping to make traditionally trained musicians more aware of historical issues. As early musicians encroach on the core 19th-century repertory, however, there has been a mounting backlash against some of the more extreme claims made on behalf of 'historically informed' performance, and a growing body of opinion has come to view it as no more or less 'authentic' than other modes of interpretation. Moreover, as the early music field becomes increasingly professional in its approach to training, organization, marketing and fundraising, it has lost many of the trappings of a counterculture and become more and more integral to mainstream musical life.

See also PERFORMING PRACTICE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

F. Chrysander: 'Die Feier des zweihundertjährigen Bestandes der Oper in Hamburg', AMZ, new ser., xiii (1878), 145–8
R. de Castéra: Dix années d'action musicale religieuse (Paris, 1902)
C. Bordes: De l'opportunité de créer en France un théâtre d'application pour la reconstitution des anciens opéras français des XVIIe et XVIIIe siècles (Paris, 1906)
A. Dolmetsch: The Interpretation of the Music of the XVII and XVIII Centuries (London, 1915/R)
R. Steglich: 'Die neue Handel-Opern-Bewegung', HJb 1928–1933, 71–158
R. Donington: The Work and Ideas of Arnold Dolmetsch (Haslemere, 1932)
H. Andrews: Westminster Retrospect: a Memoir of Sir Richard Terry (London, 1948)
R. Wangermée: François-Joseph Fétis, musicologue et compositeur (Brussels, 1951)
C. Döbereiner: 50 Jahre alte Musik in München (Munich, 1955)
W. Kahl: 'Das Nürnberger historische Konzert von 1643 und sein Geschichtsbild', AMw, xiv (1957), 281–303
H.C. Wolff: Die Händel-Oper auf der modernen Bühne (Leipzig, 1957)
D. Restout, ed.: Landowska on Music (New York, 1964)
E. Hunt: The Recorder and its Music (London, 1965, 2/1977)
Baroque Opera at Smith College 1926–31 (New York, 1966)
H.H. Eggebrecht: Die Orgelbewegung (Stuttgart, 1967)
M. Geck: Die Wiederentdeckung der Matthaüspassion im 19. Jahrhundert (Regensburg, 1967)
P. Combe: Histoire de la restauration du chant grégorien d'après des documents inédits (Solesmes, 1969)
P.M. Dowd: Charles Bordes and the Schola Cantorum of Paris: their Influence on the Liturgical Music of the Late 19th and Early 20th Centuries (diss., Catholic U., Washington DC, 1969)
W. Wiora, ed.: Die Ausbreitung des Historismus über die Musik (Regensburg, 1969)
W. Meyerhoff, ed.: 50 Jähre Göttinger Händel-Festspiele (Kassel, 1970)
J.M. Thomson: Recorder Profiles (London, 1972)
E. Richter: 'Paul Hindemith as Director of the Yale Collegium Musicum', Hindemith-Jb 1973, 20–44
H. Schott: 'The Harpsichord Revival', EMc, ii (1974), 85–95
M. Campbell: Dolmetsch: the Man and his Work (London, 1975)
E. Roche: 'Early Music and the BBC', MT, cxx (1979), 821–2, 912–14
W. Arlt: 'Zur Idee und zur Geschichte eines "Lehr- und Forschungsinstituts für alte Musik" in den Jahren 1933 bis 1970', Alte Musik: Praxis und Reflexion, ed. P. Reidemeister and V. Gutman (Winterthur, 1983), 29–76
J. Rutledge: 'Towards a History of the Viol in the 19th Century', EMc, xii (1984), 328–36
V. Hancock: 'Brahms's Performances of Early Choral Music', 19CM, viii (1984–5), 125–41
J. Cohen: Reprise: the Extraordinary Revival of Early Music (Boston, 1985)
J. Kerman: 'The Historical Performance Movement', Musicology (London, 1985), 182–217 [also pubd as Contemplating Music: Musicology in Context (Cambridge, MA, 1985)]
M. Haine: 'Concerts historiques dans la seconde moitié du 19e siècle', Musique et société: hommages à Robert Wangermée, ed. H. Vanhulst and M. Haine (Brussels, 1988), 121–42
H. Haskell: The Early Music Revival: a History (London, 1988)
N. Kenyon, ed.: Authenticity and Early Music: a Symposium (Oxford, 1988)
T. Day: A Discography of Tudor Church Music (London, 1989)
L. Palmer: Harpsichord in America: a Twentieth-Century Revival (Bloomington, IN, 1989)
V. Gutman, ed.: Alte Musik: Konzert und Rezeption (Winterthur, 1992)
W. Weber: The Rise of Musical Classics in Eighteenth-Century England: a Study in Canon, Ritual, and Ideology (Oxford, 1992)
P. Potter: 'German Musicology and Early Music Performance, 1918–1933', Music and Performance during the Weimar Republic, ed. B. Gilliam (Cambridge, 1994), 94–106
B.D. Sherman: Inside Early Music: Conversations with Performers (Oxford, 1997)

HARRY HASKELL

Early Music America. American organization founded in 1985 to promote the performance, enjoyment and understanding of early music, and to encourage the use of historically appropriate instruments and performance styles. It presents symposia, round-table discussions and other professional development and educational programmes. In addition to a bimonthly bulletin, the organization publishes the quarterly Early Music America (successor to Historical Performance, which appeared from 1988 to 1994); it also sponsors a series of performers' guides to the early music repertory. In 1998 it had about 2700 members.

□

Early Music Consort of London. A group formed by DAVID MUNROW in 1967.

Early Music Now. Performance group based in MILWAUKEE, Wisconsin.

Earsden, John (fl 1609–45). English composer. He was page to Lady Grissell Clifford in 1609 and apprenticed to GEORGE MASON, whom he succeeded as musician to Francis Clifford, Earl of Cumberland, in 1620. He collaborated with Mason in writing The Ayres that were sung and played at Brougham Castle in Westmerland, in the Kings Entertainment (London, 1618/R; ed. in EL, 2nd ser., xviii, 1962). It is not known exactly what his contribution to the entertainment was (no doubt Mason was the senior partner), but he possibly wrote 'Welcome is the word', which is printed at the end of the book, out of sequence. In 1637 his pay was increased from £13 6s. 8d. to £20 a year; his name continues to appear in the Clifford accounts until 1645.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Spink: 'Campion's Entertainment at Brougham Castle, 1617', Music in English Renaissance Drama, ed. J.H. Long (Lexington, KY, 1968), 57–74

L. Hulse: 'John Hingeston', Chelys, xii (1983), 23–42

R.T. Spence: 'A Royal Progress in the North: James I at Carlisle Castle and the Feast at Brougham, August 1617', Northern History, xxvii (1991), 41–89

IAN SPINK

Easdale, Brian (b Manchester, 10 Aug 1909; d London, 30 Oct 1995). English composer. He was educated at the Westminster Abbey Choir School and at the RCM, studying under Armstrong Gibbs (composition) and Gordon Jacob (orchestration). He wrote his first opera, Rapunzel, at the age of 18, and when he was 27 his Five Pieces for orchestra were given in Vienna; his Piano Concerto was broadcast in 1937. In 1936 he began composing for documentaries, among them those made by the GPO and Crown Units, and from 1937 to 1949 he was musical director for various theatre and film organizations in England and India. In 1948 he composed what was to remain his best-known work, the score for the film The Red Shoes, an Archers Film Unit production by Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger about the gestation and birth of a ballet, with choreography by Helpmann. Easdale wrote music for a number of other films including Black Narcissus (1947), An Outcast of the Islands (1952), The Battle of the River Plate (1956) and Peeping Tom (1960), but never again attained the same renown. In 1962 he wrote the Missa coventrensis for choir, congregation and organ, for the consecration of Coventry Cathedral. His compositions, mostly in an eclectic English idiom that owes something to Britten as well as to the Bax-Bridge generation, include the operas The Corn King (1935) and The Sleeping Children (1951), chamber music and songs.

CHRISTOPHER PALMER/R

East [Easte, Est, Este], Michael (b c1580; d Lichfield, 1648). English composer. He was previously thought to be the son of the music printer Thomas East, but the latter's will does not mention him. Its reference to a 'Coson Pearson dwellinge in Mynuall [?Mildenhall] nere Elie', a place with which the composer was associated, hints remotely at a more distant relationship between the two men. Indeed, from evidence of his deposition in a civil case, Thomas East was Michael's uncle. Michael's name first appears as a contributor to Morley's Triumphes of Oriana (RISM 1601[16]), and because of its late arrival his piece was printed on the preliminary pages. In 1606 he received the MusB degree from Cambridge; his second set of books, published in the same year, is addressed 'from Ely House Holborne'. It is possible that at this time he served the Dowager Lady Hatton, who occupied part of this London palace of the Bishops of Ely; the dedication of the last set of 1638 to Sir Christopher Hatton argues a connection with the family.

In March 1609 East joined Ely Cathedral choir as a lay clerk, in place of Ralph Amner. The cathedral account books show that 'Mr Michaell Este' received no payment after midsummer of that year, and at Michaelmas 1610 his name disappears from the list of lay clerks. He is not recorded again until Michaelmas 1614, when he acted as a replacement lay clerk for one term only. Thereafter his name disappears from the Ely records. The facts that he was sometimes paid by proxy and is not mentioned in the ecclesiastical visitations of the cathedral in May 1610 and 1613 strengthen the supposition that he was never in regular or full-time attendance there. Sometime before 1618 he moved to Lichfield, for on the title-page of the fourth set he is entitled 'Master of Choristers in the Cathedrall Church'. The antiquary Elias Ashmole (1617–92) referred to him as 'my Tutor for Song', and made it clear he was not also organist of the cathedral by mentioning Henry Hinde as holder of that post. In 1620 St John's College, Oxford, commissioned East at a fee of 44s. to write an 'anthem of St. John' (As they departed), which he apparently visited Oxford to hear; it was later published in his collection of 1624, dedicated to John Williams, Bishop of Lincoln, in gratitude for an annuity he gave East after hearing 'some Motects' (probably anthems) of his. East's will (PCC 77 Essex), dated 7 January 1648, informs us that he lived in the Cathedral Close, that his wife Dorothy and daughter Mary Hamersly were both alive, and that he had a son and a grandson (aged two) both called Michael. The will was proved on 9 May 1648.

East was unusually fortunate in having so much of his work published. His seven sets of books, though containing little of musical importance, are a valuable guide to the changing musical tastes of early 17th-century England. The first two sets, issued in the heyday of the madrigal, are thoroughly italianate in style and content. The third and fourth sets, however, place consort songs and anthems side by side with genuine madrigals and canzonets, and the third set even includes an extended sequence of viol fancies. It is probably significant that this book, East's first publication to include music for viols, appeared shortly after he joined the Ely Cathedral choir, where there was already a very strong tradition of viol teaching.

Perhaps this venture was encouraged, therefore, by the enthusiasm and expertise of musicians such as John Amner and Thomas Wyborough. 20 three-part pieces for viols are the sole contents of the fifth set. The names of the partbooks (Cantus, Quintus and Bassus), the designation 'Songs ... as apt for Vyols as Voyces', and the titles of the pieces have suggested to some writers that these were originally five-part madrigals adapted to take advantage of the growing demand for instrumental music; but there is no evidence of a reduction of parts (Cantus and Quintus indicating two equal voices), the opening point often cannot be made to fit the words of the title, and in any case the entitling of fancies goes back to the days of Tye, as does the singing of wordless compositions. Pieces of the same kind are also found in the seventh set, which again is entirely instrumental.

The sixth book is devoted completely to sacred compositions, with the exception of a consort-song setting of Sir Henry Wooton's poem in honour of Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James I. Awake and stand up is the only full anthem, the rest being sacred consort songs or verse anthems, several of which were adapted for church use by the substitution of organ for viol accompaniment. Earlier versions of two of East's consort anthems (When Israel and O clap your hands) exist in manuscript (GB-Ob Tenbury 1162–7) together with an interesting version of the pastoral Sweet Muses (third set) to the Italian words Cantate, ninfe e pastori. Two secular pieces in English ascribed to East appear in a copy of John Bennet's Madrigalls (1599) in the hand of Conyers D'arcy (Greer).

East was an industrious but unoriginal composer, who cultivated an up-to-date style without ever developing an individual musical personality. He took more texts from earlier madrigal sets and from the Elizabethan Italian anthologies than any other English madrigalist. Nor was his borrowing confined to words: he often quoted a whole phrase or more of music, and not infrequently based an entire composition on a previous setting (e.g. his praiseworthy sacred madrigal, When David heard, modelled on Weelkes). But where he no doubt intended to emulate, he often became merely derivative. His style was formed during the height of the madrigalian period, and he embraced the italianate idiom wholeheartedly. Unlike so many of the greater English madrigalists, he avoided the traditional native style even when writing consort songs and anthems. His sacred compositions, which may be compared with those of Ward, Ravenscroft and Amner, consequently tend to be more colourful (though no less prolix) than minor works in the orthodox Jacobean Anglican style – confirming the impression that he generally wrote in the first instance for the chamber, not the church. As an instrumental composer, East suffered from the lack of genuine contrapuntal ability, and from a tendency to eke out his short-winded ideas by frequent recourse to cadential patterns. An exception must be made, however, of the five-part fancies in the third set. Forming a unified cycle on the theme of the sinner's (?lover's) progress from despair through penitence to eternal bliss, these ambitious pieces fully deserve Thurston Dart's commendation: 'despite some slipshod part-writing, they are among the best five-part consorts of the time'.

WORKS

PRINTED

Madrigales apt for Viols and Voices, 3–5 pts (London, 1604); ed. in EM, xxix (1923, 2/1960)

The Second Set of Madrigales apt for Viols and Voices, 3–5 pts (London, 1606); ed. in EM, xxx (1923, 2/1961)

The Third Set of Bookes: wherein are Pastorals, Anthemes, Neapolitanes, Fancies, and Madrigales, apt both for Viols and Voyces, 5–6 pts (London, 1610); ed. in EM, xxxi (1923, 2/1962)

The Fourth Set of Bookes, wherein are Anthemes for Versus and Chorus, Madrigals and Songs of other Kindes, apt for Viols and Voyces, 4–6 pts (London, 1618); ed. in EM, xxx (1923, 2/1962)

The Fift Set of Bookes, wherein are Songs full of Spirit and Delight, So Composed that they are as apt for Vyols as Voyces [without text], 3 pts (London, 1618); ed. D. Goldstein (Provincetown, MA, n.d.)

The Sixt Set of Bookes, wherein are Anthemes for Versus and Chorus, apt for Violls and Voyces, 5–6 pts (London, 1624); ed. E.F. Rimbault, Musical Antiquarian Society Publications (London, 1845) [also includes anthems from the third and fourth sets]; ed. in EM, xxxi (1923, 2/1962)

The Seventh Set of Bookes, wherein are Duos for Two Base Viols ... also Fancies of 3. Parts for Two Treble Viols, and a Base Violl: so Made, as they must be Plaid and not Sung. Lastly, Ayerie Fancies of 4. Parts, that may be as well Sung as Plaid [without text] (London, 1638); 1 ed. in MB, ix (1966/R); 12 ayerie fancies ed. J. Evans (Ottawa, 1984); 8 duos for 2 bass viols ed. G. Hunter (Urbana, IL, 1988); 2 pt fancies, or duos, ed. D. Beecher (*c*1992)

Hence, stars, too dim of light, 5vv, 1601[16]; ed. in EM, xxxii (1923, 2/1962)

MANUSCRIPT

Magnificat, Nunc Dimittis (verse), inc., GB-Cu, LF

Burial Sentences (full), inc., LF

Be not angry (verse), inc., WO

Come lovers forth, 4vv, in John Bennet, Madrigalls (1599), US-Ws (inc., B missing)

Come, ye blessed (verse '2 Trebles and Base'), inc., GB-WO

Fall down (verse), inc., WO

O clap your hands (full), inc., text only in J. Clifford: The Divine Services and Anthems (London, 1663)

Sweet Jesu (verse), inc., WO

The silver swan, 4vv, in John Bennet, Madrigalls (1599), US-Ws (inc. B missing)

Pavin (for 2 b viols), Ob

BIBLIOGRAPHY

KermanEM; Le HurayMR

E.H. Fellowes: The English Madrigal Composers (Oxford, 1921, 2/1948/R)

J. Morehen: The Sources of English Cathedral Music, c.1617–c.1644 (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1969)

R.T. Daniel and P. le Huray: The Sources of English Church Music 1549–1660, EECM, Suppl. vol. i (1972), 99–100

J.A. Evans: The Life and Works of Michael East (c1580–1648) (diss., Boston U., 1984)

I. Payne: 'The Provision of Teaching on Viols at Some English Cathedral Churches c.1594–c.1645', Chelys, xix (1990), 3–15

D. Greer: 'Manuscript Additions in Early Printed Music', MCL, lxxii (1991), 523–35

W. Shaw: The Succession of Organists of the Chapel Royal and the Cathedrals of England and Wales from c.1538 (Oxford, 1991), 146–7

I. Payne: The Provision and Practice of Sacred Music at Cambridge Colleges and Selected Cathedrals c.1547–c.1646 (New York, 1993), 74–5

PHILIP BRETT/IAN PAYNE

East [Easte, Este], Thomas (*b c*1540; d London, 1608). English music printer and publisher. There is no evidence to support the theory that one of the variant spellings of his name, 'Este', might indicate Italian origin. From evidence of his deposition in a civil case, it seems that East was born in Swavesey, Cambridgeshire, and was the uncle of the composer Michael East, not his father, as has often been conjectured. East's ancestors had already settled in England many years before his birth; his array of type ornaments included two pieces in the design of the East family heraldic seal, which has been traced to the regin of Henry VII. He was made free of the Stationers' Company in London in 1565, and worked at first mainly as a trade-printer for other London-based publishers. He was one of those who signed 'The complaynt of the poor printers', a list of grievances sent to Lord Burghley in about 1577, protesting against the number of printing monopolies. East acquired a fount of music on the death of Vautrollier and soon printed a work as Byrd's assign. Byrd's monopoly had fallen into disuse through the commercial failure of Cantiones sacrae (1575), but East's 1588 volume, Byrd's Psalmes, Sonets and Songs (see illustration), apparently had an immediate success. Byrd thought highly of East's work; the volume was reprinted the following year, and from then until his death East flourished as a music printer (he also continued to print non-musical material). He printed most of the music of Byrd and Morley, as well as Musica transalpina (RISM 1588^{29} and 1597^{24}) and The Triumphes of Oriana (1601^{16}). In 1600 he printed John Dowland's The Second Booke of Songs or Ayres, and later Francis Pilkington's The First Booke of Songs or Ayres (1605) and John Danyel's Songs for the Lute, Viol and Voice (1606). In 1598 he printed Lassus's Novae cantiones, the first Italian music by one composer printed in England, and he appears to have had plans to export English music to Italy, for in 1595 he printed English and Italian editions of Morley's five-part balletts and three-part canzonets. No evidence survives to indicate whether the venture was successful, but there is no comparable instance in East's or any other contemporary music printer's output. During gaps in the monopoly he reprinted 12 falsely dated editions disguised as their original prints. In 1592 and 1594 East published harmonizations of the English metrical Psalter, in volumes entitled The Whole Booke of Psalmes, with their Wonted Tunes. East's Psalter includes settings by Giles Farnaby, Richard Allison, Michael Cavendish and John Dowland; East wrote the preface and dedication himself. It ran into one further edition during his lifetime and four after his death; after Thomas Ravenscroft's edition of it in 1621, 'newly corrected and enlarged', it became known as Ravenscroft's Psalter.

CONTRA TENOR.

Pſalmes,Sonets,& ſongs of ſadnes and pietie, made into Muſicke of fiue parts : whereof, ſome of them going abroade among diuers, in vntrue coppies, are heere truely corrected,and th'other being Songs very rare and newly compoſed,are heere publiſhed,for the recreation of all ſuch as delight in Muſicke : By William Byrd, one of the Gent.of the Queenes Maieſties honorable Chappell.

Printed by Thomas Eaſt, the aſsigne of W. Byrd, and are to be ſold at the dwelling houſe of the ſaid T.Eaſt, by Paules wharfe.

1588.

Cum priuilegio Regiæ Maieſtatis.

Title-page of the contratenor volume of Byrd's 'Psalmes, Sonets and Songs' (London, 1588), printed and published by Thomas East

If hard-won, East's success was deftly calculated: he was continually bedevilled with lawsuits and for most of his career was obliged to work as someone else's 'assigne', yet he consistently found ways to turn the system to his advantage. When Morley renewed the music printing monopoly in 1598, East initially suffered, and it was over a year before he could print music again. The monopoly was resurrected by William Barley in 1606, on the grounds that he had been Morley's business partner. Although the terms under which the resulting lawsuit was settled have long been thought to have been unfavourable to East, he actually advanced his position as a music publisher at that time. He won the Company's explicit recognition of his rights to reprint music he had registered with them, despite the royal monopoly, and he reduced the monopolist's fee. In 1606 he was in dispute with George Eastland, the publisher of John Dowland's The Second Booke of Songs, and the resulting lawsuit lasted for two years before the case against him was dismissed.

East was the leading music printer of his day, and may be considered the father of English music printing. He took a serious risk in printing music when the market was very uncertain, and he clearly was not easily discouraged by the vicissitudes of a music printer's life. He possessed two founts of music type and one of tablature type, together with a group of distinctive ornaments; one of these, a black horse with a crescent on the shoulder, is a pun not only on his family crest, but on his address, 'Aldersgate street at the sign of the Blacke Horse', where most of his music was printed. Court records indicate that East's wife Lucretia (née Hassel) was active in the firm at all levels; East cited her as his official partner in 1606. After East's death she printed a new edition of Byrd's Songs of Sundrie Natures (1609), but later that year, through a series of copyright transfers and a bond agreement noted in East's will, East's business passed fully to his adopted son, THOMAS SNODHAM.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Humphries-SmithMP; KrummelEMP

E. Arber: A Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers of London, i–iv (London, 1875–7/R); v (Birmingham, 1894/R)

H.R. Plomer: 'Thomas East, Printer', The Library, 2nd ser., iii (1901), 298–310

R.B. McKerrow, ed.: A Dictionary of Printers and Booksellers in England, Scotland and Ireland … 1557–1640 (London, 1910/R)

M. Dowling: 'The Printing of John Dowland's Second Booke of Songs or Ayres', The Library, 4th ser., xii (1931–2), 365–80

W.A. Jackson, ed.: Records of the Court of the Stationers' Company 1602 to 1640 (London, 1957)

J.L. Smith: 'The Hidden Editions of Thomas East', Notes, liii (1996–7), 1059–91

MIRIAM MILLER/JEREMY L. SMITH

East Asia. East Asia will here be defined mainly as CHINA (both mainland China and Taiwan), JAPAN and KOREA. This survey seeks to outline some general similarities and differences within this broad area, restricting itself for practical reasons to the majority cultures of each country. For more detailed discussions of these and the region's minority cultures, see the relevant country article.

1. Background. 2. Social aspects. 3. Aesthetics, cosmology and religion. 4. Court genres. 5. Instruments. 6. Musical features, transmission and notation. 7. Modern trends.

1. BACKGROUND. The dominant Han Chinese culture, which has influenced Japan, Korea and to a lesser extent other neighbours such as Vietnam, co-exists with substantial minority populations within Chinese borders. South-western groups have affinities with Thai-Burman tribal cultures, and the far west (Xinjiang) with Islamic Central Asia (see CHINA, §IV, 5); to the north and west, Tibetan, Mongol and Manchu cultures are also distinct (see INNER ASIA; TIBETAN MUSIC; MONGOL MUSIC); to the south, the Taiwanese aborigines constitute a distinct cultural group (see TAIWAN, §2). Korea and Japan are each much more ethnically unified, with only the Ainu of northern Japan and the Okinawans of southern Japan diverging significantly from the majority culture (see JAPAN, §VIII). Even after putting all these areas and cultures to one side, the following generalizations must be offered with diffidence.

China's vast land mass and political power have brought to it influences from a wide range of cultures and have led to a strong Chinese cultural impact on its eastern neighbours from early in the 1st millennium, well before these countries had their modern names or political identities. Chinese influence often flowed into the main Japanese islands through the Korean peninsula or the Ryūkyū archipelago, although direct links between Japan and China were also common. Conversely, China has been less affected by the musics of Korea and Japan than by those of other peoples. The centuries culminating in the Tang dynasty (618–907) saw the formation of a partly homogeneous East Asian élite culture (embracing less forcefully other areas such as Vietnam). The adoption of numerous aspects of Chinese culture – including systems of writing, literature and institutions – in Japan and Korea extended to genres and instruments of Chinese court music. This resulted in a closely related East Asian instrumentarium of Chinese origin, which might lead one to expect that the musics themselves would also be quite similar. However, contacts were reduced after the Tang period, resuming only in the 20th century; the Japanese Minshingaku is a rare borrowing from China in late imperial times. Musical practices developed quite separately under local conditions: instruments and genres found new uses and contexts while adapting to indigenous musical features and cultural forces.

Despite the often-heard claim that East Asian art music is ancient and timeless, few living genres have a verifiable tradition going back much earlier than the 16th century. Even court genres that go back to the medieval period have continued to evolve. As our awareness of the diverse musical practices of popular traditions supplements earlier scholarly concentration on courtly and literati genres, the differences among the musics of this vast area may now be seen to outweigh the similarities. This is surely why there have been virtually no recent scholarly overviews of East Asian music.

In language as in music, superficial resemblances disguise diversity. Although the Chinese ideographic writing system was adopted and modified in Korea and Japan, along with many loan words, the three languages themselves are quite distinct. Korean and Japanese appear to be genetically related, but Chinese not only has a totally different syntax but is tonal, influencing vocal style.

2. SOCIAL ASPECTS. Until quite recently, Western concepts of East Asian music were dominated by traditions of 'art music', largely because the music and musical theory of the imperial courts and the literati class dominate indigenous historical records, leading to an under-representation of the musical culture of the lower classes. But both ceremonial and entertainment musics are far more diverse. While ritual has continued to play a major part in both élite and folk societies, the expansion of urban entertainment from the Chinese Song dynasty (960–1279) led to vocal narrative and dramatic forms becoming lastingly popular. The various regional forms of opera found throughout China have long dominated musical life. In Japan, major music-theatre genres like nō and kabuki developed. Puppetry and masked opera, based in ritual, are common throughout the region.

At all levels, from court to popular, the master-pupil relationship has often resembled the adoption of a religious disciple. In many genres public acknowledgment of one's master results in 'schools' or lineages. The transmission of Japanese arts in particular has been formalized into the iemoto guild system, where direct students of a single master pass on the art to their students in turn in a tightly controlled familistic hierarchy; headship often passes from parent to child. Though there has never been a true caste system, professional music-making has often been the ascriptive fate of particular groups, for example by heredity or through blindness.

Women traditionally occupy subsidiary positions as musicians at all levels of society. Female courtesans often provided music, even aiding transmission between literati and commoners. Though 20th century social movements have sought to a limited extent to extend equality – women are now widely accepted in Chinese opera and in urban professional troupes, for instance – discrimination is still evident in many contexts.

3. AESTHETICS, COSMOLOGY AND RELIGION. The Chinese state belief system of Confucianism has been pervasive, with its hierarchical and cosmological system expressed through ritual music. Throughout recorded history, music in China has been linked with the social and cosmic order, the Confucian 'mandate of heaven' being seen as authorizing governments that observed proper music and ritual. The generation of the five pitches was connected with the five elements and the five directions, and that of the 12 basic pitches to the lunar months. Pitch relationships were further equated with social hierarchies. These theories were enshrined in the classical texts of Confucianism and inherited and augmented in later dynasties, still forming a canonical system today. This body of theory was adapted in Korea, where Confucian state ritual traditions developed under the influence of those in China, and to a lesser extent in Japan. Japanese and Korean theoretical writings in general often drew on Chinese models, though such similarities partly obscured the diversity of actual music-making.

Mahāyāna Buddhism has also been a unifying factor. Chinese Buddhism spread to Korea and Japan in the 5th–6th centuries CE. Again the Tang dynasty was the period of greatest contact. Note a cumulative linguistic tendency: in India, Buddhist lyrics were composed in the native Sanskrit; the Chinese retained those texts and added further lyrics in Chinese; the Japanese and Koreans kept both and added yet further texts in their own languages. Something similar must have happened with the music as well, though this is more difficult to chart. Though broad similarities may be found between the chant and percussion accompaniment of Buddhist rituals throughout the region, musical practice may have begun to diverge quite widely from an early stage.

Indigenous religions such as Chinese Daoism, Korean shamanism and Japanese Shintō, which developed in parallel with Buddhism, have their own distinctive musics. Temple as well as folk religious traditions show regional features. In Japan, Buddhist chant influenced nō singing, gidayū and the shakuhachi flute. In China, singing styles and dramatic expression of opera and ritual are closely related. In Korea, Confucianism and Buddhism compete with an indigenous shamanic tradition whose uniqueness took on nationalistic symbolic importance by the 1990s.

Another common theme in more literate traditions of East Asia is the relation between music and the spiritual contemplation of nature, often through association with poetry. In vocal lyrics such imagery may also be used as a metaphor for human feelings of separation or longing; folk-song lyrics often treat these same themes less philosophically. Likewise, solo pieces for instruments such as the Chinese qin zither or the Japanese shakuhachi are often inspired by natural scenes such as rivers or mountains; programmatic descriptions may even accompany instrumental notations. Nature is only one theme, however; the spectrum is wide, also including battles and inebriation, though connotations may be philosophical rather than mundane.

Polarities commonly expressed in music, particularly in China and Korea, are heaven and earth, martial and civil, yin and yang. The contrast of refined versus vulgar (Chinese ya-su, Japanese ga-zoku, Korean a-sok) has long been influential among the literati. For example, the Neo-Confucianists of Japan's Tokugawa period (1603–1868) castigated shamisen music as erotically stimulating, hence zoku and morally corrupting; similar value judgments have been common throughout the region. But again one must search beyond literati traditions to the less explicit aesthetics of more popular genres.

4. Court genres. The notional homogeneity of East Asian musical culture is based largely on court genres that were exported from China to Korea and Japan. Chinese instruments were known in the north Korean kingdom of Koguryŏ by the 4th century CE. Masked dance drama from southern China was transmitted first to the Korean kingdom of Paekche and thence to Japan. Korean music was also performed in Japan. Such transmission peaked during the Chinese Tang and Song dynasties (7th–13th centuries). The cosmopolitan Tang court saw what might be called the first 'World Music' boom, with ensembles from Central Asian, South and South-east Asian and Korean kingdoms employed there. As elements from these various sources intermingled in new ways in the Tang capital Chang'an, the results were often exported to Korea and Japan. Though foreign ensembles were also employed at successive Chinese courts, the most lasting foreign influence on Chinese music was from the instruments of Central Asia, such as pipa lute and suona shawm.

The court genres were of two very different types: several genres of banquet music and the monumental Confucian state ritual ensembles. Chinese court banquet music was imported and ritualized in Japan (tōgaku) primarily in the Tang period and in Korea (tangak) mainly in the Song, but subsequently practice was constantly modified. A state Confucian court ritual ensemble (aak), in which ritual grandeur and perceived correctness took precedence over purely musical factors, was exported to Korea in 1116; it was one of several genres from the Chinese Song dynasty performed at the Korean court. Though later reforms were partly inspired by the Chinese classics and modifications on the Chinese mainland, practice again diverged.

5. Instruments. Chinese instruments imported to Japan and Korea include most prominently the sheng mouth organ (Jap. shō, Korean saeng), zheng zither (sō/koto, kayagŭm), pipa plucked lute (biwa, pip'a), bili/guan oboe (hichiriki, p'iri) and di transverse flute (ryūteki, jŏk). The important Chinese two-string fiddle family (huqin etc.) is found in Korea (haegŭm) but never settled in Japan. Shawms are common throughout China (suona, derived from Central Asian zurna); they have never settled in Japan, but they flourish in Korea (the t'aep'yŏngso) in various genres, most prominently in 'farmer's music' (nongak). Conversely, the Chinese three-string plucked lute sanxian reached Japan (shamisen) but is not found in Korea. Barrel drums play a major role in all three cultures, while hourglass drums are important in Japan and Korea but have long been rare in China. In many cases the names of related instruments in all three countries are still written with the same Chinese characters (though pronounced somewhat differently), but in others the names have changed.

Even those instruments adopted as part of a court ensemble often enjoyed more popular uses. The best examples are long zithers: secular repertories for Chinese zheng, Korean kayagŭm and Japanese koto developed independently both of the courts and of each other. By contrast, the instruments of Buddhism (largely percussion) are also widely shared but have rarely transcended their original contexts. The same is true for the Confucian ritual orchestra exported from China to Korea, which included large frames of bells and lithophones.

These and several other instruments still show clear genetic similarities between countries, but they have evolved considerably, to the extent that none of the relatives could be interchanged today. More importantly, the music played upon these instruments soon diverged, which of course triggered some structural changes. Thus the blow-hole of the Korean t'aegŭm transverse flute is much larger than its Chinese antecedent, facilitating the distinctive wide vibrato favoured in Korea; the loosely strung silk strings of Korea's kayagŭm serve the same function, in contrast to Japan's koto. Another case is the Japanese notched flute shakuhachi. Examples of 8th-century Chinese manufacture preserved in the Shōsōin treasury in Japan have five fingerholes and one thumb-hole (like their Chinese relative, the xiao), suitable for playing the heptatonic scale then used in China. Centuries later, all shakuhachi had lost one fingerhole and now were more suitable for playing Japanese pentatonic melodies. And the large plectrum of Japan's shamisen suits the percussive nature of its music, as opposed to its Chinese relative. In the 20th century metal or nylon strings have commonly replaced silk. Communist China and North Korea have attempted to popularize 'improved' versions of instruments (often on Western models), with more success in urban than rural areas.

6. Musical features, transmission and notation. As all three countries have now been permeated by Western music practice and values, one may get a misleading impression of traditional elements by exposure to 20th-century hybridized styles such as the koto compositions of Michio Miyagi, the kayagŭm music of Hwang Byung-ki or a composition or arrangement of the Chinese 'conservatory style'. This section will focus on the more traditional end of the spectrum.

Traditional scales and modes of the three countries vary significantly, though this fact can be disguised by a theoretical model shared among court genres in particular. The five pitches doh ray me soh lah of the anhemitonic pentatonic scale, called in Chinese gong shang jiao zhi yu (with related pronunciations in Korea and Japan), may be supplemented by two 'exchange tones' (the fourth and seventh degrees of the scale) to make a heptatonic scale. The theory is based on creating pipes one third shorter and longer than that preceding to play a series of 5ths, of which a set of 12 semitones (Chinese: lü) became standard in theoretical writings.

The concept of mode, or mode-key (see Mode, §V), is common, known in Chinese as diao, in Japanese as chō, in Korean as cho; it extends also to Vietnam, where it is called diêu. Chinese modal theory influenced Japan and Korea in the Tang dynasty but continued to develop, from the Song dynasty largely in the context of vocal dramatic music. The 16th-century scholar Zhu Zaiyu was the most celebrated in a long line of theoreticians seeking to codify a tempered scale, though this remained remote from practice.

In Japan and Korea, court theorists revised the modal theory inherited from China, but other genres in both countries, although sometimes borrowing court terminology, owed little to any Chinese model. Only since the late 19th century have native scholars begun to analyse the modal structures of such genres, in the virtual absence of previous indigenous theory. Although the music of all three countries tends towards a pentatonic core, modal details are strikingly different both between and within countries. The Chinese anhemitonic pentatonic scale is supplemented in Japan and Korea by scales with semitones and major 3rds. Most Japanese genres can be subsumed under a tetrachordal analysis championed by Koizumi Fumio, where two or three tonal centres compete within an octave. Korean genres seem more diverse, and scholars have stressed the different function of individual tones within a mode, rather as in the north Indian rāga system; regional differences are also highlighted.

Traditional metrical systems also differ sharply. Chinese music is dominated by duple metres. Korean music is partial to a variety of triple and compound metres not found in the other countries and largely encoded in a system of named patterns called changdan. Japan favours duple metre or a long-short-long-short 6/8 unlike anything in Korea. But all three countries also feature extreme flexibility of metre or pulse, reaching to true free rhythm in some genres.

The multi-movement form of the Tang court suite was developed into a widely applied aesthetic principle in the Japanese jo-ha-kyū, but apart from a gradual acceleration (by no means unique to East Asia) the combination of movements into large-scale forms in the three countries is diverse.

Vocal music has long dominated East Asian societies, from informal folksong to large-scale staged dramatic music. Between these two extremes are many popular genres of ballad or narrative singing with chamber accompaniment of drum (as for Korean p'ansori) or other percussion, or of plucked lutes (in China and Japan) or zithers (in Korea). Mutual influence among the dramatic genres of these three countries has been surprisingly minimal. Even within each country such genres are diverse. Musical theatre in China ranges from masked nuoxi ritual opera to more modern entertainment forms such as Huangmei xi; in Japan the populist kabuki contrasts with the more ritualistic nō; meanwhile Korea, apart from it masked dance dramas, has lacked large-scale dramatic performances until the creation of p'ansori-derived ch'angguk in the 20th century. Though Chinese is a tonal language, vocal melodies reflect speech tones more in élite than in popular genres. While the problem does not arise in Korea or Japan, musical setting generally reflects syntax.

Instrumental textures are often heterophonic, and linear rather than vertical. Though any harmonic effects are usually casual, some genres such as Japanese gagaku produce dense and strictly regulated textures; here, for instance, the clusters of the shō mouth organ contrast with the sparser 5ths and octaves of the Chinese sheng.

Percussion ensembles are common, mainly using drums, gongs and cymbals. Large groups perform for outdoor festivities. Smaller complexes of percussion accompany vocal dramatic genres, as in Chinese opera and Japanese nō.

Improvisation is generally minimal; though a certain amount of creative flexibility may be expected in the decoration of the nuclear notes, in many traditions great conformity is demanded in teacher-pupil transmission. Although written notation (often tablature) is used in some genres, it plays a minor role in most music acquisition, where oral-aural transmission is more common. Oral mnemonics are often used, but any written notation serves mainly as an aid to teaching and memory, being mostly eschewed in performance. Several types of Chinese notation have been substantially modified in Korea and Japan; a grid system, giving more detailed (notably rhythmic) data, was developed by the 15th century in Korea and later in Japan. Recently, as modern teaching methods from the West have supplemented traditional ones, cipher or staff notation may also be used; since these tend to be used to prescribe more features of performance (including ornamentation and dynamic) more explicitly, this may reduce the variability of traditional performance.

7. Modern trends. Since about 1850 the divergent histories of the countries have created new aspects of music-making. All East Asian governments have attempted to forge national cultures, reducing local variation, but different reactions may be observed to the meeting of nationalism with modernization and Westernization, in both ideology and practice, and to the incursions of Western popular culture. An additional factor is that the 20th century saw the resumption of significant direct interaction among these three cultures after a long lapse, albeit in radically new conditions. The Meiji restoration in Japan, the rise of communism in China and North Korea, the industrializations of Japan, South Korea and Taiwan, and the Japanese colonial presence of the early 20th century – all these have had impacts on East Asian music, whether in favour of assimilation or of divergence.

A good example is the treatment of folksong. Nationalism, Western scholarly influence, increases in domestic tourism and other factors have heightened attention to the genre throughout the region. Folksong collection and the composition of 'new folksongs' became major activities, not only as an expression of romantic nationalism but for more specifically political reasons under socialist regimes. In China, even traditional folksongs were recast with more politically suitable lyrics. Thus we find significant parallels along with striking differences across the region.

The adoption of communism in mainland China and North Korea created other parallels as well, including official policies towards the 'improvement' of musical instruments, the status of religious music, and the correct nature and goals of 'art music' composition. Such central policies have been deflected to varying degrees at local level.

As elsewhere, indigenous traditions have suffered a certain loss of prestige with globalization. Music educators, often based in the new conservatory system, have tended to stress the acquisition of Western music, or the 'improvement' of traditional genres on Western models. This has been partly balanced by government initiatives to 'preserve' endangered genres, often in new contexts. Thus some genres have been repackaged to represent a new national image, such as the courtly traditions of Chinese yayue (both in post-Maoist mainland China and in Taiwan) and Korean aak.

Concerts and conservatories have supplemented but not replaced traditional venues and means of transmission. The intimate Chinese qin zither has entered the conservatory, the concert stage and the recording studio, but amateur gatherings expressing the quintessential philosophy of the instrument are still held. The Japanese shakuhachi, long considered a tool of Zen meditation, is now more commonly treated as a primarily musical instrument, though here too earlier attitudes are maintained by many players. Considerable gaps persist between the modernized musical life of the towns and the ceremonial-based music-making of rural areas, perhaps especially in mainland China.

Composition in the Western sense has been influenced by traditional music in varying degrees. Though composers such as TŌRU TAKEMITSU and TAN DUN have succeeded in the West partly by virtue of an imaginative recasting of their national traditions in a modern vocabulary, most seem to resist being pigeon-holed as exotic representatives of a merely national culture. Under Western-influenced compositional demands, for example, variants of Japan's 13-string koto have been developed with 21, 25 and 30 strings to transcend pentatonicism.

Pop music has several distinctive East Asian voices, with karaoke a major craze. In Chinese communities pop music has even acted as a unifying force, with styles throughout the Chinese diaspora suggesting a certain common identity. More recently, the 'World Music' phenomenon has encouraged the blending of traditional styles with Western pop features.

Neo-traditional styles have also emerged to suit 'modern' tastes. An example is the rise of large-scale drum ensembles in Japan (see KUMI-DAIKO), using traditional instruments and musical elements in new ways, and in concert rather than ritual settings. Korea's samulnori percussion ensemble represents a parallel development. In China politically modified versions of yangge (song and dance with percussion) have supplemented, rather than replaced, its traditional ritual function.

DAVID W. HUGHES, STEPHEN JONES

Easte, Michael. See EAST, MICHAEL.

Easte, Thomas. See EAST, THOMAS.

Easter Island. See POLYNESIA, §II, 2.

Eastman School of Music. Conservatory founded in ROCHESTER, New York, in 1921.

Easton, Florence (b Middlesbrough-on-Tees, 25 Oct 1884; d New York, 13 Aug 1955). English soprano. She studied in Paris and London, and made her début as the Shepherd in Tannhäuser (1903, Newcastle upon Tyne). She toured North America with H.W. Savage's English Grand Opera Company (1905–7); both she and her husband, the American tenor Francis Maclennan, were then engaged at the Berlin Hofoper, 1907 to 1913, and for the following three years at the Hamburg Städtische Oper. Before World War I, Easton made only a few Covent Garden appearances, notably as Butterfly in 1909. In November 1915 she sang at Chicago in Siegfried, and two years later began her long and fruitful association with the Metropolitan Opera, which lasted without interruption until 1929. Her pure tone, sound technique and excellent musicianship singled her out even in the brilliant assembly of singers collected by Gatti-Casazza. She was immensely versatile, with a repertory ranging from Brünnhilde to Carmen and the reputed ability to appear at a moment's notice in any one of over 100 roles. At the Metropolitan she sang some 35 roles, among them Lauretta in the première of Puccini's Gianni Schicchi (14 December 1918). She made isolated reappearances at Covent Garden, as Turandot in 1927, and as Isolde and the Siegfried Brünnhilde with Melchior in 1932. She gave her farewell performance, at the Metropolitan, on 29 February 1936 as Brünnhilde in Die Walküre, receiving an ovation for her still splendid singing and interpretation. Her art is adequately represented on disc, notably her final duet from Siegfried with Melchior.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Stratton: 'Florence Easton', Record Collector, xxi (1973–4), 195–239, 256 [with discography]

DESMOND SHAWE-TAYLOR/R

East Syrian rite, music of the. See SYRIAN CHURCH MUSIC.

East West. American record label. It was established in 1957 by the Atlantic record company of New York. The recordings released on East West were leased by Atlantic from independent producers Lee Hazelwood of Phoenix, Arizona, and Lester Sill of Los Angeles. The only hit record on East West was the rock and roll instrumental Weekend by the Kingsmen, although the label also issued the first recording by David Gates, later a member of the group Bread. The label ceased activity in 1958, but the name was revived in 1990 for use by the UK and German subsidiaries of the Warner Music Group (the owners of Atlantic). The new East West labels operated alongside Warner's WEA label in each country and issued music by local popular music artists and recordings by Atlantic's American artists. During the 1990s further East West labels were established in Japan, Australia, France (where the Carrere label was renamed East West in 1995), Spain (DRO East West) and Italy, where the company was known as CGD East West. (C. Gillett: Making Tracks: Atlantic Records and the Growth of a Multi-Billion-Dollar Industry, New York, 1974)

DAVE LAING

Eastwood, Thomas Hugh (b Hawley, Hants., 12 March 1922; d 25 Oct 1999). English composer. While a member of the British Council in Ankara, he took private composition lessons with Necil Kâzimakses; later he studied with Blacher in Berlin and Stein in London, both decisive influences. The first of his works to come to public attention was the String Trio, awarded first prize in the 1949 Cheltenham Open Competitive Music Festival. Thereafter he worked extensively in the theatre and in broadcasting. The best known of his works is perhaps Christopher Sly, a chamber opera based on The Taming of the Shrew and a piece that is moderately conventional in idiom and form. There is a more exploratory style in the incidental scores, some of them for unusually large forces, and in the chamber music.

WORKS
(selective list)

DRAMATIC

Galatea (ballet), 1950; Christopher Sly (op, R. Duncan, after W. Shakespeare), 1960; The Rebel (TV op, Duncan), 1969; The Beach of Aurora (Brazilian folk op, 3, P. Gilliatt), 1978–84; The Voyage of the Catarineta (ballad op, 2, Eastwood), 1990–91; Carmen Dei (J. Davies), nar, chorus, children's choir, org, orch, 1990

Incid music: Hamlet, 1954; Royal Court productions: Don Juan, The Death of Satan, Look Back in Anger, The Making of Moo, Nekrassov, The Country Wife, Cards of Identity, Lysistrata, 1954–9; Three's Company, 1962; Abelard and Eloïse, 1962

Radio scores: Hippolytus, 1958; Dyskolos, 1959; Amphytrion II, 1961; Love in a Village, 1964; The Provoked Wife, 1964; The Constant Couple, 1967; King John, 1967; The Honest Whore, 1970; The Other Side of the Hill, 1991

TV scores: Venus Brown, 1963; Mary Queen of Scots, 1969; A Picture of Katherine Mansfield, 1973

OTHER WORKS

Orch: Conc., vn, va, chbr orch, 1950–51; Music to Celebrate, 1953; Hymn to Pan, 1972; Conc., fl, str, 1988

Choral: 3 Settings of Francis Quarles, SSA, 1953; 3 Medieval Lyrics, SATB, 1953; 3 American Settings, SATB, 1972; Benedicite Lament (M. Palmer), chorus, org, 1988; The Least of These (cant., J. Davies, after Bible: Matthew), 1991

Vocal: Cant. mariana, S, str orch, 1953; Solitudes, T, a fl, gui, str qt, 1964; Ronde des saisons, T, str orch, 1970–71; Caratatena (Brazilian poetry), S/T, pf, 1979; Cancioneiro (F. Pessoa), S, pf, 1985; 7 Songs from the Chinese, S, fl, va, hp, 1996; Lament (ancient Gk.), S, pf, 1997; Amor (F. García Lorca), Bar, pf, 1998

Chbr and solo inst: Str Trio, 1949; 3 Pf Pieces, 1951; Introduction and Allegro, str trio, 1952; Capriccio, gui, 1962; Trio Movt, fl, cl, pf, 1962; Ballade-Phantasy, gui, 1969; Rec Qt, 1969; Amphora, gui, 1971; Romance et plainte, gui, 1977; Uirapurú, ob/fl, gui, 1982; Apéritifs, gui, 1987; Aubade, org, 1987

MSS in GB-Lmic

Principal publishers: Boosey & Hawkes, Faber, Novello

WRITINGS

A Winter in Majorca [BBC TV script on Chopin and Sand]

'On Writing an Opera for Television', The Composer, no.25 (1967), 4–10

RICHARD COOKE/R

Eaton, John C(harles) (b Bryn Mawr, PA, 30 March 1935). American composer. He attended Princeton University, where his teachers included Sessions. After completing his studies in 1957, he spent 11 years in Rome (aided by three Prix de Rome and two Guggenheim fellowships) where he was active as a composer and pianist. His opera Heracles (1964) was chosen to open the new Musical Arts Center at Indiana University in 1972 and he was subsequently offered an appointment as professor of composition there. In 1989 he assumed a similar position at the University of Chicago.

During his Rome years, Eaton explored microtonal tuning, primarily of equal-tempered quarter-tones, a technique that provided him with an expanded range of precisely inflected pitches suitable for his chromatic, yet tonally focussed style. He also experimented with live electronic music. The engineer Paul Ketoff, with whom he worked closely, developed the first portable performance synthesizer, the Synket, for him in 1964; he subsequently collaborated with Robert A. Moog on similar projects. A series of works from the mid- to late 1960s, for various combinations of instrumental, vocal and electronic forces, developed these resources.

Although he has continued to write instrumental and vocal compositions, Eaton is best known for his stage works. Ma Barker (1957), composed while he was an undergraduate, was followed by Heracles, a large-scale three-act work that capped his early stylistic development. Myshkin (1970), conceived for television, was the first opera in which microtonal and electronic extensions were put to dramatic use. The action is seen through the distorted vision of the title character, whose eye becomes the camera's eye and whose fluctuating rationality and irrationality are mirrored, respectively, in quarter-tone orchestral music and sixth-tone electronic music. A multiple time frame encompasses different tempos, each associated with one of a number of simultaneously occurring stage actions. Subsequent operas developed ever richer and more flexible responses to widely different dramatic requirements. The Lion and Androcles (1973), Danton and Robespierre (1978) and The Cry of Clytaemnestra (1979) appeared in rapid succession, gaining Eaton a reputation as one of the most original and interesting contemporary opera composers in the USA. These were followed by The Tempest (1983–5), which called upon the full range of Eaton's technical arsenal, and The Reverend Jim Jones (1989), based on the Jonestown massacre.

Beginning with Peer Gynt (1990), Eaton embarked on a new series of stage works composed for small groups of instrumentalists, who, dressed in costume and wearing masks, assume the roles of the dramatic personae. With their parts conceived 'in character', the performers act out their roles on stage, play their instruments, whisper, speak, shout, sing and dance.

WORKS

STAGE

Ma Barker (chbr op, 1, A. Gold), 1957

Heracles (grand op, 3, M. Fried, after Sophocles and Seneca), 1964, Bloomington, IN, 15 April 1972

Myshkin (TV op, 1, P. Creagh, after F.M. Dostoyevsky: The Idiot), 1970, 23 April 1973

The Three Graces (theatre piece, D. Anderson), 3 solo vv, actor, elec ens, 1972

The Lion and Androcles (children's op, 1, E. Walter and D. Anderson, after A. Silvius fable), 1973, Indianapolis, 1 May 1974

Danton and Robespierre (grand op, 3, Creagh), 1978, Bloomington, IN, 21 April 1978
The Cry of Clytaemnestra (op, 1, Creagh, after Aeschylus), 1979, Bloomington, IN, 1 March 1980
The Tempest (grand op, 3, A. Porter, after W. Shakespeare), 1985, Santa Fe, 27 July 1985
The Reverend Jim Jones (op, 3, J. Reston jr), 1989
El divino narciso (dramatic cant., N. Nelson, after S. Juana), Chicago, 21 April 1989
Peer Gynt (theatre piece, Eaton, after H. Ibsen), 1990, New York, 6 June 1992
Let's Get this Show on the Road: an Alternative View of 'Genesis' (E. Walter), Chicago, 8 Dec 1993
Salome's Flea Circus (theatre piece, Eaton), 1994
Don Quixote (theatre piece, Eaton, after M. de Cervantes), 1994, Chicago, 6 June 1996
Golk (theatre piece, R. Stern), 1995, Chicago, 6 June 1996
Travelling with Gulliver (theatre piece, E. Eaton, after J. Swift), 1997, Boston, 30 May 1997
King Lear (op, 3, L. Bates, after Shakespeare)

VOCAL

Song Cycle (J. Donne: Holy Sonnets), 1v, pf, 1956; Songs for R.P.B. (H. Crane, R.P. Blackmur), 1v, pf, synth, 1964; Thoughts on Rilke, S, 2 synkets, syn-mill, reverberation plate, 1966; Blind Man's Cry (T. Corbière, trans. Creagh), S, synket, Moog synth, syn-mill, 2 tape rec, 1968; Mass, S, cl, orch of synths, 1969; Ajax (J. Moore, after Sophocles), Bar, orch, 1972; Guillen Songs (J. Guillen), 1v, pf, 1974; Land of Lampedusa (M. Perry), Mez, S, pf, synths, 1974; Oro (M. Goeritz), 1v, synths, 1974; Lullaby for Estela (Creagh), 1v, pf, 1975; Duo (Pss), chorus, 1977; A Greek vision (A. Sikelianos, trans. E. Keeley), S, fl, elec, 1982; Ars poetica (W.B. Yeats), Mez, fl, hp, vc, 1986; Songs of Despair (J. Joyce), Mez, ww, brass, perc, pf, hp, str, 1987; A Packet for Emile and Bill (E. Snyder), Mez, cl, 1991; Notes on Moonlight (F. García Lorca, W. Stevens, L. Lugones, C.P. Baudelaire, W.B. Yeats), S, Mez, ww, perc, pf, hp, str qt/orch, 1991; Tpt Voluntary (G. Chaucer), S, brass qt, 1991; Songs of Desperation and Comfort (Donne, Creagh, Shakespeare, Corbière), Mez, chbr orch, 1993; Lettere (M. Ranchetti), Mez, fl, hp, str qt, 1994; Ad luciam beatricem, Mez, cl, 1995; Mass, vv, cl, pf, 2 perc, 1997; many other songs

INSTRUMENTAL

Pf Variations, 1957; Str Qt, 1958; Tertullian Ov., orch, 1958; Encore Piece, fl, pf, 1959; Tpt Sonata, 1959; Adagio and Allegro, fl, ob, str, 1960; Concert Piece, cl, pf, 1960; Epigrams, cl, pf, 1960; Concert Music, cl, 1961; Variations, fl, 1964; Microtonal Fantasy, 2 pf [tuned ¼-tone apart], 1965; Concert Piece, synket, orch, 1966; Concert Piece no.2, synket, 1966
Soliloquy, synth, 1967; Vibrations, fl, 2 ob [tuned ¼-tone apart], 2 cl [tuned ¼-tone apart], 1967; Duet, synket, synth, 1968; Thoughts for Sonny, tpt, 1968; Pf Trio: In memoriam Mario Cristini, 1971; Sonority Movement, fl, 9 harp, 1971; Sym no.2, 1980–81; Burlesca, tuba, pf, 1981;
Remembering Rome, str orch, 1986; A Little Love Song, fl, pf, 1987; 4 Miniatures, sax, 1987; Str Qt no.2, 1987; Fantasy Romance, vc, pf, 1989; 2 Plaudits for Ralph, fl, ob, vc, 1991; Genesis, synth, 1992; Golk Sonatina, ob, pf, 1995; 3 Designs, cl, 1996; many other short chbr works, occasional pieces, some withdrawn

Principal publishers: Associated, Carisch, Malcolm, G. Schirmer, Shawnee

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD
J. Chadabe: 'Concert Piece for Synket and Symphony Orchestra', Electronic Music Review, no.4 (1967), 46 only
A. Frankenstein: 'Introducing John Eaton and his Pieces for the Synket', HiFi, xviii/7 (1968), 82 only
K. Monson: 'Eaton: Danton and Robespierre', High Fidelity/Musical America, xxx/7 (1980), 67–8
R.P. Morgan: 'Alchemist', ON, l/1 (1985), 28–31
R.P. Morgan: 'John Eaton and The Tempest', MT, cxxvi/July (1985), 397–400

ROBERT P. MORGAN

Ebadi, Ahmad (b Tehran, 1906; d Tehran, 1993). Iranian setār player. He came from a long line of distinguished musicians and was a grandson of Ali Akbar Farahani (d 1858) and a son of Mirza Abdollah (1845–1918). He learned music in the family circle and at the age of 18 appeared for the first time in a public concert. His fame and popularity, however, began with his radio performances which came later, beginning in the mid-1950s.

Musical developments in Iran in the first half of the 20th century tended to sideline the setār. Composed orchestral and vocal music became the main focus of these developments. Having a comparatively gentle and quiet sound, the setār was ill-suited for inclusion in the ensembles which were widely used by the middle of the 20th century; the setār could only shine as a solo instrument. It was largely due to Ebadi's mastery of this instrument, the elegance of his performance style and his imposing personal dignity that gradually the setār found a renewed life. His solo performances on the radio and television made a great impact and helped to encourage the study of the setār by the younger generation, despite the fact that Ebadi took little interest in teaching and rarely accepted a pupil.

Ebadi left a large number of recordings which were published both in Iran and abroad. His performance style rested on creative improvisation. Each rendition of a dastgāh, as played by Ebadi, was almost a new composition, different from other performances in dramatic and unpredictable ways. He produced highly varied sonorities, made effective use of sudden pauses to heighten tension, and had a unique ability to juxtapose power and pathos.

HORMOZ FARHAT

Ebb, Fred. American lyricist. See under KANDER, JOHN.

Ebbinge, Ku (b Almelo, 9 Jan 1948). Dutch oboist. A leading figure in the modern revival of Baroque and Classical oboes, Ebbinge studied with Frans Brüggen, Gijs Reijns, Jaap Stotijn and Hans de Vries. Early in his career he developed a close working relationship with harpsichordist Ton Koopman, firstly in the chamber group Musica da Camera and later in the Amsterdam Baroque Orchestra. In 1983 he became principal oboist in Brüggen's Orchestra of the 18th Century. As well as numerous oboe obbligatos with the Leonhardt Ensemble for the Telefunken complete recording of the cantatas of J.S. Bach, Ebbinge has recorded the concertos and sonatas for oboe by C.P.E. Bach, Vivaldi concertos and Zelenka trio sonatas. He is a member of the faculty of the Royal Conservatory, The Hague, and an influential teacher of Baroque oboe.

GEOFFREY BURGESS

Ebdon, Thomas (bap. Durham, 30 July 1738; d Durham, 23 Sept 1811). English organist, conductor and composer. For 63 years he was associated with the music of Durham Cathedral. A chorister under James Hesletine from 1748 to 1756, he was responsible for carving 'T. Ebdon, Sepr. 1755' on the oak screen which divides the choir from the north aisle. From 1756 to 1763 he served as a lay clerk. It was in 1763, after deputizing for three months following the death of Hesletine, that Ebdon was appointed organist. His appointment rested on the dean exercising his prerogative, for the Act Book records that it was 'contra consilium [against the advice] of everyone of the Preb^{ys} present in Chapter Held this day'.

In 1786 Ebdon was associated with George Meredith as conductor of the Newcastle Subscription Concerts. He also organized other concerts there and in Sunderland as well as in Durham. Among Ebdon's compositions, his sonatas, most of them in the unusual form with three accompanying instruments preferred by Avison, show a small talent, with some fluent, virtuoso keyboard writing but routine, foursquare thematic matter. His glees and anthems, too, display a similar facility.

WORKS
all printed works published in London

VOCAL

6 Glees, 3vv, hpd/pf, op.3 (*c*1780)
Sacred Music Composed for the Use of the Choir in Durham, i–ii (1790–1810)
6 Favourite Songs, 1v, pf, op.4 (n.d.)
Other songs pubd separately
Anthems; catches and glees, 3vv: all *GB-DRc

INSTRUMENTAL

6 Sonatas, hpd/pf/org, 2 vn, vc (*c*1765)
13 other sonatas and concs., *GB-DRc [7 dated from 1769 to 1781]
A Favourite March (n.d.)
Music Lessons for a Miss Hubback, *Mp [MS, dated 1 Feb 1799]
Other pieces, pf, *DRc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.A. Fuller-Maitland)
B. Crosby: Durham Cathedral: Choristers and their Masters (Durham, 1980)
B. Crosby: A Catalogue of Durham Cathedral Music Manuscripts (Oxford, 1986)

W.H. HUSK/BRIAN CROSBY

Ebeling, Christoph Daniel (b Garmissen, nr Hildesheim, 20 Nov 1741; d Hamburg, 30 June 1817). German writer on music and translator. He studied theology at Göttingen and, although he was deaf, became a teacher at the Hamburg Handlungsakademie in 1769 and professor of history and Greek at the Gymnasium in 1784. With C.P.E. Bach he organized a concert in 1772 in honour of a visit by Burney, whose The Present State of Music in France and Italy he translated, with J.J.C. Bode, in the same year. He was a close friend of Klopstock, with whom he translated Jennens's text for Handel's Messiah in about 1782, and whose poems he edited. In 1793 he began an encyclopedic and statistical description of the USA which had reached seven volumes at his death. For the last 18 years of his life he was librarian of the Hamburg Staatsbibliothek.

As was typical in the German Enlightenment, Ebeling was strongly influenced by French thought, and he published translations of French writings on music and poetry in Hamburg and Hanover periodicals. His commentaries to these works and his other articles on music, though not always critical, reflect the breadth of his interests and activities. His most important contribution to music is the 'Versuch einer auserlesenen musikalischen Bibliothek' (1770), a history of 17th- and 18th-century music by genres, which places him in the company of Burney, Hawkins and Gerbert as one of the first music historians. Ebeling's only known composition is a Divertissement zu den Poeten nach der Mode for four voices and instruments (autograph score in D-Bsb).

WRITINGS

'Geschichte der Oper', 'Über die Oper', Hannoverisches Magazin, v (1767)
'Kurze Geschichte der deutschen Dichtkunst', Hannoverisches Magazin, v (1767), 81, 97–128; vi (1768), 81, 113, 353–84, 401–58, 529 [edn and trans. of M. Huber: Choix des poésies allemandes, Paris, 1766]
'Über die Vereinigung der Poesie und Musik', Hamburger Unterhaltungen, ix (1769) [edn and trans. of F.J. Chastellux: Essai sur l'union de la musique et de la poësie, Le Havre and Paris, 1765]
'Versuch einer auserlesenen musikalischen Bibliothek', Hamburger Unterhaltungen, x (1770)
Tagebuch einer musikalischen Reise durch Frankreich und Italien (Hamburg, 1772/R) [trans. of C. Burney: The Present State of Music in France and Italy, London, 1771]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyGN; GerberNL
J.C.A. Grohmann: In memoriam Christoph Daniel Ebelingii (Hamburg, 1818)
E.A. Greeven: Johann Joachim Christoph Bode, ein Hamburger Übersetzer, Verleger und Drucker (Weimar, 1938)
H. Tiemann: 'Christoph Daniel Ebeling, Hamburger Amerikanist, Bibliothekar und Herausgeber Klopstocks', Zeitschrift des Vereins für Hamburgische Geschichte, xli (1951), 352–74
G.M. Stewart: The Literary Contributions of Christoph Daniel Ebeling (Amsterdam, 1978)

HOWARD SERWER

Ebeling, Johann Georg (b Lüneburg, 8 July 1637; d Stettin, 4 Dec 1676). German composer and teacher. He received his earliest education at the St Johannis Gymnasium, Lüneburg, where, as is clear from surviving catalogues of music from the Johanniskirche, music was assiduously cultivated. From as early as 1651 he acquired from the Kantor of the Johanniskirche, Michael Jacobi, a sound knowledge of German sacred continuo songs; moreover, Lüneburg was at this time the most important centre for the publication of such songs. From 1658 Ebeling studied theology at the University of Helmstedt. In 1660 he received an appointment in Hamburg in the collegium musicum founded by Matthias Weckmann in 1659 and supported by Johann Rist. In 1662, on the death of Johannes Crüger, he succeeded him as Kantor of the Nikolaikirche, Berlin, where the poet Paul Gerhardt had been working as deacon since 1657. Despite a successful application, arranged in 1663 by his father, for Jacobi's position at Lüneburg, he chose to remain in Berlin, where he referred to himself as 'director of music at the principal churches'. Not until internal church politics caused Gerhardt to be dismissed did he himself leave Berlin, in 1667; he became principal teacher of music at the Gymnasium Carolinum, Stettin, where he remained until his death. The fact that he also taught Greek and poetry there shows the breadth of his knowledge.

Ebeling is important for music and hymnology because he was the first to collect Gerhardt's hymns. His publication Pauli Gerhardi geistliche Andachten, which has unmistakable links with the Lüneburg song publications, contains 120 hymns and he provided melodies for 112 of them, with simple four-part harmonizations; the numerous later editions provided only the melody and a basso continuo 'for greater convenience'. Musically it is more important for some of Ebeling's melodies than for his settings. His part-writing follows rigidly the style of that in Johannes Crüger's Praxis pietatis melica (1647) and Psalmodia sacra (1657–8), but some of his melodies show much greater independence. Others, however, are more traditional and betray the influence of the Calvinist psalter or of dance-songs, which were particularly popular at the time; on the other hand there are several examples of the early Pietist solo song. The setting of Gib dich zufrieden und sei stille is unquestionably among the finest pieces of its kind (see Blankenburg). Ebeling intended his music for domestic devotions rather than for congregational worship, and it was indeed used more frequently in this way. Three of his melodies are still in the basic repertory of Protestant hymns. He also wrote one of the very first histories of music, Archaiologiae Orphicae/i.e. Antiquitates musicae (Stettin, 1675).

WORKS

Concert (Berlin, 1662), lost
Ach befeuchtet nicht die Wangen, funeral music, 5vv (Berlin, 1664)
Ein Tag in deinen Vorhöfen (Ps lxxxiv), funeral music, 6vv, bc (Berlin, 1666)
Pauli Gerhardi geistliche Andachten, 112 hymn tunes, 4vv, 2 inst ad lib (Berlin, 1666–7/R); 12 ed. K. Ameln (Kassel, 1935)
Der Herr erhöre dich in der Not, 5vv, 2 vn, 2 viols, bc, after 1668, D-Bsb
Cant (Ps xx), ?lost [with chorus 'Vivat Rex Carolus' for a visit to Stettin of Carl XI of Sweden], mentioned in NDB (C. Engelbrecht)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (R. von Liliencron); BlumeEK; NDB (C. Engelbrecht); WinterfeldEK
H.J. Moser: 'Johann Georg Ebeling zum 300. Geburtstag', Musik in Pommern, vi (1937), 95–101
C. Mahrenholz and O.Söhngen, eds.: Handbuch zum evangelischen Kirchengesangbuch, ii/1–2 and suppl. (Göttingen, 1957–8)
H. Walter: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Lüneburg vom Ende des 16. bis zum Anfang des 18. Jahrhunderts (Tutzing, 1967)
W. Blankenburg: 'Johann Georg Ebeling 1637–1676', Musik und Kirche, xlvi (1976), 228–32

WALTER BLANKENBURG/DOROTHEA SCHRÖDER

Ebell, Heinrich Carl (b Neuruppin, 30 Dec 1775; d Oppeln [now Opole, Poland], 12 March 1824). German composer and writer. While a law student at the University of Halle he also studied music with D.G. Türk (1795–7). After attending the Berlin court he was music director of the Breslau opera (1801–3, succeeded by C.M. von Weber in 1804) and then returned to law as an administrator. He was a founder of the Philomusische Gesellschaft (1804–6), for which he wrote several scholarly essays, and also contributed to a number of periodicals, including the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung in Leipzig.

In spite of his short, but intensive, career as a professional musician, Ebell wrote several compositions which are above a mere amateur standard. His chamber music is inclined towards the early Romantic Biedermeier style, while his operatic arias more closely follow Classical models. His last work was the Mass of 1816.

WORKS

STAGE

unless otherwise stated, operas and probably lost

Der Schutzgeist (4), Berlin, 1798
Le déserteur (2), Berlin, *c*1800
Melida, Berlin, 1800
Selico und Berissa (4, F. Kinderling), Berlin, 1800
Anacreon in Jonien (3, H.W. Loest), 1800, rev. Breslau, Feb 1810
Der Bräutigamspiegel (Liederspiel), Breslau, 1801
Das Fest der Liebe, Breslau, 1802
Die Gaben des Genius (Spl), Breslau, July 1803
Die Hussiten vor Naumburg (incid music, A. von Kotzebue), *c*1805
Das Fest im Eichthale (3, after J.C. Bock), Breslau, 1807
Der Nachtwächter (Spl, 1, S.G. Bürde), Breslau, 1808, D-DS
Der Abschied (pantomimic pas de deux), Breslau, 1810 addl music for Larnassa (tragedy, K.M. Plümicke, after A.-M. le Mierre: La veuve de Malabar), 1802, Dl

VOCAL

Die Unsterblichkeit, orat, *c*1800, lost; Mass, 1816
Cants.: Lob der geselligen Freude, 1802, lost; Preis der Tonkunst (Loest), 1811, SWl; Cantate zum Andenken der im Lazarethdienste 1813 in Schlesien verstorbenen 63 Ärzte (Bürde), vs (Breslau, *c*1813)
Other works: Monolog der Thekla (F. von Schiller), 1v, kbd (Berlin, 1801); Variations on 'Hebe, sieh, in sanfter Feier', 1v, chorus, orch, 1811, lost; 2 Romances (Oranienburg, n.d.), cited in Hoffmann; 2 arias with orch, formerly in Singakademie, Berlin; 8 arias, Dl; songs in contemporary anthologies; other cants, arias, etc, ?lost, cited in Hoffmann

INSTRUMENTAL

3 syms.: E♭, 1798; C, 1800; d, 1812
Other orch: 2 hn concs., *c*1800; 2 polonaises, vn, orch, *c*1810
Chbr: 3 qts, wind insts, *c*1802; Str Qt (Leipzig, 1810); 3 str qts, op.2 (Leipzig, 1812); 3 deutsche Quartette, op.3, 1815
Pf: Musikalische Unterhaltung am Klavier (Dessau, 1800)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; SchillingE
C.J.A. Hoffmann: Die Tonkünstler Schlesiens (Breslau, 1830/R), 73–87
Schlesische Zeitung für Musik, iii (1835), 55, 61, 71, 78, 85, 92
[C.] Kossmaly and Carlo [C.H. Herzel]: Schlesisches Tonkünstler-Lexicon (Breslau, 1846–7/R), iii, 182–7
H.H. Borcherdt: 'Carl Maria von Weber in Schlesien', Schlesische Heimat-Blätter (1909), no.8, p.185–90; no.9, p.213–17
F. Feldmann: 'Breslaus Musikleben zur Zeit Beethovens aus der Sicht L.A.L. Siebigks', AMw, xix–xx (1962–3), 168–71, esp. 168
R. Schmitt-Thomas: Die Entwicklung der deutschen Konzertkritik im Spiegel der Leipziger Allgemeinen musikalischen Zeitung (1798–1848) (Frankfurt, 1969)
H. Unverricht: 'Beziehungen schlesischer Komponisten und Musiker zur Wiener Klassik', Die musikalischen Wechselbeziehungen Schlesien-Österreich (Dülmen, 1977), 47–76, esp. 63, 66

HUBERT UNVERRICHT

Eben, Petr (b Žamberk, 22 Jan 1929). Czech composer and pianist. His music education was interrupted during the German occupation, when his 'uncooperative' attitude led to his internment, for the last two years of the war, in Buchenwald. After the war he returned to piano studies, and in 1948 entered the Prague Academy of Musical Arts to study the piano with Rauch and composition with Bořkovek. He graduated in 1954 and embarked on a career as a pianist (specializing in chamber music) and teacher: he taught at Prague University (1955–90), was professor of composition at the Academy (1990–94) and between 1957 and 1996 made over 150 concert tours in Europe, the United States and Australia. From 1990 to 1992 he served as president of the Prague Spring Festival. He was made Chevalier des arts et des lettres (1991) and received honorary doctorates from the RNCM and Prague University (1992, 1994 respectively); in 1993 he was awarded the Stamitz Prize and in 1998 the art and culture prize of the Deutsche Bischofskonferenz.

Eben's individuality as a composer may be traced in part to the influence of the environment in which he was brought up: that of the Renaissance town of Český Krumlov. This stimulated his interest in medieval and Renaissance repertory and his penchant for stylized archaism, features perfectly illustrated in the first of his pieces to achieve international notice, the Šestero piesní milostných ('Six Love Songs', 1951). He also acknowledges a humanist mission for art, a conviction arising perhaps from the concentration camp experience which has instigated in his music recurrent meditations on mortality.

This aspect of Eben's work reached a summation in the Apologia Sokratus, which affirms his belief in the supremacy of God over life and death. His music oscillates between tonality and polytonality. It has a dramatic quality and is characterized by strong thematic material as well as varied rhythms and changing metre. He has always placed great emphasis on the relationship between composer and listener and on finding an expressive means that is both accurate and clear.

WORKS
(selective list)

Stage: Faust (incid music, J.W. von Goethe), 1976; Hamlet (incid music, W. Shakespeare), 1976–7; Kletby a dobrořečení [Curses and Blessings] (ballet), chorus, orch, 1983; Jeremias (church op, Eben, after S. Zweig), 1996–7

Orch: Org Conc. no.1 'Symphonia gregoriana', 1954; Pf Conc., 1960–61; Vox clamantis, 3 tpt, orch, 1969; Noční hodiny [Night Hours], wind qnt, tuba, str, pf, perc, 1975, arr. children's chorus, ens, 1987; Org Conc. no.2, 1983; Pražské nokturno [Prague Nocturne], 1983; Improperia, 1995

Chbr and solo inst: Sonata, ob, pf, 1950; Pf Sonata, D♭, 1951; Suita balladica, vc, pf, 1955; Sonatina semplice, vn/fl, pf, 1955; Duetti, 2 tpt, 1956; Nedělní hudba [Sunday Music], org, 1957–9; Ordo modalis, ob, hp, 1964; Laudes, org, 1964; Wind Qnt, 1965; Brass Qnt, 2 tpt, hn, 2 trbn, 1968–9; Music for Ob, Bn and Pf, 1970; 2 Chorale Fantasias, org, 1972; Ókna [Windows], tpt, org, 1976; Sonata, fl, mar, 1978; Tabulatura nova, gui, 1979; Faust, org, 1979-80; Mutationes, 2 org, 1980; Str Qt 'The Labyrinth of the World and the Paradise of the Hearth', 1981; Krajiny patmoské [Landscapes of Patmos], org, perc, 1984; Protihráči [Opponents], cl, pf, perc, 1985; Pf Trio, 1986; Tres iubilationes, 4 brass, org, 1987; Hommage à Buxtehude, org, 1987; Job, org, 1987; 2 Invocations, trbn, org, 1987; Letters to Milena, pf, 1990; Biblical Dances, org, 1990–91; Pf Qnt, 1991–2; Hommage à Henri Purcell, org, 1994–5; Minatures, fl/ob, pf, 1972, 1997

Choral: Missa adventus et quadragesimae, male/mixed chorus, org, 1951–2; Liturgical Songs, solo v/unison vv, org, 1955–60; Starodávné čarování milému [An Old-Fashioned Magic Spell for a Lover], 3 female vv, chorus, 1957; Láska a smrt [Love and Death], chorus, 1957–8; Hořká hlína [Bitter Earth] (cant., J. Seifert), Bar, chorus, org, 1959–60; O vlaštockách a dívkách [Swallows and Maidens], female chorus, 1959–60; Ubi caritas et amor, 1964; Apologia Sokratus (orat, Platon), A, Bar, children's chorus, chorus, orch, 1967; Vesperae, male chorus, congregation, org, 1968; Truvérská mše [Trouvère Mass] (Z. Lomová), solo vv, chorus, 2 rec, gui, 1968–9; Pragensia (cant., Rudolf II), chbr chorus, Renaissance insts, 1972; Řecký slovník [Greek Dictionary], female chorus, hp, 1974; Catonis moralia, children's chorus, 1974–5; Pocta Karlu IV [Honour to Charles IV] (cant., after charter of Prague University), male chorus, orch, 1978; Missa cum populo, chorus, congregation, 4 brass, org, 1981–2; Odvěká kosmetika [Eternal Cosmetics] (Ovid), female chorus, 1985; Cantico delle creature (St Francis of Assisi), 1987; Prague TeD 1989, chorus, (brass, perc)/(org), 1989–90; Verba sapientiae (Old Testament), 1991–2; Posvátná znamení [Sacred Symbols] (orat, Bible, Pontificale Romanum), S, Bar, children's chorus, chorus, wind, brass, org, perc, 1992–3; Sacred Festival Hymns (New Testament, Pss), chorus, 4 brass/org, 1993; Mundus in periculo (Old Testament), 1994–5; Suita liturgica, unison vv, org, 1995; Anno Domini (orat, Old Testament), 2 solo vv, children's chorus, chorus, schola gregoriana, chbr orch, 1998–9

Songs: Šestero piesní milostných [6 Love Songs] (medieval texts), medium v, pf/pf, hp, 1951; Písně nejtajnější [The Most Secret Songs], low v, pf, 1952; Písně z Těšínska [Songs from the Těšín Region], low v, pf, 1952; Písně na slova R.M. Rilkeho (R.M. Rilke), 6 songs, Mez/Bar, pf, 1961; Písně nelaskavé [Unkind Songs], A, va, 1963; Arie Ruth (Old Testament), A, org/pf, 1970; De nomine Caeciliae (T. von Kempen), Mez/Bar, org, 1994; children's songs, folksong arrs.

Principal publishers: Panton, státní hudební vydavatelství

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Pilka: 'Písně P. Ebena', HRo, x (1957), 448–51
P. Eben: 'Okouzlení z návratu', HRo, xviii (1965), 762–3
R. Budiš: 'Apologia Sokratus, dílo o moudrosti a pravdě' [Apologia Socrates: a work about wisdom and truth], HRo, xxi (1968), 481–3
P. Eben: 'O písni a jiném' [On song and other things], OM, iii (1971), 84 only
S. Landale: 'The Organ Music of Petr Eben', American Organist, xiii/12 (1979), 40–43
J. Fishell: The Organ Music of Petr Eben (diss., Northwest U., IL, 1988)
K. Vondrovicová: Petr Eben (Prague, 1993, 3/2000)

ADRIENNE SIMPSON/KATERINA CERVENKOVÁ

Eberhard, Johann August (b Halberstadt, 31 Aug 1739; d Halle, 6 Jan 1809). German aesthetician and philosopher. From 1756 to 1759 he studied theology at Halle before returning to Halberstadt as a private tutor. He was then appointed assistant pastor at the Hospitalkirche and vice-principal at the Martineum (Gymnasium). In 1763 he moved to Berlin, where he became part of the group that included Moses Mendelssohn, C.F. Nicolai, J.A. Sulzer and J.P. Kirnberger. In 1768 he was appointed pastor at the Berlin workhouse and during this period wrote Die neue Apologie des Socrates (1772), an attack on orthodox theology couched in terms of rationalistic Wolffian philosophy. In 1774 he became pastor at Charlottenburg and continued his theological work. His liberal views attracted the attention of Frederick the Great and led to his appointment as professor of philosophy at Halle in 1778. There he founded two philosophical journals that became the vehicles for his opposition to Kant. He wrote many handbooks and textbooks on philosophy and its history. From the 1780s he turned his attention to linguistic studies and aesthetics, several times taking up the topic of music.

One of Eberhard's most important discussions of music is found in his Handbuch der Aesthetik (1803) in which he rejected imitation of nature as the primary basis for works of art, maintaining instead that art's ultimate goal was to provide aesthetic pleasure. Mimesis was merely a means to an end and could be modified as circumstances required. Further, imitation was not merely the reproduction of some affect outside the artist, but rather the heightened reflection of his feelings – a view that led directly to the aesthetics of Romanticism. Eberhard's earlier Abhandlung über das Melodrama (1788) pointed out the obvious disparity between the affective potential of the sung portions in this genre as opposed to the spoken parts, which, he maintained, can only produce an unsatisfactory effect. Nonetheless, he considered melodrama a daring experiment worthy of serious consideration. In 1800 he wrote an article for the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung defending Kirnberger's reputation; this essay refers to several treatises by Kirnberger and others and shows that Eberhard had a considerable knowledge of musical theory.

WRITINGS
only those on aesthetics and music

Allgemeine Theorie des Denkens und Empfindens (Berlin, 1776)
Theorie der schönen Wissenschaften (Halle, 1783, 3/1790)
'Abhandlung über das Melodrama', Neue vermischte Schriften (Halle, 1788) 1–22
'Fragmente einiger Gedanken zur Beantwortung einer Frage über die Blasinstrumente', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, i (1791–2), 97–8; repr. in F.L.A. Kunzen and J.F. Reichardt, eds.: Studien für Tonkünstler und Musikfreunde (Berlin, 1793/R), i
'Erklärung, veranlasst durch eine in dem 34 St., S.594.Anmerk der allg. mus. Zeitung enthaltenen Aufforderung', AMZ, ii (1799–1800), 870–75
Handbuch der Aesthetik für gebildete Leser aus allen Ständen (Halle, 1803–5, 2/1807–20)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

C.F. Nicolai: Gedächtnissschrift auf Johann August Eberhard (Berlin and Stettin, 1810)
M. Dessoir: Geschichte der neueren deutschen Psychologie, i (Berlin, 1894)
G. Draeger: Johann August Eberhards Psychologie und Aesthetik (diss., U. of Halle, 1914)
W. Serauky: Die musikalische Nachahmungsästhetik im Zeitraum von 1700 bis 1850 (Münster, 1929/R)

M. Gawlina: Das Medusenhaupt der Kritik: die Kontroverse zwischen Immanuel Kant und Johann August Eberhard (Berlin, 1996)

HOWARD SERWER

Eberhardt, Goby [Johann Jakob] (b Hattersheim, Frankfurt, 29 March 1852; d Lübeck, 13 Sept 1926). German violinist and educationist, father of SIEGFRIED EBERHARDT. He was first taught the violin as a child by Friedrich Wilhelm Dietz, a student of Spohr, and afterwards by Wilhelmj; he made his début at the age of 12. Two years later he was appointed leader at the Komische Oper, Frankfurt. He was leader of orchestras in Berne (1870), Rotterdam, Bremen (1872) and Hamburg (1880). A stroke in 1900 forced him to give up playing and he concentrated instead on teaching. He founded a method called System des Übens, which emphasized silent training of the left hand together with certain physical exercises. This system aimed at performance without any inner tensions, and succeeded not only in curing Eberhardt's lamed left hand, but also in solving many technical problems. Eberhardt's compositions are mostly light works and studies; the major part of his output consists of violin methods, though his last book was a collection of short essays on composers, violinists and assorted topics entitled Erinnerungen an bedeutende Männer unserer Epoche (Lübeck, 1926).

PEDAGOGICAL WORKS

Violin-Cursus (Magdeburg, 1901)
Violin Schule: neue Methodik (Leipzig, 1905–8)
Die ersten Übungen im Violinspiel (Leipzig, 1907)
Materialen für den Anfangsunterricht (Leipzig, 1907)
Mein System des Übens für Violine und Klavier auf psycho-physiologischer Grundlage (Dresden, 1907)
Schule der Doppelgriffe (Leipzig, 1907)
Schule der Geläufigkeit (Berlin, 1907)
Tägliche Violin-Übungen für Anfänger (Berlin, 1907)
Tägliche Violinübungen für die Verbindung schwieriger Doppelgriffe (Leipzig, 1907)
Virtuosen Schule für Violine auf Grund des neuen Systems (Leipzig, 1908)
Studienmaterial zum neuen System des Übens (Dresden, 1909)
Tägliche Übungen in verschiedenen Intervallen (Leipzig, ?1923–4) with S. Eberhardt: Der natürliche Weg zur höchsten Virtuosität (Leipzig, 1923–4)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 ('Eberhardt, Johann Jakob'; U. Lehmann) [incl. full list of works and bibliography]
K. Schröter: Flesch-Eberhardt: naturwidrige oder natürliche Violin-Technik? (Leipzig, 1924)
K. Schröter: 'Die Indisposition und ihre Behandlung', Der Nervenarzt, ix (1936)

ALFRED GRANT GOODMAN

Eberhardt, Siegfried (b Frankfurt, 19 March 1883; d Zwickau, 29 June 1960). German violinist and educationist, son of GOBY EBERHARDT. He studied with Bernhard Dessau and Arrigo Serrato. In 1908 he joined the staff of the Stern Conservatory, Berlin, which he directed from 1933 until he was forced to retire by the Nazi regime in 1935. A year later he was excluded from the Reichsmusikkammer, and thereafter he devoted his time to educational writing: this included a documentary film Die schöpferische Gesetzmässigkeit in der Kunst, which was lost during World War II. In 1945 he founded the Hochschule für Theater und Musik in Halle, and the Zwickau Academy, of which he was director; he held master classes in the violin at both institutions. He developed a system based on organische Geigenhaltung (inspired by Paganini) in which, through technical training based on the teachings of natural movements (Bewegungslehre), practical finger exercises were linked with posture and movements of the body resulting in the alleviation of inner tension. At the time of his death he left a number of books in manuscript; these include Übungserfolg und Meisterschaft auf der Geige: Fortschritt und Tradition.

WRITINGS

with C. Flesch: Der beseelte Violin-Ton (Dresden, 1910)
Absolute Treffsicherheit auf der Violine (Berlin, 1912)
Virtuose-Violin-Technik (Berlin, 1921)
Die Lehre von der organischen Geigenhaltung (Berlin, 1922) with G. Eberhardt: Der natürliche Weg zur höchsten Virtuosität (Leipzig, 1924)
Der Körper in Form und in Hemmung (Munich, 1926)
Hemmung und Herrschaft auf dem Griffbrett (Berlin, 1931)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Schröter: Flesch-Eberhardt: naturwidrige oder natürliche Violin-Technik? (Leipzig, 1924)
K. Schröter: 'Die Kunst des Geigens als Urbild der Lebenskunst', Die Musik, xxiii (1930–31), 735–40

ALFRED GRANT GOODMAN

Eberhard von Freising (fl ?Germany, ?11th century). German ?theorist. In 1784 Martin Gerbert published two very brief treatises under Eberhard's name (GerbertS, ii, 279–82) from one manuscript of the 12th or 13th century, now D-Mbs Clm 18914. The first treatise is a group of calculations for organ pipe measurements. Apart from the fact that nothing whatever is known about this author, caution is further indicated by the presence of about half the text in the treatise of ARIBO, where part is simply designated an 'antiqua fistularum mensura', and part explicitly attributed by Aribo to WILHELM OF HIRSAU. It is of course possible that Wilhelm borrowed from an earlier work by Eberhard, but it is just as possible that Eberhard was connected only with the drawing which is labelled with his name in the Munich manuscript. The second, much briefer work is a few sentences on bellfounding and does not appear to be directly ascribed to Eberhard in any of its four manuscript sources. Neither work is of independent interest, but both are naturally essential for the history of medieval attempts to apply the simple numerical proportions of harmonious strings to the less tractable organ pipes and bells. Eberhard should perhaps not be counted as a musical theorist until convincing evidence of his existence is produced.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K.G. Fellerer: Beiträge zur Musikgeschichte Freisings (Freising, 1926)
C. Mahrenholz: Die Berechnung der Orgelpfeifenmensuren vom Mittelalter bis zur Mitte des 19. Jahrhunderts (Kassel, 1938; Eng. trans., 1975)
J. Smits van Waesberghe, ed.: Cymbala: Bells in the Middle Ages, MSD, i (1951)

LAWRENCE GUSHEE

Eberl, Anton (Franz Josef) (b Vienna, 13 June 1765; d Vienna, 11 March 1807). Austrian pianist and composer. He displayed great musical talent at an early age and gave private piano recitals in Vienna at the age of eight. His father at first made him study law, but sudden bankruptcy left the family unable to pay for the law examination, thereby permitting him to study music in earnest. He may have been a pupil of Mozart, who befriended and encouraged him. On 9 March 1784 he gave his first public recital in Vienna, and three years later his first stage work, Die Marchande des Modes, allegedly drew the praise of Gluck.

In 1788 some of Eberl's piano pieces began to appear under Mozart's name, the first of a great many such misattributions. The earliest of these (published at least 14 times as Mozart's, never as Eberl's) was a set of variations on Ignaz Umlauf's Zu Steffen sprach im Traume; if, as Gerber maintained, this was one of Mozart's favourite teaching pieces, this may partly account for the mistaken authorship. Other sets of variations were also published as Mozart's, and Eberl's Piano Sonata in C minor, published as his op.1 in 1798, had already appeared under Mozart's name and did so later. Eberl wrote public letters in 1798 and 1805 to correct these errors, and in 1799 Constanze Mozart tried unsuccessfully to prevent Breitkopf & Härtel from including an Eberl piece in Mozart's Oeuvres complettes. As late as 1944 a work by Eberl, the Symphony in C (1785), appeared in Milan as a 'new Mozart symphony'.

Eberl made concert tours of Germany in the winter of 1795–6, with Constanze Mozart and her sister Aloysia Lange, and in 1806, when he performed some of his works for two pianos with the young Meyerbeer in Berlin. Between these tours Eberl stayed twice in St Petersburg (1796–9, 1801–2) as a pianist, piano teacher, entertainer of the Russian royal family and Kapellmeister. Apparently he held this last position only in Russia, where he established a reputation as a fine musician. In St Petersburg in December 1801 he conducted three highly successful performances, among the earliest in Russia, of Haydn's Creation.

After his return to Vienna Eberl produced a series of instrumental works to highest critical acclaim, and was generally held to be the equal of Beethoven. His piano concertos and last two symphonies opp.33–4 were compared favourably with similar works by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven; the E♭ Symphony, performed at the première of Beethoven's 'Eroica', was judged the better of the two. When Eberl died, at the age of 41, the Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung remarked that the early death of an artist had seldom been so generally regretted as his was.

Although Eberl was highly regarded as a theatre composer (his Die Königin der schwarzen Inseln was praised by Haydn), most of his stage works are lost. The largest group of his extant compositions, the piano works, exhibits not only an early dependence on the influence of Mozart, but his departure from the style of his teacher towards a more Romantic idiom. The seven piano sonatas alone are sufficient reasons to restore his name to a prominent place among composers active in Vienna at the time of Beethoven. The last three sonatas opp.27, 43 and 39, the Fantasia op.28 and the Toccata op.46 are worthy of the attention of any pianist of merit. His most outstanding work for piano solo, the Sonata in G minor op.39, was published shortly after his death to high acclaim; its many moments, especially formal peculiarities, which seem to foreshadow Franck, Chopin and Liszt, show Eberl to be a significant forerunner of the Romantic era.

WORKS

printed works published in Vienna unless otherwise stated; thematic index in White

DRAMATIC

lost unless otherwise indicated

Die Marchande des Modes (Spl, 3), Vienna, Leopoldstadt, 27 Feb 1787
Graf Balduin von Flandern (comic op, 2), Vienna, Leopoldstadt, 1788
Die Hexe Megäre (pt.iii), by 1790
Die Zigeuner (3, H.F. Möller), Vienna, Landstrasse, 1793
Pyramus und Thisbe (melodrama, 1, Eberl), Vienna, National, 7 Dec 1794
Der Tempel der Unsterblichkeit (prol, Reinbeck), 1799
Erwine von Steinheim (parody, 3, F.X. Gewey, after A. Blumauer), Vienna, Freihaus, 23 May 1801
Die Königin der schwarzen Inseln (op, 2, J. Schwaldopler, after C.M. Wieland), Vienna, Kärntnertor, 23 May 1801, *A-Wn; ov. arr. pf (n.d.)

KEYBOARD

Sonatas: op.1, 1792 (1798), orig. attrib. Mozart; Sonatine, 1796, op.5 (Leipzig, 1807), ed. in Mw, xv (1959); 5 grandes sonates: op.12 (1802), op.16 (1802), op.27 (1805), op.43, 1805 (?1809), op.39, 1806 (n.d.); 2 Sonatas, pf duet, op.7 (St Petersburg, 1799)
Variations: 10 on 'Zu Steffen sprach im Traume' (Hamburg, 1788), attrib. Mozart; 12 on 'Bei Männern welche Liebe fühlen' (1792), attrib. Mozart; 10 on 'Malbrough s'en va-t-en guerre' (1797), attrib. Mozart; ?10 on Romance, ?1797, op.6 (Leipzig, 1807); 12 on 'Freundin sanfter Herzenstriebe' (1798), attrib. Mozart; 11 on 'Ascouta Jeannette', 1799, op.9 (St Petersburg; Vienna, 1805); Prélude suivi de 8 variations, 2 pf, 1804, op.31 (n.d.)
Other kbd: 3 fantasias: op.15 (1803), op.28 (1805), op.30, 1805 (n.d.); Caprice et rondeau, op.21 (1803) [? identical to op.38 (n.d.)]; Toccata, op.46 (?1809); 12 deutsche Tänze, 12 Menuetten (1805); for pf duet: 2 polonaises, op.19 (1803) and op.24 (Leipzig, ?1805) [? also pubd as op.26], Caprice et rondeau, op.42 (1808), march (?1807)

OTHER INSTRUMENTAL

Orch: 3 syms., 1783–5, A-Wgm; 2 syms.: op.33, 1804 (Leipzig, 1807), ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, ix (New York, 1983), op.34 (Leipzig, 1805); 3 pf concs.: C, 1797, D-Bsb, op.32 (Leipzig, ?1805), op.40 (Leipzig, ?1807); 1 for 2 pf, op.45 (?1809)
Chbr: Sextet, pf, str, cl, hn, 1800, op.47 (1808); Qnt, pf, cl, str, op.41 (1808); Qnt, pf, ob, str, 1806, op.48 (n.d.); 3 str qts, op.13 (1801); 2 pf qts: op.18 (1802), op.25, 1804 (n.d.); 4 pf trios: C (1797), attrib. Mozart, 3 as op.8, *c*1799 (1805); 2 trios, pf, cl, vc: op.44, 1803 (?1809), op.36 (Leipzig, 1806); 7 vn sonatas: 2 as op.10, 1800 (1805), op.14 (1801), op.20 (1803), op.35, 1805 (n.d.), opp.49, 50, 1806 (n.d.); Fl Sonata, 1804, op.29 (n.d.); Variations sur un thème russe, pf, vc, op.17 (1802); Grand Duo, pf, vn/vc, 1804, op.26 (n.d.)

VOCAL

Lieder: 6 deutsche Lieder, i, op.4 (Hamburg, 1796); 6 Gesänge, pf acc., op.23 (1804), 2 ed. in DTÖ, lxxix, Jg.xlii/2 (1935/R)
Other vocal: Bey Mozarts Grab (cant.), 1791, LEu; La gloria d'Imeneo (cant., C. Gattechi), 1799, op.11, vs (*c*1800); Serenate, 4vv, cl, va, vc, op.37 (Leipzig, 1807); Arietta, 1807, in 'In questa tomba oscura' con accompagnamento di pianoforte in XVIII composizioni di diversi maestri (Leipzig, 1808); other single works

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberNL; MooserA; NDB (H. Federhofer); NewmanSSB
Autograph letters: A-Wst, D-DS, US-PHhs
Obituary, AMZ, ix (1806–7), 423–30
F.J. Ewens: Anton Eberl: ein Beitrag zur Musikgeschichte in Wien um 1800 (Dresden, 1927)
P. Egert: Die Klaviersonate im Zeitalter der Romantik (Berlin, 1934)
R. Haas: 'Anton Eberl', MJb 1951, 123–30
H.C.R. Landon: 'Two Orchestral Works Wrongly Attributed to Mozart', MR, xvii (1956), 29–34
A.A. Copland: The Solo Concerto in Austria from 1740 to 1810 (diss., U. of Aberdeen, 1971)
A.D. White: The Piano Works of Anton Eberl (1765–1807) (diss., U. of Wisconsin, 1971)
P. Mies: 'The Orchestral Music of Beethoven's Contemporaries', NOHM, viii (1982), 157–205, esp. 175–6
S.C. Fisher: 'Die C-dur-Symphonie KV [6] Anh. C 11.14: ein Jugendwerk Anton Eberts', MISM, xxxi (1983), 21–6

A. DUANE WHITE

Eberlin, Daniel (b Nuremberg, bap. 12 April 1647; d ?Kassel, between Dec 1713 and 5 July 1715). German composer and violinist. From 1661 he was a treble in the Hofkapelle at Gotha. He stated that he studied for two years (probably in 1663–5) with Adam Drese at Jena. He then entered the service of Duke Johann Georg of Saxe-Eisenach. On the duke's advice and through the mediation of Friedrich, Landgrave of Hesse, he went to Rome; he was there probably between 1668 and 1671 and according to Telemann, who was his son-in-law, he took part at this time in Turkish wars. From 1671 he was again at Eisenach, as a violinist and composer, but in 1673 he left again and went to Nuremberg, where he held a position as registrar; it is not known whether he held a musical post. His unbridled temper soon caused him difficulties in his work, and he left Nuremberg in 1677 and returned to Eisenach again, this time as private secretary and Kapellmeister. Under his direction the Hofkapelle gained considerable impetus, but by 1678 he had moved again, this time to Kassel, where he reorganized the Hofkapelle. Here too he quarrelled with the musicians, and he had returned to Eisenach yet again by 1685, when he was made Kapellmeister and master of the pages there. From 1689 he was probably no longer Kapellmeister, and there is thenceforward no evidence that he was active as a musician. He was certainly, however, secretary of the mint at Eisenach, and in 1691 he became master of it. He became involved in some shady business, however, and he had to leave Eisenach after an audit of the mint in 1692. It is not known what he did next; according to Telemann he became a banker in Hamburg. He reappeared at Kassel in 1705, this time as captain of the militia.

It is hardly possible to make a fair assessment of Eberlin's importance as a composer on the basis of his few surviving works. He must, however, have enjoyed some fame among his contemporaries, for Mattheson later spoke of the 'celebrated Eberlin', and Telemann praised him as a mind 'whose ability few have equalled. In the musical sphere he was an accomplished contrapuntist and a fine violinist'. His few extant vocal works are marked by expressive word-setting and also by rather wilful harmonic writing. He exploited the tonal possibilities of instruments, witness the virtuoso violin solo of the cantata Ich will in aller Noth. Johann Christoph Bach wrote 15 variations for harpsichord on his aria Pro dormente Camillo.

WORKS

Allmächtiger, heyliger, ewiger Gott, cant., 4vv, 2 vn, 3 va, bc, D-Bsb
Ich kann nit mehr ertragen diesen Jammer, cant., 4vv, 2 vn, 4 viols, bc, S-Uu
Ich will in aller Noth auf meinen Jesum bauen, cant., 1v, vn, bc, D-Bsb
Vae misero qui Deum meum, cant., 1v, bc (org), Bsb
Wenn mein Stündlein vorhanden ist, cant., 4vv, 2 fl, vle, bc, S-Uu [copy of part of Ich kann nit mehr ertragen]

Ex ungue leonem, 10vv, reproduced in MGG1 [beginning of a canon appearing beneath a portrait of Eberlin, *c*1675]
Pro dormente Camillo, aria, reconstructed in Veröffentlichungen der Neuen Bach-Gesellschaft, xxxix/2 (Leipzig, 1940)
Trium mirifice variantium fidium concordiae, 2 vn, bc (Nuremberg, 1675)
For lost works see Apell and Schaal

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberL; MatthesonGEP; NDB (C. Engelbrecht); WaltherML
D.A. von Apell: Gallerie der vorzüglichsten Tonkünstler und merkwürdigen Musik-Dilettanten in Cassel (Kassel, 1806)
F. Krummacher: Die Überlieferung der Choralbearbeitungen in der frühen evangelischen Kantate (Berlin, 1965)
H. Engel: Musik in Thüringen (Cologne, 1966)
R. Schaal: Die Musikhandschriften des Ansbacher Inventars von 1686 (Wilhelmshaven, 1966)
C. Oefner: 'Neues zur Lebens- und Familiengeschichte Daniel Eberlins', Mf, xxii (1969), 464–75
C. Oefner: 'Eisenach zur Zeit des jungen Bach', BJb, lxxi (1985), 43–54

SUSETTE CLAUSING

Eberlin, Johann Ernst (b Jettingen, nr Burgau, Bavaria, bap. 27 March 1702; d Salzburg, 19 June 1762). German composer and organist. He attended the Gymnasium in Augsburg, but his consuming interest in music kept him from applying himself fully to his studies. His musical education was similar to that of Leopold Mozart. As an 11-year-old boy Eberlin participated in school performances of musical plays; in later years, this kind of dramatic music occupied him frequently as a composer. Eberlin arrived in Salzburg in 1721 and was a student at the Benedictine university until 1723 but did not complete a course of study. He became fourth organist at Salzburg Cathedral in 1726 and by 1749 had risen to the rank of court and cathedral Kapellmeister.

Leopold Mozart, in his description of the Salzburg musical establishment (published in F.W. Marpurg's Historisch-kritische Beyträge zur Aufnahme der Musik, iii, Berlin, 1757, 185–98), called Eberlin 'a thorough and accomplished master of the art of composing … He is entirely in command of the notes, and he composes easily and rapidly … One can compare him to the two famous and industrious composers, [Alessandro] Scarlatti and Telemann'. Eberlin was on friendly terms with the Mozart family and with the clergy of St Peter's Abbey in Salzburg, often composing music for special occasions there. In 1752 Eberlin's daughter Maria Josefa Katharina married Anton Cajetan Adlgasser, who two years later became cathedral organist. Eberlin received the honorary appointment of Titular-Truchsess, or princely steward, in 1754 and was widely honoured and respected at the time of his death.

Eberlin wrote virtually all kinds of music for which there was official demand in Salzburg. He composed at least 91 dramatic works for the court theatre, the university and the Nonnberg convent. The music is largely in the reigning Italian style, with secco and accompanied recitatives and extended da capo arias. Simple songs in the style of south German folk music also occur. Some oratorio performances were probably staged, with scenery. From 1742 he supplied music for numerous school plays and oratorios performed at the university and at St Peter's – a local theatrical and musical tradition that disappeared soon after his death. Comic intermezzos are frequent in the school plays, with passages in Salzburg dialect and occasional use of melodrama. Sigismundus Hungariae rex (1753) was performed in 1761 in honour of the archbishop, with 146 participants, among them the five-year-old W.A. Mozart.

Eberlin influenced composers of the next generation chiefly through his sacred vocal music. Several contemporary manuscript scores, that were normally made for study purposes, contain works by Eberlin which are mostly in the strict contrapuntal style traditionally used for Advent and Lent. Best known is a manuscript from about 1733 (in GB-Lbl) which contains 19 liturgical works by Eberlin and Michael Haydn, 18 of them in the hand of Leopold Mozart: this manuscript is mentioned repeatedly in the correspondence between Leopold and Wolfgang Mozart (KAnh.109vi/A71–88). They both thought highly of Eberlin's contrapuntal writing; Leopold, in sending these scores to his son, pointed out that they were still good models when writing for the church. Wolfgang, in later years, continued to admire Eberlin's vocal writing, though he revised his opinion of his keyboard fugues. These fugues, one of which was ascribed for a long time to J.S. Bach, were the only works by Eberlin to be published during his own lifetime. His treatise Fundamenta partiturae survives in a copy made in 1766 (A-Ssp).

WORKS

Edition: Johann Ernst Eberlin: Oratorium, Der blutschwitzende Jesus; Stücke aus anderen Oratorien, ed. R. Haas, DTÖ, lv, Jg.xxviii/1 (1921/R) [H]

ORATORIOS

Die Allmacht Gottes, 1754, A-Sn; Augustinus, 1755, *D-Rp, 1 aria ed. J. Brand (Ebersberg, 1994); Die beste Wahl der christlichen Seele (2 pts), D-Rp; Der büssende hl. Siegmund (2 pts), Rp, 1 aria ed. in H; Christus-Petrus-Debora-Sara, Rp; Christus-Petrus-Joannes-Phönissa, Rp, Passion trilogy: pt 1, Der verurteilte Jesus, Rp, pt 2, Der blutschwitzende Jesus, Rp, pt 3, Der gekreuzigte Jesus, F-Pn, pt 2 and 1 aria from pt 1 ed. in H; Petrus und Magdalena, 1755, D-Rp; De passione Domini, A-KR; Pro sepulchro Domini; Sedecias (2 pts), 1755, D-Rp; Der verlorene Sohn (3 pts), 2 pieces ed. in H *c*60 school plays, 1742–61, incl. Joas, A-KR (inc.); Sedecias, D-Rp, A-KR; Sigismundus, rex Burgundiae, 1751, KR, 3 pieces ed. in H; others, lost

DRAMATIC

Pastorals: Daphne, 1758, A-Sn; Schäfferey, 1754, Sn, doubtful

Comedies: Heyliger Gspäss und gspässige Heyligkeit des vom Himmel träumenden Stöffel, A-Sn, doubtful; Trinkgern, KR; Das misslungene Doktorat, Ssp

Applausus: Virtus, Natura, Intellectus, 1737, Ssp

Others, music lost, incl.: Demofoonte, 1759; Demetrio, 1760; Ipermnestra, 1761

OTHER SACRED

58 masses, A-GÖ, KR, LA, Sd, Sn, SEI, Wgm, Wn, CH-E, D-Mbs, OB, Rp, GB-Lbl, I-Fc, US-Bp, incl. Missa secundi toni, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1970); Missa in C (brevissima), solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, 2 tpt, timp, bc, ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1972); Missa quinti toni, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1976); Missa sexti toni, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1984); Missa in contrapuncto, 4vv, bc, 1741, ed. T. Kohlhase (Stuttgart, 1982); Missa solemnis brevis, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, va, 2 tpt, timp, bc, ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1986); Missa a due chori, solo vv, 8vv, 2 orch, ed. J. Reutter (Stuttgart, 1998); Kyrie, C, MW, xxiv/34 [formerly attrib. W.A. Mozart as K221]

9 Requiem masses, A-KR, Sd, Ssp, D-Mbs; 1 ed. W. Fürlinger (Altötting, 1979); 9 ed. in Ebel (1997); Lacrimosa, MW, xxiv/30 [formerly attrib. W.A. Mozart as KA21]

160 Proper settings (ints., grads, seqs, offs, post-elevations, comms), principal sources (incl. autographs) A-Sd, Sn, Ssp, incl.: Ad te Domine levavi, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. J.E. Habert (Gmunden 1878); Adiutor in opportunitatibus, 4vv, ed. R.G. Pauly (New York, 1960); Ave Maria, 4vv, ed. S. Keller (Berlin. 1878); Benedixisti, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. O. Biba (Hilversum, 1971); Bonum est confiteri, 4vv, ed. R.G. Pauly (New York, 1960); Christus factus est, 4vv, bc, ed. C. Marshall (New York, 1967); Confitebor tibi Domine, 4vv, bc, ed. S. Keller (Berlin, 1878); Improperium exspectavit cor meum, 4vv, ed. R.G. Pauly (New York, 1960); Jerusalem quae aedificatur, 4vv, bc (Paris, *c*1900); Justum deduxit Dominus, 4vv, formerly attrib. W.A. Mozart as K326/Anh.A4, ed. D. Smithers (New York, 1966), ed. I. Jones and P.J. McCarthy (New York, 1993); Prope est Dominus, 4vv. ed. F. Hägele (St Augustin, 1998); Quae est ista, S, A, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. in DTÖ, lxxx, Jg.xliii/1 (1936/R); Tu es Deus, 4vv, ed. R.G. Pauly (New York, 1960); Universi, qui te exspectant, 4vv, 2 vn, bc, ed. in DTÖ, lxxx, Jg.xliii/1 (1936/R); for further details see Neumayr (1997)

Numerous settings of Dixit Dominus, Mag, vesper psalms, Miserere and other psalms, A-KR, Sca, Sd, CH-E, D-Mbs, OB, incl. Dixit Dominus, Mag, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, tpt, timp, bc, ed. R.G. Pauly (Madison, WI, 1971)

Lits, incl. 32 in A-Sd, others in KR, MS, Sca, Ssp, D-Mbs, OB; 1 lit, *Bsb

Hymns, A-Sca, Sd, CH-E, D-Mbs, HR-Zha; TeD, solo vv, 4vv, 2 vn, tpt, timp, bc, ed. R.G. Pauly (Madison, WI, 1971)

Responsoria, A-Sd, Ssp, Wn

Ants, KR, Sd, Ssp, D-Mbs

21 sacred Ger. arias, solo vv, 2 vn, bc, A-Sn

Numerous other liturgical and devotional works, A-Sca, Ssp, Wgm, Wn, CH-E, D-Bsb, Mbs, OB, Rp, GB-Lbl; see EitnerQ

INSTRUMENTAL

3 syms., A-KR, Sca, ed. in The Symphony 1720–1840, ser. B, viii (New York, 1982), 1 ed. in RRMCE, xl (1994); Divertimento, KR

IX toccate e fughe, org (Augsburg, 1747/R in Denkmäler der Musik in Salzburg, Facsimile-Ausgaben, vi (Salzburg, 1998), ed. R. Walter, Neun Tokkaten und Fugen (Altötting, 1958)

2 sonatas, pf/hpd, in Oeuvres mêlées, ed. J.U. Haffner, iv, vi (Nuremberg, *c*1757–60)

115 Versetten und Cadenzen, org (Munich, *c*1830), ed. R. Walter (Vienna, 1991)

65 Vor- und Nach-Spiele, Versetten und Fugetten … in den bekannten 8 Kirchen-Tonarten, org (Munich, *c*1830), ed. R. Walter (Vienna, 1975)

5 pieces for mechanical org (Hornwerk) in Der Morgen und der Abend, ed. L. Mozart (Augsburg, 1759), ed. in Denkmäler der Musik in Salzburg, i (Munich, 1977)

4 pieces for mechanical org, 1749, Hellbrunn Castle, ed. in Denkmäler der Musik in Salzburg, i (Munich, 1977)

Other kbd works, incl. 2 sonatas, fugues, preludes, variations, cited in EitnerQ

For further details of lost works see Schneider-Cuvay (1975)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Haas: 'Eberlins Schuldramen und Oratorien', SMw, viii (1921), 9–44

M.M. Cuvay: 'Beiträge zur Lebensgeschichte des Salzburger Hofkapellmeisters Johann Ernst Eberlin', Mitteilungen der Gesellschaft für Salzburger Landeskunde, xcv (1955), 179

A. Layer: 'Johann Ernst Eberlin', Lebensbilder aus dem bayerischen Schwaben, ed. G.F. von Pölnitz and others, vi (Munich, 1958), 388–405

H.J. Herbort: Die Messen das Johann Ernst Eberlin (diss., U. of Münster, 1961)

R.G. Pauly: 'Johann Ernst Eberlin's Motets for Lent', JAMS, xv (1962), 182–92

R.G. Pauly: 'Johann Ernst Eberlin's Concerted Liturgical Music', Musik und Geschichte/Music and History: Leo Schrade zum sechzigsten Geburtstag (Cologne, 1963), 146–77

A.I. Maitland: The Development of Form and Style in Eighteenth Century Salzburg Church Music (diss., U. of Aberdeen, 1972)

R. Angermüller: 'Idomeneo-Aspekte', ÖMz, xxviii (1973), 308–17

A. Layer: 'Zu Johann Ernst Eberlins Augsburger Studienjahren', Mitteilungsblatt der Gesellschaft für Bayerische Musikgeschichte, viii (1974), 201–3

M. Schneider-Cuvay: Die Instrumentalwerke Johann Ernst Eberlins (diss., U. of Salzburg, 1975)

M.H. Schmid: Mozart und die Salzburger Tradition (Tutzing, 1976)

U. Haspel: Mozarts Vespernmusiken und ihr Salzburger Umfeld (diss., U. of Würzburg, 1996)

H. Schuler: Mozarts Salzburger Freunde und Bekannte: Biographien und Kommentar (Wilhelmshaven, 1996)

B. Ebel: Die Salzburger Requiemtradition im 18. Jahrhundert: Untersuchungen zu den Voraussetzungen von Mozarts Requiem (diss., U. of Munich, 1997)

E. Neumayr: Die Propriumsvertonungen Johann Ernst Eberlins (diss., Hochschule für Musik und Darstellende Kunst 'Mozarteum', Salzburg, 1997)

REINHARD G. PAULY/ERNST HINTERMAIER

Ebers, Carl [Karl] Friedrich (b Kassel, 25 March 1770/1772; d Berlin, 9 Sept 1836). German composer. The son of a teacher of English, he held various posts briefly, including that of musical director of an itinerant drama company. His travels took him to Schwerin (1793), Neustrelitz (1797), Leipzig, Magdeburg and finally Berlin (from 1822). His four operas (two Italian and two German) and a ballet are lost; his other works include cantatas, symphonies, overtures, two flute concertos, chamber and dance music, several collections of songs (among which was a once-popular drinking-song, Wir sind die Könige der Welt) and numerous arrangements. His arrangement as a piano sonata of Weber's Clarinet Quintet won him some notoriety, for Weber protested vigorously (AMZ, xviii, 1816, suppl.x–xi), drawing attention to serious alterations in the music. Ebers replied that he was free to do what he liked with any music, and that here he had improved the original and was willing, if Weber disowned it, to step in as its foster-father.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberNL; Grove1–2 (G. Grove); MCL; MGG1 suppl. (C. Schröder-Auerbach)
C. von Ledebur: Tonkünstler-Lexicon Berlin's (Berlin, 1861/R)
G. Kaiser, ed.: Sämtliche Schriften von Carl Maria von Weber (Berlin, 1908)

JOHN WARRACK

Ebers, John (b London, *c*1785; d London, *c*1830). English operatic manager and bookseller. Born of immigrant German parents, he had a successful bookselling business in London at 27 Old Bond Street, which he apparently also used as a ticket agency. When the Italian Opera at the King's Theatre, Haymarket, failed in 1820, Ebers became manager, with William Ayrton as his director of music. His initial season, which opened on 10 March 1821 with the first performance in Britain of La gazza ladra, was promising, and in 1822 he took a two-year lease of the theatre for £10,000, later extended by a further two years. He continued to introduce works new to London, primarily Rossini's. Various difficulties arose, partly caused by exorbitant demands of some singers; Ayrton resigned and was succeeded by a Signor Petracchi from La Scala.

During 1823 Ebers sold his interest in the theatre to Giovanni Battista Benelli, a member of the staff, for £10,000. Benelli was manager for the season of 1824, marked by the presence of Rossini and his wife, the singer Colbran. By the end of the season Benelli had sustained huge losses and he fled abroad, being declared bankrupt in January 1825. After litigation, Ebers resumed control, re-engaging Ayrton. The soprano Giuditta Pasta and the castrato Giovanni Velutti were the main attractions in 1825 and 1826. In the latter season Velutti was engaged both as a singer and as director of music, replacing Ayrton. There ensued much friction with the unpopular Nicholas Bochsa, who was appointed director of the orchestra and chorus and composer of ballet music in 1826. In Paris in 1826, Ebers opened unsuccessful negotiations with Rossini and Domenico Barbaia to form a triumvirate management of the King's Theatre. But the rent for the theatre rose to £15,000 per annum, and Ebers fell so far in arrears that his creditors forced him to relinquish the management at the end of the season of 1827. Declared bankrupt in November 1827, Ebers resumed his business as a bookseller and ticket vendor. Ayrton was among those who sought to obtain the vacant management of the King's Theatre, but it was taken by Laporte, an actor and theatre manager, and Laurent, who had managed the Théâtre Italien. After a year Laporte assumed full control.

Ebers's Seven Years of the King's Theatre (London, 1828/R) provides a vivid yet urbane personal view of his period as manager. (A unique grangerized, i.e. extra-illustrated, copy is in the library of the Garrick Club, London.) It incorporates details of payments and contracts with performers and gives Ebers's view of the financial and administrative problems of running an international opera company. Ebers claimed that lack of government subsidy and certain contractual procedures left the King's Theatre at a disadvantage compared to leading continental houses. (Negotiations regarding French ballet dancers were especially complex and had to be conducted via the British ambassador.) Ebers also claimed that as more works were produced each season than in Italian theatres, rehearsal periods were shorter, with consequent deleterious effect on standards. The vicissitudes of his regime were acerbically publicized in the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review and The Harmonicon (the latter edited by Ayrton). As manager, Ebers oversaw the production of operas by Rossini, Mozart, Spontini, and Meyerbeer, performed by stars such as Pasta and Garcia. His managerial demise was due to a combination of inherited debts, cumbersome administration and rising costs.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB (J.A. Fuller Maitland).
The Harmonicon, i (1823), 28, 72, 126; iii (1825), 47, 112; v (1827), 18, 171–2
Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review v (1823), 261, 263–4, 560; vi (1824), 514–26; vii (1825) 186–95; viii (1826) 386–8
The Times (24 Jan 1825), (24 Nov 1827)
F.H.W. Sheppard, ed.: Survey of London, xxix (London, 1960), 243
D. Nalbach: The King's Theatre 1704–1867 (London, 1972), 98–100
B. Cogli and S. Ragni, eds.: Gioacchino Rossini: lettere e documenti, i: 1792–1822 (Pesaro, 1992), 313, 544–5

GEORGE BIDDLECOMBE

Ebert, (Anton) Carl [Charles] (b Berlin, 20 Feb 1887; d Santa Monica, CA, 14 May 1980). German, naturalized American, director and administrator. He began his career as a trainee actor in the Deutsches Theater, Berlin, under the tutelage of Max Reinhardt. He belonged to theatre ensembles in Frankfurt (1915–22) and Berlin (1922–7) before working as Intendant of the Landestheater, Darmstadt (1927–31), where he staged his first opera productions, Le nozze di Figaro and Otello (1929). In 1931 he moved to the Städtische Oper in Berlin. For the next two years, until Hitler came to power, he was at the forefront of the German Verdi revival. He directed the première of Weill's Die Bürgschaft in Berlin, 1932, but with the arrival of the Nazis he moved to Buenos Aires, where he took charge of the Teatro Colón's Wagner repertory (1933–6) with the former music director of the Dresden Opera, Fritz Busch. In 1934 Ebert and Busch collaborated on the opening seasons of the Glyndebourne Festival (Le nozze di Figaro and Così fan tutte); they laid the foundations for the festival's renowned Mozart style, and in 1938 mounted the first professional performance in England of Verdi's Macbeth (the 1865 revision). Ebert was Glyndebourne's first artistic director, serving from 1934 to 1939 and again from 1947 to 1959.

In 1936 Ebert founded the opera and drama school of the Ankara Conservatory, remaining as head of the Department of the Performing Arts there until 1947. He was visiting professor (opera school) at the University of Southern California, Los Angeles, from 1948 to 1954. During this period he directed the première of Stravinsky's The Rake's Progress at La Fenice, Venice (1951). He also directed the first productions of Krenek's Dark Waters and Antheil's Volpone. He returned to the Städtische Oper, Berlin, as Intendant in 1954, remaining until 1961. He was made a CBE in 1960 and was awarded honorary doctorates by the universities of Edinburgh (1954) and Southern California (1955).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ES
J. Russell: 'The Other Ebert', Glyndebourne Festival Opera 1959, 28–32 [programme book]

S. Hughes: Glyndebourne: a History of the Festival Opera (London, 1965)
M. Caplet: 'Carl Ebert', Opera, xxxi (1980), 645–6
H. Oppenheim and others: 'Carl Ebert, Man of the Theatre', Glyndebourne Festival Opera 1981, 112–15 [programme book]

HUGH CANNING

Ebert, Jörg [Georg] (d before 1582). German organ builder. By 1531 he had been made a citizen of Rothenburg ob der Tauber, where he repaired the organ of the Jacobskirche in 1537. He received the freedom of the city of Ravensburg in 1542 and remained there until at least 1578. He constructed organs at the minsters of Freiburg (contracts dated 1544 and 1548) and Überlingen (contract 1548) as well as in Ravensburg (before 1554), Weissenau (before 1554), the monastery church at Ottobeuren (with five partners, 1554–7) and the Hofkirche, Innsbruck (1555–61). In 1561 work was projected in the monasteries at Salem (Cistercian), Kreuzlingen (Augustinian) and Petershausen (Benedictine). In 1562 Ebert was working on the unfinished Pfannmüller organ in Prague Cathedral. In 1566 he was active in Einsiedeln with his son Ulrich. Ulrich Ebert repaired the organs in the parish church and Hofkirche in Innsbruck during 1567–8.

The three known specifications (Freiburg, Überlingen and Innsbruck) show that Ebert used only a selection of the characteristic new stops available to south-west German organ builders of the early 16th century. He had a particular predilection for the Hörndl stop, which occurs on the great and choir at Überlingen and Innsbruck, and on the great and pedal at Freiburg. The Freiburg and Überlingen instruments both have a Faberton, while all three have a Trumpet on the great; in Innsbruck a Regal with a slider divided into bass and treble parts is also added as quasi-Brustwerk. The Freiburg specification is the only one to have individual pedal stops as well as Hertrumen and Vogelgesang.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Rücker: Die deutsche Orgel am Oberrhein um 1500 (Freiburg, 1940)
H. Meyer: 'Orgeln und Orgelbauer in Oberschwaben', Zeitschrift des historischen Vereins für Schwaben, liv (1941), 213–360
W. Senn: Musik und Theater am Hof zu Innsbruck (Innsbruck, 1954)
H. Fischer: 'Der mainfränkische Orgelbau bis zur Säkularisation', Acta organologica, ii (1968), 101–204
H. Klotz: 'Die Stellung der Ebertorgel im Rahmen des südwestdeutschen Orgelbaus', Orgel und Orgelspiel im 16. Jahrhundert: Innsbruck 1977, 176–83
E. Krauss: Die Ebert-Orgel in der Hofkirche zu Innsbruck (1558): ihre Geschichte und Wiederherstellung (Innsbruck, 1989)
H. Musch: 'Die Orgel von Jörg Ebert 1545 im Freiburger Münster', Musik am Oberrhein: Freiburg 1991, 73–86

ALFRED REICHLING

Eberwein, (Franz) Carl (Adalbert) (b Weimar, 10 Nov 1786; d Weimar, 2 March 1868). German composer and violinist, younger brother of TRAUGOTT EBERWEIN. He studied with his father before joining the ducal orchestra at Weimar first as flautist and then as violinist (1803). Through this engagement he met Goethe, at whose recommendation he studied for two years in Berlin with Zelter (1808–9). He became musical director at Goethe's house (1807), chamber musician in the ducal orchestra (1810) and in the Herderkirche (1810), and director of music at the cathedral (1818) in addition to teaching singing. After being turned down for the post of court Kapellmeister (1817), he was ducal music director and director of the opera from 1826 until his retirement in 1849. Eberwein is important not only as a composer, but also for his influence on Goethe and the musical life at Weimar. He wrote several songs and some Singspiele to texts by Goethe and music to his Faust and to Proserpina. His settings of poems from Goethe's West-östlicher Divan and the short patriotic songs, such as Die Freiheit ist errungen, are among his better works. Best known for his songs and stage works, Eberwein also composed an oratorio and cantatas, and a few instrumental works, and wrote about musical life at Weimar.

Eberwein married the opera singer Henriette Hässler, daughter of Johann Wilhelm Hässler, who performed many of his songs at the court; his elder brother Ludwig (1782–1832) became first oboist in the court orchestra at Weimar. His younger son, the pianist Maximilian Carl Eberwein (1814–75) was a child prodigy taught first by his father and later by Hummel; after a successful career as a pianist and composer in Berlin and Paris, he settled in Dresden as a music teacher, where Hans von Bülow was among his pupils.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (M. Fürstenau); ES (W. Boetticher); MGG1 (G. Kraft) [incl. list of works]; NDB (H. Heussner)
M. Zeigert: 'Goethe und der Musiker Karl Eberwein', Berichte des freien deutschen Hochstiftes zu Frankfurt (Frankfurt, 1836)
W. Bode: Die Tonkunst in Goethes Leben (Berlin, 1912)
W. Bode: Goethes Schauspieler und Musiker: Erinnerungen von Eberwein und Lobe (Berlin, 1912)
H.J. Moser: Goethe und die Musik (Leipzig, 1949)

GAYNOR G. JONES

Eberwein, Traugott (Maximilian) (b Weimar, 27 Oct 1775; d Rudolstadt, 2 Dec 1831). German violinist and composer, elder brother of CARL EBERWEIN. He was the eldest of three sons of Alexander Bartholomäus Eberwein (1751–1811), the Weimar ducal court and town musician whose brother Christian was violinist at Frankfurt before becoming violinist (1794) and musical director (1811) of the Rudolstadt court orchestra. After taking violin lessons from his father, Traugott studied theory with F.L.A. Kunzen in Frankfurt and the violin with Ernst Schick in Mainz. He had some further instruction from J.C. Kittel (counterpoint) in Erfurt and, stopping at Naples on a concert tour through Germany, France and Italy (1803), with Fedele Fenaroli. After a visit to Hamburg (1796), he was engaged as court musician to Prince Ludwig Friedrich von Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt in the following year, later becoming chamber musician (1810) and Kapellmeister (1817) at Rudolstadt. Traugott's reputation rests largely on the standard of performance attained under his direction at Rudolstadt and his work as an early founder of music festivals in Germany, in addition to his many compositions. His settings of Goethe, with whom he was on friendly terms, include the Tafellied Mich ergreift, ich weiss nicht wie and dramatic works, among them the Singspiele Claudine von Villa Bella (1815) and Der Jahrmarkt zu Plundersweilen (1818). Although his songs are modelled on those of Berlin composers such as J.F. Reichardt, Neapolitan elements in them show the influence of Fenaroli. Some of Traugott's more popular songs appeared in student and choral songbooks; he also composed operas, Singspiele and incidental music for the theatre; cantatas, a mass, an oratorio and a Te Deum; concertos, chamber and orchestral music. He also wrote reviews for music journals.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ADB (Anemüller); ES (W. Boetticher); MGG1 (G. Kraft) [incl. list of works]; NDB (H. Heussner)

W. Bode: Die Tonkunst in Goethes Leben (Berlin, 1912)
F.W. Sternfeld: Goethe and Music (New York, 1954/R)
P. Larsen: Traugott Maximilian Eberwein (1775–1831), Hofkapellmeister und Komponist in Rudolstadt (Göttingen, 1999)

GAYNOR G. JONES

Ebisawa, Bin (b Tokyo, 22 Nov 1931). Japanese musicologist. He studied with Shōichi Tsuji and Yosio Nomura at Tokyo University (1951–8) and Jacques Chailley at the University of Paris (1962–4). He became a lecturer at Kunitachi Music College in 1957 and was an influential teacher and an innovative administrator, rising to professor (1966), president (1979) and chairman of the board of directors (1989). He was president of the Musicological Society of Japan (1989–95) and became president of the Japan Mozart Society in 1995.

His research has concentrated on the 18th century, in particular Mozart and Rousseau, and on the history of musical thought. He is a prolific writer, and in addition to numerous books and articles he has published Japanese translations of Mozart's correspondence, the librettos of Mozart's operas and the musical writings of Rousseau. He was a co-editor of the Japanese editions of the Larousse de la Musique (1989) and The New Grove (1990–93). He wrote and presented the first Japanese radio series on Mozart (NHK, 1961) and the first television series (NHK, 1984, 1987). He was made Officier des palmes académiques by the French government (1984), and was awarded the Silver Mozart Medaille of the Internationale Stiftung Mozarteum (1988) and the Österreichische Ehrenkreuz by the Republic of Austria (1991), as well as many Japanese honours. In 1999, Ebisawa left Kunitachi Music College and founded Nihon Mōtsaruto Kenkyūjo (Japan Mozart Research Institute). In the same year he was appointed vice-director of the New National Theatre.

WRITINGS

Daisakkyokuka hito to sakuhin [Great musicians: their lives and works], iii: Mozart (Tokyo, 1961, 2/1986)
'Guretorī no ongaku-shisō' [Grétry's thoughts on music], Arima Daigoro sensei koki kinen rombun-shu (Tokyo, 1970), 1–33
Ongaku no shisō [A history of European musical thought] (Tokyo, 1972)
Mōtsaruto kenkyū nōto [Collected papers on Mozart] (Tokyo, 1973)
Mōtsaruto shokan zenshū [The complete letters of Mozart] (Tokyo, 1976–)
Mōtsaruto zō no kiseki [The history of Mozart reception] (Tokyo, 1977)
Rusō to ongaku [Rousseau and music] (Tokyo, 1981)
Rusō zenshū [The complete works of Rousseau], xii (Tokyo, 1983) [trans. of Rousseau's musical writings]
Sakkyokuka no shōzō [Portraits of composers] (Tokyo, 1983)
Mōtsaruto no shōgai [Mozart: a critical biography] (Tokyo, 1984)
Shin Mōtsaruto kō [New reflections on Mozart] (Tokyo, 1984, 2/1987)
'Didero to jūhasseiki no ongaku sekai' [Diderot and the musical world in the 18th century], Shisō, no.699 (1984), 198–206
Musunde hiraite kō: Rusō no yume [Rousseau's Dream: the history of a well-known folk melody] (Tokyo, 1986)
My Mozart Chronicle, i: Mōtsaruto wa kagami [Mozart, the mirror] (Tokyo, 1987); ii: Mōtsaruto wa uchū [Mozart, the universe] (Tokyo, 1990); iii: Mōtsaruto wa matsuri [Mozart, the feast] (Tokyo, 1994); iv: Mōtsaruto no Zautsuburugu [Mozart's Salzburg] (Tokyo, 1996)
Mōtsaruto jūhasseiki soshite genzai [Mozart, the 18th century and today] (Tokyo, 1988)
'The Requiem: Mirror of Mozart Performance History', EMc, xx (1992), 279–94
'From Musics to Music and then from Music to Musics in the Japanese Way', Music Education: Seoul 1992, ed. H. Lees (Christchurch, NZ, 1993), 18–25
'Mozart in japanischen Gewand: japanische Mozart-Rezeption in Geschichte und Gegenwart', MISM, xlii/3–4 (1994), 3–10
'Mōtsaruto-zō no genzai' [The present state of Mozart reception], Ongaku geijutsu (Tokyo, 1994–) [monographs in monthly serial form]
'Clementi, Paisiello, and Mozart: a New Comment on Mozart's Antipathetic Attitude toward Clementi', W.A. Mozart: Rovereto VI 1993 [Atti dell'Accademia roveretana degli agiati, 7th ser., iv (1995)], 171–98
'Jean-Jacques Rousseau and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart: Preliminary Remarks on their Relation', Festschrift Christoph-Hellmut Mahling zum 65. Geburtstag, ed. A. Beer, K. Pfarr and W. Ruf (Tutzing, 1997), 293–307
Chōetsu no hibiki: Mōtsaruto no sakuhin no sekai [The sound of transcendence: the world of Mozart's music] (Tokyo, 1997)
'Variations à la japonaise on the Theme by Mozart', W.A. Mozart: Rovereto IX 1996 (forthcoming)

MASAKATA KANAZAWA

Ebner, Leopold Ignacije (b Varaždin, 22 Oct 1769; d Varaždin, 11 Dec 1830). Croatian composer of Austrian origin. The son of an Austrian organist, Ignacije Antun Ebner (1733–75), he probably studied with the organist Johann Werner, whom he succeeded at Varaždin parish church in 1786; he served there until 1807. He was also active as a conductor, pianist and teacher, and was a prominent organizer of musical life in Varaždin; he was probably the founder of the amateur orchestra in the town.

Ebner was the first well-known composer in northern Croatia. His large output, which was forgotten after his death, consists mainly of church music, notably masses (many with obbligato organ) and an oratorio. Although his music is late Baroque in character, it also carries occasional echoes of Mozart (as in the oratorio), and the Piano Sonata of 1811, the first of its kind to be composed in Croatia, is reminiscent of early Beethoven. Ebner's works owe more to his instinctive musicality than to technique, but a number of them are worthy of revival.

WORKS

for sources see Filić

Vocal: Oratorium (?Ladislav Ebner), 3 vv, str orch, org, 1791, Aria de S Nepomuceno, both ed. in Spomenici hrvatske glazbene prošlosti, iv (Zagreb, 1973); 8 masses, vv, orch, org; 5 masses, vv, org; 2 masses, vv, orch; offs, vespers settings, TeDs, lits, etc.; Komična arija [Comical Aria], T, orch, ed. in Spomenici hrvatske glazbene prošlosti, ix (Zagreb, 1978)
Inst: Sonata, C, pf, 1881, ed. J. Muraj (Zagreb, 1977); 3 fantasie polonaise, pf, op.2 (Vienna, 1822); 2 minuets, Andante, Vivace, pf, all ed. J. Muraj (Zagreb, 1977); Trio, vn, 2 bn

BIBLIOGRAPHY

K. Filić: Glazbeni život Varaždina [The musical life of Varaždin] (Varaždin, 1972), 65–6, 321–33
K. Kos: 'Leopold Ebners Kirchenmusik: einleitende Bemerkungen', Off-Mozart: glazbena kultura i 'mali majstori' srednje Europe 1750.–1820.: Zagreb 1992, 129–73
L. Županović: 'Opus za glasovir Leopolda Ignacija Ebnera s posebnim osvrtom na Sonatu iz 1811. godine' [Ebner's piano works, with particular reference to the Sonata of 1811], ibid., 111–28 [incl. thematic catalogue]

LOVRO ŽUPANOVIĆ

Ebner, Wolfgang (b Augsburg, 1612; d Vienna, 11 or 12 Feb 1665). German organist and composer, active in Austria. He was appointed organist at the Stephansdom, Vienna, in 1634. Three years later he began a lifelong association with the imperial court in Vienna, serving under Ferdinand III and later Leopold I, assuming first the position of organist of the Kapelle and becoming cathedral Kapellmeister in 1663; he was also official ballet composer.

Little of Ebner's music is extant, which is regrettable in view of the esteem in which he was held by his contemporaries. Historical evaluations made before much of his music was destroyed in World War II support these appraisals. In 1637 he earned twice the salary of his colleague Froberger, with whom he established the important Viennese keyboard school of the 17th century, noted for its fusion of French, English and German styles. Zachow thought highly enough of Ebner to have the young Handel copy at least one composition into a notebook of 1698 (now lost) which Handel kept throughout his life; besides Ebner and Zachow, composers represented in it include Froberger, Kerll, J., A. and J.P. Krieger, Kuhnau, Muffat, Pachelbel and Poglietti. Ebner's best-known composition is the set of 36 variations for harpsichord (Prague, 1648) on a theme by Ferdinand III, which shows many similarities to Froberger's famous Mayerin suite and may in fact predate it. In both works the order of suite movements governs the overall structure while variation procedures provide the main impetus of musical growth.

Ebner wrote 15 elementary rules of thoroughbass realization, which, though never published in the original Latin, appeared in a German translation by J.A. Herbst as part of his Arte prattica & poëtica (Frankfurt, 1653). As did Agazzari (Del sonare sopra 'l basso con tutti li stromenti, 1607), Ebner suggested that the realization should not be allowed to go above the pre-existing melodic line, and like Galeazzo Sabbatini (Regola facile e breve per sonare sopra il basso continuo, 1628) he permitted the left hand to share at times in realizing the intervals above the bass.

WORKS

Aria augustissimi ac invictissimi Imperatoris Ferdinandi III. XXXVI modis variata, ac pro cimbalo accomodata (Prague, 1648); ed. in Musée des clavecinistes (Vienna, 1818); ed. G. Adler, Musikalische Werke der Habsburgischen Kaiser Ferdinand III, Leopold I und Joseph I (Vienna, 1892–3), 277ff; ed. H. Fischer, Die Variation (Berlin, 1930) [abbreviated]; ed. G. Tagliapietra, Antologia di musica antica e moderne per pianoforte (Milan, 1931–2), vii, 3–19

Dances, D-Rp (inc.); dances for a ballet, 4 va da gamba, hpd, 1661, A-Wn; Sonatina a 3, 2 vn, va da gamba, and Declarare in Domino, 3vv, 2 vn, bc; both D-Kl; Magnus Dominus in civitate Dei nostri, 4vv, bc, A-GÖ; keyboard music, A-Wm

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ApelG; WaltherML

J. Adlung: Anleitung zu der musikalischen Gelahrtheit (Erfurt, 1758/R, 2/1783)

F.T. Arnold: The Art of Accompaniment from a Thorough-Bass (London, 1931/R)

G. Schünemann: Geschichte der Klaviermusik (Berlin, 1940, rev. 2/1953 by H. Gerigk, 3/1956)

H. Knaus: Die Musiker im Archivbestand des kaiserlichen Obersthofmeisteramtes (1637–1705), i (Vienna, 1967)

T. Volek: 'Unikátní pražský notový tisk z roku 1648' [A unique piece of music printed in Prague in 1648], Hudebni věda, x/3 (1973), 244–5

JOHN D. ARNN/DOROTHEA SCHRÖDER

Ebraica. A generic designation for Jewish textual or musical content in 16th- and 17th-century music, after the example of the regional and ethnic terms mantovana, bergamasca, veneziana and so on. Usually the intent is satirical, if not libellous; references are sometimes made to Hebrew words, real or imagined, or to synagogal song. Examples can be found among the canti carnascialeschi (Giovanni Seragli, Canzona de' giudei battezzati; I-Fn B.R.230), the villotta (Ghirardo da Panico, Adonai con voi, lieta brigada, ecco de le Valam, in Filippo Azzaiolo's third book of villottas, 1569), the villanella (Lassus, Ecco la ninph'ebraica chiamata, 1581, and before him Giovanni Domenico da Nola's setting of the same in his three-voice Canzoni villanesche, repr. 1545), the madrigal comedy (Adriano Banchieri's Barca di Venetia, 1605, the portion entitled 'La trainana. Ste su a sentì ol noster Samuel. Sinagoga di Hebrei'), and also in various mascheratas, canzonettas and canzoni napolitane. The commedia dell'arte seems to have been influential in promoting the popularity of the genre; indeed, Tommaso Garzoni, speaking of various kinds of plot, recommends as a particularly entertaining one a Jew recently converted to Christianity ('mumbling "alle goi, alle goi, badanai badanai". . . he then makes a sermon of his conversion, after which one may conclude that instead of his having become a christiano, he clearly became a subtle ceretano [charlatan]'; La piazza universale di tutte le professioni, Venice, 1585, p.763).

DON HARRÁN

Ebran [Abran, Abrahan, Ebram, Hebran] (*fl c*1543–64). French composer. 12 pieces ascribed to 'Ebran' and three to 'Hebran' are included in Attaingnant's four-voice chanson anthologies published at Paris between 1543 and 1549. Nicolas Du Chemin printed three more chansons attributed to 'Ebran', and Le Roy & Ballard issued a further two ascribed to 'Abran'. Of these Tant vous allés doux Guillemette (RISM 1564^{11}; ed. in SCC, ix, 1994) proved a favourite and was often reprinted; it was also arranged for cittern and for lute and appeared as a dialogue for two voices and lute in Emanuel Adriaenssen's Pratum musicum where it was ascribed to 'Abrahan'. Quand un chacun sert et commande, a responce to Arcadelt's Pour heur en amour demander, was ascribed to 'Ebram' in Guillaume Morlaye's second lutebook (1558^{18}); a four-voice version of the same piece later appeared attributed to 'Nicolas' (1565^{5}), possibly referring to Nicolas de La Grotte. Most of Ebran's chansons are courtly épigrammes with decasyllabic lines, set in the generally homophonic style of Sandrin and Arcadelt; only two texts are identifiable – Cesse mon oeil by Chappuys and Ung jour d'iver by Clément Marot.

WORKS

19 chansons, 4vv, 1543^{7}, 1543^{9}, 1543^{11}, 1544^{7}, 1545^{8}, 1545^{10}, 1545^{12}, 1547^{9}, 1547^{12}, 1549^{21}, 1549^{22}, 1549^{23}, 1550^{11}, 1550^{12}, 1559^{13}, 1564^{11} (arr. cittern, 1570^{34}; arr. lute, 1571^{16}, 1574^{12}; arr. 2vv, lute, 1584^{12}); 2 ed. in SCC, ix (1994), 3 ed. A. Seay: Pierre Attaingnant: Dixseptiesme livre (1545), Vingt deuxiesme livre (1547) and Trente troysiesme livre (1549) (Colorado Springs, 1979–82)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BrownI

D. Heartz: Pierre Attaingnant, Royal Printer of Music (Berkeley, 1969)

FRANK DOBBINS

Ebreo da Pesaro, Guglielmo. See GUGLIELMO EBREO DA PESARO.

Eccard, Johannes (b Mühlhausen, Thuringia, 1553; d Berlin, 1611). German composer. He was a pupil at the Lateinschule in Mühlhausen where he probably received his first musical training from the young Kantor Joachim a Burck. He was a chorister in the Kapelle of the Weimar court from 1569 until its disbandment in 1571, and from then until the end of 1573 he sang in the Bavarian Hofkapelle in Munich; he was also a pupil of Lassus there. During winter 1573–4, while living in Mühlhausen, he renewed an earlier acquaintance with Joachim a Burck, and formed an association with the poet Ludwig Helmbold, who had been there as a deacon since 1571. Eccard's parents left Mühlhausen in 1579, his father having been accused of illicit relations with a married woman. In 1577 and 1578 the composer was in the household of Jakob Fugger in Augsburg, and he dedicated to him his five-part mass Mon coeur se recommende à vous. In 1579 he stayed briefly in Mühlhausen to obtain a certificate of birth, which he needed in order to take up service with Margrave Georg Friedrich of Brandenburg-Ansbach, who, having been appointed administrator of the Duchy of Prussia in 1578, had moved with his musicians to Königsberg.

In the Kapelle registers for 1580 Eccard's name appeared for the first time under the list of singers; the household establishment book, however, referred to him from the beginning as vice-Kapellmeister. In 1586 the margrave returned to Ansbach with his Kapellmeister (Teodore Riccio) and the larger part of his musical establishment, leaving Eccard in Königsberg as vice-Kapellmeister. Although Eccard in fact fulfilled there the duties of a first-in-charge, he was not appointed Kapellmeister proper until 1604 when Elector Joachim Friedrich of Brandenburg became administrator of Prussia after the death of Margrave Georg Friedrich. In 1608 Joachim Friedrich gave Eccard sole charge of the music at his principal residence in Berlin; the composer remained there as Kapellmeister until his death, serving both Joachim Friedrich and his successor, Johann Sigismund.

Eccard's work centres largely on the Lutheran chorale. During the second half of the 16th century the chorale was developed simultaneously in two contrasting ways: on the one hand the melody was transferred from the tenor to the highest part and simply harmonized; on the other hand it was freely treated in elaborate polyphonic style. Eccard contributed to both lines of development. The Geistlicher Lieder auff den Choral of 1597 belong to the simpler genre; the preface to the publication shows clearly the connection of the work with Lucas Osiander's four-part 50 geistliche Lieder und Psalmen(chorales and psalms set polyphonically in such a way as to enable a congregation to participate in their singing). Eccard's settings somewhat overshadow those of Osiander, however, not only because of their fuller five-part texture, but because of the cleverly worked-out inner parts that create an illusion of polyphony; nevertheless, even the most elaborate settings are not so difficult as to prevent the congregation from joining in the top line.

Together with Lechner, Hans Leo Hassler, and Michael Praetorius in particular, Eccard was one of the principal Protestant composers of chorale motets (the alternative genre) working at the turn of the 17th century and in this field lies his most important contribution. The motets from the two volumes of Preussischen Festlieder (published with works of Stobaeus in 1642 and 1644) show that he was a 'true disciple of the world-famous and celebrated Orlandi [Lassus]' in that he, like his teacher, was capable of realizing the full implications of the text in terms of close word-note relationships and appropriately varied textures: settings like the five-part Übers Gebirg Maria geht, and the six-part Zacharias war ganz verstummt and Der Heilig Geist vom Himmel kam reflect the intrinsic warmth of Helmbold's verse, to which Eccard throughout his life returned constantly.

The extent to which Eccard's influence was felt long after his death is shown not only by the many posthumous editions of his works but also in such a composition as Johann Sebastiani's oratorical St Matthew Passion(Königsberg, 1672), in which the interspersed chorales clearly derive from Eccard's 1597 volume. In the 19th century Eccard's music was regarded as the epitome of the a cappella ideal, and in an age of Protestant revival, he was seen as the counterpart to Palestrina who was esteemed by the Caecilians as the classical figure of Catholic church music. This high regard is particularly evident in Winterfeld's standard work, in which a section of over 60 pages is devoted to Eccard, the sole representative there of the 16th century. Through Winterfeld Eccard's music came to be prized by Brahms.

Of the works of secondary importance, mention should be made of the sacred odes, which, in their essentially homophonic idiom, resemble the early 16th-century genre of the secular scholastic ode. Eccard was also attracted by the Italian villanella, as the title of the posthumously published Crepundia sacra . . . ad imitationem italicarum villanescarum (1626[10]) clearly indicates.

WORKS

20 newe christliche Gesäng Ludovici Helmboldi . . . artlich und lieblich zu singen, und auff allerley Instrumenten der Music zu spielen, 4 vv (Mühlhausen, 1574)

Newe deutsche Lieder, 4, 5vv, gantz lieblich zu singen, und auff allerley musicalischen Instrumenten zu gebrauchen (Mühlhausen, 1578)

Newe Lieder, 4, 5vv gantz lieblich zu singen und auff allerley Instrumenten zu gebrauchen (Königsberg, 1589), ed. in PÄMw, xxi, Jg.xxv (1897)

20 odae sacrae Ludovici Helmboldi . . . I. Harmonicis numeris pro scansione versuum, ornatae et compositae, 4vv (Mühlhausen, 1596)

Der erste Theil geistlicher Lieder auff den Choral oder gemeine Kirchen Melodey durchauss gerichtet, 5vv (Königsberg, 1597), ed. G.W. Teschner (Leipzig, 1860), ed. F. von Baussnern (Wolfenbüttel, 1928) [49 incl. in 1634[3]]

Der ander Teil geistlicher Lieder auf den Choral, 5vv (Königsberg, 1597), ed. G.W. Teschner (Leipzig, 1860), ed. F. von Baussnern (Wolfenbüttel, 1963)

WORKS PUBLISHED JOINTLY WITH JOACHIM A BURCK

4 odae Ludovici Helmboldi, latinae et germanicae: . . . ; new Gesänglein, auff der Schüler Fest an S. Gregorii Tag gerichtet 4vv (Mühlhausen, 1574[10])

Crepundia sacra M. Ludovici Helmboldi . . . Christliche Liedlein an S. Gregorii der Schuler Festtag und sonsten zu singen, 4vv (Mühlhausen, 1578[5], repr. 1589[4], 2/1596[5], repr. 1608[6], 1626[8])

30 geistliche Lieder auff die Fest durchs Jhar, 4vv (Mühlhausen, 1585[36], repr. 1594[18], 1609[11], 1628), ed. H.J. Moser and K. Nehring-Pakendorf (Stuttgart, 1960)

40 deutsche christliche Liedlein M. Ludovici Helmboldi . . . artlich und lieblich zu singen, und auf allerlei Instrument der Musica zu spielen, 4vv (Mühlhausen, 1599[8])

Odarum sacrarum M. Ludovici Helmboldi ... Pars prima complectens: I. Odas sacras ... VI. Crepundia sacra ... ad imitationem italicarum villanescarum (Mühlhausen, 1626[10])

WORKS PUBLISHED POSTHUMOUSLY BY J. STOBAEUS

Geistliche Lieder auff gewöhnliche preussische Kirchen Melodeyen (Danzig, 1634[3]) [incl. 44 by Stobaeus]

Erster Theil der preussischen Fest-Lieder vom Advent an biss Ostern, 5–8vv (Elbing, 1642), ed. G.W. Teschner (Leipzig, 1858) [incl. 13 by Stobaeus], lost

Ander Theil der preussischen Festlieder von Ostern an biss Advent, 5–8vv (Königsberg, 1644), ed. G.W. Teschner (Leipzig, 1858) [incl. 21 by Stobaeus], lost

86 occasional compositions listed in Böcker

Missa 'Mon coeur se recommende à vous', 5vv, dated 1579, D-As 17, Mbs Mus.ms.57, ed. U. Herrmann (Stuttgart, 1964) (on Lassus' chanson); Missa 'Domine ad adiuvandum me festina', 5vv, lost; Missa 'Veni Sancte Spiritus', 5vv, lost; Kyrie de Beata Maria

Virgine, 4vv, dated 1587, As 6, Bsb; Terribilis est locus iste, 5vv, dated 1578, As 6; Veni Sancte Spiritus, 5vv, Bsb; Vultum tuum deprecabuntur, 4vv, As 6; other smaller sacred works, lost, formerly in Königsberg (now Kaliningrad)

Concordances in 1586[22], 1605[1], 1613[6], Bsb, Dl, Lr, PL-LEtpn, WRu, S-Skma

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (A. Adrio); WinterfeldEK

S. Kümmerle: Encyklopädie der evangelischen Kirchenmusik, i (Gütersloh, 1888/R)

G. Reichmann: Johannes Eccards weltliche Werke (diss., U. of Heidelberg, 1923)

A. Adrio: 'Johannes Eccards "Preussische Festlieder"', Musik und Kirche, xxiii (1953), 239–43

A.W. Grauer: The Vocal Style of Sixt Dietrich and Johann Eccard and their Contributions to Lutheran Church Music (diss., U. of Rochester, 1960)

M. Ruhnke: Beitrage zu einer Geschichte der deutschen Hofmusikkollegien im 16. Jahrhundert (Berlin, 1963)

H. Heckmann: 'Johann Eccards Gelegenheitskompositionen', Festschrift Bruno Stäblein, ed. M. Ruhnke (Kassel, 1967), 92–100

C. Böcker: Johannes Eccard: Leben und Werk (Munich, 1980)

A. Nowack: 'Johann Eccards Ernennung zum Preussischen Palestrina durch Obertribunalrat von Winterfeld', Studien zur Musikgeschichte Berlins im frühen 19. Jahrhundert, ed. C. Dahlhaus (Regensburg, 1980), 293–300

V. Hancock: 'Brahms and Early Music: Evidence from his Library and Choral Composition', Brahms Studies: Washington, DC 1983, 29–48

V. Hancock: 'Brahms's Performances of Early Choral Music', 19CM, viii (1984–5), 125–41

G. Schuhmacher: 'Zur Rezeption altklassischer Vokalpolyphonie in der evangelischen Kirchenmusik des 19. Jahrhunderts', Palestrina und die Idee der klassischen Vokalpolyphonie im 19. Jahrhundert: Frankfurt 1987, 143–8

WALTER BLANKENBURG/CLYTUS GOTTWALD

Ecchienus [?Ormestad, ?Ormsen], Caspar (fl late 16th century). Norwegian composer. His name is perhaps a latinization of the Norwegian name Ormestad or Ormsen. Like Johann Nesenus, he is of interest as one of the earliest Norwegian composers of polyphonic music known by name. He is known only from a four-part motet, Cor mundum crea in me Deus, in a manuscript in the state archives at Stockholm (facs. and edn. in O. Gurvin, 'Ein tidleg norsk motett', SMN, i, 1968, pp.156–66). The piece bears an inscription in which 'Caspar Ecchienus from Norway' dedicated it in friendship to one Petrus Jesperson, secretary to Duke Carl – presumably Gustav Vasa's son, who became duke in 1560 and king in 1600.

JOHN BERGSAGEL

Eccles. English family of musicians.

(1) Solomon Eccles [Eagles] (i) (*b c*1617; d Spitalfields, London, 2 Jan 1682). Musician, later shopkeeper. Both his grandfather and father were musicians, and in his younger days he himself earned about £200 a year teaching the virginals and viols (see his Musick-lector). About 1660 after a period of religious uncertainty he became a Quaker. He was a man in whom zeal was apt to outweigh discretion; coming to feel that music-making was sinful he publicly burnt all his instruments on Tower Hill. Some say that he subsequently earned his living as a shoemaker, others as a tailor; in his will he called himself a chandler. In 1667 he wrote a tract, A Musick-lector, condemning music. He became notorious for such actions as running half-naked through the streets carrying a pan of fire on his head crying repentance. His fellow Quakers valued his sincerity and his powers as a preacher, but at times found him an embarrassment: on two occasions, for instance, his Monthly Meeting refused to allow him to publish religious tracts. In 1671 he accompanied George Fox on a visit to the West Indies. He apparently did not return with Fox's party in May 1673, but was back in England by October of that year, when he married for a second time.

(2) Solomon Eccles [Eagles] (ii) (?bap. Guildford, 3 June 1649; d Guildford, bur. 1 Dec 1710). Composer and bass violin player, possibly the nephew of (1) Solomon Eccles (i) and possibly the son of Henry and Susan Eccles of Guildford. He was appointed to the King's Private Music on 10 Oct 1685 and was one of the musicians who accompanied William III to Holland in 1691. He may have been the 'Eagles' who performed in the masque Calisto in 1675. He provided act music for Thomas Otway's Venice Preserved and Aphra Behn's The City Heiress, or Sir Timothy Treatall, both produced early in 1682. His act tunes for Charles Hopkins's Friendship Improv'd, or The Female Warrior (January 1700, US-NH) were also used in performances of Henry IV Part I. Six other sets of tunes, probably also act music for unspecified plays, are extant (in GB-Lbl Add.29283–5 and 35043 and Lcm 1144); a few single pieces appear in other contemporary sources, including a song in Thesaurus Musicus (1694) for Thomas D'Urfey's The Richmond Heiress. He resigned his place in the Private Music by 6 October 1710, when his place was taken by Thomas Sexton, and died within four months, leaving two sons, William and Charles, and three daughters; the second son may have been the Charles Eccles who composed a gavotte included in the Compleat Tutor for the Hautboy (London, *c*1746) by John Simpson (i).

(3) Henry Eccles [Eagles] (i) (b ?between 1640 and 1650; d London, bur. 31 March 1711). Musician, possibly brother of (2) Solomon Eccles (ii). He was appointed to the King's Private Music on 17 July 1689 and was probably a violinist. He went to Holland with William III in 1691 instead of Robert King.

(4) John Eccles (b ?London, *c*1668; d Hampton Wick, 12 Jan 1735). Composer, only son of (3) Henry Eccles (i). He has incorrectly been thought to have been the son of (1) Solomon Eccles (i) and brother of (5) Henry (ii) and Thomas Eccles. The first that is known of John Eccles is the publication of several songs in 1691. In 1693 he became an active composer for the United Companies at the Theatre Royal in Drury Lane. His first assignment was to write a dialogue for the singing début of the actress Anne Bracegirdle in Thomas D'Urfey's The Richmond Heiress; the dialogue was so successful that he soon became one of London's most popular theatre composers. Recognizing Eccles's ability to write for her needs, Mrs Bracegirdle, undoubtedly under his tutelage, thereafter sang only his music. While with the United Companies, Eccles created for her the famous mad song 'I burn, I burn', from the second part of D'Urfey's Don Quixote, as well as the lead in the masque The Rape of Europa, and many incidental songs. Especially important during this period is his setting of the three witch scenes earlier interpolated into Macbeth by Davenant. Besides his theatrical activities, Eccles became a musician-in-ordinary without fee in the King's Band.

In 1695 the principal actors of the United Companies revolted against the tyranny and vulgarities of its director John Rich and, under the direction of Thomas Betterton, set up a new company at Lincoln's Inn Fields. Eccles followed Mrs Bracegirdle to the new theatre and became its musical director. Here he continued to supply a steady stream of songs for various plays, as well as two 'all-sung' masques for Mrs Bracegirdle, P.A. Motteux's The Loves of Mars and Venus and Acis and Galatea, and a dramatic opera, John Dennis's Rinaldo and Armida. Other important works at Lincoln's Inn Fields include the two masques, Hercules and Ixion, and the musical extravaganza, Europe's Revels for the Peace, which celebrated the signing of the Peace of Ryswick in 1697. Still active at court, on 2 September 1696 Eccles replaced Thomas Tollet as one of the king's 24 musicians-in-ordinary, and on 30 June 1700 he was appointed 'Master of Musick, in the room of Dr Staggins'.

The severe competition between the United Companies and Lincoln's Inn Fields had resulted in a decline in the quality of both music and drama by 1700. While the players at Lincoln's Inn Fields tried to keep up the old standards, the old company offered novelty in the form of Italian singers and French dancers, rope dancers, contortionists and similar diversions. When William Congreve offered his masque The Judgment of Paris as the basis for a musical contest sponsored by 'several persons of quality', he must have hoped to better the state of theatre music. Scores were submitted by Eccles, Daniel Purcell, Gottfried Finger and John Weldon. Despite the lavish production and universally admired interpretation of Venus by Mrs Bracegirdle, Eccles's music was accorded only the second prize. The first went to Weldon, who then gave up theatrical composition in favour of sacred music. Eccles's setting, however, was the most popular, and he and Congreve continued their collaboration by creating the St Cecilia's Day Ode for 1701.

While continuing to provide Lincoln's Inn Fields with incidental music for many plays, Eccles also produced the required court odes, and by 1704 had finished the vocal music for Granville's dramatic opera The British Enchanters. About this time, Congreve and Sir John Vanbrugh had formed a partnership and started the construction of a theatre in the Haymarket as a new home for the company at Lincoln's Inn Fields. It is logical to suppose that Congreve planned his opera libretto Semele for the opening of the new theatre in 1705; Eccles's score, however, was not completed until 1707, by which time Italian opera had found a firm footing in London and Congreve had left the theatre. Although The British Enchanters was successfully given at the Haymarket in 1706 to counteract Italian opera, Semele was never staged.

After this disappointment, and probably also because of the deaths or retirements of many of his colleagues, Eccles retired to Hampton Wick where, according to Hawkins, he pursued his favourite sport, angling. However, he remained active as a court composer, supplying annual odes for New Year's Day and the sovereign's birthday until his death and writing the occasional theatre piece. In his will he left a shilling each to his three daughters; the remainder of his estate went to his servant Sarah Gainor.

Eccles's greatest talent is revealed in his many songs. Remarkable for their beautifully contoured melodies and impeccable prosody, they quickly capture the mood and subtleties of the poetry and are eminently singable. His large works are notable for their dramatic pacing and their carefully planned tonal architecture. In the latter respect he surpassed even Purcell, and was far in advance of his day.

Title-page of John Eccles's 'The Judgment of Paris' (London: Walsh & Hare, 1702)

Eccles brought the Restoration tradition to its close. After Purcell's death in 1695 he was undoubtedly the greatest of the Restoration theatre composers. Continuing in Purcell's footsteps, The Judgment of Paris was the last of the masques, The British Enchanters closed the era of the dramatic opera, and the St Cecilia's Day Ode was the last of the annual celebrations for that saint. In Semele, Eccles turned to the Italian style and achieved a fusion between English and Italian elements, comparable with that achieved by Purcell between the French and English styles. More important, he also created a sensitive secco recitative better suited to English than any that was to follow for about 200 years. Had Semele been produced, it might have laid the foundations for a national English opera.

WORKS

for theatre pieces, text and some or all music published shortly after first performance unless otherwise stated; all first performed in London; for complete catalogue of pubd songs from theatre pieces see Day-MurrieESB, BUCEM and Hunter

LDL – Drury Lane
LLF – Lincoln's Inn Fields
LLH – Haymarket

MASQUES AND OPERATIC PIECES

Macbeth (W. Shakespeare), revival Dorset Garden, 1694, GB-Lbl

The Rape of Europa (? P.A. Motteux), ? perf. in revival of J. Wilmot's Valentinian, Dorset Garden, Oct 1694

The Loves of Mars and Venus (Motteux), perf. in E. Ravenscroft's The Anatomist, LLF, Nov 1696, collab. G. Finger
Hercules (Motteux), perf. in Motteux's The Novelty, LLF, June 1697, music lost
Europe's Revels for the Peace [of Ryswick] (Motteux), LLF, ?4Nov 1697, Lbl
Ixion (Ravenscroft), perf. in Ravenscroft's The Italian Husband, LLF, Nov 1697, music lost
A Musical Entertainment (Joy to the youthful pair), perf. in Ravenscroft's The Italian Husband, LLF, Nov 1697, music lost
Rinaldo and Armida (J. Dennis), LLF, Nov 1698, Lbl
Acis and Galatea (Motteux), perf. in Motteux's The Mad Lover, LLF, *c*Dec 1700
The Judgment of Paris, or The Prize of Music (W. Congreve), Dorset Garden, 21 March 1701 (1702/*R*1984 in MLE C1)
The British Enchanters, or No Magick like Love (G. Granville, after P. Quinault), LLH, 21 Feb 1706, adaptation of Lully's Amadis; ov. and act tunes by W. Corbett, all but 2 songs lost
Semele (Congreve), completed 1707, not perf., Lcm

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

She Wou'd if she Cou'd (G. Etherege), revival LDL, 1693
The Richmond Heiress, or A Woman Once in the Right (T. D'Urfey), LDL, April 1693, collab. H. Purcell
Troilus and Cressida, or Truth Found too Late (J. Dryden), revival LDL, *c*1694
Aureng-Zebe (Dryden), revival LDL, 1694, Lbl
Don Carlos, Prince of Spain (T. Otway), revival LDL, 1694
Love Triumphant, or Nature will Prevail (Dryden), LDL, Jan 1694, collab. H. Purcell
The Lancashire Witches (T. Shadwell), revival Dorset Garden, Feb 1694
Teague O Divelly, the Irish Priest (Shadwell), revival Dorset Garden, Feb 1694
The Ambitious Slave, or A Generous Revenge (E. Settle), LDL, 21 March 1694
The Married Beau, or The Curious Impertinent (J. Crowne), LDL, April 1694
The Comical History of Don Quixote, pts i and ii (D'Urfey), LDG, May 1694, collab. H. Purcell
The Spanish Fryar, or The Double Discovery (Dryden), revival, June 1694
Valentinian (J. Wilmot), revival Dorset Garden, Oct 1694; see masque The Rape of Europa
Hamlet (W. Davenant, after Shakespeare), LLF, 1695
Love for Love (Congreve), LLF, 30 April 1695, collab. G. Finger
Pyrrhus, King of Epirus (C. Hopkins), LLF, Aug 1695
She Ventures, and He Wins, LLF, Sept 1695
Cyrus the Great, or The Tragedy of Love (J. Banks), LLF, Dec 1695
The Lover's Luck (T. Dilke), LLF, Dec 1695
The She-Gallants (Granville), LLF, Dec 1695
The Husband his own Cuckold (J. Dryden jr), LLF, Feb 1696
The City Bride, or The Merry Cuckold (J. Harris), LLF, March 1696
The Country-Wake (T. Dogget), LLF, April 1696
The Royal Mischief (M. Manley), LLF, April 1696
Love's a Jest (Motteux), LLF, June 1696
The Anatomist, or The Sham Doctor (Ravenscroft), LLF, Nov 1696; see masque The Loves of Mars and Venus
The City Lady, or Folly Reclaim'd (Dilke), LLF, Dec 1696; see ode Give the warriour loud and lasting praise
The Man of Mode, or Sir Fopling Flutter (G. Etherege), revival LLF, 1697
Women will Have their Wills, LLF, 1697
The Unnatural Brother (E. Filmer), LLF, Jan 1697
The Libertine (Shadwell), revival LLF, 27 March 1697
The Provok'd Wife (J. Vanbrugh), LLF, April 1697
The Intrigues at Versailles, or A Jilt in All Humours (D'Urfey), LLF, May 1697
The Innocent Mistress (M. Pix), LLF, June 1697
The Novelty: Every Act a Play (Motteux), LLF, June 1697; see masque Hercules
The Deceiver Deceived (Pix), LLF, Nov 1697
The Italian Husband (Ravenscroft), LLF, Nov 1697; see masques A Musical Entertainment and Ixion
The Villain (T. Porter), revival LLF, 1698
The Pretenders, or The Town Unmaskt (Dilke), LLF, March 1698
Justice Busy, or The Gentleman Quack (Crowne), LLF, 1699, also known as The Morose Reformer; play lost
The Adventures of Five Hours (S. Tuke), revival LLF, 1699
The Mad Lover (Motteux, after Fletcher), LLF, 1700, play lost; see masque Acis and Galatea Measure for Measure, or Beauty the Best Advocate (C. Gildon, after Shakespeare), LLF, ? before March 1700, US-Cn
The Way of the World (Congreve), LLF, ?5 March 1700
The Beau Defeated, or The Lucky Younger Brother (Pix), LLF, mid-March 1700
The Fate of Capua (T. Southerne), LLF, April 1700
Altemira (R. Boyle), LF, Dec 1701
Love Betray'd, or The Agreable Disapointment (W. Burnaby), LLF, Feb 1703
The Fickle Shepherdess (after T. Randolph's Amyntis, or The Impossible Dowry), LLF, *c*April 1703
As you Find it (C. Boyle), LLF, 28 April 1703
The Fair Penitent (N. Rowe), LLF, ? 8 June 1703
The Stage-coach (G. Farquahar), LLF, Jan 1704
The Chances (G. Villiers, after Beaumont and Fletcher), revival LLF, 5 Feb 1704
The Metamorphosis, or The Old Lover Out-witted (J. Cory), LLF, 2 Oct 1704
The Biter (Rowe), LLF, ?Nov 1704
Ulysses (Rowe), LLH, 23 Nov 1705

Undated incid music: The Duchess of Malfi (J. Webster), revival; A Fatal Secret, or The Rival Brothers; Harry the Fifth (? revival of R. Boyle's The History of Henry the Fifth); The Match at Bedlam; The Midnight Mistakes; The Self Conceit, or The Mother Made a Property; The Surpriz'd Lovers; The Virtuous Wife, or Good Luck at Last (D'Urfey), revival

ODES

† – probably by Eccles; see McGuinness

Haste, loyal Britons, haste, prepare (Motteux), for the taking of Namur and the king's safe return, 1696, GB-Ob
† This is that glorious day (Motteux), for the king's birthday, ?1700, Ob; ? revived for New Year's Day 1710
Oh harmony, to thee we sing (Congreve), St Cecilia's Day 1701, Lcm
Wake Britain wake (N. Tate), New Year's Day 1702, 3 songs in Ob and A Collection of Songs (1704)
Hark, how the muses call aloud (Tate), New Year's Day 1703, 6 songs in The Songs and Symphonies Perform'd before Her Majesty … on New-Years Day (1703)
Inspire us genius of the day (Motteux), for the queen's birthday, 1703, Lbl, 5 songs in The Songs and Symphonys Perform'd before Her Majesty … on her Birthday (1703)
While Anna with victorious arms (?Tate), New Year's Day 1704, in A Collection of Songs (1704)
Awake harmonious pow'rs (?Tate), for the queen's birthday, 1704, *Cfm*shelf 31 H; songs in Lbl and A Collection of Songs (1704)

Odes with text extant, music lost: Give the warriour loud and lasting praise (T. Dilke), for the king's return from Flanders, 1696, perf. in The City Lady; See how the new-born season springs (Tate), New Year's Day 1708; Fair as the morning, as the morning early (Tate), for the queen's birthday, 1711; Lay the flowery garlands by (N. Rowe), for the queen's birthday, 1716, music pubd according to Evening Post, 2–5 June 1716; Winter! thou hoary venerable sire (Rowe), New Year's Day 1717; †Thou fairest, sweetest daughter of the skies (Rowe), ?New Year's Day 1718; †Oh touch the string, celestial muse (Rowe), for the king's birthday, 1718; Lift up thy hoary head (L. Eusden), New Year's Day 1720; A hero scarce could rise of old (Eusden), for the king's birthday, 1720; †Say, gen'rous parent of the vine (Eusden), New Year's Day 1721; †When the great Julius on Britannia's strand, for the king's birthday, 1721; †Hail the lov'd, returning, glorious day (Eusden), for the king's birthday, 1723; Janus! the shining round survey (Eusden), New Year's Day 1730; Of old the bards, their countries to adorn (Eusden), for the king's birthday, 1730; Once more the ever circling sun (C. Cibber), New Year's Day 1731; When Charles from anarchy's retreat (Cibber), for the king's birthday, 1731; Awake with joyous songs the day (Cibber), New Year's Day 1732; Let there be light (Cibber), for the king's birthday, 1732; Sicilian sister, tuneful nine (Cibber), New Year's Day 1733; Again the joyous morn (Cibber), for the king's birthday, 1733; To George, to George, our patriot king (Cibber), New Year's Day 1734; Happy Britain! raise thy voice (Cibber), New Year's Day 1735; †As on the deep in war's array (Eusden), n.d.
Odes with text and music lost: New Year's Day 1710; ? revival of This is that glorious day; New Year's Day 1719 (Eusden); for the king's birthday, 1719 (Eusden); †New Year's Day 1722 (?Eusden);

†New Year's Day 1723 (?Eusden); †A Birthday Cantata (Eusden), 1724; †New Year's Day 1725 (Eusden); †New Year's Day 1727 (?Eusden)

MISCELLANEOUS WORKS

Theatre Musick, Being a Collection of the Newest Aires for Violin (London, 1698)
A Collection of Lessons and Aires for the Harpsichord or Spinnett Composed by Mr J. Eccles, Mr D. Purcell and Others (London, 1702)
A Sett of Airs Made for the Queen's Coronation (London, 1702)
A Collection of Songs for One, Two and Three Voices (London, 1704)
Songs and catches pubd singly and in 18th-century anthologies

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDECM; Day-MurrieESB; FiskeETM; GroveO (C. Price); LS
S.M. Lincoln: John Eccles: the Last of a Tradition (diss., U. of Oxford, 1963)
S. Lincoln: 'The First Setting of Congreve's Semele', ML, xliv (1963), 103–17
R. McGuinness: English Court Odes, 1660–1820 (Oxford, 1971)
S. Lincoln: 'A Congreve Masque', MT, cxiii (1972), 1078–81
C.A. Price: Music in the Restoration Theatre (Ann Arbor, 1979)
P. Holman: 'A New Source of Restoration Keyboard Music', RMARC, no.20 (1986–7), 53–7
S. Leopold: 'Semele von John Eccles und Georg Friedrich Händel', Händel auf dem Theater: Karlsruhe 1986 and 1987, 29–37
H.D. Johnstone and R. Fiske, eds.: Music in Britain: the Eighteenth Century (Oxford, 1990)
S.E. Plank: '"And now about the cauldron sing": Music and the Supernatural on the Restoration Stage', EMc, xviii (1990), 393–407
D. Hunter: Opera and Song Books Published in England 1703–1726: a Descriptive Bibliography (London, 1997)

(5) Henry Eccles (ii) (b ?1675–85; d ?1735–45). Violinist and composer. Since he was at first called 'Henry Eccles junior' it is likely that he was related to (3) Henry Eccles (i), but in what way is unknown. The earliest reference to him is on 2 January 1705, when he gave a benefit concert in Mr Hill's dancing room. A Prelude in C minor by him appeared in Select Preludes & Voluntarys for the Violin (1705), and a song No more let Damon's eyes in Comical Songs (1706) and Wit and Mirth, iii (2/1707). On 15 May 1713 a concert was given in the Stationers' Hall 'for the Entertainment of ... the Duke d'Aumont, Embassador extraordinary from France. For the Benefit of Mr Eccles, Musician to his Grace'. Eccles presumably returned to France with the duke's entourage in December 1713. He was certainly living in Paris by 1720, when he published there a set of 12 violin sonatas, 18 movements of which, however, were taken from Giuseppe Valentini's Allettamenti per camera op.8, with a further movement coming from F.A. Bonporti's Invenzioni op.10. A second set of violin sonatas (including two flute sonatas) followed in 1723. Hawkins quoted Henry's brother Thomas (b London, *c*1672; *d c*1745) as saying in about 1735 that Henry was then in the service of the King of France, but as he is neither included in Machard's lists of kings' musicians for 1734–64 (RMFC, xi, 1971) nor mentioned in Benoit's Versailles et les musiciens du roi, 1661–1733, it would seem that this was not so. According to Hawkins, Thomas Eccles was also a violinist – an excellent performer reduced by alcohol addiction to scraping a living by playing in inns and taverns.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HawkinsH
A. Moser: 'Musikalische Criminalia', Die Musik, xv (1922–3), 423–5
W.B. Squire: 'Henry Eccles's Borrowings', MT, lxiv (1923), 790 only

MARGARET LAURIE (1–3, 5), STODDARD LINCOLN (4)

Ecclesiastical mode. See CHURCH MODE.

Echancrures (Fr.). See BOUTS.

Echantilloneur (Fr.). See SAMPLER.

Echappée (Fr.: 'escaped [note]'). In part-writing, an unaccented NON-HARMONIC NOTE that intervenes in a melodic resolution but is not contained in the interval circumscribing the resolution, and which is approached in the direction opposite from that of the resolution. Usually the échappée is the third degree of the scale, and separates resolution of the second degree on to the first.

□

Echappement (Fr.). See ESCAPEMENT.

Ēchēma [apēchēma, enēchēma, epēchēma]. A melodic intonation formula in Byzantine chant, sung to nonsense words. It is intoned by the domestikos (precentor) in order to introduce the ēchos (mode) of the hymn (see ĒCHOS, §2). The formulae for the modes of the OKTŌĒCHOS are: ananeanes (ēchos protos), neanes (ēchos deuteros), aneanes (ēchos tritos), hagia (ēchos tetartos), aneanes (ēchos plagios protos), neanes (ēchos plagios deuteros), anes (ēchos barys) and nehagie (ēchos plagios tetartos).

The earliest record of the Greek meaningless syllables with their modally arranged melodies comes from the West. Aurelian of Réôme, in his Musica disciplina (?*c*840–50), identified the eight Byzantine ēchēmata, and they subsequently appeared in almost all tonaries until the 12th century. Although clearly imported from the Byzantine East, the Western formulae are different from the Eastern in two distinct ways – textual and functional: in the Carolingian tradition there are two words only for the authentic modes, noannoeane and noioeane, and one, noeagis (or noeane), for the plagal; moreover, the Latin melodies, with their terminal melismas, appear to function more as memorized typical endings than as intonation formulae.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Huglo: 'L'introduction en Occident des formules byzantines d'intonation', Studies in Eastern Chant, iii, ed. M. Velimirović (London, 1973), 81–90
T. Bailey: The Intonation Formulas of Western Chant (Toronto, 1974)

DIMITRI CONOMOS

Echerlin, Fanny [Frantiszka]. See ECKERLIN, FANNY.

Echevarría [Chavarri, Chavarría, Echavarría]. Spanish family of organ makers, active during the 17th and 18th centuries. Originally, they seem to have been from the Basque provinces, and were probably born in different towns. The more important members of the family are here discussed in an approximately chronological order.

Pedro de Echevarría (i) was working on the organs of the Cathedral of León in 1644.

A Fray José de Eizaga y Echevarría (i), a Franciscan friar from Eibar (Guipúzcoa), built the organs of Alcalá de Henares (Madrid) and of Eibar (Guipúzcoa) before 1659 and those of San Francisco of Vitoria in 1665.

José de Echevarría (ii) was a nephew of the preceding, and built the organs at Tolosa (Guipúzcoa) in 1686. He and his uncle worked together on the organs of Mondragón (Guipúzcoa) in 1677.

Fray José de Echevarría, 'dwelling in Bilbao', made an organ in the cathedral at Palencia before 1682. He and an Antonio de Echevarría started the other main organ of that cathedral in 1688. This Fray José is probably to be identified with Fray José (i); he died during the construction of the second organ, probably at the end of 1691.

Fray Domingo de Echevarría also helped in the building of the Palencia organ and made one for the Cathedral of Valladolid in 1686. In that year Ventura de Chavarri (or 'de Echavarri'), 'master organ maker', repaired the organs of the Cathedral of Burgo de Osma, in Soria.

A Pedro de Echevarría (ii) built organs in Toledo Cathedral in 1699; he is probably the same man who in the first years of the 18th century was an employee in the royal convent of the Descalzas Reales of Madrid, where he tuned and repaired organs. This latter was known as Pedro de Liberna (or Liborna) Echevarría, and he built the organ of Cuenca Cathedral at some time before 1699, and in that year he was consulted about the plans for the organ in the Cathedral of Sigüenza (Guadalajara). At that time he lived in Oñate (Guipúzcoa).

José de Echevarría, 'dwelling in Oñate', made an organ at Burgos Cathedral (1704–6). In 1708 he was invited to construct the other main organ of that cathedral, but he declined on the grounds that he was too old. This, and the fact that he lived in Oñate, suggest that he may be identified with José de Echevarría (ii).

A Pedro de Echevarría (iii) was working on the organ of the Cathedral of Salamanca in 1744. In 1769 he and José de Echevarría (iii) built one in Segovia. Both appear to have been living in Madrid, with Pedro named as 'organ maker for the king'.

Other Echevarrías are known to have been organ builders in the 18th century (Segovia Cathedral, 1700, Oviedo, etc.), but their full names are not known.

Juan Marigómez de Echevarría was 'organ maker in the royal chapel' of Madrid until his death in 1805, being succeeded by his brother José Marigómez de Echevarría. Both were nephews of a José de Echevarría, who is also described as 'organ maker for the king'. This uncle may have been José de Echevarría (iii).

Echevarrías constructed organs in several of the most important cathedrals in Spain for two centuries. Some of the organs they made are still in use.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.A. de Donostia: Música y músicos en el País Vasco (San Sebastián, 1951)

E. García Chico: 'Documentos para el estudio del arte en Castilla: maestros de hacer órganos', AnM, viii (1953), 210–29

J.A. de Donostia: 'El órgano de Tolosa (Guipúzcoa), del año 1686', AnM, x (1955), 121–36

J. Subirá: 'La música en la capilla y monasterio de las Descalzas Reales de Madrid', AnM, xii (1957), 147–66

J. de Vera: 'Organo nuevo de la catedral de Segovia', Estudios Segovianos, x (1958), 197–205

G. Bourligueux: 'Leandro Garcimartín et l'orgue des Carmes Chaussés de Madrid', Mélanges de la Casa de Velázquez, iv (1968), 349–70

J. Wyly: '17th Century Spanish Trumpets by the Echevarrías', Art of the Organ, ii/4 (1972), 7–25

L. Jambou: Evolución del órgano español: siglos XVI–XVIII (Oviedo, 1988)

L. Jambou: 'Aproximación a una geografía de la "música moderna" organística, 1660–1710', De musica hispana et aliis: miscelánea en honor al Prof. Dr. José López-Calo, ed. E. Casares and C. Villanueva (Santiago de Compostela, 1990), i, 659–68

J.A. de la Lama: E. órgano barroco español (Valladolid, 1995–7)

JOSÉ LÓPEZ-CALO

Echo. The repetition of sound after a short time interval. In addition to the applications discussed below the term is used for a signal-processing device (also known as a delay) that produces a slightly delayed playback of sounds either by a tape loop or by digital delay; see ELECTRIC GUITAR, §2.

See also ORGAN STOP.

1. Acoustics. 2. Compositional use and performing practice.

1. ACOUSTICS. Natural echoes arise from the reflection of a sound wave by a solid surface, such as a wall or cliff. For the echo to be perceived as distinct from the original sound, the extra path length travelled by the reflected sound wave must have a minimum value of around 17 metres, corresponding to a minimum time interval of 50 milliseconds between direct and reflected sounds.

The reverberant sound field in a concert hall is created by multiple reflections of sound waves. In a well-designed hall, the direct sound reaching a member of the audience is followed by a series of reflections within a time interval of around 35 milliseconds. These 'early delayed arrivals' are not heard as separate echoes; because of the 'precedence effect' they are perceived as a reinforcement of the direct sound. Subsequent reflections blend smoothly into the reverberation. A concave surface, focussing sound waves into a particular part of the hall, can give rise to an audible echo; a 'flutter echo' can arise from successive reflections between parallel walls.

See also ACOUSTICS, §I.

2. COMPOSITIONAL USE AND PERFORMING PRACTICE. Although the echo has been widely used in popular music throughout history, its application to Western art music is relatively recent and seems to have been inspired by renewed interest in classical Greek and Roman literature following the fall of the Byzantine empire in the mid-15th century. According to Ovid, the nymph Echo lost her ability of full speech while pining for Narcissus (Metamorphoses, book 3) and was able to reproduce only the last few syllables of sentences spoken to her. Ovid's powerful story (based on Euripides) had a lasting influence on vocal and instrumental music from the Renaissance to the 20th century. In the Baroque era the principle of repetition became a basic element in formal construction, dynamics and performing practice.

A survey of echo-related works composed during the 16th century shows stylistic differentiation between vocal and instrumental music. Echo settings of sacred and secular texts display a further dichotomy. Secular polyphony relies on echo poetry (especially that of Poliziano), where the repeated word at the end of each line is cleverly altered to become an answer or question related to the main text. The abundance of echo poetry in Italian frottolas and madrigals and French chansons of this period attests the widespread use of the echo effect (e.g. in music by Tromboncino, Lassus, Marenzio and Le Jeune). Polyphonic sacred works manifest a preference for the repetition of longer phrases or sentences, the repetition underscoring the importance of the text. This method led eventually to antiphonal polyphonic writing for two or more choirs (see CORI SPEZZATI). In Venice the polychoral tradition was already in place by the mid-16th century; the echo idea was further explored in the concerti and other works by Willaert and the two Gabrielis. The popularity of cori spezzati and concerted church music can be judged by the large number of multichoral pieces published outside Italy; German composers from the early Baroque (Praetorius, Schein, Schütz) wrote some of the most significant works in this form.

The instrumental echo followed a different path of development. It evolved both vertically and horizontally, creating such diverse features as melodic sequences in terraced dynamics, echoing phrases between solo instruments in contrasting registers, with the frequent addition of contrasting timbres, and many varieties of the concertato structure with their characteristic tutti–solo exchanges. References to the echo in instrumental titles became common after 1600: such titles are attached to keyboard pieces, trio sonatas, concertos and symphonies by composers including Sweelinck, Marini, William Lawes, Corelli, Vivaldi, Handel, J.S. Bach, J.C. Bach and Carl Stamitz. G.B. Riccio's Canzon La Pichi, in ecco con il tremolo for solo violin and trombone (Otto ordini di letanie della Madonna, Venice, 1619[6]) is an early 17th-century example. The French Baroque harpsichord school introduced the petite reprise, an echo repetition of a short phrase at the end of a binary (often dance) movement; composers who used the technique included Chambonnières, D'Anglebert, François Couperin and Rameau. This mannerism was imitated by many non-French composers in French-style keyboard pieces, especially suites. During the late 18th century composers including Haydn and Mozart used triple or quadruple echoing groups to create a playful, witty mood (e.g. in Mozart's Notturno K286/289*a*).

It was in music composed for the stage, however, that the echo technique left its most significant mark. Dramatic productions of the late 16th and early 17th centuries (especially the intermedi) favoured pastoral subjects which portrayed characters and scenes of rural life. But according to Sternfeld (1993, p.76) > these shepherds and nymphs were not humble, lowly folk ... they broke into song with an ease that assumed music to be one of their customary skills. It is these references to songs and musical instruments that form a link between various forms of pastoral literature ... and the Renaissance, and hence establish the pastoral as one of the most important ancestors, if not the ancestor, of opera.

From the beginning, stage pastorals contained vocal and instrumental echo effects (see PASTORAL, §§3–5). In Italy pastoral scenes, with their traditional stories of Pan, Syrinx and various nymphs, were grafted on to the developing dramma per musica; thus the echo became an integral part of the rapidly developing opera form. At the same time, the instruments associated with early pastorales (recorders, piffari and drone basses) were transferred to opera, where their use in echo passages became a standard practice. By the mid-17th century the pastorale (with its echo) had reached France, where it became the prototype for the emerging opera, opéra-ballet and related stage works. Flutes, oboes and musettes took the place of the piffari and drone basses after 1670; their connection with echo scenes lasted to the end of the ancien régime. Echo scenes were used in French opera by Lully, Campra, Destouches, Rameau and Gluck. Echo scenes can be found in the semi-operas and plays with incidental music of the English Restoration period. There are two distinct types: the first conforms to the continental pastorale tradition (Locke, Banister, later Handel), the second – non-pastoral in nature – calls attention to dramatic events on or off stage (Purcell).

While German operas and Singspiele include pastoral and echo settings and subjects, the most inventive echo writing occurs in instrumental music and in the newly evolving sacred and secular vocal forms of the 18th century. It ranges from the natural echo registration of multi-keyboard instruments such as the organ through the addition of special woodwind, often identified with rustic surroundings, in cantatas and oratorios (oboe d'amore, oboe da caccia) to Bach's fiauti d'echo of the Fourth Brandenburg Concerto, probably recorders (see ECHO FLUTE).

Echo left an indelible impression on late Renaissance and Baroque performance traditions. Solutions to the placement and proper subdivision of polychoral vocal and instrumental ensembles involved – among other things – the building of raised pulpits or balconies at various locations inside a church or the creation of spatial separation for the cori spezzati on several levels. To emphasize dynamic and textural contrasts, Lully established two distinct ensembles within his opera orchestra. The petit choeur (the concertato group employing the best players) accompanied the recitatives and airs and echoed the grand choeur in special scenes. The grand choeur performed the overtures, dances, entrées and orchestral interludes and participated in the choral accompaniment. This sophisticated extension of the echo technique, which embraces dynamics, ensemble size, timbre and register changes, was not indicated in manuscript or published scores. References to the practice (apart from 18th-century dictionaries of music) are found solely in contemporary partbooks. Thus the dynamic signs given in the scores often carried double meanings: f (fort) meant 'loud', thus signalling the entrance of the grand choeur, while p (doux), as well as 'soft', could also be interpreted as a call for the petit choeur. Subsequent generations of French opera composers maintained Lully's principle of orchestral subdivision into the 18th century, as demonstrated in extant partbooks of works by Marais, Campra, Destouches and Rameau.

Changes in musical style after 1800, and the growing attention paid to dynamic marks and details of orchestration, seem to have diminished the use of echo effects. Nevertheless, there are a few areas where some aspects of the custom are still detectable. In symphonic music echo effects occur in programmatic music in country scenes where the sounds of nature and mysterious 'night' noises are suggested (Beethoven, Berlioz, Mahler, Richard Strauss and Orff). Operas use echoes in two ways: in settings recalling the nymph Echo (Ariadne auf Naxos) or in scenes which portray magical or supernatural events (Der Freischütz, Der fliegende Holländer and Hänsel und Gretel).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (H. Engel); MGG2 (W. Braun)

G. Wissowa, ed.: Pauly's Real-Encyclopädie der classischen Altertumwissenschaft (Stuttgart and Munich, 1893)

W.W. Greg: Pastoral Poetry and Pastoral Drama (London, 1906)

T. Kroyer: 'Dialog und Echo in der alten Chormusik', JbMP 1909, 13–32

T. Dart: 'Bach's fiauti d'echo', ML, xli (1960), 331–41

K. Ziegler, ed.: Der kleine Pauly (Munich, 1963/R)

H.C. Wolff: 'Ovids Metamorphosen und die frühe Oper', Quadrivium, xii/2 (1971), 89–107

F. Sternfeld: 'Aspects of Echo Music in the Renaissance', Studi musicali, ix (1980), 45–57

F. Sternfeld: 'Repetition and Echo in Renaissance Poetry and Music', English Renaissance Studies Presented to Dame Helen Gardner, ed. J. Carey (Oxford, 1980), 33–43

S. Leopold: 'Echotechniquen bei H. Schütz und seinen italienischen Zeitgenossen', Alte Musik als ästhetische Gegenwart: Bach, Händel, Schütz: Stuttgart 1985, i, 86–94

M. Térey-Smith: 'Orchestral Practice in the Paris Opera (1690–1764), and the Spread of French Influence in Europe', SMH, xxxi (1989), 81–159

D. Lasocki: 'Paisible's Echo Flute, Bononcini's flauti eco and Bach's fiauti d'echo', GSJ, xlv (1992), 59–66
F. Sternfeld: The Birth of Opera (Oxford, 1993) [esp. chap.7, 'Repetition and Echo in Poetry and Music', 197–225]

MURRAY CAMPBELL (1), MARY TÉREY-SMITH (2)

Echo flute (Fr. flûte d'echo; It. fiauto d'echo, flauto echo). A term, encountered in several late 17th- and early 18th-century sources, whose meaning remains in doubt. On one occasion it apparently signified treble recorders: an aria from Bononcini's Il fiore delle eroine (1704) is scored for '2 flauti' and '2 flauti eco'; the four instruments have an identical range (a″–d‴), and the flauti eco imitate the phrase endings of the flauti, perhaps from offstage. However, Etienne Loulié mentioned 'deux flutes d'echo', one loud, one soft, in his Elements ou principes de musique (1696), and James Paisible played 'the echo flute', and once 'the small echo flute', in London concerts between 1713 and 1719. Perhaps these references are to two recorders tied together. In 1668 the woodwind maker Samuel Drumbleby had shown Samuel Pepys how to do this with flageolets; and Sir John Hawkins reported that John Banister (ii), a colleague of Paisible's, 'was famous for playing on two flutes [recorders] at once'. Pairs of recorders with differing tonal qualities have survived (by Peter Bressan, London, early 18th century, private collection, Tokyo; and Johann Heitz, Berlin, early 18th century, Grassi-Museum, Leipzig; Münchener Stadtmuseum), and a similar pair (anonymous, Saxon, late 18th century, Grassi-Musuem) is even joined together with a brass bridge. On the title page of his Fourth Brandenburg Concerto (1721), Bach calls for two 'fiauti d'echo'. The parts have a range of f′–g‴, generally avoiding f♯‴ (significantly, a difficult note to obtain on contemporaneous treble recorders). They could have been intended for joined pairs of recorders, but musically there seems no reason for anything but treble recorders, the 'f' and 'p' markings being indications for tutti and solo passages rather than dynamics resulting in a marked echo effect.

DAVID LASOCKI

Echo organ. (1) In organs of the Baroque period, a small short-compass division within the main organ, usually enclosed in a box which often had a lid or shutter that was controlled by the player. In France and England it contained mildly-voiced principals, flutes, reeds and perhaps a Cornet, and usually had its own keyboard; in these countries it eventually evolved into the Swell division (Fr. Récit expressif). In Iberia, Italy and South-Central Germany the Echo box often contained only one or two stops, playable from one of the main manuals. Echos were rarely found in northern European organs; the 'Echo' effects found in works of Sweelinck and others are simply alternations between two manuals of contrasting registration. In some single-manual Spanish organs, knee-levers facilitated echo effects by allowing quick changes between unenclosed and enclosed stops of the same tone-colour.

(2) In organs built with electrically-controlled action from the late 19th century onwards, a full compass expressive division of soft strings, flutes and usually a reed, sometimes with its own pedal stops, and located in a chamber in a part of the building remote from the rest of the organ. It sometimes had its own keyboard, but could also be a 'floating' division playable from any keyboard. It should not be confused with the older type in either tone-colour or usage.

BARBARA OWEN

Ēchos (Gk.: 'sound'). A technical term in Byzantine chant, usually translated 'mode' or 'modality'.

1. Meaning. 2. Intonation formulae. 3. Tonality. 4. Medieval theory. 5. Ēchos and centonization. 6. Origin of the term.

1. Meaning. There is considerable difference between the Eastern and Western European understanding of modality. In the West, the term 'mode' most often means a scale or 'octave species'; but an ēchos depends rather on a 'mood', which is in turn dependent on the types of melody found in that ēchos. When systematized by theorists, these melody-types do produce different 'octave species' or scales; this is of secondary significance, however, compared to the melodies themselves. An ēchos in fact consists primarily of a repertory of melodic formulae together with some melodic motifs and even melody-types.

These categories overlap at times: a melody-type may be a melodic formula, but a melodic formula may be only part of a melody-type. The motif is the smallest of these units and occurs as a subdivision of the larger structural elements, the formula and the melody-type, the latter being the largest of the three. Some of these elements may appear exclusively in a single ēchos; others may be found in more than one ēchos. Formulae which are found in more than one ēchos are termed 'wandering' melodic elements and are distinguished from one another by slight inflections or differences in their melodic intervals, even though the basic melodic outline remains the same. In general, a hymn composed in a particular ēchos will contain a set of melodic elements (motifs, formulae or melody-types) peculiar to that ēchos; and these structural devices will be found in other hymns composed in the same ēchos.

The 'melodic formula' is not a rigid pattern of specified length consisting of a fixed number of notes. Although some parts of it will remain stable, the rest is subject to transformation, generally by contraction or expansion. Formulae may be expanded either by the repetition of a single pitch or by the insertion of notes or motifs at various points.

According to their function, the melodic structural elements of Byzantine chant may be classified as cadential formulae, initial formulae and transitional formulae. Cadential formulae appear primarily at the end of hymns, verses or even briefer melodic segments. Initial formulae, with distinct melodic patterns, are fewer in number than the previous category. Transitional formulae are often used within a hymn to lead from one type of formula to another; they never appear independently, and some patterns are quite brief – motifs rather than formulae. While initial formulae are used only for the opening parts of a hymn or a verse, cadential formulae may appear not only at the endings but also in the opening sections of a segment of a hymn.

2. Intonation formulae. A hymn in any given ēchos is preceded by an Ēchēma (intonation formula). This indicates the ēchos and was probably sung by the precentor before the chanting by the choir. Intonations are accompanied by syllables sung to their melodies (such as ananeanes, nehagie and so on; these became known in the West as the 'noeane' formulae). The Byzantine intonation formulae give only the basic melodic framework of the particular ēchos. All medieval Byzantine music manuscripts contain indications of the ēchoi, usually by means of the martyria, a modal signature that defines the mode and provides the final note of the ēchēma. In a few instances the intonation formula is given in full. These signatures at the beginning of each hymn were essential, since the Byzantine neumatic notation is intervallic, designating a note only in relationship to the preceding pitch.

Many compositions also contain internal intonation signs. These 'medial signatures' at times appear to designate the pitch that the chanter should have reached, thus serving as a check for correct performance; but in some melodies they indicate transposition into a new mode. For modulation proper, there was a special system of signs known as phthorai; these indicated chromatic changes which gave to the melody the flavour of a different ēchos.

3. Tonality. Most medieval Byzantine melodies were probably composed and sung in a diatonic tonal system. No surviving theoretical treatise provides sufficient detail to warrant the assumption that the chromatic and enharmonic tetrachords of the ancient Greeks were in use in Byzantium. Discussion of them in the few surviving treatises appears to be a restatement of the ideas of antiquity rather than a reflection of contemporary musical practice. The inference about the basically diatonic tonal system of Byzantine music derives from an analysis of theoretical treatises and the melodies themselves.

4. Medieval theory. The eight ēchoi are frequently discussed in medieval treatises, most of which, however, are ambiguous in their wording. For example, when discussing the theoretical starting notes for each ēchos, most texts state that the starting note of the ēchos deuteros (2nd mode) is 'one step above that of the ēchos prōtos' (1st mode), but no text reveals whether that step is a whole tone or semitone. Similarly, the starting note of the ēchos tritos (3rd mode) is described equivocally as being 'one step above that for the deuteros'. It is clear, however, that the sequence of these initial notes ultimately results in a gamut of an octave. Consequently, this octave may be presumed to consist of two disjunct tetrachords (although for one part of the repertory a system of conjunct tetrachords also appears possible). In instances of the transposition of an ēchos, a melodic segment would require the use of sharps or flats.

An ēchos frequently begins on the pitch that may be considered to be its 'tonic', but the opening of a melody depends on the intonation formula and the notation that follows; most ēchoi have one or two distinct pitches on which the melodies in that ēchos may end. For instance, melodies in the ēchos prōtos (1st mode) may end either on D or A. There are some 'ruling notes' in each ēchos that are more prominent than the other pitches in a hymn.

The listing of ēchoi in treatises raises a curious problem with regard to the terminology describing ascent and descent. Didactic treatises state that one moves in stepwise ascent from the initial note of the prōtos to that of the deuteros, and then to that of the tritos and the tetartos (1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th modes). If one continues to ascend, one again touches upon the initial notes of these same modes, in the same sequence. If one proceeds downwards, however, starting from the theoretical initial note of the prōtos, the next step in the descent reaches the initial note of the plagios tetartos (4th plagal mode); the next note in the descent is described as the starting tone of the ēchos barys (the 3rd plagal mode; the term plagios tritos is never found in Byzantine treatises, which use the designation barys, that is, 'low' mode). In most early Byzantine texts there is no special term for the 'authentic' modes; in a few later texts the term kyrioi (i.e. 'main' or perhaps 'authentic') appears. It is unclear whether the appearance of this term represents an original Greek usage or a translation into Greek of concepts already widespread in the Latin West. The term plagios (plagal) is found in all surviving music manuscripts.

Besides the four 'main' and the corresponding 'plagal' ēchoi, the theoretical treatises also mention a category of mesos ēchos (?'mediant mode'); in which the starting notes appear to have been a 3rd higher than the theoretical initial notes of an ēchos. Again, no distinction is made between the major or minor 3rd. There are also references to mode-types called para-mesos and parakyrios, both of which require further investigation.

5. Ēchos and centonization. Analytical studies suggest that the process by which a hymn was composed in an ēchos was similar to the principle of 'centonization' in Roman chant. The degree of similarity, however, varies from one type of chant to another. It has also been suggested that the concept of ēchos strongly resembles the Arabic maqām in its use of formulaic patterns. Such points need further study before the formulation of principles common to both musical cultures can be attempted.

6. Origin of the term. The use of the term ēchos to describe the melodic framework within which a hymn is to be performed first appears in the text of GB-Mr Papyrus 466 from the 7th century ce. Some liturgical hymns are attributed to poets from earlier centuries and also carry the designations of the ēchoi in which they are to be performed in the services. The use of the term in manuscripts is probably an addition, dating from the period, after the 7th century, in which the system of eight modes (see Oktōēchos) was formulated. The Greeks traditionally ascribe the system of the oktōēchos to John Damascene (active in the first half of the 8th century); this is probably a legend similar to that attributing to Pope Gregory the Great the composition of the so-called Gregorian chant. Avid defenders of orthodoxy refer to the main body of music in the Greek Orthodox Church as Damascenian melodies, although most of the repertory is known to have been composed at a later date.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.J.W. Tillyard: 'The Modes in Byzantine Music', Annual of the British School at Athens, xxii (1916–18), 133–56

H.J.W. Tillyard: 'Signatures and Cadences of the Byzantine Modes', ibid., xxvi (1923–5), 78–87

O. Strunk: 'The Tonal System of Byzantine Music', MQ, xxviii (1942), 190–204

O. Strunk: 'Intonations and Signatures of the Byzantine Modes', MQ, xxxi (1945), 339–55

H.J.W. Tillyard: 'The Byzantine Modes in the Twelfth Century', Annual of the British School at Athens, xlviii (1953), 182–90

L. Richter: 'Antike Überlieferungen in der byzantinischen Musiktheorie', DJbM, vi (1962), 75–115

J. Raasted: Intonation Formulas and Modal Signatures in Byzantine Musical Manuscripts, MMB, Subsidia, vii (1966)

C. Thodberg: Der Byzantinische Alleluiarionzyklus, MMB, Subsidia, viii (1966), esp. chaps. 18, 20

H. Husmann: 'Modulation und Transposition in den bi- und trimodalen Stichera', AMw, xxvii (1970), 1–22
H. Husmann: 'Modalitätsprobleme des psaltischen Stils', AMw, xxviii (1971), 44–72
M. Huglo: 'Comparaison de la terminologie modale en Orient et en Occident', IMSCR XI: Copenhagen 1972, 758–61
H. Husmann: 'Echos und Makam nach der Handschrift Leningrad Öffentliche Bibliothek, gr. 127', AMw, xxxvi (1979), 237–53
H. Husmann: 'Zur Harmonik des griechischen Volksliedes', AcM, liii (1981), 33–52
G. Amargianakēs: 'Ho archaioellēnikos nomos, ho byzantinos ēchos kai hē indikē raga' [The Ancient Greek musical nomos, the Byzantine ēchos and the Indian rāga], Mousikologia, i/2 (1985), 72–82
E. Moutsopoulos: 'The "Characteristic Intervals" of the Byzantine Echoi and the Mystery of the "Fourth Echos"', Musica antiqua VIII: Bydgoszcz 1988, 697–702
P. Jeffrey: 'The Earliest Evidence of the Eight Modes: the Oktoechos of Jerusalem', Three Worlds of Medieval Chant: Comparative Studies in Greek, Latin and Slavonic Liturgical Music for Kenneth Levy, ed. P. Jeffrey (forthcoming)

MILOŠ VELIMIROVIĆ

Eck. German family of musicians. They were probably of Bohemian origin.

(1) Georg Eck (fl 1765–82). Horn player. From 1765, according to the Palatine electoral almanac, he was a horn player in the Mannheim orchestra. The salary list of 1778 names him as one of the 'accompanying persons' when the electoral court moved to Munich. He appeared in the orchestra list of the Munich court calendar for the last time in 1782. W.A. Mozart mentioned him several times in his letters of 1780.

(2) Friedrich Johann (Gerhard) Eck (b Schwetzingen, 24 May 1767; d ? France, 22 Feb 1838). Violinist and composer, son of (1) Georg Eck. He was already receiving violin lessons from Christian Danner at the age of seven and from 1778 he served as a supernumerary violinist in the Mannheim orchestra; on 18 September he played in a concert in Frankfurt with G.J. Vogler. In the same year he went with most of the other court musicians to Munich, where he studied composition with Peter Winter. He performed publicly in Vienna (1780), Paris (1789) and with his brother during a visit to Leipzig and Prague (1799). In Munich he served as violinist and, from 1790, as 'Director of Music of the small court theatre'. In 1798 he succeeded Christian Cannabich as 'Direktor der Instrumental Musik', with a salary of 1500 florins. On 21 May 1800 Eck was dismissed and gave up his musical career, probably because of his elopement with a countess from Munich and their marriage in Switzerland. According to Spohr, the couple lived first in Paris, and finally near Nancy.

As a violinist, Eck belonged to the last generation of Mannheim violin virtuosos such as Wilhelm Cramer and Ferdinand Fränzl. J.F. Reichardt, who heard him in Berlin in 1791, praised his beautiful tone and tasteful performance, and wrote that apart from Salomon in London no violinist had ever given him such pleasure (Musikalische Monatsschrift, 1792). The Allgemeine musikalische Zeitung (v, 1802–3) acclaimed his unfailing effect on the public. He published five violin concertos in Offenbach (the last published in 1804) and a Première concertante for two violins and orchestra in Leipzig (op.8, 1801). His Concertante for two violins (with which Joachim made his début aged eight in 1839) was probably written to be played with his younger brother and is of exceptional technical difficulty. The other violin concertos are similar in style to those of Pierre Rode, Rodolphe Kreutzer and Fränzl. Eck is also believed to have composed the violin concerto (formerly K268) sometimes ascribed to Mozart (see Lebermann). According to Werden, Mozart wrote a concerto for him.

(3) Franz Eck (b Mannheim, 1774; d ? Strasbourg, 1804/1809). Violinist, brother of (2) Friedrich Johann Eck. The salary lists of 1789 (when he was paid 900 florins) and 1790 show him among the violinists of the Munich orchestra, but his name appeared in the court calendar only from 1791 to 1800. He was dismissed with his brother in 1800 and began a career as a travelling virtuoso. He performed in Prague (1791) and Berlin (1800). At the beginning of 1802 the young Spohr became his pupil and they travelled together round Germany (1802) and then to St Petersburg (1803), where Eck rapidly became the centre of a musical circle and was appointed solo virtuoso to the court orchestra at a salary of 3500 roubles. An illness that had already shown itself in Germany developed into madness in Russia, so the tsar had him taken to his brother in Nancy. He probably died in the Strasbourg Asylum. His violin playing was characterized by Spohr as 'controlled and powerful, yet always pleasing', with an exceptional technique for ornamentation, rich in nuance and having unsurpassed precision and 'irresistible charm'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; GerberNL; LipowskyB
Musikalische Real-Zeitung (17 Nov 1790)
'Nachricht von Vorzüflichen Virtuosen, i: Herr Eck', Musikalisches Wochenblatt, i (1791–2), 14 only J.F. Reichardt: 'Fortsetzung der Berichtigungen und Zusätze zum Gerberschen Lexikon der Tonkünstler U.S.W.', Musikalische Monathsschrift, 6 nos. (July-Dec 1792), 66 only, repr. in Studien für Tonkünstler und Musikfreunde (Berlin, 1793/R), ii, 66 only
'Ueber den Zustand der Musk in München', AMZ, v (1802–3), 275–9
A. Werden and J. Werden: Musikalisches Taschenbuch: auf das Jahr 1803, 168–9
K. Israel: Frankfurter concert-chronik von 1713–1780 (Frankfurt, 1876), 60
A. Moser: Geschichte des Violinspiels (Berlin, 1923, rev., enlarged 2/1966–7)
L. Spohr: Lebenserinnerungen, ed. F. Göthel (Tutzing, 1968)
W. Lebermann: 'Mozart - Ecke - André: ein Beitrag zu KV 268(356b) (C. 14.04)', Mf, xxxi (1978), 452–65
R. Münster: 'Ich bin hier sehr beliebt': Mozart und das kurfürstliche Bayern (Tutzing, 1993) [collected writings]

ROLAND WÜRTZ/ROBERT MÜNSTER

Eckard [Eckardt, Eckart], Johann Gottfried (b Augsburg, 21 Jan 1735; d Paris, 24 July 1809). German pianist and composer, active in France. In his youth he became a professional copper engraver and acquired his musical training in his leisure time, mainly from C.P.E. Bach's Versuch and its six 'Probesonaten'. In 1758 the piano and organ manufacturer Johann Andreas Stein took him to Paris, where he lived for the rest of his life. At first he supported himself by painting miniatures, a craft in which he apparently possessed considerable skill. He practised the piano in his free time and quickly developed a great facility. Many successful concerts soon gained him fame and numerous students.

Leopold Mozart became acquainted with Eckard during his visit to Paris in the winter of 1763–4, and expressed high regard for him. Grimm, in his Correspondance littéraire, called Eckard 'the strongest' of all Parisian composers, stating that 'he has genius, the most beautiful ideas, with a manner of playing full of feeling and an extraordinary lightness'. That this was not merely a momentary captivation of the Parisian musical circles is attested by J.-B. de La Borde, who declared in 1780 that Eckard's execution at the keyboard was 'the most brilliant and pleasing' and that 'he excels particularly at preluding for entire hours making the time pass as moments for those who listen to him'. Burney gave further testimony to the high regard felt for him by his contemporaries:

> There are many great German musicians dispersed throughout Europe, whose merit is little known in England, or even in their native land; among these is Eckard, who has been fifty years at Paris. This musician has published but little; yet by what has appeared, it is manifest that he is a man of genius and a great master of his instrument.

On his death the Mercure de France remarked that he was 'the most celebrated harpsichordist of Europe'.

Eckard has two claims to historical significance: he was the first composer in Paris to conceive keyboard sonatas for the piano, and he foresaw the great vogue the piano would enjoy several years before this instrument was accepted in the salons and concert halls of Paris. Unfortunately only three works by him were published: the six sonatas op.1 (1763), two sonatas op.2 (1764) and a set of variations (1764) on the 'Menuet d'Exaudet'. (All these works are edited by E. Reeser in J.G. Eckard: Oeuvres complètes, Amsterdam and Kassel, 1956; the fugues and concertos referred to by Schubart are not extant.) Although the title-page of op.1 specifies only the harpsichord, Eckard's preface extends the performance of the work to the piano; and his meticulous indication of dynamic shadings (e.g. no.6, second movement), a practice previously unknown in this period, clearly shows his preference for the latter instrument. Both the piano and harpsichord are specified on the title-page of his op.2, and the music reveals an even greater consideration for the idiomatic characteristics of the new instrument.

Eckard's sonatas follow no set pattern with regard to formal organization: half are in three movements, two consist of only two movements, and two others are cast in a rather extended single movement (op.1 nos.4–5). Unlike the sonatas of Eckard's émigré compatriots in Paris, none calls for accompanying instruments to heighten expression. The texture is enlivened at times by the contrapuntal involvement of the left hand; and in an effort to make the accompaniment of greater musical significance, Eckard did not restrict himself to the Alberti bass pattern, but used it rather as one of several devices. Although his thematic material is not particularly distinguishable from that of his contemporaries, Eckard's ability to develop it anticipates the mature works of Haydn and Mozart (e.g. op.1 no.2, first movement). His style shows the influence of C.P.E. Bach (op.1 no.3, first movement) and is similar to that of his fellow expatriate Johann Schobert (cf the first movements of Eckard's op.1 no.3 and Schobert's op.14 no.3). He also exerted a considerable influence on the young Mozart, who admired his works and adopted some of their traits in his keyboard music of 1762–4 (Mozart's accompanied sonata K6 is derivative of the first and third movements of Eckard's op.1 no.1). Furthermore, in 1767 Mozart transcribed one of Eckard's one-movement sonatas (op.1 no.4) as the slow movement of his Piano Concerto K40.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BurneyH; La BordeE; La LaurencieEF; NewmanSCE

P. von Stetten: Kunst-, Gewerb- und Handwerks-Geschichte der Reichs-Stadt (Augsburg, 1779–88)

C.F.D. Schubart: Ideen zu einer Ästhetik der Tonkunst (Vienna, 1806/R)

Mercure de France (Sept 1809), 173

F.M. Grimm: Correspondance littéraire, philosophique, et critique (Paris, 1812–14); complete version, ed. M. Tourneux (Paris, 1877–82/R)

A. Méreaux: Les clavecinistes de 1637 à 1790 (Paris, 1864–7/R)

T. de Wyzewa and G. de Saint-Foix: W.-A. Mozart: sa vie musicale et son oeuvre (Paris, 1912–46/R)

H.T. David: Johann Schobert als Sonatenkomponist (Borna, 1928)

E. Hertz: Johann Andreas Stein (Würzburg and Wolfenbüttel, 1937)

E. Reeser: De klaviersonate met vioolbegeleiding in het Parijsche muziekleven ten tijde van Mozart (Rotterdam, 1939)

E. Reeser: 'Johann Gottfried Eckard, 1735–1809', TVNM, xvii/2 (1949), 89–125

W.A. Bauer, O.E. Deutsch and J. Eibl, eds.: Mozart: Briefe und Aufzeichnungen (Kassel, 1962–75)

H.C. Turrentine: Johann Schobert and French Clavier Music from 1700 to the Revolution (diss., U. of Iowa, 1962)

E. Reeser: Ein Augsburger Musiker in Paris: Johann Gottfried Eckard (1735–1809) (Augsburg, 1984)

D.R. Fuller: 'A New French Harpsichord Source of the Mid-18th Century with an Eckard Connection', EMc, xxi (1993), 423–7

HERBERT C. TURRENTINE

Eckardt, Hans (b Magdeburg, 29 Oct 1905; d Berlin, 26 Feb 1969). German musicologist. He studied musicology (1925–32) at Berlin, Paris and Heidelberg, where he took the doctorate in 1932 with a dissertation on French Romantic attitudes to music. While teaching German at the Kyushu High School and Imperial University, Fukuoka (1932–5), he continued his earlier research on Japanese medieval music, and after studying at Tokyo University (1936–7) became academic director of the Japanese-German Cultural History Research Institute (1938) and lecturer at St Thomas's Philosophical College (1946–7) in Kyoto.

On his return to Germany after the war he supported himself as a freelance writer. In 1954 he completed his Habilitation with a work on the Kokonchomonshū at the Freie Universität, Berlin, where he became lecturer, supernumerary professor (1958) and professor of Japanese (1964) and devoted his energies to building up a department of East Asian studies. Concurrently he directed the Japanese section of the International Institute for Comparative Musical Research and Documentation in Berlin. Eckardt's thorough and comprehensive knowledge of Chinese and Japanese sources and his sympathy with their milieu enabled him both to give illuminating accounts of Japanese classical music and to gauge the impact of modern European music on East Asian culture. In his teaching of modern East Asian history he contributed to a reorientation of East Asian studies in Germany.

WRITINGS

'Zum Verständnis der japanischen Musik', Yamato, i/2 (1929)

'Studie über Nichiren', Yamato, ii/4 (1930)

Die Musikanschauung der französischen Romantik (diss., U. of Heidelberg, 1932; Kassel, 1935)

'Wesenzüge der japanischen Musik', Nachrichten der deutschen Gesellschaft für Natur- und Völkerkunde Ostasiens, no.43 (1937), 20–22

'Zur Frage der Netori', Monumenta nipponica, i/1 (1938), 269–72; Jap. trans. in Tōyō ongaku kenkyū, ii (1938), 48–50

'Die Ei und Saezuri: verschollene melismatische Gesang-Formen im japanischen Tanz', GfMKB: Lüneburg 1950, 170–80

'Das Nô: vom lyrischen Chordrama der Japaner', Musica, vi (1952), 12–16

'Ryôwô', Sinologica, iii (1952), 110–28

'Somakusa', Sinologica, iii (1953), 174–89

Das Kokonchomonshû des Tachibana Narisue als musikgeschichtliche Quelle (Habilitationsschrift, Freie Universität, Berlin, 1954; Wiesbaden, 1956)
'Japanische Musik', MGG1
'Konron: Reste kontinentaler Mythologie in der japanischen Bugaku', Oriens extremus, vii/1 (1960), 17–30
'Zur Frage und Bedeutung der Rangô', Festschrift Heinrich Besseler, ed. E. Klemm (Leipzig, 1961), 35–42
'Über die Ausbreitung abendländischer Musik in Japan', Musikalische Zeitfragen, x (1962), 105–11

RUTH SMITH

Eckel, Matthias (fl early 16th century). German composer. A few isolated facts are known of his life: in 1516 he was associated with the Dresden ducal court as Rentschreiber; he was paid for a motet on '39. cap. Ecclesiastici' by the Leipzig city council; notations in a Budapest manuscript (H-BA 22) indicate the dates of three of his compositions as 1518, 1529 and 1537, the last bearing a dedication to Duke Henry of Saxony which suggests that Eckel was active in the duke's court in Freiberg. According to Albrecht, the piece was probably written for a visit to the duke by the German humanist and reformer Georg Spalatin.

He is represented in several contemporary published anthologies of German polyphonic song (by Schoeffer and Apiarius, Hans Ott, Georg Forster) as well as in various manuscript collections. However, his chief contribution as a composer was to the music of the Reformed Church, particularly as seen in the publications of Georg Rhau (Selectae harmoniae, 1538; Symphoniae iucundae, 1538; Sacrorum hymnorum liber primus, 1542; Bicinia, 1545) and manuscripts which were devoted primarily to use in this church. The quality of his works, which show considerable Franco-Flemish influence, would place him high among his contemporaries: pervading imitation is handled with a high degree of vitality; the tendency to write in simple chordal counterpoint with accented declamation, however, is a late feature of the second generation of German polyphonists.

WORKS

SACRED

Kyrie angelorum, inc., 4vv, D-Z 81, 2
Te Deum, 2vv, 1545[6]
Motets: Conscendit jubilans, inc., 4vv, D–Z; Dum fabricator mundi, inc., 4vv, Z 73; Ego sicut vitis fructificavi, inc., 4vv, Z 73; Immunem semper, inc. 4vv, Z 81; Gaudent in celis, inc., 4vv, Z 81; In monte Olivarum, inc., 4vv, Z 81; Inter natos mulierum, 4vv, Rp 211–15; Laude digna angelorum sanctorum, inc., 4vv, Z 81; O admirabile precium, 4vv, 1538[1]; Salve festa dies, 2vv, 1549[16]; Trinitas in unitate veneranda, 4vv, 1545[6]; Venite fili, audite me, inc., 4vv, Z 81
Psalms: Beati omnes, 5vv, 1569[1]; Cantabo Domino, 5vv, 1537[1], 1568[7]; Convertere nos, Domine, 4vv, 1538[8], ed. H. Albrecht: Georg Rhau: Symphoniae iucundae atque adeo breves quatuor vocum (Kassel, 1959); Deus in nomine tuo, 4vv, 1537[1]; Ecce nunc benedicite, 6vv, 1553[6]; Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, 16vv, D-GM 49–50
Hymn: Praesta hoc genitor, 4vv, 1542[12], ed. in EDM, 1st ser., xxi (1942/R)
Miscellaneous sacred works in H-Bn Bártfa 22: Kyrie and Gloria, 4vv; 'Summum' Sanctus and Agnus Dei, 4vv; Accessit ad pedes, 4vv; Antequam nascerer, novisti me, 4vv; A solus ortus cardine, 5vv; Beatus [auctor] saeculi, 5vv; Benedictus es, 5vv; Caeli enarrant, 4vv; Christe, qui lux es, 4vv; Christe, qui lux es, 5vv; Contere, Domine, fortitudinem, 4vv; Da pacem, Domine, 5vv; Dominus tamquam ovis, 6vv; Et devotis, 4vv; Exclamavit, 4vv; Ioannes apostolus et evangelista, 5vv; Lumen ad revelationem, 4vv; Mihi autem nimis honorati sunt, 5vv; Non moriar sed vivam, 5vv; Pacem relinquo vobis, 7vv; Prosa: Pater filius, 4vv; Spes nostra, salus nostra, 4vv; Surrexit Dominus de sepulcro, 5vv; Veni, Sancte Spiritus: Veni, pater pauperum, 4vv; Veni Sancte Spiritus, 5vv; Vivo ego, dicit Dominus, 5vv

SECULAR

Edition: Hans Ott: 115 guter neuer Liedlein, ed. R. Eitner, PGfM, i–iii (1873–6) [E]

Ach Junckfraw jr seit wol gemut, 5vv, E; Gesell, wis Urlaub, 4vv, G xx, 28; Ich armer Mann, was hab ich than, 6vv, E; Merck auff dein schantz, 4vv, 1536[8]; Mein Esel ist ein lange frist gantz, 4vv, E; O lieber Hans versorg dein gans, 4vv, E; Wann ich betracht, 4vv, 1536[8]; Wer bülen wil, 4vv, 1536[8]; Was unfals quell in nöten tut, 4vv, D-Rp A.R.940–41
1 work in tablature, 1544[23]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Heiske: Preface to Georg Forster: ein Auszug guter alter und newer teutscher Liedlein, EDM, 1st ser., xx (1942/R)
P. Mohr: Die Handschrift B 211–215 der Proske-Bibliothek zu Regensburg (Kassel, 1955)
H. Albrecht: Preface to Georg Rhau: Symphoniae iucundae atque adeo breves quatuor vocum (Kassel, 1959)
V.H. Mattfeld: Georg Rhaw's Publications for Vespers (Brooklyn, NY, 1966)
W. Steude: Untersuchungen zur mitteldeutschen Musiküberlieferung und Musikpflege im 16. Jahrhundert (Leipzig, 1978)
W. Steude: Die Musiksammelhandschriften des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts in der Sächsischen Landesbibliothek zu Dresden (Wilhelmshaven, 1974)
W. Herrmann: Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Dresdner Hofmusik zwischen 1464 und 1541 (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1987)

VICTOR H. MATTFELD

Eckelt [Eckoldt], Johann Valentin (b Werningshausen, Erfurt, bap. 8 May 1673; d Sondershausen, 18 Dec 1732). German organist, composer and theorist. Although orphaned at the age of nine, Eckelt had a good grammar school education in Gotha and Erfurt. In the latter place he studied briefly with Johann Pachelbel. He became organist of the Liebfrauenkirche in Wernigerode in 1697. Andreas Werckmeister, who had connections with the town, may also have influenced his development. In 1701 or 1703 he moved to the Holy Trinity Church in Sondershausen and remained there until shortly before his death. Johann Friedrich Eckelt succeeded his father as Stadtorganist in 1732. One of his successors at Sondershausen was the court organist and lexicographer Ernst Ludwig Gerber, who subsequently acquired Eckelt's library.

In the monograph about Eckelt, Gerber cited three theoretical works which later disappeared: Experimenta musicae geometrica (1715), Unterricht eine Fuge zu formiren (1722) and Unterricht, was ein Organist wissen soll. A fourth study, the Prolegomena de musica in genere, attempted to justify Eckelt's theories about music with proof from the scriptures, an attitude typical in some Lutheran musical circles of the time. Although he gave himself the title 'componista' early in his career, it is virtually impossible to assess Eckelt's compositional skill. Gerber knew a Passion setting of his, as well as sacred arias and instrumental pieces, but none of these survives. Except for his youth, Eckelt might be the composer of the anonymous pieces in the anthology he copied in 1692. This Tabulaturbuch (missing since World War II) was also an important source for Pachelbel and Froberger.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerberL
E. Jacobs: 'Der Orgelspieler und Musikgelehrte Johann Valentin Eckelt, 1673–1732', VMw, ix (1893), 311–32
F.W. Beinroth: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Sondershausen von ihren Anfängen bis zum Ende des 19. Jahrhunderts (Innsbruck, 1943)

C. Wolff: 'Johann Valentin Eckelts Tabulaturbuch von 1692', Festschrift Martin Ruhnke zum 65. Geburtstag (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1986), 374–86

HUGH J. McLEAN

Eckerlin [Echerlin, Ekerlin], Fanny [Frantiszka] (b Milan, 1802; d Milan, 1842). Italian contralto of Polish-Italian parentage. Her precocious talent gained her early admission to the Milan Conservatory; she graduated in 1817. Her début, as Isabella in Rossini's Italiana in Algeri, took place the following year at the Teatro S Benedetto, Venice, and she also sang in Donizetti's Enrico de Borgogna at the S Luca. A successful first season (1819–21) at La Scala, Milan, helped affirm her technical mastery and interpretative skill, with the creation of several roles including Susanna in Carafa's I due Figaro. In 1822 Rossini composed an aria for her appearance as Emma in Zelmira at the Kärntnertortheater, Vienna; this attested to her place among Rossini's foremost interpreters. More successes in Vienna, including the title role of Mercadante's Doralice (1824), and in Italy, were followed by several seasons in Barcelona. A critic wrote of her performance in Rossini's La Cenerentola in Madrid in 1831 that 'her reception was of the most favourable description', and she also sang in Paris and London. Although some sources mistakenly refer to her as a mezzo and even a soprano, Eckerlin was a contralto, of international reputation, with a repertory similar to that of her contemporary Pisaroni. Eckerlin's extensive vocal range and agility led to her great popularity in masculine musico roles. She was highly educated, reportedly temperamental and fluent in five languages.

RICCARDO LA SPINA

Eckhardt-Gramatté, S(ophie)-C(armen) [Fridman-Kochevskoy, Sonia de; Friedman(-Gramatté), Sonia] (b Moscow, 25 Dec 1898/6 Jan 1899; d Stuttgart, 2 Dec 1974). Canadian composer, pianist and violinist of Russian and French parentage. As an infant she was placed with foster-parents in England for four years before her mother, a pupil of Nicholas Rubinstein, took her to Paris in 1904 and began to teach her the piano. She started to compose her first piano pieces in Paris in 1905, and in 1910 her Etude de concert was published there. From 1908 to 1913 she studied the piano and violin at the Paris Conservatoire. A child prodigy, she made her début at the age of 11, playing the violin and piano in Paris, Geneva and Berlin. She moved to Berlin in 1914 and studied the violin with Bronisław Huberman; by 1919 she was performing concertos on both the violin and piano as well as becoming increasingly drawn towards composition, particularly of larger-scale works. She married the Expressionist painter Walter Gramatté in 1920 and from 1924 to 1926 lived in Spain, where Pablo Casals was her mentor. In 1925 she took part in a concert tour as duo pianist with Edwin Fischer. After the death of her husband in 1929, she toured the USA, performing to critical acclaim her compositions for piano and violin with Leopold Stokowski in Philadelphia and Frederick Stock in Chicago. She gave up her performing career in 1930 to devote herself to composition.

In 1934 Gramatté married the art historian Ferdinand Eckhardt, and from 1936 she studied in Berlin with Max Trapp at the Preussische Akademie. She moved to Vienna in 1939 and in 1945 became a member of the group that reopened the Austrian branch of the ISCM. She left Vienna in 1954 for Winnipeg, where she continued to work relentlessly at her composition. In 1970 she was awarded the honorary doctorate from Brandon University, Manitoba, as well as the title 'professor' by the Viennese minister of education; in 1974 she was the first Canadian composer to receive the Diplôme d'honneur of the Canadian Conference of the Arts. Her life was the subject of a two-hour CBC documentary in 1974. Some of her music and old performances are included in Radio Canada International's Anthology of Canadian Music. A project that she had initiated to encourage young musicians to study and play contemporary music was only realized posthumously, in 1976, with the first annual Eckhardt-Gramatté competition for the performance of Canadian music.

As a composer Eckhardt-Gramatté was largely self-taught. She learned much from the virtuoso music she performed on both the piano and the violin, and her compositions from the 1920s in particular reflect this. By the late 1930s her unique contrapuntal idiom had reached full maturity, and in the following decade her style veered towards neo-classicism and bitonality with some use of jazz idioms. In 1950, with the Piano Sonata no.5, she began to adopt serialism, and by 1955 her use of metric manipulation showed similarities to that of Olivier Messiaen and Boris Blacher. She retained a lifelong admiration for the music of Bach – the ending of the 1955 Concerto for Orchestra reworks the prelude from his Partita in E – and, like Bartók, she also had a preference for the interval of the fourth as a structural device. Her music is dark, dense and dramatic, with relentless forward drive; although she admired the First Viennese School, her brand of counterpoint is individual and its dissonance owes much to the post-Romantics. Despite her use of modern techniques, she remained a Romantic in spirit. In addition to writing music, she developed a piano teaching method, the 'E-gré Piano Technique', whose basis is the use of rotary movement.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Ziganka, ballet suite, 1920; Pf Conc. no.1, 1926, rev. 1931; Konzertstück, vc, chbr orch, 1928, rev. 1974; Grave funèbre, vn, chbr orch, 1931; Passacaglia und Fuge, 1937; Molto sostenuto, str orch, 1938–52; Sym. in C [no.1], 1939–40; Capriccio concertante, 1941; Pf Conc. no.2, 1946; Concertino, str orch, 1947; Markantes Stück, 2 pf, orch, 1948; Tripel Konzert, tpt, cl, bn, orch, 1949; Bn Conc., 1950; Vn Conc., 1950; Conc., vn, concertante wind insts, orch, 1951; Concertino for Orch, 1954; Conc. for Orch, 1955; Sym.-Conc., pf, orch, 1967; Sym. no.2 'Manitoba', 1970; Sym.-Conc., tpt, chbr orch, 1974; arrs. of 3 Paganini Caprices, vn, orch

Chbr and solo inst: Ein wenig Musik, pf trio, 1910; Suites, vn, nos.1–2, 1923, no.3 'Mallorca', 1924; 10 Caprices, vn, 1924–34; Berceuse, fl, pf, 1925; Conc., vn, 1925; Lagrima, va/vc, pf, 1926; Februar-Suite, vn, pf, 1934; Presto I 'In the Old Style', fl, pf, 1934, rev. 1951 as Presto II; Str qts, no.1, 1938, no.2, 1943; Duos, nos.1–2, 2 vn, 1944; Ww Qt, fl, cl, basset-hn/A-cl, b cl/bn, 1946; Triotino, str trio, 1947; Ruck-Ruck Sonate, cl, pf, 1947, rev. 1962; Nicolas Trio [Str Trio no.2], 1947; Duo concertante, fl, vn, 1956; Duo concertante, vc, pf, 1959; Ww Qnt, 1963; Str Qt no.3, 1964; Nonet, fl, ob, cl, bn, hn, vn, va, vc, db, 1966; Pf Trio, 1967; Suite no.4 'Pacifique', vn, 1968; Concertino, vc, pf, 1970; Fanfare, 8 brass insts, 1971

Pf: From my Childhood, i: 14 Alphabet Pieces, 1905–09, ii: Character Pieces, 1907–13; Etude de concert, 1910; Arabesque, 1923; Danse de nègre, 1923; Sonata no.1, 1924; Sonata no.2, 1924, rev. 1952; Sonatas, no.3, 1924, no.4, 1928; Sonata no.6 (3 Klavierstücke), 1928–51; Caprices, nos.2–5, 1932–7; Introduction and Variations on a Theme from My Childhood, 1936; Caprice no.6, 1948; Sonata no.5, 1950

Choral: 4 Christmas Songs (F. Eckhardt), (SSATBB, fl, cl, bn, 2 tpt, 2 hn, pf) vv, pf

Principal publishers: Eschig, Simrock, Universal, Vieu et Vieu

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EMC2 (L. Watson, H. Kallmann, K. Winters); KdG (R. Hellwig-Unruh)

'Eckhardt-Gramatté', Canadian Composer, no.42 (1969)

'Manitoba Composers: a Collective Voice', Canadian Composer, no.52 (1970)

'S.-C. Eckhardt-Gramatté', Canadian Music Educator, xvii (1975)

M.E. Smith: The Works for Violoncello by Sophie-Carmen Eckhardt-Gramatté (thesis, U. of Western Ontario, 1978)

G.B. Carruthers: The Career and Compositions of S.-C. Eckhardt-Gramatté (thesis, Carleton U., Ottawa, 1981)

I. Harry: 'S.-C. Eckhardt-Gramatté's Life Story Adventures, Crises and Achievements', Canadian Composer, no.178 (1983)

F. Eckhardt: Music from Within: a Biography of the Composer S.-C. Eckhardt-Gramatté, ed. G. Bowler (Winnipeg, 1985) [vol. i of 23 vols. contains a catalogue of works]

The Eckhardts in Winnipeg: a Cultural Legacy, Winnipeg Art Gallery (Winnipeg, 1987) [exhibition catalogue]

M.L. Decock: The Piano Sonatas of Sophie-Carmen Eckhardt-Gramatté (diss., U. of Maryland, 1995)

G. Colton: 'Completion and Antithesis in Piano Sonata no.6 by S.-C. Eckhardt-Gramatté', Canadian University Music Review, xvii (1997), 71–82

GAYNOR G. JONES

Eckhardt, Mária (b Budapest, 26 Sept 1943). Hungarian music historian and choir director. She trained as a secondary school music teacher and choir director at the Liszt Academy of Music, Budapest (1961–6), where her teachers were Zoltán Vásárhelyi, István Párkai, György Kroó and Zoltán Gárdonyi. She was librarian and associate scholar of the music section of the National Széchényi Library (1966–73) and continued to be director of the library's choir. She was a member of the Hungarian music history department at the Institute of Musicology of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences (1973–87), her field of speciality being 19th-century Hungarian music. In 1986 she became director of the Liszt Memorial Museum and Research Centre. In this capacity she co-ordinates Liszt research within Hungary and maintains contact with Liszt research abroad, being a member of the American and British Liszt Societies, and on the board of directors of the Weimar Liszt Society. In 1985 she received the Award of Excellence of the American Liszt Society. Her research work is among the foremost Hungarian literature on Liszt. Aside from her writings and editions of Liszt's music, she has also edited works by Michael Haydn, Dittersdorf and Vanhal.

WRITINGS

'Die Handschriften des Rákóczi Marsches von Franz Liszt in der Széchényi National-Bibliothek, Budapest', SMH, xvii (1975), 347–405

'Ein Spätwerk von Liszt: der 129. Psalm', SMH, xviii (1976), 295–333

'A Zeneakadémia Liszt Ferenc leveleiben' [The Music Academy in Franz Liszt's letters], A Liszt Ferenc Zeneművészeti Főiskola 100 éve, ed. J. Ujfalussy (Budapest, 1977), 18–68

'Zur Frage der Liszt'schen Briefkonzeptbücher', Liszt-Studien II: Eisenstadt 1978, 43–54

'Liszt à Marseille', SMH, xxiv (1982), 163–97

'Einflüsse der ungarischen Musik bei Goldmark', Brahms Congress: Vienna 1983, 427–38 with C. Knotik: Franz Liszt und sein Kreis in Briefen und Dokumenten aus den Beständen des Burgerländischen Landesmuseums (Eisenstadt, 1983)

'Liszts Bearbeitungen von Schuberts Märschen: formale Analyse', SMH, xxvi (1984), 133–46

'New Documents on Liszt as Author', New Hungarian Quarterly, no.95 (1984), 181–94

Franz Liszt's Music Manuscripts in the National Széchényi Library, Budapest (Budapest, 1986)

Liszt Ferenc Emlékmúzeum – Liszt Ferenc Zeneművészeti Főiskola, Budapest: katalógus [Franz Liszt Memorial Museum – Franz Liszt Academy of Music: catalogue] (Budapest, 1986; Eng. trans., 1986, as Liszt Ferenc Memorial Museum: Catalogue)

'Liszt in his Formative Years: Unpublished Letters 1824–1827', New Hungarian Quarterly, no.103 (1986), 93–107

'Von Les quatre elémens bis zu Les préludes: ein in der Weimarperiode umgestaltetes grosses Projekt Franz Liszts', Das Weimarer Schaffen Franz Liszts und seine Ausstrahlung auf die Weltmusikkultur: Weimar 1986, 19–29

Liszt Ferenc hagyatéka a budapesti Zeneművészeti Főiskolán/Franz Liszt's Estate at the Budapest Academy of Music (Budapest, 1986–93) [i: Könyvek [Books]; ii: Zenemüvek [Music]]

'Une femme simple, mère d'un génie européen, Anna Liszt: quelques aspects d'une correspondance', ReM, nos.405–7 (1987), 199–214

'Die Konzeption eines Thematischen Verzeichnisses der musikalischen Werke Franz Liszts', Die Projekte der Liszt-Forschung: Eisenstadt 1989, 47–58

Liszt Ferenc válogatott levelei: ifjúság – virtuóz évek – Weimar [Selected letters of Franz Liszt: youth – virtuoso Years – Weimar] (Budapest, 1989)

'Die frühen Männerchöre Franz Liszts', Der junge Liszt: Vienna 1991, 31–42

'Zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Consolations von Franz Liszt', SMH, xxxiv (1992), 449–57

'Liszt und die Musik der Skandinavischen Länder', Liszt und die Nationalitäten: Eisenstadt 1994, 151–62

'Zur Werkgeschichte der Psalmen 23 und 137 Franz Liszts', Das Goethe- und Schiller-Archiv, 1896–1996, ed. J. Golz (Weimar, 1996), 353–72

'Vor hundert Jahren: Liszts und Halms Huldigung zur Schillerfeier 1859', Liszt und die Weimarer Klassik, ed. D. Altenburg (Laaber, 1997), 133–53

with E. Liepsch: Franz Liszts Weimarer Bibliothek (Laaber, 1999)

ZSUZSANNA DOMOKOS

Eckoldt, Johann Valentin. See ECKELT, JOHANN VALENTIN.

Eckstein, Pavel (b Opava, 27 April 1911). Czech music critic and administrator. He studied law at Prague University (JUDr 1935) and learnt music privately. He was imprisoned during the German occupation (1941–5), and after the liberation worked as an organizer and popularizer in the secretariat of the Prague Spring Music Festival (1948–52). As a member of the Union of Czechoslovak Composers he was secretary of the secretariat (1952–71) and also directed the foreign section for many years; he did much for the growth of wider international cooperation and for the cause of Czech music abroad. He has written many informative articles about contemporary and older Czech music for various periodicals, including Opera, Musical America, Opera News, Opernwelt, Oper und Konzert and Musik und Gesellschaft. In Hudební rozhledy, of which he was an editor (1950–56), he published articles about important premières abroad and gave regular accounts of the domestic musical scene, especially opera. He was a member of the ISCM presidential committee and secretary of the national committee of the International Music Council (1969–71). His experience and his thorough understanding of opera led to his appointment as artistic adviser of the National Theatre, Prague, in 1969. There he initiated the Prague premières of Peter Grimes, Arabella and Simon Boccanegra and new productions of Das Rheingold and Die Walküre. Although his publication activities were forbidden during the 1970s and 80s, he revived the National Theatre Yearbook and edited it under the pseudonym Petr Slezák (1969–88). When the State Opera was established (1992) he became its chief Dramaturg and head of the Department of Foreign Contacts, a position he held until his retirement in 1994.

WRITINGS

'Verdi na české operní scéně' [Verdi on the Czech operatic stage], HRo, iii/8 (1950–51), 28 only
'O mongolské hudbě' [Mongolian music], HRo, v/12 (1952), 26 only
'Opery M.P. Musorgského na československých scénách' [Musorgsky's operas on the Czechoslovak stage], HRo, v/17 (1952), 19 only
'Richard Strauss: Mlčenlivá žena' [Strauss's Schweigsame Frau], HRo, ix (1956), 550–52
'Hindemithova Harmonie světa' [Hindemith's Harmonie der Welt], HRo, x (1957), 716–18
'Poučný cyklus Wagnerových oper' [An instructive cycle of Wagner operas], HRo, x (1957), 462–3
A Brief Outline of Czechoslovak Opera (Prague, 1964)
Die tschechoslowakische zeitgenössische Oper/The Czechoslovak Contemporary Opera (Prague, 1967)
David Oistrach (Prague, n.d.)
'Tschechoslowakei', Symposion für Musikkritik: Graz 1967, 66–70
The Road to the State Opera Prague/Auf Wegen zur Staatsoper Prag (Prague, 1993)
'Europery Johna Cage' [John Cage's Europeras], HRo, xlviii/9 (1995), 33–4
'Další vzkříšení: Schulhoffovy Plameny' [A further resurrection: Schulhoff's Flames], HRo, xlviii/6 (1995), 27–8
'Ullmannova opera Pád Antikrista' [Ullmann's opera The Fall of the Antichrist], HRo, xlviii/4 (1995), 29 only
'První opera Zemlinského' [Zemlinsky's first opera], HRo, xlix/5 (1996), 23 only
'Zemlinského poslední opera' [Zemlinsky's last opera], HRo, l/2 (1997), 26–7

JOSEF BEK

Eckstine, Billy [Eckstein, William Clarence; Mr B] (b Pittsburgh, 8 July 1914; d Pittsburgh, 8 March 1993). American popular and blues singer and jazz bandleader. As a singer he worked his way to Chicago in late 1937, where in 1939 he became the principal vocalist in Earl Hines's big band. He remained with Hines until 1943, learning to play the trumpet while on the band's tours. From 1944 to 1947 he led an unsuccessful but now highly acclaimed bop big band. Thereafter he returned to a career as a solo singer. Following the success of Everything I have is yours (1947, MGM), he became the country's most popular vocalist in 1949–50 (celebrated in a photo spread in Life magazine) and gained a lucrative five-year contract with MGM. Although his popularity waned from 1951, he and Bobby Tucker (his accompanist from June 1949) continued to fill major night clubs in the USA and abroad for several decades.

Eckstine's achievements were inconsistent: on the one hand he supported young avant-garde jazz musicians, on the other he sang conservative popular ballads. He was instrumental in bringing Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker and Sarah Vaughan (among others) into Hines's band, and while with Hines he recorded a blues hit, Jelly, Jelly (1940, Bb); he also introduced new songs (such as Skylark, 1942, Bb) over network radio, being the first black singer allowed to do so because of his impeccable diction. For his own band he hired at different times Vaughan, Gillespie, Parker, Tadd Dameron, Fats Navarro, Miles Davis, Dexter Gordon, Sonny Stitt, Art Blakey and other young virtuosos. However, the band's experimental hop sounds are only hinted at in performances such as Blowin' the Blues Away and Opus X (both 1944, De Luxe), the remainder of its recordings being largely romantic ballads featuring Eckstine's strong, vibrant baritone. His recordings for MGM are sung to the accompaniment of a studio orchestra with strings. In the 1950s Eckstine developed his night-club routine, in which he sang ballads, undertook impersonations, performed soft-shoe dances and also played the trumpet.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GroveJ (B. Kernfeld)
'Mr. B', Life (24 April 1950)
B. Eckstine: 'Crazy People like Me', Melody Maker (14 Aug 1954); (21 Aug 1954); (28 Aug 1954); (4 Sept 1954); (11 Sept 1954)
M. Shera: 'The Billy Eckstine Band', Jazz Journal, xiii/11 (1960), 7–9
G. Hoefer: 'The First Big Bop Band', Down Beat, xxxii/16 (1965), 23–6
J. Burns: 'The Billy Eckstine Band', JazzM, xiii/11 (1968), 6–10
S. Dance: The World of Earl Hines (New York, 1977) [interviews]
E. Southern: '"Mr B" of Ballad and Bop', BPM, vii (1979), 182–98; viii (1980), 54–64
D.J. Travis: An Autobiography of Black Jazz (Chicago, 1983) [incl. interviews]

BARRY KERNFELD

Eclisses (Fr.). See RIBS.

Eclogue (from Gk. eklogē; Ger. Eklog). A piece of a pastoral nature. In classical literature the word originally referred to a selection of particularly interesting passages from an author's work, but it later came to be associated exclusively with the pastoral genre of Greek poetry developed by Theocritus. In Latin literature the most famous examples are the Bucolics of Virgil. In the Renaissance such poems were given a dramatic form, and the egloga, a pastoral play with music related to the zarzuela, was important in Spain in the 16th and 17th centuries. By the end of the 18th century the form was firmly established in European literature.

The term was applied to piano pieces in the 19th century, first by Tomášek, who wrote seven sets of eclogues, the earliest of which (op.35) appeared in 1807. Most are in binary form. The pastoral sweetness is heard at its best in no.8, a 6/8 piece in F, but the variety of mood found in these pieces is wide and deliberate: no.9, for instance, is in two parts marked 'giocoso' and 'malinconico'. Among later examples are eclogues by Franck (op.3, 1842), Liszt (no.7 of the first book of Années de pèlerinage, 1848–54), Dvořák (op.52 no.4, 1880, and four others of the same year published posthumously as op.56), and sets by Vítězslav Novák (op.11, 1896) and Wellesz (op.11, 1911).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Grimm: 'Von der Ekloge zum Essay: literarisches Genres in der Instrumentalmusik', MG, xxxiv (1984), 132–5

MAURICE J.E. BROWN/KENNETH L. HAMILTON

ECM [Editions of Contemporary Music]. German record company. It was founded in Cologne in 1969. By 1971 it was recognized for its excellent recordings of free jazz played by such artists as Paul Bley, Jan Garbarek and Marion Brown; by the late 1990s over 600 recordings had been issued on ECM and about 15 on its affiliated label Japo. ECM has a readily identifiable house style, uniting two previously disparate genres, jazz-rock and free jazz. Musicians who have recorded frequently for the company include Garbarek, Gary Burton, Chick Corea, Jack DeJohnette, Egberto Gismonti, Keith Jarrett, Pat Metheny, Terje Rypdal and Ralph Towner.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Eicher: 'ECM: "Juste après le silence"', Jazz magazine, no.274 (1979), 38–9
F. Billard: 'Manfred est cher?', Jazz magazine, no.343 (1985), 32–3

BARRY KERNFELD

Ecole d'Arcueil. A group of young French composers, formed by Milhaud around Henri Sauguet in 1923, with Satie as their mascot. As Satie always maintained that 'a Satie school could never exist', his home suburb of Arcueil was wisely chosen to denote the group. The other members were Henri Cliquet (later Cliquet-Pleyel), Roger Désormière, Maxime-Benjamin Jacob and Baron Jacques Benoist-Méchin. Only Benoist-Méchin was not a pupil of Charles Koechlin, and he left the group before its first joint concert at the Collège de France, Paris, on 14 June 1923, where Satie's presentation ensured an enthusiastic reception. In the wake of Les Six, musical expertise counted for less in launching careers than publicity, a corporate identity and high-level avant-garde support. Other concerts soon followed, notably on 25 October 1923, when works by the group featured alongside those of Satie, Koechlin and Cole Porter at the Théâtre des Champs-Elysées, and Satie publicly dissociated himself from Les Six. As a result of their initial success, Désormière became a conductor for the Ballets Suédois in 1924, Sauguet was commissioned to write an opéra-bouffe, Le plumet du colonel, and Jacob (the organizing force behind the group) was invited to compose music for Achard's Voulez-vous jouer avec moâ? Satie and Cocteau continued to publicize their activities in the press in 1924, though after the death in 1925 of 'le Maître d'Arcueil' (as Satie was derisively known by his enemies), the group, having served its purpose, drifted apart and Jacob became a monk.

The focus of the Ecole d'Arcueil was on youth and spontaneity, and therein lay their appeal to Satie. Like Les Six, they had no common aesthetic other than simplicity, and like Satie they were actively non-conformist, anti-academic, anti-Wagnerian and utterly Parisian. Their inexperience and desire for absolute freedom occasionally led to banality, but Sauguet, in particular, soon proved himself to be a musical poet with a neo-Romantic bias of which Satie would surely not have approved.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Volta, ed.: E. Satie: Ecrits (Paris, 1977, 3/1990)
P. Ancelin, ed.: 'Henri Sauguet: l'homme et l'oeuvre', ReM, nos.361–3 (1983), 237–40

ROBERT ORLEDGE

Ecole Royale de Chant. School founded in Paris in 1784; in 1795 it was absorbed into the newly founded Conservatoire. See PARIS, §VI, 5.

Ecorcheville, Jules (Armand Joseph) (b Paris, 17 July 1872; d Perthes-lès-Hurlus, 19 Feb 1915). French musicologist. He studied composition with César Franck (1887–90) and while studying literature at the Sorbonne (licencié ès lettres 1894) and history at the Ecole de Chartes, his interest in musicology was fostered by Lionel Dauriac; he participated in founding the ISM (1899) and, with Dauriac and Prod'homme, its French section (1904) before studying musicology with Riemann in Leipzig (1905). He took the doctorate at the Sorbonne in 1906 with two dissertations on 17th-century French music (the Kassel Manuscripts and contemporary aesthetic doctrines).

In 1907 he transformed the ailing journal Mercure musical into the Mercure musical et bulletin français de la S.I.M., which numbered Debussy and Ravel among its contributors and quickly became an important mouthpiece for the modern school of composition. The Académie des Beaux-Arts accepted his plan (1909) for a catalogue of the earlier material of the Bibliothèque Nationale, which eventually contained over 10,000 incipits, and awarded him the Prix Debrousse. He succeeded Charles Malherbe as president of the Paris section of the ISM (1911), and his ideas on the internationalism of music provided the central theme of the 1914 Paris Congress, attended by over 600 musicologists of all nations. During this period he was also active in organizing concerts for subscribers to his journal, forming a federation of French music teachers, and planning to edit the complete Corpus Scriptorum de Musica and set up a commission to investigate musical iconography. He enlisted in September 1914 and died while leading his infantry company on an assault in Champagne.

Ecorcheville is remembered chiefly for his penetrating intellect, his contribution to the development of editorial practice, his dedication to scholarship, his support of new music and, above all, his devotion to the ISM (which occupied his thoughts even in the trenches). His valuable library, sold after his death, contained rare editions of early French violin and lute music.

WRITINGS

'M. Saint-Saëns et le Wagnérisme', Revue de Paris, vi (1899), 663–76
'Quelques documents sur la Musique de la Grande Ecurie du Roi', SIMG, ii (1900–01), 608–42
'Notes sur un fonds de musique française de la Bibliothèque de Cassel', SIMG, v (1903–4), 155–71
Corneille et la musique (Paris, 1906)
De Lulli à Rameau, 1690–1730: l'esthétique musicale (supplementary diss., U. of Paris, 1906; Paris, 1906/R)
Vingt suites d'orchestre du XVIIe siècle français (diss., U. of Paris, 1906; Paris, 1906/R) [incl. edn and facs.]
'L'organisation de la Musique du Roi au temps de Louis XIV', Mémoires de la Société historique et archéologique de l'arrondissement de Pontoise et du Vexin, xxvii (1906), 107–14
ed.: Actes d'état civil de musiciens insinués au Châtelet de Paris (1539–1650) (Paris, 1907)
'La musique dans les sociétés savantes de la France', 'La Schola Cantorum et le style de Bach', BSIM, iii (1907), 129–54, 399–406
'Les textes de musique ancienne et leurs rééditions modernes', 'Wagner et l'Université', BSIM, iii (1907), 626–35, 980–83
'Un mariage grégorien', 'Le luth et sa musique', 'Deux livres de Romain Rolland', BSIM, iv (1908), 26–31, 131–48, 847–53
'Le Congrès de Vienne', 'La musique des rois d'Angleterre de 1500 à 1700', BSIM, v (1909), 755–62, 930–38
'Un livre inconnu sur la danse', Riemann-Festschrift (Leipzig, 1909/R), 288–93
'Le dogme en musique', BSIM, vi (1910), 349–58
Catalogue du fonds de musique ancienne de la Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris, 1910–14)
'Le problème des ornements dans la musique', BSIM, vii/1 (1911), 13–27
'Le congrès de Londres', BSIM, vii/7 (1911), 61–9
'Lully gentilhomme et sa descendance', BSIM, vii (1911), no.5, pp.1–19; no.6, pp.1–27; no.7, pp.36–52
'Un quintette de Fanelli', BSIM, viii/4 (1912), 37–47
'La vie des sons, d'après un livre récent', BSIM, viii/9–10 (1912), 26–35
'Une romance chantée par Louis XVII', BSIM, ix/1 (1913), 33–9
'Le futurisme ou le bruit dans la musique', BSIM, ix/12 (1913), 1–13
'La forlane', BSIM, x/April (1914), 11–26 [incl. music]
'Le Cinquième Congrès de la Société Internationale de Musique, Paris, 1914', BSIM, x/July–Aug (1914), 3–32

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (E. Haraszti)
L. Laloy, L. de La Laurencie and E. Vuillermoz, eds.: Le tombeau de Jules Ecorcheville suivi de lettres inédites (Paris, 1916)
Catalogue des livres rares et précieux composant la collection musicale de feu Jules Ecorcheville (Paris, 1920) [incl. preface by H. Prunières]

JOHN TREVITT/JEAN GRIBENSKI

Ecossaise (Fr.: 'Scottish'). A kind of contredanse that was popular during the first part of the 19th century. It was quick and energetic, and the music was generally in 2/4 time. There were usually four figures danced in progressive combinations by the couples involved; in its later stages waltz-like turns were introduced (see SCHOTTISCHE).

The history of the écossaise is obscure. On the one hand it has been argued that its prototype was among the oldest Scottish dances performed to bagpipe accompaniment, originally of serious character and moderate movement. On the other hand Scottish origins have been denied and it has been described simply as a French conception of what a Scots dance ought to be. The écossaise was familiar in 18th-century France as one of the favourite contredanses adopted by fashionable society. It came to rival even the minuet in popularity, but its character changed, and by the 19th century the quick form had replaced the earlier moderate-paced variety.

As a ballroom favourite in Vienna it elicited music from such composers as Beethoven, who wrote a number of écossaises for piano, orchestra and wind band between 1806 and 1810, and from Schubert, who contributed many sets for piano, including those in the dances published as opp.18, 33 and 67. Weber dedicated his set of six écossaises (1802) 'to the beautiful sex of Hamburg'. Six was the usual number of dances in a set, each a binary movement of two balanced eight-bar strains. Beethoven unified his E♭ set (WoO83) by making the second strain of each of the six dances identical. Chopin's three écossaises (op.72 no.3) are structurally somewhat exceptional.

The word 'écossais(e)' also appears in titles simply to indicate that a piece is supposedly Scottish in origin or in some feature of style (e.g. Glinka's Thème écossais varié, based on the Irish tune The Last Rose of Summer, and John Field's Rondeau écossais). The écossaise in Jeremiah Clarke's Suite in D, however, simply belongs to the popular post-Restoration genre of the Scotch tune.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG2 (W. Litschauer, W. Deutsch [incl. further bibliography])
C.F. Förster: Ecossaisen-Lehre, oder Die Kunst, 16 verschiedene Ecossaisen mit allen dazugehörigen Pas und Touren in kurzer Zeit anständig tanzen zu lernen (Breslau, 1831)
C.J. Sharp and A.P. Oppé: The Dance: an Historical Survey of Dancing in Europe (London and New York, 1924/R)
C. Sachs: Eine Weltgeschichte des Tanzes (Berlin, 1933; Eng. trans., 1937/R)

MICHAEL TILMOUTH

Ecuador. Country in South America.

I. Art music. II. Traditional music.

I. Art music

There is substantial documentary evidence of relatively important musical activity in colonial Ecuador, but no polyphonic work by musicians active in Quito, Cuenca and Guayaquil has yet been found. In view of the splendid development of colonial architecture, painting and sculpture related to the church, it is likely that there were similar accomplishments in music.

The transplanting of European music to Ecuador began with the establishment in Quito in 1535 of a Flemish Franciscan order (by the monks Josse de Rycke of Mechelen and Pierre Gosseal of Leuven) in which the teaching of music was important. Amerindians were taught plainchant, mensural notation and performance on the main families of European instruments, particularly at their Colegio de S Andrés (founded 1555), where the standard was such that by 1570 even Francisco Guerrero's difficult four- and five-part motets could be performed. The mestizo Diego Lobato (*c*1538–*c*1610), was appointed maestro de capilla at the cathedral in 1574; documentary evidence suggests that he composed motetes and chanzonetas, but none has been found. Gutierre Fernández Hidalgo (*c*1547–1623), considered the paramount South American Renaissance composer, came from Bogotá to succeed Lobato as maestro de capilla in 1588, but his stay in Quito was too short to be of lasting significance in the cathedral's musical life. In 1682 the chapter appointed another distinguished composer, Manuel Blasco, from Bogotá; his works (now in the Bogotá Cathedral archive) include an eight-part Confitebor–Laudate Dominum–Magnificat, a 12-part Dixit Dominus, a 12-part Laudate Dominum (1683), a 12-part Magnificat and an Officium defunctorum (1681), all incomplete; two polyphonic villancicos (one from 1686), and Versos al organo, con duo para chirimias (1684). Blasco left his post at the cathedral in 1696 and was succeeded by José Ortuño de Larrea (d 1722).

There is little information about 18th-century church music in Ecuador; the city of Guayaquil seems to have superseded Quito, but no primary source remains.

After independence (1822) attempts to establish a professional musical life resulted in the foundation of a school of music in Quito, which was for a time under the direction of Agustín Baldeón (d 1847), a composer of symphonies and other orchestral pieces. This music school became the Sociedad Filarmónica de S Cecilia which lasted until 1858. Only in 1870, under the stimulus of the educational policy of the García Moreno regime, was the Conservatorio Nacional de Música founded and put under the direction of Antonio Neumann (1818–71), of German descent, the author of the national anthem and founder of the Philharmonic Society in Guayaquil. The Italian Domenico Brescia came from Santiago, Chile, to direct the conservatory in Quito, and during his years there (1903–11) established music education in Ecuador on a sounder base than had previously been possible. He was an early advocate of musical nationalism in Ecuador, with such works as Sinfonia ecuatoriana and Ocho variaciones (based on indigenous sacred songs). Several of his students adopted the nationalist style. Of these, Segundo Luis Moreno (1882–1972) wrote many works with indigenous elements, and Luis Humberto Salgado (1903–77) was the leading figure of his generation. His symphonic suite Atahualpa (1933), his Suite coreográfica (1946), the ballets El amaño (1947) and El Dios Tumbal (1952) and other works show strong nationalist feeling. Salgado also wrote two operas, Cumandá (1940, rev. 1954) and Eunice (1956–7), that were never produced. Salgado ws not an exclusively nationalist composer, as the varied style of his eight symphonies shows. In his later years, he even relied on atonality and tried his hand at 12-note composition.

Pedro Pablo Traversari (1874–1956), a prolific composer and musicologist, combined a neo-Romantic style with some native characteristics. He wrote 22 dances in the style of the highlands, hymns (including the Pentatonic Hymn of the Indian Race), the tone poem Glorias andinas, and melodramas such as Cumandá, La profecía de Huiracocha, Los hijos del sol, all based on native legends. His teaching in the chief institutions of Ecuador, including the Central University, was influential. His important collection of native and foreign instruments is the basis of the instrument collection at the Casa de la Cultura Ecuatoriana in Quito.

Spanish Franciscan monks have also contributed greatly to 20th-century Ecuadorian music. Francisco María Alberdi (1878–1934) and Agustín de Azkúnaga (1885–1957) have produced much church music, as well as secular music in native styles. Later Manuel J. Mola Mateau (1918–91), another Franciscan composer, directed the conservatory in Quito, held the position of cathedral organist and founded a school of church music.

More advanced techniques of composition appeared in some of the works of Gerard Guevara (b 1930), and especially of Mesías Maiguashca (b 1938), a student of Ginastera at the Di Tella Institute, Buenos Aires, who settled in Cologne, Germany and cultivated atonality and electronic and computer music media. Notable composers of the following generations include Milton Estévez (b 1947), Arturo Rodas (b 1951), Diego Luzuriaga (b 1955), the last two residents of the UK and the USA, respectively. See also QUITO.

II. Traditional music

Ecuadorian traditional music has a distinct regional character, yet with clear instances of musical borrowing. Within a single region there are related musical genres that, though given different names by different ethnic groups, are clearly musical cousins. Each of the three major cultural-ecological zones – the mountainous Highlands, the Oriente region to the east and the coastal region – may be defined by certain musical genres and dances, by characteristic musical instruments and by distinctive music rituals and festivals. At the same time, there are certain Roman Catholic festivals that are observed not only in different zones of Ecuador but in many other parts of predominantly Roman Catholic Latin America.

1. Highlands: (i) Musical genres (ii) Instruments (iii) Rituals and festivals. 2. Oriente. 3. Coastal.

1. HIGHLANDS.

(i) Musical genres. The highland inhabitants of the volcanic regions include Quechua-speaking Amerindians, Spanish-speaking mestizos and, in the Chota Valley, Spanish-speaking Afro-Ecuadorians. Certain musical genres are strongly regional: the dance-song sanjuanito, for example, is associated with Imbabura province, northern highland Ecuador, where it may be heard in Afro-Ecuadorian households in the Chota Valley, as well as in Iberian-Ecuadorian and Quechua homes. Other genres are more clearly products of a particular culture; examples include the bomba dance-song of the Chota Afro-Ecuadorians, or the dance-form pareja and instrumental vacación of the Otavalo Valley Quechua.

The contemporary Quechua sanjuán is the prominent vehicle for the musical and textual creativity of Otavalo Quechua. Sanjuanes exist in the hundreds; often evincing a condensed ballad character, they may be autobiographical, history-recounting or enumerative. Examples recorded by the author in 1979–80 and 1990 enact musical vengeance on a wife-beating guitarist-rival of the composer, allude to lamenting at the death of the last Ecuadorian Inca, Atahualpa, and recount in consummate detail the features of a critical member of the local fauna, the sheep.

The sanjuán, performed in both ritual and non-ritual contexts, is in complex litany form where, notably in performances involving the Imbabura diatonic harp, amidst the regular repetition of a single, primary motif, one new break or secondary motif may be inserted. Quechua sanjuán harmony (when played on harp or guitar, for example) is typically bimodal, exploiting the ambiguity between the minor and its relative major mode. The majority of Imbabura province Quechua sanjuanes are anhemitonic pentatonic; some may be tetratonic, a few hexatonic.

Mestizos of the highlands compose sanjuanitos, which, though in a similar character and tempo to the Quechua sanjuán, manifest certain differences. Dating back at least 70 years, mestizo sanjuanitos are in 2/4 metre and often display the phrase structure AABB(C), where A and B are always of the same length (either four or eight beats) and alternate regularly, unlike Quechua sanjuán, where the primary motif dominates. A number of different ensembles may be employed to perform both sanjuán and sanjuanito: solo bandolín, harp or quena or larger instrumental ensembles may be used; or solo or multiple voices either unaccompanied, or accompanied by solo harp or one or two guitars.

A highland example of the 'musical cousin' phenomenon alluded to above is the relationship between the mestizo albazo, Chota Afro-Ecuadorian bomba and Quechua pareja. Similarities of tempo, metre, rhythm and lively character link these three regional genres, despite their differing labels (Moreno, 1930). Perhaps one of the most cherished of highland genres, the sesquialtera-metric albazo (sometimes referred to as chilena, cachullapi or saltashka) carries some of the same symbolic weight for highland Ecuador, particularly for the Mestizos, as does the bambuco for highland Colombia, or the cueca for Chile. The highly evocative albazos extol praise for one's region (Aires de mi tierra [Cotacachi, Imbabura], Qué lindo es mi Quito, El Tungurahua Querido) or for a beloved musical instrument (Arpita de mis canciones). Also sharing in the character of regional praise is the mestizo duple-metric pasacalle dance-song form, akin to the Spanish pasodoble; examples include Ambato, tierra de flores ('Ambato, Land of Flowers') and Balcón Quiteño ('Quito balcony').

The bomba of the Chota Valley is the label for both a highland Afro-Ecuadorian music of Chota and a principal membranophone of the same region; the latter was described as early as the 1860s by Hassaurek. The dance-song bomba emerged from the culture of the sugar mill, a colonial-era institution introduced to Chota by the Jesuits; the extant bomba Mete caña al trapiche refers to this way of life. In 1980 Coba Andrade published texts for 56 Chota bombas. Among the finest interpreters of the bomba and other Chota Valley musics are the brothers Eleuterio, Fabián and Germán Congo, together with their colleague, Milton Tadeo. Recordings of bombas have appeared both in primary-source regional LPs and in anthologies or derivatives (Peñín, Velasquez and Coba Andrade, 1990; Schechter: 'Tradition and Dynamism', 1996). The allegro bomba may evince call-and-response texture, repetitive melody, simple duple or sesquialtera metre, bimodal harmony (relative minor/major) and rigorous syncopation; where traditional bombas addressed themes of love or land, contemporary bombas are concerned with political issues, such as the growing disillusionment with governments' unfulfilled promises. Just as sanjuán may be considered emblematic of northern highland Quechua, so bomba carries the same deeply ingrained, symbolic weight for Afro-Ecuadorians of Chota (Schechter: 'Los Hermanos Congo', 1994). The pareja is slightly faster than the sanjuán and in simple duple or compound duple metre. Characterized more by its function than by particular titles, pareja is associated with children's wakes and Quechua newly-weds' dancing, particularly at dawn (Schechter, 1982).

The mestizo dance-song form tonada is waltz-like, in a moderate triple metre and manifests a characteristic Ecuadorian minor- relative major bimodality, with a cadence in the minor dominant. Tonadas may particularly be heard performed by ensembles of the central and southern highlands; these ensembles might incorporate harp, violins, bandolín, guitar and flute.

The mestizo highland pasillo, with its enormous repertory, is a particularly popular genre, attracting amateur and professional composers; pasillo recordings probably sell in greater volume than most, if not all, other types of Ecuadorian popular music. 798 pasillos have been identified by poet or composer (Carrión, 1975). Godoy Aguirre's anthology contains composers' scores (with texts underlaid or set apart from score) for about 40 pasillos, with texts alone for dozens more.

The unmistakable quality of the deliberate, triple-metre character of the pasillo, and its elegance of expression, its inevitable reference to a (sometimes denied) love of the past, or to some other sadness of the past have been noted (by the central highland harpist César Muquinche, interview with the author). Ecuadorian pasillos may reveal an adoration or idealization of female beauty, set in terms of an intense nostalgia or melancholy often laced with autobiographical segments. Pride in local geography, seen already in albazo and pasacalle, is also a feature of many pasillos, such as Oh, mi Cuenca, Riobamba and Quiteñita. Theoretical analysis of the pasillo addresses the parameters of rhythm, metre (always 3/4), mode (usually minor) and structure (typically bipartite); the Ecuadorian pasillo can be traced back to the 19th-century Austrian waltz, with 20th-century descendants, including not only the Ecuadorian pasillo but also the vals criollo of Venezuela, the pasillo of Colombia and the vals peruano of Peru.

The yaraví, an elegiac vocal form of the northern and southern Andes, dates back to the colonial period and displays moderately slow tempo, triple or multi-metres, binary or rounded binary form and a regular phrase structure. Ecuadorian yaravís date back more than 100 years, to the collection published by Marcos Jiménez de la Espada in 1884. The dance form danzante is in an allegro or allegretto 6/8 metre, marked by a distinctive inverted-trochaic quaver-crotchet rhythm. Melodic contour is typically disjunct and angular, often with a distinctive descending leap of a 6th at the ends of certain phrases. A large collection of Ecuadorian coplas, four-line verses with ABCB rhyme, has been assembled on a historical basis, organized by thematic category (Carvalho-Neto, 1975).

(ii) Instruments. Ecuadorian organology benefited from the publication of Coba Andrade's two-volume study of Ecuadorian musical instruments, encompassing idiophones (1981) and membranophones, chordophones and aerophones (1992). The history, modern traditions, configurations and performing practices of the harp, both in Ecuador and in Latin America as a whole have also been the subject of investigation (Schechter, 1992). A representative sampling of a broad range of sierra musical instruments includes diatonic harp, bandolín (mandolin), rondador (panpipe), tunda (transverse flute), pingullo (duct flute) and bombo (double headed drum).

Indigenous harpists proliferated in 18th-century northern highland Ecuador (Recio, 1773, p.426); harps were also used in processional performance at the festival of St John, in June 1863, near Otavalo (Hassaurek, 1867). Turn-of-the-century Ecuadorian harps are depicted in the paintings Velorio de indios, Paisaje and Ciego Basilio by Joaquín Pinto (1842–1906) of the Quito School (Schechter, 1992; Samaniego Salazar, 1977: no.40). Today Ecuador has at least two major harp traditions, with hybrid forms of the instrument. In Imbabura province, in the northern sierra, the harp played by Quechua male musicians is made of cedar, with three soundbox holes, arched soundbox, straight forepillar and uncarved neck; it is used at Quechua weddings and children's wakes, largely as a solo instrument, to perform sanjuanes, parejas and vacación (see (iii)). One of the finest of Imbabura province Quechua harpists is Elías Imbaquingo; fig.1 shows him performing with his father at a Quechua wedding celebration in October 1990.

In Tungurahua province, central sierra, the instrument is larger, made of cedar, walnut and other woods, with three soundbox holes, straight forepillar and an elaborately carved neck. Performed either solo or in an ensemble (as described in (i) for the performance of tonadas), it is used at festive events to play albazos, pasacalles, pasillos and other genres. Both highland harp traditions employ a second musician, the golpeador, who beats the rhythm on the soundbox (ex.1). As played by Quechua musicians of Imbabura, the bandolín is a type of mandolin with flat back and five courses of triple strings (fig.2). The guitar, of course, is ubiquitous in both mestizo and, increasingly, Quechua cultures.

The rondador is a traditional panpipe of Ecuador, distinguished from the double-rank, hocketing panpipes of the southern Andes of Peru and Bolivia by its single rank and the absence of hocketing in its performing practice. Made of cane, condor or vulture feathers, highland Ecuadorian rondadors may have from eight to 43 tubes. Frequently the chosen instrument of blind and/or mendicant musicians, and played by night-time neighbourhood watchmen at the turn of the 20th century (Samaniego Salazar, 1977), the rondador is notable for its staggered tube-arrangement (not staircase-fashion) and for players' propensity to sound two adjacent tubes simultaneously, at the ends of phrases.

1. Quechua harpist Elías Imbaquingo playing at a Quechua wedding, 1990

The tunda is a transverse flute of the highlands, taking its name from the cane of its manufacture. Quechua of Imbabura and Pichincha provinces play the instrument during the June festivities for St John and Sts Peter and Paul. The pingullo is an end-blown duct flute existing both in the northern and southern Andes. Individual musicians play the three holed pingullo with large bombo drum in pipe and tabor fashion at annual Corpus Christi and harvest festivals of central highland Tungurahua and Cotopaxi provinces (Coba Andrade, 1992, pp.606–8; Schechter: 'Corpus Christi', 1994). The kena notched flute, prominent in the southern Andes, can also be found in highland Quechua ensembles such as Conjunto Ilumán, directed by guitarist-singer Segundo Galo Maigua. Today, ensembles of Ecuadorian-Andean (as well as Peruvian- and Bolivian-Andean) musicians are seen and heard in urban centres throughout the world.

The double-headed bombo drum, found widely in South America, appears in both the pipe and tabor context at Corpus Christi and in hundreds of other local Quechua ensembles. The bombos of the central-highland Salasaca are known for having one head painted with a design which is sometimes reflective of the elaborate dress of the danzantes (costumed indigenous dancers) of this region. Quechua-speaking Salasaca also play a cherry-leaf idiophone (hoja de capulí); this tradition, with musical transcriptions, analysis and discussion of performance practice, is described in Casagrande and Stigberg.

(iii) Rituals and festivals. In the Ecuadorian highlands, these include the child's wake (known among northern Quechua as wawa velorio), Holy Week and Corpus Christi, among others. Celebrated in Roman Catholic Latin America from the 18th century, an infant's wake is also a festive rite in highland Ecuador. As in other countries, the Quechua of the northern Ecuadorian highlands mark the passage of the deceased infant into the realm of the angels with local music, in this case that of the harp (with golpeador), playing sanjuanes, parejas (ex.1) and vacación. Vacación is a percussive, ametrical music without sung text, played on the harp without golpeador or dancing; its performance is reserved for the opening of the wake and for moments when the child is moved from its open coffin (Schechter, 1983, p.23; transcription, pp.56–7).

2. Bandolín (mandolin) player, Imbabura Province, Ecuador, 1980

Holy Week processions in Ecuador date back to the 16th century; they have been documented in varying detail for 19th- and 20th-century Quito and various other localities within the country (Carvalho Neto: Diccionario, 1964). The Quechua of Cotacachi, Imbabura, are known for their liturgical chants, intoned in the course of Holy Week processions. This writer documented two types of musical performance in the Cotacachi Holy Week processions of March–April 1980: on the one hand duos or trios of cane transverse flutes and on the other the responsorial chanting of the Passion(s) in Quechua, with the solo part executed by a specially trained local male Quechua catequista (prayer-specialist) and the choral response provided by local Quechua females (ex.2). Lead and choral singers performed this essentially arhythmic, ametrical music with fixed text, without vibrato and with the same rhythmic freedom of phrase with which Gregorian chant is performed in cathedral. The clear neumatic style of this chant (akin to that of the Marian antiphons), its ambitus, melodic style and character of its melodic contour are decidedly closer to Gregorian chant than to local Quechua musics such as sanjuán or pareja, which are highly rhythmic, metrically orientated, and often involve the improvisation of texts. It would appear that the Cotacachi Quechua Passion chant is composed by clergy and set intentionally in pentatonic modes to conform with the prevailing gamut of the local melos.

Ex.1 Pareja performed on the harp in the context of a northern highland Quechua child's wake (10 Feb 1980)

The Ecuadorian celebration of Corpus Christi and its octave juxtaposes European and native Andean elements. The festival's Roman Catholic nature, its elaborate processional aspect and the inclusion of harp, pipe and tabor and outdoor theatre at various places and times since the late 18th century, point to its European heritage. The celebration's local Andean roots are apparent in its orientation to the solstice period, its prominent display of the fruits of the harvest, the elaborate dress of the Corpus danzantes and the instrumentation and character of the pipe and tabor (pingullo and bombo) music accompanying them.

2. Oriente. Shuar (or Jívaro, Jíbaro) shamanic chant, social dance singing, love songs, war songs, lullabies and planting ceremony chants have frequently revealed a pitch gamut of a tritone or sometimes a major triad. Other Shuar musical aspects include emphasis of the tonic through repetition, the use of dotted rhythmic figures, frequent dual metrical patterns and song formation through variation of short motifs of clearly circumscribed tonal material, often observing an incomplete-repetition form. The 1990 recording Música etnográfica y folklórica del Ecuador includes Tono de Uwishin performed by a shaman on the tumank, a musical bow played with the fingernail; a detailed discussion of the tumank also appears in Coba Andrade's 1978 essay. Young Shuar men perform love songs on this instrument at sunset, with the desire that their beloved women think of them, despite the distance that separates them. Shuar women sing anents (love songs) in their homes, accompanied by men playing the pinkui, a transverse flute with one mouth-hole and two finger-holes, or puem, similar to the pinkui, but with five finger-holes.

Ex.2 Responsorial Passion chant in Quechua, sung during Holy Week 1980

At the time of manioc planting Shuar women sing chants to the souls of the manioc plants and subsequently to the earth mother, Nungüi. Shuar women also sing arrullos (lullabies), using a trilled-lip vocal technique and based on the major triad (a recorded example is featured in Peñín, Velasquez and Coba Andrade, 1990). These lullabies may often be sung not by the mother but by a female child, imploring the mother to return from the garden to care for the baby (Harner, 1973, pp.85–6). At Shuar festive events, pairs of men and women sing contrapuntal songs while dancing (hansematä); these courting songs, sometimes improvised on individual texts, have a flirtatious and ironic content (ibid., 108–9). The Shuar keer, or kitiar, a two-string violin, is used for shamanic chanting as well as for accompanying love songs. A highly rhythmic example from Harner's 1972 Folkways recording displays a tonic drone and prominent 2nd overtone (the 12th above).

The Shuar also play a large wooden slit-drum, the túntui, or túnduy. This instrument sends signals of war, death or other particular events; its penetrating sound (which can be perceived over a five-kilometre radius) is taboo for women.

Recordings made among the Shuar from 1955 to 1958 and transcriptions published in 1935 show a major-triad contour in women's agriculture-related songs (List, 1965), suggesting that in general, Shuar vocal music seems to exhibit both triadic and anhemitonic pentatonic structures. An analysis of Shuar melodies (Muriel, 1976) using melodies collected by the Ecuadorian missionary priest Raimundo M. Monteros (published in 1942) and melodies recorded by Philippe Luzuy for the Musée de l'Homme, Paris, in 1958, also identified major-triadic structure. Among the Shuar in the vicinity of the evangelical mission at Macuma, in Morona-Santiago province, nampesma appears to be the broadest category of song, excluding only shamanic curing chants and some sacred feast chants (Belzner, 1981). The Macuma Shuar sing three types of nampesma: love songs, gardening songs and cantos populares (social or public songs). The Macuma missionaries have sought to develop an indigenous hymnody: a body of traditional songs with Shuar texts which express Christian concepts.

In addition to Shuar culture, lowland Quechua music culture has also been recorded and studied. Quechua women's songs of this region exhibit themes of both physical abuse and self-assertiveness (Harrison, 1989). Lowland Quechua women's llakichina (Quechua: 'to make [one] sad') songs are performed in order to enchant as well as to induce love or nostalgia. Canelos Quechua women, while decorating pottery, will 'think-sing' songs that belong to the special named souls or spirits, whose substance the women are seeking to impart through their designs (Whitten, 1976).

Soul Vine Shaman is a vivid in situ recording made in the Napo region of eastern Ecuador in November 1976; the music is performed by a Napo Quechua shaman (yachaj) in his home, while attending to an ill woman. The LP includes multiple excerpts of solo violin, bird-bone flute, leaf-bundle shaking plus whistling and male (shaman) song with leaf-bundle self-accompaniment. The violin examples are pentatonic, though emphasizing pitches of the triad; the bird-bone flute extracts are arhythmic and are based around a minor triad, whereas the whistling and leaf-bundle shaking examples are pentatonic. It would appear that, in addition to similar underlying aetiological beliefs and behavioural aspects of the shamanic curing complex, lowland Quechua and Shuar peoples share certain music-stylistic aspects. These include use of tritonic and pentatonic tonal structures for different musics in their cultures, or, as in certain Shuar shamanic song, even within the same performance medium in a single context; syllabic settings for shamanistic song; heavy emphasis on the final, which is often approached via the third scale degree, and use of dotted rhythms.

The recording Lowland Tribes of Ecuador contains one example from the small Waorani population of the oriente, as well as excerpts from the Amerindian Cofán, Siona and Secoya peoples inhabiting the region near the border with Colombia.

3. Coastal. Analysing the music culture of Afro-Americans of the Pacific littoral of Esmeraldas, Ecuador, as well as coastal sectors of Nariño, Cauca and Valle departments, Colombia, Whitten (1968) isolates five musical contexts: currulao (marimba dance), chigualo (child's wake), alavado and novenario (wake and post-burial rituals for a deceased adult), the arrullo for a saint and the dance hall.

Danced in a marimba house, the currulao is a baile de respeto (dance of respect), taking place within a tense atmosphere in which, according to some, dancers are not supposed to touch. Instruments used include a two-person marimba, guasás (tube rattles), cununos (conical, single-headed drums) and double-headed bombos. Suspended from the rafters of the marimba house or mounted on legs, this marimba is a xylophone with bamboo resonators and 20 to 28 keys of chonta palm. One man plays the bordón, a lower part consisting of an ostinato phrase repeated with slight variations; the other (usually the leader of the ensemble) improvises an upper part (tiple or requinta), following the ground bass of the bordón. The bombo player uses two sticks: one, cloth-wrapped, is used on the head of the drum, the other, unwrapped, on the shell or rim. The call-and-response vocal ensemble comprises the glosador, (lead male singer), answered by female singers, the respondedoras. The verses allude to difficulties between the sexes deriving from the regional practice of serial polygyny. There are at least nine types of marimba dance: caderona, fuga, torbellino, agua larga, amanecer, bambuco, caramba, patacoré and andarele, with the bambuco being the best known. Perhaps in the process of disappearing, marimba dancing has increasingly become a tourist-orientated activity which has led to changes of instrumentation to sustain tourists' images of the sound of their music.

The chigualo is the Afro-Ecuadorian coastal version of the child's wake discussed above. The words of the spirituals or arrullos sung during this coastal rite, express the conviction that the deceased 'little angel' will travel directly to heaven, and that the child's soul will ascend into glory in angelic form, to the accompaniment of these arrullos. In this case the music is created by three to eight women cantadoras (singers) with male drummers; call-and-response occurs both within the small cantadoras group and within another, larger group of female singers. The term chigualo is also used in the Manabi coastal region to refer to a Christmas celebration during which the dance-song form villancico is performed (Cornejo, 1959). Although cantadoras also sing, the absence of drumming and a more solemn atmosphere mark regional adult Afro-Ecuadorian wakes. The first wake is called alavado or alava'o, though the critical rite in this instance is the último alabado or novenario, held after a week or nine days. Here, at this second wake, all perform dirges (alabados) emphasizing the dismissal of the deceased and the conclusion of his/her spirit's sojourn in the earthly realm. Females are responsible for organizing and performing arrullo music for local saints' days; these are somewhat informal performances by women, singing in call-and-response form and playing maracas and/or guasás; marimba may also be present. In the saloon or dance hall, popular music such as cumbia or merengue is provided by live ensembles or recordings.

The music of the Chachi (or Cayapa) from the humid tropical region of Esmeraldas province is also represented on the recording Música etnográfica y folklórica del Ecuador. The principal instruments are the same as found among coastal Afro-Ecuadorians of the same province: marimba, with bamboo resonators, played by two men; double-headed bombo drum and single headed cununo drums. Clearly Chachi culture today employs a significant variety of musical tone-systems and performance media.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

AND OTHER RESOURCES

GENERAL

Grove6 (I. Aretz)
B. Recio: Compendiosa relación de la cristiandad (en el reino) de Quito (Madrid, 1773)
W.B. Stevenson: A Historical and Descriptive Narrative of Twenty Years' Residence in South America (London, 1825)
F. Hassaurek: Four Years among Spanish Americans (New York, 1867, enlarged 2/1967 as Four Years among the Ecuadorians by C. Harvey Gardiner)
J.L. Mera: Ojeada histórico-crítica sobre la poesía ecuatoriana, desde su época más remota hasta nuestros días (Quito, 1868)
J.L. Mera: Antología ecuatoriana: cantares de pueblo ecuatoriano (Quito, 1892)
P. José Chantre y Herrera: Historia de la misión de los indios Mainas y de otras muchas naciones situadas en el Marañón español . . . (Madrid, 1901)
P.J.M. Grim: Vademecum para párrocos de indios quéchuas (Freiburg, 1903)
R. d'Harcourt and M. d'Harcourt: La musique des incas et ses survivances (Paris, 1925)
P. Rivet: 'Coutumes funéraires des indiens de l'Equateur', Congrès International d'Histoire des Religions [Paris 1923] (Paris 1925), i, 376–412
S.L. Moreno: 'La música en el Ecuador', El Ecuador en cien años de independencia 1830–1930, ed. J.G. Orellano, ii (Quito, 1930), 187–276
J.P. Muñoz Sanz: 'La música ecuatoriana', Realidades ecuatorianas: curso de extensión cultural (Quito, 1938), 185–218
N. Slonimsky: Music of Latin America (New York, 1945, 3/1949/*R*1972 with new foreword and addenda)
G. Rubio Orbe: Nuestros indios: estudio geográfico, histórico y social de los indios ecuatorianos, especialmente aplicado a la provinca de Imbabura (Quito, 1946)
S.L. Moreno and J.L. Pérez: Música y danzas autóctonas del Ecuador/Indigenous Music and Dances of Ecuador (Quito, 1949)
L.H. Salgado: Música vernácula ecuatoriana: microestudio (Quito, 1952)
G. Rubio Orbe: Punyaro: estudio de antropología social y cultural de una comunidad indígena y mestiza (Quito, 1956)
D. Guevara: Las mingas en el ecuador (Quito, 1957)
G. Alzamora: 'Síntesis histórica de la música ecuatoriana', Anales [Universidad Central del Ecuador], lxxxvi (1957), 99–117
S.L. Moreno: La música de los incas: Rectificacíon a la obra intitulada La musique des incas . . ., por Raul y Margarita d'Harcourt (Quito, 1957)
P.P. Traversari Salazar, ed.: Catálogo general del Museo de instrumentos musicales (Quito,1961)
J.E. Adoum and others: Folklore de Licán y Sicalpa (Quito, 1962)
P. de Carvalho Neto: Antología del folklore ecuatoriano (Quito, 1964)
P. de Carvalho Neto: 'Bibliografía del folklore ecuatoriano', Anales, xciii (1964), 111–68
P. de Carvalho Neto: Diccionario del folklore ecuatoriano (Quito, 1964)
D. Guevara: Folklore del coro infantil ecuatoriano (Quito, 1965)
G. Rubio Orbe: Aspectos indígenas (Quito, 1965)
G. List: 'Ethnomusicology in Ecuador', EthM, x (1966), 83–6
P.P. de Costales and A. Costales Samaniego: El quishihuar o el arbol de dios, i–ii (Quito, 1966–8)
P. de Carvalho Neto: Geografíca del folklore ecuatoriano (Quito, 1967)
L.F. Ramón y Rivera: 'Música afroecuatoriana', Folklore americano, xv (1967–8), 70–86
F. Alexander: Música y músicos: ensayos en miniatura (Quito, 1970)
J. Collier jr and A. Buitrón: The Awakening Valley (Quito, 1971)
I. Jijón, ed.: Museo de instrumentos musicales 'Pedro Pablo Traversari' (Quito, 1971)
C.E. Sigmund: Segundo Luis Moreno: his Contributions to Ecuadorian Musicology (diss., U. of Minnesota, 1971)
S.L. Moreno: Historia de la música en el Ecuador, i: Prehistoria (Quito, 1972)
C. Sigmund: 'Segundo Luis Moreno (1882–1972): Ecuador's Pioneer Musicologist', Yearbook for Inter-American Musical Research, viii (1972), 71–104
F. and J. Harrison: 'A Villancico Manuscript in Ecuador: Musical Acculturations in a Tri-Ethnic Society', Stüdien zur Tradition in der Musik: Kurt von Fischer zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. H. Eggebrecht and M. Lütolf (Munich, 1973), 101–19
J.L. Nyberg: An Examination of Vessel Flutes from Pre-Hispanic Cultures of Ecuador (diss., U. of Minnesota, 1974)
N.E. Whitten jr: Black Frontiersmen: a South American Case (Cambridge, MA, 1974)
J. Wilgus de Isas: 'Fiestas folklóricas ecuatorianas', América indígena (1974), 629–49
P. de Carvalho-Neto: 'Cancionero general de coplas ecuatorianas: el aporte del Instituto Ecuatoriano de Folklore desde 1962 hasta 1971', Journal of Latin American Lore, i (1975), 35–77
I. Aretz and others, eds.: Cuatro mil años de música en el Ecuador [catalogue of an exhibition organized by INIDEF] (Caracas, 1976)
C. Coba: 'Nuevos planteamientos a la etnomúsica y al folklore', Sarance, no.3 (1976), 50–62
J.A. Guerrer: La música ecuatoriana desde su origen hasta 1875 (Quito, 1976/R) [see also review, Inter-American Music Review, xiii/1 (1992), 109–11]
F. Samaniego Salazar, ed.: Ecuador pintoresco: acuarelas de Joaquín Pinto (Barcelona, 1977)
A. Cáceres: 'Preliminary Comments on the Marimba in the Americas', Discourse in Ethnomusicology: Essays in Honor of George List, ed. C. Card and others (Bloomington, IN, 1978), 225–50
M. Mecías Carrera C.: Folklore autóctono Zambiceño (n.p., 1978)
R. Rephann: A Catalogue of the Pedro Traversari Collection of Musical Instruments (Washington DC, 1978)
D. Luzuriaga: 'Nomina de las principales formas rítmicas o "ritmos" del Ecuador', Taller de música, J.A.D.A.P. (?Quito, [before 1979])
C.A. Coba Andrade: 'Instrumentos musicales ecuatorianos', Sarance, no.7 (1979), 70–95
C.A. Coba Andrade: Literatura popular afroecuatoriana (Otavalo, 1980)
C.A. Coba Andrade: Instrumentos musicales populares registrados en el Ecuador, i (Otavalo, 1981); ii (Quito, 1992)
J.M. Schechter: 'Corona y baile: Music in the Child's Wake of Ecuador and Hispanic South America, Past and Present', LAMR, iv (1983), 1–80
C. Coba Andrade: Danzas y bailes en el Ecuador (Quito, 1985, 2/1986)
C.A. Coba Andrade: 'Danzas y bailes en el Ecuador', LAMR, vi (1985), 166–200
C. Sigmund: 'Questions of Acculturation and Accuracy: Ecuadorian Music after Sixty Years', Sacra/Profana: Studies in Sacred and Secular Music for Johannes Riedel, ed. A. Ekdahl Davidson and C. Davidson (Minneapolis, 1985), 137–50
L. Benítez and A. Garcés: Culturas ecuatorianas: ayer y hoy (Quito, 1986, 4/1990)
M. Godoy Aguirre: Florilegio de la música ecuatoriana, i: La música popular en el Ecuador (Guayaquil, *c*1988)

C.A. Coba Andrade: 'Visión histórica de la música en el Ecuador', Ecuador indígena: aspectos históricos y actuales de la cultura andina (Otavalo, 1989), 33–62
P. Banning: 'El sanjuanito o sanjuán en Otavalo', Sarance, no.15 (1991), 195–217
J.M. Schechter: The Indispensable Harp: Historical Development, Modern Roles, Configurations and Performance Practices in Ecuador and Latin America (Kent, OH, 1992)
P. Guerrero Gutierrez: Músicos del Ecuador: diccionario biográfico (Quito, 1995)
J.M. Schechter: 'Latin America: Ecuador', Worlds of Music: an Introduction to the Music of the World's Peoples, ed. J.T. Titon (New York, 3/1996), 428–94

HIGHLANDS

M. Jiménez de la Espada: 'Colección de cantos y bailes indios de yaravíes quiteños', Congreso internacional de Americanistas [Madrid 1881], i (Madrid, 1882), pp.i–lxxxii
R. and M. d'Harcourt: 'La musique dans la sierra andine de La Paz à Quito', Journal de la Société des américanistes, new ser., xii (1920), 21–55
S.L. Moreno: La música en la provincia de Imbabura (Quito, 1923)
E.C. Parsons: Peguche, Canton of Otavalo, Province of Imbabura, Ecuador: a Study of Andean Indians (Chicago, 1945)
L. Rodríguez Sandoval: Vida económico-social del indio libre de la sierra ecuatoriana (Washington DC, 1949)
P. Peñaherrera de Costales and A. Costales Samaniego: Los Salasacas: investigación y elaboración, Llacta, viii (Quito, 1959)
A. Morlas Gutiérrez: Florilegio del pasillo ecuatoriano (Quito, 1961)
P. Peñaherrera de Costales, A. Costales Samaniego and F.J. Bucheli: Tungurahua, Llacta, xiii (Quito, 1961)
A. Albuja Galindo: Estudio monográfico del cantón Cotacachi (Quito, 1962)
R. Stevenson: 'Música en Quito', Revista musical chilena, nos.81–2 (1962), 172–94
R. Stevenson: 'Music in Quito: Four Centuries', Hispanic American Historical Review, xliii (1963), 247–66
S.L. Moreno: Cotacachi y su comarca (Quito, 1966)
I.V. Carrión: Antología del pasillo ecuatoriano (Cuenca, Ecuador, 1975)
F. Aguiló: El hombre del Chimborazo y su mundo interior (Cuenca, Ecuador, 1978)
A. Albuja Galindo: Imbabura en la cultura nacional: un homenaje a Ibarra y a la provincia (Ibarra, 1979)
R.L. Harrison Macdonald: Andean Indigenous Expression: a Textual and Cultural Study of Hispanic-American and Quichua Poetry in Ecuador (diss., U. of Illinois, 1979)
R. Stutzman: 'La gente Morena de Ibarra y la sierra septentrional', Sarance, no.7 (1979), 96–110
L. Walter: 'Social Strategies and the Fiesta Complex in an Otavaleño Community', American Ethnologist, viii (1981), 172–85
J.M. Schechter: Music in a Northern Ecuadorian Highland Locus: Diatonic Harp, Genres, Harpists and their Ritual Junction in the Quechua Child's Wake (diss., U. of Texas, 1982)
J. Riedel: 'The Ecuadorean pasillo: is it música popular, música nacional or música folklórica?', Popular Music Perspectives II: Reggio nell'Emilia, 1983, 252–77; repr. in LAMR, vii (1986), 1–25
J.M. Schechter: 'The Diatonic Harp in Ecuador: Historical Background and Modern Traditions', JAMIS, x (1984), 97–118; xi (1985), 123–73
S. Obando A.: Tradiciones de Imbabura (Quito, 1985, 3/1988)
J.B. Casagrande and D.K. Stigberg: 'Leaf-Music among the Salasaca of Highland Ecuador', Explorations in Ethnomusicology: Essays in Honor of David P. McAllester, ed. C.J. Frisbie (Detroit, 1986), 161–78
J.M. Lipski: 'The Chota Valley: Afro-Hispanic Language in Highland Ecuado', Latin American Research Review, xxii/1 (1987), 155–70
J.M. Schechter: 'Quechua sanjuán in Northern Highland Ecuador: Harp Music as Structural Metaphor on Purina', Journal of Latin American Lore, xiii (1987), 27–46
P. Banning: El sanjuanito o sanjuán en Otavalo: un estudio comparativo de la música indígena y la música latinoamericana en Ecuador (thesis, U. of Amsterdam, 1988)
R. Harrison: Signs, Songs and Memory in the Andes: Translating Quechua Language and Culture (Austin, 1989)
J. Bueno: 'La bomba en la cuenca del Chota-Mira: sincretismo o nueva realidad', Sarance, no.15 (1991), 171–93
J.M. Schechter: 'Los Hermanos Congo y Milton Tadeo Ten Years Later: Evolution of an African-Ecuadorian Tradition of the Valle del Chota, Highland Ecuador', Music and Black Ethnicity: the Caribbean and South America: Miami, 1992, 285–305
J.M. Schechter: 'Corpus Christi and its Octave in Andean Ecuador: Procession and Music, "Castles" and "Bulls"', Music-Cultures in Contact: Convergences and Collisions, ed. M.J. Kartomi and S. Blum (Sydney, 1994), 59–72
J.M. Schechter: 'Divergent Perspectives on the velorio del angelito: Ritual Imagery, Artistic Condemnation and Ethnographic Value', Journal of Ritual Studies, viii/2 (1994), 43–84
J.M. Schechter: 'Tradition and Dynamism in Ecuadorian Andean Quichua sanjuán: Macrocosm in Formulaic Expression, Microcosm in Ritual Absorption', Cosmología y música en los Andes: Berlin 1992, ed. M.P. Baumann (Frankfurt, 1996), 247–67

ORIENTE

R. Karsten: The Head-Hunters of Western Amazonas: Life and Culture of the Jibaro Indians of Eastern Ecuador and Peru (Helsinki, 1935)
R. Monteros: Música autóctona del oriente ecuatoriano (Quito, 1942)
G. List: 'Music in the Culture of the Jibaro Indians of the Ecuadorian Montaña', Inter-American Music Bulletin, no.40–41 (1964), 1–17; also in Conferencia interamericana de etnomusicologiá I: Cartagena, Colombia 1963, 131–52
I. Muriel: Beitrag zur Musikkultur der Jibaro-Indianer in Ekuador (diss., U. of Leipzig, 1970)
M.J. Harner: The Jívaro: People of the Sacred Waterfalls (Garden City, NY, 1973)
I. Muriel: 'Contribución a la cultura musical de los Jívaros del Ecuador', Folklore americano, no.25 (1976), 141–57
N.E. Whitten jr: Sacha Runa: Ethnicity and Adaptation of Ecuadorian Jungle Quichua (Urbana, IL, 1976)
C.A. Coba Andrade: 'Estudio sobre el tumank o tsayantur, arco musical del Ecuador', Folklore americano, no.25 (1978), 79–100
W. Belzner: 'Music, Modernization and Westernization among the Macuma Shuar', Cultural Transformations and Ethnicity in Modern Ecuador, ed. N.E. Whitten jr (Urbana, IL, 1981), 731–48
B. Seitz: 'Quichua Songs to Sadden the Heart: Music in a Communication Event', LAMR, ii (1981), 223–51

COASTAL

J. Cornejo: Chigualito-Chigualó: biografía completo del villancio ecuatoriano (Guayaquil, 1959)
N.E. Whitten jr: Class, Kinship and Power in an Ecuadorian Town: the Negroes of San Lorenzo (Stanford, CA, 1965)
N.E. Whitten jr and C. Aurelio Fuentes: '"Baile marimba" Negro Folk Music in Northwest Ecuador', Journal of the Folklore Institute, iii (1966), 168–91
N.E. Whitten jr: 'Personal Networks and Musical Contexts in the Pacific Lowlands of Colombia and Ecuador', Man, new ser., iii (1968), 50–63; repr. in Afro-American Anthropology, ed. N.E. Whitten jr and J.F. Szwed (New York, 1970), 203–17
N.E. Whitten jr: 'Ritual Enactment of Sex Roles in the Pacific Lowlands of Ecuador-Colombia', Ethnology, xiii/2 (1974), 129–43
T. White: 'The Marimba from Esmeraldas, Ecuador', Percussionist, xvi (1978), 1–8

RECORDINGS

Arpegios del Alma: Luís Aníbal Granja y su conjunto de arpa y guitarra, formado por tres notables ejecutantes – Gonzalo Castro, Bolívar Ortiz y Segundo Guaña, Discos Granja 351-0014 (1963)
Afro-Hispanic Music from Western Colombia and Ecuador, coll. N.E. Whitten jr, Folkways F-4376 (1967)
Music of the Jívaro of Ecuador, coll. M.J. Harner, rec. 1956–7, Folkways F-4386 (1972)
Material on Chachi culture, coll. M. Plaza de Tambaco, rec. 1975, Instituto Otavaleño de Antropología IOA.Ecu. ProV.Esmeraldas, 102P-64M [archive collection]
El mundo musical de la Salasacas: Grupo Folklórico Salasaca, IFESA ORION LP6222
Folklore de mi tierra: Conjunto Indígena 'Peguche', IFESA ORION 330-0063 (1977)
Marimba Cayapas: típica marimba esmeraldeña, ONIX-Fediscos LP-50031 (1979)
Soul Vine Shaman, coll. N. Crawford, Neelon Crawford NC-S-7601 (1979) [incl. notes by N.E. Whitten jr and others]
Ecuador: Quechua Collection, coll. J.M. Schechter, rec. 1979–80, Library of Congress AFS 24, 124–24, 203 [archive collection]
Lowland Tribes of Ecuador, coll. D.B. Stiffler, Folkways F-4375 (1986)

Clásicas de la canción ecuatoriana, perf. Alfredo Rolando Ortiz, Famoso 22201023 (1989)
Los grandes de la bomba: con Fabián Congo y Milton Tadeo, Novedades LP323102 (1989)
Música etnográfica y folklórica del Ecuador: culturas – Shuar, Chachi, Quichua, Afro, Mestizo, coll. J. Peñín, R. Velasquez and C.A. Coba Andrade, Instituto Otavaleño de Antropología 5748–5750 (1990) [incl. notes by C.A. Coba Andrade]

GERARD BÉHAGUE (I), JOHN M. SCHECHTER (II)

Eda-Pierre, Christiane (b Fort de France, Martinique, 24 March 1932). Martinique soprano. She studied in Paris, making her début in 1958 at Nice as Leïla (Les pêcheurs de perles). She sang Pamina at Aix-en-Provence (1959), Lakmé at the Opéra-Comique (1961) and made her début at the Paris Opéra (1962) as Fatima (Rameau's Les Indes galantes). In 1964 she took part in the first public performance of Rameau's Les boréades at La Maison de la Radio, Paris. In Chicago (1966–76) she sang Leïla, Stravinsky's Nightingale and Antonia (Les contes d'Hoffmann), and at Wexford Lakmé (1970) and Imogene in Il pirata (1976). Having sung Countess Almaviva with the Paris Opéra at the Metropolitan (1976), she made her début with the Metropolitan company as Konstanze (1980), and in Brussels (1982–4) sang three further Mozart roles: Electra, Vitellia and Donna Elvira. She created the Angel in Messiaen's Saint François d'Assise at the Opéra in 1983 (a part she later recorded) and sang the title role in Schumann's Genoveva on its French stage première at Montpellier (1985). With an attractive stage personality and a highly flexible voice, Eda-Pierre excelled above all in coloratura roles such as Konstanze (of which she made an admired recording with Colin Davis), the Queen of Night, Zerbinetta, Olympia, which she sang at Salzburg (1980), and Catharine Glover (La jolie fille de Perth), which she recorded for the BBC. She was also a fine interpreter of modern music and created several works specially written for her: Pierre Capdevielle's Les amants captifs (1960); Gilbert Amy's D'un espace déployé (1973); Charles Chaynes's cantata Pour un monde noir (1978) and his monologue Erzébet (1983).

ELIZABETH FORBES

Eddy, (Hiram) Clarence (b Greenfield, MA, 23 June 1851; d Chicago, 10 Jan 1937). American organist. He studied with Dudley Buck in Hartford, Connecticut; in 1867 and for two and a half years from 1871 with Karl August Haupt and Carl Albert Loeschhorn in Berlin. Following an extended European tour, he returned to the USA and took up a series of positions as organist: in Chicago at the First Congregational Church (1874–6); at Temple Beth El, New York; and later at the First Presbyterian Church, Oakland, California (1916–19). Between 1895 and 1903 he was resident in Paris. Eddy travelled widely in the USA, Canada, and Europe, and gave hundreds of recitals; he quickly established a reputation as the leading American concert organist of his time. He was the first American organist to give concerts extensively in Europe. He was important in elevating the standard of American organ playing and in extending its repertory; his programmes included most of the standard German repertory, including nearly all of Bach's works, and much American music. He designed three instruments, including the three-manual Johnson & Son organ in Hershey Music Hall, Chicago, on which he gave a notable series of 100 recitals with no repetitions of literature. He was also active as a teacher and composer, and compiled several anthologies of organ music (1881–1909) and an organ method (1917–20). He published an important series of reminiscences in The Diapason (April 1932 to May 1933).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W.S.B. Matthews: 'Clarence Eddy, Organ Virtuoso', Music, vii (1894–5), 492–506
G.W. James: 'Reminiscences of Clarence Eddy', American Organist, ii (1919), 187–92
R.L. Fox: Clarence Eddy; his Life and Works (DMA diss., U. of Michigan, 1987)
W. Osborne: Clarence Eddy: Dean of American Organists (Richmond, VA, 1999)

WILLIAM OSBORNE, BARBARA OWEN

Eddy, Duane (b Corning, NY, 26 Apr 1938). American rock guitarist. He learned to play guitar at the age of five and moved to Coolidge, Arizona, in his early teens. On leaving high school (1955), he joined Al Casey's combo (Casey, guitar; Larry Knechtel, piano; Steve Douglas, tenor saxophone). With the local disc jockey Lee Hazlewood, the group produced a series of instrumental recordings. Hazlewood convinced Eddy to adopt a style that emphasized the melody, played on the bass strings, yet maintained the blues and country influences of Chet Atkins. The result was a series of hit singles, notably Rebel Rouser (Jamie, 1958), all with a distinctive pattern: short bursts of lead guitar and saxophone over a loping bass line and rhythm-guitar riffs. The recordings were enhanced by Hazlewood's imaginative use of various types of electronic echo. Both the production and Eddy's guitar style heavily influenced the succeeding generation of rock guitarists, notably Bruce Springsteen. Eddy went on to make recordings for RCA and other labels without Hazlewood but with less aesthetic and commercial success. He maintained a select following through successive years of touring, but only regained chart prominence with Play me like you play your guitar (1975) and a cover version of his own Peter Gunn, performed with the synthesizer group Art of Noise (1986).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Shaw: disc notes, The Vintage Years, Duane Eddy, Sire 37072 (1975)
D. Rogers: Rock 'n' Roll (London and Boston, 1982)
D. Menn, ed.: 'Duane Eddy', Secrets from the Masters: Conversations with Forty Great Guitar Players (New York, 1992), 55–9

DAVE MARSH

Eddy, Nelson (b Providence, RI, 29 June 1901; d Miami Beach, FL, 6 March 1967). American baritone and actor. He moved with his family in 1915 to Philadelphia, where he studied singing with David Bispham. He made his début in a musical play (The Marriage Tax) at the Philadelphia Academy of Music in 1922, and also sang roles with the Philadelphia Civic Opera and the Philadelphia Operatic Society before appearing at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1924. He spent the years 1928 to 1933 giving concert tours throughout the USA. He made his first film in 1933 and achieved fame two years later when he starred with Jeanette MacDonald in Naughty Marietta, the success of which led to their appearing together in seven further film musicals, including Rose Marie (1936), Maytime (1937), New Moon (1940) and Bitter Sweet (1940). Eddy made several recordings and continued to perform on radio, television and in concerts up to the time of his death.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

'Eddy, Nelson', CBY 1943

E. Knowles: The Films of Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy (South Brunswick, NJ, 1975)

ROBERT SKINNER

Ede, Gilles [Aegidius] van den. See VAN DEN EEDEN, GILLES.

Edel, Yitzhak (b Warsaw, 1 Jan 1896; d Tel-Aviv, 14 Dec 1973). Israeli composer and teacher of Polish birth. He was brought up in his grandfather's Hassidic home, where he absorbed Jewish folk and liturgical music and learnt to play the violin. A period in cosmopolitan Russia (1913–22) caused him to doubt the significance of his Jewishness, but back in Warsaw he regained his faith through Zionism. He taught music in Hebrew high schools and the Janusz Korczak orphanage, conducted the Hashomer Hatza'ir Choir, for which he arranged Jewish folksongs and composed, and founded the Hevrat Dorshei Musika Ivrit (Society for the Promotion of Hebrew Music) in 1928. In the previous year he had graduated from the State High School of Music, where he studied composition with Szymanowski, though the violin was his principal subject. He moved in 1929 to Palestine. In Tel-Aviv he worked as a teacher and choir director at the Lewinsky Teachers' Seminary until 1965, and then in the Kibbutzim seminar at the Tel-Aviv Conservatory, his aim being to develop Jewish consciousness among his many pupils. From the 1930s on, most of Edel's works were vocal, usually setting biblical texts and Israeli poetry. A deep attachment to Jewish musical traditions is evident in almost all of his modal themes, and is fully expressed in the hazanic recitatives of his major work, the folk cantata Lamitnadvim ba'am ('To the People's Volunteers'). His skill in developing and transforming these favourite materials into unified classical structures is also exemplified in Capriccio, Israeli Dance and Tehilim ('Psalms').

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Hora: Paraphrase on Arise Brother, 1943; Capriccio [arr. pf work], 1946; Israeli Dance, pf/orch, 1950; Sinfonietta rusticana, 1969

Choral: Mourning La'ben (cant.), 1956; Lamitnadvim ba'am [To the People's Volunteers] (folk cant., H.N. Bialik), 1957; Eternal Love (cant.), cantor, SATB, org, 1963; *c*20 songs, *c*100 folksong arrs.

Chbr and solo inst: Galut, str qt, 1931; Divertimento, wind qnt, 1935; Sonatina, ob, pf, 1943; Capriccio, pf, 1946; Israeli Dance, pf/orch, 1950; Suite in memoriam the Polish Victims of the Holocaust, vn, vc, pf, 1947 [also arr. ob, cl, bn, pf]; Madrigal, vn/vc, pf, 1949; Caprice, vn, pf, 1950; Mixolydian Str Qt, 1957; Triptyque, pf, 1965

Solo vocal: Tehilim [Psalms], S, str qt, 1965; *c*20 songs with pf/orch

Principal publishers: Dvir, Israel Music Institute, Levinsky Teachers' Seminarium, Merkaz Letarbut Ulechinuch, Trans-Continental

WRITINGS

Hashir ha'eretz Israeli [The Palestinian song] (Tel-Aviv, 1946)

Yessodot hamusika [The elements of music] (Tel-Aviv, 1953)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Uriel, ed.: Edel, Yitzhak: his Doctrine on Education and Music (Israel, 1980)

A. Tischler: A Descriptive Bibliography of Art Music by Israeli Composers (Warren, MI, 1988)

Y. Cohen: Neimej smiroth Israel [The heirs of the Psalmist: Israel's new music] (Tel-Aviv, 1990)

NATHAN MISHORI

Edelawer, Hermann. See EDLERAWER, HERMANN.

Edelinck [Elinck, Elinc], Pieter (*fl c*1500). North Netherlandish composer. He was choirmaster at the Nieuwe Kerk in Delft from 1504 to 1506 (his son Cornelis was a chorister at the same church 1500–06). His four known songs, all with Middle Dutch texts, are ascribed to him only in the Segovia choirbook (E-SE) as 'Petrus elinc' (often misread as 'Petrus eline'); all are for three voices and have the same G-Dorian tonal structure. Verlanghen ghij is also ascribed to Jannes Agricola, a singer active at 's-Hertogenbosch between 1486 and 1496.

WORKS
all for 3 voices

Adieu natuerlic leven mijn; ed. in Baker [on famous text and melody known from other contemporary settings; see Bonda]

Dat ic mijn lyden aldus helen moet; ed. in Smits van Waesberghe (from Maastricht fragments) and in MRM, vii (1973) (from I-Fn B.R.229, ascribed to Jannes Agricola); music also in I-Bc Q17

Hoert hier mijn liver gheselle; ed. in Baker

Verlanghen ghij doet mijnder herten pijn; ed. J. Wolf, 25 driestemmige Oud-Nederlandsche Liederen (Amsterdam and Leipzig, 1910) (from GB-Lbl Add.35087) and in Smits van Waesberghe (from Maastricht fragments)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Smits van Waesberghe: 'Een 15de eeuws muziekboek van de stadsminstrelen von Maastricht?', Renaissance-Muziek 1400–1600: donum natalicium René Bernard Lenaerts (Leuven, 1969), 247–72

N.K. Baker: An Unnumbered Manuscript of Polyphony in the Archives of the Cathedral of Segovia: its Provenance and History (diss., U. of Maryland, 1978)

M.A. Vente, ed.: Bouwstenen voor een geschiedenis der toonkunst in de Nederlanden, iii (Amsterdam, 1980)

V. de Lama de la Cruz: Cancionero musical de la Catedral de Segovia (Valladolid, 1984)

J.W. Bonda: De meerstemmige Nederlandse liederen van de vijftiende en zestiende eeuw (Hilversum, 1996)

ROB C. WEGMAN

Edelmann, Jean-Frédéric [Johann Friedrich] (b Strasbourg, 5 May 1749; d Paris, 17 July 1794). Alsatian composer. He studied law at Strasbourg University under the patronage of Baron de Dietrich, together with the baron's son, Philippe-Frédéric Dietrich. In about 1774 Edelmann went to Paris where he became famous as a composer, harpsichordist and teacher. Méhul and Jean-Louis Adam, father of Adolphe Adam, were among his students. 15 volumes of piano music with string accompaniment, published between 1775 and 1786, as well as his activities composing and arranging at the Paris Opéra, bear witness to his success. In 1789 Edelmann returned to Strasbourg and was appointed administrator of the Lower Rhine. At first he worked side-by-side with Philippe-Frédéric Dietrich, who was elected mayor of Strasbourg in 1790 and who played host to C.-J. Rouget de Lisle's first rendering of the Marseillaise in 1792. In the same year Dietrich and Edelmann joined rival political factions. Edelmann's testimony contributed to Dietrich's execution under the guillotine on 28 December 1793. Following various accusations as traitors Edelmann and his brother, the organist and keyboard maker Geofrey-Louis [Gottfried Ludwig] Edelmann (1753–94), were also guillotined on 17 July 1794, though their names were officially cleared during the subsequent reaction against the Reign of Terror. Edelmann's historical position has been tainted, however, by his political activities during the Revolutionary period. He was survived by Claudine Marcelline, née Caire, whom he had married on 18 June 1793, and their two sons, of whom Jean Frédéric (b 17 Feb 1795) became an influential musician in Havana.

All of Edelmann's instrumental music was written for harpsichord with string accompaniment ad libitum. While the accompanying parts remain totally dependent on the keyboard in so far as they shadow its melodic line or support its harmony, they add an expressive dimension to the performance as evidenced by numerous dynamic devices which could not be executed on a harpsichord. The evocative titles of sonata movements, such as Les adieux d'E (op.2 no.3), La capricieuse (op.7 no.1), Avec énergie (op.9 no.1), Les regrets d'Herminie (op.15 no.3), indicate Edelmann's interest in the tradition of the character piece in the manner of Couperin, his awareness of Empfindsamkeit as exemplified by C.P.E. Bach, and his search for instrumental representation of dramatic scenes. However, his instrumental compositions are devoid of memorable thematic invention or decisive harmonic planning. His themes are often set out in triadic figuration or in scales, while phrases are treated sequentially. The left hand usually features an Alberti bass and the overall harmonic rhythm is slow. The development sections sometimes contain unusual harmonic progressions and continuous diminution of phrases. Occasionally the recapitulation of the original theme is delayed until the end, or is omitted altogether.

Among his works for the stage, Ariane dans l'isle de Naxos was performed almost every year between 1782 and 1801. In the first part of the work Theseus's psychological conflict is interspersed with choruses of soldiers urging him to depart from Naxos, and in the second part Ariadne's mourning comprises a dialogue with a chorus of nymphs. Edelmann set these two dramatic scenes as short, interwoven recitatives, arias and choruses; the characters' perturbed feelings are expressed through chromatic alterations and frequent dynamic changes. The work bears stylistic similarities to Gluck's Orphée and Iphigénie en Aulide which Edelmann arranged for the piano; it falls historically into the period after Gluck's departure from Paris and before Salieri's arrival, when the success of Piccinni had reached its peak.

WORKS

printed works first published in Paris

VOCAL

La bergère des Alpes (scène lyrique, P.-J. Moline), Paris, Tuilleries, 20 July 1781; as op.11 (*c*1781)
Esther (orat), Paris, Concert Spirituel, 8 April 1781; lost
Ariane dans l'isle de Naxos (drame lyrique, 1, Moline), Paris, Opéra, 24 Sept 1782 (*c*1782)
Feu (ballet, 1, from P.-C. Roy: Les éléments), Paris, Opéra, 24 Sept 1782; airs (*c*1782)
Diane et l'amour (opéra-ballet, Moline), Paris, Jeunes-Elèves, 1802, mentioned in FétisB

ed., with J.-L. Adam: airs by other composers, 1v, hpd, vn, in Délices d'Euterpe (1778–84)

INSTRUMENTAL

for list of various editions with thematic index, see Benton, FAM

Hpd, vn ad lib: 6 sonates, op.1 (1775); 6 sonates, op.2 (1776), nos.1–2 ed. in DTB, xxviii, Jg.xvi (1915/R); [2] Divertissements, op.3 (1776); 4 sonates, op.5 (1777); 3 sonates, op.6 (1778); 2 sonates, op.7 (1779); 3 sonates, op.8 (1779), no.2 by Edelmann's sister, no.1 ed. in MGG1; 4 sonates, op.10 (1782)
Others: Sinfonie, hpd, acc. 2 vn, 2 hn, b ad lib, op.4 (1776); 4 quatuor, hpd, 2 vn, va, op.9 (1781); Concerto, hpd, orch, op.12 (1782); 4 sonates en quatuor, hpd, acc. 2 vn, b ad lib, op.13 (1784); 3 concerts, hpd, 2 vn, va, op.14 (1785); 4 divertissements, hpd, 2 vn, va, op.15 (1786); Airs, hpd/pf, op.16 (1788)
Kbd/harp arrs.: excerpts from C.W. Gluck: Orphée et Euridice, Iphigénie en Aulide; chaconne from E.-J. Floquet: L'union de l'amour et des arts, vn ad lib

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EitnerQ; FétisB; GerberL; GerberNL; MGG1 (E. Reeser); NewmanSCE
G. de Saint-Foix: 'Les premiers pianistes parisiens, III: J.-F. Edelmann', ReM, v/7–8 (1923–4), 187–91
G. Favre: La musique française de piano avant 1830 (Paris, 1953/R)
R. Benton: 'Jean-Frédéric Edelmann, a Musical Victim of the French Revolution', MQ, l (1964), 165–87
R. Benton: 'The Instrumental Music of Jean-Frédéric Edelmann: a Thematic Catalogue and List of Early Editions', FAM, xi (1964), 79–88

MICHAEL FEND

Edelmann, Moritz (b Greiffenburg [now Gryfów Ślaski], Silesia; d Zittau, 6 Dec 1680). German composer and organist. His first documented position was as organist at Torgau between 1660 and 1663. From the latter year he lived at Halle, first as organist of the Ulrichskirche, then, from 1672, as organist to the court of Duke Albrecht as well as at the Liebfrauenkirche and the cathedral. Although his duties included the composition of a considerable amount of church music, only a single work by him seems to survive, Triumph! denn Jesu lebt, for five voices (in D-Z). In 1676 he moved to Zittau, near his birthplace, to succeed Hammerschmidt as organist of the Johanniskirche. While at Zittau he composed the incidental music (now lost) to the school plays of Christian Weise. Mattheson stated that in 1673 he wrote a treatise, Vom Gebrauch der Con- und Dissonanzen, but this too seems not to have survived.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MatthesonGEP; WaltherML
J.H. Zedler: Grosses vollständiges Universal-Lexicon aller Wissenschaften und Künste (Halle and Leipzig, 1734), col.212
W. Serauky: Musikgeschichte der Stadt Halle, ii/1 (Halle and Berlin, 1939/R)

GEORGE J. BUELOW

Edelmann, Otto (b Brunn am Gebirge, nr Vienna, 5 Feb 1917). Austrian bass-baritone. He studied in Vienna with Lierhammer and Grüner Graarud, making his début in 1937 at Gera as Mozart's Figaro. From 1938 to 1940 he was engaged at Nuremberg. In 1947 he joined the Vienna Staatsoper, where he made his début as the Hermit (Der Freischütz). At the first two postwar Bayreuth festivals (1951, 1952) he sang Hans Sachs, recording the role in 1951 with Karajan; he again sang Sachs at the Edinburgh Festival (1952, with the Hamburg Opera) and at his Metropolitan début (1954). He sang Ochs in the first opera performance in the new Grosses Festspielhaus, Salzburg, in 1960. His repertory also included Leporello, Rocco, Amfortas, King Henry (Lohengrin), Gurnemanz, Plunkett (Martha) and Dulcamara. Apart from his genial Hans Sachs, his recordings include an exuberant Ochs in Karajan's famous 1956 Rosenkavalier and Pizarro in Furtwängler's 1953 Fidelio.

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Eden, Gilles [Aegidius] van den. See VAN DEN EEDEN, GILLES.

Eden-Tamir Duo. Israeli piano duo. It was formed in 1952 by Bracha Eden (b Jerusalem, 15 July 1928) and Alexander Tamir (b Vilnius, 2 April 1931). They both studied at the Rubin Academy of Music, Jerusalem (Tamir with Schroeder, Eden with Schroeder and Tal), graduating in 1952; in 1955 they continued studies with Vronsky and Babin at the Aspen Music Festival. They made their début in Israel in 1954, then appeared in New York (1955) and Rome (1956), where they won the 1957 Vercelli Competition; in 1957 they also appeared in London and Paris. They are directors of the Fannie and Max Targ Music Centre, Jerusalem, and senior professors at the Rubin Academy. During the 1990s they began to perform and teach regularly in China, Russia and Poland, and in 1997 they became directors of the International Duo Piano Seminary, established as a joint project of the Warsaw Academy of Music and the Rubin Academy. The duo have had considerable influence on the development of the repertory and have made an important contribution to the revival of neglected works for two pianos and piano duet, including works by Czerny, Clementi, Dussek and Hummel, and the original two-piano version of Brahms's Piano Quintet in F minor. Their many recordings include the complete music for two pianos and piano duet of Mozart, Schubert and Rachmaninoff, and works by Bach, Brahms, Debussy, Ravel, Bartók, Poulenc and Lutosławski. Besides many works from the standard repertories they play much contemporary music: in 1955 they gave the American première of Lutosławski's Paganini Variations, and in 1968, with Stravinsky's permission, gave the first public performance of the piano duet version of The Rite of Spring, which they subsequently recorded. Tamir has made several transcriptions for piano duo and duet (including those of Weinberger's Schwanda and Rachmaninoff's Symphonic Dances), and has written a few works for piano duo, generally using electronic and musique concrète elements.

WILLIAM Y. ELIAS/R

Eder, Helmut (b Linz, 26 Dec 1916). Austrian composer and conductor. He began to study music seriously after World War II; his principal teachers included Heinrich Schiff, Orff, Fritz Lehmann and Johann Nepomuk David. From 1950 to 1967 he taught at the Linz Conservatory, where he also conducted and organized concerts of avant-garde music. He was appointed to a professorship in composition at the Salzburg Mozarteum in 1967, a post he held until his retirement in 1986. While in Salzburg, Eder was in close artistic contact with many distinguished visiting soloists and ensembles. His honours include the Salzburg music prize (1992) and commissions from the Salzburg Festival, the Easter Festival and the Mozart Week of the Internationale Stiftung Mozarteum.

A versatile and prolific composer, Eder has written in a wide range of genres and styles. In the late 1940s and early 1950s he was influenced by the neo-classicism of Hindemith and David. This was followed by a period of dodecaphonic composition that lasted into the 1960s. Later, he became preoccupied with Klangflächen music, writing works concerned with the depth and density of planes of sound. His openness to new techniques has been demonstrated by his electronic music experiments of 1959 and his television opera Der Kardinal.

WORKS
(selective list)

for complete list see Gruber and Kraus (1988)

Stage: Das Teehaus (ballet), 1954, frag.; Moderner Traum (ballet), 1957, Linz, 29 Sept 1957; Oedipus (op, H. Weinstock, after Sophocles), 1958, Linz, 30 Sept 1960; Der Kardinal (op, 1, E. Brauner), 1962, Linz, 29 May 1965; Anamorphose (ballet), 1963, Linz, 22 June 1963; Die Irrfahrten des Odysseus (ballet, after O. Abt), 1965, Bregenz, 11 Aug 1965; Die weisse Frau (op, 1, K. Kleinschmidt, after J.L.C. and W.C. Grimm), 1966; Konjugation 3 (op, R. Bayr), 1969, Vienna, July 1969; Georges Dandin (Der betrogene Ehemann) (op, 3), 1979, Linz, 6 Oct 1979; Mozart in New York (op, 3, H. Rosendorfer), 1989–91, Salzburg, 15 Aug 1991

Orch: Pezzo sereno, 1958; Sym. no.3, 1959; Concerto semiserio, 2 pf, orch, 1960; Sym. no.1, 1962; Sym. no.2, 1962; Concerto a dodici, str, 1963; Syntagma, 1967; Org Conc. 'L'homme armé', 1969; Metamorphosen über ein Fragment von Mozart, fl, ob, str qt, orch, 1970; Sym. no.4 'Choral', 1973–5; Jubilatio, 1976; Sym. no.5 'Org', 1979–80; Haffner Conc., fl, orch, 1983–4; Notturni 'von Tänzern, Träumern und allerlei Vogelsang', fl, ob, str, 1983; Concertino, 1984; Duetto-Conc., 2 fl, orch, 1991–2; Vertraute Räume, chbr orch, 1992; Sym. no.6, 1994; Ob Conc., 1996

Vocal: Cadunt umbrae (Bayr), A, 8 female vv, orch, tape, 1974–83; Non sum qualis eram (orat, H. Vogg), S, Bar, B, chorus, orch, 1975; Divertimento, S, orch, 1976; Missa est, 3 solo vv, 2 mixed choruses, orch, 1986; many a cappella choruses; lieder

Chbr and solo inst: Str Trio, 1957; Wind Qnt, 1958; Impressioni, str qt, 1966; Septet, fl, ob, cl, bn, 2 hn, tpt, 1970; Melodia-Ritmica, 12 vc, 1972–3; Cl Qnt, 1982; Str Qt no.3, 1985; Aulodie, fl, bn/vc, db, perc, 1986; Wind Qnt no.3, 1987–8; Str Qt no.4, 1991; Qnt, str qt, pf, 1992; 4 Fantasiestücke, hn, pf, 1993; Trio, cl, va, pf, 1994; org pieces; works for solo inst, pf; other chbr works

MSS in A-Wn

Principal publisher: Doblinger

BIBLIOGRAPHY

LZMÖ [incl. further bibliography, discography]
G. Gruber: 'Zum Werk Helmut Eders', Musikalische Dokumentation Helmut Eder (Vienna, 1987), 7–11
G. Gruber and G. Kraus: Helmut Eder (Vienna, 1988)

GERNOT GRUBER

Eder, Joseph. Austrian firm of music publishers. It was founded by Joseph Eder (b Vienna, 26 July 1760; d Vienna, 17 Feb 1835), who originally sold fancy goods and cheap engravings by the Prague publisher Balzer in the provinces. He later became a partner in the Vienna branch of Balzer's firm, and in 1789 its proprietor. On 16 September 1789 he opened a fine art and copper engraving shop in the Trattnerhof, Vienna, which moved from there to the house 'Zum Goldenen Krone' in the Graben on 20 June 1792. With his first music prospectus on 19 April 1794, Eder began a series of isolated attempts at publishing, which gained considerable impetus when Ignaz Sauer became a partner (of Joseph Eder & Comp.) on 2 November 1796; the partnership ended in January 1798, when Sauer founded his own music publishing firm, Zu den Sieben Schwestern. Eder's brisk publishing activity is demonstrated by the fact that 511 works had appeared by 1808; the disturbances of war in 1809 and 1814, however, caused a standstill.

Eder's daughter married Jeremias Bermann (b 1770; d 2 Jan 1855), and Eder took his son-in-law into the firm in 1811 (from 25 April 1812 the firm was once again known as Joseph Eder & Comp.). At the time of the Vienna Congress (1815) numerous works appeared in joint publication with the Vienna firms Steiner, G. Cappi, Mollo, Mechetti, Maisch, Weigl and Traeg. When Eder retired in 1817 Bermann took over the business, adopting the name Besitzer der Joseph Ederschen Kunst- und Musikalienhandlung. The firm had been stagnating since 1816; despite a revival of activity that can probably be attributed to Joseph Czerný's collaboration, from 1828 it issued printed music only sporadically. In that year Jeremias Bermann took on his son Joseph Bermann as a sleeping partner, which legal position was recorded when the firm was renamed Bermann & Son. The firm had become unimportant as music publishers, and on 19 October 1847 Jeremias Bermann returned his licence (Joseph Bermann had obtained a licence for a music business on 11 August 1847).

The firm's output consisted mainly of compositions by minor masters resident in Vienna as well as occasional arrangements of works by Haydn and Mozart; the only original edition is Beethoven's op.10 (Beethoven's 'Pathétique' Sonata and the variations on Tändeln und Scherzen were taken over from F.A. Hoffmeister, and Das Glück der Freundschaft op.88 from H. Löschenkohl). J.B. Vanhal is represented by 60 works from his late period.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DeutschMPN; WurzbachL

A. Weinmann: Verzeichnis der Musikalien des Verlages Joseph Eder–Jeremias Bermann (Vienna, 1968)

ALEXANDER WEINMANN

Edgcumbe, Richard. See MOUNT EDGCUMBE, RICHARD.

Edinburgh. Capital city of Scotland. It was the seat of government until 1707. It was also the largest town in Scotland before 1800 and its artistic capital until 1880, when these features were ceded to Glasgow. Edinburgh's main periods of musical excellence were the 16th and 18th centuries, though there have been interesting local developments since the mid-1960s. The city's modern musical reputation rests largely on its annual international festival, inaugurated in 1947. A new Scottish parliament, opened on 1 July 1999, renews Edinburgh's status as a flourishing capital city.

1. General history. 2. Festival.

1. GENERAL HISTORY. During the 16th century Edinburgh's musical life revolved around the court. King James IV patronized the composer Robert Carver, whose masses and motets were probably mostly written for the Scottish Chapel Royal. A native school of partsong and instrumental composition grew up, modelled on the French and English schools but with its own passion and delicacy. An important partsong is the anonymous Departe, departe, a lament for the Master of Erskine, who was killed at the battle of Pinkie on the outskirts of Edinburgh in 1547. The Reformation of 1560 brought art music into disrepute. Church music was immediately reduced to unharmonized psalm tunes. Royal music-making continued at Holyrood Palace with Mary, Queen of Scots (1560s) and James VI (1580s, 1590s), but against a background of public disapproval. When James VI removed to London in 1603, art music in Edinburgh was left without a focus. A nominal Chapel Royal was retained for some decades into the 17th century, but James brought English musicians with him for his one return visit to the city (1617), as did Charles I for his Scottish coronation (1633). An outstanding music book was published in 1635: The Psalmes of David, edited by Edward Millar and containing 200 harmonized metrical psalm tunes, some set in elaborate counterpoint. But the Covenantors' rise to power in 1637 prevented the book from being widely used.

After 50 years of stagnation, Edinburgh reawoke in the 1690s to the continental fashion for Italian Baroque music. The city became an important centre for private music teaching and amateur middle-class music-making, strengths it has retained to the present day. The first public concerts were probably given in 1693, and a detailed programme survives for a St Cecilia's Day concert in 1695. The Edinburgh Musical Society was formally constituted in 1728, and gave concerts weekly; it built St Cecilia's Hall in 1762. Music publishing restarted in the city in 1727, and by 1760 had grown to a significant business; notable publications at this time were Barsanti's Concerti grossi op.3 (1742), Pasquali's textbook Thorough-bass made Easy (1757), the Earl of Kelly's six overtures op.1 (1761), and the songbook The Scots Musical Museum (1787–1803), in which many of Robert Burns's songs appeared for the first time. After 1720 Edinburgh was able to support composers of considerable merit, such as William McGibbon, James Oswald, Francesco Barsanti, Charles McLean, Domenico Corri, J.G.C. Schetky, the Earl of Kelly and Robert Mackintosh.

The Napoleonic Wars reduced Edinburgh once again to a provincial musical centre. The Edinburgh Musical Society closed in 1798, and for the next 30 years promoting concerts was a risky business. Publishing was reduced to books of national songs and parlour ephemera. At the same time, transport greatly improved, making whistle-stop tours possible for visiting virtuosos and underlining the gulf between international standards and what Edinburgh could make from its own resources. This laid the foundations for a musical inferiority complex – anything good must come from outside – which lasted into the 20th century. Since the early 19th century, Edinburgh's finest native musical talent has usually fulfilled itself in other places. One example of such talent is Alexander Mackenzie, born in Edinburgh in 1847; his autobiography describes the city in the 1870s as bustling with musical activity and visiting celebrities, but with no real opportunities for locals. He later found fame in London as a composer, became principal of the Royal Academy of Music, and invented the Associated Board examination system.

Nevertheless, by the 1880s Edinburgh's musical life had definitely improved. A main cause of this was the formation of amateur choirs: music festivals were held in 1815, 1819, 1824 and 1843, the Edinburgh (Royal) Choral Union was founded in 1858, and the orchestras initially put together to accompany choirs then gave symphony concerts as well. Contemporary Scottish compositions began to be heard (though the composers mainly lived in London), particularly works by Hamish MacCunn, whose opera Jeanie Deans had its première in Edinburgh in 1894. Edinburgh University set up its music faculty in 1893. Music journalism became a regular part of the Scotsman newspaper, and a magazine, The Scottish Musical Monthly, appeared for a few issues in 1894.

The early 20th century was marked by the musical ascendancy of Glasgow over Edinburgh. Glasgow founded Scotland's first and only conservatory in 1890, many of its students coming from Edinburgh; Scotland's first fully professional orchestra in 1891, which gave regular seasons in Edinburgh; the BBC Scottish Orchestra in 1935 (from 1967 the BBC Scottish Symphony Orchestra); Scottish Opera in 1962; and the Scottish Music Information Centre in 1969. Edinburgh's leading musician during this period was Donald Tovey, Reid Professor of Music at Edinburgh University from 1914 to 1940. He founded the Reid Orchestra in 1917 in order to give the city a home-based ensemble. The orchestra performed with such distinguished soloists as Suggia, Hindemith, the Aranyi sisters and Casals, and gave the premières of Tovey's opera The Bride of Dionysus (1929) and of his Cello Concerto (1935). Tovey's programme notes for the orchestra's concerts were collected as the renowned Essays in Musical Analysis (1935–9); in them Tovey complains about working conditions in Edinburgh and 'the severity of its musical climate'.

The climate changed after World War II. The Edinburgh International Festival, founded in 1947 (see §2 below) put Edinburgh back on the world's musical map. The 1950s saw the establishment of the Edinburgh Quartet and the emergence of two fine composers native to Edinburgh, Robert Crawford and Thea Musgrave. In 1969 Leonard Friedman created the Scottish Baroque Ensemble, whose imaginative programmes took daring risks with public taste. This led in 1974 to the founding of the Scottish Chamber Orchestra, which has built up an enviable international reputation.

Smaller ensembles were also founded at this time, such as the New Music Group of Scotland, the McGibbon Ensemble, the Mondrian Trio and the Hebrides Ensemble. Since 1980 the Edinburgh Contemporary Arts Trust has also presented a diverse range of interesting concerts. Edinburgh's amateur musical life has continued to flourish, with regular concerts being given by such groups as the Scottish Sinfonia, Edinburgh Symphony Orchestra, Scottish Chamber Choir, Waverley Singers, and Dunedin Consort.

Buildings for music have greatly improved. In addition to the late 19th-century Lyceum Theatre and Usher Hall, St Cecilia's Hall was refurbished in 1968, the Queen's Hall in 1979, the Playhouse Theatre (3130 seats) in 1985 and the Festival Theatre (1900 seats) in 1994, so that Edinburgh now has two viable opera houses. St Mary's Music School was founded in 1972, and the state education system matched this shortly afterwards by opening special music units at Broughton High School and Flora Stevenson Primary School. Edinburgh University has attracted large numbers of postgraduate music students in recent years, and Napier University opened a school of music in 1996.

The arrival of Peter Maxwell Davies as a part-time Edinburgh resident in the late 1970s had a profound effect on the city's other composers, acting at once as a stimulus, challenge and irritant. Edinburgh, until then a comfortable provincial backwater for composers, suddenly became a working part of the competitive international scene. Adjustment to this new state was painful. The number of composers in the city nevertheless grew, notable ones being David Dorward, John McLeod, Neil Mackay and Peter Nelson (Scots), Edward Harper and Nigel Osborne (English), Hafliði Hallgrímsson (Icelandic) and Lyell Cresswell (New Zealand), as well as such younger figures as Kenneth Dempster and Jane Gardner.

2. Festival. The Edinburgh Festival – officially the Edinburgh International Festival of Music, Drama and the Visual Arts – was inaugurated in 1947. It usually begins in August and continues for three weeks. Its musical character has always been international in outlook. The idea of the festival grew from a suggestion by Rudolf Bing that an additional outlet be found for the Glyndebourne Festival (of which he had been the pre-war manager) when its opera productions were resumed after the war, and also from the desire to renew cultural contact with other countries. The first festival saw the deeply felt reunion of Bruno Walter with the Vienna PO, their first public concert together since the war. Bing was appointed artistic director and organized the first three festivals. He was succeeded by Ian Hunter (1950), Robert Ponsonby (1956), the Earl of Harewood (1961), Peter Diamand (1966), John Drummond (1979), Frank Dunlop (1984) and Brian McMaster (1991).

The festival came to be in a city imbued with a theological suspicion of display but blessed with a highly theatrical landscape. Besides its historical significance and distinctive architectural character, Edinburgh has the advantage for a festival of an adequate concert hall (the Usher Hall) and three principal theatres: the King's Theatre, the Edinburgh Festival Theatre and the independently owned Playhouse Theatre. Opera performances are a main feature each year. The Glyndebourne Festival company used to perform regularly, as do most of the British companies, and productions have also been brought from all over Europe and America. The Edinburgh Festival Opera, an ad hoc ensemble for specific productions, was first formed in 1973. In 1988 the Playhouse was used for the first British production of John Adams's Nixon in China.

Most of the principal European orchestras have taken part in the festival, as have several American orchestras and an annual succession of leading international soloists and ensembles. Direct commissions of new works have been few, preference being given to the repetition of contemporary works that have already made an impact elsewhere. The Edinburgh Festival Chorus was formed in 1965 (as the Scottish Festival Chorus) with Arthur Oldham as choirmaster, and has received widespread acclaim.

Some of the wider international contacts at which the festival has aimed were first established through dance: the 1950s saw performances by the Yugoslav Ballet, the first participants from Eastern Europe; the Azuma Kabuki Dancers, the first from Asia; and the Ballets Africains, the first illustration of an indigenous African idiom. Scotland's musical heritage has been represented through the ceilidh, programmes of Gaelic songs and pipe music. The earliest festivals included displays of Scottish piping and dancing on the Castle esplanade, a forerunner of the Military Tattoo, which has become one of the most popular fixtures of the festival. The annual fireworks display is accompanied by the Scottish Chamber Orchestra.

An assortment of amateur and professional supplementary entertainments, collectively known as the Fringe, has been given each year since the festival's founding. These have included operas by Mozart, Donizetti and Menotti (1963) and Milhaud's ballet Le boeuf sur le toit (1966). Since 1979 a Jazz Festival and Folk Festival have run concurrently with the main festival events. The Film Festival organized a 'Music for the Movies' competition in 1991 and showed Abel Gance's 1927 film Napoleon accompanied by the Wren Orchestra playing a score arranged by Carl Davis from the symphonies, piano works and theatre music of Beethoven. Although there have in recent years been some attempts to separate the 'official' festival from the other festivals and the Fringe, the success of Edinburgh's cultural autumn calendar has been largely due to the juxtaposition of amateur and professional.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GENERAL

W. Tytler: 'On the fashionable amusements and entertainments of the last century', Transactions of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, i (Edinburgh, 1792)

C. Rogers: The History of the Chapel Royal in Scotland (Edinburgh, 1882)

A.C. Mackenzie: A Musician's Narrative (London, 1927), 3–18, 63–96

K. Elliott and H.M. Shire: Introduction to Music of Scotland 1500–1700, MB, xv (London, 1957)

H.M. Shire: Song, Dance and Poetry at the Court of Scotland under King James VI (London, 1969)

D. Johnson: Music and Society in Lowland Scotland in the Eighteenth Century (London, 1972)
P. Brett: 'English Music for the Scottish Progress of 1617', Source Materials and the Interpretation of Music: a Memorial Volume to Thurston Dart, ed. I. Bent (London, 1981), 209–26
K. Elliott: Introduction to The Complete Works of Robert Carver, Musica scotica, i (Glasgow, 1996)

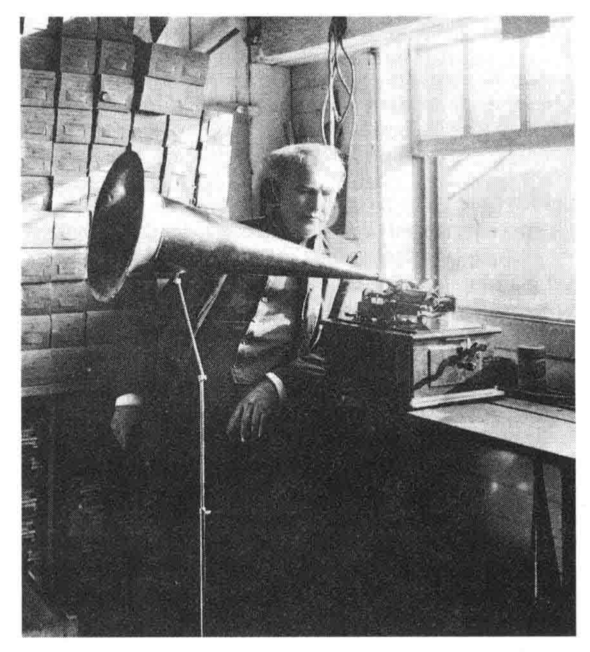
FESTIVAL



Edinburgh Festival: a Review of the First Ten Years 1947–1956 (Edinburgh, 1957) [pubn of the Edinburgh Festival Scoiety]
G. Bruce: Festival in the North (London, 1975)
A. Moffat: The Edinburgh Fringe (London, 1978)
O.D. Edwards: City of a Thousand Worlds: Edinburgh in Festival (Edinburgh, 1991)
The Edinburgh International Festival: a Celebration of Fifty Years in Photographs (Edinburgh, 1996) [pubn of the Edinburgh International Festival]
A. Bain: The Fringe: 50 Years of the Greatest Show on Earth (Edinburgh, 1996)
E. Miller: The Edinburgh International Festival, 1947–1996 (Aldershot, 1996)
R. Wishart: Celebration! (Edinburgh, 1996)

For further bibliography see SCOTLAND.

DAVID JOHNSON (1), NOËL GOODWIN/MICHAEL T.R.B. TURNBULL (2)

Edison, Thomas (Alva) (b Milan, OH, 11 Feb 1847; d West Orange, NJ, 18 Oct 1931). American inventor. He had only a few months of formal schooling before becoming successively a newsboy, a food hawker on trains and a telegraph operator. In 1870, with money received from the sale of telegraphic inventions, he founded a research laboratory. There he constructed the carbon telephone transmitter (1876), the cylinder phonograph (1877) and the first practical electric light (1879). These devices brought him instant fame, and he spent much of the rest of his life in their improvement; he also aided the creation of the myth that surrounds his achievements. The phonograph was a badly flawed novelty when it was first introduced, and Edison abandoned it until the late 1880s when, challenged by Charles Tainter's graphophone, he organized his own recording company. Although he portrayed himself as financially naive, Edison displayed ruthlessness and skill in the subsequent battles between companies. He clung stubbornly to his original ideas, accepting such innovations as disc records and spring-driven machines only under the pressure of competition. He also held strong opinions about music, despite his congenital deafness, and these sometimes adversely affected his choice of artists. Although his vision of the phonograph as a viable recording device for music was largely realized by others, Edison continues to be regarded, in the public mind, as the creator of the recording industry.

The record company bearing his name was established in 1889. Its first catalogue, issued in 1889–90, included works for cornet and woodwind as well as music for band. Early wax cylinders gave way to 80-r.p.m. records from 1912 to 1929, with finer-grooved, longer-playing records from 1926. Except for a small number issued in 1929, Edison's recordings used a vertical ('hill-and-dale') rather than a lateral cut and thus required special playback equipment. His insistence on personally approving artists and repertory recorded by the firm resulted in an unbalanced catalogue. Singers recorded on Edison cylinders include Bonci, Bori, Galeffi, Jörn, Selma Kurz, McCormack, Van Rooy, Scotti and Slezak; later records featured Destinn, Hempel, Giovanni Martinelli, Muzio, Elisabeth Schumann, Teyte, Urlus and Zenatello. After the closure of the business in October 1929, the equipment was used for research purposes until 1957 when it was sold to the McGraw Electric Co. CD reissues of several recordings, especially of Edison Diamond Discs and Edison Needle Records, have been produced.

Thomas Edison with a cylinder phonograph in his laboratory at West Orange, New Jersey, 1906

For further information, see RECORDED SOUND, §I, 2.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T.A. Edison: 'The Phonograph and its Future', North American Review, cxxvi (1878), 527–36
D.D. Runes, ed.: The Diary and Sundry Observations of Thomas Alva Edison (New York, 1948/R)
R. Conot: A Streak of Luck (New York, 1979)
W. Wachhorst: Thomas Alva Edison (Cambridge, MA, 1981)
G.L. Frow: The Edison Disc Phonographs and the Diamond Discs (Sevenoaks, 1982)
J. and S.E. Harvith, eds.: Edison, Musicians, and the Phonograph: a Century in Retrospect (New York, 1987)
P. Israel: Edison: a Life of Invention (New York, 1998)

WILLIAM BROOKS, GEORGE L. FROW

Editing. The preparation of music for publication, performance or study, usually by someone other than the composer. 'The ideal edition need not have all the answers but should control all the questions so that users can feel themselves in possession of the best available knowledge about this music', wrote Joel Sheveloff (1986) about the keyboard music of Domenico Scarlatti; his comment is readily extrapolated to the wider problem of editing art music in the Western tradition.

This article attempts to outline the questions editors might ask about the music they edit, and by so doing address two goals: to unmask some of the 'critically based assumptions and perceptions that usually go unacknowledged' in editing (Brett, 1988), for the benefit of users of editions, and to outline a generalized theory for the editing of Western art music, most of which is closely linked with a written tradition. Musics of other cultures, especially those in which an oral tradition predominates, pose different problems for the editor. Editors in ethnomusicology have developed conventions of their own, particularly in regard to notation, that establish their work as an independent field.

1. Historical attitudes. 2. Principles of critical editing. 3. Towards a general theory. 4. Stemmatic filiation. 5. Procedures. 6. Types of edition.

1. HISTORICAL ATTITUDES. Musicology can claim an illustrious history of editorial practice. Since the formation of the Bach-Gesellschaft in 1850, for the production of a complete edition of the music of J.S. Bach, musicologists have produced an enormous quantity of distinguished editions, from the collected editions of most important composers to the monumental series and national collections. Much of this enterprise was driven by the sheer necessity of making the music accessible. But an element in the undertaking was the creation of a canon, a central core of repertory, whose texts carried the same philological weight as their counterparts in literature and political history. These editions constitute a statement, by the purveyors of the young academic discipline of music, of the seriousness and worthiness of their discipline within the academy. Even their presentation, in imposing folio volumes, reflects the gravity of their intent.

Guido Adler's discussion of editing (1919) highlights the concerns of this enterprise. Although he made stimulating comments about the role of style in evaluating variants, and the need for critical appraisal of sources, he devoted most of his attention to technical matters such as the modernization of notation and modes of indicating editorial intervention. Adler assumed that music editors employed philological methods borrowed from literary editing, and so focussed on problems with the scholarly presentation of music. Source study received much more prominence in a pamphlet by Max Friedländer (1922), who shows that a critical assessment of style provides the only guide for deciding between variant readings. Despite this promising start, no new contributions to the discourse appeared until after World War II, by which time the intellectual approach to editing had changed drastically. Musicologists were reacting to two trends in editing. The first was the production of 'performing' or interpretative editions, most commonly of keyboard music but also of music for solo instruments with keyboard accompaniment, and usually prepared by famous performers. Musicologists complained that the numerous performance instructions added by editors, such as tempo markings, dynamics, articulation, fingering and pedalling, obscured the original notation, and that, because little or no effort had been made to differentiate editorial marks from those in the source, users could not distinguish between them. Already in the last decade of the 19th century, the Königliche Akademie der Künste in Berlin was issuing editions that claimed to be free of such editorial intervention; their name for this type of edition was 'Urtext' ('original text').

Although that term is now largely discredited by scholars, the original conception was praiseworthy: to provide texts that allowed the composer's notation to speak for itself and to permit performers, especially students, to form their own interpretation based on that original text. The concept tended to become commercialized in the post-World War II period through the editions published by Henle and others (see Unverricht's discussion, Feder and Unverricht, 1959), of its unseemly use and the possible remedies afforded by the revision to West German copyright law of 1959.

The objections of the scholarly world to Urtext editions centre on the fact that they do not present what they purport to. One need not go beyond the two principal statements of the term's leading advocates. Günter Henle himself noted (1954) that sometimes an autograph and a first edition differ, in which case the editor must decide what to print; but such a text ceases to be the Urtext, the composer's own written text and becomes the editor's interpretation of it. Georg Feder (Feder and Unverricht, 1959) argues that Urtext editions must be critical editions, although he distinguishes them by their mode of presentation from the kinds of critical edition associated with the traditional collected editions and monumental series. Like Friedländer, he notes the necessity of source studies; and he affirms that Urtext editions are not what they aspire to be in his discussion of five common misunderstandings of the concept, when he notes that an Urtext edition superseded by subsequent scholarship is no longer an Urtext.

The second direction in post-World War II editing that provoked critical reaction centred on the new collected editions of the great composers. As research, largely enabled by the existence of the first wave of scholarly editions, contributed to a deeper knowledge of repertories and their sources, and critical appraisals of that knowledge continued, new editions were needed to keep pace with, and reflect, the latest developments. At the base of these projects lay a sharpening critical perspective. The original collected editions provided an enormous service to musical scholarship by bringing together, for the first time, the works of many important composers in a uniform edition. The post-World War II editions present substantial refinements in virtually every respect, resulting from several generations of research; these newer editions, too, already need revision and will continue to be challenged as research continues. These editions represent nodal points on the continually changing path of musical scholarship.

The initiatives of the 1950s refocussed attention on the preparation of scholarly critical editions that could also be used by performers. That approach stands in marked contrast to the attitude behind the first series of these editions, starting in the 19th century, which consisted largely of philological monuments and gave less attention to performance matters (although in many cases performing material was published in parallel). Musicologists responded to the challenges by considering the relationship between music of the past and the performer. Editors were urged to jettison some of the philological purity of their texts (old clefs, for example) in order to make editions more accessible to performers. At the same time, the need for critical intervention by the editor was recognized without, however, a detailed discussion of what that entailed.

These developments led almost incidentally to a consideration of the historical relationship between composer and performer. If that relationship affects editorial practice in the present, should editors not give weight to its nature in the past? A penetrating assessment of this issue came from Klaus Harro Hilzinger (1974), influenced by the 'genetic' editing of German philology. This approach emphasizes the processes through which a work comes into being instead of the reification of a particular state of the work. Hilzinger identified the promise this conception holds for scholarly editing in music by recognizing that convention occupies a central place in communication between composer and performer via the score. The reconstitution of conventions that governed music of the past requires a consideration of the work's historical context. The interpretative editions, for example, that motivated, in reaction, Urtext editions become primary sources for the reception of the work, a kind of oral history. Alongside these developments, largely confined to German-speaking authors, with a concern for editing rooted in the philological issues surrounding the preparation of the monumental editions since the mid-19th century, came another in the postwar years, in English-speaking nations, associated with the performance of early music. Its pragmatic approach took as a point of departure the creation of clear, usable editions of old music originally written in notation no longer familiar to practising musicians. These editors gave clear precedence to presentation over critical issues.

The one publication from this period to address criticism in editing is Walter Emery's pamphlet Editions and Musicians (1957). Emery begins by condemning 'aesthetic and stylistic criticism' and characterizes editing as 'a quasi-science, and the more scientific it is, the better', based on 'palaeography and bibliography, and historical facts in general'. Some of his observations, however, arise from subjective, critical observations on musical style, rather than objective bibliographical, palaeographical or historical facts; he thereby shows that critical and aesthetic sense is essential to scholarly editing. The most important contribution to date, and the only one to consider the full range of critical issues, is Georg Feder's monograph Musikphilologie (1987). Two central aspects of Feder's treatment elicit discussion below; first, even though Feder realized that the entire editorial process required critical thought, he persisted in dividing the process into 'lower' (bibliographic and mechanical) and 'higher' (interpretative and critical) stages; secondly he implies throughout that the goal of editing is the determination of final compositional intentions, a view seen by literary critics as the 'intentional fallacy'.

2. Principles of critical editing. The present discussion takes the existing discourse as a point of departure for an examination of the critical aspects of editing. Because editing is critical, editions are interpretative and cannot claim to be definitive: no two editors will edit the same piece in precisely the same way. Every piece of music is created under a unique combination of cultural, social, historical and economic circumstances; an acknowledgement of those circumstances, and thus of the uniqueness of each creative product, affects the conception of all editorial projects – each piece, each source and each edition is a special case. A natural corollary is that different repertories require different editorial methods, or even that each edition calls for a unique approach. No set of guidelines could accommodate the plurality of solutions to each editorial problem. Every project generates the editorial procedures that best represent the editor's critical engagement with the subject of the edition and its sources.

There are four principles basic to the nature of editing: it is critical in nature; criticism, including editing, is based in historical inquiry; editing involves the critical evaluation of the semiotic import of the musical text, which is also a historical inquiry; and the final arbiter is the editor's conception of musical style, which again is rooted in historical understanding.

The first tenet arises from the rich tradition of textual criticism in philology. There, every editorial decision is taken in the context of the editor's understanding of the work as a whole; and that understanding can be achieved only through critical evaluation. The establishment of the text, then, far from being mechanical, forms part of the critical dialogue between scholar and work. The meaning of the work and the reading of the text are complementary and interdependent. Editing consists of a series of educated, critically informed choices, that is, the act of interpretation; it occurs at the intersection of the composer's authority and the editor's. Composers exert their authority over sources created by themselves or under their direct supervision, although it is affected and limited by the social, political and economic institutions through which the sources are produced and disseminated. It extends, at least indirectly, to sources whose production they do not directly supervise, as the act of reproduction tacitly acknowledges. When editors come to evaluate both types of source, they apply their own authority in forming judgments about what the sources transmit. In some cases, they must call into question the accuracy of a reading in a source. This is the point of interaction between the authority of the composer, as transmitted in the sources, and that of the editor in the course of evaluating and interpreting them. Editing therefore requires a balance between these authorities; the exact balance in any edition is the product of the editor's critical perspective on the piece and its sources, and that perspective is rooted in an appreciation of the piece's historical context.

The act of communicating the work to an audience is a fully integrated part of the creative process. By entering into this dialogue, artists abandon their autonomy and shape the work to accommodate and facilitate the act of communication. The context, social, cultural, political and economic, impinges on the final form and meaning of the work, which can be understood only as a social artefact. The same applies to the sources. Each source attests a particular historical state of the work; the editor assesses that evidence against the background of the larger historical context in which the piece was created, and the resulting text reflects his or her conception of the piece as it existed in its historical and social environment. Thus each source and each reading is considered as an individual piece of evidence for the work's history. Nevertheless, the piece begins from the composer's original conception, and through all its metamorphoses during the process of its socialization, it is the composer who is responsible for its shape. When textual criticism is undertaken within a historical frame of reference, it discerns the possible influences on the composer and how they are reflected in the sources.

This line of critical and historical inquiry focusses on the relationship between the text of a musical work and the work itself. A written text is not self-sufficient; text and work are not synonymous. For most of the Western art tradition, the act of creating a musical work consists of two stages, composing (usually synonymous with the inscription of the score) and performance. These two steps create a distinction between the work, which depends equally on the score and performance for its existence, and the text, either written (a score) or sounding (a performance) that defines a particular state of the work. The work thus exists in a potentially infinite number of states, whether in writing (the score) or in sound.

The written text, however, holds a central place in our understanding of the work. It is the principal concern of editing, which begins and ends with this physical entity. The editors' critical position observes the distinctions between work and text and between written and sounding texts, and many of the editors' critical decisions depend on their understanding of the work. Nevertheless, editing depends principally on the source texts, and ultimately a text is its product.

Notation also carries a distinctive type of meaning, for the musical text addresses not the listener but the performer. This individual, even if the composer, is a second intermediary between the work and its audience through the medium of performance; and the text functions, initially, as the means of communication between composer and performer. This relationship clarifies the nature of a musical text: it contains a set of instructions to the performer for the execution of the work transmitted. The instructions vary in specificity, but in the Western art tradition at least some details remain at the performer's discretion. Trained musicians can imagine the sounds indicated, but that is not equivalent to reading: it is the aural replication of a performance, and the silent score-reader must interpret the notational symbols just as a performer does to re-create the work.

The nature of these interpretative processes emerges from consideration of the manner in which notation communicates. The individual symbol carries no independent meaning: its meaning arises solely from its context, from which it derives its semiotic import. This in turn derives from two complementary factors that form the semiotic framework for the notation. The first is convention; that is, the assignment of a particular meaning to a specific symbol is arbitrary. There is nothing intrinsic about the addition of a stem that requires a minim to last half as long as a semibreve but convention dictates it. The second factor is the system within which individual signs operate: the relationships between signs, the ways in which their meanings depend on the significance of one another. But more than one morphological system exists, and different systems operate within different conventions. In the common practice period, duple subdivision is assumed and triple must be indicated with a dot. In 15th- and 16th-century notation, however, triple subdivision is indicated by the mensuration with the result that the dot is not obligatory. These two systems, morphologically similar, employ different conventions for indicating triple subdivision; again, both conventions are arbitrary.

Each musical sign, therefore, carries a significance dependent on context and convention. Composers are aware of this and fix the text of their work within a framework. Once the moment of inscription has passed, however, the particular context and conventions are subject to change, and new observers will bring their own set of conventions to the interpretation of the signs. So the interpretation of these signs, in performance (where the investigation of performing practice seeks to provide a guide to interpretation) or in criticism (of which editing is a branch), is a strictly historical issue, one equally rooted in the semiotic import of each sign. The interpreter must re-create, as far as possible, the historical context and conventions applicable to the text of the work, to understand the meaning of each symbol.

The third tenet of this approach calls for an investigation of the semiotic nature of musical notation, also a historical undertaking. In the context of a historical and semiotic investigation of a piece and its sources, editing depends on the editor's conception of the work's style. Taken together, the notational symbols and their semiotic meaning generate a piece's stylistic attributes. Because editing amounts to the fixing of those symbols for a given piece, style ultimately governs many of the final editorial choices. But style does not reside in the notation alone. Because notation permits some discretion to performers, the variability of performance can exert influence on the work's style. Alongside the text, then, the performing options engendered by each work are an equal partner in determining its style.

Style exists within a historical context, and its study is also a historical undertaking: it is influenced by function, genre, existing practice and feasibility of performance. The elements contributing to style appear in a variety of combinations, according to time, place, composer, genre and even the individual piece. Such considerations form a part of the historical investigation of the piece and govern the editor's critical evaluation of readings in its text. Ultimately, editing is a matter of the preference of one reading over another; all readings can be classified as good, possible ones or clear errors.

However, if readings are evaluated on the basis of conceptions of style that arise from the readings themselves, a 'hermeneutic circle' exists. A point of entry, however, can be found, and it depends on the editor's critical acumen and his or her sensitivity to style. As style is defined, the position of individual readings within the developing conception continually changes. All readings are 'good readings' unless shown to be false on stylistic grounds. Good readings are not necessarily authorial; that distinction emerges from a consideration of all readings within the context of the work, the composer and related works and repertories.

Even apparently mechanical errors, such as a missing dot or an added beam that causes a bar to contain the wrong number of beats, are recognizable only because they violate conventional practices that in some measure define style. Because conceptions of style are constantly in flux, such judgments are rarely definitive or unequivocal. Moreover, there is no such thing as an 'obvious error'. Some readings will be deemed impossible within a piece's stylistic boundaries. These are 'clear' errors because, on stylistic grounds, they cannot be reasonable readings. The difference between clear and obvious errors is more than semantic: the latter apparently require no explanation, but the former do. Moreover, all these terms are relative, and a clear error for one editor may be a good reading for another with a different stylistic conception of the piece.

The final category, reasonable competing readings – that is, within the boundaries of the work's style – is often ignored. Textual critics, eager to establish an original or authorial text, have regarded all other readings as unoriginal, non-authorial and therefore errors. The common-error method of stemmatic filiation was introduced to provide a means of eliminating at least some of them. In many cases, editors simply have to choose between them, relying on their conception of the piece and its relationship with its sources.

3. TOWARDS A GENERAL THEORY. Starting from this conceptual framework, a generalized theory for editing can be proposed, within which each editor can develop a particular methodology for the project at hand. While each repertory, even each piece, presents special challenges, there is a common group of problems that underlies the process of editing irrespective of the repertory. (i) What are the nature and the historical situation of a work's sources? (ii) how do they relate? (iii) from the evidence of the sources, what conclusions can be reached about the nature and the historical situation of the work? (iv) how do this evidence and these conclusions shape the editorial decisions made during the establishment of a text? and (v) what is the most effective way of presenting the text? The remainder of this article addresses these stages in the editorial task, examining the ways in which critical thought affects each phase.

Most critical editions are founded on a thorough knowledge of the source materials. The recent collected editions of the works of Bach, Haydn and Mozart, among others, attest to the value of source studies and also confirm that further source research will only enhance our understanding of the music, its creators and practitioners. No edition, however – existing, projected or future – is definitive. New investigations, even of well-known sources, will continue to yield new insights into the music in proportion to the imagination and erudition of the investigators. All sources are both historical documents and repositories of readings. Each source, as a physical artefact, originated in a particular historical context, which directly affects the value and significance of the source for the history of the music it transmits. The authenticity of individual readings, however, still needs verification, regardless of the source's authenticity, in establishing a text: not every reading in a given source carries equal merit.

Any investigation is affected by two features of musical sources: almost all are practical, functional documents, and their production, manuscript or printed, requires specialized, technical knowledge of notation. Musical scores enable performance, and most sources are created for use as performing materials or to serve as an intermediate stage in the production of printed performing materials. There are exceptions, such as the presentation manuscripts prepared under the supervision of Guillaume de Machaut, which contain his collected works, or, some would say, the series of collected editions undertaken in the second half of the 19th century; but these are few. The functional nature of musical sources, as opposed to other types of books (literary, historical or philosophical, for example), is demonstrated by their impermanence. Scraps of music frequently turn up as binding material and endpapers in non-music books: when these sources outlived their usefulness, and their repertories became so outdated or expanded so much that a new book was needed, the obsolete books were destroyed and recycled.

Source research entails gathering the evidence, classifying the sources and evaluating the readings to establish the text. The first of these involves location, inspection, description and transcription. Circumstances usually dictate that the initial work of transcription is undertaken from microfilm or some other form of photographic reproduction; but photography can never reproduce all the details required by an editor and much of the detailed investigation, particularly inspection and description, must await examination of the source itself.

Modern bibliographic resources greatly facilitate the location of sources for the researcher. The editor will then need to determine which ones deserve closer consideration; the more he or she knows of the text's tradition, the better informed any judgment will be at the stage of establishing the text. Printed materials provide special problems, since copies from a press run (even apart from subsequent impressions or editions) may differ in some details: printers make stop-press corrections, engraved plates deteriorate, pieces of movable type shift or fall out, and sheets from different runs may be bound together. It is possible for significant variation to enter a printed text, even within copies produced at the same time. A full understanding of a print's value thus depends on the examination of as many copies as possible to determine the bibliographical status of each and to establish the variability of the text.

The tasks of inspection and description primarily concern the physical state of the source: such evidence may establish or confirm specific historical facts about the source, which can affect its significance. For example, watermarks and the dimensions of ruled staves can aid its dating and identification. Few such details can be checked in photographic reproduction; the bulk of the inspection must take place in the source's repository.

In the descriptions to be published as part of the edition's introduction, form follows function. The minimum required is the positive identification of each source so that users can locate it for themselves, with full identification: for manuscript sources this includes the city and repository where the source is held, with its shelfmark; printed sources too require full bibliographic citation. For printed materials before 1800, the citation should indicate exactly which copies were consulted. Beyond this minimum, the context of the edition and its prospective audience determine the exact form of the description. It may be preferable to publish a full codicological or bibliographical description separately, especially if this led to a fuller discussion of the source's historical circumstances; but most users would appreciate a succinct account of the historical position of the sources.

The principal task when primary sources are used in editing is transcription. If this is initially done from photographic reproductions, details can be confirmed with the originals during the main inspection of the source. In photographic reproductions, shadows cast by pin-pricks look like noteheads, bleed-through or offsets may merge with text on the page, and holes in the paper permit the next or previous page to be read as part of the current one. Inspection under ultra-violet light can only be done in situ, although beta-radiography facilitates the reading of erasures in photographic reproductions.

Larger problems arise in transcription. No transcription is objective; yet editors need to maintain some distance between themselves and the music they are transcribing, to enable the source to speak for itself. Scholars are apt to form and impose their interpretations as they transcribe, imputing sense, reason and logic on the notational symbols; but that, regardless of its critical value, may distort the source's evidence and make it more difficult to assess its importance in the classification of the sources and the establishment of the text. A diplomatic transcription (one that records the information in the source exactly as it appears, with as many details as possible) alleviates the problem. Transcription, after all, is part of the process of gathering the evidence that will form the editor's conception of the work and its context. As editors gain experience with sources, they become aware of new interpretations.

4. STEMMATIC FILIATION. Stemmatic filiation can provide a powerful tool for the historical assessment of readings and sources, but it does not constitute a mechanical method for reconstructing lost archetypes. In its simplest form, the common-error method is based on the assumption that, when several witnesses agree in the same error, it is reasonable to postulate that it arose from a single common ancestor – that the error was committed once and copied into surviving witnesses, rather than made by several scribes independently. It should be emphasized that only clear scribal errors are useful for determining filiation; the sharing of good readings, no matter how rare, cannot show stemmatic relationships. Errors are most probably transmitted from the source in which they first occur (usually below the authorial original in the stemma); so shared error will signify, in most cases, common descent from that first source – a deduction central to stemmatic determinations because it can distinguish the ancestry of two (or more) sources that agree in error against others; the sources that agree in error descend from an ancestor in which the shared error was made, and was unknown to the other sources. On the basis of a few scribal errors the editor can draw up a stemma codicum, a 'genealogical table' of sources, with the help of which many readings, including reasonable competing readings, can be eliminated from consideration, together with entire sources that can be shown to have been copied from a surviving one; this process is called the eliminatio codicum descriptorum (the elimination of sources that are direct copies).

Not all problems are solved by a stemma, however. The sources may divide evenly between two reasonable competing readings; in such a case editors must select one or the other. Other complications affect this method, including 'contamination', the consultation by a scribe of more than one exemplar, and 'conjectural emendation', whereby scribes, unsatisfied with the reading of the exemplar, introduce one of their own invention. In such situations problematic readings, which could have illuminated stemmatic relationships, tend to be replaced by reasonable readings, which carry no stemmatic weight. Further, unlikely though it is, two scribes might make the same error independently. Any stemma based on textual evidence alone is built on assumption and probability. As an interpretative tool, it depends on interpretation itself, starting with deciding exactly what constitutes an error. Thus if a stemma does not represent absolute, objective truth, stemmatic filiation nevertheless provides a powerful tool for the textual critic.

The usual purpose of the method's application in philology is to determine, as closely as possible, the text of an authorial original. Many works fit this paradigm, and the reconstruction of the composer's text is an important task and one that stemmatic filiation can assist, particularly when the autograph does not survive; examples are Bach's cello suites and Haydn's String Quartets op.33 (Grier, 1996). For much music in the Western art tradition, however, it is impossible to restrict the definition of the work to a discrete compositional moment, since composers introduce flexibility of interpretation, in the form of performance, and each performance creates a new reading. A source created under these circumstances may transmit a possible text that carries no greater or lesser authority than others.

5. PROCEDURES. Because the relationship between the act of composition and the transmission of the resulting piece is infinitely variable, the procedure to be followed in treating the sources and their readings will also vary. No single editorial theory can satisfactorily accommodate the multiplicity of situations that arise in editing, even though each of the discussed theories of textual criticism has value in some contexts. Stemmatic filiation provides a useful and powerful tool, especially for the elimination of some competing readings, but does not automatically generate a fully edited text; it is simply a critical aid in sorting some of the readings. It may be possible to eradicate errors with good readings from elsewhere in the stemma. This type of reconstruction has been criticized because it creates a text that never existed, and a so-called 'eclectic text', which combines readings from two or more sources, is a historical impossibility. Adherents to this argument, principally the French philologist Joseph Bédier, devised the 'best-text' method of editing, in which one source is used except where it is patently corrupt.

Where it is corrupt, however, it must be emended. This raises the question: how should the emendation be effected? A stemma, if built on stylistically defensible criteria, may provide a firm historical basis for the emendation. Nevertheless, readings that stemmatically ascend to the archetype should not necessarily displace all unique readings in the sources. Many of them preserve substantive alterations to the text that have arisen through its performance and transmission, so represent the living tradition of the piece, and at least are typical of what would have been heard performed at the time when it was in circulation, even if they do not represent a specific performance. An edition that attempted to reproduce an 'original' or 'definitive' text, however, would have to ignore such readings in favour of the reconstructed text of the archetype, and it would not reflect the idiosyncratic musical practices each repertory exhibits.

Similarly, the theory of the copy-text, a method developed principally in modern English philology, does not generate a fully independent method of editing. The most familiar form of the theory is that proposed by W.W. Greg (1950–51) to deal with editing problems in Shakespeare, where virtually all sources are printed. Greg divided the transmitted readings into their substantive and accidental components. The former carry meaning, as for example the words of a text. The latter include such matters as spelling, punctuation and capitalization, qualities that may not in themselves carry meaning. Greg reasoned that, in publication, Shakespeare did not retain absolute control over accidentals, as printers imposed their own style and otherwise altered the text. Consequently, he suggested that the editor choose one text of the work as the copy-text and follow its accidentals faithfully. Therein lies the distinction between this method and the 'best-text' method, in which a single source supplies all readings, accidental and substantive. The choice of copy-text is determined by the editor's critical appraisal of the sources. The treatment of substantives is more flexible. Greg favoured the creation of an eclectic text by drawing on all sources of the work directly associated with its author.

Despite the virtues of its attempt to deal with the historical circumstances of publication, however, the method does not address the difficulty of creating an unequivocal definition of substantive and accidental. The physical presentation, the bibliographic codes, of the work and text can carry significant meaning (McGann, 1983). It is therefore impossible to make a meaningful distinction between accidental and substantive. The problems are exacerbated when we try to transfer these concepts to music, because the semiotic nature of musical notation makes the distinction more difficult. Any graphic aspect of notation can convey meaning. So the idea of selecting a copy-text whose accidentals are to be incorporated into the edited text, already problematic in literature, becomes virtually meaningless in music.

The understanding of the work in its social and historical context, however, holds promise for editing either literature or music. Its theoretical content ends with the recognition of a work of art as a social and historical artefact. The historical context and circumstances of survival, rather than any single theory, guide the editor. Individual sources preserve texts that are faithful to the circumstances in which they were created and used. Their variants represent the way the work was or might have been performed when the source in question was used. Consequently, for many works, each source is a viable record of one form of the work, and can be treated as a 'best text'. All sources, however, may contain errors, readings that are impossible within the stylistic conventions of the repertory. These can be identified and adjusted only through the editor's knowledge of style, the transmission processes and the history of the work. No single theory, then, provides a fully self-contained method for editing, but within the historical approach each contributes valuable concepts and procedures.

The process of revision seen in a succession of sources, beginnings with alterations to the autograph, document the transformation of the work from its beginnings in the mind of the composer to a state in which the composer attempts to communicate it to a public. Copies prepared under the composer's direct supervision (so-called 'apographs') can be considered authentic, but the authentication of the source does not necessarily confirm the authenticity of its readings. Where the composer has entered a correction in autograph, its authenticity can be verified, but readings that are not changed do not signify that the composer checked them all carefully and ascertained their correctness. Performing materials that are contemporary with the composer can transmit a variety of information, including substantive changes to the text that arose from the circumstances of performance: this is particularly true of operas, where the original performing materials may differ substantially from the autographs (as they do, for example, for Le nozze di Figaro and Carmen). Other sources provide a window into the reception of a piece or a repertory by the musicians, scribes and performers who created the sources and for whom the sources were created. In many cases, the written versions exhibit only a few of the wealth of performing variants that surrounded these pieces. They do, however, reflect the types of variant that the performing environment permitted or encouraged to be added to the repertory. So each surviving version potentially possesses equal validity as a representation of the performing possibilities intrinsic to the tradition of the piece. The more open the processes of transmission are to contamination from the oral, performing tradition and scribal independence, the more likely the editor is to rely on a single source as a 'best text', using the stemma to illuminate the historical relationship between it and the other sources.

In the final stage of establishing a text, editors may find passages where no preserved reading is convincing; they may then proceed to emend by conjecture. Even though the likelihood of recovering the composer's original reading is slight, an emendation that arises from detailed knowledge of the composer's and the piece's style might well be an improvement over an engraving, typesetting or copying error. Even compositional autographs may not be free from error (Feder, 1990; Herttrich, 1990), as Heinrich Besseler shows in his edition of J.S. Bach's Brandenburg Concertos for the Neue Bach-Ausgabe (see Grier, 1996). On the other hand, the opposite extreme, the temptation to improve on the composer, holds equal danger. An editor should not be open to the charge of printing the piece the composer would have written had he or she known as much as the editor. The editors' guide in assessing these situations is their critical acumen, their sensitivity to style and historical possibility. To their knowledge they join the synthetic ability to see relationships, not necessarily of cause and effect, between various aspects of the composer's history, his or her environment, the piece's history and environment and the source's history.

6. Types of edition. That critical and historical engagement persists into the shaping of the presentation of the text for the edition's audience. Four types of edition should satisfy the needs of most potential users of music editions: the photographic facsimile; the edited print that replicates the original notation; the interpretative edition; and the critical edition. Many of the major sources of Western music, including works of the 20th century, are already available in photographic facsimile. All or most of the visual information presented in the source is retained and presented in the facsimile in a greater degree of detail than could possibly be reproduced by verbal description or printed replications of the original notation. Many nuances of the notation and, especially, the disposition of the notational symbols on the page, are thus clearly depicted for the benefit of those unable to consult the original sources. Moreover, some manuscripts have deteriorated and become difficult to read; earlier photographs may preserve a state of the source that is easier to read, as in the case of the autograph of Bach's Mass in B Minor.

There are, however, limitations. Photography rarely reproduces all the details of the original document, and the variables of lighting, film speed and contrast, exposure and processing ensure that two photographers are likely to create two quite different photographic records of the same source. No matter how clear the photography is, facsimiles do not completely replace the actual sources. Other problems make facsimiles unsuitable for general use as editions. Manuscripts are often difficult to read by anyone but specialists because the handwriting is not easily legible. With early music in particular an additional complication is that aspects of the notation are unfamiliar. Such reasons make the publication of facsimiles indispensable for the further enlightenment of the musically literate public, scholarly and otherwise, but they cannot normally be used as performing materials.

The printed edition that replicates the original notation not only permits the enhancement of legibility but also allows editors the opportunity to revise and correct the text according to their critical investigations of the work and its sources. The procedure by which the text is established is a matter for the individual editor to decide. Because editions in this category constitute a form of facsimile (using printed fonts rather than photographs, as in the previous type), and because musical notation tends to be idiosyncratic from source to source, many editors will choose to base their edition on a single principal source, applying the 'best text' method. It is not easy to read these early notations and the suggested approach would surely alienate, at least initially, many prospective users of such an edition. The potential benefits, nevertheless, are significant. The performing nuances in the notation of early, non-measured music can be incorporated in the print. In mensural music, the editor need not impose the limitations of a modern rhythmic and metrical notational system that was never designed with the subtleties of perfect and imperfect values, coloration or proportions in mind. It is true that, if the music is presented in parts, as in the sources, the simultaneities between the voices of polyphony are not easily visible. This, however, might actually serve to focus more attention on the melodic aspects of the individual lines, arguably the most important aspect of these repertories.

The interpretative edition generates a certain amount of controversy. There will always, however, be a demand for editions that record aspects of the performing style of important performers, and they play an important role in the communicating of much great music to students and to the editor's peers and colleagues. Moreover, these editions constitute repositories of information about the performance and interpretation of the work. Some scholars maintain that they transmit a kind of oral tradition of the style of performance: great performers study with great teachers, who pass on insights into the work from previous generations.

In the past, it would seem that the chief problem with these editions lies not in the addition of editorial performing indications, but that the performer/editor expends little effort to ensure that the printed text is faithful to the testimony of the sources. Occasionally, such an editor rewrites the piece to conform to his or her taste. More performers today have academic training, and exhibit a greater interest in the source materials of the repertory they perform. Ultimately, these circumstances will be reflected in any editions they may prepare.

These three classes of editions appeal to specialized audiences who require particular types of information for their specific needs. The audience for the critical edition is the general musically literate public: performer, student, scholar, and the informed amateur. A priority for such an edition is clarity in the presentation of many different types of information to the user, including pitch, rhythm, metre, instrumentation, tempo, dynamics, articulation, and even bowing, pedalling, registration, breathing or, in vocal music, literary text.

The editor must consider when to retain notational elements used in the original sources, where they differ from modern usage. The choice will depend on a balance between fidelity to the substance of the music and ease of comprehension. The availability of the photographic facsimile or the edited printed replica makes it unnecessary to retain archaic notational features from the original source. On the other hand, there will continue to be a need for modernized editions of early music, which should not be regarded as a misrepresentation of the original if the editor indicates the principles of the modernization. Such factors affect the decision as to where to place the critical apparatus and commentary. Placing them at the foot of the page makes them readily accessible to the user, but can disrupt the flow of the text by reducing the amount of space available (such is the case with the edition of Beethoven's piano sonatas prepared by Artur Schnabel, or Alfred Cortot's editions of the piano music of Chopin). Some editors present information of immediate concern to the performer on the page with detailed textual commentary in a separate appendix.

Similarly, the mode of indicating editorial intervention in the text depends on the editor's perception of the audience's needs. When they are distinguished – for example, parenthesized or presented with typographical differentiation – the user can comprehend at a glance what is added by the editor. The disadvantages are that there exists no uniform system for making such distinctions, and that any system may disrupt the visual flow of the music and distract the user. Another alternative is not to mark editorial contributions at all, a policy followed by the Neue Mozart-Ausgabe in cases where the text does not depend on 'authentic' sources; instead, all interventions by the editor are entered in the critical report. The text is thus relieved of clutter to facilitate reading and comprehension; the disadvantage is that the edition's users may not look in the critical report. Further, some users may take the suppression of editorial signs as an attempt to lend the editor's text a spurious authority by presenting it as if it were the composer's; the text of any critical edition, however, is strictly the editor's. So long as editors inform their audience of their policies and procedures, and apply their system consistently, they cannot seriously be accused of misleading.

The critical apparatus offers editors the opportunity to explain and defend their choice of readings. There is no need to reproduce all the notational nuances of a particular source; these are more efficiently conveyed by a facsimile. Most editors primarily report readings from the sources they have rejected in favour of conjectural emendation; and where the reading of one source is selected over others of nearly equal merit or clear errors, they defend their choice by recording the rejected readings.

An important part of any critical edition is the critical (or textual) commentary, a section often lacking in music editions and, when present, it often resembles an apparatus, including little more than an account of variant readings. In many cases, the reasoning behind the editor's decisions is not self-evident from a simple listing of variants, no matter how detailed or complete that list is. A detailed discussion of the issues and interpretative thinking that led to those decisions may benefit members of every constituency in the edition's audience – scholars, performers and the musically literate public. The critical commentary is the place for editors to explain their course of action: they may discuss their choice of readings and their emendations together with specific points of interpretation that arise in the text.

Finally, in the introduction, the editor establishes the historical context of the piece or repertory under consideration. Detailed historical discussion might be deferred to independent studies, but any user of the edition can benefit from a brief note on the place of the piece within its composer's output, its genre or its era. This will usually be followed by a description of the sources, and a discussion of their classification and use (the inclusion of sample pages in facsimile can be useful). Then the editors can introduce a general account of the editorial method employed, presenting the point of view and the approach they have adopted. A statement about what the edition contributes to the state of knowledge about the piece and its relationship to previous editions could also find a place in the introduction.

Every aspect of editing involves the critical engagement of the editor with the piece or repertory being edited. The need for the adoption of a critical attitude derives from the fact that, in humanistic studies, there is no such thing as objectivity. In every stage of editing, including transcription, questions will arise for which there are no clear-cut answers. Editors who attempt to maintain a cool objectivity can follow one of two paths: they can merely present all the ambiguous evidence and let the user decide or they may attempt to resolve with finality every such question. The former may be a dereliction of duty; the latter may lead to the misrepresentation of evidence that is genuinely ambiguous, or does not permit a definitive interpretation. This emphasizes the need to retain a critical attitude towards the piece, the composer or the repertory, based on the kind of intimate study necessary for the preparation of an edition.

The advantage a critical edition offers its users is guidance from a scholar who has devoted time, energy and imagination to the problems of the piece and whose opinion is therefore worth considering. It should not purport to exempt users from thinking for themselves; they do not need to agree with the editor in every particular. But a critical attitude should stimulate a critical response, and that is a goal of editing: the critical investigation of the text and its readings in order to establish the likelihood of their truth within the music's historical context.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

PHILOLOGICAL ISSUES

J. Bédier: 'La tradition manuscrite du Lai de l'Ombre: Réflexions sur l'art d'éditer les anciens textes', Romania, liv (1928), 161–96, 321–56 [repr. separately, 1929, 1970]
W.W. Greg: 'The Rationale of Copy-Text', Studies in Bibliography, iii (1950–51), 19–36
G. Pasquali: Storia della tradizione e critica del testo (Florence, 2/1952)
P. Maas: Textkritik (Leipzig, 4/1960; Eng. trans. of 3/1957, as Textual Criticism, 1958)
J. Willis: Latin Textual Criticism (Urbana, IL, and London, 1972)
M.L. West: Textual Criticism and Editorial Technique Applicable to Greek and Latin Texts (Stuttgart, 1973)
E.J. Kenney: The Classical Text: Aspects of Editing in the Age of the Printed Book (Berkeley and London, 1974)
F. Bowers: 'Greg's "Rationale of Copy-Text" Revisited', Studies in Bibliography, xxxi (1978), 90–161
M.D. Reeve: 'Stemmatic Method: "Qualcosa che non funziona?"', The Role of the Book in Medieval Culture: Oxford 1982, ed. P. Ganz (Turnhout, 1986), i, 57–69
A. Blecua: Manual de crítica textual (Madrid, 1983)
J.J. McGann: A Critique of Modern Textual Criticism (Chicago and London, 1983)
J.J. McGann, ed.: Textual Criticism and Literary Interpretation (Chicago and London, 1985)
M.D. Reeve: 'Archetypes', Sileno, xi (1985), 193–201
J. Grier: 'Lachmann, Bédier and the Bipartite Stemma: Towards a Responsible Application of the Common-Error Method', Revue d'histoire des textes, xviii (1988), 263–78
M.D. Reeve: 'Eliminatio codicum descriptorum: a Methodological Problem', Editing Greek and Latin Texts, ed. J.N. Grant (New York, 1989), 1–35
G.T. Tanselle: A Rationale of Textual Criticism (Philadelphia, 1989)
G.T. Tanselle: Textual Criticism and Scholarly Editing (Charlottesville, VA, and London, 1990)
P. Cohen, ed.: Devils and Angels: Textual Editing and Literary Theory (Charlottesville, VA, and London, 1991)
G.T. Tanselle: 'Editing without a Copy-Text', Studies in Bibliography, xlvii (1994), 1–22

MUSIC EDITING

RiemannL12
O. Jahn: 'Beethoven und die Ausgabe seiner Werke', Gesammelte Aufsätze über Musik (Leipzig, 1866), 271–337
F. Chrysander: 'Die Verwendung der Schlüssel bei der Herausgabe älterer Musikwerke', AMZ, v (1870), 356–9
G. Adler: Methode der Musikgeschichte (Leipzig, 1919)
H. Wetzel: 'Uber Textkritik, Analyse und Bearbeitung von Musikwerken', ZMw, ii (1919–20), 429–36
M. Friedländer: Ueber musikalische Herausgeberarbeit (Weimar, 1922) [rev. version of 'Über die Herausgabe musikalischer Kunstwerke', JbMP 1907, 13–33]
E. Beninger: 'Pianistische Herausgebertechnik', ZMw, xii (1929–30), 280–98
W. Apel: 'The Partial Signatures in the Sources up to 1450', AcM, x (1938), 1–13
J.P. Larsen: Die Haydn-Überlieferung (Copenhagen, 1939)
W. Altmann: 'Ist die Originalhandschrift oder der Erstdruck massgebend?', AMz, lxvii (1940), 243b–4b
W. Schmieder: 'Nochmals: Originalhandschrift oder Erstdruck?', AMz, lxvii (1940), 258b–9a
M. Unger: 'Grundsätzliches über Revisionsausgaben von Beethovens Werken', Die Musik, xxxiii (1940–41), 52–8
E.E. Lowinsky: 'The Function of Conflicting Signatures in Early Polyphonic Music', MQ, xxxi (1945), 227–60
A.H. King: 'Some Recent Trends in Music Publishing and Bibliography', MMR, lxxviii (1948), 14–18
W.S. Drew: 'On Song Editing', MT, xc (1949), 113–14
R. von Ficker: 'Probleme der Editionstechnik mittelalterliche Musik', IMSCR IV: Basle 1949, 108
W. Emery: 'New Methods in Bach Editing', MT, xci (1950), 297–9
W. Bittinger: Studien zur musikalischen Textkritik des mittelalterlichen Liedes (Würzburg, 1953)
R.H. Hoppin: 'Partial Signatures and Musica Ficta in some Early 15th-Century Sources', JAMS, vi (1953), 197–215
T. Dart: The Interpretation of Music (London, 1954, 4/1967)
G. Henle: 'Über die Herausgabe von Urtexten', Musica, viii (1954), 377–80
C.L. Cudworth: 'Ye Olde Spuriosity Shoppe', Notes, xii (1954–5), 25–40, 533–53
S. Clercx: 'Les "accidents" sous-entendus et la transcription en notation moderne', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 167–95
F. Oberborbeck: 'Original und Bearbeitung', Festschrift Max Schneider zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. W. Vetter (Leipzig, 1955), 347–55
T.G. Georgiades: 'Zur Lasso-Gesamtausgabe', Musikwissenschaftlicher Kongress: Vienna 1956, 216
F. Giegling: 'Probleme der Neuen Mozart-Ausgabe', SMz, xcvi (1956), 41–3
U. Aarburg: 'Muster für die Editionstechnik mittelalterlicher Liedmelodien', Mf, x (1957), 209–17
E. and P. Badura-Skoda: Mozart-Interpretation (Vienna, 1957; Eng. trans., 1962)
W. Emery: Editions and Musicians: a Survey of the Duties of Practical Musicians and Editors Towards the Classics (London, 1957)
P. Mies: Textkritische Untersuchungen bei Beethoven (Munich, 1957)
Le luth et sa musique: Neuilly-sur-Seine 1957
'Editionsprobleme des späten 18. Jahrhunderts', IMSCR VII: Cologne 1958, 349–54
G. von Dadelsen: 'Friedrich Smends Ausgabe der h-moll-Messe von J.S. Bach', Mf, xii (1959), 315–34

A. Dürr: 'Wissenschaftliche Neuausgaben und der Praxis', Musik und Kirche, xxix (1959), 77–82
G. Feder and H. Unverricht: 'Urtext und Urtextausgaben', Mf, xii (1959), 432–54
E.E. Lowinsky: 'Early Scores in Manuscript', JAMS, xiii (1960), 126–73
H. Unverricht: Die Eigenschriften und die Originalausgaben von Werken Beethovens in ihrer Bedeutung für die moderne Textkritik (Kassel, 1960)
A. Carapetyan: 'Problems of Editing and Publishing Old Music', MD, xv (1961), 5–14
G. von Dadelsen: 'Die "Fassung letzter Hand" in der Musik', AcM, xxxiii (1961), 1–14
J. LaRue: 'Watermarks and Musicology', AcM, xxxiii (1961), 120–46
D. Stevens: 'Problems of Editing and Publishing Old Music', IMSCR VIII: New York 1961, 150–58
T.G. Georgiades: Musik und Schrift (Munich, 1962)
W. Osthoff: 'Per la notazione originale nelle pubblicazioni di musiche antiche e specialmente nella nuova edizione Monteverdi', AcM, xxxiv (1962), 101–27
T. Dart, W. Emery and C. Morris: Editing Early Music: Notes on the Preparation of Printer's Copy (London, 1963)
A. Donato: Preparing Music Manuscript (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1963)
M. Reimann: 'Zur Editionstechnik von Musik des 17. Jahrhunderts', Norddeutsche und nordeuropäische Musik: Kiel 1963, 83–91
K. Vötterle: 'Die Stunde der Gesamtausgabe', Haus unterm Stern: über Entstehen, Zerstörung und Wiederaufbau des Bärenreiter-Werke (Kassel, 3/1963), 287–95 [rev. version of article in Musica, x (1956), 33–6]
G. von Dadelsen: 'Über das Wechselspiel von Musik und Notation', Festschrift Walter Gerstenberg zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. G. von Dadelsen and A. Holschneider (Wolfenbüttel and Zürich, 1964), 17–25
E. Karkoschka: Das Schriftbild der neuen Musik: Bestandsaufnahme neuer Notationssymbole, Anleitung zu deren Deutung, Realisation und Kritik (Celle, 1966; Eng. trans., 1972, as Notation in New Music: a Critical Guide to Interpretation and Realisation)
G. von Dadelsen, ed.: Editionsrichtlinien musikalischer Denkmäler und Gesamtausgaben (Kassel, 1967)
G. Feder: 'Gedanken über den kritischen Apparat aus der Sicht der Haydn-Gesamtausgabe', Colloquium amicorum: Joseph Schmidt-Görg zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. S. Kross and H. Schmidt (Bonn, 1967), 73–81
E.E. Lowinsky: 'Editorial Problems', The Medici Codex of 1518 (Chicago and London, 1968)
T.G. Georgiades, ed.: Musikalische Edition im Wandel des historischen Bewusstseins (Kassel, 1971)
L. Hoffmann-Erbrecht: 'Problems in the Interdependence of Josquin Sources', Josquin des Prez: New York 1971, 285–93
A. Porter: 'Problems in Editing the Music of Josquin des Prez: a Critique of the First Edition and Proposals for the Second Edition', ibid., 723–54
G. von Dadelsen: 'Über den Wert musikalischer Textkritik', Quellenstudien zur Musik: Wolfgang Schmieder zum 70. Geburtstag, ed. K. Dorfmüller and G. von Dadelsen (Frankfurt, 1972), 41–5
C. Dahlhaus: 'Urtextausgaben', NZM, Jg.134 (1973), 334
A. Chiarelli: 'L'Incoronazione di Poppea o Il Nerone: Problemi di filologia testuale', RIM, ix (1974), 117–51
K.H. Hilzinger: 'Über kritische Edition literarischer und musikalisher Texte', Euphorion, lxviii (1974), 198–210
H. Bennwitz and others, eds.: Musikalisches Erbe und Gegenwart: Musiker-Gesamtausgaben in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Kassel, 1975)
H. Risatti: New Music Vocabulary: a Guide to Notational Signs for Contemporary Music (Urbana, IL, and London, 1975)
W. Rehm: 'Notenschrift und Aufführung: die Rolle der Musikverlage', Notenschrift und Aufführung: Munich 1977, 99–120 [repr. in FAM, xxv (1978), 135–41]
G. von Dadelsen: 'Die Crux der Nebensache: editorische und praktische Bemerkungen zu Bachs Artikulation', BJb, lxiv (1978), 95–112
C. Dahlhaus: 'Philologie und Rezeptionsgeschichte: Bemerkungen zur Theorie der Edition', Festschrift Georg von Dadelsen, ed. T. Kohlhase and V. Scherliess (Neuhausen-Stuttgart, 1978), 45–58
C. Dahlhaus: 'Zur Ideengeschichte musikalischer Editionsprinzipien', FAM, xxv (1978), 19–27
J. Froger: 'The Critical Edition of the Roman Gradual by the Monks of Solesmes', JPMMS, l (1978), 81–97
M. Bente, ed.: Musik–Edition–Interpretation: Gedenkschrift Günter Henle (Munich, 1980)
A. Mendel: 'The Purposes and Desirable Characteristics of Text-Critical Editions', Modern Musical Scholarship, ed. E. Olleson (Stocksfield, 1980), 14–27
K. Stone: Music Notation in the Twentieth Century: a Practical Guidebook (New York and London, 1980)
A. Atlas: 'Conflicting Attributions in Italian Sources of the Franco-Netherlandish Chanson, c.1465–c.1505: a Progress Report on a New Hypothesis', Music in Medieval and Early Modern Europe: Patronage, Sources and Texts, ed. I. Fenlon (Cambridge, 1981), 249–93
M. Bent: 'Some Criteria for Establishing Relationships between Sources of Late-Medieval Polyphony', ibid., 295–317
S. Boorman: 'Limitations and Extensions of Filiation Technique', ibid., 319–46
L. Finscher, ed.: Quellenstudien zur Musik der Renaissance, i: Formen und Probleme der Überlieferung mehrstimmiger Musik im Zeitalter Josquins Desprez (Munich, 1981)
G. Feder: 'Textkritische Methoden: Versuch eines Überblicks mit Bezug auf die Haydn-Gesamtausgabe', Haydn-Studien, v (1982–3), 77–109
L. Finscher, ed.: Quellenstudien zur Musik der Renaissance, ii: Datierung und Filiation von Musikhandschriften der Josquin-Zeit (Wiesbaden, 1983)
R. Rastall: The Notation of Western Music: an Introduction (London, 1983)
S. Boorman: 'The Uses of Filiation in Early Music', Text: Transactions of the Society for Textual Scholarship, i (1984), 167–84
J. Caldwell: Editing Early Music (Oxford, 1985, 2/1995)
G. von Dadelsen: 'Zur Geltung der Legatobögen bei Bach: eine Studie für Artikulationsfanatiker und editoren', Festschrift Arno Forchert, ed. G. Allroggen and D. Altenburg (Kassel, 1986), 114–22
J. Sheveloff: 'Domenico Scarlatti: Tercentenary Frustrations (Part II)', MQ, lxxii (1986), 90–118
G. Feder: Musikphilologie: eine Einführung in die musikalische Textkritik, Hermeneutik und Editionstechnik (Darmstadt, 1987)
G. Heussenstamm: The Norton Manual of Music Notation (New York and London, 1987)
P. Brett: 'Text, Context, and the Early Music Editor', Authenticity and Early Music: a Symposium, ed. N. Kenyon (Oxford and New York, 1988), 83–114
M. Querbach: 'Der konstruierte Ursprung: zur Problematik musikalischer Urtext-Ausgaben', NZM, Jg.149/1 (1988), 15–21
G. Feder: 'Das Autograph als Quelle wissenschaftlicher Edition', Musikerautographe: Vienna 1989, 115–44
E. Herttrich: 'Autograph–Edition–Interpretation', ibid., 165–84
M. Bente: 'Ermittlung und Vermittlung: zum Begriff "Urtext"', ÖMz, xlvi (1991), 528–31
D. Berke: 'Urtext zwischen Wissenschaftsanspruch und Praxisnähe: die modernen Musiker-Gesamtausgaben', ÖMz, xlvi (1991), 531–5
R. Broude: 'When Accidentals are Substantive: Applying Methodologies of Textual Criticism to Scholarly Editions of Music', Text: Transactions of the Society for Textual Scholarship, v (1991), 105–20
C. Eisen: 'The Old and New Mozart Editions', EMc, xix (1991), 513–32
G.W. Gruber: '"Doppel"-Editionen für den interpretatorischen Freiraum', ÖMz, xlvi (1991), 710–11
P. Gülke: 'Philologie und musikalische Praxis', ibid., 535–9
M. Mender: Music Manuscript Preparation: a Concise Guide (Metuchen, NJ, 1991)
J. Wallnig: '"Produkt im Kopf" contra "Produkt im Ohr"', ÖMz, xlvi (1991), 539–42
Musik als Text: Freiburg 1993
M. Bent: 'Editing Music: the Dilemma of Translation', EMc, xxii (1994), 373–92
R. Borghi and P. Zappalà, eds.: L'edizione critica tra testo musicale e testo letterario (Lucca, 1995)
M. Caraci Vela: 'Introduzione', La critica del testo musicale: Metodi e problemi della filologia musicale, ed. M. Caraci Vela (Lucca, 1995), 3–35
J. Grier: The Critical Editing of Music: History, Method, and Practice (Cambridge, 1996)

M. Toffetti, ed.: Edizioni moderne di musica antica: Sei letture critiche (Lucca, 1997)

JAMES GRIER

Editio Musica Budapest (EMB). Hungarian firm of music publishers. It was founded by the state on 1 July 1950 as Zeneműkiadó Vállalat, the successor to the Hungarian music publishing companies Rózsavölgyi és Társa, Rozsnyai, Kálmán Nádor, Ferenc Bárd, Magyar Kórus and Imre Cserépfalvi. Following the reintroduction of capitalism and multi-party democracy to Hungary in 1989–90, Editio Musica was transformed into a limited company in 1993 and was then privatized.

The first publication under socialism was Book 1 of Bartók's Gyermekeknek ('For children'), which represented the guiding principle of the enterprise: 'to serve Hungarian music, particularly music for the training of musicians and the education of the common man wishing to improve and advance his or her knowledge'. The first managing director, László Korvin, and the artistic director, András Rékai, had to rely on 'outworkers' for editorial and similar work; but in 1953 the firm acquired its own printing works and thus was able to make long-term plans and cooperate with music publishing companies outside Hungary. In 1955 Béla Tardos, a professional pianist and composer, was appointed director; he organized the editorial side into two separate departments, one for music and another for music literature, and encouraged the employment of professional musicians with practical ability and theoretical knowledge. From the 1960s connections were established with similar undertakings abroad, and in 1961 László Eösze was appointed deputy director and artistic manager. After the death of Béla Tardos (1967) László Sarlós was appointed director until his retirement in 1986, when the musicologist István Homolya succeeded to the post.

EMB's publications so far amount to around 13,000 items; 5000 are continually available. It publishes annually between 50 and 60 new editions, which include contemporary music (mostly Hungarian). Important series include the new collected edition of works by Liszt, a critical edition of the complete lute works of Valentine Bakfark, Urtext editions of works by Bach, Beethoven, Corelli, Handel and Scarlatti, study scores, series of piano music and violin music, and Early Chamber Music. Much of EMB's present publication concentrates on pedagogical requirements, including instrument tutors, collections of repertory pieces, and music for ensembles and amateur orchestras

EMB has arrangements abroad with Boosey & Hawkes (London, New York and Artarmon, Australia), Edition Kunzelmann (Zürich), Leduc (Paris), Ricordi (Milan and Munich), Broekmans and von Poppel (Amsterdam), Real Musical (Madrid) and Buffet Crampon (Tokyo).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

M. Feuer: 'Mit teszünk mai zenénk hirnevéért?', Muzsika, xxi (1978), 1–6

JOHN S. WEISSMANN/PAUL MERRICK

Edition Russe de Musique [Russicher musikverlag; Russkoye Muzïkal'noye Izdatel'stvo]. Russian music publishing firm. It was founded in 1909 by Sergey Koussevitzky and his wife Nataliya with the aim of subsidizing the propagation of new Russian music. Any losses were borne by the Koussevitzkys, and all profits accrued to the composers. The venture was highly successful, both artistically and financially. To ensure copyright protection the firm was first legally established in Berlin as the Russischer Musikverlag, with offices in Moscow and St Petersburg, and later in Paris, London, New York and Leipzig. The main office was moved to Paris in 1920. Originally, to ensure artistic integrity, selection of works was determined by majority vote of a jury composed of Skryabin, Rachmaninoff, Medtner, Ossovsky, Struve and Koussevitzky. However, their rejection of Stravinsky's Petrushka was reversed when Koussevitzky threatened to withdraw from the jury. Such conflicts were obviated when, in 1914, Koussevitzky purchased the firm of Gutheil, which became an autonomous branch of Edition Russe under his control. Gutheil's catalogue, begun in Moscow in 1859, already contained important works by Prokofiev and Rachmaninoff, and, at a purchase price of 300,000 rubles, it also included valuable unpublished manuscripts by Glinka, Dargomïzhsky and others. From its beginning, Edition Russe offered substantial advances and profit sharing both to promising young Russian composers and to established Russian masters. Among the most noteworthy publications are Skryabin's Prométhée (1911, with a pictorial title-page by Jean Delville), Stravinsky's Petruskha (1912), The Rite of Spring (piano duet, 1913; full score, 1921), Oedipus rex (1927) and Symphony of Psalms (piano-vocal score, 1930; full score, 1932), as well as works by Medtner, Prokofiev, Rachmaninoff and Taneyev. Other composers well represented include Arensky, Balakirev, Berezovs'ky, Catoire, Konyus, Vernon Duke, Grechaninov, Lopatnikoff, Nabokov and Ziloti. The firm also published Rimsky-Korsakov's Principles of Orchestration (1913; Fr. trans., 1914, Ger. and Eng. trans., 1922) and Ravel's orchestration of Musorgsky's Pictures from an Exhibition (1929), which was commissioned by Koussevitzky. On 1 March 1947 the catalogue of Edition Russe de Musique was purchased by Boosey & Hawkes.

ROBERT S. NICHOLS/NIGEL SIMEONE

Editions, historical. The term 'historical edition' may be applied to any music publication that is devoted to a past repertory. The class of historical edition most valuable for the study of original versions of past music is the 'scholarly' or 'critical' edition. Prepared on the basis of a critical evaluation of all known primary sources, this class of edition is designed to present the most authoritative authentic version of its contents, with editorial material clearly distinguished from the original. The scholarly edition may be contrasted with the 'practical' or 'performance' edition, which is usually produced from unstated or secondary sources and may incorporate additions or changes designed to help the modern performer.

Historical editions are subdivided here according to content. 'Collected editions' refer to those publications that present a complete repertory, either the complete works of a single composer (also known as a 'complete edition' or 'Gesamtausgabe') or those multi-volume series in which the majority of individual volumes present a unified musical repertory derived from the same or from closely related original sources (also known as 'Denkmäler' or 'monuments').

'Anthologies' refer to historical publications of selections and excerpts from a variety of musical sources; these are subdivided into 'extended anthologies' (containing five or more volumes published over a period of five or more years) and 'small anthologies'.

Facsimile series (not, strictly speaking, editions), in which sources are reproduced with or without additional editorial comment, are included under collected editions of music.

See also ANTHOLOGY.

For a comprehensive list of historical editions, see vol.28 (APPENDIX D).

1. Introduction: to *c*1850. 2. *c*1850–*c*1950. 3. After *c*1950.

1. INTRODUCTION: TO *c*1850. Until the second half of the 18th century music publications were devoted principally to new or nearly new works. When an older work was printed, it was almost certainly one that was sufficiently popular to have remained in the performing repertory of the locality of the publication: for instance, works of Palestrina were still printed in 1689 in Rome (RISM 1689[1]), and Tudor church music was published as late as 1641 in London (1641[5]). The awakening interest in music of the past which produced the first modern histories of music also led to the first true historical editions, and it is significant that early writers of music histories also edited historical music collections (Burney's La Musica che si canta ... nella Cappella Pontificia, 1771 and Martini's Esemplare, ossia Saggio ... di contrappunto, 1774–5). Paralleling this interest in the revival of forgotten music was the recognition that music of the past still in use ought to be presented accurately in its own terms, and editors began to search out original sources in order to produce authentic readings. Early examples of such editions are Boyce's Cathedral Music (1760–63) and Arnold's publication of the same name (1790). The same interest in an accurate musical text also led to efforts to produce uniform editions of the entire musical works of favourite individual composers. The first of these, also edited by Arnold, was intended to comprise the works of Handel, but was never completed (1787–97). Other early complete-works editions similarly remained unfinished: Mozart (1798–9 and 1798–1806), Haydn (1802–43), Clementi (1803–19), Beethoven (1828–45), Schubert (*c*1835) and again Handel (1845–58).

Apart from these unsuccessful attempts at complete editions, most historical editions of this period were small anthologies containing vocal polyphony from the 16th century onwards. Instrumental anthologies began to appear around the turn of the century in smaller quantity; they include Cartier's L'art du violon (1798) and Clementi's Selection of Practical Harmony (1801–15). By the early 19th century the success of the small historical anthology was such that more extensive publications and series began to appear, such as Latrobe's Selection of Sacred Music (1806–25) and the Auswahl vorzüglicher Musik-werke in gebundener Schreibart, published in 16 volumes under the auspices of the Königliche Akademie der Künste in Berlin (1835–41).

A few early editors prepared anthologies with quite specific limitations, thereby foreshadowing the future development of the historical edition. Burney's collection cited above presents only music performed in the papal chapel during Holy Week, and Vincent Novello's The Fitzwilliam Music (1825) confines itself to works of Italian composers found in manuscript in the Fitzwilliam Museum. A geographically selected repertory is presented in Cichocki's Chants d'église ... des anciens compositeurs polonais (1838–9), and a special and cohesive repertory is singled out in F.H. von der Hagen's Minnesinger (1838–61). The second volume of Crotch's Specimens of Various Styles (*c*1807–9) may be considered the first history of music in examples.

Editorial criteria did not, properly speaking, exist during this early period. Each editor followed his own judgment, which was often tempered by an assumption that the integrity of the source could be superseded by his own more advanced musical knowledge. For instance, having made an agreeable piano accompaniment from a figured bass line, an early editor could see no reason to encumber his edition with the now unnecessary figuration. He was also likely to accept a single source as authoritative in attributions, and rarely sought out concordant sources. Furthermore, many aspects of early notation were clarified only by later scholars. For these reasons, early historical editions are useful today less for their content than as illustrations of the history of music scholarship.

2. *c*1850–*c*1950. A second phase in the development of historical editions may be said to have started around the mid-19th century, characterized by the publication of large collected editions in which completeness became the rule rather than the exception, and by publications in which the criteria of modern editing began to be established. The new phase was first apparent in collected editions of single composers. In 1851 the Bach-Gesellschaft issued the first volume of a critical edition of Bach's complete works, inaugurating an era of vigorous activity in complete editions that lasted until World War II. A very large number of these were published by Breitkopf & Härtel in Leipzig, with initiation dates as follows: Bach (1851), Handel (1858), Palestrina (1862), Beethoven (1862), Mendelssohn (1874), Mozart (1877), Chopin (1878), Schumann (1880), Grétry (1884), Schubert (1884), Schütz (1885), Lassus (1894), Berlioz (1899), Schein (1901), Victoria (1902), Haydn (1907) and Brahms (1926). Other sets attaining completion or substantial proportions during this period are: Purcell (1878), Sweelinck (1894), Rameau (1895), Obrecht (1908), Josquin des Prez (1921), Scheidt (1923), Monteverdi (1926), Monte (1927), Musorgsky (1928), M. Praetorius (1928), Lully (1930), Byrd (1937) and Pergolesi (1939), as well as several smaller complete presentations, such as Adam de la Halle (1872) and Machaut (1926). While some series failed to attain their goal of completeness (such as the Lassus edition of 1894–1926, which ceased before publishing any masses, and the Haydn edition of 1907–33, abandoned after 11 volumes), most are at least reasonably complete, and many remain the standard reference editions of today.

Collected editions of other kinds also first appeared during this period. An early example of the new type which became a model for later publications is Chrysander's Denkmäler der Tonkunst (1869–71). Two features of this edition that have become standard in later large-scale publications are the preparation of individual volumes by different editors, coordinated by a general editor, and sub-series (in this case, the complete works of Corelli, proposed, but not completed in this series). Eitner's more extensive Publikationen älterer Praktischer und Theoretischer Musikwerke (1873–1905) shows the same tendency to completeness within individual volumes or sub-series. Less praiseworthy is his double numbering system (volume and Jahrgang), a practice used widely in later collected editions and one that has created confusion for both librarians and researchers.

The repertory of collected editions is generally limited, often to a specific geographical region. Denkmäler deutscher Tonkunst, initiated in 1892 by a committee of German musicians including Chrysander, Brahms, Spitta, Joachim and Helmholtz, with the support of the German government, was the first major national series. It was soon followed by the Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich (1894), also supported by government funds, under the general editorship of Guido Adler. So predominant did the geographical orientation of series become that many bibliographic lists of historical editions observe a subdivision by country (as in the excellent listing by Basso cited below).

Multi-volume anthologies, even those not attempting to present complete works, sources or repertories, continued to appear, exemplified by the well-known publication of Maldeghem (Trésor musical, 1865–93). This and other anthologies remained for decades the only modern sources of a sizable body of music, particularly the Renaissance repertory, not then available in complete works or collected editions.

Apart from these more scholarly publications, a tremendous growth in music publication to fill the needs of amateur music-making became evident in the second half of the 19th century, after the introduction of wood pulp paper and a period of expansion for the middle class. One or more major publishers in each country (e.g. Breitkopf & Härtel, Ricordi and Schirmer) created millions of inexpensive copies of original works or arrangements. Transcriptions of whole operas for voice and piano, for example, were issued simultaneously with first performances. Such publications are exemplified in the first half of the 20th century by various multi-volume series edited by A.E. Wier.

The growing awareness in this period that a modern edition should mirror the composer's intention in terms of his own time rather than repaint it in terms of the editor's time is demonstrated by the development of more sophisticated techniques of editing. Although the individualistic and intuitive approach continued to be used, particularly in peforming editions, editors increasingly felt it important to indicate original notation (such as ligatures and continuo figures) as well.

Because some works became so overburdened with editorial marks, professional musicians and serious amateurs began to rely on the new 'Urtext' editions, which provided close readings of the original source. Whether Urtext or not, editors often included commentary in prefaces, footnotes and sometimes in separately bound pamphlets (in German 'Kritischer Bericht' or 'Revisionsbericht'). The need for supplementary material such as translations of texts in obsolete languages, evaluation of multiple sources, thematic lists of related works, performing problems, biographies of obscure composers, related music (e.g. the model of a parody mass), and facsimiles of original sources, varies with the nature of the music concerned.

3. After *c*1950. A new phase in historical editions started shortly after World War II with a strong upsurge in the number of new publications and a renewal of activity in many dormant series. This growth can be attributed partly to the solid foundation laid by earlier historical editions, which had to some extent stimulated an interest in the study of historical musicology. Equally important were the advances in reprographic techniques, which enabled scholars to consult a variety of widely distributed sources by means of relatively inexpensive microfilms or prints, and publishers to produce editions and facsimiles more economically and reprint important earlier editions for wider distribution.

An important trend in this period has been the reassessment of many older complete-works sets, leading in some cases to revisions of existing editions (e.g. the works of Purcell, 2/1961–, and Victoria, 2/1965–) and in others to the appearance of supplementary series containing material previously omitted (e.g. Hess's 14-volume supplement to the old Beethoven edition and the Leipziger Ausgabe of Mendelssohn's works). But the most important result of critical re-examination has been the commencement of entirely new complete editions under the direction of international committees of scholars, such as the new complete works of Bach (initiated in 1954), Handel (1955), Mozart (1955), Beethoven (1961), Chopin (1967), Corelli (1976), Rossini (1979) and Vivaldi (1982). Most of these new editions propose a broader coverage than their predecessors, including such material as the composer's arrangements of other works, early versions, sketches, documentary or pictorial biographies, and facsimiles.

Numerous other complete-works series have been launched in this period for composers whose works have not previously been published in this way; these include the complete works of Telemann (1953), Schoenberg (1966), Hindemith (1975), Grieg (1977), Janáček (1978), Elgar (1981), J.C. Bach (1984), Berg (1984), Debussy (1985), C.P.E. Bach (1989) and Gade (1995). Many are extensive separate publications (e.g. the complete editions of several Russian composers published by the Moscow State Music Publishers), while others are embedded in other series, distributed over several volumes (e.g. the Morales edition in volumes of Monumentos de la Música Española published from 1952 to 1971) or in actual subseries (e.g. the Berwald edition in Monumenta Musicae Svecicae). Extremely important in this last category is Corpus Mensurabilis Musicae, a collected edition devoted mainly to complete editions of medieval and Renaissance composers whose extant output is generally small.

Activity in the publication of other collected editions has paralleled that in complete-works editions. A high proportion of these cover a specific geographic or chronological repertory: there are several new national sets as well as a growing number devoted to smaller local divisions, such as territories, counties or cities.

Three types of publication previously found only occasionally have appeared after 1950 in great quantity. The first is the edition that includes both editorial information needed by the scholar and that required for a modern performance, while retaining the relatively inexpensive format of the typical performing edition. Early examples of this type (such as Das Chorwerk initiated in 1929 and Hortus Musicus in 1936) are in this period joined by Diletto Musicale (1955), the various Recent Researches in Music series (beginning with those for the Renaissance and the Baroque in 1964), Le Pupitre (1967), Musica da Camera (1973) and Early Music Library (1987). A second type of modern publication which was rare in earlier periods is the extended series devoted exclusively to music theory (e.g. Corpus Scriptorum de Musica, 1950–) or translations (e.g. Music Theory Translation Series, 1963). The third type of publication that grew very rapidly in the 1960s with the increased access to primary sources, technical improvements in the industry, and the low cost of production was the facsimile series. Before this time, only Paléographie Musicale (1889) had attained substantial size. Examples of a field that has become dominated by a few major publishers, particularly in the USA, are Broude's Monuments of Music and Music Literature in Facsimile (1965), Garland's Italian Opera 1810–1840 (1977) and Renaissance Music in Facsimile (1986).

In the late 1980s several factors precipitated a reduction in the number of scholarly editions. In addition to the high cost of producing limited editions and fierce competition in the industry, libraries and academic institutions – the main customers for scholarly sets – have seen the withdrawal of governmental support for the arts in general and been affected by budget restraints. Reductions in the funding for acquistions of this kind (particularly with the shift in American colleges and universities towards ethnomusicological studies) as well as in the staff and student populations that would possibly buy such editions for themselves have led to delays in some series and the demise of others.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Eitner: Verzeichniss neuer Ausgaben alter Musikwerke (Berlin, 1871)
R. Eitner: 'Nachträge zum Verzeichniss neuer Ausgaben alter MusikWerke . . . Berlin, 1871', MMg, ix (1877), 40ff
G. Reese: 'Maldeghem and his Buried Treasure', Notes, vi (1948–9), 75–117
H.J. Moser: Das musikalische Denkmälerwesen in Deutschland (Kassel, 1952)
A.H. Heyer: Historical Sets, Collected Editions, and Monuments of music: a Guide to their Contents (Chicago, 1957, 3/1980)
G. von Dadelsen: Editionsrichtlinien musikalischer Denkmäler und Gesamtausgaben (Kassel, 1967)
J. Coover: Gesamtausgaben: a Checklist (Buffalo, NY, 1970)
A. Basso: 'Repertorio generale dei "Monumenta musicae", delle antologie, raccolte, e pubblicazioni di musica antica sino a tutto il 1970', RIM, vi (1971), 3–135
T. Georgiades, ed.: Musikalische Edition im Wandel des historischen Bewusstseins (Kassel, 1971)
S.R. Charles: A Handbook of Music and Music Literature in Sets and Series (New York, 1972)
M. Schönherr: Kompendium zu Band 1–120 der Denkmäler der Tonkunst in Österreich and Band 1–27 der Studien zur Musikwissenschaft (Graz, 1974)
H. Bennwitz and others, ed.: Musikalisches Erbe und Gegenwart: Musiker-Gesamtausgaben in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland (Kassel, 1975)
G.R. Hill and N.L. Stephens: Collected Editions, Historical Series, &Sets & Monuments of Music: a Bibliography (Berkeley, 1997)

SYDNEY ROBINSON CHARLES/GEORGE R. HILL, NORRIS L. STEPHENS, JULIE WOODWARD

Edler, Arnfried (b Lüdenscheid, 21 March 1938). German musicologist and organist. After completing a diploma in church music and music pedagogy at the Musikhochschule, Saarbrücken (1963–4), he studied musicology at the universities there and at Kiel, where he took the doctorate in 1968 with a dissertation on the interpretation of myths in 19th-century music. He continued as an assistant lecturer and organist at Kiel, where he completed the Habilitation in 1978. He was professor of musicology at the Musikhochschule in Lübeck (1979–89) and was appointed professor at the Hochschule für Musik und Theater in Hanover in 1989. His Habilitationsschrift, which examines the changing relationship between social conditions and the history of composition from the Reformation until the 20th century as regards organists of northern Germany, marks a departure from the methodology of his dissertation, which followed 19th-century traditions of scholarship. His other writings include a monograph on Schumann (1982) and a detailed history of keyboard music (1997); he has also edited the piano concertos of A.C. Kunzen, J.W. Hertel (Norddeutsche Klavierkonzerte des mittleren 18. Jahrhunderts, Denkmäler norddeutscher Musik, v-vi, Munich, 1994) and C.P.E. Bach. His wide interest in diverse topics and methods of enquiry is documented in his numerous writings.

WRITINGS

Studien zur Auffassung antiker Musikmythen im 19. Jahrhundert (diss., U. of Kiel, 1968; Kassel, 1970)
Der nordelbische Organist: Studien zu Sozialstatus, Funktion und kompositorischer Produktion eines Musikerberufes von der Reformation bis zum 20. Jahrhundert (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Kiel, 1978; Kassel, enlarged, 1982)
'Hinweise auf die Wirkung Bachs im Werk Franz Schuberts', Mf, xxxiii (1980), 279–91
'Das Charakterstück Carl Philipp Emanuel Bachs und die französische Tradition', Studien zur deutsch-französischen Musikgeschichte: Saarbrücken 1981, 219–32
Robert Schumann und seine Zeit (Laaber, 1982)
'Zwischen Händel und Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach: zur Situation des Klavierkonzertes im mittleren 18. Jahrhundert', AcM, lviii (1986), 180–221
ed., with S. Helms and H. Hopf: Musikpädagogik und Musikwissenschaft (Wilhelmshaven, 1987) [incl. 'Zum Verhältnis Musikpädagogik: Musikwissenschaft aus der Sicht der Musikwissenschaft', 9–40] ed., with F. Krummacher: Dietrich Buxtehude und die europäische Musik seiner Zeit: Lübeck 1987 [incl. 'Buxtehude und die norddeutsche Choralphantaisie', 275–88]
ed., with H.W. Schwab: Studien zur Musikgeschichte der Hansestadt Lübeck (Kassel, 1989) [incl. 'Der bürgerliche Konzertbetrieb in 18. Jahrhundert', 103–13]
'Ton und Zyklus in der Symphonik Schumanns', Probleme der symphonischen Tradition im 19. Jahrhundert: Bonn 1989, 187–202
'Mythische und musikalische Struktur bei Wagner', Musik und Dichtung: neue Forschungsbeiträge: Viktor Pöschl zum 80. Geburtstag, ed. M. von Albrecht and W. Schubert (Frankfurt, 1990), 331–50
'Organ Music within the Social Structure of North German Cities', Church, Stage, and Studio: Music and its Contexts in Seventeenth-Century Germany, ed. P. Walker (Ann Arbor, 1990), 23–41
'Arnolt Schlick: musicus consumatissimus ac organista probatissimus', Von Isaac bis Bach: Festschrift Martin Just, ed. F. Heidlberger, W. Osthoff and R. Wiesend (Kassel, 1991), 115–26
'Das Collegium Musicum als Forum des Theorie-Praxis-Bezuges', Akademie und Musik: Erscheinungsweisen und Wirkungen des Akademiegedankens in Kultur- und Musikgeschichte: Festschrift Werner Braun, ed. W. Frobenius and others (Saarbrücken, 1993), 107–22
ed., with P. Becker and B. Schneider: Zwischen Wissenschaft und Kunst: Festgabe für Richard Jakoby (Mainz, 1995) [incl. 'Wilhelm Langhans und der Begriff des musikalischen Urteils: ein musikpädagogisches Kapitel aus den Gründerjahren des Zweiten deutschen Reichs', 49–65]
Gattungen der Musik für Tasteninstrumente, i: Von den Anfängen bis 1750 (Laaber, 1997)

FRIEDHELM KRUMMACHER

Edlerawer [Edelawer, Erdelawer, Edlerauer], Hermann (*b c*1395; *d c*1460). German composer, active mainly in Austria. A clerk of the diocese of Mainz, he matriculated at the University of Vienna, 1413–14, where in 1445 he delivered an address by Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini. From 1439 or 1440 until perhaps as late as 1449 he was Kantor of the collegiate church of St Stephan, Vienna. Legal documents and payments of expenses suggest that he was a civic dignitary with a wide range of extra-musical responsibilities and an extensive local network of patrons; his coat of arms is preserved on his seal attached to a number of letters patent. In 1457 he became supervisor of the watch on one of the city gates.

Edlerawer's surviving music is all preserved in D-Mbs Clm 14274, with whose main scribe and compiler, Hermann Pötzlinger, a student at the University of Vienna from 1436 to 1439, he may have been closely connected. Much of the music is unelaborate and survives in only two parts, though fauxbourdon should be added to Verbum bonum and probably also to the Credo and Que corda nostra, a setting of alternate verses of the Pentecost sequence Sancti spiritus. Lauda Syon is a more ambitious work in three parts (except for the verse 'In figuris', which is in fauxbourdon); sections of the contratenor missing from D-Mbs Clm 14274 are present in the unattributed concordance in Trent manuscript 93 (I-TRcap), and vice versa.

WORKS

all appear with ascriptions in D-Mbs Clm 14274

Kyrie dominicale, 2vv (superius paraphrases either Kyrie XV, 'Dominator Deus', or XVI)
Credo dominicale, 2vv (superius closely follows Credo I: the following 'Amen', 3vv, is unrelated)
Lauda Syon, 3vv (sequence; also in Trent MS 93, I-TRcap; superius paraphrases chant, with migration to T)
Que corda nostra, 2vv (sequence, text by Notker; superius paraphrases chant, with migration to T)
Verbum bonum, 2vv (sequence; chant in T marked 'Faulx bourdon', with migration to superius)
Beata viscera, 2vv (superius closely follows chant)
[textless on f.103], 2vv (form like that of a rondeau)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StrohmR
K. Dèzes: 'Der Mensuralcodex des Benediktinerklosters Sancti Emmerami zu Regensburg', ZMw, x (1927–8), 65–105
G. Pietzsch: 'Zur Pflege der Musik an den deutschen Universitäten im Osten bis zur Mitte des 16. Jahrhunderts', AMf, i (1936), 257–92
H.J. Moser: 'Hermann Edlerauer 1440/43/44: Wiens frühester Polyphonist', Die Musikerziehung, viii (1954–5), 35–7
D. Braunschweig-Pauli: 'Studien zum sogenannten Codex St. Emmeram: Entstehung, Datierung und Besitzer der Handschrift München, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm 14274 (olim Mus. ms. 3232a)', KJb, lxvi (1982), 1–48
I. Rumbold: 'The Compilation and Ownership of the "St Emmeram" Codex (Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Clm 14274)', EMH, ii (1982), 161–235

IAN RUMBOLD

Edle van Ghelenschen Erben. Austrian firm of music publishers, founded as VAN GHELEN.

Edlund, Lars (b Karlstad, 6 Nov 1922). Swedish composer, teacher, conductor and harpsichordist. After attending the Ingesund Music School and the Stockholm Musikhögskolan (1942–7) he went to study at the Basle Schola Cantorum and elsewhere. He was a church organist (1948–60) and was then appointed to the Stockholm Musikhögskolan as teacher of aural training, the subject of his internationally known Modus novus and Modus vetus. In 1967 he founded the Camerata Holmiae, an ensemble of vocal soloists, which he conducts.

Initially a composer only of liturgical music, after his move to Gotland in 1971 he produced a number of original and intense pieces, both sacred and secular. His melodic lines on carefully chosen texts are often built in long cantilenas, oscillating between Gregorian-inspired elements and early Baroque polyphony, and, in particular, taking inspiration from the music of Monteverdi, whom he reveres.

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: Flickan i ögat (chbr op, U.-B. Edberg), 1979
Choral: Elegi (G. Ekelöf), chorus, 1971, rev. 1972; Saligprisningarna [The Beatitudes], youth/children's chorus, chorus, fl, elec gui, vc, db, org, 1971; Körstudier I–III, chorus, 1972–3; Triad (D. Hammarskjöld), chorus, wind orch, 1973; Cirkus – 4 Serious Songs (A. Vazyk, H. Martinson, U. Torhamn, N. Ferlin), Bar, pf, 1974; La cigale et la fourmi (La Fontaine), S, A, T, B, chorus, 1975; Nenia (Lasciatemi morire), chorus, 1975; 4 ordspråk av Kung Salomo, male chorus, 1975; Missa Sancti Nicolai, solo vv, chorus, perc, 1979; Magnificat, S, chorus, 1980; Adonai (Bible: Jeremiah xx), Bar, chorus, org, 2–3 perc, 1983; Respicite volatilia caeli (Matthew vi.26–9), girls' choir, 1987; Giftas (O. von Dalin), male chorus, 1990; Paradiso: 3 canti (Dante), chorus, 1995; Ikoner (T. Tranströmer)
Other works: Tracce, hpd, 2 perc, chbr orch, 1972; A Cappella, 2 hn, 4 tpt, 2 trbn, str orch, 1976; Str Qt 1981 'Kära vänner ...', 1980–81; Sonata, fl, pf, 1984; Str Qt 2: reflexer från en hymn, 1993

Principal publishers: Gehrman, Nordiska musikförlaget

WRITINGS

Modus novus: lärobok i fritonal melodiläsning (Stockholm, 1963)
Om gehörsutbildning (Stockholm, 1963)
Modus vetus: gehörstudier i dur/moll-tonalitet (Stockholm, 1967) with A. Mellnäs: Det musikaliska hantverket (Stockholm, 1968)
'Den nya körmusiken: några iakttagelser under perioden 1945–70 beträffande blandad kör a cappella', Svenska musikperspektiv, ed. G. Hilleström (Stockholm, 1971), 323–60 [incl. Eng. summary]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

T. Åhs: 'Så gick jag i mörkret med Gud', Tonfallet (1975), no.6, p.7
E. Lundkvist: 'Svensk kyrkomusik hos Lars Edlund i Visby: en tidlös och banbrytande tonsättare', Svensk kyrkomusik (1980), 164–6
P.-G. Alldahl: 'Ett porträtt av Lars Edlund', Nutida musik, xxv/2 (1981–2), 62–9
I. Bengtsson: 'Lars Edlund', Operan (1981–2), no.4, pp.10–14 [on Flickan i ögat]
P.-A. Hellquist: 'Starka känslor – abstrakt tonspråk', Konsertnytt, xx/2 (1984–5), 6–10

ROLF HAGLUND

Edlund, Mikael (Bengt Olof) (b Tranås, 19 Jan 1950). Swedish composer, son of Lars Edlund. He played in rock and jazz groups before studying musicology in Uppsala (1970–72). In 1972–5 he studied composition with Lidholm and Mellnäs at the Royal College of Music in Stockholm. From 1975 to 1979 he was a board member of Fylkingen, and their producer between 1979 and 1980. In 1978 he became a board member of the Swedish section of the ISCM. He established the Kammarmusikgruppen in Stockholm in an attempt to bring together the best musicians in the country to perform new music.

He formulates his own music slowly and carefully and demands similar care on the part of the musicians in an endeavour to make the music sensually tangible and clearly structured. He already showed maturity in the work that marked his breakthrough, The Lost Jugglery, performed at the ISCM Festival in Stockholm in 1978; it is a musical role-play with built-in conflicts between a dominant composer, a neurotic piano soloist, a clown figure as percussionist, a cellist lacking in independence and a motherly singer. International success came with Edlund's string quartet Brains and Dancin' (1981), which again set nervous intensity against sensual intoxication in brilliantly structured form. His orchestral début came in 1991 with the dramatically structured Ajar.

WORKS

Orch: Vad är emellan och emellan vad [What is between and between what], big band, 1973–4; Ajar, 1988–91; Upplöst fönster [Dissolved Window], str, 1986–96
Chbr: Trio sol, cl/s sax, bn/t sax, pf, 1980; Brains and Dancin', str qt, 1981; Jord [Earth], 5 perc, 1982; Små fötter [Small Feet], gui,

1982; Music, double wind qnt, 1983–4; Orchids in the Embers (Tango for Y. Mikhashoff), pf, 1984; Fantasia (över en stad), pf, 1982–6; Blå trädgård [Blue Garden], pf trio, 1992–4; Fanfara, tpt, 1995; Un punto nel cortile, fl, 1997; Violinsolo, 1998

Vocal: The Lost Jugglery, Mez, 2 perc, pf, vc, 1974–7; Leaves, 4 S, 4 Mez, pf, elec pf, hp, 7 perc, 1977–81

Incid: Ombudsnationalen, music for an exhibition, 1975; Bostadslösa, TV-film music, 1980, collab. P. Lindgren; Terra nova, theatre music, vv, insts, 1980, collab. Lindgren

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Haglund: 'Mikael Edlunds alternativ: musik som det nödvändigt goda', Musikrevy, xli/1 (1986), 10–19

L. Reimers: 'Mikael Edlund, en *ton*sättare', Nutida musik, xxxi/4 (1987–8), 32–43

S. Dahlstedt: 'Sinnlighet och tid: ett perspektive på Mikael Edlunds musikskapande', Artes, xvii/2 (1991), 112–20

M. Strömberg: 'Mikael Edlund håller dörren på glänt', Konsertnytt, xxvii/8 (1991–2), 14–17

ROLF HAGLUND

Edmund (fl 1396–7). English composer. The song Thys yol the beste red for two voices in GB-Cu Add.5943 is ascribed 'Quod Edmund'. The probable provenance and date of the manuscript strongly support identification with the Edmund who was informator choristarum at Winchester College in 1396–7. The 14th-century motet Sub Arturo plebs commemorates 'Edmundus de Buria' as an excellent tenor and a favourite at court; he is recorded in Edward III's household from 1359 to 1370, but is probably not identifiable with the composer.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

HarrisonMMB

L.S. M[yers], ed.: Music, Cantelenas, Songs, Etc. from an Early Fifteenth Century Manuscript (London, 1906)

B. Trowell: 'A Fourteenth-Century Ceremonial Motet and its Composer', AcM, xxix (1957), 65–75

E.J. Dobson and F.Ll. Harrison: Medieval English Songs (London, 1979)

R. Rastall, ed.: Two Fifteenth-Century Song Books (Aberystwyth, 1990)

DAVID FALLOWS

Edmunds [St Edmunds], John (b San Francisco, 10 June 1913; d Berkeley, 9 Dec 1986). American composer. He was educated at the University of California, at the Curtis Institute with Rosario Scalero, at Columbia University and at Harvard (MA 1941); subsequently he studied privately in England with Arnold Goldsbrough and Thurston Dart. Among his awards are the Joseph H. Bearns Prize (1937), a Fulbright scholarship (1951), a grant from the Italian government (1954–6), a Folger Shakespeare Library grant (1967), a fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies (1968) and a Guggenheim Fellowship (1969). He taught briefly at Syracuse University and at the University of California, Berkeley. With his wife Beatrice Quickenden and a colleague, Leonard Ralston, he founded the Campion Society in San Francisco (1946–53). From 1957 to 1961 he was in charge of the Americana collection in the New York Public Library. From 1968 to 1976 he worked in England, returning in 1977 to San Francisco, where he concentrated on arranging and transcribing English song and poetry of the 17th century.

Edmunds is himself a songwriter of the first rank: Varèse noted his 'happy combination of sensibility and technique', and other composers to have valued his work include Cowell, Rorem, Flanagan and Bacon. English and Irish poetry have inspired most of his songs, especially Middle English poetry and the work of W.B. Yeats. His awareness of the past gives to many of his own works a special, otherworldly quality. Eight of the songs from Hesperides (1935–60) are built on ground basses as are his Psalms of David (1960), which includes The Lord is my Shepherd set to a 16th-century pavan rhythm (3/2+2/2+3/2). Surpassing all others of Edmunds's songs is perhaps The Drummer, a requiem for a young soldier. After 1960 Edmunds wrote mainly choral works and ballets. (GroveA, J. Behrend)

WORKS
(selective list)

STAGE

The Pastoral Kingdom (The Shepherd's Maze) (masque, Middle Eng.), nar, boys'/female chorus, fl, va, kbd, perc, 1963, rev. 1974; Jehovah and the Ark (children's ballet), nar, 2 pf, solo dancers, 1968, rev. 1973 as The Voyage to Ararat, collab. E. Bacon, rev. 1979; The Parliament of Fowls (children's ballet), 1974, rev. 1976 as Rookmaster, collab. Bacon

CHORAL

The Sandison Hymnal, 1957–62; The Adams Book of Carols, 1957–72; The Urban Muse [after tunes of 1400–1700] (J.M. Neale, I. Watts, J. Ruskin and others), Bar, chorus, org, perc, 1965, rev. 1975 as The Cities of Heaven and Earth, spkr, chorus, org; Hymns Sacred and Profane (H. Vaughan, J. Clare, H. Melville, others) [after tunes of 1400–1700], nar, Mez, chorus, org, perc, 1966, rev. 1975 as The Praise of the Created World

SONG SETS

The Curlew (W.B. Yeats), 1935–6; The Fortunate Isles (J. Lydgate, W. Shakespeare, J. Dryden and others), 1935–60; Greenbuds (A.E. Housman), 1935–7; Hesperides (R. Herrick, Shakespeare and others), 50 songs, 1935–60 (1975), rev. 1983; The Phases of the Moon (Yeats), 1935–52; The Faucon (Middle Eng., W. Blake, Housman, Yeats and others), 24 songs, 1939–44 (1978), rev. 1983 [songs from previous collections]; The Rising of the Sun (Middle Eng.), 1939–60; The Tower (Yeats), 1945–6; Byzantium (Yeats), 1948; 7 Pss of David, Mez/Bar, pf, 1960, incl. The Lord is my Shepherd; Boreas, 32 songs, 1983, incl. The Drummer (T. Hardy)

Folksong arrs.: The Parson's Farewell, 12 Amer. songs, 1v, pf, 1936–65; An Acre of Land, 24 Eng. songs, 1v, pf, 1939–65; Die friesche Welt, 24 Ger. songs, 1v, pf, 1958–65; Fleur-de-lis, 12 Fr. songs, 1v, pf, 1959–63; The Williamsburg Cycle, 10 18th-century Virginian songs, S, Bar, B, obbl vv, insts, 1964; The Flowers of the Field (Amer., Eng., Irish, Fr., Ger.), 64 songs, 1v, pf, 1978

EDITIONS

The Major Epoch of English Song: the 17th Century from Dowland to Purcell (MS, 1940–76, Lbl)

Venetian Operatic Arias in the mid-17th Century (MS, 1956–76, GB-Lbl)

The Garden of the Muses (New York, 1985)

Many arias, cants., and songs by J.S. Bach, A. Scarlatti, Vivaldi and others; many other unpubd edns

Principal publishers: Concordia, C. Fischer, Lawson-Gould, R.D. Row, World Library of Sacred Music with A. Mann: Steps to Parnassus (New York, 1941, rev. 2/1965 as The Study of Counterpoint) [part trans. of J.J. Fux: Gradus ad Parnassum, Vienna, 1725] with G. Boelzner: Some Twentieth Century American Composers: a Selective Bibliography (New York, 1959–60)

WRITINGS

A General Report on the New York Public Library's Americana Music Collection and its Proposed Development in Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts (New York, 1961)

JEANNE BEHREND/MICHAEL MECKNA

Edo [Now Tokyo, Japan]. See Tokyo.

Edomites, music of the. See Jewish music, §II, 3.

Edson, Lewis (b nr Bridgewater, MA, 22 Jan 1748; d Mink Hollow, NY, 1820). American composer. A blacksmith by trade, he was teaching singing schools as early as 1769. Shortly after the start of the American Revolution his family moved to Lanesboro, Massachusetts, where he served as chorister in the Anglican church and became widely known in the area as 'the great singer'. His whereabouts are unknown between 1791, when he sold his Lanesboro property, and 1806, when he turned up in Mink Hollow. Edson's 26 known compositions were introduced in a variety of tunebooks, including The Social Harmonist (New York, 1801–3) of his son Lewis Edson jr, also a composer. The first collection to include Edson's music was Simeon Jocelyn and Amos Doolittle's The Chorister's Companion (New Haven, 1782); his three fuging tunes published there, 'Bridgewater', 'Greenfield' and 'Lenox', would prove to be the most frequently printed American pieces in tunebooks issued up to 1810. The sturdy vigour of their melodies and the apt way in which they set their texts surely contributed to their popularity. Lewis Edson jr's music manuscript, at the New York Public Library, includes two tunes by his father, one of which, 'Resurrection', was never published.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

I. Lowens: Music and Musicians in Early America (New York, 1964), 178–93

K. Kroeger, ed.: Three New York Composers: the Collected Works of Lewis Edson, Lewis Edson Jr., and Nathaniel Billings, MNAN, iii (1995)

NYM COOKE

Education. See MUSIC EDUCATION, CLASSICAL; CONSERVATORIES; SCHOOLS; and UNIVERSITIES.

Edvina [Martin], (Marie) Louise (Lucienne Juliette) (b Montreal, 1880; d London, 13 Nov 1948). Canadian soprano. She studied with Jean de Reszke in Paris. She made her début as Marguerite (Faust) in 1908 at Covent Garden, where she sang every season until 1914, and again in 1919, 1920 and 1924. She was the first London Louise, Thaïs, Maliella (I gioielli della Madonna), Francesca da Rimini (Zandonai) and Fiora in L'amore dei tre re (Montemezzi). Her repertory also included Tosca, Desdemona and Mélisande. She sang with the Boston Opera (1911–13), appearing also in its Paris season in 1914; in Chicago (1915–17); and once at the Metropolitan (1915) as Tosca. Her last operatic performance was in that role at Covent Garden in 1924. Her pure, refined singing was enhanced by her attractive stage personality. Among her recordings, her 'Depuis le jour' from Louise stands out for its delicacy and imagination.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H.H. Harvey: 'Maria Louise Edvina', Gramophone, xxx (1952–3), 7 [with discography]

HAROLD ROSENTHAL/ALAN BLYTH

Edwards (i) (*fl c*1520). English composer. Four parts of his five-part setting of Terrenum sitiens regnum, commemorating the Holy Innocents, survive (GB-Cu Peterhouse 471–4); it is notable for the dramatic setting of the phrase 'Vindica, Domine, sanguinem sanctorum tuorum' which occurs three times in the course of the text in the manner of a burden. Edwards must be distinguished from Edward Martyn, whose setting of Totius mundi domina occurs in the same manuscripts. Since so many musicians named Edwards are known in this period no plausible attempt at identification can be made.

ROGER BOWERS

Edwards (ii) [Mrs Mozeen; first name unknown] (fl 1737–53). English soprano and actress. A pupil or protégée of Kitty Clive, she appeared first as a child in a pantomime at Drury Lane (1737) and was principally associated with that theatre until 1748. She had two seasons with Handel: 1740–41 at Lincoln's Inn Fields, where she created the parts of Clomiris in Imeneo, and Achilles in Deidamia, and sang in revivals of L'Allegro, il Penseroso, Acis and Galatea and Saul; and 1743 at Covent Garden, where she played one of the Philistine and Israelite Women at the première of Samson and sang 'I know that my Redeemer liveth' in the first London performance of Messiah. The parts Handel composed for her indicate a flexible light soprano with a compass of d' to b''.

Miss Edwards was very active in London theatres, especially in works by Arne and Samuel Howard, and in pantomimes and songs between acts; she also acted in straight plays, including Shakespeare; like Mrs Clive, she sometimes included specially composed songs. About April 1746 she married a Drury Lane actor, Thomas Mozeen (d 1768). In 1748 she was engaged for the Smock Alley Theatre, Dublin, and sang there until 1752, appearing in William Boyce's Chaplet, Handel's Acis and Galatea, and often as Polly in The Beggar's Opera. She separated from her husband soon afterwards, and in February 1753 was acting in a play by Mrs Centlivre at Bath. She is said to have had a charming voice and manner, but to have been hampered by timidity on the stage.

WINTON DEAN

Edwards, F(rederick) G(eorge) (b London, 11 Oct 1853; d London, 28 Nov 1909). English organist and writer on music. While a student at the RAM he was organist of the Surrey Chapel, migrating in 1876 with the pastor and congregation to the newly built Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road. In 1881 he transferred to St John's Wood Presbyterian Church, where he remained as organist until 1905; during this period he produced several editions of Nonconformist church music and wrote programme notes for oratorios. Edwards's most lasting contribution, however, was as a music historian. Besides books on hymn tune origins, London musical places and Mendelssohn's Elijah, he wrote important articles on cathedrals and on the English Bach revival for the Musical Times, some 21 entries on 19th-century musical figures for the Dictionary of National Biography, and further articles for the second edition of Grove's Dictionary. In all his work, but especially as contributor to the Musical Times from 1891, and its editor from 1897, he showed considerable care in searching out original sources and witnesses. The British Library holds 13 volumes of his papers; among the correspondents are Elizabeth Mounsey, Marie Benecke, Stanford, Parry, Elgar, Stainer, Sullivan and Grove.

WRITINGS

with R.E. Welsh: Romance of Psalter and Hymnal: Authors and Composers (London, 1889)

'Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas', PMA, xxi (1894–5), 1–16

Musical Haunts in London (London, 1895)

The History of Mendelssohn's Oratorio 'Elijah' (London and New York, 1896)

Many contributions to MT (1891–1909 passim), DNB and Grove2

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Papers: GB-Lbl Add.41570–74; Egerton 3090–97)

Obituary, MT, li (1910), 9–11

P.A. Scholes: The Mirror of Music, 1844–1944: a Century of Musical Life in Britain as reflected in the Pages of the 'Musical Times' (London, 1947)

LEANNE LANGLEY

Edwards, George (Harrison) (b Boston, 11 May 1943). American composer. He was a student of Richard Hoffmann at Oberlin College (BA 1965), Milton Babbitt and Earl Kim at Princeton University (MFA 1968) and Donald Martino at the Berkshire Music Center. He taught theory at the New England Conservatory (1968–76) before joining the music department at Columbia University (Chair 1996–9; MacDowell Professor from 1997). His honours include a Rome Prize Fellowship (1973), a Naumberg Recording Award (1974) for Kreuz und Quer, two Guggenheim fellowships and five residencies at the MacDowell Colony. His Second String Quartet was a winner of the 1983 League of Composers–ISCM National Competition. His music, most of which is for small ensembles, is highly polyphonic, chromatic, motivically developed and challenging to performers. Its textures range from the dense and eventful, as in Kreuz und Quer (1971), to the attenuated and lacy, as in Exchange-Misère (1974). These two works, his First String Quartet (1967) and Veined Variety (1978), have been recorded. He has written articles on contemporary music and Haydn string quartets.

WORKS

Orch: 2 Pieces, 1964; Giro, 1974, Moneta's Mourn, 1983; Heraclitean Fire, str qt, str orch, 1987; Pf Conc., 1990

Vocal: The Captive (M. Proust), S, 14 insts, 1970; 3 Hopkins Songs (G.M. Hopkins), 2 S, 2 pf, 1972; Wild Air (Hopkins), Ct, 4 rec, 1975; Veined Variety (Hopkins), S, 4 players, 1978; The Leaden Echo and the Golden Echo (Hopkins), 3 female vv, 9 insts, 1979; A Mirth but Open'd (G. Herbert), song cycle, S, pf, 1986; The Resurrection of the Wheat (W. Whitman), S, pf, 1993

Chbr and solo inst: Bits, 11 insts, 1966; 2 Pieces, pf, 1967; Str Qt no.1, 1967; Double Play, 2 pf, 1970; Kreuz und Quer, 5 insts, 1971; 2 Bagatelles, pf, 1972; Suspension Bridge, vc, 1972; Monopoly, 17 ww, pf, perc, 1973; Exchange-Misère, fl + pic + a fl, cl + b cl, vn + va, vc, pf, 1974; Sonda, fl, pf, 1975; Draconian Measures, pf, 1976; Gyromancy, 7 insts, 1977; Northern Spy, 9 insts, 1980; Str Qt no.2, 1982; Suave mari magno, pf, 1984; 5 Etudes, pf, 1985; Trio, hn, vn, pf, 1987; Parallel Convergences, 11 insts, 1988; Plus ça change . . ., 7 insts, 1992; Czeched Swing, pf, 1994; The Isle Is Full of Noises, 6 insts, 1995; Trio, cl, va, pf, 1999

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R. Black: '. . . and Each Harmonical has a Point of its Own . . .', PNM, xvii/1 (1978–9), 126–30

DAVID WRIGHT

Edwards, Henry Sutherland (b Hendon [now in London], 5 Sept 1828; d London, 21 Jan 1906). English writer and critic. He had some early success as author or collaborator for several farces, extravaganzas and pantomimes (Noureddin and the Fair Persian, 1849, Little Red Riding Hood, 1858, and The Goose with the Golden Eggs, 1859). He also wrote novels, which were not successful, and miscellaneous journalism, political as well as musical. In the 1850s he contributed to Henry Vizetelly's Illustrated Times and was sent to Russia as its correspondent for the coronation of Aleksandr II in 1856. Later, for The Times, he was correspondent in Poland (1862 and 1863) and wrote reports on the Franco-Prussian War in 1870.

Edwards's later journalism was often on musical subjects, and by the 1860s he was part of the circle of critics associated with the powerful J.W. Davison, music critic for The Times and the Musical World (William Howard Glover, Desmond Ryan, Campbell Clarke, Joseph Bennett). He followed Glover as music reviewer for the Morning Chronicle and also wrote notices of operatic performances for the Pall Mall Gazette and, later, the St James's Gazette. Among his many books were The Russians at Home and the Russians Abroad (1861), History of the Opera (1862), The Germans in France (1874), Rossini and his School (1881) and The Prima Donna: her History and Surroundings (1888). His Personal Recollections were published in 1900.

ROBERT BLEDSOE

Edwards, Julian (b Manchester, England, 11 Dec 1855; d Yonkers, NY, 5 Sept 1910). English conductor and composer. He studied in Edinburgh under Herbert Oakeley and in London under George Macfarren. The Royal English Opera Company hired him as conductor in 1880. He immigrated to the USA in 1888 and became an American citizen in 1900. In New York he worked mainly as a conductor of operettas, and composed almost two dozen of his own. His Brian Boru (1896) became popular, causing him to be compared to Michael William Balfe. Of his five serious operas only King René's Daughter (1893), on the same plot as Tchaikovsky's Iolanta, had much success. His books and scores were given to the New York Public Library by his widow in 1914. (DAB, A. Elson)

WORKS
(selective list)

all published in vocal score

Victorian (op, 4, J.F.R. Anderson, after H.W. Longfellow: The Spanish Student); Sheffield, 6 March 1883 (London, 1883)

Jupiter, or The Cobbler and the King (comic op, 2, H.B. Smith); New York, 14 April 1892 (Cincinnati, 1892)

Friend Fritz (after Erckmann-Chatrian); New York, 26 Jan 1893 (Cincinnati, 1893)

King René's Daughter (lyric drama, 1, J. Edwards, after H. Herz); New York, 22 Nov 1893 (Cincinnati, 1893)

Madeline, or The Magic Kiss (comic op, 3, S. Stangé); New York, 31 July 1894 (Cincinnati, 1894)

Brian Boru (romantic op, 3, Stangé); New York, 19 Oct 1896 (Cincinnati, 1896)

The Wedding Day (comic op, 3, Stangé); New York, 8 April 1897 (Cincinnati, 1897)

Dolly Varden (comic op, 2, Stangé, after C. Dickens: Barnaby Rudge); London, 1901 (New York, 1901)

The Patriot (tragic op, 1, Stangé); Boston, 1907 (New York, 1907)

4 sacred cants., incl. Lazarus (G. Newman), solo vv, 4vv chorus, orch (New York, 1907)

2 secular cants.; many songs, incl. Sunlight and Shadow, 9 songs, lv, pf (Cincinnati, 1894)

MSS in US-NYp, WC

ERIC BLOM/JUNE C. OTTENBERG

Edwards [Edwardes], Richard (b Somerset, Feb or March 1525; d London, 31 Oct 1566). English poet, dramatist and composer. He was admitted to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in May 1540 and joined the newly founded Christ Church in 1546. By 1557 he was a member of the Chapel Royal. In 1561 he was appointed Master of the Children; several of his plays were performed by the Children. At his death he was succeeded by William Hunnis.

Edwards's great reputation in the 16th century (he was mentioned with approval in a number of sources from 1563 to 1600) was based less on his music than on his activities as a poet, dramatist and courtier. His posthumous poetical miscellany The Paradyse of Daynty Devises (1576), including about 20 of his poems, was the most popular of the Elizabethan miscellanies. Its contents were described by the printer as 'aptly made to be set to any song in .5. partes, or song to instrument', and several settings of poems from it are known. Edwards's only surviving play, Damon and Pithias (performed 1564), is of interest as an early example of English tragi-comedy and of the choirboy play. It called for the use of instruments, including trumpets and regals, and both it and the lost Palamon and Arcite (performed 1566) contained songs.

Edwards's extant compositions are few. The Mulliner Book contains a keyboard arrangement of a song, O the syllye man, with an attribution to him; the words, by Francis Kinwelmarsh (beginning 'By painted words'), are in the Paradyse. Two anonymous pieces in the Mulliner Book, In goinge to my naked bedde and When grypinge griefes, are usually attributed to Edwards on the strength of his authorship of the words, as are two manuscript settings, When May is in his prime (with viols) and In youthlye yeeres (with lute; perhaps originally with viols). When grypinge griefes was quoted in part by Shakespeare (in Romeo and Juliet, Act 4 scene v). A song from Damon and Pithias, 'Awake, ye woeful wights', exists in a manuscript arrangement for voice and lute; in the play it was accompanied by regals. There is a setting of the Lord's Prayer by Edwards in Day's Psalter of 1563; the tune is the 'Vater unser', melody later used by Bach (first printed in Valentin Schumann's Geistliche Lieder, 1539; first English printing in Psalmes of David, 1560). A motet, Terrenium sitiens, at Peterhouse, Cambridge, is possibly by Edwards.

In goinge to my naked bedde has been famous since Hawkins printed it in 1776. It has a markedly melodic top line and a well developed 'modern' tonality, like many contemporary consort songs, and it may well have been sung as such. Its texture, in which simple harmonic writing alternates with imitation, is of a type found in Italian and Dutch pieces of the time. Some of the attractive sequences are stock Italian material, but the rhythmic effect is distinctive and English because of the masculine rhymes. When May is in his prime is a lively, tuneful piece with clever, complex rhythms; the 'poulter's measure' of the verse is reproduced in the music with unusual accuracy. The surviving song from Damon and Pithias is an interesting early example of a type of play song whose function is analogous to that of the rhetorical set speech.

WORKS

SACRED

Lord's Prayer, 4vv, 1563[8] (on 'Vater unser im Himmelreich')

Terrenium sitiens, motet, 5vv, GB-Cp (inc., doubtful, possibly by Edwards)

SECULAR

O the syllye man; In goinge to my naked bedde; When grypinge griefes: partsongs arr. kbd, GB-Lbl (anon.); 1 ed. in EM, xxxvi (1924, rev. 2/1961); 2 ed. in MB, i (1951, rev. 2/1954)

Awake, ye woeful wights (Edwards: Damon and Pithias, 1564); In youthlye yeeres, anon.: 1v, lute, Lbl; 1 ed. P. Warlock (London, n.d.)

When May is in his prime, 1v, 4 viols, Och, Lbl (anon., inc., T only); ed. in MB, xxii (1967)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BDECM; HawkinsH; Le HurayMR

G.E.P. Arkwright: 'Elizabethan Choirboy Plays and their Music', PMA, xl (1913–14), 117–38

L. Bradner: The Life and Poems of Richard Edwards (New Haven, CT, and London, 1927)

H.E. Rollins, ed.: The Paradyse of Daynty Devises (Cambridge, MA, 1927)

B. Pattison: Music and Poetry of the English Renaissance (London, 1948/R, 2/1970), esp. 55–6

M. Frost: English & Scottish Psalm & Hymn Tunes c.1543–1677 (London, 1953)

P. Brett: 'The English Consort Song, 1570–1625', PRMA, lxxxviii (1961–2), 73–88

M.E. Joiner: Music and Rhetoric in English Drama of the Later 16th and Early 17th Centuries (diss., U. of Cambridge, 1967)

J.H. Long: 'Music for a Song in "Damon and Pithias"', ML, xlviii (1967), 247–50; see also ML, xlix (1968), 98–100, 304–6

E.J. Dent: 'The Sixteenth-Century Madrigal', The Age of Humanism, 1540–1630, NOHM, iv (1968), 33–95

N. Fortune: 'Solo Song and Cantata', The Age of Humanism, 1540–1630, NOHM, iv (1968), 125–217

T.R. Waldo: 'Music and Musical Terms in Richard Edwards's "Damon and Pithias"', ML, xlix (1968), 29–35

MICHAEL SMITH

Edwards, Ross (b Sydney, 23 Dec 1943). Australian composer. After attending the NSW Conservatorium, Sydney, he enrolled at the University of Sydney, studied composition with Meale and worked as assistant to Sculthorpe, and then studied with Maxwell Davies and Veress at the University of Adelaide. His music was heard at the ISCM festivals at Stockholm (1966) and Basel (1970), and he moved to Britain for further studies with Davies in 1970. This was followed by a period living in a farmhouse in Yorkshire, and he returned to Australia in 1972. From 1973 he taught at the University of Sydney (taking the DMus in 1991), but he has chiefly been a freelance composer, filling commissions for the ABC orchestras, the major Australian contemporary ensembles and occasionally ensembles such as the Fires of London. He was Australia Council Don Banks fellow (1989–90), then an Australia Council creative arts fellow (1990–93 and 1995–7)

Edwards at first wrote music using the acerbic, atonal techniques favoured by his teachers in the late 1960s; these early works are for solo or chamber groups, such as the Monos series for solo instruments (1970–72). But in isolation in Yorkshire during 1971 he crafted a more independent and distinctive language, seeking its sources in nature or in techniques beyond the constraints of European serialism, and aimed at more effective communication with the listener. His language came to espouse two principal styles. The first is characterized by a mood of serenity and meditation, at times influenced by the static patterns of certain Asian musics, as in Mountain Village in a Clearing Mist (1973) and The Hermit of the Green Light (1979). The second is a more vibrant, rhythmically energetic mood, often drawing its materials from coastal NSW, as he became interested in the arrangement into abstract patterns of natural elements such as the sounds of insects. The Tower of Remoteness (1978) and Yarrageh (1989) are examples, as are, best known, the Maninyas series (1981–8), which began with a set of nonsense syllables and appealing melodic fragments, from which he produced works of great gaiety and rhythmic buoyancy. 'I've evolved a highly subjective method of topographical symbolism', he has written. 'The art of composition has come to represent a ritualistic search for the life force underlying our sterile, material society'. His orchestral works, including the widely played Piano Concerto (1982), the Maninyas Violin Concerto (1988) and the Symphony 'Da pacem Domine' (1990–91) have gained him wide attention. Austere and compelling, his has become one of the most convincing voices of Australian music.

WORKS

(selective list)

Stage: Christina's World (chbr op, 1, D. Hewett), 1983, rev. 1989; Sensing (dance), 1992–3

Orch: Mountain Village in a Clearing Mist, 1973; Pf Conc., 1982; Maninyas (Vn Conc.), 1988; Yarrageh (Nocturne), perc, orch, 1989; Aria and Transcendental Dance, hn, str, 1990; Sym. 'Da

pacem Domine', 1990–91; Conc., gui, str, 1994–5; Enyato III, 1995

Choral: 5 Carols from 'Quem quaeritis', SSAA, 1967; Antifon, SATB, brass sextet, org, 2 perc, 1973; Ab estatis foribus, SATB, 1980; Flower Songs, SATB, 2 perc, 1986–7; Dance Mantras, 6vv, drum, 1992

Chbr: Shadow D-Zone, fl, cl, perc, pf, vn, vc, 1977; The Tower of Remoteness, cl, pf, 1978; Laikan, fl, cl, perc, pf, vn, vc, 1979; Maninya II, str qt, 1982; 10 Little Duets, 2 high insts, 1982; Maninya III, wind qnt, 1985; Reflections, pf, 3 perc, 1985; Maninya IV, b cl, trbn, mar, 1985–6; Ecstatic Dances, 2 fl, 1990; Ecstatic Dance II (va, vc)/(2 vn)/(2 va)/(vn, va), 1990; Prelude and Dragonfly Dance, perc qt, 1991; Black Mountain Duos, 2 vc, 1992; Enyato I, str qt, 1993; Veni Creator Spiritus, double str qt, 1993; 4 Bagatelles, ob, cl, 1994; Enyato IV, b cl, perc, 1995; Binyang, cl, perc, 1996

Solo inst: Monos I, vc, 1970; Marimba Dances, 1982; Ulpirra, rec/pic/cl, 1993; Enyato II, va, 1994; Gui Dances, 1994; Raft Song at Sunrise, shakuhachi, 1995

Kbd: Monos II, 1970; 5 Little Pf Pieces, 1976; Kumari, 1980–81; Etymalong, 1984; 3 Children's Pieces, 1986–7; Pond Light Mantras, 2 pf, 1991; 3 Little Pf Duets, 1992; Sanctuary, 2 pf, gongs, 1995

Solo vocal: The Hermit of the Green Light, C/Mez, pf, 1979; Maninya I, C/Mez, vc, 1981; Maninya V, C/Mez, pf, 1986; Nos qui vivimus, T, vc, 1995

Film: Paradise Road, 1996

Principal publishers: Albert Publishing, Boosey & Hawkes, Currency Press, Universal

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Murdoch: Australia's Contemporary Composers (Sydney, 1972), 88

M. Hannan: 'Ross Edwards: a Unique Sound World', Australian Performing Rights Association Journal (Mar 1986)

R. Edwards: 'Credo', Sounds Australian, no.23 (1989), 8

R. Edwards: 'An Emotional Geography of Australian Composition', Sounds Australian, no.34 (1992)

A. Ford: Composer to Composer (Sydney, 1993), 97–100

P. Stanhope: 'Ritual in the Music of Ross Edwards: an Introduction', Sounds Australian, no.37 (1993), 21–4

WARREN BEBBINGTON

Edwards, Sian (b West Chiltington, West Sussex, 27 May 1959). English conductor. After gaining her diploma at the RNCM she studied conducting in London with Charles Groves and Norman Del Mar, and later in Leningrad with Ilya Musin. Her other teachers included Neeme Järvi. In 1984 she won first prize in the Leeds International Conducting Competition, which led to engagements with various British orchestras, and two years later she made her operatic début with Scottish Opera, in Weill's Mahagonny. Edwards conducted La traviata at Glyndebourne in 1987, and the following year became the first woman to conduct at Covent Garden, with a rare production of Tippett's The Knot Garden. She subsequently opened the 1989–90 Covent Garden season with Rigoletto. In 1988 she conducted the world première of Mark-Anthony Turnage's opera Greek at the Munich Festival, with further performances at the Edinburgh Festival. Her first appearance at the ENO was in Prokofiev's The Gambler in 1990; three years later she was appointed the company's music director. She left this post in December 1995, at a time when the ENO was suffering management problems, and has since maintained her activities as a freelance conductor with many orchestras in Europe and America. Her recordings include Judith Weir's Blond Eckbert and orchestral works by Mozart, Tchaikovsky and Michael Berkeley.

JESSICA DUCHEN

Eeden, Gilles van den. See VAN DEN EEDEN, GILLES.

Eeden, Jan [Jean Baptiste] van den (b Ghent, 26 Dec 1842; d Mons, 4 April 1917). Belgian composer and pianist. The son of a shoemaker, he first studied the piano, singing and music theory at the Ghent Conservatory, and in 1864 continued his composition studies at the Brussels Conservatory, where he was taught counterpoint by Fétis. He came second in the Belgian Prix de Rome in 1865 with a cantata De wind and in 1869 won the competition with Fausts laatste nacht, using the prize money to visit France, Germany, Italy and Austria; as a result, his music became strongly influenced by Wagner. On his return to Belgium he was one of the first musicians to join Peter Benoit's cause in pressing for a Flemish national music culture and music education. In 1878 he succeeded Gustave Huberti as director of the music academy at Mons, which under his administration was promoted to the status of conservatory (in 1884). He was elected to the Belgian Royal Academy in 1911. With the outbreak of World War I he moved to England, but returned to Mons in September 1915 to resume his post at the conservatory.

WORKS
(selective list)

many MSS in B-Bc

Stage: Numance (op, 4, M. Carré, C. Narrey), Antwerp, 1898; Rhéna (op, 4, Carré), Brussels, 1912 (Brussels, 1912)

Large choral: De wind (cant.), 1865; Jacques Van Artevelde (orat), *c*1865; Le jugement dernier (Het laatste oordeel) (orat), 1867; Fausts laatste nacht (cant.), 1869; Brutus (orat), 1874; Roland de Lassus (cant.), 1894

Other vocal: De oogst [The harvest], chorus (Brussels, 1877); Le rêve, chorus (Brussels, 1894); songs

Inst: Suite, E♭, orch, 1874; De geuzenstrijd der XVIe eeuw [The Dutch Protestant Uprising of the 16th Century], sym. poem, 1876; chbr and kbd works

BIBLIOGRAPHY

P. Bergmans: 'Notice sur Jean van den Eeden', Annuaire de l'Académie royale des sciences, des lettres et des beaux-arts de Belgique, xc (1924), 375–435 [incl. list of works]

M. Delsaux: Jean van den Eeden et son oeuvre (Mons, 1925)

PATRICK PEIRE

Effective length. See SPEAKING LENGTH.

Effinger, Cecil (b Colorado Springs, CO, 22 July 1914; d Boulder, CO, 22 Dec 1990). American composer and inventor. He studied mathematics at Colorado College (BA 1935), harmony and counterpoint with Frederick Boothroyd (Colorado Springs, 1934–6) and composition with Boulanger in Paris (1939). He played first oboe in the Colorado Springs SO (1934–41) and Denver SO (1937–41). He taught at the Colorado College (1936–41, 1946–8), served as conductor of the 506th US Army Band (1941–5) and taught at the University of Colorado in Boulder (1948–81, composer-in-residence 1981–4), where he became the head of the composition department. He formed a lifelong friendship with Roy Harris, beginning in 1941. In 1954 Effinger patented the 'Musicwriter' typewriter (see PRINTING AND PUBLISHING OF MUSIC, §I, 5(iv)), which he manufactured and sold worldwide for 35 years. He also invented the 'Tempowatch', the only device that can accurately determine the tempo of music as it is being performed.

As a composer he was prolific (168 works); among his most popular compositions are his choral works, several of which are large scale and based on sacred subjects, including The St Luke Christmas Story (1953), The Invisible Fire (1957) and Paul of Tarsus (1968). Many others use poetry by Colorado laureate Thomas Hornsby Ferril. Of these, Four Pastorales for oboe and chorus is the most frequently performed. Effinger created a large body of chamber and symphonic works, among them the Little Symphony (1945), Symphony for Chorus and Orchestra (no.4, 1952), the String Quartet no.5 (1963) and the series Landscapes. Although he used dissonance, he never abandoned consonant harmonies, referring to his idiom as 'atonal tonality'. His instrumental works contain lyrical string melodies, lilting woodwind figurations and traditional developmental forms. Many of his works reflect his native Rocky Mountain region in their choice of text, programmatic titles and pastoral style that he associated with western themes.

WORKS

Stage: Pandora's Box (children's op, 1, S. Monsour), 1961; Cyrano de Bergerac (op, 3, D. Sutherland, after E. Rostand), 1965; The Gentleman Desperado (music theater, 2, Sutherland), 1976; incid music

Syms: Little Sym. no.1, 1945; no.1, 1946; no.2, 1947; no.3, 1952; no.4, chorus orch, 1954; Little Sym. no.2, 1958; no.5, 1958

Other orch: Western Ov., op.12, 1942; Suite, vc, chbr orch, 1945; Pf Conc., 1946; Sym. concertante, hp, pf, orch, 1954; Tone Poem on the Square Dance, 1955; Landscape, brass, str, 1966; Capriccio, 1975; Toccata, chbr orch, 1980; Landscape II, 1984; Landscape III, 1987; Cappriccio, chbr orch, 1989; *c*21 others

Band: Interlude on a Blues Tune, 1944; Silver Plume, 1961; *c*15 others, incl. arrs. of orch works

Other chbr and solo inst: Prelude and Toccata, ob, pf, 1940; Va Sonata, 1944; Pf Sonata, 1946; Pf Sonata, 1949; Nocturne, accdn, 1954; Dialogue, cl, pf, 1957; Solitude, sax, pf, 1960, arr. eng hn, chbr orch, 1978; Pf Sonata, 1968; Fantasia agitato, cl, pf, 1972; Pf Trio, op.88, 1973; Rondo, pf, trio, 1975; Cloud Forms, fl choir, 1982; Intrada, brass qnt, 1982; 10 Miniatures, pf, 1982; Divertimento, ob, bn, 1983; Fl Sonata, 1985; other kbd and chbr works

Choral and solo vocal: The St Luke Christmas Story, solo vv, SATB, org, chbr orch, 1953; The Glorious Day is Here (Bible), SATB, org, 1955; The Invisible Fire (orat, T. Driver), solo vv, SATB, orch, 1957; Set of Three (T.H. Ferril), chorus, brass, 1961; 4 Pastorales (Ferril), chorus, ob, 1962; Paul of Tarsus (orat, Bible), SATB, str, org, 1968; The Long Dimension (Ferril, Effinger), SATB, orch, 1970; Waterbug and Owl (Ferril), chorus, cl, 1982; Canticles (e.e. cummings), Bar, fl, pf, 1984; In Praise of Musicke (various texts), chorus, pf, db, drums, 1984; Sonnet at Dusk (Clark), chorus, str, 1984; The Blue Anvil (Clark), 1989; Dawn of a Christmas Day (1990); many others, incl. sacred choral pieces

Principal publishers: Augsburg, Elkan-Vogel, C. Fischer, Gray, Jensen, Presser, G. Schirmer

BIBLIOGRAPHY

EwenD

L. Worster: Cecil Effinger: a Colorado Composer (Lanham, MD, 1997)

LAWRENCE WORSTER

Effrem [Efrem], Mutio [Muzio] (b Bari, 4 Nov 1549; d Naples, after 1626). Italian composer and musician. According to his own testimony, he was for 22 years in the service of Carlo Gesualdo, Prince of Venosa, and his long period in Naples led to him later being called a Neapolitan musician. Beginning in December 1615 he served for three and a half years at the court of Mantua with the title of maestro di cappella of the ducal camera. From 3 June 1619 to October 1622 he was a musician at the grand-ducal court in Florence. He returned in 1623 to Naples, where he seems to have remained for the rest of his life. He is last heard of in 1626 with the appearance in Naples of the posthumous book of six-part madrigals by Gesualdo that he prepared for publication and for which he wrote the dedication. His musical production was slight: a three-part villanella, a madrigal for four voices, five for five voices and one for two sopranos and continuo. Except for one of the five-part madrigals (see below) these pieces appeared in collections (1574^{6}, 1582^{12}, F.A. Baseo's Il primo libro de madrigali a cinque voci (Venice, 1582), 1591^{18}, 1609^{16} and 1617^{3}). The two in the 1617 collection were composed for the production of La Maddalena, a sacra rappresentazione that GIOVANNI BATTISTA ANDREINI wrote for Mantua in 1617 (Monteverdi was among the others who wrote music for it).

Effrem is, however, chiefly remembered not for his music but for his Censure … sopra il sesto libro de madrigali di M. Marco da Gagliano, which circulated for several years in manuscript before being printed in Venice in 1623. It is a book of spectacular bad temper in which the violence of the attack on Gagliano's music and on him personally is almost without parallel. In it the 14 five-part madrigals of Gagliano's sixth book are reprinted in score with a running commentary on errors in part-writing, incorrect cadences, misuse of chromaticism, breaking of the modes and a general confusion of genre, in which the madrigal is mistaken for the canzonetta, as the conservative Effrem saw them. He also accused Gagliano of plagiarizing passages from Gesualdo's fifth and sixth books of madrigals. Specifically, Effrem claimed that sections of Gagliano's Chi sete voi che saettate and Oime tu piangi o Filli were taken from Gesualdo's Felicissimo sonno and Tu piangi, o Filli mia respectively. In both cases the resemblances are insignificant and, in fact, Effrem actually recommended Gesualdo's music as a compositional model for Gagliano. Furthermore, the very freedoms of part-writing and chromaticism for which the conservative Effrem so bitterly denounced Gagliano are exhibited much more markedly in Gesualdo's music. Effrem included a madrigal of his own in the Censure as a demonstration of good counterpoint, but it displays several of the errors that he condemned in Gagliano's work. The most significant outcome of the Censure appears to have been Effrem's dismissal from his position in Florence; perhaps he did not foresee that an attack on Gagliano, maestro di cappella to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, would be regarded as an attack on the Medici court itself.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

BertolottiM; EinsteinIM; SolertiMBD

E. Vogel: 'Marco da Gagliano: zur Geschichte des Florentiner Musiklebens von 1570–1650', VMw, v (1889), 396–442, 509–68

C. Valabrega: 'Antiche schermaglie', La Scala, no.114 (1959), 28–30, 77–8

M. Fabbri: 'La collezione medicea degli strumenti musicali in due sconosciuti inventari del primo Seicento', NA, new ser., i (1983), 51–62, esp. 62

S. Parisi: Ducal Patronage of Music in Mantua, 1587–1627: an Archival Study (diss., U. of Illinois, 1989), 437–8

W. Kirkendale: The Court Musicians in Florence during the Principate of the Medici (Florence, 1993), 359–66

E. Strainchamps: 'Theory as Polemic: Mutio Effrem's Censure … sopra il sesto libro de madrigali di Marco da Gagliano', Music Theory and the Exploration of the Past, ed. C. Hatch and D.W. Bernstein (Chicago, 1992), 189–216

EDMOND STRAINCHAMPS

Egardus [Engardus] (*fl c*1400). South Netherlandish composer. He may be identifiable with Johannes Ecghaerd, who was succentor of St Donatian, Bruges, in 1370–71. Although Egardus's works appear in five manuscripts with strong papal or conciliar associations, his presence in Italy is not confirmed by archival documents. The Gloria 'Spiritus et alme' (in four fragmentary manuscripts, I-Pu 1225 and 1475, I-GR 197 and NL-Uu 1875, olim 37; ed. in PMFC, xiii, 1987) employs strict organization by talea, while a second Gloria (I-MOe α.M.5.24; ed. in PMFC, xii, 1976) is marked by flexible text setting and rhythmic imitation. The canonic Furnos reliquisti/Equum est (MOe α.M.5.24; ed. in PMFC, xiii, 1987) has been described both as a musical epistle and as 'a joke'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

StrohmR
R. Strohm: 'Magister Egardus and Other Italo-Flemish contacts', L'Europa e la musica del Trecento: Congresso IV: Certaldo 1984 [L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento, vi (Certaldo, 1992)], 41–68
B. Schmid: 'Zur Rekonstruktion einer Gloria-Motette von Engardus in den Paduaner Fragmenten', Mf, xxxviii (1985), 195–201
K. von Fischer: 'Bemerkungen zur Überlieferung und zum Stil der geistlichen Werke des Antonio Zacharias da Teramo', MD, xli (1987), 161–82
V. Newes: 'Chace, Caccia, Fuga: the Convergence of French and Italian Traditions', MD, xli (1987), 27–57

ROBERT NOSOW

Egedacher. German family of organ builders. They were active mainly in Bavaria, Salzberg, Upper Austria and the Tyrol. Christoph Egedacher (*d c*1661) lived in Straubing and was highly reputed as an organ builder. He built organs for Freising Cathedral (1624); St Ignatius, Landshut (1641–2); Velden, near Landshut (1642); St Johannes, Erding (1643); the Benedictine abbey, Lambach (1653–7); and the pilgrimage church of the Schmerzhafte Muttergottes, Deggendorf (1660). As the specifications of the Freising and Erding organs show, Christoph Egedacher carried on the south German tradition of the 17th century with a predominance of Diapason choruses both in the manuals and in the Pedal. His son Christoph the younger (b Straubing, 19 May 1641; d Salzburg, 6 April 1706) obtained the freedom of the city of Munich in 1663. In 1669 he moved to Salzburg, where he became court organ builder in 1673. He built numerous organs, including for St Andreas, Kitzbühel (1668); the abbey of St Emmeram, Regensburg (1669); Grossgmain (1672); the Benedictine abbey, Mondsee (1678); Benediktbeuern Abbey (1686); Brixen im Thale (1696); the Theatinerkirche, Salzburg (1697; placed totally in the parapet); and the Cistercian convent at Waldsassen (1699). His masterpiece was the great organ built for Salzburg Cathedral (1702–3). Unlike his father, Christoph the younger mostly reduced the Pedal stop-list of his organs to one or two registers (Subbass 16′, Octavbass 8′).

Johann Christoph Egedacher (b Munich, 3 Jan 1666; d Salzburg, 13 Sept 1747), son of Christoph the younger, travelled to Trent in 1703 to study the famous organ of S Maria Maggiore. He rebuilt and enlarged his father's organ in Salzburg Cathedral and provided it with a detached console of three manuals, one of the first ever built. Its specification, influenced by the Trent organ, includes Harpa 16′, Fagott 8′, Scarpa 4′, the undulating Piffaro and Heerpaucken, as well as Vogl-Gesang. In 1718, after having visited Andreas Silbermann in Strasbourg in 1716, he rebuilt the Salzburg Cathedral organ again. His numerous organs include Stuhlfelden (1706); Kollegienkirche, Salzburg (1708–9); Obermauern (1713); the Cistercian abbey, Salem, near Konstanz (Our Lady's Organ, 1714–16; and Trinity Organ, 1719–20); Burghausen (1717); Neumarkt, near Salzburg (1729); Prien (1738); and the Carmelite church, Linz (1741). His brother Johann Ignaz (*b c*1675; d Passau, 20 June 1744) worked independently. He went to Passau where he married Maria Franziska Freund, daughter of Leopold Freund, in 1709 and eventually took over the Freund workshop. He built organs for Passau Cathedral (1715–18, two swallow's nest organs in the crossing; and 1732–3, main organ); St Michael, Passau (1720–22); St Pölten Cathedral (1722); the pilgrimage church at Stadl-Paura, near Lambach (1722–3; three organs); the Cistercian abbey, Zwettl (1731); and the Benedictine abbey, Vornbach (1732). In Zwettl and St Pölten he placed all registers of the manuals in the parapet, with the organist facing the altar. The broken octave (with F♯ and G♯) in the pedal as well as the 'gallantry registers' in the third manual of the Zwettl organ indicate the overcoming of old traditions and the turn towards a new musical style.

Johann Rochus Egedacher (b Salzburg, 5 Aug 1714; d Salzburg, 14 June 1785), son of Johann Christoph, was the last owner of the Salzburg workshop. His organs appear to have been influenced by the works of his uncle, Johann Ignaz. He built instruments for the parish church, Bressanone (1739–40); Mariapfarr (1757); Berndorf (1766); Michaelskirche, Salzburg (1770); Seekirchen (1776); Tittmonig (1779); and Radstadt (1785). He also built stringed instruments; one of his clavichords is owned by the Heimatmuseum, Bad Aussee, Austria. The family's organ building activity declined during his era.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J.B. Samber: Continuatio ad manuductionem organicum (Salzburg, 1707)
G. Brenninger: 'Der Straubinger Orgelbauer Christoph Egedacher', Mf, xxix (1976), 56–60
H. Schuler: 'Egedacher: Herkunft, Leben und Schaffen eines süddeutschen Orgelgeschlechtes von 1624 bis 1786', Genealogie, xxvii (1978), 369–89
G. Walterskirchen: Orgeln und Orgelbauer in Salzburg vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart (diss., Salzburg U., 1982)
H. Schulten: 'Geschichte und Gestalt der Domorgeln', Der Dom in Passau, ed. K. Möseneder (Passau, 1995), 466–70

ALFRED REICHLING

Egeland Hansen, Finn. See HANSEN, FINN EGELAND.

Egenolff, Christian (b Hadamar, 26 July 1502; d Frankfurt, 9 Feb 1555). German printer. He enrolled as a student at the University of Mainz in 1516, probably remaining there until 1519. In 1528 he established a printing business in Strasbourg. In 1530 he moved to Frankfurt, where he was accepted as a citizen in the same year and began printing in 1530 or 1531. During the years 1538–43 he also maintained a subsidiary firm in Marburg where he was official university printer. He soon left this branch in the hands of his assistant, Andreas Kolbe, and returned to Frankfurt. After his death the firm was continued by his widow Margarethe until 1572, when she divided it among his heirs, who continued publishing under the name Egenolff until 1605.

Egenolff was the first printer of any importance in the city of Frankfurt, which was to become one of the main centres of the trade in the later 16th century. His production of about 500 works was large for his time; it included works in a great variety of fields such as medicine, science, history and the classics. His music publications, though a very small part of the total output, reflect his close ties to the humanistic movement and to the leaders of the Reformation. The earlier edition of Horatian odes (1532) was dedicated to Gerardus Noviomagus and the second (1551[17]) was compiled by Petrus Nigidius, both prominent teachers in Marburg. Egenolff's most valuable contribution to music lies in the various collections of secular songs. Many of the circumstances surrounding their origin and publication remain obscure. Unlike earlier song collections such as those printed by Oeglin, Schoeffer and Arnt von Aich, they are not connected with the repertory of a particular court. Egenolff apparently compiled and edited them himself, contrary to the practice of the contemporary Nuremberg publishers Forster and Ott. In spite of, or perhaps because of, their great popularity, virtually none of Egenolff's collections has been preserved intact. Generally entire partbooks are missing, and in some cases only a single partbook remains. Since the title, printer's mark, date of publication and complete text were generally included only in the tenor partbook, its frequent loss has been particularly unfortunate. Although these publications can be traced to Egenolff by a comparison of the type–forms and woodcuts used, their titles can no longer be determined, and dates remain a subject of speculation often leading to controversy. On the basis of watermarks Bridgman considered that the three Paris discant books (*c*1535[14]) were published between 1532 and 1535, whereas Müller and Berz placed them after 1536. A possible criterion for chronology may be found in Egenolff's use of two very different arrangements of the song texts. In the two collections dated 1535, Gassenhawerlin(1535[10]) and Reutterliedlin (1535[11]), a text incipit is included with the music in each partbook and the complete text is written below the melody only in the tenor voice. The Paris books, which have text incipits, may also fall within this category. In the remaining collections each voice is underlaid with the first strophe. Since this group includes second editions of works first published in 1535 and 1536, it must be later.

Egenolff was the first German printer to employ the single-impression technique developed by Attaingnant and is also noted for his frequent use of woodcuts for illustrations and initials, particularly in the song collections. Although modern scholars have tended to compare the quality of his work unfavourably with that of his Nuremberg contemporaries, Formschneider and Petreius, there can be no doubt as to the success and influence of his musical publications.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS
(selective list)

all published in Frankfurt

CHRISTIAN EGENOLFF

P. Tritonius: Odarum Horatii concentus (1532) [reprint of Oeglin edition of 1507]
Gassenhawerlin (1535[10]) [39 German songs]
Reutterliedlin (1535[11]) [38 German songs]
Gassenhawer und Reutterliedlin (*c*1535[13]/R 1927, using the 3 extant partbooks (ATB) of the individual collections and the discant of the combined edn.) [88 German songs; expanded edition of first two collections]
Graszliedlin (*c*1535[12]) [28 German songs]
[3 discant partbooks] (*c*1535[14]) [43 chansons, mainly French; 36 Flemish songs; 68 songs in various languages; for description, incipits and concordances see Bridgman]
[Liederbuch] (*c*1535[15]) [56 German songs]
[Liederbuch] (1536[8]) [65 German songs; repr. of Schöffer & Apiarius edition of 1534]
J. Spangenberg: Hymni ecclesiastici duodecim (1550)
P. Nigidius, ed.: Geminae undeviginti Odarum Horatii melodiae (1551[17])
B. Waldis: Der Psalter, in newe Gesangs weise und künstliche Reimen gebracht (1553)

HEIRS OF CHRISTIAN EGENOLFF

Gassenhawer, Reuter und Bergliedlin, Christlich moraliter, unnd sittlich verendert ... durch Herrn Henrich Knausten (1571)
W. Ammon: Libri tres odarum ecclesiasticarum (1578)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

MGG1 (K. Gudewill)
H. Grotefend: Christian Egenolff, der erste ständige Buchdrucker zu Frankfurt am Main und seine Vorläufer (Frankfurt, 1881)
R. von Liliencron: 'Die horazischen Metren in deutschen Kompositionen des 16. Jahrhunderts', VMw, iii (1887), 26–91
D.C. McMurtrie: 'Types and Typefounding in Germany: the Work of Christian Egenolff and his Successors in the Development of the Luther Foundry', Inland Printer (July 1924/R 1932 as a pamphlet)
H.J. Moser: Introduction to Gassenhawer und Reutterliedlin (Augsburg and Cologne, 1927/R) [facs.]
J. Benzing: 'Christian Egenolff zu Strassburg und seine Drucke (1528 bis 1530)', Das Antiquariat, x (1954), 88–9, 92
J. Benzing: 'Die Drucke Christian Egenolffs zu Frankfurt am Main vom Ende 1530 bis 1555', Das Antiquariat, xi (1955), 139, 162, 201, 232–6 [this together with Benzing's 1954 article contains a complete list of his works]
N. Bridgman: 'Christian Egenolff, imprimeur de musique', AnnM, iii (1955), 77–177
J. Benzing: Die Buchdrucker des 16. und 17. Jahrhunderts im deutschen Sprachgebiet (Wiesbaden, 1963, 2/1982), 113–14, 305, 415
H.C. Müller: Die Liederdrucke Christian Egenolffs (diss., U. of Kiel, 1964)
M. Staehelin: 'Zum Egenolff–Diskantband der Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris', AMw, xxiii (1966), 93–109
H. Carter: A View of Early Typography up to about 1600 (Oxford, 1969), 97–9, 115–16
E.-L. Berz: Die Notendrucker und ihre Verleger in Frankfurt am Main von den Anfängen bis etwa 1630, CaM, v (1970)

MARIE LOUISE GÖLLNER

Egeria [Aetheria, Etheria, Eucheria] (fl late 4th century CE). Pilgrim nun of Spain or Gaul. Her diary, containing a detailed description of ancient Jerusalem liturgy, survives in a single 11th-century manuscript copy, which was discovered at Arezzo by G.F. Gamurrini in 1884. He attributed the work to one St Silvia, sister of the Roman prefect, Rufinus – hence its earlier title 'Peregrinatio Silviae' – but it is now thought to be by a Spanish or Gallican nun, Egeria (the preferred spelling), mentioned by the 7th-century abbot Valerius. From references in the text to contemporary persons and events, liturgical historians have come to date the time of Egeria's pilgrimage to between 381 and 384.

The diary begins with remarks about Egeria's visits to eastern ecclesiastical centres such as Mount Sinai, Alexandria and Constantinople, but the bulk of the text consists in a description of the liturgy at Jerusalem. First the daily and weekly Offices are depicted in great detail, providing our best knowledge of the composite monastic and 'cathedral' Offices of the late 4th century. There follows, after a break in the manuscript, an account of special services throughout the liturgical year, beginning with the Epiphany and including the feast of the Presentation, Lent, Holy Week, Easter and its octave and Pentecost and its octave. The document breaks off during a description of the octave of Encaenia, that is, the dedication feast (13 September) of the buildings at Golgotha. Throughout the diary the stational character of the liturgy at Jerusalem is made clear by Egeria's consistent mention of the various sites at which the different services were observed. Of particular musical interest is her persistent use of terms such as 'psalms', 'hymns' and 'antiphons', although these are not employed in such a way as to clarify their precise meaning. Whatever the limitations of the document, it must rank as one of the single most important sources for the study of early Christian liturgy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Duchesne: Origines du culte chrétien: étude sur la liturgie latine avant Charlemagne (Paris, 1889, 5/1920; Eng. trans., 1927/R), 541–71

A. Franceschini and R.Weber, eds.: 'Itinerarium Egeriae', Itineraria et alia geographica, i (Turnhout, 1965), 29–102

G.E. Gingras, ed.: Egeria: Diary of a Pilgrimage (New York, 1970)

J. Wilkinson, ed.: Egeria's Travels (London, 1971, 2/1981)

J. McKinnon: Music in Early Christian Literature (Cambridge, 1987), 111–17

J.F. Baldovin: The Urban Character of Christian Worship (Rome, 1987), 55–64

JAMES W. MCKINNON

Egerton, Julian (b London, 24 Aug 1848; d Bilsington, 22 Jan 1945). English clarinettist. In spite of contracting polio at the age of eight, Egerton had a long and energetic playing life. He retired when he was 70, but was invited to broadcast at the age of 83 and then played on into his 93rd year. He studied first with his father, William Egerton (1798–1873), a Coldstream Guards clarinettist, and then with George Tyler (1835–78), who played for the Philharmonic Society. Tyler's widow sold his Fieldhouse clarinets to Egerton; these were of ebonite, in one piece, and had 13 solid silver keys. Egerton played in the private bands of Queen Victoria and King Edward VII, and was first clarinettist under Dannreuther, Manns, Richter and Sullivan. In April 1892 he played in Brahms's Quintet, the first Englishman to do so. His style had charm, delicacy and subtlety of rhythmic detail. Egerton taught at the RCM and Kneller Hall, numbering among his pupils Charles and Haydn Draper. Two of his sons were also clarinettists.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A.W. Proctor: 'Julian Egerton, Clarinettist', MT, lxix (1928), 268–9

P. Weston: Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1971)

P. Weston: More Clarinet Virtuosi of the Past (London, 1977)

PAMELA WESTON

Eger von Kalkar, Heinrich (b Kalkar, 1328; d Cologne, 20 Dec 1408). German monk, mystic and theorist of Gregorian chant. He studied in Cologne and later in Paris where he obtained the BA in 1355 and the MA in 1356. He taught in Paris for another seven years, after which he accepted a canonry at St Georg in Cologne and another at St Suitbertus in Kaiserswerth. In 1365, however, he entered the Carthusian order at the Charterhouse of St Barbara in Cologne, making profession there in 1366. From 1367 to 1372 he was prior of Munnikhuizen, near Arnhem, and his spiritual influence there was such that it led to the conversion of Geerte de Groote, the future founder of the Devotio moderna. Holding office successively at Roermond (1372–7), Cologne (1377–84) and Strasbourg (1384–96), he became one of the leading figures of his order. During the last years of his life he returned to the Cologne Charterhouse.

Eger is known for his short compendium, Cantuagium, written in Cologne in 1380 (ed. with facs., H. Hüschen, Cologne, 1952), which sums up the theory and practice of Gregorian chant as understood in his day. It was one of the fruits of his Parisian labours and is known to exist in six manuscripts. Eger dealt only with monophonic liturgical chant, dismissing polyphony and instrumental music as 'lascivia'. He drew heavily on his masters Boethius, St Augustine, Hieronymus de Moravia 'et aliorum musicorum ecclesiasticorum'. The work was probably written to instruct members of the Carthusian order. Eger's other works include a short history of his order, a treatise on rhetoric, and various spiritual and mystical writings influenced by such masters as Bernard of Clairvaux, Hugh of St Victor and the Dominican Meister Eckhart.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

NDB (R. Haass)

C. Le Couteulx: Annales ordinis Carthusiensis ab anno 1084 ad annum 1429 (Montreuil, 1887–91)

H.J.J. Scholtens: 'Hendrik van Eger uit Kalkar en zijn kring', Dr L. Reypens-album: opstellen aangeboden aan Prof. Dr. L. Reypens s.j. ter gelegenheid van zijn tachtigste verjaardag op 26 februari 1964, ed. A. Ampe (Antwerp, 1964), 383–408

H. Rüthing: Der Kartäuse Heinrich Egher van Kalkar 1328–1408 (Göttingen, 1967) [contains extensive bibliography, pp.279–82]

A.P. Orbán, ed.: Die Korrespondenz und der 'Liber exhortacionis' des Heinrich von Kalkar (Salzburg, 1984)

MARY BERRY

Egge, Klaus (b Gransherad, Telemark, 19 July 1906; d 7 March 1979). Norwegian composer. In Oslo he studied the piano with N. Larsen, the organ with Arild Sandvold and composition with Valen; later he was a composition pupil of Gmeindl at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik (1937–8). During the period 1933–4 he worked as a singing master at various schools in Oslo, and he also edited Tonekunst (1935–8). After the war he played a prominent part as president of the Norwegian Composers' Society, music critic for the Oslo newspaper Arbeiderbladet, president of the Scandinavian Composers' Council and vice-president of the Conseil Internationale des Compositeurs. Among the honours he received were the Norwegian state artist's award (1949), the Order of St Olaf (1958) and membership of the Swedish Music Academy.

Egge's output is generally divided into three periods. During the 1930s he quickly evolved an individual style linking ideas from folk music with conventional forms. After about 1939 his writing became more venturesome, although folk music remained the fundamental source. Tonally functional harmony was replaced by a harmony based on the 5th or 4th. The pitch structure is generated from unlike tetrachords, drawn from modes, making possible a retention of tonality – though with frequently shifting tonal centres – while all 12 notes are employed. This new manner is best displayed in the three Phantasies on folk rhythms for piano, the piano trio, the First Symphony (dedicated to the memory of Norwegian seamen killed in World War II) and the Piano Concerto no.2. The Second Symphony introduced a third period in which folk elements had less significance. Egge now approached 12-note music but kept his feeling for tonality, as in the Fourth and Fifth Symphonies whose themes are developed from 12-note series. In these works, and also in the Symphony no.3, motivic working is strongly emphasized. Other important works of this third period are the Second Piano Sonata and the concertos for violin and cello. Throughout his career Egge has given importance to counterpoint; the starting-point is always the melodic line. At the same time his music is marked by a masculine rhythm that is often the driving force of a movement.

WORKS
(selective list)

Orch: Pf Conc. no.1, op.9, 1937; Sym. no.1, op.17, 1942; Pf Conc. no.2, op.21, 1944; Sym. no.2 (Sinfonia giocosa), op.22, 1947; Fanitullen, ballet, op.24, 1950; Vn Conc., op.26, 1953; Sym. no.3

'Louisville', op.28, 1957; Vc Conc., op.29, 1966; Sym. no.4, op.30, 1967; Sym. no.5, op.31, 1969
Vocal: Lyric Suite, op.8, male chorus, 1936; Sveinung Vreim, op.11, sym. epic, chorus, orch, 1938; Fjell-Norig, op.15, 1v, orch, 1941; Noreg-songen, op.16, chorus, orch, 1941; Draumar i stjernesnø, op.18, 1v, orch, 1943; Elskhugskvede, op.19, 1v, orch, 1942
Chbr: Sonata, op.3, vn, pf, 1932; Str Qt, op.5, 1933; Wind Qnt, op.13, 1939; Pf Trio, op.14, 1941; Duo concertante, op.23, vn, va, 1950
Pf: Sonata no.1 'Draumkvede', op.4, 1933; 3 Pieces, op.12, 1939: Phantasy in Halling, Phantasy in Gangar, Phantasy in Springar; Gukkoslåtten, 1944; Sonata no.2 'Patetica', op.27, 1954

WRITINGS

Interviews, Norsk musikkliv, ix/11 (1941), 134; xiii/8 (1945), 9
'Analysis of the Violin Concerto', Moderns nordisk musik, ed. I. Bengtsson (Stockholm, 1957), 89ff

BIBLIOGRAPHY

A. Nordheim: 'Klaus Egges nye symfoni', DMt, xxxv (1960), 249–52
H. Huldt-Nystrøm: 'Klaus Egge', Norsk musikktidsskrift (1963–4), no.5, p.12
E. Glaser: 'Klaus Egge 60 år', Norsk musikktidsskrift, iii (1966), 99–103

HANS MAGNE GRAESVOLD

Eggebrecht, Hans Heinrich (b Dresden, 5 Jan 1919; d Freiburg, 30 Aug 1999). German musicologist. He studied at the Gymnasium in Schleusingen, Thuringia, where his father was superintendent. After military service in World War II he studied music education in Berlin and Weimar and took his teacher's certificate in 1948. He then studied musicology with Münnich, Hans Joachim Moser and Marius Schneider and in 1949 received his doctorate in Jena with a dissertation on Melchior Vulpius. From 1949 to 1951 he was assistant lecturer under Vetter in the music history department of Berlin University. After working in Freiburg on the Mainz Academy's Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie, he held a scholarship from the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft and taught musicology at the University of Freiburg (1953–5); in 1955 he completed his Habilitation at Freiburg with a work on musical terminology. The same year he became an external lecturer at Erlangen University; in 1956–7 he taught musicology at the University of Heidelberg. In 1961 he succeeded Wilibald Gurlitt as professor of musicology at Freiburg University. He was visiting lecturer at the University of Berne in the winter term of 1972–3. In 1964 he was appointed editor of Archiv für Musikwissenschaft and from 1966 he presided over the governing body of the Walcker-Stiftung, editing its series and publication. In 1965 he was made a full member of the Mainz Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur, a member of the Österreichische Akademie des Wissenschaften and he has been awarded an honorary doctorate by the universities of Brno (1987) and Bologna (1990). He retired in 1988.

Encouraged by Gurlitt, Eggebrecht made a rigorous study of musical terminology, bringing a historical basis to previously unhistorical, normative definitions. This resulted in his editorship of the Sachteil of the Riemann Musik Lexikon (1967–72) and of the Brockhaus-Riemann-Musiklexikon (1978–89). He also became editor for the Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie for the Mainz Academy in 1972. One of the underlying precepts of Eggebrecht's work as a historian was his conviction that the musical thought expressed in compositions must be viewed together with that found in theoretical and aesthetic writings, and comprehended as a unity. Thus his early inclination towards the history of ideas, which found expression in his writings on Bach, Schütz and the Mannheim School and, subsequently, medieval polyphony, has since been gradually expanded towards the viewpoint of social history. His book Zur Geschichte der Beethoven-Rezeption (1970) is an ideological criticism as well as a contribution to the history of ideas. Eggebrecht was always concerned about the actual practice and consequences of musicology; he participated in the topical discussions on music education, on the meaning and function of musical analysis and in the controversy over the Orgelbewegung. His book Musik im Abendland(1991) summed up his thoughts on, and contributions to, musicology. Many important studies, particularly on medieval theory and new music, came from his 'Freiburg school'.

WRITINGS

Melchior Vulpius (diss., U. of Jena, 1949; extracts in Musik und Kirche, xx (1950), 158–65; xxiii (1953), 52–8; Mf, iii (1950), 143–8; Festschrift Max Schneider zum achtzigsten Geburtstage, ed. W. Vetter (Leipzig, 1955), 87–104
'Johann Pachelbel als Vokalkomponist', AMw, xi (1954), 120–45
'Das Ausdrucks-Prinzip im musikalischen Sturm und Drang', Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift für Literaturwissenschaft und Geistesgeschichte, xxix (1955), 323–49
Studien zur musikalischen Terminologie (Habilitationsschrift, U. of Freiburg, 1955; Mainz, 1955, 2/1968)
'Arten des Generalbasses im frühen und mittleren 17. Jahrhundert', AMw, xiv (1957), 61–82
'Über Bachs geschichtlichen Ort', Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift für Literaturwissenschaft und Geistesgeschichte, xxxi (1957), 527–56; repr. in Wege der Forschung, clxx (1970), 247–85
'Walthers musikalisches Lexikon in seinen terminologischen Partien', AcM, xxix (1957), 10–27
Heinrich Schütz: Musicus poeticus (Göttingen,1959, enlarged 2/1984)
'Musik als Tonsprache', AMw, xviii (1961), 73–100
Ordnung und Ausdruck im Werk von Heinrich Schütz (Kassel, 1961)
'Machauts Motette Nr. 9', AMw, xix–xx (1962–3), 281–93; xxv (1968), 173–95
Die Orgelbewegung (Stuttgart, 1967) with F. Reckow: 'Das Handwörterbuch der musikalischen Terminologie', AMw, xxv (1968), 241–77; xxvii (1970), 214–22
Schütz und Gottesdienst: Versuch über das Selbstverständliche (Stuttgart, 1969, 2/1984) with F. Zaminer: Ad organum faciendum: Lehrschriften der Mehrstimmigkeit in nachguidonischer Zeit (Mainz, 1970)
'Mannheimer Stil: Technik und Gehalt', Musica bohemica et europaea: Brno 1970, 205–18
'Prinzipien des Schubert-Liedes', AMw, xxvii (1970), 89–109
ed.: 'Symposium: Reflexionen über Musikwissenschaft heute', GfMKB: Bonn 1970, 617–97
'Organum purum', Musikalische Edition im Wandel des historischen Bewusstseins, ed. T.G. Georgiades (Kassel, 1971), 93–112
'Über Adornos "Zur Musikpädagogik"', Musik und Bildung, iii (1971), 67–71
Versüch über die Wiener Klassik: die Tanzszene in Mozarts 'Don Giovanni' (Wiesbaden, 1972, rev. 2/1994)
Zur Geschichte der Beethoven-Rezeption (Mainz and Wiesbaden, 1972/R)
'Zur Methode der musikalischen Analyse', Erich Doflein: Festschrift, ed. L.V. Abraham (Mainz, 1972), 67–84
ed.: Zur Terminologie der Musik des 20. Jahrhunderts: Freiburg 1972 [incl. 'Punktuelle Musik' 162–87]
'Funktionale Musik', AMw, xxx (1973), 1–25
ed., with M. Lütolf: Studien zur Tradition in der Musik: Kurt von Fischer zum 60. Geburtstag (Munich, 1973) [incl. 'Traditionskritik', 247–61]
'Über das gegenwärtige Interesse an der Musikgeschichte des Mittelalters', NZM, Jg.134 (1973), 204–11
Musikalisches Denken: Aufsätze zur Theorie und Ästhetik der Musik (Wilhelmshaven, 1977)
'Die 'Freischütz'-Ouverture eine historische Interpretation', Zeichenprozesse: semiotische Forschung in den Einzelwissenschaften, ed. R. Posner and H.-P. Reinecke (Wiesbaden, 1977), 238–43

'Theorie der ästhetischen Identifikation zur Wirkungsgeschichte der Musik Beethovens', AMw, xxxiv (1977), 103–16
ed., with C. Dahlhaus: Brockhaus Riemann Musiklexikon (Munich, 1978–9, 2/1989)
Sinn und Gehalt: Aufsätze zur musikalischen Analyse (Wilhelmshaven, 1979, 2/1985)
'Vertontes Gedicht: über das Verstehen von Kunst durch Kunst', Dichtung und Musik: Kaleidoscop ihrer Beziehungen, ed. G. Schnitzler (Stuttgart, 1979), 36–69
'Historiography', articles on German musicologists, Grove6
ed.: Orgelwissenschaft und Orgelpraxis: Festschrift zum zweihundertjährigen Bestehen des Hauses Walcker (Murrhardt, 1980) [incl. 'Die Walcker-Stiftung für orgelwissenschaftliche Forschung', 8–26]
Die Musik Gustav Mahlers (Munich, 1982)
'Symphonische Dichtung', AMw, xxxix (1982), 223–33
ed.: Orgel und Ideologie: Göttweig 1983[incl. 'Orgel und Ideologie: Orgelschrift des Barock', 54–5]
Bachs Kunst der Fuge: Erscheinung und Deutung (Munich, 1984)
'Die Mehrstimmigkeit von ihren Anfängen bis zum 12. Jahrhundert', Die mittelälterliche Lehre von der Mehrstimmigkeit (Darmstadt, 1984), 9–87
ed.: Die Orgel im Dienst der Kirche: Rome 1984
ed.: Karlheinz Stockhausen: Freiburg 1985
'Musikalisches und musiktheoretisches Denken', Ideen zu einer Geschichte der Musiktheorie, ed. F. Zaniner (Darmstadt, 1985), 40–58 with C. Dahlhaus: Was ist Musik? (Wilhelmshaven, 1985/R; It. trans., 1988, Serb. trans., 1991, Pol. trans., 1992)
ed.: Orgel-Colloquium: Berlin 1988 [incl. 'Von dem Missbrauch der Music, welchen die Obrigkeit abschaffen könnte', 77–83]
Musik im Abendland: Prozesse und Stationen vom Mittelalter bis zur Gegenwart (Munich, 1991)
ed.: Orgelbau und Orgelmusik in Russland (Murrhardt, 1991)
Bach – wer ist das? Zum Verständnis der Musik J.S. Bachs (Munich, 1992)
Musik verstehen (Munich, 1995)
Die Musik und das Schöne (Munich, 1997)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

W. Breig, R. Brinkmann and E. Budde, eds.: Analysen: Beiträge zu einer Problemgeschichte des Komponierens: Festschrift für Hans Heinrich Eggebrecht zum 60. Geburtstag, Beihefte zum AMw, xxiii (1984) [Eggebrecht issue; incl. list of writings]

CARL DAHLHAUS/CHRISTIAN BERGER

Eggen, Arne (b Trondheim, 28 Aug 1881; d Baerum, Akershus, 26 Oct 1955). Norwegian composer and organist. After training as a teacher he studied at the Kristiania Conservatory with Elling, Lindeman and Johnson (1903–5). He continued his studies with Krehl (composition) and Straube (organ) at the Leipzig Conservatory (1906–7) and in 1909–10 he made study tours under a Norwegian state scholarship. He worked as an organist in Bragernes, Drammen (1908–24) and in Bryn and Tanum, Akershus (1924–55), also appearing as a recitalist in Norway and Sweden. One of the founders of TONO (the Norwegian performing rights society), he was president of that institution (1928–30) and of the Norwegian Composers' Association (1927–45). From 1934 he received a state pension. His opera Olav Liljekrans and other works are influenced by Norwegian folk music, and he also used Baroque forms, notably in the Ciaconna for organ or orchestra, which is one of his finest works. However, he is best known as one of the leading Norwegian composers of songs, in which genre he employed a Grieg-influenced, nationalist style.

WORKS
(selective list)

Ops: Olav Liljekrans, 1931–40, Oslo, 1940; Cymbelin (after W. Shakespeare), 1943–8, Oslo, 1948
Choral and vocal: Liti Kjersti, melodrama, 1915; Mjøsen, chorus, orch, perf. 1916; Ave maris stella, S, chorus, org, 1927; Kong Olav, orat, 1930
Inst: Ciaconna, org, perf. 1917, orchd; Sym., g, perf. 1920; 2 sonatas, vn, pf; Suite, vn, pf; Vc Sonata; pieces for org and pf
Songs, incl. Aerer det evige forår i livet, Barn Jesu i en krybbe la, Det gulnar, Høst, Lauvet, So skal gjenta hava det, Solfager, Sporvån, Til ødyemarki, Som vind på heidi

OLA KAI LEDANG

Eggert, Joachim (Georg) Nicolas (b Gingst, Rügen, 22 Feb 1779; d Thomestorp, nr Linköping, 14 April 1813). German composer and conductor, active in Sweden. His first lessons were with local musicians, and in 1794 he moved to Stralsund to study with Friedrich Gregor Kahlow and Ferdinand Fischer; in 1800 he resumed his training in Brunswick. In 1802 he was appointed Kapellmeister at the court theatre in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, but he resigned after a few months owing to a legal dispute. He was appointed to the hovkapell in Stockholm as a violinist in 1803; he was also acting kapellmästare from 1808 to 1812. During this period he introduced Mozart's operas and Beethoven's symphonies to Swedish audiences; his two dramas with song were staged in Stockholm (1809, 1812); and four of his symphonies were performed there. His students included Erik Drake, Ludvig Passy and Johan Martin de Ron.

In 1811 he began to collect Swedish folk instruments and songs in an attempt to introduce them into nationalist stage works, but this activity was curtailed by his early death from tuberculosis. Eggert's musical style is bold and original, with striking orchestration (particularly in the five symphonies, often using massive percussion and brass forces), considerable dynamic shadings and advanced harmonic language. His string quartets display exceptional knowledge of counterpoint and part-writing, in a style that is close to that of late Haydn and Beethoven. Many of his instrumental works were published by Breitkopf & Härtel during his lifetime.

WORKS
MSS in S-Skma unless otherwise stated printed works published in Leipzig

STAGE

Morerna i Spanien, eller Barndomens välde [The Moors in Spain, or Childhood's Choices] (drama with song, 3, R.C.G. de Pixérécourt, trans. M. Altén), Stockholm, Dramatiska, 6 May 1809
Svant Sture och Märta Lejonhufvud (historical drama with singing, 5, P.A. Granberg), Stockholm, Dramatiska, 31 Oct 1812

OTHER WORKS

Vocal: cants. for the celebration of peace between Sweden and Russia, 1809, and Prince Karl Johan's arrival in Stockholm, 1810; 3 other cants., occasional pieces for ens, songs
Orch: 5 syms.: C, g, E♭, c (1812), d (inc.); funeral music for Duke Adolf Fredrik of Östergötland; coronation music for King Carl XIII; Mozart wind serenade arr. 2 bn, orch (lost); other works
Chbr: Sextet, f/F, cl, hn/basset-hn, vn, va, vc, db, 1807 (1818); 3 str qts [op.1], C, f, F (1807); Trio, 3 bn, 1807; Trio, E♭, hp, hn, bn, 1810; Sextet, f/F, 2 vn, 2 va, vc, db, 1811; Pf Qt, g, op.3 (1811); 3 str qts [op.2], B♭, g, d (1812); Str Qt, E♭, S-L; 4 other str qts; other works

BIBLIOGRAPHY

B. Guston: 'Joachim Nikolas Eggert', STMf, vii (1925), 18–24
T. Norlind and S. Broman: 'Eggert och Küster', STMf, vii (1925), 49–63
I. Leux-Henschen: 'Joachim (Georg) Nikolas Eggert', STMf, xxxiv (1942), 84–121
L. Hedwall: Den svenska symfonin (Uppsala, 1981)
B. van Boer: The Symphony in Sweden Part II (New York, 1983)

BERTIL H. VAN BOER

Egidius. A name appearing frequently in musical sources from the 14th and early 15th centuries that refers to several musicians, including EGIDIUS DE MURINO, EGIDIUS DE PUSIEX, GILET VELUT and GILLES DE BINS DIT BINCHOIS.

'Magister Egidius' is named in the Modena manuscript (I-MOe α.M.5.24) as the composer of the ballade Courtois et sages (also in F-Pn n.a.fr.6771) with an acrostic 'Clemens', probably referring to Pope Clement VII (1378–94). In the same manuscript the ballade Franchois sunt nobles is ascribed to 'Magister Egidius ordinis heremitorum Sancti Agustini' (both works are ed. in PMFC, xx, 1982). 'Magister Egidius Augustinus' is credited with the ballade Roses et lis ay veu en une fleur in the Chantilly manuscript (F-CH 564; a fragment of it is also in NL-Lu 2720; Reaney, pp.76–7, connected the song with the wedding of Jean, Duke of Berry, in 1389; it is ed. in PMFC, xviii, 1981). All three songs are in three voices and are so similar in style that it would be perverse to attribute them to different composers. (All three songs are ed. in CMM, liii/1, 1970.)

Five two-voice ballatas in the Squarcialupi MS (I-Fl 87) are preceded by the ascription 'M. frater Egidius et Guilelmus de Francia' and an illuminated capital representing the two (see GUILIELMUS DE FRANCIA for editions, work-list and illustration). Their clothing in the miniature suggests that Guilielmus, at least, was an Augustinian monk and therefore that it may be possible to identify this Egidius with those mentioned in the Chantilly and Modena manuscripts. But two of these ballatas are elsewhere (F-Pn it.568) ascribed to Guilielmus alone, and Pirrotta (CMM, viii/5, 1964, p.ii) has suggested that only the texts are by Egidius (which would make this a unique occurrence, at this period in Italy, of poet and composer being jointly named).

'Egidius de Thenis' is named in the lost Strasbourg manuscript (F-Sm 222) as the composer of a song Sy liefstich is der mey (ed. in Cw, xlv, 1937/R) and of a Sanctus setting that was copied into the manuscript twice and has its tenor and contratenor in canon. In musical style these works seem to belong to the second decade of the 15th century, and it is unlikely that this Egidius is to be identified with any of those mentioned above.

'Egidius des Burces' is named as a musician in the 14th-century motet Musicalis scientia; Hoppin and Clercx suggested three possible identifications from around 1350.

'Egidius de Aurolia' is named in the motetus of the 14th-century motet Alma prolis religio/Axe poli in a context that led Harrison (PMFC, v, 1968) to suggest he was the writer of the text.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

G. Reaney: 'The Manuscript Chantilly, Musée Condé 1047', MD, viii (1954), 59–113, esp. 68ff

R.H. Hoppin and S. Clercx: 'Notes biographiques sur quelques musiciens français du XIVe siècle', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 63–92, esp. 83ff

U. Günther: 'Datierbare Balladen des späten 15. Jahrhunderts, II', MD, xvi (1962), 151–74 [on Roses et lis and Courtois et sages]

U. Günther: 'Das Manuskript Modena, Biblioteca Estense, α.M.5.24 (olim lat. 568 = Mod)', MD, xxiv (1970), 16–67

M.P. Long: Musical Tastes in Fourteenth-Century Italy: Notational Styles, Scholarly Traditions, and Historical Circumstances (diss., Princeton U., 1981)

DAVID FALLOWS

Egidius [Aegidius] de Murino [Morino] (fl mid-14th century). Theorist. He was the author of the short treatise De motettis componendis (CoussemakerS, iii, pp.124–8; partial critical edn in Leech-Wilkinson, i, 18–20). In most sources this is combined with the Tractatus de diversis figuris, usually attributed to PHILIPPUS DE CASERTA but considered as the work of Egidius in three out of four manuscripts in this integrated form. Hoppin and Clercx discovered an Egidius Morini who was a bachelor in civil law and student at the University of Orléans. He received a canonicate with expectation of a prebend at Le Mans in 1337. This date would fit quite well with the style of the music discussed in the treatise on motets, though another man of the same name received a canonicate at Nivelles in the Liège diocese in 1378; he came from Amiens. The place name Morino or Murino refers to the diocese of La Thérouanne in northern France.

Egidius is praised, together with such famous theorists as Johannes de Muris and Philippe de Vitry, in two motets listing names of musicians: Musicalis scientia/Scientie laudabili and Apollinis eclipsatur/Zodiacum signis/In omnem terram. No compositions can be specifically attributed to him, though he may be identical with one or other of the composers called EGIDIUS, in particular Magister Egidius Augustinus, the author of several rhythmically complex ballades, or Magister Frater Egidius who collaborated with Guilielmus de Francia in the composition of five ballades in I-Fl 87.

The treatise on motets is refreshingly practical and primarily concerned with the rhythmic organization of the tenor, also of the contratenor in four-voice works. The upper voices, triplum and motetus, are only mentioned in conjunction with the rhythmic plan of the tenor and contratenor. The discussion of textual underlay is particularly interesting, since it draws attention to the fundamental distinction between melismatic and syllabic text-setting. If the tenor was divided rhythmically into four identical sections, the text would be placed in the motetus so that it was divided into those four sections. Depending on the length of the text and the number of notes, there might be lengthy melismatic phrases or syllabic, parlando passages. Egidius gives examples of various types of rhythmic pattern used in tenors, starting with notes of the same value and continuing with combinations of black and coloured notes, dotted notes and rests. The term colorare is used for dividing the work into isorhythmic sections, and the word ordinatus where only one type of note value is involved. The short section at the end of the treatise on the forms of ballades, rondeaux and virelais was probably originally separate, as in the Seville manuscript.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

H. Besseler: 'Studien zur Musik des Mittelalters', AMw, viii (1926), 137–258, esp. 200

R.H. Hoppin and S.Clercx: 'Notes biographiques sur quelques musiciens français du XIVe siècle', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 63–92

F.A. Gallo: 'Alcune fonti poco note di musica teorica e pratica', L'Ars Nova italiana del Trecento [ii]: convegni di studio 1961–1967, ed. F.A. Gallo (Certaldo, 1968), 49–76

W. Frobenius: 'Petrus de Cruces Motette "Aucun ont trouvé chant par usage/Lonc tans me sui tenu de chanter/ANNUNTIANTES": französische Motettenkomposition um 1300', Analysen: Beiträge zu einer Problemgeschichte des Komponierens: Festschrift für Hans Heinrich Eggebrecht, ed. W. Breig, R. Brinkmann and E. Budde (Wiesbaden, 1984), 29–39

D. Leech-Wilkinson: Compositional Techniques in the Four-Part Isorhythmic Motets of Philippe de Vitry and his Contemporaries (New York, 1989)

For further bibliography see MOTET.

GILBERT REANEY

Egidius de Pusiex [Egidius] (d 1348). Priest and composer. This name appears together with 'Magister Heinricus' in Coussemaker's copy of F-Sm 222 (facs. in TM, ii, 1977) above a 14th-century motet dedicated to St Ida of Boulogne (1040–1113), the mother of three crusaders and an ancestor of Gui de Boulogne (d 1373) and Pope Clement VII (1378–94). This motet, Portio nature/Ida capillorum/Ante thronum Trinitatis (ed. in CMM, xxxix, 14; PMFC, v, 5), may have been composed for the nomination of Gui de Boulogne as cardinal at Avignon in 1342. In any case, the work dates from before 1376 since it is entered in the first section of the index of F-Pn 23190 (olim SERc). It is also transmitted (anonymously) in F-CH 564, I-IV 115 and NL-Lu 342A (inc.). The author of the text, 'Heinricus' (Henricus), is named in the text of the motetus, and may be identifiable with one of several composers of this name whose works are included in F-Sm 222 (see HENRICUS), or with the HENRICUS HELENE of the motet Apollinis eclipsatur/Zodiacum signis lustrantibus that, like Portio/Ida, is preserved in I-IV 115. The name Egidius de Pusiex, presumably indicating the composer, has been identified with a priest ('Egidius de Puisieus', d 1348) who was chaplain and familiar to Hugues Roger de Beaufort, a nephew of Pope Clement VI.

Though Portio/Ida survives only as a four-part setting, paleographical evidence in I-IV 115 suggests that it was originally composed for three voices and later updated by the addition of a new contratenor; examination of musical variants between the different sources confirms that the motet was reworked and modernized in the later 14th century. The work is isorhythmic, and has a quadripartite form with successive diminution (6:4:3:2), a feature more typical of motets of the later 14th and early 15th centuries; however, a similar structure is present in a Gloria, also found in I-IV 115, that may have provided a model for the motet. The celebrated motet Sub Arcturo/Fons citharizantium (composed before 1373; see JOHANNES ALANUS), which also features multipartite construction, may well have drawn its inspiration from Portio/Ida. (For another motet that shares its chant melody with Portio/Ida, see C. Wright, JAMS, xxvii, 1974, pp.306–15.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY

R.H. Hoppin and S.Clercx: 'Notes biographiques sur quelques musiciens français du XIVe siècle', L'Ars Nova: Wégimont II 1955, 63–92, esp. 86–7

D. Leech-Wilkinson: Compositional Techniques in the Four-Part Isorhythmic Motets of Philippe de Vitry and his Contemporaries (New York, 1989), i, 169–81; ii, 83–5 [edn]

J.M. Allsen: Style and Intertextuality in the Isorhythmic Motet, 1400–1440 (diss., U. of Wisconsin, 1992), 340

K. Kügle: The Manuscript Ivrea, Biblioteca Capitolare 115: Studies in the Transmission and Composition of Ars Nova Polyphony (Ottawa, 1997), 147–8, 161

URSULA GÜNTHER/YOLANDA PLUMLEY

Egidius [Johannes Aegidius; Juan Gil] de Zamora (*fl c*1260–80). Spanish theorist. A Franciscan, lector at Zamora and tutor to the son of Alfonso el Sabio, Egidius is thought to have written his Ars musica about 1270. It is dedicated to John, minister-general of the Franciscan order. Very conservative and depending greatly on the auctoritas of Boethius, Plato, Nicomachus, Guido, Isidore, the Egyptians and the Bible, and also on the works of al-Fārābī, the treatise deals with conventional matters of music theory, such as the monochord, mathematical proportions, solmization, Greek theory, mode and ethos. A long section mainly concerning instruments resembles a glossary and incorporates description, etymology and symbolism: it repeats, almost verbatim, some chapters in the treatise of Bartholomeus Anglicus, who himself drew on earlier sources. Egidius, however, added references to the guitarra, qanūn and rabr (?rebec), instruments probably well known in Spain. Further, he added a note on the word 'organa' in its special meaning of organ: 'This instrument alone is used by the church in its various chants, in proses, sequences and hymns, other instruments having generally been rejected owing to their abuse by minstrels'.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

GerbertS, ii, 369–93

H. Müller: 'Der Musiktraktat in dem Werke des Bartholomaeus Anglicus De proprietatibus rerum', Riemann-Festschrift (Leipzig, 1909/R), 241–55

G. Pietzsch: Die Klassifikation der Musik von Boetius bis Ugolino von Orvieto (Halle, 1929/R)

F.J. León Tello: Estudios de historia de la teoría musical (Madrid, 1962)

M. Robert-Tissot, ed. and Fr. trans.: Johannes Aegidius de Zamora: Ars musica, CSM, xx (1974)

D.M. Randel: 'La teoría musical en la epoca de Alfonso X el Sabio', Alfonso X el Sabio y la música: Madrid 1984 [RdMc, x (1987)], 39–51

R.M. Stevenson: Spanish Musical Impact Beyond the Pyrenees (1250–1500) (Madrid, 1987)

ANDREW HUGHES/R

Egizziello. See CONTI, GIOACCHINO.

Egk [Mayer], Werner (Joseph) (b Auchsesheim, nr Donauwörth, 17 May 1901; d Inning, nr Munich, 10 July 1983). German composer. After an early childhood in Auchsesheim, he moved with his parents to Augsburg where he received his first formal musical education. In 1920 he moved again, this time to Erbach, where he studied the piano and singing. His earliest compositions, settings of texts by Werfel, Hofmannsthal and Rilke among others, date from this period. While serving as a private music tutor to the Knote family (1920), he pursued intensive studies in musicology and music theory. In 1921 he settled in Munich where he became a pupil of Orff and music director of the Schaubühne. He returned briefly to Augsburg in 1922 before becoming a philosophy student at Munich University.

After his marriage in 1923, Egk spent time in Italy, an experience that inspired works such as the String Quartet (1923), Music for Small Orchestra (1925–6) and the Kleine Symphonie (1926). As an instrumental composer, he pursued a style emphasizing contrast and rhythmic vitality through the use of ostinato, passacaglia and other contrapuntal techniques. His approach to tonality is free and flexible, exemplified by the combination of D major and E♭ minor in the Coda of the Kleine Symphonie finale. The Passacaglia for Strings (1923) and the Violin Concerto (1928) are also noteworthy.

Between 1927 and 1929 Egk established contact with Kurt Weill, Hans Flesch, Bertolt Brecht and Erwin Piscator. The dramatic works that followed, for which Egk often served as his own librettist, embrace a range of genres from marionette theatre (Wasif und Akif, 1928) to radio documentary (91 Tage und vier Minuten, 1930). His radio opera Columbus (1932) combines the styles of historical documentary, oratorio and opera; other works quote 15th- and 16th-century Iberian music. Resident in Munich from 1931, he completed the oratorio Furchtlosigkeit und Wohlwollen (1931, rev. 1959), produced by Hermann Scherchen to varied criticism. In contrast, his first major opera, Die Zaubergeige (1935) was very successful. Influenced by Bavarian folksong, the primarily diatonic nature of the music adhered to aesthetic guidelines prescribed by Joseph Goebbels through the Reichsmusikkammer. Within these limits, Egk produced engaging characterizations, using dance rhythms and varying degrees of chromaticism to aid in the representation of different characters. In 1936 he was appointed conductor of the Staatsoper, Berlin, a position he held until 1941, and was commissioned with Orff to provide music for the Berlin Olympic Games.

Egk's next opera Peer Gynt (1938) provoked controversy in the Nazi press. Criticism was quieted by Hitler's attendance at the performance and his declared approval of the work, but the opera was not produced in the Third Reich after 1940. The ballet Joan von Zarissa (1940) and a stage version of Columbus, however, were performed. Other works from these years include the comedy Das Zauberbett (1945–6) and the song cycle La tentation de Saint Antoine (1946). Though never a member of the Nazi party, Egk was required to face denazification tribunals in the final year of the war; he was exonerated in 1947.

The productive five years that followed saw first performances of the ballets Abraxas (1948), Ein Sommertag (1950) and Die chinesische Nachtigall (1953), and the première of orchestral works such as the First Sonata (1948), the French Suite (1950) and Allegria (1952). Egk was also active as a conductor, served as director of the Hochschule für Musik, Berlin (1950–53), and was president of the performing rights society GEMA. In 1954 he signed a 20-year conducting and composing contract with the Bayerische Staatsoper.

Irische Legende (1955), produced at the Salzburg Festival under Szell, with a cast featuring Borkh and Fischer-Dieskau, marks the beginning of a series of important Egk premières at major European festivals. Based on a short story by W.B. Yeats, the work is particularly notable for the intensity of its propellant ostinatos. Die Verlobung in San Domingo (1963), which reopened the Munich Nationaltheater, presents elements of racial conflict and rebellion. The libretto, a plea for racial tolerance, is accompanied by a score pulsating with an eclecticism that includes Caribbean instruments (e.g. bongo drums) and references to the blues. Egk's creative energies were also focussed on the production of the ballets Danza (1960) and Casanova in London (1969), and a new version of Irische Legende.

During the last 15 years of his life, Egk composed primarily instrumental works. The most successful of these include the Second Orchestral Sonata (1969), Divertissement for ten wind instruments (1974) and Five Pieces for Wind Quintet (1975). Among his awards are the arts prizes of Munich (1949) and Berlin (1950), election to the Bavarian Academy of Arts (1951) and honours from Bavaria (1962, 1966, 1972), Berlin (1966), Augsburg (1971) and Donauwörth (1972). He served as president of the Deutscher Musikrat (1968–71) and the International Confederation of Performance Rights (1976–8), and participated in music festivals internationally.

WORKS

OPERAS

Der Löwe und die Maus (children's op), 1931

Columbus: Bericht und Bildnis (3, Egk), 1932, Bavarian Radio, 13 July 1933, stage, Frankfurt, Städtische Bühnen, 13 Jan 1942, rev., Berlin, Städtische Oper, 17 May 1951

Der Fuchs und der Rabe (children's op), 1932

Die Historie vom Ritter Don Juan aus Barcelona (Egk, after trad.), 1932

Die Zaubergeige (3, Egk and L. Andersen, after F. Pocci), 1935, Frankfurt, Städtische Bühnen, 19 May 1935, rev. Stuttgart, Württembergisches Staats, 2 May 1954

Peer Gynt (3, Egk, after H. Ibsen), Berlin, Staatsoper, 24 Nov 1938

Circe (Egk, after P. Calderón de la Barca), 1945, Berlin, 18 Dec 1948 [rev. 1965, as 17 Tage und 4 Minuten, Stuttgart, 2 June 1966]

Irische Legende (5 scenes, Egk, after W.B. Yeats), Salzburg, Kleines Festspielhaus, 17 Aug 1955, rev. 1969–70, Augsburg, Stadt, 26 Feb 1975

Der Revisor (comic op, 5, Egk, after N. Gogol), Schwetzingen, Schloss, 9 May 1957

Die Verlobung in San Domingo (prol., 2, interlude, Egk, after H. von Kleist), Munich, National, 27 Nov 1963

BALLETS

Joan von Zarissa (dramatische Tanzdichtung, 4 scenes, Egk), Berlin, 1940; Abraxas (5 scenes, Egk, after H. Heine), Munich, 1948, arr. as Konzertsuite, orch; Ein Sommertag (Egk), Berlin, 1950 [based on Clementi, Kuhlau]; Französische Suite nach Rameau, 1952, Hamburg, 1952 [based on Französische Suite, 1949]; Die chinesische Nachtigall (Egk, after H.C. Andersen), Munich, 1953; Danza 'Variationen über ein karibisches Thema', Munich, 1960; Casanova in London (Egk), Munich, 1969

INCIDENTAL MUSIC

all unpublished

Weihnachtsspiel, 1924; Wasif und Akif (marionette theatre), 1928; Ein Cello singt in Daventry (R. Seitz), 1929; Ein neuer Sender sagt sich an, spkrs, orch, 1929; Kanadisches Intermezzo (Seitz), Bar, vn, cl + b cl, tuba, xyl, glock, 1929; 3 Tanzstücke, perc, pf, 1929; Weihnacht (Seitz), 1929; Einundneunzig Tage (Egk), spkr, orch, 1930; Musik zu Maria Stuart, 1932; Musik zu Otello, 1932; Alias Trebitsch-Lincoln (Das heimliche Reich) (A.J. Lippl), 1933; Der Weg, 1933

ORCHESTRAL

Musik für Streichinstrumente, passacaglia, 1923; Musik für kleines Orchester, 1925–6; Kleine Symphonie, 1926; Adagio misterioso, 1927, unpubd; Judenmusik, 1927, unpubd; Largo, 1927, unpubd; Presto, 1927, unpubd; Blasmusik, wind, 1931; Blasmusik no.2, wind, 1931, unpubd; Musica per banda, wind, 1931; Georgica (4 Bauernstücke), 1934; Olympia-Festspiel-Musik, 1935–6, unpubd; Geigenmusik, vn, orch, 1936; Tango, 1938 [from Peer Gynt]; Suite, 1940 [from Joan von Zarissa]; Triptychon, 1940 [from Joan von Zarissa]; Orchestersonate no.1, 1948; Suite, 1948 [from Abraxas]; Französische Suite, 1949 [after Rameau]; Allegria in 4 tempi, 1952; Divertimento, str, 1953 [from Die chinesische Nachtigall]; Variationen über ein karibisches Thema, 1959; Englische Suite, 1968 [from Casanova in London]; Orchestersonate no.2, 1969; Moira, C, 1972; Ov. 'Musik über eine verschollene Romanze', 1979–80; Spiegelzeit, 1979; Suite, tpt, orch, 1980 [from Der Revisor]; Canzone, vc, orch, 1981; Nachtanz über ein Thema aus dem 16 Jahrhundert, 1983; Vn Conc., unpubd; work for wind, perc, hmn

VOCAL

Choral: Herrgott noch ein Stück Brot, SSTT, 1923; Zeit im Funk (orat), 1929, unpubd; Furchtlosigkeit und Wohlwollen (orat), T, mixed chorus, orch, 1931, rev. 1959; 4 a capella choruses (trad. Ger.), 1932; Mein Vaterland (F.G. Klopstock), hymn, unison chorus, orch/org, 1937; 3 chansons (C. d'Orléans), chorus, 10vv, 1940 [from Joan von Zarissa]

Solo-orch: 4 canzoni, high v, orch (1932); Natur-Liebe-Tod (cant., L.C.H. Hölty), B, chbr orch, 1937; Variationen über ein altes Wiener Strophenlied, coloratura S, orch, 1938; La tentation de Saint Antoine (after 18th-century airs and verse), A, str qt, 1947, rev. A, str qt, str orch, 1952, mixed chorus, orch, 1978; Chanson et romance, coloratura S, orch, 1953; Nachgefühl (cant., Klabund), S, orch, 1953; Suite, S, orch [from Peer Gynt]; Suite, 2vv, orch [from Joan von Zarissa]

Lieder (all unpubd): Die Glanzperle (T. Däubler), 1920; Da leben Menschen (R.M. Rilke), 1921; Ich habe eine gute Tat getan (F. Werfel), 1921; Komm Trost der Welt, 1921; Lass das Fragen (H. Hopfer), 1921; Neujahrsnacht 1921, 1921; Am Abend sprach, 1923; Herrgott noch ein Stück Brot, 2 S, 2 T, 1923; Auf, auf, wach auf, S, 2 cl, 2 vn, 1924; Wir legen uns zusammern (R. Euringer), 1924; Woher ich's hab (Euringer), 1924; Alles wird wieder gross sein (Rilke), S, cl, 1928; All mein Gedanken, S, T, 2 ob, 2 cl, cel, zither, 3 vn, 3 vc, 1936; Ein Stündlein wohl vor Tag; Im Grünen zu singen (H. von Hofmannsthal); Schwesterlein, Schwesterlein, wann geh'n wir nach Haus; Spinnerlied; Welt wie bist du klein [frag.]; Wie bin ich vorgespannt

CHAMBER AND KEYBOARD

Str Trio, A, 1922, unpubd; Str Qt, a, 1922, unpubd; Trio, g, 2 vn, vc, 1922, unpubd; Music for 5 solo str, 1923, unpubd; Stücke, 3 vn, 1923, unpubd; Stücke, pf, 1924; Musik für Violine und Klavier, 1925, unpubd, frag.; Musik für Violine und Viola, 1925, unpubd; Standmusik, 1926; Vc Qt, 1926, unpubd; Pf Sonata, 1928, unpubd; 3 Klavierstücke, 1933, unpubd; Pf Sonata, 1947; Divertissement, 10 wind, 1973–4; 5 Stücke, wind qnt, 1974; Polonaise, Adagio und Finale, ob, eng hn, cl, hn, bn, str qt, db, 1975–6; Ouvertüre zur Oper Die Zaubergeige, pic + fl, ob, ob + eng hn, 2 cl, tpt, 2 hn, 2 bn, 1980; Die Nachtigall, divertimento, str qt [from Die chinesische Nachtigall]; arr: W.A. Mozart: Sinfonia Concertante, E♭, 2 ob, 2 cl, 2 hn, 2 bn, 2 db, 1982–3

MSS in D-Mbs

Principal publisher: B. Schott's Söhne

WRITINGS

Musik, Wort, Bild (Munich, 1960) [collection of essays]
Opern, Ballette, Konzertwerke (Mainz, 1966)
Die Zeit wartet nicht (Percha am Starnberger See, 1973)
Other essays in Melos, NZM, Das Orchester, ÖMz etc.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

O. Oster: 'Werner Egk's "Columbus": zum Problem der Funkoper', ZfM, Jg.100 (1933), 1233–5
E. Laaf: 'Werner Egk', Melos, xx (1953), 186–204
K.H. Wörner: 'Egk and Orff: Representatives of Contemporary German Opera', MR, xiv (1953), 186–204
J. Häusler: '"Chouconne": Reflexion und Verwandlung (Variationen über ein karibisches Thema von Werner Egk)', Melos, xxvi (1959), 373–6
B. Kohl and E. Nölle: Werner Egk: das Bühnenwerk (Munich, 1971)
E. Krause: Werner Egk: Oper und Ballette (Berlin, 1971)
C. Schmitz: 'Negerrevolution auf der Opernbühne: Winfried Zilligs und Werner Egks Vertonungen von Kleists "Die Verlobung in San Domingo"', Jb für Geschichte von Staat, Wirtschaft und Gesellschaft Lateinamerikas, xxviii (1991), 407–25
A. Böswald: Die Seele suchen: Werner Egk und der Donauwöhner Kulturpreis (Donauwörth, 1994)
A. Böswald, ed.: Werner Egk (Tutzing, 1997) [incl. F.R. Miller: 'Genies sind fleissiger als Talente: ein Lebensbild des Komponisten Werner Egk', 13–37; A. Böswald: 'In Donauwörth daheim', 38–42; H.M. Pam-Beulich: 'Welttheater in sieben Akten: zu den Opern Werner Egks', 66–145; H.M. Palm-Beulich: 'Erotische Trilogie: Werner Egk und seine Ballette', 147–67; A.D. McCredie: 'Das Instrumentalschaggen Werner Egks', 168–96; A.D. McCredie: 'Werner Egk als Vokalkomponist', 197–210]
M. Kates: Composers of the Nazi Era: Eight Portraits (New York, 2000)

ANDREW D. McCREDIE

Egli, Johann Heinrich (b Seegräben, 4 March 1742; d Zürich, 19 Dec 1810). Swiss composer and music teacher. He was taught music by Johannes Schmidlin and on his own studied the works of J.P. Kirnberger, F.W. Marpurg and C.P.E. Bach, which strongly influenced his own compositions. From about 1760 he lived in Zürich, where he played the violin in the collegium musicum but earned his living as a sought-after teacher of singing and the piano. His many friends included the musician H.G. Nägeli and the poet–pastors Jakob Hess and J.C. Lavater; Egli set many poems (notably on patriotic themes) by Lavater, who was a leading figure in religious aspects of the Sturm und Drang.

Egli's songs are largely indebted to the Berlin lied school, with an emphasis on naturalness and simplicity that appealed to the Swiss middle class. He differed from his Berlin models, however, in that he also wrote a large number of choral compositions and (musically weaker) cantatas. Although Refardt regarded the nature songs as Egli's best works, the numerous patriotic pieces were of major importance in the development of solo and choral song in German-speaking Switzerland, particularly in their influence on H.G. Nägeli. Egli's Zwölf Kinderlieder (1789) show his interest in teaching. Four of his pieces are still in the hymnbook of the German-Swiss Reformed Church. He published more than 400 of his own songs and edited a two-volume anthology, Musikalische Blumenlese für Liebhaber des Gesangs und Claviers (1786–9), including songs by C.P.E. Bach, J.A.P. Schulz, C.G. Neefe and J.F. Reichardt.

WORKS

published in Zürich unless otherwise stated

Song collections: [13] Geistliche Gesänge, 4vv, bc (1777); Sammlung [61] geistlicher Lieder, 1–4vv, bc (1779); [6] Geistliche Gesänge, kbd acc. (1780); [*c*50] Schweizerlieder von verschiedenen Verfassern als ein 2. Theil zu Herrn Lavaters Schweizerliedern, 2–4vv, bc (1787); 12 Kinderlieder (1789); C.F. Gellerts [54] geistliche Oden und Lieder mit Choralmelodieen, 4vv (1789); [49] Lieder der Weisheit und Tugend, 1–4vv, bc (1790); Gellerts [54] geistliche Oden und Lieder, 2–4vv (1791) [incl. 3 by C.P.E. Bach]; [25] Gesänge über Leben, Tod und Unsterblichkeit, 1–4vv, bc (1792); J.H. Eglis Musikalischen Nachlasses 1. Abtheilung, 1–4vv, kbd acc. (1816) [incl. 40 lieder]

Song collections with J.J. Walter: [84] Auserlesene geistliche Lieder, 1–4vv, i–ii (1775–80) [55 by Egli]; [67] Auserlesene moralische Lieder, 1–2vv, kbd, i–ii (1776–80); [70] Singcompositionen, kbd acc., i–ii (1785–6) [53 by Egli], iii (1789), lost; [50] Schweizerische Volkslieder, 1–4vv (1788) [26 by Egli]

Other: Schweizerscenen (J.C. Lavater), Zürcher-Gegenden (Lavater), cants., 4 series of patriotic songs, pubd serially in Neujahrsgeschenke ab dem Musiksaal an die Zürchersche Jugend (1778–1811); National-Kinderlieder: Der Schweizerknabe an sein Vaterland, songs pubd serially in Neujahrsgeschenke für die Zürchersche Jugend der Musikgesellschaft auf der deutschen Schule (1784–1804); Die Auferstehung, ode (J.A. Cramer), 2 S, A, kbd (2/1786) [with 2 other lieder]; Schweizer Freyheitsgesang (J.L.A. Bühls), cant., 1–2vv, bc (1789); Friedens-Feyer (C. Grass) (1797); Der Alpenmorgen, 1v, gui, pf (n.p., n.d.); Sammlung zu einem christlichen Magazin, 1–3vv (n.p., n.d.) [3 songs]; several songs in contemporary anthologies

Other lost and doubtful works cited in RefardtHBM

BIBLIOGRAPHY

FriedlaenderDL; GerberNL; RefardtHBM
'Die Neujahrstücke der frühern Musikgesellschaften bis 1812', Neujahrsblatt der Allgemeinen Musikgesellschaft in Zürich, xlv (1857), 1–14
A. Nef: Das Lied in der deutschen Schweiz Ende des 18. und Anfang des 19. Jahrhunderts (Zürich, 1909) [repr. 16 lieder by Egli]

JÜRG STENZL

Eglinton, 12th Earl of [Montgomerie, Hugh] (b Coilsfield, Ayrshire, 29 Nov 1739; d ?Coilsfield, 15 Dec 1819). Scottish composer. He combined a political career with amateur music-making and composition. He was MP for Ayrshire from 1780 until his succession to the title in 1796, and later became Lord Lieutenant of Ayrshire and a Knight of the Thistle.

In his spare time he played the cello and composed. He published a set of three duets for flutes or violins anonymously in about 1775, a set of New Strathspey Reels in 1796, and also wrote several songs. Arne dedicated the glee Let not Rage to him, and John Riddell, a local fiddler, wrote him the celebrated slow air Coilsfield House. His best-known composition is the dance tune 'Ayrshire Lasses'. John Turnbull edited a posthumous Selection of Songs and Marches by him (Glasgow, *c*1838).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

DNB ('Montgomerie, Hugh, 12th Earl of Eglinton'; T.F. Henderson)
H.G. Farmer: History of Music in Scotland (London, 1947/R), 339–40

DAVID JOHNSON

Egmond, Max (Rudolf) van (b Semarang, Java, 1 Feb 1936). Dutch bass-baritone. He studied at the Hilversum Muzieklyceum with Tine van Willigen, and won prizes in competitions at 's-Hertogenbosch, Brussels and Munich. He began his career in 1954 in the St Matthew Passion at Naarden and subsequently appeared as a concert singer and recitalist throughout Europe and North and South America. His operatic performances, mostly with Netherlands Opera, included the world première of Jurriaan Andriessen's Het zwarte blondje (1962), Antony Hopkins's Three's Company (1963), Quinault in Adriana Lecouvreur (1966), Pluto in Agazzari's Eumelio (1974) and Meraspes in Handel's Admeto (1977). He was professor of singing at the Amsterdam Muzieklyceum (1972–80) and at the Sweelinck Conservatorium Amsterdam (1980–95), and in 1978 became a professor at the Baroque Performance Institute, Oberlin, Ohio. He has also given masterclasses in Baroque performance practice and the art of the lied. Van Egmond retired from public performance in 1995. His affinity with Baroque music, particularly that of Bach, and his thorough knowledge of authentic performance practice are reflected in his many recordings, notably of Bach cantatas (under Harnoncourt and Leonhardt) and the Passions, Monteverdi's Orfeo and Il ritorno d'Ulisse, Lully's Alceste and Handel's Admeto. His warm, gentle timbre and superb diction are also well displayed in his recordings of Schubert and Schumann lieder.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

J. Muller: Max van Egmond (Zutphen, 1984)

ELIZABETH FORBES

Egressy, Béni [Galambos, Benjámin] (b Sajókazinc [now Kazincbarcika], 21 April 1814; d Pest, 17 July 1851). Hungarian composer, librettist, dramatist, translator and actor. He began his career as a schoolteacher and in 1834 became an actor in Kolozsvár (now Cluj-Napoca, Romania) and Kassa (now Košice, Czech Republic). From 1837 he worked in the newly opened Hungarian Theatre in Pest (renamed the National Theatre in 1840). In 1838 he went on foot to Milan to study singing. About 1840 he returned to Hungary and continued his work in the National Theatre in Pest. He wrote the libretto for Ferenc Erkel's first opera Bátori Mária (1840) and also for Erkel's chief works Hunyadi László (1844) and Bánk bán (1861); while working for the theatre, he translated more than 50 French plays and 19 Italian and French opera librettos into Hungarian.

As a composer Egressy was self-taught, learning the rules of musical notation and harmony through practice. From 1842 to 1851 he wrote comedies and popular plays with songs and dances for the National Theatre. These works are distinguished by melodic invention and excellent powers of dramatic description; the music is rooted in the spiritual and secular song traditions of the reformed college of Hungary, the German lied and the Hungarian instrumental verbunkos. From these traditions he tried to create small forms in a unified national popular style. With his songs and dances for the theatre in particular, he soon found wide popularity throughout the country and came to be regarded as a pioneer of the Hungarian national popular song and csárdás.

In 1843 Egressy won first prize in a composition competition with his setting of Vörösmarty's poem Szózat ('The Appeal'). This work is recognized as a second Hungarian national anthem and was later arranged or used as a quotation by Liszt, Mosonyi, Erkel, Volkmann, Dohnányi, Kodály and Járdányi. Egressy was also the first who set to music poems by the most important Hungarian poet of his time, Sándor Petőfi.

In 1846, when Liszt visited Pest, he was greeted by Egressy's csárdás Fogadj isten ('Welcome!'), published that year with a dedication to the celebrated virtuoso. Liszt used this music in his Hungarian Rhapsody no.10, dedicated to Egressy. Another melody, Hej, haj, magyar ember, was used in Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody no.12 as well as in Brahms's Hungarian Dance no.15.

Egressy took part in the war of Hungarian independence in 1848–9 and was wounded there. In 1849 he was appointed field music director in the fortress at Komárom, where he composed the march Komáromi utóhangok ('Epilogue in Komárom').

WORKS

STAGE

all first performed at National Theatre, Pest

Négy huszár és gyermekharisnya [Four Hussars and Children's Stockings] (farce, 3, F. Hopp), 16 March 1842, collab. J. Hopp and J. Szerdahelyi
Falusi lakodalom [A Village Wedding Feast] (comedy, 3, I. Jakab), 19 May 1844
Mátyás deák [Student Matthew] (comedy, 3, I. Balog), 19 June 1844
Két Barcsay [The Two Barcsays] (drama, 4, M. Jósika), 27 July 1844
A rab [The Prisoner] (popular play, 3, E. Szigligeti), 2 June 1845, ov. comp. F. Doppler
A szökött színész és katona [The Escaped Actor and Soldier] (popular play, 3, V. Haray), 11 July 1845
A királyné és a kalandorok [The Queen and the Adventurers] (tragedy, 5, H. Laube), 11 Oct 1845
A jegygyűrű [The Engagement Ring] (popular play, 3, J. Szigeti), 30 Nov 1846
A kézműves [The Handyman] (popular play, 3, I. Vahot), 27 March 1847
Párbaj mint istenítélet [Trial by Combat] (popular play, 3, Szigligeti), 4 March 1848
A földönfutó [The Homeless] (popular play, 3, M. Jókai), 14 April 1850
Fidibusz (popular play, 3, Szigligeti), 20 April 1850
A szép juhász [The Pretty Shepherd] (popular play, 3, Szigeti), 11 May 1850
Világismeret [Knowledge of the World] (comedy, 3, L. Dobsa), 30 Nov 1850
Két Sobri [The Two Sobris] (popular play, 3, Egressy), 11 Jan 1851

OTHER WORKS

Pf: numerous pieces, mostly pubd in Pest, 1842–57, incl. csárdás, Hungarian folktunes, friss dances
Songs: Ablak alatt [Under the Window], 6 songs (M. Tompa, S. Petőfi); Nemzeti dal [National Song] (Petőfi), 1848; Országgyűlési szózat [A Parliamentary Appeal] (J. Garay); Szózat [The Appeal] (M. Vörösmarty), 1843; many others
Choral: Szózat (Vörösmarty), male vv, 1843; Szent Dávid Zsoltári [Psalms of David], chorus, org, 1849

BIBLIOGRAPHY

ZL
G. Egressy: 'Egressi Benjámin', Értesítő [Pest] (3 April 1852)
I. Bartalus: 'Egressy Béni dalai' [The songs of Béni Egressy], Budapesti hirlap (3–6 May 1859)
K. Isoz: Egressy Béni első dalmű-szövegkönyvéről [On Egressy's first opera libretto] (Budapest, 1911)
E. Major: A népies magyar műzene és a népzene kapcsolatai [The relationship of Hungarian popular music to folk music] (Budapest, 1930)
K. Isoz: 'Egressy Béni', A zene (1 Aug 1932)
I. Kecskeméti: Egressy Béni eredeti hangjegykéziratai [Egressy's original music MSS] (Budapest, 1969), 191–200 [with Ger. and Eng. summaries]
Z. Csorba: Egressy Béni (Miskolc, 1974)
B.G. Bérczessi: Hazádnak rendületlenül [Unswervingly for the fatherland] (Budapest, 1981)

I. Mona: Magyar zeneműkiadók és tevékenységük 1774–1867 [Hungarian music publishers and their activity, 1774–1867] (Budapest, 1989)

FERENC BÓNIS

Egüés, Manuel de (b S Martín del Río, 3 June 1657; d Burgos, 11 April 1729). Spanish composer. He was choirmaster at Lérida Cathedral when, on 23 November 1685, he successfully competed for the same post at Burgos. In October 1691 he went to Zaragoza, again as choirmaster at the cathedral, but in February 1692 returned to Burgos, where he remained until his death.

Egüés's inspiration, technique and style make him one of the leading Spanish composers of the Baroque. He mainly used the 'stile severo', although his solo melodic writing is often florid and of a virtuoso character. His choral music shows both imitative and chordal techniques. He made more use of instruments than most Spanish composers of his time, although (as was then normal in Spain) he used them less for their individual technical or expressive characteristics than in a vocal manner, in groups or 'coros'. His polychoral works are mostly for 12 voices in three choirs, but a Miserere for Maundy Thursday has 16 voices divided into four choirs. His Salves en romance, short compositions usually paraphrasing some section of the Salve regina or other Marian texts such as the Ave maris stella, are of special interest; they were sung after Divine Office had finished at the altar before an image of the Blessed Virgin, and their devout beauty places them high among Spanish religious works. His essay 'Parecer acerca la controversia de Valls' was printed in Joaquín Martínez's Elucidación de la verdad (Valladolid, n.d.).

WORKS

181 villancicos, 176 in E-BUa, 2 in Mn, 1 each in Bc, PAL, SD
8 motets, 14 Salves en romance, BUa
7 pss, 6 in BUa, 1 in Bc

BIBLIOGRAPHY

L. Hernández Ascunce: 'Número inédito de un auto sacramental', España sacro musical, ii (1931), 274
M.D. Aguirre: Estudio y análisis de las Salves en romance de Manuel de Egüés (diss., Pontifical Insititute for Sacred Music, Rome, 1970)
J. López-Calo: La música en la catedral de Burgos (Burgos, 1995–6)

JOSÉ LÓPEZ-CALO

[General Information]
书名=新格罗夫音乐与音乐家辞典 第2版 7
作者=斯坦利·萨迪（STANLEY SADIE）主编
页数=916
SS号=13762882
DX号=
出版日期=2012.10
出版社=长沙湖南文艺出版社